Q. And you think those men refused to tell because they had a common understanding, or a "conspiracy of silence" as it has been termed, not to tell?—A. I will not say that there was a conspiracy, but I believe that there was a general understanding—it may have been individual, or one or two, or what not—that they would not say anything about it, and I believe that some of the men have purposely avoided knowledge of it, that they desired not to know anything about it, and that they have followed that line.

Q. Well, however that may be, you have stated in your report that you had no evidence whatever of any such understanding?—A. I have stated that several times; yes, sir.

Q. Could not get any evidence of guilt, and could not get any evidence of an understanding to suppress knowledge of guilt. Mingo Sanders came to see you and to appeal to you to look at his discharges, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to allow him to remain in the service. He had a pretty strong case, had he not?—A. He had as fine a record as any soldier could wish to have.

Q. Twenty-six years' continuous service, and a part of that outside of the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For which he was allowed double time?—A. Yes, sir; that makes his twenty-six years.

Q. He only had two and one-half years longer to serve to entitle him to retire for life on three-quarters' pay and allowances?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all that was taken away from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you were down there investigating to find out which men did this firing. You were addressing yourself entirely to that subject, were you not?—A. Well, I was anxious to find out if they could give me any evidence that would lead to anybody, outside as well as inside.

Q. Yes; but in all your conversations you addressed yourself to that inquiry, did you not. "which of you people did this thing?" That is what you were trying to find out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You assumed that some of those men were guilty?—A. I did.

Q. Started out with that assumption and never have had any other opinion from that minute until this?—A. I have not.

Q. And so all the time you were talking to these men it never entered your head that somebody other than the soldiers might have done the shooting?—A. Well, they might have done it, but it never entered my mind that they did do it.

Q. Did that enter your mind at all?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did it enter it so as to create any doubt as to whether the men did it?—A. No; I had no doubt then and I have no doubt now.

Q. You had no doubt then and you have no doubt now and have never had any doubt, from the beginning down until this time, and therefore you did not waste any time in trying to find out whether or not some one else might possibly have done it?—A. I wasted no time; no, sir.

Q. You were addressing yourself to the men to find out "which of you men did it?" and your inquiries all ran along that line, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say there was only one roll call that night, so far as you can find out, and that was of Company D after it was stationed behind the wall. What do you know about the roll call in Company B?—A. Only what Mr. Grier told me.

Q. No; Mr. Grier was commanding Company C. I am talking about Mr. Lawrason's company, Company B.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not that a complete roll call?—A. Mr. Lawrason was not there. Sergeant Sanders gave me the information about that roll call.

Q. Didn't he tell you that he had the roll and called it from beginning to end, by the light of a lantern—that he called every name?—A. After he got there, yes, sir; but Sergeant Sanders was not there when the company was formed.

Q. The testimony is, General, that he was not there at first, but he got there while the company was forming, and immediately formed the company, took charge of it, and proceeded to call the roll; that Mr. Lawrason was superintending it, and the testimony is that each man had his rifle, and had it at the right shoulder, and that as his name was called he not only answered to his name, but brought his rifle to the ground, to an order arms. Would not that indicate that it was a rather formal roll call?—A. If there is such testimony; yes, sir.

Q. So that you do not mean to say that the roll call in Company B may not have been a regular and complete roll call?—A. My impression, that I got from Sergeant Sanders, was that he was not prepared to absolutely swear that each man was in the company at its formation.

Q. Do you mean to say that he reported to you that every man in the company was not either present or accounted for?—A. No; but in going over the details of the call he said a man answered to every name, but whether the proper man answered or not—

Q. He has testified that he knew every man's voice.—A. My impression about the roll call, Mr. Senator, as to the accuracy of it, was due more to the circumstances, and the importance of the roll call not suggesting itself to them at that time, in the initial stages.

Q. That is to say, you assumed that in the excitement of the moment, in their anxiety to get out behind the wall or wherever they were to take position to defend themselves, they would not stop for an accurate roll call?—A. And in what they told me about it, in the way that the roll was called.

Q. And yet, as a matter of fact, they might have made an accurate roll call?—A. They might have; yes, sir.

Q. And the men who were there, the officers and the noncommissioned officers, would know more about it than you would know?—A. Certainly.

Q. You would not undertake to dispute what Mr. Lawrason would say about it?—A. No, indeed.

Q. Would you dispute what Sergeant Sanders would say about it?—A. I would not accept Sanders's statement absolutely; no.

Q. You would not accept the statement of any colored man in that battalion absolutely, would you?—A. Not now; no, sir.

Q. Not one of them; and you would not at that time, would you?—A. At what time?

Q. When you were making the inspection?—A. Not without corroboration.

Q. As a matter of fact, every man in that battalion, to your knowledge, had already testified under oath, that he had not participated in that firing, and had no knowledge of it, had he not?—A. Not exactly; no.

Q. You knew, did you not, that every man had been examined?—A. When? Let me get the time.

Q. Immediately after the affair the officers had examined them, had they not, taken the affidavits of the men?—A. I do not think I knew that at the time.

Q. You did know at the time, as I understood your testimony this morning, from Major Penrose and from the other officers of that battalion, that they had been busily occupied in every way—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Examining the men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taking their affidavits and trying to find out—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was guilty—you knew all that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all that counted for nothing with you in determining the guilt of the men, did it?—A. No.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I understand your answer to the last question, General, that you learned from Major Penrose that in the intervening time from August 13, the date of the shooting affray at Brownsville, up to the time that you were there, they had been investigating the matter to find out who the individuals were who did the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In all that investigation did he intimate to you that there ever was a question in his mind but what it was some members of the battalion that had done the shooting?—A. Not the slightest doubt about it was expressed, and when I left Fort Reno Major Penrose said to me that he hoped before I got here to Washington to have a telegram giving information; that he hoped that some man would finally give him some information that would be of some use in locating the guilty ones.

Q. That is, the individuals?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you spoke of the roll calls and which ones were accurate, you were asked about the testimony that had been given before this committee. You formed your opinion from the statements made to you by the noncommissioned officers and the commissioned officers?—A. Yes, sir; entirely.

Q. And from that you made the statement as to the roll call?—A. Yes, sir. I have not seen this testimony. I only saw fragments of it. I have been away a great deal all this winter. I have been away on various trips.

Q. Your attention is called to your report, to what you state in your report.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was after as careful an investigation as you could make?—A. Yes, sir; that was the result of my inquiry, and my honest opinion.

Q. Now, as to the formation of the guard. You stated about that. From whom did you get your information?—A. Sergeant-Major Taliaferro.

Q. And this was during your investigation?—A. Yes, sir. Sergeant Taliaferro impressed me as a very intelligent man.

Q. What was the substance of that information as to the formation of the guard?—A. He went to the guard immediately after the alarm sounded, because he expected to find the commanding officer there, and when he found that he was not there, of course he went away; but I asked him about the guard, asked where the guard was posted, and so forth, and he said he saw only two or three men standing in front of the guardhouse. The examination was not especially with reference to the formation of the guard, it was an incident, just Taliaferro's statement.

Q. Sergeant-Major Taliaferro, in going there, went from what is known as the administration building, didn't he?—A. He went from where he slept, and I think he slept in the administration building; yes, sir; and then he went over and found Major Penrose at the barracks, and he was sent from there to Captain Macklin.

Q. I find in connection with what has been read to you, on page 528 of Executive Document 155, in your report, you say:

I examined each of the prisoners.

That was the time you examined them—A. At Fort Sam Houston.

Q. At Fort Sam Houston?

I examined each of the prisoners very carefully, first in the form of general conversation, referring to the personal history of the man, including the place of birth, home, former occupation, and relations in civil life. I found that several of them had lived in localities with which I was more or less familiar, one having lived at my own home; and then subjected them to a rigid examination. As soon as the subject of the trouble at Brownsville was introduced, the countenance of the individual being interviewed assumed a wooden, stolid look, and each man positively denied any knowledge of the circumstances connected with or individuals concerned in the affair.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did that apply with reference to those that were examined, other than the prisoners?—A. Practically the same throughout. They were immediately on the defensive, and they took that cast of countenance which I have described there as wooden, that is, expressionless, as many of them can take that expression, which is familiar to me, but rather difficult to describe.

Q. Have you heard of any organization among troops, whether colored or white?—A. No; nothing further than at posts where I have been stationed, members of the Odd Fellows, or something of that sort. I know of no—

Q. No secret organization?—A. No, sir; never heard of any.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Just a question or two that I forgot. You said that you heard somebody say that Captain Macklin found some shells in the alley and covered them up with his feet.

Senator WARNER. He said Major Penrose told him that.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major Penrose told you that. Where was it Major Penrose told you that, and what was it he told you?—A. He told me that while I was at Fort Reno.

Q. Making this investigation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you at the time when he told you this?—A. Either in his office or in his house.

Q. Either in his office or in his house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was present when he told you this?—A. I don't recall that anyone was present.

Q. What was it he told you, as nearly as you can give it?—A. In discussing the subject—of course we talked about this subject all the time that I was there—in speaking of the finding of shells and clips in the alley, he spoke of the time when he had changed his mind from the assumption that the post was being attacked, which was based upon the fact of finding these shells and clips in the alley.

Q. That was the next morning?—A. The next morning, and I wanted to know about how many shells he found there. Of course he could not tell how many, but he spoke of a good many. He said there were a good many shells there.

Q. Did I understand you to say that he said he found them, or that they were found?—A. No; he did not say.

Q. He did not claim to have found any?—A. No; my recollection is that he saw some there; that he saw some himself.

Q. In the alley or after they were brought to him?—A. In the alley.

Q. Well, let us have your own story.—A. He said there were a good many shells in the alley, and that Captain Macklin had told him that there were so many of the shells around him where he happened to be standing that he had with his feet covered them up with the sand.

Q. Captain Macklin had covered them up with his foot, and with sand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A lot of these shells?—A. Or with the dirt; I don't know whether sand or not.

Q. Either one. One will do as well as the other. What did you say about that?—A. I don't know that I said anything.

Q. Why did Captain Macklin cover them up?—A. The idea was, as I have stated in my testimony, that these civilians were there—Mayor Combe and some others—and that he did not want to make it any more pointed than it was that the probabilities were that it was done by the soldiers, and that he covered them up.

Q. Was the mayor present when he covered them up?—A. I am not sure.

Q. Or any civilian?—A. There were some civilians there, and I think it was the mayor and some others.

Q. Some of the civilians were present when Captain Macklin did this?—A. I understood Major Penrose to say so.

Q. I want to get this story accurately, as you got it. So, now, if I understand you correctly, Major Penrose told you that Captain Macklin told him that he was out in this alley—that is the Cowen alley, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he found so many clips and shells there that he covered some of them up in the sand, or in the dirt, with his foot?—A. Some of them.

Q. So that the citizens would not see them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the mayor was there and some of the civilians at the same time?—A. I will not say positively that the mayor was there, but there were civilians present.

Q. There were civilians present with him at this time?—A. There or in the vicinity.

Q. And you got the impression that Captain Macklin did this to keep the civilians from seeing them?—A. That is what I did, sir.

Q. If they were present there with him, would not they see the clips as well as he?—A. They might not have been right there. Captain Macklin evidently thought that he could do it without being seen. That was the idea that I got from Major Penrose.

Q. And that was all there was to that statement, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just one other thing. You said a while ago that you would not believe these soldiers without corroboration—would not believe any of them who denied that he had participated in the shooting, or that he had knowledge of the shooting. I understood that, in effect, to be your statement.—A. That is substantially what I stated. I did not state that I would not believe any of them who denied participation, because I believe that there are a great many of those men who did not participate.

Q. I could not get you to say about how many. You say a great many of them. Have you any idea how many?—A. Who did not participate?

Q. Yes.—A. I think, as I said—

Q. I do not mean how many did not participate, but how many do you think had no knowledge as to who did participate?—A. That would simply be a guess.

Q. You would not believe any of them who denied having knowledge as to who did the shooting?—A. Not without corroboration; no, sir; not now.

Q. If anyone would come forward and tell you that he knew who did the shooting, would you believe him?—A. Not unless he had corroboration.

Q. Not without corroboration?—A. No, sir.

Q. You would not believe him either way?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have not any confidence in the word, even under oath, of a colored man, have you?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. You have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not seem to have any confidence in the word, even under oath, of any member of this battalion.—A. I have not, not now.

Q. And you did not have then, did you? I understood you to say a while ago that you did not have then.—A. Not after the time I became associated with them.

Q. Don't you think a great many of those old soldiers and those noncommissioned officers were a splendid class of colored men?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They always had borne good characters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Truthful men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you would not believe one of them, even if he would say he had shot up the town?—A. I would believe him if he would say that.

Q. You would believe that of any one of them, wouldn't you?—A. If he admitted that he shot it up; yes, sir; I would.

Q. If any man would come forward and say that he shot up the town, or that he knew that this, that, or the other man did it, who was a member of the battalion, you would believe him then?—A. No;

I would not accept any one man's information or statement as to another who did the shooting. In other words, I think that the condition now is that you can not get the truth from those people about the Brownsville incident. That is the general proposition I make.

Q. You said that was the case when you were there, too, didn't you?—A. After I talked to them a while.

Q. Well, I say, you came to that conclusion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet that is the very thing you were trying to get out of them, and the very thing you recommended that they be dismissed for, because they would not tell you who it was that did it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stood ready, then, to believe any man who would come forward and say "I did not do it, but somebody else did it?"—A. I stood ready to follow up any clew that any of those men gave me, and then to pass my opinion upon what I found.

Q. But you would not have believed them without corroboration?—A. No, sir.

Q. None of them? How long have you had such a disparaged opinion of the veracity of colored men?—A. I did not say that of colored men. I am talking about the Brownsville battalion.

Q. Do you think colored people, generally, are truthful?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You do not?—A. No.

Q. You would not believe their testimony ordinarily, even under oath, would you?—A. Where their own interest, or some special interest, was concerned. It depends entirely upon the circumstances.

Q. You think a colored man might testify truthfully about the weather, but that he would not testify truthfully about a crime?—A. He might have some difficulty in testifying about the weather.

Q. Just now he would, but if he were testifying about a crime that he was charged with, or that some of his comrades were charged with, you would not believe him?—A. Not without corroboration.

Q. You say there is no secret society among soldiers that you know of, either white or black?—A. I never heard of any.

Q. Now about Newton. You said he came from your town, Greenville, S. C.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he admitted to you that he had once been arrested for fighting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any other arrests?—A. No.

Q. Or any other trouble?—A. No. He told me who he lived with; and Sergt. Mingo Sanders is from my own country, too.

Q. He is from South Carolina, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you would not believe him under oath?—A. Well, not now.

Q. You would not believe him under oath, although he served twenty-six years in the Army, at home and abroad, in Cuba and the Philippines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has as splendid a record as any man in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And although his officers come forward and say he is an entirely truthful man, according to their observation and belief, still you would not believe him?—A. I would not believe him, not now, because of my confidence that he did not testify to the whole truth in this investigation.

Q. He did not?—A. That is my opinion.

Q. In what particular?—A. In the particular of hearing bullets whistle over his head.

Q. You think he did not hear that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think he did not hear any bullets?—A. I do.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that it has been testified by one of the policemen and by the mayor, too, that there were shots fired in that direction?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that Major Blocksom has testified that in his opinion some of the first shots were fired over the reservation?—A. No, sir; I do not remember that.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that out at the hospital the attendants there, some of the noncommissioned staff of the hospital corps, testify that they heard bullets coming over from the same general direction?—A. I am aware of the fact that the hospital steward testified that he heard bullets pass his house, but I am not entirely sure that he is correct.

Q. You doubt that?—A. Because he was inside the house, and he testified that he heard those bullets passing, and I do not think it possible for him to have heard any bullets passing.

Q. The fact is that you accept with distrust every statement that looks toward acquitting these men of complicity in this affair, do you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you tell us of one that you have accepted without distrust?—A. I have not heard any that I know of.

Q. You have not heard anything said in their favor that you have accepted as true, have you?—A. I have not heard of any; no, sir.

Q. You have not heard of any?—A. No testimony that some individuals of that battalion were not engaged in this firing.

Q. Anything at all that is inconsistent with that theory you reject as untruthful, do you not?—A. I reject it as inaccurate; yes, sir.

Q. And unreliable and not to be believed?—A. My opinion is—

Q. That is all.

By Senator Scott:

Q. General, I want to ask you one question. Having the opinion that you have that there is no question but that the colored men did this shooting, what do you think was their motive in doing it?—A. I think it was probably a sudden impulse, an uncontrolled impulse that arose from a supposed injury, and the Evans incident, and the fact that their privileges had been taken away from them and they had been confined to the barracks that evening, and not knowing exactly, the majority of them, why they were confined, and they ascribed it to some sort of action on the part of the people of Brownsville, and I think some badly disposed men—it just occurred to them to go out. Those patrols that went out—I think two patrols were sent out during the evening—I do not think it was premeditated; I think it was one of those sudden emotions that come to people who are not self-controlled, and who are more or less emotional, and they got hold of their guns and ran out there and did the shooting.

Q. But in your association with them during this investigation, as I understood you a while ago, you did not find any bitter feeling?—A. None at all.

Q. That is all. I just wanted to know what the motive was.—
A. The men there with these two exceptions disclaimed any bad treatment from anybody.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. General, did you happen to hear who the soldier was who was in company with Newton when Tate struck him over the head?—

A. Yes, sir; I knew. Askew, I think.

Q. Lipscomb?—A. Lipscomb; yes, sir.

Q. The testimony indicates that he ran away very quickly?—
A. Yes, sir; as I recollect it.

Q. Tate testified that he turned around, and this man who was with Newton had disappeared. Did you happen to hear anything in any of your talks with any of the men there in regard to their feeling toward Lipscomb for abandoning Newton so quickly?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. General, speaking of the shells that Captain Macklin covered with his foot, were those afterwards obtained and put with the others here as a part of the exhibit?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. I understood you that the probable motive of Captain Macklin, as explained to you by Major Penrose, was to cover them for the time being?—A. That was the impression I got, that there was great excitement among the people against the garrison, and the feeling was tense, and they were there, and in order not to exploit it or call it to their attention, he just covered the shells up, some of them.

Q. But he reported that to Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you did not assume that there was any idea on Captain Macklin's part of secreting those things?—A. No, sir. I understood it just in the way I have stated, that the feeling was very high, and they had already seen some of the shells, and if they saw more of them it would exaggerate the feeling.

(At 1 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m. the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Tuesday, June 4, 1907.

The committee reassembled, pursuant to the taking of adjournment, at 2.15 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Warner, and Pettus.

TESTIMONY OF YGNACIO GARZA.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-three.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a clerk for Mr. Francisco Yturria.

Q. What business is he engaged in?—A. He is a merchant and does a banking business.

Q. He has a general store and does a banking business also?—
A. Yes, sir; and banking business.

Q. How long have you lived in Brownsville?—A. About thirteen years.

Q. You are of Spanish descent?—A. I am of Mexican descent—Mexican.

Q. Your mother and father were Mexicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are a citizen of the United States?—A. No, sir; I am a Mexican citizen.

Q. A Mexican citizen? Now, you were in Brownsville the night of August 13 of last year, the night of the shooting up of the town?—
A. Yes, sir; I was in Brownsville.

Q. Where were you that night?—A. At my house, sleeping.

Q. Where is your house located?—A. My house is located on Fourteenth street, between Washington and Elizabeth streets, right on the corner of the alley, the alley between those two streets.

Q. On Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between Elizabeth and Washington streets?—A. And Washington street.

Q. Where were you with reference to the Cowen house, then?—
A. I am right in front of Cowen's.

Q. Right across from Cowen's?—A. He lives right through the alley.

Q. I will ask you to look at this map, Mr. Garza. This represents the post of Fort Brown, this space here [indicating], and this is Elizabeth street, and this is Washington street, and this is Fourteenth street. Here is the Cowen house, and this house not marked is yours, right around the corner of the alley there [indicating]?—
A. Yes, sir; that is the one.

Q. Are you a married man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were at home that night?—A. Yes, sir; I was at home.

Q. What was the first you heard of the shooting, Mr. Garza?—
A. I heard some shooting; I was asleep and I was awakened by some shots.

Q. In what direction was that shooting?—A. In my opinion they were in the direction of the garrison.

Q. The garrison?—A. The garrison—the post.

Q. You say you are positive?—A. Well, yes, sir; I am positive.

(The stenographer here read the last two questions and answers.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I misunderstood you; I thought you said you were positive.
Then how did the firing move—the shooting? Did it come uptown where you were?—A. Yes, sir; it came by the alley. I heard the shooting by the alley where I live.

Q. What was the character of that shooting, Mr. Garza? Was it of high-power guns, such as the army guns?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed to me it was. It was of high-power rifles.

Q. Was the shooting near your house at any time?—A. Yes, sir;
it was.

Q. Where was the shooting that was near your house? What place was it with reference to the alley and Fourteenth street?—
A. Well, about up in front of Mr. Cowen's house.

Q. What is that?—A. Cowen's.

Q. In front of Cowen's?—A. Of Cowen's.

Q. And that is right across the alley from you?—A. Through the alley; yes, sir.

Q. How many shots do you think were fired there, Mr. Garza?—A. Right in front, there?

Q. Yes.—A. About thirty; thirty or forty, more or less. I did not count them, you know, but I believe it was about thirty or forty.

Q. Were those of the heavy reports, of the army guns?—A. Yes, sir; heavy reports. They were heavy reports.

Q. Did you see any person who did the shooting?—A. If I saw any?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw no one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your wife was with you, and your children?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the condition there; were they very much frightened?—A. Yes, sir; we were frightened, all of us.

Q. Did you hear the working of the guns?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. You heard the magazines?—A. Right in front of the alley, there, in front of my house; yes, sir.

Q. The alley would be right near your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taking this army gun and withdrawing the bolt, that way [indicating]—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard that plainly, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it, and my wife also.

Q. Your wife is not here. She is not able to come, is she?—A. No, sir; she is not here.

Q. Were there any bullets that entered your house?—A. One entered my house in the dining room and struck the leg of a chair and went into a sideboard. Another struck the brick foundation of the north side of the house; didn't go into the house at all. It just struck the brick foundation.

Q. Did you get that bullet that went through your house and through the chair into the sideboard?—A. You know, my boys took hold of the bullet, the pieces, and threw it away, and I got some of them.

Q. That bullet was broken to pieces?—A. Yes, sir; it was broken.

Q. What did you notice of that bullet? Anything special to call your attention to it?—A. Well, no, sir.

Q. And the other struck the foundation?—A. The foundation—

Q. Of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find that bullet?—A. I found the pieces around the floor.

Q. The one that struck the foundation of the house?—A. No, sir; I didn't find that.

Q. You didn't find that?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far is your house from the fort?—A. It is about 200 feet, more or less; I have not measured it, you know. That is only an estimate.

Q. Yes, I understand. How many houses are between your house and the porch?—A. On my side?

Q. Yes.—A. On the side of my house?

Q. Yes.—A. The Yturria's.

Q. Yturria's house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the house next to the garrison?—A. Yes, sir; that is the one.

Q. And the shooting that you heard came down that alley—the parties doing the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; came down that alley, and was advancing that way.

Q. About how many shots did you hear, altogether, that night?—A. I believe there were 150, more or less; 150, or 200, maybe.

Q. How long did the shooting last?—A. In my opinion it was about eight or ten minutes.

Q. You did not take special note?—A. No, sir; I didn't take special note.

Q. Did you go out of the house that night?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Why not, Mr. Garza?—A. Well, I was there with my family and had to take care of them.

Q. Now, Mr. Garza, after the shooting stopped, did you hear parties running past your house back to the fort?—A. After the shooting?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; I heard some one running through the alley.

Q. How many?—A. Well, I could not tell you how many, you know. I just heard some one running there, maybe two or three or four; I could not tell you.

Q. You could not tell the exact number?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you heard parties running?—A. Yes, sir; in the direction of the post.

Q. In the direction of the post?—A. Yes, sir; by the alley.

Q. That is the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is what we call here, sometimes, the Cowen alley?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator PERTUS:

Q. At what gait were they going towards the post?

Senator WARNER. At what speed?

The WITNESS. What?

Senator WARNER. How fast?

The WITNESS. Quick; they were fast. I could not tell you exactly.

By Senator PERTUS:

Q. Running?—A. When they were coming back; yes, sir; they were running.

Q. Running back towards the post?—A. Yes, sir; they were running.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you look at the Yturria house the next day?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did you notice any marks of bullet holes in that house?—A. Yes, sir; I noticed them.

Q. Now just state, Mr. Garza, as near as you can, what you saw there, the bullet holes and marks, and where they were.—A. Well, I noticed a bullet hole in the kitchen and through the dining room. The one that went through the kitchen stopped in the top of the well. I took that bullet out myself, out there.

Q. What did you do with that bullet?—A. I brought it to the office, and afterwards, when Mr. Blockson was there, I gave it to him.

Q. Mr. Blockson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a steel-jacketed bullet?—A. Yes, sir; it was a big bullet; yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice with anybody the direction in which either of those bullets came? Did you sight through?—A. Yes, sir; it came from the barracks, from B barracks.

Q. On our map, Mr. Garza, D barracks is next to the river, to the right as you go into the reservation, and B barracks is the one to the left as you go in.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was with you at any time when you went through there?—A. The first time was Teofilo Martinez, and the next time was Major Blockson.

Q. The next time was Major Blockson?—A. Major Blockson.

Q. Did you notice a bullet mark in the windmill or the cistern?—A. Yes, sir; I did. I did not take the direction of that.

Q. You did not take the direction of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How high was that from the ground?—A. The one in the cistern?

Q. Yes; in the cistern.—A. The one in the cistern must have been about 12 or 14 feet from the ground.

Q. Now, Mr. Garza, do you know whether or not there is a fence along here [indicating]? We call that south, to the right.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this is the south side of the Yturria property. Do you know whether there is a fence along there?—A. Yes, sir; there is a fence along there.

Q. What sort of a fence is it?—A. A lumber fence.

Q. A closed board fence?—A. Yes, sir; closed 1 by 12 boards.

Q. About how high is that fence?—A. About 6 or 7 feet high.

Q. Could a person standing in Garrison road have fired those shots in the direction in which they went?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any trouble of any kind with the colored soldiers there?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. You had no prejudice against them?—A. No, sir.

Q. None whatever?—A. None; no, sir.

Q. You are still clerking in the store?—A. Yes, sir; I am still there.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What is on the corner opposite your house, the corner of Fourteenth street and this Cowan alley?—A. On the corner opposite my house?

Senator WARNER. Right across Fourteenth street.

(The corner in question was here pointed out on the map by Senator Scott.)

The WITNESS. There is a small frame house there.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There is a small frame house there?—A. Right in front of—

Q. Your house fronts on Fourteenth street, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what I want to know is what is on the corner nearly opposite here [indicating]?—A. There is a little frame house.

Q. A little frame house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who lived there?—A. A Mexican woman.

Q. Some Mexican women?—A. A woman.

Q. How near is that house to the corner?—A. Right at the corner.

Q. It fronts right on Fourteenth street and runs along the alley?—A. No, sir; it runs along Fourteenth street.

Q. It faces you exactly?—A. Yes; it faces me exactly.

Q. And how far does it extend along the alley?—A. How far what?

Senator SCOTT. How far does it go back [indicating].

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How far does the house go back?—A. It is 14 or 16 feet wide.

Q. Fourteen or 16 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not wider than that? I mean lengthways. I mean this way [indicating]. How deep is your house?—A. It must be about 20 feet.

Q. Only 20?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How high is your house?—A. I don't know exactly; but it must be about 18 feet—14 or 16.

Q. It is one story or two stories?—A. One story.

Q. Yours is one story and theirs is one?—A. One.

Q. And is theirs about the same size as your house?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is smaller?—A. Yes, sir; it is smaller.

Q. And you think it is only 16 or 18 feet deep?—A. Yes, sir; maybe less than that; maybe 12 feet.

Q. Is it not as deep as this room is wide [indicating]?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not as deep?—A. No, sir.

Q. A very small house then?—A. Yes, sir; very small.

Q. What is between you and the Yturria house? Any other house in there [indicating on map]?—A. There is, I don't know what you call it—a chicken—

Q. A chicken house?—A. Yes, sir; a chicken house.

Q. When you heard the firing you put your wife and children on the floor?—A. Yes, sir; on the floor.

Q. And then you went to the window?—A. After they stopped the first time.

Q. After they stopped the first time?—A. Yes, sir; I went to the window by the yard.

Q. Where was that first firing?—A. By the garrison.

Q. Right by the garrison?—A. I first heard it.

Q. And the next firing you heard was up near your house?—A. Well, they were firing—advanced firing.

Q. You looked out of the window?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got a window here [indicating], looking out on the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the window that you looked out of?—A. No, sir; I went on the other side.

Q. Then you looked out on Fourteenth street?—A. No, sir. Shall I show it to you?

Q. Yes; I wish you would.—A. It has two windows here, and two windows on this side, and three or four on this side [indicating].

Q. Three or four on Fourteenth street? There are three or four windows looking out of your house onto Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were looking out towards Washington street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were looking out towards the alley [indicating on map]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And across to the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the window you went and looked out of was towards Washington street?—A. Yes, sir; I looked out through the window in this direction [indicating].

Q. You looked towards Washington street and all around, as far as you could?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not see anybody shooting at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you heard the firing in the alley?—A. When I looked out they were not firing.

Q. Did you look out the window towards the alley at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody stop and fire near your house?—A. Yes, sir; I heard some one shooting there.

Q. About how many shots?—A. About thirty or forty shots fired there.

Q. About thirty or forty shots fired there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which way were they firing?—A. It seemed like they were firing to the Cowen house.

Q. To the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not go across the next morning and examine the Cowen house?—A. No, sir; I never have been there.

Q. You have never been there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went to the Yturria house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then why did you not go and look at the Cowen house?—A. I have been invited several times, but I never went there.

Q. Was not that an exciting time, the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wanted to see what damage had been done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went and examined the Yturria house?—A. Yes, sir; I work for Mr. Yturria.

Q. And then did you not go and look at the Cowen house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it not shot up worse than any other house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you did not go and look at it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not go and look into it at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You can not tell us anything about the shots in that house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever go in front of it on Fourteenth street and see about the shots there?—A. No, sir.

Q. There is a tree where I am pointing, at the corner of the Cowen house and the alley [indicating on map]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large a tree is that?—A. A good large tree.

Q. A good-sized tree; and in the summer time full of leaves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us what kind of a tree it is?—A. They call it "fresno." I do not know what you call it in English.

Q. Now, after you pass this house, at the corner of Fourteenth street and the alley, what comes next as you go up on this same side?—A. On this same side [indicating]?

Q. Yes.—A. The Miller Hotel is on this side.

Q. No; here is the Miller Hotel [indicating].—A. Here is where Armstrong lives.

Q. Next after you pass the corner, what house is there?—A. Bezin's.

Q. That comes next?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then Armstrong's?—A. Yes, sir; and then Jagou.

Q. And then Jagou?—A. Yes, sir; and then Bolack.

Q. Then Bolack's store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That takes you clear to the corner of Thirteenth street?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all built up, clear to the corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the opposite side—on the side where the Miller Hotel is—what is there, beginning at Fourteenth street?—A. Mrs. Leahy.

Q. This is her place [indicating on map]. What is there?—A. The kitchen; you know—the wood yard.

Q. The wood yard runs out to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the building, according to this map, stops short of the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there buildings all along there [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir. There is Doctor Thorn's.

Q. This is his place here, "No. 4?"—A. Yes, sir [indicating on map].

Q. Are there any street lamps in that alley at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is not lighted up in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. There are no street lamps between Washington street and Elizabeth street on Fourteenth street, are there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you did not try to go out into this alley at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a night that was?—A. It was a dark night.

Q. Very dark, was it not?—A. It was dark.

Q. Can you recall anything that makes you know that it was dark?—A. When I went to the window, you know, I saw it was dark. The night was dark.

Q. You could not see anybody anywhere, could you?—A. I didn't see anybody.

Q. You did not see anybody?—A. I didn't see anybody.

Q. From where you were looking out here from this end of your house, you were how far from Washington and Fourteenth streets? Here is Washington and Fourteenth streets, and here is your house [indicating]. How far is that rear end of your house—A. From the corner here [indicating]?

Q. Yes.—A. It would be about 80 feet.

Q. Eighty feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have a good view out that way, have you not, from your window?—A. Yes, sir; of course there is another building right here [indicating], but there is a yard here, you know [indicating on map].

Q. How far is it from your house to the other house between you and Washington street?—A. Twenty-odd feet.

Q. Twenty-odd feet; so that you could look right through there [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see the corner of Washington and Fourteenth, that I am now pointing to, diagonally across from your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody out there at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were looking out there from time to time, during all the firing?

Senator WARNER. He has not said that he looked out more than once.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You looked out when?—A. After the first firing.

Q. After the first shots were all over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was after the bugle call?—A. No; the bugle call was after that.

Q. The bugle call was after you looked out.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw nobody at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where those pieces of metal are that you say you recovered?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know where they are?—A. Major Blocksom got some of them.

Q. And the bullet you took out of the wall, can you tell use where that is?—A. He has got it also.

Q. Would you know that if you saw it again? Can you recognize it?—A. I guess I can.

Q. These bullets seem not to be at hand just at present, but I will have them shortly. In the meanwhile I will ask you about something else. You went over to the Yturria house and you looked along the lines that the bullets had made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that carried you to the rear porch of B barracks?—A. B barracks; yes, sir.

Q. What did you look through, a hole?—A. No, sir; I just took the line where the bullet would strike.

Q. Where the bullet would strike?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it you saw that that bullet had struck? What was it, what part of the house?—A. The south side of the house.

Q. That is the side towards the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But what part of the house? Did it strike the chimney, or the door, or the roof, or what part?—A. No, sir; it struck the wall.

Q. About where on the wall?—A. Shall I show you?

Q. Yes.—A. About here [indicating on map].

Q. How high up?—A. High up. About 8 feet.

Q. About 8 feet from the ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Somebody testified that it was 9½ feet from the ground?—A. I have not measured it, you know.

Q. You did not measure it?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is what I wanted to get at.—A. No, sir.

Q. How many of those bullet holes did you examine?—A. Two of them.

Q. And you sighted along the hole?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you sight from inside of the house?—A. No, sir; I sighted from the railing.

Q. You got up on the railing and looked along in the line that the bullet made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a hole through a piece of wood, or was it just a groove?—A. A groove and a hole both, and I sighted the best I could.

Q. And you sighted the best you could?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were not the groove and the hole both full of wood that was furred up, so that you could not see through them?—A. I did not understand you.

Q. Did not the bullet leave the wood, in the hole that the bullet made, furred up—that is, rough?—A. Yes, sir; it was rough.

Q. Was not that the fact, that it practically closed the bullet hole up so that you could not look through it?—A. I did not look through the hole, you know; I just sighted by it.

Q. You could not see through the hole, could you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see through the hole?—A. Yes, sir; in the door you can see through the hole; and on the wall you can see the hole from one side to the other.

Q. That is just where it makes a groove, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But where it makes a hole, you can not see through the hole?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that when you undertook to sight through the hole you found you could not look through it?—A. I did not look through the hole, you know. I just sighted from the outside of the hole, you know.

Q. You just saw where the hole was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where it had gone in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you judged it as nearly as you could?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could not see through at all, could you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, when you looked through at the other place, the groove was under the lintel, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not that also rough, from the wood standing out after the bullet passed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was rough too, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all. You did not see anybody firing?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You went to the window. You only stopped at the window a short time when you went to the window to look out?—A. Just for a second or so.

Q. And that was when there was no firing going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, those buildings in the alley that you have spoken of, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, on the east side, how near do they go back to the alley?—A. The buildings?

Q. Yes.—A. The buildings along the alley, you say?

Q. Yes; how far are they from the alley? They front on Washington street, do they?—A. Yes, sir; the front would be on Washington street. One, right from the corner of Washington street, there is no building at all [indicating on map]. The other is the Pesina building.

Q. How many feet are there between the rear of that building and the alley?—A. From the rear of the building?

Q. Yes.—A. It must be about 80 feet.

Q. Eighty feet?—A. Eighty, from the alley to the house.

Senator FORAKER. Either I misunderstand you, Senator Warner, or the witness. You say from the rear to the alley. The witness said it fronted on the alley.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is this building that you spoke of a moment ago?—A. The Bezin building.

Q. That building fronts on what?—A. On Washington street.

Q. And runs back towards the alley?—A. The building does not run to the alley, but the yard does.

Q. And the rear of the Pesina building is how many feet from the alley?—A. Do you mean the front of the building?

Q. I mean the end of the building towards the alley, the rear?—A. It must be about 60 or 80 feet.

Q. Sixty or 80 feet. And the next building south of that?—A. South of that?

Q. Yes.—A. There is a building to the north; there is no building to the south, right in the corner of the street, you know.

Q. I mean south.—A. South, this way [indicating]?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, yes; there is a building on the corner of the alley.

Q. Your building here, for instance, runs back to the alley. does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But these other buildings here do not. How far are they from the alley? How far are the rears of the other buildings from the alley that is between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets?—A. About 80 feet; all of them about the same.

Q. Eighty feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any bullets picked up at all? I did not ask you that on the direct examination.—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not notice if you did?—A. I did not notice.

Q. Now, Mr. Garza, in your own way, so that we may have no misunderstanding about it, take that pointer and commence at Thirteenth and Washington streets and just point out the buildings until you get to Fourteenth street, and state whose they are and what they are and how near they come back to the alley. Begin at Thirteenth and Washington streets.—A. This is Bolack's.

Q. Bolack's is the first building?—A. His building is about here; but the yard, the garden, runs about here [indicating].

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That is an empty lot on Washington street?—A. Yes, sir; a garden. And about here is Jagou's.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Tell us how far that runs back, how near to the alley.—A. Jagou's is here; it begins here and runs along Washington street; and there is another big frame building here. I did not say that before. I mentioned it. Jagou's is right in front here [indicating on map]. There are yards, of course, between them.

Q. Does that go back to the alley, the next building?—A. Yes, sir. The next building begins at Washington street, and there is a stable in the middle of the block, fronting on the alley [indicating].

Q. Then what is the next building?—A. Pesina's begins here, and the yard runs to the alley [indicating].

By Senator LODGE:

Q. There is no building on that?—A. No building right here [indicating].

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is at the corner of Fourteenth and Washington streets?—

A. There is no building here, on Washington or Fourteenth streets.

Q. There is no building there?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is there any fence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a fence?—A. Common lumber.

Q. Is it a high or a low fence?—A. No, sir; a very low fence.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Palings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I do not care anything about what is on Washington street. I want to know what is on that alley. I will have to go over it again. Right opposite your house is the house where the Mexican woman lives?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a house one story high and fronts on Fourteenth street and extends along the alley, the edge of it, 15 or 16 feet in depth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next to that comes what?—A. Pesina's.

Q. What is in front of his lot fronting on the alley?—A. No building there; that is a fence [indicating].

Q. His house fronts on Washington street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And runs back how deep?—A. The building?

Q. Yes.—A. To about 80 feet from the alley. The kitchen is a little way here [indicating]; about here is the kitchen, and here is the back of the lot [indicating].

Q. Then there is a vacant lot back to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a fence there, back at the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the second place, and then comes Armstrong's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then we have on the alley, next, what?—A. A stable.

Q. Bezin's has no stable?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing fronting on the alley?—A. No, sir.

Q. But Armstrong's has?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next is Jagou's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He fronts on Washington street and extends back to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next is Bolack's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the building on the alley. He extends up to Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the opposite side of the alley is as you have described it a while ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I asked you if you would know that bullet that you took out of the well at the Yturria house if you saw it again?—A. I do not know whether I would or not.

Q. There it is, as I am told [handing bullet to witness].—A. (After examination.) That looks like it.

Q. About how high up from the ground was that?—A. About 4 or 5 feet.

Q. In what relation to the woodwork of the well was that, when you found it sticking in the wood?—A. It came in this way from the alley, and it was this way [indicating]; it just entered that way [indicating with bullet].

Q. It was standing right straight out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As though it were coming in the way I am holding it now, in a vertical position [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the way it stood in the woodwork?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sticking up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You see what a peculiar dent there is in the nose of it?—A. Yes, sir; a nail struck it.

Q. Did you see what did that?—A. It was a nail; yes, sir.

Q. That nail was right where you found the bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the nail—A. Right under the bullet.

Q. And this bullet was tilted up over the nail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was the nail—driven in?—A. It struck the nail this way [indicating with bullet] and went through the lumber, through the board, and there was about this much of the bullet outside [indicating].

Q. Was this nail in the well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you saw the end of the bullet sticking out of the wood of the well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a piece of wood was it in?—A. About an inch thick.

Q. Was the nose of the bullet sticking straight downwards towards the earth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Straight downwards towards the earth [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as its position was concerned when you found it, it might have been fired straight downwards, might it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was going in that direction?—A. Yes, sir; apparently.

Q. Did you sight from that hole to find out where it came from?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you conclude that it came from?—A. From the barracks.

Q. You thought that it came from the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You found this in the woodwork of the well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could it not have been shot from the outside?—A. No, sir; you could see the hole in the door of the kitchen.

Q. You found it in the frame of the woodwork of the well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a vertical position?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it had come through two walls of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a picture?—A. No, sir; that was another bullet.

Q. And you concluded that it had come from B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you sight from the well?—A. I just sighted the hole there, you know.

Q. You just noted how the holes were?—A. Yes, sir.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF MRS. HELEN MOORE.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is your full name?—A. Mrs. Helen Moore, Senator.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-three.

Q. Your home is in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; my home is in Brownsville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. A year and a half; a year last October; about a year and seven months, now. A year last October I went to Brownsville.

Q. What business have you been engaged in?—A. The hotel business.

Q. What is the name of your hotel?—A. The Miller.

Q. Where is that located?—A. Right on the corner of Thirteenth and Elizabeth streets.

Q. Were you conducting that hotel on the 13th of August last year, at the time of the shooting up of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the night of that shooting?—A. I was in my room; at 12 o'clock at night.

Q. Had you gone to bed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you asleep when the shooting commenced?—A. Yes, sir; the first shot woke us.

Q. What part of your house were you sleeping, Mrs. Moore?—A. The room right on the corner of the alley; our room was right along the side of the alley; the windows were right out on the alley and towards the post; one on the alley and one towards the post.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. This is the Miller Hotel, Mrs. Moore, as indicated on this map; this is the alley, and here is Thirteenth street, and your room was in that corner?—A. Right in that corner, there, over my kitchen; yes, sir; that is my room, there.

Q. In the corner of the building on the alley, and fronting the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; that is my room; and there was one window this way [indicating]; one window right here and one right there [indicating].

Q. And one on the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is, the second story?—A. Yes, sir; the second story.

Q. When you heard this shooting in what direction was it?—A. From the barracks.

Q. What was the character of that shooting, Mrs. Moore?—A. It was a quick, sharp shot.

Q. Have you been accustomed to hearing army rifles?—A. No, sir; I never heard one before in my life.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the reports of guns?—A. Yes, sir; This was a sound that I had never heard before. I shoot a gun myself.

Q. The fact is that you go hunting with your husband?—A. Yes, sir; I go hunting with him all the time, and I use a gun all the time, but I never heard a gun like this before.

Q. This shooting that you first heard was, as you thought, up near the fort?—A. Yes, sir; it was at the fort.

Q. And then which way did it go?—A. It came right straight down towards my house.

Q. In the alley?—A. The alley.

Q. Just describe that shooting in your own way, the character of the shooting.—A. The first two or three shots we heard, my husband thought it was fire, and we jumped up as quick as we could and looked out of the window—this window that faces the post—and he says, "It is fire," and I says, "No; it is not. It is on account of the Evans trouble." Just the night before they had pulled her off of her horse, and I said, "No; it is on account of the Evans trouble, and it is the soldiers," and he says, "No; it is only in the post, and it is a fire in the post." So we stood there and watched out of that window until they fired another volley right at the corner of the alley and Fourteenth street, and we could see the flashes of the guns, one right after another, until they started and came right down the alley towards the hotel, and they were shooting as they came, and then we dropped right down below the window, and crawled into our hallway, and sat there until the shooting ceased; and then Mr. Goldsmith, the young man boarding with us, hollered to us not to put our heads out of our window, that it was the soldiers shooting up the town.

Q. Were you much frightened?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I was frightened to death, Senator. I was as nervous as I could be.

Q. Did you at any time hear any remarks made, Mrs. Moore, by parties out there?—A. Remarks of the soldiers?

Q. Yes.—A. I heard them as they passed; I heard some one out there say, "Shoot him, the son of a b——. There he goes; get him." This was just as they passed by in the alley and turned into Thirteenth street. A number of them went down Thirteenth street and part of them went right straight down the alley. That is when they shot at our house.

Q. By "straight down the alley" you mean in the direction of Twelfth street?—A. No; right straight on down the alley; straight on down this way, down the alley [indicating].

Q. Towards Twelfth street?—A. Towards town; yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the noise that the guns made out there?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it when it struck our house and made the remark to my husband then, "They have struck the house."

Q. But did you hear the guns when they were shooting—as though they were loading and unloading the guns?—A. It seemed like they were pulling it back, like a pump gun.

Q. Like a pump gun?—A. Yes, sir; we can pull a pump gun back, and this was the same, only louder.

Q. Like this [working bolt of Springfield rifle]?—A. Yes, sir; that is it. That is the crack.

Q. That is, a noise like pulling the magazine?—A. Yes, sir; that is it exactly. I never saw an army gun and don't know anything about the workings of them at all, but that is the way it sounded.

Q. You say you were very much excited?—A. Yes, sir; very much excited. I never have gotten over it.

Q. Mrs. Moore, you spoke of the Evans incident; that is, the alleged assault on Mrs. Evans?—A. Yes, sir; I spoke of it. I says,

"Oh, no, it isn't fire; it must be on account of the trouble with Mrs. Evans."

Q. And then you told him that it was the niggers shooting up the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mrs. Moore, after this shooting of the 13th, what effect did that have upon your people—that is, upon the women of the town, as to being out upon the streets, and feeling safe? What was the effect in that respect?—A. Oh, it was awful, Senator. There wasn't any ladies would go out on the streets until those niggers left there.

Q. Why?—A. Because they were frightened to death; they were afraid to go out on the streets, on account of the niggers. They had all the power on earth over us.

Q. Was there ever, so far as you heard, among the people of Brownsville that night or afterwards, any question but what it was the colored men who did the shooting up of the town?—A. I never heard anyone make any other assertion but what they were satisfied it was the negroes that done the shooting.

Q. You had no trouble with the colored soldiers?—A. I never had in my life; no, sir.

Q. How long did that shooting continue, Mrs. Moore?—A. Oh, I guess it couldn't have been over twenty minutes—twenty or twenty-five minutes; something like that. It wasn't long.

Q. Was your house shot into?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course you would not pretend to tell the length of time it was. You were considerably excited?—A. Yes, sir; I couldn't say that.

Q. About how many shots would you say there were?—A. That went into our house?

Q. Altogether, there?—A. Oh, I couldn't begin to tell. There must have been a hundred shots. I don't know how many there were. I couldn't say that.

Q. How many shots were there in your house?—A. There was one went through from the alley, through one room, through the ceiling, and into a washstand on the third floor. We got that bullet out and gave it to Mayor Combe. Another went into room No. 41, on the corner, the first window from the corner on Thirteenth street, through the ceiling, and through a door, and lodged.

Q. Who occupied that room?—A. On the third floor?

Q. Yes.—A. No one was in that room at that time. That was No. 41. The room that the people were in that was shot through was under that.

Q. Who occupied that room?—A. Mr. and Mrs. Oden.

Q. Mr. Hale Odin, O-d-i-n?—A. O-d-e-n.

Q. He lives at San Antonio?—A. Yes, sir; he went from Brownsville to San Antonio.

Q. Yes. How many bullet holes were there, altogether, made in your house that night?—A. Five.

Q. And where were they, do you say?—A. Two in the rooms and two on the side and one in the corner.

Q. You did not go out of the house, or your husband, that night?—A. No, sir; neither one of us.

Q. You think you can not be mistaken as to hearing the noise that these guns made; that is, the pumping?—A. No, sir; I am not mistaken there at all.

Q. Did you know anything of the wounding of the lieutenant of police until the next morning?—A. Not until the next morning.
 Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You did not see anybody at all, as I understand you, Mrs. Moore?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard the firing?—A. I saw the fire from the guns.

Q. You saw the flashes of some of the guns when they were fired down in the neighborhood of Mr. Cowen's house?—A. Yes, sir; right at Mr. Cowen's house.

Q. And then you and your husband took to cover?—A. We got back.

Q. You got back—A. No, sir: we stood at the window and watched them firing until they started down the alley.

Q. Until they started towards you?—A. Yes, sir; and they were shooting as fast as they could, and when they started towards us we got away from the window.

Q. All you could see was the flashes of the guns?—A. Yes, sir; the flash of the guns and the sound of the guns.

Q. And you heard one of them make that remark you have mentioned, which I do not care to repeat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you could not tell what kind of a voice that was, as I understand?—A. I didn't say that, because under the excitement—

Q. It would have been hard for anybody to tell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You testified before Mr. Purdy, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said in your testimony you gave him that you could not tell anything about the voice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you just heard those words?—A. That I just heard those words.

Q. That is all you can say now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You and your husband got down under the window, and then crawled out into the hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you had two walls between you and the alley?—A. Yes, sir. No; not two walls between us and the alley, because there was a window right into the alley from the hall; but there were two walls between us and the barracks—a plank wall and a brick wall.

Q. Yes; but there would be two for your protection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the reason you got in there?—A. Yes, sir;

Q. That is all you know about it. One thing I would like to ask of you here: Do you remember how those rooms were occupied that night—on the third floor?—A. No, sir.

Q. As I understand it, you were on the second floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You and your husband. And do you know who occupied those rooms?—A. Yes, sir: the Odens were on the second floor and Mr. Bodin and Mr. Chace were on the third floor, and that newspaper man—I can not think of his name now—

Q. Canada?—A. Yes; Mr. Canada: he was on the third floor.

Q. But what I want to get at here now is as to the third floor. There is a corner room, I suppose fronting on the alley and on Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; that is the room that was unoccupied.

Q. That was unoccupied?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how large a room is that?—A. That is a room about 14 feet square, I guess; about that.

Q. How many windows are there in that room fronting on Thirteenth street?—A. One on Thirteenth street and one on the alley.

Q. One on Thirteenth street and one on the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Was not Mr. Hammond stopping at your house that night?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Hammond was stopping at the house that night.

Q. He was on the third floor, too?—A. Yes, sir; he was rooming on the third floor.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Who was in the next room on the third floor going from the alley towards Elizabeth street?—A. Now, I want to understand that again.

Q. Here I have before me a picture, as I understand it, of the Miller Hotel, at the corner of Thirteenth street and the alley. Is this Bolack's [indicating on photograph]?—A. Yes, sir; that is Bolack's; this is the alley, and that is room No. 41.

Q. That is No. 41 that you are pointing to? You are pointing to the window next to the alley on the third floor?—A. No, sir; this is room No. 40 that faces Thirteenth street. This is Thirteenth street and this is the alley. There is a window behind this. This is No. 40 and this is No. 41 [indicating on photograph].

Q. Now, was No. 41 occupied?—A. No, sir; this corner room was not occupied.

Q. Was No. 41 occupied?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Canada had that room.

Q. He had that, and what is the next room?—A. This, the next room to it, is No. 42, but I don't know who had those rooms.

Q. You do not know who was in that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And the next room would be No. 43?—A. Yes, sir; 43; and then 44; numbered right along.

Q. They were numbered from the alley going towards Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was there more than one window for each room?—A. Not except that one, No. 40, and there were two windows in that room.

Q. The other windows there would seem to be much farther apart [indicating on photograph]?—A. There is a hall in there.

Q. That is to say, rooms 41 and 42 are separated by a hall?—A. No, sir; this window comes in the hall, and this is 41 [indicating on photograph].

Q. So that the window you pointed out to me as the window of 41 is the window to the hall?—A. That is the hall window.

Q. And it would be still farther towards Elizabeth street, at the third window, where we find room No. 41?—A. Yes; that is where the two bricks were shot out.

Q. Is the next window that of room No. 42?—A. Yes, sir; and then 43 and 44 and 45.

Q. Is there any other hall in there?—A. No, sir; except coming across the other way.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

(The witness was excused and left the committee room, but was immediately recalled at the request of Senator Foraker).

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There is one question that I forgot to ask you. You testified that you were satisfied that it was the negroes shooting up the town as soon as you heard the firing?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. And you were satisfied of that because you thought they were shooting up the town because of the assault on Mrs. Evans?—A. No, sir; Senator, I did not say that. I said this, that the Evans trouble was the night before.

Q. Yes; just the night before.—A. Yes, sir; the night before. They had pulled her off of her horse, and I said they were shooting up the town. I didn't know they were shooting up the town or what they were doing. I merely said the shooting was on account of that trouble.

Q. That is what I wanted to get at. You had heard of this?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This happened Monday night?—A. No, sir; the Evans matter happened Sunday night, and the shooting was right after.

Q. Yes. Now, Monday, during the day, you heard of the Evans matter, and you had heard that a soldier had pulled her off her horse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was a good deal of talk about that, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a good deal of angry feeling?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not see any of the soldiers?—A. No, sir; I did not see any of the soldiers.

Q. When you speak of angry feelings, you refer to the citizens? They were angry on account of that matter, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; very much agitated over that trouble.

Q. Then, as soon as you heard the firing you said, "No; it is not a fire; it is the soldiers. No; it is shooting on account of that Evans matter."—A. The negroes, on account of the Evans matter.

Q. Did you think the negroes were shooting up the town because one of their number had pulled this woman off her horse, or did you think they were shooting up the soldiers on account of this matter?—A. No, sir; I thought that the reason of it was because of the Evans matter, because Mr. Evans had gone up to the post to speak about this matter, and to report it at the post in the morning, and I thought that the negroes were coming back there evidently that night.

Q. Had he gone there in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know what the result was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you heard of that?—A. No, sir; I had not heard.

Q. And did you think because one of their number had pulled a lady off a horse, and the husband of the lady had made complaint to the commandant, that they would go out and shoot up the town? Now, Mrs. Moore, is not this the fact, that you knew the people had heard this story and were extremely angry and excited about it?—

A. No; they were not extremely angry and excited about it, not the whole, I mean—I mean Mr. Evans.

Q. Was he very angry and excited?—A. Yes, sir; he was excited.

Q. He is a very quiet, gentlemanly sort of a man, isn't he?—A. Apparently he was.

Q. Did you talk with him that day at all?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you hear him say anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him in your life?—A. Mr. Evans—oh, I know him well.

Q. But you did not see him that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say just now that you did not see him?—A. No, sir; I did not see him.

Q. You did know him, but did not see him that day, and did not hear him make any excited remarks?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you heard other people talk about it, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it not talked about very commonly in your hotel?—A. No; not commonly in the hotel.

Q. Was not your husband talking about it that day, and in a very excited way?—A. No; I don't know that I heard my husband say a word about it at all, but I had heard it in the hotel.

Q. Whom did you hear speak about it?—A. I could not tell you that to save my life. There were people in and out of the hotel all of the time. It would be impossible to tell the name of the man or whoever it was that made the remarks about it.

Q. But your first thought was that the soldiers were shooting up the town?—A. My first thought was that the trouble was over that.

Q. Did you think the soldiers were doing the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Shooting at the town, or did you think the town was doing the shooting at the soldiers?—A. No, sir; the soldiers were doing the shooting at the town. That is what I thought. That is the first thought I had, and that is the only thought I ever had.

Q. I want to know why you had that thought? Was it because you had heard that the soldiers had pulled this woman off the horse, and because you thought the commanding officer was punishing them in some way, or what?—A. Punishing who?

Q. The soldiers, because the story had come to him that they had done that.—A. He would not be punishing the soldiers if they were shooting up the town.

Q. No; but I asked you a while ago, if you thought those soldiers had gone out to shoot up the town because one of their number had pulled a lady off her horse, and you said, no; that your thought was that the soldiers were angry because Mr. Evans had gone and made complaint about it.—A. Senator, it was not only that one incident, but it was a good many others, all together.

Q. Let us not get away from this one first. I want to know just what it was that made you think the soldiers were shooting up the town?—A. My first thought was that it was on account of the trouble with Evans, and that is the remark that I made, and I still make it.

Q. And that was before you saw anybody or heard anything except the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The very first time out of the box?—A. The first thought that came to my mind. I thought that was the cause of the negroes shooting—that it was on account of that.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You spoke about the women of Brownsville being alarmed after the shooting—being alarmed on account of the presence of the soldiers—and not being willing to go out of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before the coming of the soldiers there, did the women and girls go freely about the town?—A. Oh, my, yes; in the night, or any time.

Q. There was no apprehension under ordinary conditions at all?—

A. None in the world; no, sir.

By Senator Scott:

Q. If you thought it was on account of the Evans matter, would you not have thought it, was the white people that were going in there and shooting the negroes up for having mistreated this woman, instead of the negroes coming out?—A. No, sir; it did not sound like our guns. If it had sounded like our guns, I might have thought that, but it did not sound like our guns, nor like pistols.

Q. But the Evans people were the ones that had the right to complain?—A. That is true enough; but if there had been anything like that agitated all the citizens of Brownsville would have known it and would all have gone up in a body; but nobody went. There was not a human citizen on the streets of Brownsville, only just those few that were on the police force.

Q. Then you thought, because the colored people had pulled this woman by the hair of her head that they were coming out from the fort to shoot up the balance of the town?

Senator WARNER. I submit that that is not what the lady said. It was in connection with the fact that Mr. Evans had gone up and complained also.

Senator LODGE. Done in revenge for that.

By Senator Scott:

Q. I only wanted to know. I did not understand.—A. Yes, sir; that was it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Let us understand that. It was because the soldiers felt like revenging themselves on the people of the town generally, because the husband of the woman who had been pulled off the horse had complained about it.

Senator SCOTT. That is what I wanted to get at.

The WITNESS. No; you would not take it that way, either. You would naturally think, on the impulse of the moment, if anything of that kind happened, that it would be the cause of it, or something of the kind would be the cause of it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Something growing out of it?—A. Something growing out of it.

Senator FORAKER. I think we understand.

TESTIMONY OF MISS WILLIE MAYFIELD.

Miss WILLIE MAYFIELD, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Please give your name in full.—A. Miss Willie Mayfield.

Q. Where do you live, Miss Mayfield?—A. In Brownsville, Tex.

Q. Are you the daughter of Mrs. Moore, who was just on the stand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in Brownsville on the night of the shooting up of the town, the 13th of last August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you then?—A. In my room at the Miller Hotel.

Q. On which floor of the hotel?—A. On the second floor.

Q. You mother and stepfather occupied rooms on the second floor, did they not?—A. Adjoining mine; yes, sir.

Q. Were you asleep at the time of this shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Awakened from sleep?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the first shooting you heard?—A. I think from the barracks, as well as I can tell. I think it was from the barracks.

Q. In that direction?—A. Yes, sir; in that direction.

Q. And then where did the shooting continue from? Did it approach down the alley towards your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the report of those guns, do you know? Are you familiar enough to tell?—A. No, sir.

Q. You could not tell?—A. No.

Q. How much shooting was there? What was the number of shots?—A. Well, I could not tell. I did not stop to count the shots. I could not tell about how many there were, even. First there was only one shot from the barracks.

Q. And then what?—A. And after the one, then there was, oh, I guess, four or five.

Q. And then how?—A. And then the volley was fired which went into the Cowen house, and then after that they went running down the alley, behind the hotel, shooting as they went, and I could not really say how many.

Q. Behind what hotel?—A. Behind the Miller Hotel, down the alley.

Q. That is, the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets?—A. And Elizabeth street; yes, sir.

Q. Where were you at the time of this shooting?—A. We were in the hall. After it begun, we got up out of our beds, of course, and went into the hall.

Q. And there is a window opening from that hall right into the alley?—A. Yes, sir; into the alley; also from mamma's room into the alley.

Q. It being warm weather, that window was open, of course, I suppose?—A. Everything was open.

Q. Now, during the time of this shooting there, did you hear any remarks made by anybody?—A. As the negroes were running down the alley, yes, sir; I heard them say, as they were going down the alley, "There he goes, down Elizabeth street; shoot him."

Q. What did they say—did they use vile words?—A. Yes, sir; they used profane language in talking.

Q. Did you hear that voice?—A. Oh, yes; I heard the voice.

Q. Did you form an opinion or have you formed an opinion as to that voice, whether it was the voice of a negro or not?—A. It certainly was.

Q. What made you think it was the voice of a negro?—A. Well, I could distinguish the voice very easily. They were right under the window, and you could tell the voice of a negro from another person.

Q. How long did that shooting continue, if you remember?—A. Oh, it was not so very long; just a few moments.

Q. Did you hear what they call the pumping of the guns, the clicking?—A. When they let the shells in or out, you mean?

Q. Yes; as they loaded and unloaded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Like this [illustrating with a Springfield rifle]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Starting to load—you could hear them?—A. Yes, sir; you could hear that.

Q. Do you know of the effect that this had on the people of Brownsville—that is, the women—afterwards, as long as the colored troops were there, as to their going out?—A. Why, very few of the ladies went on the street as long as the negroes were in town.

Q. How was it after they went away?—A. Well, even now there are ladies in town who are afraid to go out at night by themselves. They say they will never feel free again; feel as easy on the streets as they did before it all happened.

Q. Your mother was in a very hysterical condition at that time?—A. Yes, sir; we had to take her away from town for a while. We were away for a month after it all happened. She was in that excited condition.

Q. And she never has recovered?—A. She never has recovered. When we go out driving, she can not stand it to go out driving at night, if we see anybody at all on the street. In driving around at night on the streets she always feels uneasy and has to go home; can not go out at all after night.

Q. Has there, as far as you know, ever been any doubt at all in the minds of the people of Brownsville as to the fact that it was members of the negro troops that did the shooting up of the town that night?—A. No doubt at all.

Q. You never have heard any other opinion expressed?—A. No other opinion but that it was the negroes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are the daughter of the witness who testified immediately preceding you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mrs. Moore?—A. Yes, sir; I am.

Q. Is your name Mrs. Mayfield or Miss Mayfield?—A. Miss Mayfield.

Q. Your mother has been married a second time?—A. She has; yes, sir.

Q. You are her daughter by a former marriage?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your age?—A. I will be 23 in September.

Q. You were there in the hotel that night?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. What room did you occupy?—A. The room adjoining my mother's, No. 26.

Q. She was on the second floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were on the second floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. She was next to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were in the second room back from the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did your room front on Thirteenth street?—A. Oh, no.

Q. It fronted towards the barracks?—A. To the side.

Q. Toward what?—A. To the side. My room fronted on the side next to the yard.

Q. There is a yard right there?—A. By the side of the hotel.

Q. I will call your attention to that [referring to the map]. This is supposed to be the Miller Hotel.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were somewhere about here, I suppose [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir. That is the yard.

Q. When you looked out of your window, you looked out over the yard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was next to the hotel?—A. Oh, well, there is a vacant place there, for quite a ways down the alley.

Q. About how far?—A. From the side of the yard to the hotel, the outhouses, washrooms, and places of that kind.

Q. And you looked out right over them?—A. Right over them.

Q. What was the next house between you and the fort?—A. There was just a little house that faces on the alley. It is not any higher than ours. It is a Mexican house.

Q. Was not Doctor Thorn's house there?—A. Doctor Thorn's house does not come back to the alley. It comes back, but so far off that it does not bother the view from us at all.

Q. It does extend back to the alley?—A. Yes; I know, but it is quite a ways from our house.

Q. I know it is quite a ways, but what is it when it comes back to the alley, a single-story, a double-story, or a three-story?—A. I think it is just a one story—let's see—it is just a single story.

Q. Just a single story?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Referring to the map.) This is Doctor Thorn's house, isn't it, marked here No. 4?—A. That is the front of his house. The front of the house comes to the street.

Q. This is the back part [indicating] and it fronts on the alley?—A. No; it fronts on Elizabeth street.

Q. No; I say, this is the back part, and that fronts on the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The rear part of the house fronts on the alley?—A. Yes, sir; the kitchen.

Q. And the front part comes clear out to Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Miller Hotel does not come clear out to Elizabeth street?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you stand on the front veranda of the Miller Hotel and look out towards the garrison, Doctor Thorn's house obstructs the view, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you look out of the second story of the hotel, does not the rear part of Doctor Thorn's house obstruct the view?—A. No; you can see right over that.

Q. Look over that?—A. Yes, sir; right down to the corner.

Q. As soon as you heard the firing, what did you do?—A. I immediately got up.

Q. And where did you go?—A. To mamma.

Q. You ran to your mother's room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then all of you gathered in the hall?—A. Yes, sir; went into the hall.

Q. So you did not see anybody at all?—A. None of the negroes; no.

Q. You did not see any negroes?—A. No, sir.

Q. You simply heard the firing?—A. Yes, sir; that was all; and the voices.

Q. You heard the voices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you were right there with your mother. She was a good deal excited, was she not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were somewhat excited, too, were you not?—A. I know that I was.

Q. And your mother has just testified that she could not tell whether it was the voice of a negro or not?—A. No; because she was nearly crazy. We worked with her quite a while.

Q. How were you?—A. I was more composed than mamma. My goodness, she was nearly crazy.

Q. You were not scared like your mother?—A. I should say not.

Q. You were so far composed that you could recognize it as the voice of a negro?—A. Yes, sir; you could hear them while they were going, all the way down the alley they were hollering.

Q. They were hollering?—A. From one to the other, you know.

Q. Out loud; pretty loud?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they saying to each other?—A. "There he goes; shoot him. He turned down Main street. Get him."

Q. I know, you told us you heard that. How many people said that?—A. I could not say.

Q. More than one?—A. Yes; there were several voices, like several persons saw him. It was like two or three persons seeing one person, and they all hollered, "There he goes."

Q. You heard them all holler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many did you hear holler that?—A. Well, I don't know. I could not say how many there were; several voices.

Q. Your mother testified before Mr. Purdy that her daughter's testimony would be substantially what her's was. Has she any other daughter than you?—A. No other daughter who was present there.

Q. You were with your mother all that evening, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And saw all that she saw?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she saw all that you saw?—A. You mean about the shooting, and the negroes, and all?

Q. Yes; I mean about this shooting around the hotel.—A. Oh, yes; I guess about the same.

Q. And you heard all that she heard, so far as you know?—

A. Well, so far as I know.

Q. And she heard all that you heard, so far as you know?—A. As far as I know, of course.

Q. Now, in addition to that fact that you were together, did you also talk this matter over?—A. The negro trouble? Why, of course, we were all talking it over; we talked it over many times. We were talking the trouble over all the time.

Q. So your mother knew what your testimony would be from being with you?—A. I suppose so.

Q. And also from talking with you about it?—A. I suppose that is the way she knew.

Q. You did not testify before Mr. Purdy at all?—A. No.

Q. You were there at the hotel, were you, at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they could have called you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But did not, because it was thought your testimony would be like your mother's?—A. About the same. I believe she told them that the testimony would be very much the same, that there would be very little difference, and he said there would be no use to take both.

TESTIMONY OF A. Y. BAKER.

A. Y. BAKER, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is your name in full?—A. A. Y. Baker.

Q. Your age?—A. Thirty-one.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Brownsville, Tex.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have been in Brownsville, off and on, since 1898.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. Inspector of customs.

Q. How long have you been an inspector of customs?—A. About four years.

Q. Do you remember something of what we speak of as the Reed incident, where some colored soldier either fell off or was pushed off of the gang plank of the boat coming across from Matamoros?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just state what you know about that, Mr. Baker.—A. I was on duty at the ferry in Brownsville, the ferry coming across from Matamoros; and there were three negro soldiers came across the river. Two of them were drunk. One of them came across and was on the ground, and the other two stopped at the landing. One of them got into a fight with the boatman, and I walked down over to where they were and told the fellow that he would have to get away from there and stop his cursing; but he stayed there and would not go, and I got hold of his arm and threw him down the walk, and the river was very high, out of its banks, and the walk was narrow, and he went to stepping this way [illustrating] and he stepped off into this mudhole and fell flat on his stomach.

Q. In the mud?—A. Yes, sir; in the mud and water.

Q. Then what was done?—A. He got up and they started off towards town, and remarked that they would see about this to-morrow.

Q. What was remarked?—A. That he would see about this to-morrow.

Q. To whom was this remark addressed?—A. To the other negro that was with him.

Q. When was this—what day of the week?—A. It was on a Sunday.

Q. And the shooting up of the town of Brownsville was on Monday evening?—A. Yes, sir; about 12 o'clock.

Q. Monday night?—A. Yes, sir; Monday night.

Q. Where is your house located in Brownsville?—A. At that time it was on Levee street.

Q. That is the street west of Elizabeth street?—A. Fronting the river; right on the river.

Q. Did any colored soldiers come to your house after this, between this and the shooting up of the town?—A. Yes, sir; there was two come there Monday evening about sundown, between sundown and dusk.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. On Monday, did you say?—A. Yes, sir; Monday evening.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Were you at home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they dressed in the soldiers' uniform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was their business?—A. They said they were looking for Baker.

Q. Where did they come first? Did they come up to your house?—A. They came up the steps, up the stairway, and I heard some one coming up the steps, and I walked to the door, and when I got to the door they were at the top of the steps, and I saw it was two negro soldiers.

Q. What was the conversation you had with them?—A. I asked them what they wanted. They said they were looking for Baker, and I told them that was my name, and they said I was not the man they were looking for, that the Baker they wanted was a tall, slender fellow from Georgia; that they had known a man by that name in Georgia, were acquainted with him, and wanted to see him.

Q. You are pretty well acquainted in Brownsville, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the neighborhood in which you were living there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other Baker there that you knew of?—A. No, sir; unless it was some transient man coming to the hotel, or something of that kind; no one that lived there.

Q. No one on that street or in that part of the city, certainly?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the first you heard of the shooting that night, if you heard any of it?—A. About 12 o'clock, my wife was sick and I was up giving her some medicine, and I heard one lone shot over toward the garrison, and then there were two or three more shots, and then a volley, and then the shooting seemed to go up the alley back of Cowen's, back of Mrs. Leahy's hotel.

Q. That is the Cowen alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. First you say there was one, and then there were five or six?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then seemed to be volleys?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by volleys?—A. Well, there seemed to be several shots, and then continual shooting, you know.

Q. Shots nearly simultaneous in their discharge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go out of your house at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were in no position to see any of the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor to hear anything that was said, if anything was said?—A. No, sir.

Q. About how many shots did you hear in all?—A. I suppose—I would have to guess at it—150 or 200 shots; something like that—about 150 shots, I guess.

Q. About how long did that shooting continue?—A. Well, I suppose about ten minutes; something like that, from the time the firing began until it ceased.

Q. Are you accustomed to hearing firearms?—A. Yes, sir; I am accustomed to hearing firearms and firing.

Q. The army gun?—A. Well, yes.

Q. Where have you heard the army gun; for instance, the Springfield, such as is used now?—A. I have never heard the Springfield.

Q. Well, the Krag; you have heard that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you hear that?—A. I heard it at target practice—the soldiers shooting.

Q. That is, the short-range practice in the fort there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard that frequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you heard this shooting, did you, from the sound or report of the rifle, form an opinion as to the guns being used?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any remark about it to your wife at the time?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?—A. First she asked me what it was, and I told her it was a fire in the post. I did not want to get her excited. Then when they began shooting so much, I told her I thought it was the soldiers coming up and shooting up the town, a crowd of drunken soldiers.

Q. Did you leave your house that night?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did not go down into the town at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. The next day, or at any time since the shooting, have you ever heard it questioned by anyone, that is, by the citizens there, but what it was members of the colored regiment that did the shooting up of the town?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you notice any of the bullets or shells the next day?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go and examine the houses that were shot into?—
A. I saw Mr. Starck's house, I believe, and the Miller Hotel.

Q. Did you make any examination of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any of the shells that were picked up, or the bullets?—A. No, sir.

Q. Made no examination of those whatever?—A. No, sir.

Q. Prior to this shooting you heard of the Evans incident that occurred, did you not?—A. I heard of it; yes, sir.

Q. And the Tate incident?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tate is also a revenue man there, is he not—a customs officer?—
A. Yes, sir; he is a customs officer there, a mounted inspector.

Q. Prior to this shooting had you ever heard in Brownsville of any threats made by any of the citizens against the soldiers?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing of the kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. I do not know whether you know or not—do you happen to know the kind of arms that the rangers are equipped with?—A. Well, when I was with the rangers I know what kind we used, but now I could not say exactly as to what kind they use.

Q. When were you with the rangers?—A. About four years ago.

Q. You do not know what kind they use now?—A. I know what some of them have.

Q. What are they?—A. The .30-40.

Q. What make is it?—A. The Winchester make; made by the Winchester Repeating Arms Company.

Q. You had a Krag gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get that?—A. I bought it in Austin.

Q. Did you know of any other Krag gun in Brownsville?—A. I don't know whether there were or not.

Q. You don't know of any other?—A. No, sir; unless some of them out in the country there, some of the rangers that were stationed out around Harleton, had one or two. I believe Mr. Delling has one.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please spell that name.—A. D-e-l-l-i-n-g.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. But you knew of no other Krag in Brownsville except yours?—A. No, sir; I don't know of any other.

Q. This shooting that you heard, you had no doubt, as I understand you, that it was from high-power guns?—A. I had no doubt of it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Had not Mr. Blalock a Krag?—A. I could not tell you. I don't know.

Q. You don't know what kind of a gun he had?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you don't know of any Krag, except Mr. Delling's Krag and your Krag?—A. I believe that is all I can think of now.

Q. I wish you would think carefully.—A. I know Mr. Delling has one.

Q. How long has he had it?—A. Well, I could not tell you. He belonged to the rangers, and he brought it there with him.

Q. He belongs to the rangers?—A. At that time he belonged to the rangers.

Q. Was that a Krag rifle or a Krag carbine?—A. It was a carbine.

Q. Look at those guns in the gun rack there and see if you find a gun of the kind that you refer to—that Mr. Delling has.—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. (Showing the witness one of the guns.) That carbine is not the kind?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. This is the latest model. What is the difference between the carbine that he had and this?—A. The carbine had a lever, and it is a shorter gun, and has woodwork up around here [indicating].

Q. Shorter than this?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you know it is a Krag gun?—A. Well, we call them .30-40's.

Q. You say you don't know whether Mr. Blalock had one or not?—A. No, sir; I could not tell you.

Q. Where does Mr. Delling live?—A. He lives in Brownsville at present. He is a mounted inspector there also.

Q. He is now where?—A. In Brownsville.

Q. Did he live in Brownsville at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did he live then?—A. He belonged to the rangers at that time and was stationed at Harleton, about 25 miles above there.

Q. Were the other rangers armed in the same way as he was?—A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know how they were armed?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you been in the customs service?—A. About four years.

Q. Do you have much trouble down there?—A. No, sir.

Q. That service is to suppress smuggling, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is what it is for.

Q. Do you make any arrests?—A. Yes, sir; make arrests.

Q. About how many have you had to make in your four years?—A. Well, I could not tell you. I have never kept track of them.

Q. Give us some idea.—A. I could not say how many. It is all on record.

Q. Do you make as many as Mr. Starck makes?—A. Well, Mr. Starck has been in longer than I have.

Q. I mean during the last four years you and he have been both serving together, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the same kind of work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Doing the same kind of work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the same territory?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been making about as many arrests, on an average, as he has made?—A. Well, I don't know whether I have or not. Sometimes I make more and sometimes less.

Q. Do you make a good many or not?—A. Yes, sir; a good many.

Q. There is a good deal of smuggling, or there has been, in the past, has there not?—A. Yes, sir; petty smuggling.

Q. It keeps you pretty busy to suppress it, doesn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many customs officers are there at Brownsville?—A. Eight, I believe.

Q. Eight of you. Mr. Starck is one, you are two, Mr. Tate is three. Who are the others?—A. Mr. Layton.

Q. Mr. Layton is four. Who else?—A. Anthony Yznaga.

Q. He is five. Who is the next?—A. Celso Oliveira.

Q. And who are the others?—A. Francesco Cortez.

Q. That is seven. Who is the eighth?—A. The other is Mr. Delling.

Q. Has there been any increase in the number since you became a member of the customs service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many were there when you became a member of the customs service?—A. Well, I don't remember.

Q. Can't you recall?—A. No, sir; I don't remember how many.

Q. There were only five of you, weren't there?—A. Four or five, as far as I can remember.

Q. Not more than four or five?—A. Sometimes they put on a special force.

Q. Well, I know, but the regular force was four or five?—A. Something like that.

Q. And now it is eight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did they increase the force from four or five up to eight?—A. It looks like they wanted more men. It is a large territory to cover and they had to put more men out.

Q. The territory is just the same, isn't it, as it was then?—A. Just the same, but it is big ground to cover.

Q. Well, I know, but it is no bigger than it was when you had four or five men?—A. No; but they did not have enough then, either.

Q. What I want to get at is whether there was a necessity to increase the force to properly attend to the duties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was because there was so much smuggling that it was necessary to increase the force?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any arrests where you had to use force?—A. No, sir.

Q. They always gave up without resisting when you wanted to arrest them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not see any of the shooting on the night of August 13?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were 150 yards away from the nearest point?—A. About that; yes, sir.

Q. You were away down on Levee street, near what cross street?—A. Near Thirteenth.

Q. And you did not go out at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. These two negroes who came to your house, who asked if Mr. Baker lived there, they came running up the steps, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not trying to slip up on you unawares, were they?—A. They did not seem to. They came running up the steps.

Q. Did they have any weapons in their hands?—A. I did not see any.

Q. Their demeanor was entirely peaceable, was it not?—A. They were drunk.

Q. They were drunk, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they inquired if Mr. Baker lived there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said your name was Baker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they said you were not the man they were looking for, that they were looking for a tall man whom they had known in Georgia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then they went away, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They did not offer to do you any violence?—A. No; when they told me they wanted Baker, I told them my name was Baker, and after they explained about this Georgia business, they asked me what I would charge for laundering collars.

Q. Laundering what?—A. Laundering some collars.

Q. And you told them you did not want to launder any collars?—A. I told them they were in the wrong pew, and to get out of there.

Q. To go away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they went away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Offering no resistance?—A. No, sir.

Q. Making no demonstrations of any kind?—A. No, sir.

By Senator PERTUS:

Q. Did you have any weapon about you?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. They did not see your gun?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You did not show any gun, neither did they show any gun?—A. My pistol was lying on the dresser just behind me.

Q. You had a pistol lying on the dresser behind you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a pistol was that?—A. A .45.

Q. That is, a .45 Colt?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That pistol is carried by the customs officers there generally, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a part of your equipment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other equipment have you?—A. A .30-40.

Q. That is a carbine?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is the ammunition fired in the .30-40?—A. It is .30 caliber—.30-50.

Q. That is the same as the Krag cartridge, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; they can use the Krag cartridge.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Wednesday, June 5, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Scott (acting chairman), Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, and Pettus.

TESTIMONY OF ARTHUR I. DAVIS.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Scott.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Please give your name in full.—A. Arthur I. Davis.

Q. What is your age, Mr. Davis?—A. Twenty-seven.

Q. Where are you living?—A. San Antonio, Tex.

Q. Where were you on the 13th of last August, at the time of the shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. I was in my room on the third floor of the Miller Hotel, in Brownsville, at the starting of the shooting, and during the shooting I went down to the office, and from there to the sample room, and stayed in the sample room until they finished shooting.

Q. How long had you been living in Brownsville?—A. I went to Brownsville on the 17th of December, before that.

Q. From what place?—A. San Antonio.

Q. And where did you come from when you went to San Antonio?—A. I had been living in San Antonio about three or four years before that.

Q. From what State did you go to San Antonio?—A. Iowa.

Q. Are you a native of Iowa?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say that you were in your room when you heard the shooting. Were you awakened from sleep, or had you been to sleep?—A. No, sir; I had not been to sleep yet.

Q. Where was the first shooting you heard, as near as you can locate it?—A. At the walls of the fort.

Q. And which way did that shooting proceed, if it proceeded?—A. It proceeded towards the center of the town.

Q. That is, from the fort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The location of the hotel you were in, then, was on the corner of what streets?—A. I am not positive as to the numbered street. I believe it is Thirteenth street and Elizabeth street.

Q. Thirteenth and Elizabeth—the Miller Hotel. That is marked there on the map at Thirteenth and Elizabeth streets. You were on the third floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the nature of that shooting?—A. The nature?

Q. Yes; as to whether it was high-power guns, or what?—A. There were some reports that sounded very much like a six-shooter—a .44 six-shooter—being more of a dull report.

Q. That was the first part of the shooting?—A. No, sir; not the first part. There were a few of those mixed in after the start.

Q. Yes.—A. The majority, or almost all, of the reports were very sharp reports; that is all I can say, whether they were high-power guns or out.

Q. When you were in your room could you see the flashes of the guns?—A. No, sir; I saw no flashes of guns while I was in my room.

Q. Where did you see the flashes of guns, if at all?—A. I did not see exactly the flash of the gun.

Q. What was it you saw?—A. It was the light from the flash.

Q. Yes.—A. I would have had to have seen the gun, or at least been very close to the muzzle of the gun, to have seen the flash.

Q. It was the reflection of the flash that you saw?—A. The reflection of the flash. I was within the sample room at the rear of the office when I saw the reflection.

Q. Who was it went into the sample room with you?—A. Mr. Hammond, a guest of the hotel, and a Mexican porter.

Q. Was there much shooting around the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir; there was a quite a good deal of shooting, I should judge fifty or seventy-five shots.

Q. What point in the sample room did you go to?—A. I turned to the right after entering the sample room, and stopped just around the corner of a small bathroom. The bathroom is a small square, cut into the sample room.

Q. Did you hear any report or any noise made by the guns, aside from the discharge?—A. Yes, sir; I could hear the shells being thrown into the magazine, or into the barrel, and the empty shells ejected.

Q. That is, you could hear the working of what is called the bolt of the magazine up here, for instance like this [working bolt of gun]?—A. Yes, sir; I could hear that.

Q. You could hear that?—A. Yes, sir. Jerk that a little bit harder.

Q. Like that [working bolt of gun]?—A. Yes; that is more like it. Naturally it would have to be jerked rather strong to make a sharp report.

Q. What part of the hotel were you in at that time?—A. The sample room.

Q. You saw no parties, I believe, Mr. Davis?—A. No, sir; I saw during the shooting no parties whatever.

Q. You were in no position to have seen them?—A. In no position to have seen them. When I looked out of the window, in my room they were too far away, and I believe the trees would have covered the view.

Q. And when you say they came down towards the center of town, was that in the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets, the alley that runs back of the Miller House?—A. Part of them came down that way.

Q. And where were the other reports?—A. A little farther back; possibly in the next street, and the street beyond that, yet.

Q. What street do you mean, Washington or Elizabeth street?—A. Washington, and possibly Adams; but I hardly think as far back as Adams. Washington street is my opinion.

Q. Did you go out that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. About five minutes after the shooting had stopped.

Q. Right there let me ask you, what was your business in Brownsville?—A. I was keeping bees, starting bee yards—apiaries.

Q. I do not understand just what that is.—A. Raising honey.

Q. That is, establishing them there?—A. Establishing honey yards.

Q. And how long had you been in Brownsville?—A. From the 17th of December until the 13th of August.

Q. You had no feeling of prejudice against the colored soldiers?—A. None whatever.

Q. Now, you say you went out into the town about five minutes after the shooting stopped. I will get you to state what was the general statement, if any, as to who it was that had done the shooting up of the town, as to whether it was the soldiers or not.—A. It was the soldiers, without any doubt.

Q. That was the general statement?—A. That was the general statement.

Q. Did you examine any of the bullet holes in any of those buildings afterwards?—A. I did.

Q. What did you examine?—A. I examined the bullet holes in the Miller Hotel; very casually the bullet holes in Mr. Cowen's residence; I looked at the bullet hole that was in the saloon where the bartender was killed, and there were three bullet holes in the building opposite the Miller Hotel that I examined.

Q. What building was that?—A. I can not say; I do not know the name of the building or who owns it. It is a two-story brick building.

Q. Did you, as far as you could determine from what you could see of the point of entrance and point of exit of those bullets, form an opinion as to the location of the parties who had done the shooting?—A. I could; very exact.

Q. Now, which building do you refer to when you speak of that, the Miller Hotel?—A. Both the Miller Hotel and the brick building opposite.

Q. How did you determine the location of the parties doing the shooting?—A. By standing almost exactly in the tracks that they were and looking at the range of the bullets.

Q. When you say "the tracks that they were," you mean where you judged them to have been?—A. Where a person would have to be to fire a gun that would put a bullet where this bullet was—had been.

Q. And the range?—A. And the range.

Q. Did you see any of the shells that were picked up there?—A. I picked up about a dozen myself, very early in the morning. It was just getting light when I was out on the street.

Q. Where were those shells?—A. At the rear of the Miller Hotel, and the opposite corner of Thirteenth street and the alley.

Q. When you say "the opposite corner," do you mean diagonally across or directly across the alley?—A. Directly; on the other side of Thirteenth street in the alley.

Q. Could you judge sufficiently to determine whether or not those shells were freshly fired shells?—A. I would not swear positively that they were freshly fired shells, but from my experience I would say that they were—had been fired the night before.

Q. Now, did you see any arms there that night—guns—that is, in the house? You saw no guns? You did not see the soldiers; that is, you did not see the parties who did the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. You may state what you saw of any guns that night, and who had them.—A. I saw a patrol on the street about 10 o'clock. The patrol was carrying United States rifles, the only United States guns that I saw that night.

Q. Where were you when they passed?—A. I was in the office of the hotel.

Q. You could see them, could you?—A. They passed right by the window, within 8 feet of me.

Q. After the shooting did you have any gun?—A. I had a 12-gauge Winchester repeating shotgun.

Q. Who else? Did Mr. Goldsmith have any?—A. Mr. Goldsmith had one.

Q. What did you do with those guns?—A. We stacked them in the parlor of the Miller Hotel.

Q. Why?—A. We were looking for more trouble, and wanted to defend the women and children of the hotel.

Q. There was great excitement in the hotel, was there not?—A. There was; great excitement.

Q. You saw the company that came out after the shooting?—A. I did; and also I saw some more guns there.

Q. Did that company go near the hotel—by the hotel?—A. They passed in front of the hotel on Elizabeth street.

Q. Where were you at that time?—A. On the gallery in the second story of the hotel.

Q. Was anyone with you?—A. I can not think of the name of that man now. Mr. Canada was there, and one of the river guards was there. I do not remember his name.

Q. Did you hear any remark made by any of those soldiers as they passed at that time with the company?—A. Yes, sir. Pennington was the name of the man that was with me.

Q. What remark did you hear made by any of the soldiers of the company as they went by?—A. I would like to recall that statement. I did not hear, personally, any remark. That was hearsay, the remark that I had in mind.

Q. What was that remark?—A. "There is some more white people, up on the gallery."

Q. Yes. When was that told you?—A. I believe a very few moments after they passed. It was simply repeated.

Q. Repeated there?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Take the witness.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You were standing there when this remark was supposed to have been made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had as good an opportunity to hear it as anybody else, I suppose?—A. I have some trouble in hearing at all times.

Q. Oh, you are a little deaf?—A. A little bit; slightly deaf.

Q. As I understand you, you did not hear anything?—A. I did not hear any statement.

Q. And you did not see anything. Did I understand you to say that you were connected with the hotel, Mr. Davis?—A. Yes, sir; I was working afternoons and nights at the hotel.

Q. As a clerk?—A. As a clerk.

Q. You are perfectly familiar with the hotel, then, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us what rooms Mr. Chace and Mr. Bodin occupied that night—the engineer and fireman?—A. No, sir; I can not.

Q. They testified here that they were on the third floor.—A. They were on the third floor.

Q. Now, do you know how the room next to the alley at the corner was occupied, on the third floor, that night?—A. To the best of my knowledge at the present time, it was not occupied at all that night.

Q. It was not occupied at all that night. Then, towards Elizabeth street from the alley, the next is a hall?—A. Yes, sir. It runs out to Thirteenth street.

Q. There is only one window from that corner room fronting on the alley?—A. One.

Q. And then the next window on the street is at the end of the hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have a picture here of the Miller Hotel, No. 17 in part 2 of Senate Document 155, to which I will call your attention. This is a photographic representation of the Miller Hotel. This is correct, is it?—A. Very exact.

Q. This is the veranda in front of the hotel, to which I am pointing, where you were standing when the patrol passed up the street [indicating on photograph]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When this remark was made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which you did not hear, but others said they heard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was that after the firing was over?—A. Fifteen minutes.

Q. It might have been longer, might it not?—A. Yes, sir; it might have been.

Q. That was a full company, under the command of a commissioned officer?—A. I am not familiar enough with companies to say whether it was a full company or not.

Q. About how many men were there?—A. I should judge fifty or sixty men.

Q. Fifty or sixty men. That was, I suppose, Captain Lyon's company, Company D. And it was when they passed, you think fifteen minutes after the firing, and possibly longer, that you were standing on the veranda?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this remark should have been heard.—A. It is hard to estimate time.

Q. Yes; I know that is an estimate; but your estimate is important as showing how witnesses may be mistaken as to time. When you saw them they were marching up Elizabeth street towards the fort, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where they had come into Elizabeth street?—A. No, sir. My view would be cut off by this building here [indicating on photograph].

Q. That is, you are referring to the building immediately opposite the Miller Hotel, on Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the building you refer to faces Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your view would be cut off because the veranda on which you stood stands back from the street?—A. Here is the sidewalk; yes [indicating].

Q. It is away out, some distance?—A. Yes, sir. The Miller Hotel stands back, I should judge, 25 or 30 feet.

Q. And you were on that veranda in front of the Miller Hotel, standing back, so that your view would be cut off by the building on the opposite corner to which you refer, because it comes out flush with the street, does it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At any rate, they did not come into Elizabeth street from Thirteenth street?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were coming up Elizabeth street from some point farther away from the fort than Thirteenth street; that is correct, is it? They were coming up Elizabeth street?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now, coming back to these windows, I call your attention to the third floor, the rear, the windows there, and I call your attention to the windows in this order; first the window next to the alley on the third floor. That is the window that was in the unoccupied room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the next window was at the end of a short hallway?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the next window is in what room?—A. The room occupied by Mr. Canada.

Q. Mr. Canada occupied that. Then the next window, the fourth one from the alley, was in a room occupied by whom?—A. I could not say.

Q. Then the next window?—A. They were all rooms that were given out to different people.

Q. Was that occupied by either Mr. Bodin or Mr. Chace? Did Mr. Bodin and Mr. Chace occupy separate rooms?—A. I believe that they did, although I do not know.

Q. And their rooms were adjoining, were they not?—A. I could not say as to that.

Q. But you could not tell whether their rooms were next to Mr. Canada's or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. They might have been still nearer to Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us where the water-closet is in that hotel?—A. That closet is on the ground floor, away back in the back part.

Q. There is a window looking out from it?—A. Yes; there is a window looking out from it.

Senator WARNER. That is at the end of the alley, Senator.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The window out of the water-closet, where does it look?—A. It looks on Thirteenth street.

Q. Here is another photograph of the hotel, No. 1, in this Senate document. The window I point to now on the ground floor is the water-closet window, is it not [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us how far that window is, as there represented, from the corner of the hotel? About what distance is it? That is the alley there, is it not, right at the rear of the hotel [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir; that is the alley.

Q. With Bolack's on the opposite side?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how far from the corner is this window?—A. I should judge 6 feet.

Q. Yes. There seems to be, according to that picture, a shutter for that window. Does it have one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a shutter is that?—A. A tongue-and-slat shutter.

Q. All of those windows on the ground floor have shutters, do they not?—A. I think all those on the Thirteenth street side.

Q. On the Thirteenth street side?—A. To the best of my remembrance; but the others, I think, do not.

Q. Above they have not—on the second and third floors?—A. On this street here.

Q. And they do not on the front—that is, fronting on Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But all on the Thirteenth street side on the ground floor have these slats?—A. To the best of my knowledge; yes, sir.

Q. Does not the picture show it?—A. The picture shows it; yes, sir.

Q. Is there a light hanging in that closet at night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a light is that?—A. A lantern.

Q. How is it arranged?—A. It is hung from a nail on the wall.

Q. Whereabouts on the wall?—A. On the side towards Elizabeth street.

Q. Could you draft a picture of that room?—A. I think I can, sir.

Q. Give us some idea about it. About how large is it, in the first place? Just make your drawing.

(The witness here made a drawing with lead pencil on a sheet of paper.)

Q. You have roughly sketched a plat of the room about which I have asked you—the toilet room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to that, as I understand you, you enter that room from a hallway from the court?—A. From an open court.

Q. And you enter the court from the Elizabeth street side?—A. You can do it.

Q. How else can you enter?—A. Look at picture No. 17 again. Here is the court, between these two buildings [indicating].

Q. The court you refer to is the space between the two buildings, as shown in photograph No. 17?—A. Yes, sir. This is just simply a brick wall connecting the two buildings [indicating].

Q. Connecting the two buildings and running parallel to Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that an open space, and uncovered, which you call a court?—A. The majority of it is.

Q. How do you ordinarily go to get back into that room?—A. You can enter from this court, or go through the other door into the office, and the side door out of the office into the court.

Q. If you go back into the office you approach that room by entering, as you get opposite it, a small hallway?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that hallway entering the room runs parallel to Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And parallel to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you get into the room where is the light you spoke of?—A. Here [indicating].

Q. You indicate a point on the wall parallel with Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how far is that from where you enter the room?—A. I should judge 16 to 20 feet.

Q. And how far is it from the window opening onto Thirteenth street?—A. Between 8 and 10 feet.

Q. What kind of a lantern is that?—A. A very common lantern, a tin lantern.

Q. A tin lantern. What kind of a light is it, gasoline or kerosene, coal oil, or what?—A. Kerosene.

Q. About what size of wick is burned in it?—A. I suppose about an inch wick, possibly a little less than that.

Q. About an inch or perhaps less than that. About what candle-power, have you an idea, is it?—A. I do not know as to that.

Q. You do not know as to that?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is hung about how high from the floor on the wall?—A. About 4 feet.

Q. About 4 feet from the floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it has a glass front, I suppose, looking towards the inside of the room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has a glass globe in it?—A. The light itself, the wick itself, is in a globe.

Q. The wick itself is in a globe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then is there another glass outside of that, also?—A. No, sir; only one globe.

Q. Only one globe that the lamp burns in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what is there between that and the closet in front, there?—A. There would not be anything.

Q. Nothing at all. That is what I want to get at. Now, how is it as to the other sides, the sides of the lamp; how is it as to those?—A. The same; it is just a round globe.

Senator WARNER. A round globe?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Is it a round wick or a square wick?—A. It is a straight wick.

Q. A straight wick, and there is nothing at the sides of the globe, either on the rear or on the front or on the sides of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And it hangs at the rear, on the wall?—A. Yes; I want to make another statement about that, if I may.

Q. Certainly, Mr. Davis. We want to get the facts.—A. I believe that that lantern last summer stood a great many times on the floor in this corner of the toilet room [indicating on drawing], and sometimes it hung on that nail; but there was nothing absolutely positive about its being in either place. It might be hung on the wall or standing in that corner.

Q. You point to the corner on the Thirteenth street side—that is, towards Elizabeth street—the Thirteenth and Elizabeth street corner?—A. Yes, sir; when I started to describe it, it was from my remembrance of last spring, but afterwards I thought that it was placed on the floor in summer time.

Q. Now, do you know where it was that night?—A. I do not know where it was that night.

Q. What kind of glass is in this window? I wish you would look at this picture before you answer [indicating photograph No. 1].—

A. It is a very common pane of glass.

Q. It is a ground glass?—A. No, sir; a white glass.

Q. It is just a plain glass like there is in the other windows, is it?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No difference. This seems to have a different appearance from the others, as you will notice from the photograph.—A. You simply get a little more light on this pane of glass, that is all.

Q. That is due to that, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you examined some of the bullet holes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the Tillman saloon, was that?—A. I only looked at those two bullet holes at the Tillman.

Q. You did not make a careful examination?—A. Not a very careful examination of those.

Q. You saw the spot where Frank Natus was killed, I suppose?—I saw the garden in which they said he was killed.

Q. Yes; but you could not recognize the bullet hole that the bullet which killed him made, if it made any at all, I suppose?—A. That was simply pointed out to me.

Q. What was pointed out to you, the hole that the bullet made?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That killed him?—A. That killed him.

Q. Where was that hole?—A. That was on the side of the building, I should judge, about that high from the floor [indicating].

By Senator WARNER:

Q. About how many feet?—A. That is about 4 feet [indicating].

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. About 4 feet from the floor, on the side of the building. You mean the side of the building as you went into the building from the court?—A. I do not exactly understand your question.

Q. Let me explain to you. As we understand it, there is a gateway from the alley into that court from the rear?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Natus was killed in this court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say you saw this bullet hole on the side of the building. I mean was it the side of the building as you go into the gate, entering from the alley into the main part of the saloon?—A. Yes, sir; on the right-hand side of the wall of the court.

Q. On the right-hand side of the wall of the court; is that it?—

A. That would be a part of the building—the court.

Q. Now let me call your attention here to this map. This is supposed to represent the Ruby Saloon. There is the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets. They came up from towards the fort, from Cowen's. There is supposed to be a gate, where I point, here, which opens into the alley.—A. Opening into the alley or opening into the court of the saloon.

Q. From the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About where was it that you saw this bullet hole? Indicate on which wall.—A. To the best of my remembrance the diagram of the wall here is not correct.

Q. In what is it not correct? How should it be different?—A. The gate should be in here [indicating].

Q. That is, it should be nearer the fort than it is shown on the map?—A. Yes; and the bullet hole was on this side of the building, in here.

Q. Is that all court, clear up to where I point?—A. All open.

Q. All this is open space?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any cover overhead?—A. On some of it there is.

Q. Did that bullet seem to have gone to the side?—A. No, sir; it seemed to pass directly through the man's body into the wall.

Q. Where was the man represented to you as standing?—A. Right in here [indicating].

Q. If he was standing there, from what point could the bullet have been fired?—A. From the gate opening into the alley.

Q. Yes. And it went then diagonally across the court?—A. Yes, sir; and that is why I say that map is not correct, because it could not have happened if it was that way.

Q. That is important. You are the only witness that has told us of that. How did they identify the bullet to which you refer, that must have gone diagonally across, as the one that killed him?—A. A person standing in the door in the alley, a line from the door through this man's body would just hit this place in the wall.

Q. What kind of a wall was that?—A. It was a brick wall, but whether the bullet passed into the bricks or into a casing there I can not say for certain.

Q. Do you know whether or not any effort was made to find that bullet there?—A. No, sir; I can not say anything about that.

Q. Nobody told you anything about that?—A. Very, very little.

Q. Do you know whether the bullet lodged in the wall or whether it went on through the wall?—A. I could not say.

Q. Or glanced off?—A. I could not say.

Q. You do not know anything about where it was. What kind of a looking hole was it in the wall?—A. I could not positively describe the hole. I just simply remember seeing that there was a hole, and then I turned and walked off.

Q. You were told that that was the bullet that killed him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any other bullet holes there?—A. Yes, sir; there was one in the front part of the saloon, made by a bullet that went straight through from the rear of the saloon and out into Elizabeth street, going clear through the building.

Q. How did it pass through; what did it pass through in front, in getting out on Elizabeth street?—A. Through the door casing of the store.

Q. Did you see a hole where one had passed through a window pane, a pane of glass; passed through the window?—A. I do not remember it.

Q. You do not remember that. But you did see one that had gone into the window casing?—A. It went through the door, the casing.

Q. Now, what do you mean by the casing?—A. This is the door [indicating on door of telephone booth]. Here is the glass, and this is the casing.

Q. What kind of a door was that?—A. A real old-fashioned, heavy, thick door.

Q. What kind of wood was it?—A. I do not know.

Q. But the bullet, you say, passed clear through the door?

Senator WARNER. Not the bullet, but the bullet-hole, Senator.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The hole made by the bullet penetrated clear through?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how thick was that door?—A. Two and a half inches. I should judge.

Q. Was it a pine door, or what kind of wood was it?—A. I could not tell. I did not examine it.

Q. You did not examine it. What kind of a hole did that make?—A. A very small hole.

Q. You remember that distinctly, do you?—A. Not very distinctly. I didn't pay but very little attention to it. There is only one bullet hole that I can describe that I remember accurately.

Q. This bullet appeared to have been fired from the rear part, back in the court, there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had gone right straight through, and across, right through the building?—A. Right through the building.

Q. Did you see any bullet holes in the corner next to Twelfth street and Elizabeth? Did you see any hole up in that corner?—A. No, sir; I believe not.

Q. Did you see any holes in any boxes that were piled up there?—A. No, sir; I do not remember.

Q. The two that you have mentioned are the only two that you recall as seeing?—A. Yes, sir.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF MRS. ANNA ADRIENNE COWEN.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Scott.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is your name in full?—A. Anna Adrienne Cowen.

Q. Where do you live, Mrs. Cowen?—A. In Brownsville, Tex.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Why, I arrived there when I was about 10 months old, and I have lived there ever since. That is my home.

Q. You were there on the 13th of last August, at the time of the shooting up the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your house is at the corner of Fourteenth street and the alley, there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a house is it, Mrs. Cowen?—A. It is a small one-story frame building.

Q. How many rooms are there in it?—A. It has got three good-sized rooms in the front and three quite small ones in the back.

Senator FORAKER. I wish you would read that answer.

The WITNESS. It has got six rooms.

(The answer was read by the stenographer.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The night of this shooting up of the town you were at home, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of what does your family consist, Mrs. Cowen?—A. At the time I had six children. My husband was not at home that night, and the little one had not come. I had five children with me. There were the five children, my servant woman, and myself.

Q. Had there been a party at your house that night, a children's party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many children attended it?—A. Between 36 and 40 children.

Q. Now, when this shooting commenced, how long before that was it that this children's party had broken up?—A. I should judge about a quarter of an hour. I think about that time; perhaps not quite; not more.

Q. Had you gone to bed when the shooting commenced?—A. No, sir; I was fully dressed, sitting at the head of the table, like I am right here at this table, waiting to get things ready for the night—I had that little boy to get things ready—and had sent the servant girl out for some hot water, and I was sitting at the head of the table just like I am here, just like this.

Q. In which room of the building?—A. In the middle room of the three back rooms which I have told you of, which was the dining room.

Q. Now, Mrs. Cowen, will you take your own time, and without any special questions, just state to us in your own way what you heard there of the shooting, and what occurred?—A. I was, as I told you, sitting at the head of the table, like this, and some of my children, the girls, were in the little room back of me, and my boy was in the room ahead of me. The dining room was small, the rooms are small—and I had told my eldest daughter, I said, "Gertrude, do not go to bed; I do not feel well. Stay up with me. Somehow I am nervous;" and she said to me, "I will not go to sleep, mamma; I am just lying here, and when the girl comes in with the water I will get up and help you." Just then she came and stood alongside of the table, and she was partly undressed, and the servant girl came in, just about that distance [indicating], right like there, with a little pitcher of hot water, when we heard the very first shots. Well, at the very instant the little children, of course, ran to me, you know, and they said, "Fire, mamma, fire." They all thought it was fire. I am quite familiar with the sound of army guns, because I have lived there twenty years of my married life, and I am perfectly familiar with the sound, especially during the Spanish war that they would have these sham battles, you know. Nothing could fool us or make us not know that it was the army guns. You could not but know that they were. The sounds were loud, you know; and then in the empty garrison, you know, we had heard the first shot, and then one, two, three, four, five shots, you know, and in the meantime the little ones all gathered around me, and I said, "Children, it is the soldiers;" but I thought that the soldiers and the policemen had gotten into a clash, you know. We never had had any trouble with anybody. I thought that they would go right on and we would be left behind, never for a moment believing that there would be any trouble. And with this the shooting kept on, one, two, three, four, five shots again, you know, and it kept on coming closer, and I jumped up and I went to the hall door, and I said to the servant, "Oh, Mr. Louis is not at home!"

Q. That is your husband?—A. Yes, sir. He was always at home, he was a great home body and he was always at home in the evenings, but he had gone out to get me a lunch. It was late, and I was not well, and he said, "I will get you something, and I will be back in a minute." So I went to the front door and I kept on looking for Mr. Cowen, you know, and this servant girl said to me, she says, "Madam, it is best that he does not come, because he would never get here alive." In the meantime the back part of the house was completely thrown open, blinds and windows and doors and everything, and I was inexperienced, I didn't blow out my light, I didn't know that they would give me any more trouble, I never thought of anything, and the shooting kept on coming closer and closer, and the children all the time stood gathered by me, and when I heard that they were right on us, I said, "Children, get under the bed;" they followed me into the bedroom, and I said, "Get under the bed, and pray God to save your lives. If we are alive to-morrow we will all go and thank God in church." They got under the bed—I could tell them what to do, but we were all simply paralyzed, you know—excepting me and my boy. My boy threw himself on the floor at the end of the bed, and I crouched down as close as I could, and again I would raise up, and then again the shooting began. We stood it because we were too frightened to be frightened, if there is such an expression. We were just paralyzed. We heard one shot, and then it seemed that we just waited to see if the next shot would strike us. It did not, but the next one might. It was horrible. Every now and then the girl would call to the little ones, you know, to see if they had been killed—just easy, you know. They were under the bed, and no one made a sound, no one cried or whimpered or anything. This poor girl, you know, still thought it was a fire.

Q. That is your little Mexican servant?—A. Yes, sir; she is as good a girl as you ever saw. She tried to protect us. When she saw that the shooting was right on us—the kitchen was open, and that helped to throw a light out into the yard. The dining room is in the middle, and with the lamp in there it was sufficient to light the three back rooms, you see. She went to the window, and she was there when she saw the soldiers right at the alley—the fence. My alley fence is no farther than—

Q. What did she say when she saw the soldiers?—A. She still watched, she stayed there, when she saw them put a gun over the fence and blow out this lamp on the table. She was only that far, not 3 feet, from it [indicating].

Q. That is, when the shot blew it out?—A. Yes, sir. She dropped down then on the floor, and she couldn't close the windows any more, but she crouched and crept over until she got in my room. She was the only one that could see. She was the only one that had seen. We had the experience, but she had seen; and she panted and panted, she was so frightened. After a while, when the shooting stopped—in the meantime I started to get up, and my boy said: "Mama, get down; they are coming this way," and as he pulled me down I felt something that went right over my head, right on my neck, back here [indicating], that went right over me, and we think that is the shot that broke my mirror. Then when the shooting stopped, directly on us, we straightened up, the servant girl did, and I got up, and we went and called to Mrs. Leahy, the lady that lives across the street, and I said that we were alone, and she said: "Has your husband come back?" I said, "No; and we are just frightened to death. We are nearly killed over here," and she says: "Shall we come over for you?" I said, "Yes; I wish you would." So she and Mr. Elkins, and Mr. Parks, who is dead now, and her sister, came over, and my two little ones were almost naked, they were barefooted, and we went across the street in the mud; it had been raining; I wholly dressed; I hadn't even begun to think of going to bed. I picked up the baby's things that I wanted for him, and we left the house completely open, and just ran over. Then Mr. Cowen came, after that, and I suppose I don't have to tell you anything about him; he will tell you his side. At any rate, when he was able to get home to us, he came, and I told him what happened, and I said: "I forgot the baby's condensed milk and left it over home; would you mind going for it?" He said: "Certainly not," and he took a lamp, and this Mexican girl said: "I will go with you, Mr. Louis."

Q. That is your Mexican servant? -A. Yes, sir; she has been with us twelve years. She said: "I will go with you, Mr. Louis," and they started over, and when they came back he said: "Well, did you think that that looking-glass was all that was broken over there?" He says: "You haven't an idea of the condition of things over home. Would you like to go over and see?" In the meantime we were up-stairs, and saw the patrol go back into the post, and we knew that there were no more soldiers in the town, and we went over, and we saw the saddest sight you ever want to see; my looking-glass all shattered up—the glass is over a quarter of an inch thick—and everything all broken, and the splinters all over the house. You would think, "Where could all those splinters come from." All over the beds, large long splinters. It was awful. The beds hadn't been touched, you know; the children had simply thrown themselves on the bed; and everything was the saddest sight you would want to see. The next morning I think everybody in the whole town was there, and from the other side of the river; it was people just thronging in to see our house. Ladies were simply crying. I was turned into marble; I don't think I had any feeling left. They came in just to see the sight. And think of the wonderful providential escape that we had. It was a miracle. It was the providence of God; because I don't know why I selected that place to put my children in.

Q. What place?—A. Under the bed. That was the only place they could have been safe. Any place else they would have been killed. We were alone. If Mr. Cowen had been home we would all have been killed, probably, because he would not have crept under the bed; and the shots would come into one room, and go right into another and then into another, and if they missed us in one room, they would catch us in the next, or in the next. But I being alone, we simply got under there and made no noise, and did not move.

Q. How many shots were there that went into your house?—A. I do not know how many went in. There are twenty-three bullet holes in the house, that you can count, in the different rooms.

Q. About how high from the ground did those shots go into your house?—A. About that high; 3 to 4 feet [indicating]. There is a window in the end room, you know, and the blind is the size of the ordinary blind, and in a little place about this big [indicating]—

Q. About 6 or 8 inches?—A. Not more than 6, I should think; there are five or four different shots, you know. You can see the different shots, where they were shot without moving. Then on the other side of the window again; so that of course they came in at that height. But they went out higher as they went out.

Q. That shooting you heard first, you say, was as you have located it at the fort?—A. Oh, without doubt.

Q. And then it came towards your house?—A. Yes, sir; right on it; right, right on it.

Q. Your house is in the first block from the fort, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Mexican girl tell you who it was that was doing the shooting when she came in so frightened?—A. Well, she didn't tell me—of course she told me, but I didn't have to be told. I knew who it was.

Q. What did she say?—A. She said: "Madam, I believe it is the day of judgment; the soldiers are going to kill us." Oh, she spoke about the soldiers. Oh, she didn't have to tell me, or anyone have to tell me.

Q. What did she say?—A. She said: "It is the day of judgment. I believe it is the day of judgment." She could say it, because she had just escaped, within 3 feet. She saw them, and the fright of the poor girl was something fearful. I didn't need any telling, though.

Q. Now, Mrs. Cowen, what effect did this have upon the women folks of Brownsville afterwards, about going out?—A. I will tell you; so far as I am concerned, I am a great home body. I am always at home; and it has affected me, I think, more than anybody. In fact, no one has had the experience I have had. I have been out of my house twice in four months. When nighttime comes I just can not go out. I try my best, for the sake of the children, to go in the yard to get something; but if I go to the window next to the alley I just shiver, and close my eyes and shiver. I say: "Children, there is no danger," and then the little ones say: "Why are you afraid, mamma? Why do you tell us not to be afraid if you are afraid?" They never hear a door slam but they shiver. I tell you, I weighed 142 pounds before that—

Q. Yes; it was a terrible ordeal, of course. Speaking of the distance from the ground, from the floor, at which those bullets passed through, the floor of your house was about even with the porch?—

A. Yes, sir; you go up about three steps.

Q. Three short steps?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. It is not on the level of the street, but a little bit higher?—

A. A little bit higher; not on the level of the street. And the back part of the house, you just go up one step.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. From the place where these bullets hit your house, then, if any of you had been standing up you would have been certain to have been hit?—A. Yes, sir; even the smaller ones would have been; even the smaller ones.

Q. That shooting that you heard first you located at the post?—A. At the post, without a doubt; without a moment's hesitation. Not only the sound of the guns, the reports, but everything—everything. We never stopped to wonder what it was. We knew immediately it was at the post. We knew it was the army guns. There wasn't a moment's hesitation.

Q. This shooting came up the alley to your house?—A. It kept on coming nearer. They kept on firing, and I kept on wondering where was Mr. Cowen, and walking back and forth, you know, and the children right with me—right with me, you know—all except the girl that looked to see where the fire was.

Q. Did the firing, after it left your house, go uptown?—A. Yes, sir; it went uptown. I know it went uptown, because that is where they killed the bartender. But I was too frightened to know what happened to anybody else. I knew what I had gone through, and I don't have anything to say about anyone else or what happened anywhere else but right at my own home. I was too frightened to think of anything. My doors were all open. If they had just wished to turn the knob and walk in, the doors were open, and the windows and everything were open. We had a large Rochester lamp in the middle of the three rooms, and that was blown out; by the guns, I suppose. I didn't put it out.

Q. Did you see any of the shells that were picked up?—A. A good many. Major Blockson has one that came out of our house. It was that large, and had a star at one corner of it. And another was taken out by the order of the mayor. It went through three walls and stuck in a beam. It struck a nail or something and stayed in that. And pieces of shells—pieces of steel jackets—were also given up to the parties that came down there. And then in the chiffonier, also. That bullet that went in the side window and blew out the lamp on the table, it came and struck the wall. The room is not any wider than from that fireplace to here [indicating].

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. About 10 or 12 feet?—A. Yes, sir; it is a narrow room. It went into the wall like that [indicating], went into the next room, and there was a heavy walnut chiffonier in there, and it made a hole about that big [indicating]. It first struck the glass window, and then it went through the wall with an opening just about this size [indicating], and then went into that wall; and then there is another opening on the other side of the wall, all splintered, and the paper all broken up; and it went into the chiffonier and broke up a lot of things that were in the chiffonier. We had just come from San Antonio; had been away three months, and had been home but twelve days, and it went into a drawer of that chiffonier and lodged, and broke up everything that was in it.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Mrs. Cowen, among the people of Brownsville, in talking of this shooting up of the town, was it the opinion of all, or not, that the soldiers did the shooting?—A. It was the universal—not opinion, but belief.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. What grudge did you think they had at your particular house, Mrs. Cowen?—A. None at all; none whatsoever. We have lived there all my married life. There are no children better known by the soldiers than mine, because their father is a great hunter, and he used to take them fishing in the lake at the post, and they used to go by themselves. I had four girls that used to go there, sometimes with their papa and sometimes alone, and they had been told if any of the soldiers were there occupying the wharf—we always used to go back of Mr. Leekie's quarters—just quietly to go and take another place; but it was never necessary, because the soldiers would move away and give the place to the children. They never insulted my children or said anything at all. Personally there was nothing; only, I will tell you. We go to bed very late every night; I think we keep later hours than anybody else around there. If they had any grudge against the town—we had just come home, as I was telling you, from San Antonio. My husband is not employed by the Government or any official, so that he had no trouble with them, and of course if they had a grudge or any cause to shoot up the town, if they did up one family it would have been sufficient, and my house afforded the best target. There was no other house that could have afforded the target that ours did; but as for ourselves, they had nothing against us; it was not against us.

Q. You spoke of Lieutenant Leekie. Do you remember when he was down at Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir. He was down not very long before we left. He was down on a second investigation. We know him. We knew all the army people very well.

Q. Did Lieutenant Leekie at that time say anything about who it was that did the shooting up of the town?—A. Of course he did. When I made this same remark to Mr. Leekie that I made to you, about it not being because it was us, that it might as well have been the Browns or the Smiths, he said, "Mrs. Cowen, I guess they were worked up to such a pitch that they just came and did the shooting," to that effect. Then when he was locating the shooting, he was around by the alley. He stood by the gate that is there and he said, "I guess that they stood in this position." He stood by the gate and just put his hands to show how the gun must have been leveled for it to go through that window and fire into the dining room.

Q. Did he ever express any doubt to you, from his investigation, that it was the colored soldiers that did the shooting?—A. No, sir; he never did. The first time he went down he did not come into the house. I tell you it has gotten so that I am tired of it. If any excursionists come to Brownsville, our house is the place they come to the first thing, and some of them do not even knock at the door, but just coolly walk in; and I did not let anyone in, any more. Captain Hay was at our house to see the house, and I did not let him in, because it is not always convenient, and we are simply tired of it.

Q. The last time that he was there did Lieutenant Leekie come into your house?—A. Yes, sir; he did. Not once, but several times. He looked in a good many times, locating the bullets, and he was there so much that he said, "Mrs. Cowen, here I am again, here I am again," and came in.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You were naturally very much excited that night?—A. Oh, I don't know how I ever lived through it, because I am of a very nervous temperament, and I can not understand where I got the courage nor the self-possession nor the presence of mind that I had that night. I might have gone into hysterics. The children say that I started to cry. They tell me that I asked for some water; and I tried to control myself, you know, for the sake of the children; but we just had the resignation of death, and that was because we never thought we would ever live through it, or at least that some of us would be killed, if not all of us.

Q. You have been very much excited whenever this matter has been brought to your mind ever since, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir. When I speak of it, it seems like I could not breathe, like it would choke me. The following day we left for Jagon's ranch, which is 3 miles from town, because we had promised, and we looked like people that were leaving our country for good and forever. The roads were horrible, you know, and we had to stop at church, as we had promised, and pray in church. Then we left for the country, and when we got there the following day I just felt like I was unjointed. I could not walk.

Q. Now, Mrs. Cowen, I do not want to cut you off from saying anything at all, but I want to ask you questions and get answers to them, and make your answers as concise as you can and be satisfactory to yourself; that is all. I asked you a moment ago whether you have not yourself been very much excited?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Every time that this is brought to your attention?—A. Of course; yes.

Q. Since that time?—A. Very much so.

Q. You feel that way now, don't you?—A. Very much so, and after dark I can not go out. I will not leave the house.

Q. I will come to that directly. You spoke about leaving there the very next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went to some ranch. What is the name of that?—A. Jagon's ranch.

Q. How far away?—A. It is 3 or 4 miles from town.

Q. You said the roads were very muddy, I understood you?—A. Very horrible roads that we had to go through.

Q. Hard traveling?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had it been raining heavily there?—A. Yes, sir; and the waters were all overrun, and the roads were horrible.

Q. It had been raining almost continuously for some time before the night when this shooting occurred, had it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a night that was?—A. Well, I will tell you. I was sick, and I did not go in the parlor or anywhere near the children that night, excepting when the time came for refreshment; I served them the cream.

Q. No; I ask you what kind of a night was it?—A. I was sick and never went out at all.

Q. You did not look?—A. I did not look. I ran across the street when we went over there, but I had not been out.

Q. All I want to know is, whether you know what kind of a night it was, and if so, what it was. Now, you had been in San Antonio how long?—A. I had left Brownsville on the 13th of July and had just been home twelve days.

Q. Were you away with your entire family, or just yourself away?—A. I had a boy working in San Antonio, and he was taken sick with typhoid fever, and I had gone to nurse him.

Q. And the rest of your family had remained?—A. I had this one child that I have here by me now, and my youngest daughter with me, and my husband.

Q. Your husband was with you?—A. Back and forth at times.

Q. Back and forth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the 13th of July?—A. That I left.

Q. Did he go to San Antonio with you when you went there?—A. No, sir; when my little boy grew so sick that I had to have him with us.

Q. About what time?—A. About the latter part of July.

Q. Can you give us the date?—A. Well, it was before the 4th, perhaps the 1st of July.

Q. Before the 4th?—A. Yes, sir; I remember the incident. It was before the 4th of July.

Q. I understood you to say you went there the 12th of July—was it June?—A. It must have been the 13th of June.

Q. And not the 13th of July?—A. No; of June.

Q. Your husband did not go there with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you sent for him, and he came up about the 1st of July, some time before the 4th?—A. Oh, yes. He was there for the 4th.

Q. He was there for the 4th with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did he remain there with you?—A. He stayed about ten days, perhaps more. I am not quite sure, until the boy was a little out of danger. He could carry him about for me.

Q. Then he returned to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He remained there, did he, until you returned?—A. Until I returned.

Q. He did not come to San Antonio but once?—A. Only once.

Q. So that he was back in Brownsville, we will say, by the 20th of July?—A. Yes, sir; about.

Q. And remained there until the shooting affray occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say he was ordinarily at home with you and the family at night?—A. Yes, sir; he is not a man that goes out. He is always at home.

Q. That was his habit, to be at home?—A. Yes, sir; that was his habit.

Q. But it was also your habit to be up rather late at night?—A. Always.

Q. How late do you mean to have us infer?—A. Until about 12 o'clock; between half past 11 and 12.

Q. So that it was nothing unusual for you to be up until 12 o'clock on this night?—A. No, sir. We have been up since at that hour.

Q. This night, however, your husband was not at home with you, as I understand?—A. No, sir. You see when the children came in, our supper was interrupted, and he sat playing with the children in the parlor.

Q. Wait until I understand that.—A. It was a surprise party, and when the children came in our supper was interrupted, the little ones all got up and no one finished supper.

Q. Let me ask you right there—you were at supper with your family at the usual hour?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time was that?—A. Between half past 7 and 8.

Q. And suddenly these children appeared on the scene?—A. Yes, sir; I knew they were coming.

Q. You knew?—A. I knew they were coming.

Q. So it was not a surprise party to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. But to the rest?—A. It was to surprise one member of my family—one little girl—but the others knew it.

Q. The others knew they were coming?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So it was a surprise party where you were in a measure prepared for their coming?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They got there, then, about half past 7 or 8?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they remained until half past 11?—A. Until taps.

Q. Until taps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What hour?—A. Probably 11; I am not sure.

Q. Then they dispersed and went away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time did your husband leave the house?—A. Why, he stayed until about half past 10, I should judge, and he came in and he said to me, "I think I have done my duty entertaining those kids." He was playing with the younger ones, and it was very warm, and he said, "Let somebody else take their share now, I am going uptown, and I will bring you back some beer and some lunch."

Q. Bring you back some beer and some lunch?—A. Yes, sir; which he did. He had a sandwich in his shirt bosom, and he had a bottle of beer in his pocket when he got home.

Q. Well, we will get around to that after a while, if you will just let me. Now, you got back there about what time from San Antonio?—A. On the 1st of August.

Q. On the 1st of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The colored troops were already there at that time, were they?—A. Yes, sir; and while in San Antonio some one remarked to me, "Just think, Mrs. Cowen, the colored troops have arrived in Brownsville." I said, "I don't care; they are just as good as the whites. We have had colored troops before, and they have behaved just as well as anyone."

Q. You had no objection to them?—A. No, sir; none whatever. We had Captain Day, now Major Day, with the Ninth Infantry.

Q. You had always found them kind and well behaved, and void of giving offense?—A. Yes, sir; as far as we are concerned, I had nothing to say against them.

Q. You had nothing whatever to complain of?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you found these troops particularly so, didn't you?—A. I had nothing to complain of the colored troops there, I never saw them.

Q. About these troops that were there at this time?—A. They never bothered us.

Q. In so far as you observed them at all, they were orderly and well behaved, were they not?—A. They never bothered our family or passed our house in any way that we could complain of.

Q. And whenever your children appeared in the fort they treated them kindly?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. And when the children went fishing, as they frequently did, the soldiers got up and gave them their places, so they could fish?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. They fished in the dry lagoon back of the officers' quarters?—A. Right back of Mr. Leckie's house.

Q. Mr. Leckie's house. We do not know any house by that name.—A. Lieutenant Leckie's. It is the last one towards the lagoon, except a very small house that Mr. Matlock lived in.

Q. The last one towards the Rio Grande River?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean this building here [referring to the map]?—A. That must be it. There was a very small house there—

Q. Beyond that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you went in the gate and passed around in front of the administration building on the right—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And came on up here [indicating on the map], that was Lieutenant Leckie's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They passed on in the rear of that to the dry lagoon?—A. Yes, sir; sometimes they would go back of Captain Macklin's.

Q. That was the next house to it, was it not?—A. I never went much in the post.

Q. Well, it was in this neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir; right there.

Q. They would go in there to fish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was water at that time in the lagoon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not then a dry lagoon?—A. It never is.

Q. It had been raining a great deal that season and it was pretty well filled with water, was it not?—A. Yes, sir. Captain Macklin would go himself and sit there with the children.

Q. And the colored soldiers themselves helped the children, didn't they?—A. They offered them bait, so the children told me.

Q. They got bait for them?—A. No; they might not have got it, but when they were fishing there and the children would arrive and they would leave there they would offer the bait to them.

Q. Gave your children bait?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your children had only pleasant relations and experiences so far as the soldiers were concerned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the soldiers did not mistreat them in any way at any time?—A. No, sir; they did not.

Q. They seemed to take a great deal of pleasure, did they not, in helping the children fish?—A. Well, you know they were alone, and they might have said something out of the way to the children if they wanted to.

Q. But they never did?—A. No, sir; they never did.

Q. Your children always spoke kindly to the soldiers?—A. Yes, sir. No children frequented the post like my children.

Q. So that it was a complete surprise to you that when the soldiers would break out and shoot up the town they would start in and shoot your house up worse than anybody's else?—A. I had no idea; never—

Q. That was a complete surprise?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, let us find out just how they shot into your house. As I understand you, your house is on Fourteenth street and also on the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This black spot marked "No. 2" on the map indicates your house—is supposed to represent your house. Your house fronts on Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the front of it [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a gate right in the middle, right opposite the front door of your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the front door is in the middle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a porch in front, isn't there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the door enters into a large hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A sort of reception hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there are three rooms in the front, as I understand you; that is to say, there is one on each side of the room into which that door enters from the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. One out towards the alley and one over towards Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then, going on through, you come back into the dining room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is immediately in the rear of the front door and the reception room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then there is a small room on each end?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a table standing in the dining room and you were sitting by that table when the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir; just at the head of it.

Q. You were at the head of it. One end of that table was towards Elizabeth street and the other end towards the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was a Rochester lamp on it?—A. No; a student lamp.

Q. I understood you to say a Rochester lamp.—A. No; the Rochester lamp was in the hall.

Q. The Rochester lamp stood in the hallway?—A. The Rochester lamp was hanging in this hallway.

Q. Hanging in this hallway, this center room into which you entered from in front?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the lamp that the concussion of the bullets put out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The lamp was also extinguished that was on the dining-room table?—A. That was broken.

Q. The bullet hit that, did it?—A. Yes, sir. It broke the chimney.

Q. A bullet hit that, did it?—A. Yes, sir; it did.

Q. Now, where were those bullets that entered your house fired from, apparently?—A. Well, I will tell you that without a doubt they meant murder while they were at it, because there were no shots fired into that room [indicating] at all, none whatever. They were fired into the one that was more exposed, this little back room.

Q. The shots, then, were all fired, really, into this little back room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that they went ranging right through these other rear rooms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a window, is there not, looking out onto the alley from that little room at the back?—A. Yes. My son was sitting on a chair right by that window.

Q. Before the shooting commenced?—A. Just when the first shot was fired.

Q. Did not some bullets pass in the window?—A. Four of them.

Q. All the bullets went in through that room, did they not, in the rear?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No bullets went in the front part of your house; none were fired into your house from the Fourteenth street side?—A. They must have. The shot that broke the looking-glass, we think, came through the window from Fourteenth street.

Q. Where was that looking-glass stationed?—A. The room is catacornering, like that.

Q. I can not tell from that. Here is the alley and here is Elizabeth street.—A. Yes, sir; and my room, then, right there.

Q. This is your bedroom, next to Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir; and catacornering, in that little corner, was the wardrobe.

Q. That is, the back of the wardrobe?—A. The wardrobe was not catacornering, but the bed was catacornering.

Q. Your bed stood where?—A. Catacornering right in there.

Q. Right across the corner of the room—that is, in the end of your house towards Elizabeth street?—A. Facing Elizabeth street.

Q. And the corner you point to is the one next to Fourteenth street. Here is Fourteenth street, and you point to the corner there. Did your bed stand in the corner next to Fourteenth street?—A. My bed stood catacornering like, fronting on Fourteenth street, and that is the bed I put the children under.

Q. You put them under that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, so far as you can tell, there is no bullet hole entering that room from Fourteenth street, is there?—A. There is none through the front of the building, but the blinds were open and the bullets must have come in.

Q. The blinds were open and the window was open?—A. Yes, sir; the blinds were turned.

Q. And the window was up?—A. The glass was up.

Q. Did that bullet enter the window and go clear across that room?—A. Through the chiffonier.

Q. Where was the chiffonier?—A. The chiffonier was out in the hall.

Q. Did the bullet go into your room, then, at all?—A. No; it went in through the little dining room into the hall.

Q. It went through the dining room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am getting mixed up, now. The dining room is in the rear?—

A. That shot that went into the chiffonier was the one that extinguished the lamp, and the same shot went through the hall and went through the chiffonier in the hall.

Q. The same bullet put out the lamp that hung in the hall?—

A. No, sir; I mean to say on the table, the student lamp.

Q. In the hall?—A. No; in the dining room.

Q. You are talking about the shot that struck the lamp which stood out in the dining room?—A. Yes, sir; and went on through the other room and lodged in the chiffonier.

Q. If it came through the dining room into the front part of the house, it must have been fired from the rear?—A. Yes, sir; it was.

Q. It could not have been fired from Fourteenth street?—A. No; it was fired from the rear.

Q. Just where was this chiffonier standing? I have got the bed located now.—A. In the hall.

Q. It stood out in the hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as your bedroom was concerned, there is no bullet mark in that at all?—A. None, excepting on the doorsill of the door coming into my room from the back part of the house. Everything was from the back part of the house.

Q. Everything came in from the back part of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those bullets that came in from the alley went clear through the house?—A. Yes, sir; clear through.

Q. Went through the outside wall, and those partition walls?—A. Yes, sir; some of them went up into the roof, you know; struck up.

Q. Ranged up?—A. Yes, sir; went through; because you can see the sky.

Q. They went in all kinds of directions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After they got into the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell me, now, of any mark at all of a bullet in the front part of this house, except only the bullet that struck the chiffonier?—A. No, sir.

Q. And that is the same bullet, you think, that put the lamp out that was on the student table in the dining room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Came in from the rear?—A. Came in from the rear. If you were at home, this little child that is with me could tell you. He is frightened to death of a firecracker.

SENATOR FORAKER. I think I will just excuse this witness.

THE WITNESS. I think if I live a thousand years, if it were possible for me to live that long, I don't think I could ever forget one item about that.

TESTIMONY OF AMADA MARTINEZ.

(The testimony of this witness was taken through the interpreter.)

AMADA MARTINEZ, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By SENATOR WARNER:

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Brownsville.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I was born and raised there.

Q. Have you been living with Mr. Cowen for some years?—A. Yes, sir; twelve years.

Q. Were you at the Cowen home on the night of the shooting up of the town of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a children's party there that night, was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the shooting that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State in your own way now what you heard and saw. State it fully.—A. I was coming from the kitchen with a little jar of warm water, and as I reached the door I heard the shooting begin. I heard the shooting coming from the barracks, and Mrs. Cowen told me to put the jar down on the table. I went into another room and closed the door and stayed there for some time, while the shooting took place. I was in the room there closing a shutter at the window, and stood there for some time. While there I saw them coming, five in front and five behind, and then I turned around as the first shot entered the house, coming through the window, over a table in the dining room. One of the shots went over my head, and over a wardrobe. I allowed myself to drop down. Then I crawled the best way I could into Mrs. Cowen's room. Then I sat down there. Mrs. Cowen told me to sit down and not to move or go anywhere. Then I heard some voices talking and I went to the door of the passageway. It was Mrs. Leahy and a gentleman with her. They were at a window. Then I informed the lady of the house about it, telling her that Mrs. Leahy had asked whether they wished to go over to her house. Then Mrs. Leahy came over for us. Then we went over to Mrs. Leahy's and passed the night there.

Q. Did you go back again to the house after that that night?—

A. Yes, sir; about 1 o'clock.

Q. Why did you go back then?—A. To get the baby's diapers and the nipple of the nursing bottle.

Q. When you saw those men coming as you say, five in advance and five back, could you tell whether or not they were soldiers?—

A. Yes, sir; I saw that they were soldiers.

Q. How do you know that they were soldiers?—A. Because as I closed the window in the alley I could see them coming, and I could plainly see that they were soldiers.

Q. Do you know how the soldiers are usually dressed—the soldiers' uniform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those men dressed the same as the soldiers as you had seen there, the other soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How were they dressed?—A. In yellow; that yellow uniform.

Q. Did they have on blouses or coats?—A. Those coats which they all use.

Q. Did they have the yellow khaki coats outside of their shirts, or were any of them in their shirtsleeves?—A. Yes, sir; they had blouses.

Q. Every one of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did they have on belts?—A. I could see them from the waist up, at the window.

Q. Could you see whether they had belts on or not?—A. The thing around their waists; yes.

Q. You could see that distinctly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see the lower part of their bodies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they have on leggings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you could see how they were dressed from their heads down to their feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw these soldiers when you went to the window to close it, I understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about how much firing, about how many shots had been fired up to that time?—A. I can't tell you how many shots there were, because they went tra, tra, tra, tra, one after each other, and it was impossible to say.

Q. Didn't you run to close the window almost at the same instant that the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir; it began—

Q. And you went at once to close the window as soon as it began?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time you saw those soldiers coming up the alley?—

A. Yes, sir.

Senator SCOTT. How close was she to them?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I will get to that directly. Where were you when the firing commenced?—A. I was in the little room, just as I was going to close the window.

Q. Do you mean the little room next to the alley?—A. Yes, sir; next to the alley.

Q. Did you close the window?—A. I closed it and retired immediately.

Q. Were you closing the window or closing the shutters of the window?—A. The shutters of the window.

Q. Was the window raised when you went to it?—A. Yes, sir; the glass sash was up and open.

Q. And the shutters were thrown back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you reach out and get hold of the shutters?—A. Yes, sir; this way [illustrating].

Q. And before you brought them together you let go and ran away, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did not go to the window again?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whatever you saw, then, you saw then in just that moment you were at the window trying to bring the shutters together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was before any shot was fired into your house?—A. Just as I turned around the firing began.

Q. The firing commenced at your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But no shots had been fired into your house when you went to the window?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you see that those were black men?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How black did they seem to be?—A. They were black. I saw them well.

Q. Were they any blacker than a good many of the Mexicans are who live at Brownsville?—A. Yes.

Q. Much blacker than any of the Mexicans?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they black men or simply mulatto men?—A. Negroes.

Q. You are not mistaken about that?—A. No, sir; I saw them.

Q. Were they any blacker than the policeman, Padron?—A. Oh, yes.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS R. COWEN.

LOUIS R. COWEN, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Senator FORAKER. Shall I proceed with this witness?

Senator WARNER. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please state your name in full, Mr. Cowen, so we may have it in the record.—A. My name is Louis Rutland Cowen.

Q. You spell your first name L-o-u-i-s?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please speak out distinctly, because we are some distance from you, and it is difficult to hear at this end of the table. How old are you, Mr. Cowen?—A. I am 44 years of age.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I was born in Brownsville, Tex.

Q. And have lived there all your life?—A. I have, except when I have been north, being educated.

Q. Where were you educated?—A. In New York and in Bardstown, Ky.

Q. Where?—A. Bardstown, Nelson County.

Q. Bardstown, Ky.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And New York City?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what institution in New York City were you educated?—

A. I said New York City. I meant to say Hoboken, N. J.

Q. Well, at what institution in Hoboken, N. J., were you educated?—A. Hoboken Academy.

Q. Hoboken Academy; and in Bardstown, at what institution?—

A. St. Joseph's College.

Q. Are you graduated at either of those two institutions?—A. I graduated in Kentucky.

Q. How long were you at New York—Hoboken?—A. I do not quite remember; I think nearly two and a half or three years.

Q. And how long were you at Bardstown?—A. I was in Bardstown at college one session—one year. I stayed longer there.

Q. And you were graduated there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the name of that institution—St. Joseph's College?—

A. St. Joseph's College.

Q. In a classical course?—A. No, sir.

Q. What course?—A. The commercial course.

Q. The same course you pursued at Hoboken?—A. No, sir.

Q. What course did you pursue at Hoboken?—A. I studied the scientific course.

Q. Did you graduate in the scientific course?—A. No, sir.

Q. What year did you graduate at Bardstown?—A. 1881.

Q. And you had been in New York or Hoboken immediately preceding that?—A. No, sir; I had been home for a year; come back on account of my health.

Q. Your health was not good. Then after you graduated, did you engage in business?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What kind of business?—A. I went into the employment of Blumberg & Raphael.

Q. What kind of business were they engaged in?—A. Dry goods and general merchandise.

Q. In what capacity did you serve them?—A. I went in as assistant bookkeeper.

Q. How long did you remain with them?—A. About thirteen years.

Q. And then after that what did you do?—A. Then after that I traveled on the road.

Q. That brought you down to what time?—A. About four years ago.

Q. You were graduated in 1881?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went then immediately into the employment of Blumberg & Raphael?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And remained with them thirteen years?—A. About thirteen years.

Q. And quit them, then, in 1894?—A. About that time, sir; I can't remember.

Q. Then you went immediately on the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understood you to say just now that was about four years ago?—A. It was four or five years ago that I quit the road, sir.

Q. I am trying to give you an opportunity to correct your answer, which should be corrected.—A. I think between four and five years ago I quit the road.

Q. If you went on the road immediately after you quit Blumberg & Raphael, in 1894, it must have been a good deal longer than four or five years ago.

Senator WARNER. I understand him to say that he quit the road four or five years ago.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Oh, you quit the road four or five years ago?—A. I quit traveling as a drummer then.

Q. You continued on the road until four or five years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For whom were you traveling?—A. I traveled for the A. B. Frank Company, of San Antonio.

Q. What business were they engaged in?—A. Both dry goods and a grocery department. I belonged to the dry goods department.

Q. And where did you travel?—A. I traveled from San Antonio to Laredo and from Laredo to Brownsville, Tex.—that is, zigzagging the Rio Grande, crossing from one side to the other, visiting towns on both sides of the river.

Q. Were you in Mexico a part of the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, you quit that business four or five years ago. Then what did you become employed at?—A. I have been with the New York Life nearly three years, sir.

Q. You represent the New York Life Insurance Company, you are their Brownsville agent?—A. I am at Brownsville, yes, sir. They have no local agent.

Q. There is no local agent there, is there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have they an office there?—A. No, sir.

Q. They do not maintain any office there?—A. No, sir.

Q. And if you happen to get somebody to make an application for insurance, they receive it from you?—A. I send in applications from wherever I get them. I travel on both sides.

Q. How many applications have you sent them?—A. I could not tell, sir.

Q. Have you any idea?—A. No, sir; I could not tell you.

Q. Have you ever represented the New York Life Insurance in any way as an appointed agent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You hold a commission from them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where—at Brownsville?—A. At Brownsville.

Q. Authorizing you to represent them and solicit insurance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that is all I want to know. Then you have represented them for a period of about three years?—A. It will be three years this July?

Q. You are still representing them, are you?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Did you have any official position at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever deputy clerk of the court?—A. I was, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. Last year, sir.

Q. How long a time did you hold that position?—A. About a year.

Q. When did you enter upon the duties of that position, and when did you quit that position?—A. I quit the position last February.

Q. February of this year, 1907?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took that position at what time?—A. At the September term of court prior to that. It was the year before that.

Q. September, 1906?—A. September, 1906.

Q. At the time when this shooting affray occurred in Brownsville you were not holding that position?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have been holding it since?—A. I held it up to last February, sir.

Q. Up to February?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you come not to continue in that position?—A. Well, I was absent at San Antonio, sir. I went over to the court-martial, and that was in the month of February, and I was kept over there during court time, and I could not attend to it, and they appointed another deputy.

Q. Appointed another man to take your place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no trouble in connection with your duties, of any kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you on the 13th day of August, 1906?—A. I was in Brownsville.

Q. How long had you been there? How long had it been since you had been away from Brownsville?—A. I generally go to San Antonio every two or three months.

Q. Had you been to San Antonio shortly before this time?—A. I had been there in June or July.

Q. Do you remember how you happened to go there?—A. I went on business connected with the insurance company, sir.

Q. Business connected with the insurance company. Were you up there soliciting some policies?—A. No, sir; I went to report to the company; no, sir; I will tell you what I went there for. I can tell you now. My boy was sick with typhoid fever in July a year ago, and I was telegraphed to go there and see him.

Q. Mrs. Cowen telegraphed you and you went up to San Antonio? Now, can you tell us at what time you returned from San Antonio to Brownsville?—A. I returned, I think, about the 1st of August.

Q. This battalion of the Twenty-fifth was in barracks there when you returned, was it?—A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. You got back before they came?—A. I got back before the 1st of August.

Q. How long before?—A. Just a few days, sir.

Q. You were back earlier than the 20th of July, were you not?—A. I could not tell you; I don't remember, sir.

Q. Can you tell us how long you were at San Antonio?—A. I was over two weeks at San Antonio.

Q. You were there before the 4th of July, were you not, and spent the Fourth there, didn't you?—A. No, sir; I think I was on the road on the 4th of July.

Q. Well, you were back, anyhow, before the colored troops came there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been testified that they came on the 26th of July.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before that date were you back at Brownsville?—

A. Well, I should say four or five days..

Q. So you think you were back as early as the 22d or 23d, or something like that, in July?—A. Yes, sir; something like that.

Q. Did you hear any talk about the soldiers coming before they arrived?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the nature of it?—A. I heard them say the colored troops were coming.

Q. Did you hear anybody express any dislike of that fact?—A. I don't know that I ever heard anybody express themselves—simply might have said that they would rather have the white people there.

Q. That is as far as you ever heard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never said anything in opposition to their coming?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no opposition at all to their coming?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no prejudice against the negro?—A. Not at all. I thought the negro troops would be much better than the whites.

Q. You thought that they would be better than the white troops, and you had no trouble and no prejudice against them before they came, on account of their color?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you never had any trouble after they came?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never said a word at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. No criticisms of their coming, I mean prior to the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. And after they came, so far as you know, they behaved well, didn't they?—A. No, sir.

Q. I am speaking so far as you yourself had to do with them. There were some instances I will ask you about presently.—A. No; they never did me anything.

Q. Did not do you any harm?—A. Not a bit.

Q. And you did not do them any harm?—A. Not a bit.

Q. And they did not do your family any harm?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. And your family did not do them any harm?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Your children went fishing in the dry lagoon over back of the officers' quarters in the reservation, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir; and I went with them several times.

Q. And you were always treated nicely by the soldiers?—A. They did not say anything to me, or do anything.

Q. They treated the children nicely, didn't they?—A. All I saw, they did.

Q. Gave them their places to fish at?—A. I think so.

Q. Furnished them with bait?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And everything was as pleasant and agreeable as you could imagine, so far as your relations with them were concerned?—

A. Yes, sir; they never said anything or molested us.

Q. Never in the slightest?—A. No, sir.

Q. So do you know of any reason why, if they did this shooting, they should shoot into your house more than they did into any body else's house, as though they had a special spite at you?—A. I do not see why they should have shot into my house at all, sir.

Q. You have no idea why they should have singled out your house and shot into it, have you?—A. I do not know of anything.

Q. That fact was something of a surprise to you, was it not?—
A. It was not a surprise to me.

Q. Why was it not a surprise to you?—A. Well, I had been notified that the negroes would shoot up the town of Brownsville.

Q. You had been notified by whom and when?—A. By a negro man by the name of William Henry.

Q. William Henry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is the man who testified before the grand jury?—A. I believe he did; yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did he tell you and where did he tell you?—A. He met me on the street, and he said, "Mr. Louis, I want to tell you something." I said, "What is it, Billy?" and he said, "You had better be prepared, I don't know that you can do anything, but they say—the negroes say—that they will shoot up the town after pay day."

Q. After pay day?—A. Yes.

Q. About when was it he told you this?—A. About a week prior to the shooting.

Q. Well, can you give us the day of the month?—A. Seven days before the 13th. I will not say it was just seven days, I said about a week.

Q. You said about a week, and I asked you if you could give us the day of the month that it happened.—A. I could not tell you. I say it was about a week.

Q. Well, about the 6th, then, we are to understand, of August?—

A. It might have been the 7th and might have been the 8th, sir.

Q. Well, I want to get at it as nearly as I can. He told you that?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that all he said?—A. Yes, sir; that is all he said.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. I don't remember. I may have said "I don't believe it." I don't remember.

Q. I want to know what you did say?—A. I don't remember saying a thing.

Q. Did you go and tell anybody that the town was going to be shot up?—A. I did not.

Q. What did this man Henry have to do with the soldiers, that he should have heard that they were going to shoot up the town?—

A. I don't know what he had to do with the soldiers. He used to be an old servant in our house.

Q. He had lived with you as a domestic servant in the house?—

A. Yes, sir; that is, in my father's house when I was a boy, and he met me and he told me that; mentioned that the negroes would shoot up the town after pay day.

Q. After pay day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any preparation then?—A. Not at the time. The day of the shooting it occurred to me then that it was past pay day, and I bought some cartridges.

Q. You did what?—A. I bought some cartridges.

Q. Where did you get those cartridges?—A. I bought them from a man by the name of Jagou, who had been in business, and he had all the stuff closed away in his warehouse.

Q. What kind of business had Jagou been in?—A. Arms and ammunition, wholesale and retail groceries, and wines and liquors.

Q. Wines and liquors. Where was his place of business?—A. His place of business was where the Ruby Saloon is now.

Q. Where the Ruby Saloon is; and where did you get this ammunition?—A. I got it at his residence. He has a warehouse at his residence.

Q. Where was his residence?—A. His residence is between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is, in a warehouse you say he has?—A. In the warehouse in the back of his yard.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You went to the warehouse in the back of his residence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And his residence is between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It fronts on Washington street, does it not?—A. No, sir; the warehouse does not.

Q. I mean the residence.—A. Yes, sir; the residence.

Q. And the warehouse fronts on this alley?—A. The warehouse fronts on the alley.

Q. And that is the alley that passes in front of your house?—A. The same alley.

Q. Up which these men went who constituted this shooting party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They went right in front of that warehouse, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many rounds of cartridges did you get?—A. I bought 40 rounds.

Q. What kind of ammunition was that?—A. .45-75.

Q. .45 and 75?—A. No, sir; .45-75 Winchester.

Q. .45-75—that is, .45 caliber and 75 grains of powder?—A. I think so.

Q. Well, are you stating it accurately or are you simply guessing?—A. No, sir; I am simply stating that the gun was a .45-75 Winchester, bottle-necked cartridge.

Q. And that is the kind of ammunition you got?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a Winchester is it that shoots such a large caliber as that?—A. It is a Winchester, model of 1876, sporting rifle.

Q. Were those steel-jacketed bullets?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were lead bullets, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the weight of those bullets?—A. I can not tell you, sir.

Q. Are they round bullets?—A. They are round, and the nose is flat.

Q. The nose is flat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not simply a round bullet—the whole bullet spherical?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is a long bullet, is it?—A. Yes, sir; it is a long bullet.

Q. But with a rounded nose?—A. Rounded and flat at the end; the top is cut off.

Q. What is that?—A. It is a bottled-necked cartridge, and it drops down, but it is flat at the end, just like this lead pencil is.

Q. That is the kind of cartridge you got, and you got 40 of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had a gun, of course, for them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you had that gun?—A. I had had that gun probably a couple of years.

Q. You are a hunter, are you not—hunt a good deal?—A. I do; yes, sir.

Q. You use sporting rifles a good deal?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you go hunting frequently?—A. I do.

Q. Don't you use a rifle when you go?—A. No, sir.

Q. What do you use?—A. A shotgun.

Q. You generally hunt with a shotgun—what kind of game do you hunt?—A. I hunt ducks.

Q. On the Rio Grande?—A. No, sir; I hunt ducks in the ponds that overflow from the Rio Grande.

Q. They overflow from there. You see we do not know anything about that country and we have got to ask you a great many questions.—A. Well, sir, I will answer them.

Q. These things may seem simple to you, but we want to get the information. Round about Brownsville is where you hunt ducks in those ponds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with a shotgun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you do have this rifle?—A. I have this rifle.

Q. Have you any other rifle in your house?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Did you at that time have any other rifle?—A. No, sir; not that I remember of.

Q. Any carbine?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing of that sort?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had a shotgun?—A. I had my shotgun.

Q. What kind of a shotgun is that?—A. I had a Winchester pump gun, we call it.

Q. That is a gun that you work just as you do any army gun, is it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How do you?—A. You draw a lever back to throw in the shell and extract it.

Q. That is what this gun here does. You do not draw it back like that? You draw it underneath?—A. There is a lever works underneath. The magazine is in here [illustrating].

Q. The magazine is underneath?—A. Yes, sir; and there is a lever underneath that you work with your left hand.

Q. Work it underneath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the kind of gun you have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a shotgun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as to your rifle, how does that work?—A. The rifle works with a lever.

Q. In the same way, underneath, or like this one?—A. No, sir; it is not like that. It has a lever underneath.

Q. It is underneath where it works, instead of on top?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is what you call a .45-75?—A. A .45-75.

Q. That means .45 caliber and 75 grains of powder?—A. Yes, sir; I believe so.

Q. Is that this new smokeless powder?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is black powder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a report does that gun make?—A. Well, they call it a cannon.

Q. It has a pretty loud report, hasn't it?—A. Yes, sir; very loud.

Q. And might be mistaken for a .45 Colt revolver, might it not?—A. I think it is much louder than a .45 Colt.

Q. Are not those practically the same in general character, the report of a .45 revolver and a .45 rifle?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the difference between the bullets of the .45 Colt revolver and the .45 Springfield that you speak of? What is the difference?—A. I did not say Springfield. I said a .45 Winchester.

Q. I beg your pardon, I meant Winchester.—A. Yes, sir; I can tell the difference of the bullets.

Q. I mean can you describe it without having the bullets before you?—A. Well, one is a larger bullet. The .45-75 is a much larger bullet than the .45 pistol bullet.

Q. It is not larger in caliber, is it?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Does not .45 mean caliber in both cases?—A. Well, it does sometimes, Mr. Foraker. It does not always mean it.

Q. It does not always mean it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any difference except in the length of the bullet?—A. You mean between the .45 Colt pistol and the .45-75 that I use?

Q. Yes.—A. The bullet is a much bigger bullet—a much heavier bullet. It has more lead.

Q. Its size is larger because it is longer, is it?—A. I could not tell you. I think so.

Q. If .45 means caliber in both cases, then necessarily they would both be of the same diameter, would they not?—A. Not in all cases, sir.

Q. What kind of a hole does that bullet that you fire out of your .45-75 make in a wooden obstruction when it hits it?—A. It makes a big hole in it.

Q. Makes a pretty good-sized hole?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could tell that hole readily, could you not, from the small .30 caliber high-power bullet, couldn't you?—A. Surely, sir.

Q. The small .30 caliber high-power bullet goes right in, leaving only a small hole?—A. Yes, sir; what I have seen.

Q. And this bullet that you fire out of your gun makes a much larger hole?—A. Makes a big hole.

Q. You could tell just by looking at the hole from the outside whether it is one or the other, couldn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without any trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you got 40 rounds of that ammunition. What did you do with it?—A. I took it home, and I believe I put it either on the dining-room table or on the table in the sitting room or hallway; I don't remember what I did with them, but I left them there.

Q. How was that packed up?—A. Twenty rounds in each little package.

Q. You had two packages of 20 rounds each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you distribute those cartridges out of those packages into any belt or anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of anybody else getting any additional ammunition that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell anybody why you wanted that ammunition?—A. I don't think I did; I don't remember.

Q. You did not tell Mr. Jagou?—A. No; I did not—I don't think I told him. I may have told him, but I could not tell you, sir; I don't think I did.

Q. Did you tell anybody else?—A. No, sir; I am satisfied of it.

Q. Were you at Mr. Tillman's saloon that afternoon in company with some other man?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at Mr. Crixell's saloon that afternoon?—A. I may have stopped in there to take a drink, if I took one; but I don't think I was there.

Q. You did not see anybody there in conference that afternoon?—A. If that was the evening of the 13th of August, I was not uptown at all until just when I bought the cartridges.

Q. When you bought the cartridges what time was it you bought them?—A. It was about half past 5 or 6 o'clock, probably.

Q. What prompted you to go and get those cartridges?—A. I was told there might be a raid, and I wanted to be prepared.

Q. That was a week before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you think it was likely to come off that night?—A. No, sir; except that they said they would shoot up the town after pay day, and I heard that Mrs. Evans had been assaulted, or they attempted to assault her, and this night when I went uptown I thought to myself, "I will go and buy my shells."

Q. Didn't you have any ammunition on hand?—A. I must have had some shotgun shells.

Q. Didn't you have any rifle shells?—A. No, sir.

Q. Until you bought these from Jagou?—A. Yes, sir; I did not have any.

Q. Did you hear this Evans matter talked about that afternoon?—A. I heard it spoken of, what had happened, yes, sir; I heard no particulars of it at all.

Q. Where were you when you heard of that?—A. I was at Mr. Wreford's office.

Q. Mr. S. P. Wreford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He had his office in the Wells Building, or the King Building?—A. No, sir; he had it right diagonally across from the Miller Hotel.

Q. Right across Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is a real estate man?—A. Yes, sir.

(At 1 o'clock p. m. the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, and Pettus.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS R. COWEN—Continued.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Mr. Cowen, I do not recall just what the last question was that I asked you before recess, so I will pass to another subject probably. Will you tell me, as nearly as you can, your whereabouts during the whole of that day, Monday, the 13th day of August?—A. On Monday? I generally leave home about 9 o'clock, and business calls me, of course, all around town, particularly on Elizabeth street and around the hotel, and I came home about half past 11. I usually come home to take lunch. I remember taking lunch that day, and sleeping. I generally take a nap in the afternoon. There is nothing doing at that time of the day.

Q. You never take a nap in the afternoon?—A. I always take a nap in the afternoon. I usually stay at home. I woke up and went uptown, it must have been after 4. I walked up as far as the Miller Hotel and crossed the street to Mr. Wreford's office—that is, directly across from the Miller Hotel—and talked to Mr. Wreford, and he asked me if I had heard what had happened the night before. I told him that I had heard something at home, but did not know what it was, and to tell me, and Mr. Wreford told me and we sat there talking about it; and after a little while I saw Doctor Combe and Mr. Evans, both in Doctor Combe's buggy, going down towards the reservation.

Q. You are referring now to the Evans matter?—A. Yes, sir. You asked me to tell you all that happened that day.

Q. That is what you and Mr. Wreford were talking about?—A. Yes, sir. I sat there a while and then walked over to where the buggy was. Doctor Combe had stepped into Mr. Yturria's bank. I left before Doctor Combe got back. I do not remember having done anything or gone any place in particular—probably walked up the street—until I saw this Mr. Jagou, and it must have been about half past 5 or a little later, and I said, "Mike, have you got any of those shells for this gun of mine," because this was an old-fashioned gun and it was hard to find ammunition for it, and he said, "Yes; I have a couple of boxes that I will let you have for a dollar apiece." I said, "All right; I want it; I would like to have it at home." So we went up Elizabeth street and turned at the corner and went down to his place and hunted for these shells, and we found them, and I got the shells and I took them home and I do not know just where I put them. My wife told me she had placed them on the table. We had a little children's party that night. The children came quite early, and my wife was not feeling well, and I had to entertain the children—to assist in entertaining them—probably up to half past 10. I then told my wife that I would go uptown and bring her a sandwich—bring home a couple of sandwiches and some beer.

Q. You told her, or did she ask you to do that?—A. I could not remember.

Q. Yes.—A. I believe she asked me, now, since you speak of it, "If you are going uptown, get me a couple of sandwiches and a bottle of beer." I said I would, and I walked across to the Leahy Hotel, across the street, and stayed there for an hour or more talking to Mrs. Leahy, at the gate.

Q. It was about half past 10 when you left home, you think?—A. I judge that was the hour, Senator, for the reason—

Q. I only wanted to know.—A. It seems to me I stayed over an hour at Leahy's.

Q. You stayed over an hour at Mrs. Leahy's hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is right across Fourteenth street from your house.—A. Yes, sir. I walked uptown then and dropped into the Chinese restaurant.

Q. Where is that?—A. That is across the street. It is in the same building that Crixell's saloon is.

Q. Yes.—A. It is adjoining.

Q. That is immediately opposite the Ruby Saloon?—A. Just opposite the Ruby Saloon. I went in there and said to the man, "John, fix me up a couple of sandwiches while I go and get a bottle of beer." He said, "All right, sir," and I walked across the street to the Weller saloon.

Q. The Weller?—A. Beyond the Ruby Saloon. I went over there to get the beer. I went there for the reason that my wife wanted Schlitz beer, and nobody else keeps it. I walked in there, and as I walked in a man by the name of Porter came in there, a railroad man, and he said, "Let us go back in there and eat something," and I said, "Well, I am hungry enough to eat something, I guess," and we walked back in there and took a sandwich, or something of the kind; I do not remember just what.

Q. Right there, let me get the location of that saloon. The Ruby Saloon and Crixell's saloon are opposite each other on Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Weller saloon is on the same side of Elizabeth street that the Ruby Saloon is on, but in the square beyond?—A. No, sir; just in the same square, 50 feet beyond, farther up.

Q. Let us look at the map. This building, which is numbered "8" on the map, is, I suppose, the Ruby Saloon, fronting on Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is between Thirteenth and Twelfth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Weller's saloon is nearer to Twelfth street?—A. Yes, sir; it is within 25 feet of the corner.

Q. It is not on the corner?—A. No, sir.

Q. But within 25 feet of the corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it runs back to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you stopped first at the Chinese restaurant?—A. If you will permit me, I will show you how I came out.

Q. Yes, certainly.—A. (Indicating on map.) This is my home. I came to Mrs. Leahy's first.

Q. That is, you came right across. Leahy's is right across from your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you came down Fourteenth street to Elizabeth?—
A. Across diagonally, this way [indicating].

Q. You went first to Mrs. Leahy's, and you stayed at the Leahy Hotel you think more than an hour?—A. I did.

Q. And you are pretty sure about that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you came out the front gate, I suppose?—A. I stayed at the front gate.

Q. You stayed at the front gate an hour?—A. Yes, sir; talking to Mrs. Leahy.

Q. She was out in front, and you stayed there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would make it what time, 11 o'clock?—A. Probably half past 11.

Q. Then from there you went up to what place?—A. To this place opposite the Ruby Saloon [indicating].

Q. What place is that?—A. The Chinese restaurant.

Q. The Chinese restaurant. That fronts on Elizabeth street, and it is the front part of Crixell's saloon, is it?—A. Crixell's saloon is right by the side of it.

Q. Right by the side of it, in the same building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I did not go in; I just called to him at the door, and ordered a sandwich.

Q. You ordered one sandwich?—A. Two sandwiches.

Q. Two sandwiches.—A. Then I walked across the street and walked into Weller's saloon, which stands within 25 feet of the corner.

Q. You walked in there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had something to eat there?—A. I took a sandwich, or something, there; I don't remember now what it was.

Q. You met some one there when you went in there?—A. Mr. Philip Porter.

Q. He is employed by the railroad company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?—A. He was either the freight cashier, or—he had something to do with the freight office.

Q. And he asked you if you would not take something to eat?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you and he went back and ate something?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you order a meal?—A. No, sir; we just took a sandwich—either cold ham or a ham sandwich, I do not remember which.

Q. And you ate it there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At a bar or a table?—A. No, sir; he has a bench; that is, a stand.

Q. A what?—A. A counter, and I ate it there.

Q. You had something to drink with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you been drinking any at all that day, that afternoon or evening?—A. Not any more than usual, sir.

Q. Well, that is rather indefinite. Had you been drinking any at all?—A. I suppose I had taken two or three drinks during the day.

Q. I mean after you had your nap, immediately following your luncheon, you did not take any drink while you were still at home?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take any drink while you were talking to Mrs. Leahy at the front gate?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not take any drink when you went into the Chinese restaurant?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not take any drink when you went across to Weller's and took your meal with Mr. Porter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you had not drank anything at all up to that time?—A. I do not believe I had drank anything at all.

Q. Then, after you took this, whatever it was you ate, in Weller's, you went where?—A. I came through the restaurant into the bar, and I said, "Give me a bottle of beer."

Q. In what saloon was that?—A. Weller's saloon.

Q. Weller's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you get?—A. One bottle of Schlitz beer

Q. One bottle of Schlitz beer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. Just as I paid for the beer and put it in my pocket, the shooting commenced.

Q. And do you know about what time that was?—A. It was six minutes of 12 by Weller's time.

Q. Six minutes of 12. What did you do then, when the shooting commenced?—A. I started to run out, and then I changed my mind about it.

Q. And you remained in Weller's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. About two minutes, I think.

Q. Was the firing going on all the while?—A. No, sir; there was firing, and then it stopped.

Q. It stopped?—A. When I came out of Weller's saloon I came down towards the Ruby. It had stopped at that moment.

Q. Before I get to that I want to finish with this. When you heard the firing you started to go out of Weller's saloon, but then you stopped and thought you would remain there; and you remained there, as I understand you, about two minutes?—A. About two minutes.

Q. And during the two minutes that you remained there the firing stopped?—A. There was a lull in the shooting.

Q. A lull; and then you went out on the street and started towards the Ruby Saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is only a few feet away?—A. Yes, sir; only a few feet away.

Q. About how far?—A. It is 50 feet between Weller's and the Ruby Saloon.

Q. How much?—A. Fifty feet.

Q. You went into the Ruby Saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do there?—A. I asked for a pistol, and told them that I wanted to go home; my wife and children were at home, and I wanted to go home.

Q. Had you thought of your wife and children when the shooting commenced, while you were at Weller's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you think then about going home immediately?—A. I did.

Q. You asked for a pistol. When did you ask for it?—A. I asked it of the boy that was killed, Frank Natus.

Q. Frank Natus?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. He told me that he had but one, and that was on him. He had it stuck in his apron.

Q. He had one on him?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Have you any objection, Senator, right there, to asking what kind of a pistol that was?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What kind of a pistol was that?—A. It was a small nickel-plated Smith & Wesson, evidently about .32 or .38 caliber.

Q. Did you see the pistol, except the handle of it?—A. I saw the pistol; yes, sir. I saw the pistol after the shooting.

Q. You saw it after the shooting?—A. And I saw it when he had it on, before the shooting.

Q. You saw the body after he was killed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw the pistol still on the body?—A. Still where he had it; yes, sir.

Q. Were you there when the pistol was taken off of the body?—A. No, sir.

Q. You asked him for that pistol, and he could not give you one; and what did you do then?—A. I did not ask him for that pistol, sir.

Q. Not that pistol, but a pistol, and he did not give you one. What did you do then?—A. I said, "That is all right."

Q. What did you do?—A. I walked to the edge of the sidewalk in front of the Ruby Saloon, and there is a flag pole there.

Q. What?—A. There is a flag pole there, and it had been raining, and the streets were a little muddy, and I reached for that pole, trying to throw myself over there [indicating], and I glanced up towards the post, and just as I looked up I stopped, and I saw shooting from the post.

Q. How much shooting did you see?—A. That would be hard to tell; probably seven or eight shots, probably more.

Q. Where did they seem to be fired from?—A. They were fired from the first quarters, nearest the river.

Q. That is, the barracks on the right-hand side of the gate as you enter the fort?—A. Yes, sir; as you enter the post.

Q. There is the map. You will notice that that barracks which you describe is marked with the letter "D," the barracks to the right of the gate as you enter.—A. That gate is not right; sir.

Q. Here is where you were, down by the Ruby Saloon [indicating on map].—A. Yes, sir; right here.

Q. Right here on the sidewalk, in front of the saloon, and you looked up towards the fort?—A. Here is the place that I saw the shooting [indicating].

Q. Right in front of D barracks. You saw that firing from there?—A. Yes, sir. This gate is not in the right place.

Q. What is the matter with that?—A. Because standing up here I can see these quarters [indicating].

Q. Is there a building here [indicating on map]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a building is that?—A. A little, low, frame building.

Q. About how high?—A. About 15 or 18 feet.

Q. Are there any other buildings on that block?—A. No, sir; down here there is [indicating].

Q. This whole block is covered with buildings, is it not [indicating]?—A. There is a little place in here, and a negro shanty here [indicating].

Q. Is not the whole block practically covered?—A. On this side; yes, sir.

Q. How about this block here, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets?—A. That is all covered.

Q. On the side towards the river?—A. That is all covered; yes, sir.

Q. What kind of buildings are they?—A. Do you want me to tell what stands here [indicating]?

Q. Are they brick buildings or frame buildings or residences?—A. They are brick buildings; some of them.

Q. So that it is all covered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How high are those buildings?—A. I suppose some are 35 feet high.

Q. If you stood in front of Tillman's saloon and looked down towards the garrison, that block is covered with houses, and the barrack building D is correctly represented on the map, you could not have seen it at all, could you?—A. If it was correctly represented; but it is not, sir.

Q. But it is not?—A. I can see through there [indicating]. That gate is wrong. It stands straight out here, and this turns around here [indicating on map].

Q. You think that D barracks ought to go up farther towards where the gate is marked?—A. Yes; you can stand up there and see it.

Q. At any rate, you did look down there and you saw seven or eight shots?—A. I saw about that, sir; I could not tell you for certain.

Q. By the flash of the gun?—A. I was not counting them, sir.

Q. I am only asking what you told us.—A. About seven or eight shots.

Q. Seven or eight shots. I only want to understand you, Mr. Cowen.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw only the flashes?—A. That is all.

Q. You could not see who was doing the firing from that distance?—A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of a night was it?—A. The night seemed to me dark—starlight dark.

Q. Very dark, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had it not been raining?—A. It had prior to that; yes, sir.

Q. Have you not testified that it was a very dark night?—A. I testified that it was dark, sir; very dark, but a starlight night.

Q. Then how long did you stand there? First, I will ask you in what direction did those guns seem to be pointed of which you saw the flashes?—A. I could see the flashes and I could hear the bullets passing by.

Q. They came right over you?—A. They came by me, not over me.

Q. Were they coming up Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How close do you think the bullets came to you?—A. Close enough not to sing.

Q. Not to do what?—A. Not to sing. When a bullet is any distance from you, it sings out, but when it comes close to you, it sounds like that [witness imitating hiss of bullet and snapping his fingers].

Q. It was close to you. It did not sing, and the fact that it did not sing was an indication that it was close?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of these bullets were there?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Did you stand there long?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you do?—A. I crossed the street.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went into the Chinese restaurant.

Q. That is where you had been before?—A. Yes, sir; that is where I stopped to order the sandwiches.

Q. That is the Chinese restaurant now connected with Crixell's saloon?—A. It was the Chinese restaurant.

Q. I say it is the same one connected with Crixell's saloon that you spoke about a while ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do when you went in there?—A. I stood at the door and tried to see how much longer they kept on shooting. Looked down and tried to see if I could see anything more.

Q. Where was this shooting?—A. After I crossed the street I did not see any more shooting; I could hear the shooting.

Q. This shooting in front of D barracks stopped after you went across the street?—A. I could not tell you. I went across, and I did not see any more.

Q. Did you run across?—A. I went pretty fast; yes, sir.

Q. What did you do when you went to the Chinese restaurant?—A. I went to the door and stood in the door, leaning out, trying to see if I could see anything, and finally the Chinaman called my attention—said something, that he was closing up; and, in fact, before I got in, he blew out the lights and left me in the dark, and I turned around and walked back where he had a counter, and I struck a door that went into Mr. Crixell's saloon, and from there I walked into Crixell's saloon.

Q. You went into Crixell's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the firing about this time?—A. Downtown, near the post.

Q. Did it seem at that time to be practically at the same place where you had heard all of it?—A. No, sir; it was louder.

Q. It was getting nearer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then what did you do after you got into Crixell's saloon?—A. I saw three or four young friends of mine in there, acquaintances, and one of the Crixell boys.

Q. Up to this time you had not taken any drinks since you left home?—A. No, sir; I had not taken anything.

Q. Did you order anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you buy a bottle of whisky at that time from Crixell?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not ask him for a half a pint of whisky?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he not hand you a half a pint of whisky?—A. No, sir.

Q. You found Crixell and who else in there?—A. I found Crixell and Martin Hanson.

Q. Martin Hanson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. H-a-n-s-o-n?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does he do?—A. He is a contractor—an architect.

Q. What?—A. An architect.

Q. Then who else was in there?—A. I found Mr. Wise—Mr. Leo Wise.

Q. What does he do?—A. He is a commission merchant.

Q. Yes; go on.—A. I found a young man by the name of Dougherty.

Q. Dougherty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does he do?—A. He is assistant postmaster.

Q. What did you do? You found all these people there, and was Crixell there?—A. Yes, sir; Joe Crixell was.

Q. Joe Crixell? Who was it that testified here?

Senator WARNER. It was Joe Crixell.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Yes; he is the one. Did you see his brother?—A. No, sir.

Q. He was not there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I went in and listened to the shooting just for a second, and I says: "Joe, will you please lend me a pistol to go home? My wife and children are alone, and they will be frightened." Just the same words. He told me that he had a pistol, but that he had loaned it to somebody, and he didn't know who he had loaned it to.

Q. Did he say when he had loaned it?—A. I don't remember whether he did or not. Probably he said.

Q. He did not accommodate you, at any rate?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not get it?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was the third time that you had asked for a pistol?—A. The second time.

Q. What is that?—A. The second time.

Q. You asked for a pistol at the Ruby Saloon and at Crixell's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were very anxious to go home then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do when Crixell did not give you the pistol?—

A. I started to walk out on the street and they would not let me go. In fact, they grabbed hold of me and they tore my shirt.

Q. Who tore your shirt?—A. Some of the boys—Crixell or Mr. Hanson.

Q. What did you want to do?—A. I wanted to go home.

Q. Then what happened?—A. The place was closed; they closed the door.

Q. They closed it up?—A. Yes, sir; and the firing came nearer.

Q. Yes.—A. Then somebody suggested that we should go upstairs, and I said, "It will be a good idea, because in case those soldiers get here, the first place they will break into will be the bar."

Q. You said they were soldiers at that time?—A. Yes, sir; I thought so.

Q. You had not heard anybody or seen anybody or anything, except the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Somebody said to go upstairs, and you went upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. Until the thing was over.

Q. How long had it been over before you came down?—A. Probably five minutes.

Q. Five minutes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do when it was over?—A. Crixell came downstairs and opened up, and we walked out at the front of the building to see what had happened.

Q. Where did the firing occur that you heard?—A. It sounded to me right in front. I thought it was on the street right in front. I thought it was on Elizabeth street.

Q. Did you not hear the firing up at Starck's house, on Washington street?—A. I could not tell where it was, whether it was there or not, because that is just a block beyond, farther over.

Q. It is just a block beyond. You could not tell where it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. But it was all over, at the Starck house and everywhere, when you came out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You came out on the street five minutes, you think, after it was over?—A. Yes, sir; five or six minutes.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I walked out on the sidewalk, and I saw some blood on the ground, and I traced the blood up to the drug store, and then as I was standing there I asked somebody who was hurt.

Q. Tell us right there where the drug store is.—A. I did not go clear up to the drug store. I went up by the bank, and it was dark underneath the porches, and I could not see.

Q. Tell us first where the drug store is.—A. Just beyond Twelfth street.

Q. On Elizabeth?—A. On Elizabeth.

Q. On the same side as the Ruby Saloon?—A. The same side.

Q. Where was it you saw the blood?—A. In front of Crixell's.

Q. Right in front of Crixell's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you afterwards learn whose blood that was?—A. I did. I heard it was that of the lieutenant of police, Dominguez.

Q. Did you go as far as to the drug store?—A. I did not.

Q. How far did you go?—A. Just past the Merchants' National Bank, which stands on the corner of Elizabeth and Twelfth streets.

Q. Elizabeth and Twelfth. Did you stop right at the corner?—A. I believe I stopped just in front of the bank, because there is where they told me that Mr. Dominguez had been shot.

Q. He was, in fact, shot down near the corner of Elizabeth and Thirteenth, was he not?—A. I suppose so; that is where I learned afterwards he was shot.

Q. You think now you went up to the corner of Elizabeth and Twelfth and stopped there?—A. I went across the street; I cut across the street, because the blood was on the sidewalk, and then I followed the blood.

Q. Did anybody go with you to follow the blood?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went all alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there not a great many people in the streets in that immediate neighborhood when you came out of the saloon?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw this right in front of the saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And just started off after it by yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Cowen, when you got up in the neighborhood of that corner where you say the bank is, what did you do?—A. I was tracing the blood, and somebody came up, I think it was a Mexican or a policeman, and I says, "What is this blood?" He says, "Ygnacio Dominguez is shot," and I says, "Shot, how?" And he says, "Shot in the arm by the soldiers."

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I walked back towards home, towards the Weller saloon.

Q. Did you not go into the Weller saloon?—A. I don't remember whether I did or not.

Q. Do you not remember that you did?—A. Probably I did, sir.

Q. Have you not testified that you went into the Weller saloon after the firing was all over?—A. I don't remember what I testified. I went into three saloons.

Q. You were in Crixell's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the firing you came out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you traced this blood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is the first time you have testified to that in your testimony, is it not?—A. I was asked questions and I answered them.

Q. This is the first time you have testified to that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you went to Weller's saloon, did you?—A. I think so.

Q. Are you clear about that?—A. I think so.

Q. When did you go into Weller's saloon?—A. I do not remember that I went in. They were talking around outside, a crowd, and I think I stood out there.

Q. You did not take any drinks while the firing was going on?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take any drinks after the firing?—A. I do not remember whether I took a drink or not; probably I did.

Q. Where did you take it?—A. I think probably I took a drink at Crixell's saloon.

Q. How long did you stay in Weller's saloon?—A. I did not go in the saloon, to my recollection. I believe I went up in front of the saloon, and by that time there was a crowd there, talking about the shooting, and then I went across to Crixell's and took a drink and started to go home.

Q. Now, I want to read from your testimony given before Mr. Purdy.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are two or three things that I will read you here. First I will read from page 138 of the printed testimony. I want to see whether this is correct:

Q. How was Elizabeth street as to its being lighted at that time?—A. I remember the night was quite dark, in fact, very dark. It was cloudy weather. It had been raining prior to that and after that. It was very wet weather. It was a very dark night, I remember.

That is correct?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I stated.

Q. That was correct, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. After you saw these flashes, where did you go then?—A. I walked across the street to the Chinese restaurant in Crixell's saloon.

That is correct?—A. I do not know about walking. I do not think I walked very slow.

Q. Your first testimony was that you went across the street in a run.—A. Let me explain myself. I can not go very fast; I am crippled—I suffer with rheumatism. About as fast as a man could go over there, between a run and a walk I went over there.

Q. You say you went as rapidly as you could, and here you have said that you walked across. I only want to get which is right.—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, passing that, and coming down to the middle of page 138, when the firing had ceased, according to your description, I will read as follows:

Q. Where did you go from Crixell's saloon after you left there?—A. I came out of the saloon and crossed the street to where I was first watching the shooting when I went into Crixell's saloon, and I walked up to Weller's saloon again, where a crowd was talking.

Is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the point from which you were watching the firing was a point immediately opposite the Ruby Saloon?—A. No, sir; it was opposite Crixell's saloon, where I was watching the firing.

Q. I mean, you came out of the Ruby Saloon and stood on the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And looked down towards the fort and saw seven or eight shots fired from D Company barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the point from which you watched the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the point, according to this testimony I am reading, to which you returned after you came out of Crixell's saloon?—A. No, sir.

Q. What point was it?—A. I stated that I came out there, and the first thing I saw was blood, and I walked up to the bank, and then came back to the point where I first heard the shooting, which was Weller's saloon.

Q. I understand now; but we did not have the benefit of that in this testimony given before Mr. Purdy. When you gave this testimony you did not tell anything about tracing the blood?—A. No, sir; I answered the questions there.

Q. They asked you where you went? That is the same question that I have asked you?—A. Well, yes.

Q. Now, the next question and answer are:

Q. That was after the disturbance was all over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time did you go home that night?—A. It was about 1 o'clock.

Q. You were extremely anxious to go home while the firing was going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made application at two different places for a pistol?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Saying that you wanted to go to your wife and children?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did it happen that you did not go home as soon as the firing was over, and it was apparently safe to go?—A. I do not know about apparent safeness. I stayed around there to find out what was the damage done; because everyone would run up and say something had happened, and some one was shot, and so on, and I wanted to know. There was no further shooting, and I did not think at that time there was any further danger.

Q. Did it not occur to you at that time that you wanted to find out whether there had anything happened at your house, to your wife and children?—A. It would have occurred; but I did not believe it had. I did not think it for a moment.

Q. You did not think anything had occurred?—A. I thought all the time that it might have been a fight between the city police and the soldiers. That was my impression, and my idea.

Q. Did you think who might have commenced it?—A. There was no commencement at all. I heard the shooting from the post. It was high-power guns.

Q. The very first shots you heard were of high-power guns?—A. Of high-power guns.

Q. You did not hear any other kind of guns, did you?—A. I did.

Q. What kind of a gun did you hear?—A. I heard two shots from either a Winchester .44 or .45, or a .45 pistol.

Q. Yes.—A. But that was quite a time, and there had been lots of shots fired; and this was fired away from the post, and away from where we were, and it seemed to be in a different street.

Q. About what time were those shots fired?—A. I was upstairs in Crixell's when they were fired.

Q. Upstairs in Crixell's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that when you made this inquiry for the pistol of Frank Natus, and afterwards when you made a request for one at Crixell's—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had not yet heard any but high-power guns?—A. Yes, sir; I heard those high-power guns, one caliber only.

Q. And at that time you could not have thought it was a fight between the Mexicans and the soldiers unless you thought it was all on one side?—A. I thought they were just shooting up at the police.

Q. You thought they were just shooting up the police?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what made you think that the soldiers would come out and shoot the police of Brownsville?—A. I did not think they would fire at anybody else. Why should they fire at private citizens? They had not done them any harm.

Q. You had not heard of the soldiers doing any harm, before this Evans incident of the night before, had you?—A. No, sir; I had heard of the Tate affair.

Q. Well, the soldiers had not hit anybody there? The soldier had been knocked down, had he not?—A. Yes, sir; but I heard also that he had pushed these two ladies aside.

Q. You heard that? That was talked about a good deal in Brownsville, was it not?—A. Well, Tate told me so himself.

Q. When had he told you?—A. I think the Saturday before.

Q. That was the 11th?—A. The 11th or the 12th.

Q. You had heard of it before that, had you not?—A. No, sir; probably not.

Q. It occurred on Sunday, the 5th?—A. Probably so; probably it was a week before that.

Q. You had heard that talked about; it was talked about a good deal, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Wreford talked about that a good deal, did he not?—A. He never spoke to me about it.

Q. Mr. Billingsley talked a good deal about that?—A. I didn't hear it.

Q. You did not hear him talk?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, for some reason you did not feel like going down home immediately after the firing was over?—A. It was not that; I started to go home, and somebody would come up and say something, and then somebody else would say something else, and I just delayed going home.

Q. They finally sent for you, did they not?—A. It seems that they sent for me twice. They did not find me the first time.

Q. Where did they find you?—A. They found me going home.

Q. Where were you?—A. On the other side of the Ruby Saloon; that is towards my home.

Q. How far from the Ruby Saloon?—A. Just crossing—just adjoining; because I was walking down the same side of the street.

Q. You were going down Elizabeth street?—A. Towards my home.

Q. Walking alone?—A. I was going along.

Q. Just walking along?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who found you?—A. Judge Parks.

Q. Was anybody with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was not Mr. Herbert Elkins with him?—A. No, sir; he had been before.

Q. Mr. Parks was alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that he was looking for you?—A. Yes, sir; he says, "Louis, I have been looking for you; your house has been shot into, and the glasses are all broken." I said, "How about my family?" He says, "Your family are over at the Leahy Hotel, and nothing has happened to them."

Q. Then you went home?—A. No, sir. A crowd heard Judge Parks tell me about this, and they started to follow me, and I was in my shirt sleeves—had white clothes on—and when these boys started to follow me I asked them to please stay back, that I was going home, and I wanted to go alone; that in case they fired from the post they would make a good mark, and they would be more likely to be shot at; and at that time Major Combe came up and I asked him to help me to get them to stay back, and he picked up a box there and stood on it and spoke to them about going home and remaining quiet, and the following morning everything would be looked into.

Q. At that time had you seen a patrol pass up the street?—A. No, sir.

Q. When that passed it was afterwards, was it not?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you not see Captain Lyon's company of forty or fifty men pass through the street?—A. I understood when I got there that they had passed. I did not pay any attention to that.

Q. That is, you understood that they had passed when you got home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was before this they passed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was it when you got home?—A. I must have got home a little after 1; probably a quarter past 1.

Q. Was it not considerably past that, Mr. Cowen?—A. I do not know, sir; I could not tell you.

Q. Where did you go when you got home?—A. I went to the Leahy Hotel.

Q. You went first to your own home?—A. No, sir; I went first to the Leahy Hotel, where my family were.

Q. Then from there where did you go?—A. They told me that the house had been shot into, and I got the key and lit a lantern and walked across the street to my house to see what damage had been done.

Q. What damage did you find?—A. I did not make a close examination. I saw that the looking-glass was broken—the plate glass in the wardrobe—and I went in the children's bedroom and I saw the beds all mussed up and the bullet holes all around, and splinters all over everything.

Q. These were in the back rooms, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I went through the place and looked around, probably not so long as I have been in telling it to you, and then I picked up my rifle and loaded it and went across the street.

Q. Did you take that ammunition with you?—A. I believe I took a box.

Q. Where did you go, across the street?—A. I went to the Leahy Hotel.

Q. Where did you stay the rest of that night?—A. I sat up.

Q. At the Leahy Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. Out in the yard.

Q. You sat up there all night?—A. Yes, sir; I believe about 4 o'clock—laid down on the doorstep and fell asleep for a moment.

Q. Now I will read you some testimony that was given by Mr. Crixell, Mr. Joseph Crixell, when he was on the stand here a few days ago. He is the man, as I understand it, in whose saloon you were, and I want to see whether what he says agrees with your recollection. I read from page 2402 of the testimony taken before this committee:

Q. Was Mr. Louls Cowen there?—A. Louls Cowen came in there after the shooting started, from the restaurant door.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. Had you seen Mr. Louls Cowen that evening before he came in then?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had not seen him?—A. No, sir.

Q. He was not in your saloon at all?—A. I had seen him in the afternoon.

Were you in his saloon in the afternoon?—A. No, sir; I did not leave home until after 4 o'clock, but I may have been in later. We ate dinner about 7.

Q. You may have been in Crixell's saloon?—A. I may have been in and taken a drink; yes, sir. Very likely.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. When did you see him first, that night?—A. That night, I don't recollect.

Q. He had not been in your saloon that night at all, so far as you can recall?—A. So far as I can recollect; no, sir.

Q. Did you notice whether he was under the influence of liquor when he came in?—A. Well, I couldn't tell you, because when I seen him was exactly when the shooting was going on, and I was excited enough not to pay any attention.

Q. You did not have much time to pay attention to anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you remember that he came in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you remember that he wanted to get a six-shooter?—A. Yes; he wanted to go home.

Q. And did he tell you where he had been?—A. No, sir. He had a package of sandwiches from the restaurant, and he asked me for a half pint of whisky.

Q. He asked you for a half pint of whisky?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you wait on him?—A. Yes, sir. I gave it to him.

Q. That was while the firing was going on?—A. Yes, sir. I just took it out and gave it to him.

Q. You did not stop to collect for it?—A. No, sir. Yes, I believe he did pay me.

Q. Did you give him any beer?—A. No, sir.

Is that testimony correct, or not?—A. It is not correct in so far as my getting half a pint of whisky is concerned; no, sir.

Q. You did not ask for any whisky?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to so testify before.—A. I did not; no, sir. I walked in and asked for a pistol.

Q. And you had not been drinking?—A. No, sir. I had just left my family, where I had been entertaining the children since supper time.

Q. You left about 10.30?—A. Yes; about 10.30.

Q. Another witness has testified on this subject, and I will find his testimony. I think you ought to have a chance to correct it. Now, Mr. Cowen, you testified that you went that afternoon to Mr. Jagou's and bought 50 rounds of ammunition, replenishing your stock?—A. I simply wanted some cartridges, in case I needed them.

Q. You already had some on hand?—A. No, sir; I did not have any on hand.

Q. Before I go on with that; Mr. Herbert Elkins—you know him?—A. I have known him since the shooting.

Q. What?—A. I have known him since the shooting.

Q. You did not know him before?—A. No, sir; nor did he know me before the shooting. I never had seen him.

Q. I read from page 2332 of the testimony before this committee what he testified:

Q. When the firing was all through, you went with Judge Parks to the Tillman saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To look after Mr. Cowen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Parks knew Mr. Cowen?—A. Yes; he did.

Q. Did you find him?—A. Yes, sir; it must have been nearly an hour later.

Q. Were you with him when he found him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Cowen say where he had been?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did he say he had been?—A. Just before the shooting he said that he went out to one of the saloons.

Q. To which of the saloons did he go?—A. I don't know.

Q. To whom did he make that report?—A. He was telling it at the hotel, just after the shooting.

Q. Was it Tillman's or Crixell's saloon?—A. I do not know; it must have been Crixell's. It was not Tillman's.

Q. What was he doing when the firing commenced?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did he say he was in that saloon when the firing commenced?—A. He was not in Tillman's; I think I remember hearing him say that he was in Crixell's, or I heard somebody say he was.

Q. He heard the firing?—A. I do not know what he heard.

Q. Did you hear him say?—A. I did not pay any attention to what he said, because I believed him to be nearly drunk.

Q. Nearly drunk?—A. I believed him to be pretty full, that is the word.

Q. When was this?—A. It was about an hour after the shooting.

Q. Was that before D Company had gone out into the town?—A. That was afterwards, I believe.

Q. Can you tell—did you hear him say, or hear anybody else say, what time he left his house that night?—A. No, sir; if I heard him say, I did not pay any attention to it.

Now, is it true, or not, that you were pretty nearly full?—A. I was not full, nor pretty nearly full, nor anything like it.

Q. That statement is not correct?—A. He states in there that he did not know me, and if he did not know me, how could he tell that I was full; and I certainly went to my family.

Q. That is certainly an argument. He testified that he did not know you until that night, I believe.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of anybody else replenishing his stock of ammunition that afternoon?—A. No, sir.

Senator WARNER. Pardon me, Senator, but he stated that he did not replenish his stock.

The WITNESS. I stated that I did not. I did not have any.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The word "replenish" may not be correct. Did you hear of anybody else getting an additional stock of ammunition that afternoon?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had some on hand?—A. I did not have any on hand.

Q. I thought you stated to me a while ago, before the recess, that you probably did have some on hand, but you needed some additional?—A. I may have had one or two shells, but I did not know where they were at, and I simply went and bought two boxes of cartridges.

Q. So that you would be sure of having some on hand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of anybody else buying any other ammunition that afternoon?—A. No, sir.

Q. You know Mr. Dennett?—A. I do.

Q. He keeps guns also, does he not?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Do you not think he had a Springfield rifle? Do you not think he has—do you not know he has?—A. I do not know so and I do not think so.

Q. Or some pistols?—A. He may have some pistols.

Q. Do you know anything about him getting any ammunition?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have never testified before, except before Mr. Purdy, have you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not called before the court-martial?—A. I did not testify. I was first at San Antonio—at Fort Sam Houston.

Q. But they did not put you on the stand?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whatever the fact may be as to Mr. Dennett having arms, you know nothing about his having any of them?—A. Not any.

Q. You do not know whether he had any guns in his house?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know whether his sons had any?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know whether he bought any ammunition either before or after the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know of anybody else getting any ammunition, only yourself?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I suppose you have already asked the witness, but I would like to know what kind of ammunition this was that the witness bought?—A. .45-75.

Q. Used in some gun that you have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a gun?—A. It is a sporting rifle; more of a target rifle. It is an old-fashioned gun.

Q. Is it a Winchester?—A. A Winchester; a sporting model.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. These were not metal-jacketed cartridges, but just lead cartridges?—A. Common lead cartridges.

Q. .45 caliber; and 75 grains of powder to the charge?—A. Yes, sir; I believe so.

Q. That is a pretty big charge, is it not?—A. It is a pretty big cartridge.

Q. Can you tell us how long those lead bullets are?—A. I could not tell you exactly. I suppose the lead bullet is about that long [indicating with lead pencil].

Q. That would be about an inch long, you think?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Hardly that long?—A. I don't know.

Q. But it is .45 caliber?—A. .45-75. It is larger than the old Springfield cartridge. The cartridge is a bottle neck.

Q. Now, Mr. Cowen, when did you first hear of this Evans incident?—A. The first time I heard of the Evans incident I heard of it at home. I heard my wife say something about it, or she asked me if I had heard anything about Mrs. Evans.

Q. Was there not an account of it in the newspaper the morning of the 13th?—A. I don't know if I saw it. It wasn't Monday morning.

Q. Did you hear of it during the day?—A. If it was published, it would be published on Monday evening, because we have no morning paper.

Q. When you went downtown did you hear people talking about it pretty generally?—A. After I spoke to Mr. Wreford; yes, sir.

Q. What did he say ought to be done about it?—A. I don't remember, sir.

Q. Did you suggest anything ought to be done about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody else, that you remember?—A. No, sir; except probably some men did say that this thing ought to be stopped; that the negroes should not outrage white women—what a white man would feel like saying.

Q. You did hear something like that?—A. I don't know.

Q. You did hear it?—A. I am not sure whether I did hear it or not.

Q. Did you hear anybody suggest what they ought to do to put a stop to it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, have you told us all that you know about this shooting?—A. I can tell you more about the shooting that actually happened in my house. I told you that I only made a partial examination of it that night.

Q. I will ask you about that in a minute. Have you told us all you know as to who did the shooting?—A. I don't know who did the shooting.

Q. You don't know anything about that?—A. I know some shots were fired from the post, and I believe that the negro soldiers did the shooting.

Q. You know that some of the shots were fired from the upper gallery of D barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Over from the right of the gate, because you saw them?—A. I saw shots fired from the post.

Q. Those are the only ones you saw the flashes of?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is how you know that shots were fired from the post?—A. Yes, sir; that is how I know shots were fired from the post.

Q. And you have not any doubt in your mind but what the soldiers did the shooting up of the town?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. You are perfectly sure of that?—A. Perfectly sure; yes, sir.

Q. And you have never doubted that?—A. I have never doubted that for a moment; no, sir.

Q. Now, the next morning you made a careful examination of your house, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; I made a further examination, a more careful examination.

Q. Well, you have since the firing, whether the next morning or later, made a careful examination, have you not?—A. Since; yes, sir.

Q. The shots seemed to have been fired into your house from the alley, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your house is indicated on that map as No. 2, fronting on Fourteenth street, and not reaching out quite to the alley. Let me invite your attention to that carefully. [Referring to the map.] That is supposed to be your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These shots, as I understand you, were fired from some place in the alley?—A. Some were fired from there; yes, sir.

Q. I want the ones that were fired from there. Where did they go?—A. They were fired from this part of the alley [indicating].

Q. That is from the point right above the figure 2 in the alley?—

A. My stable comes in here, and the gate, and they fired over the gate.

Q. Over the gate of your stable?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, they fired from a point between your house and the mouth of the alley next to the garrison?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Right about at the gate going into your stable, fired from there into your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They did not fire into the stable at all, did they?—A. I could not tell. I don't think they fired into the stable.

Q. How many shots were fired from that point, and where did those shots strike the house?—A. This middle room here contained a door, with a window.

Q. That is the dining room in the rear of the house?—A. Yes, sir; and they fired from over there [indicating], going through the window, shooting out a student lamp, and going into this partition, this side of the door.

Q. That is the partition that leads into the reception room, the middle room of the front rooms?—A. Yes, sir; and went from there into the chiffonier.

Q. That is, one shot did that?—A. One shot.

Q. Do you think the same shot that put out the lamp that stood on the table in the dining room went through the partition and hit the chiffonier in the reception room?—A. Yes, sir; it was the same shot. I traced it.

Q. You traced that, and it was the same shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, you think, was fired from a point at about your stable?—A. It had to be.

Q. Where were those other shots fired from?—A. Those other shots were fired into this room [indicating].

Q. That is, from the alley they were fired perpendicularly to the house?—A. Directly through these rooms; yes, sir.

Q. And those shots went clear through, did they?—A. Some of them went through a wall like this, and two shots went through the roof.

Q. They did not any of them go through a wall like that, did they? This wall here towards which you point is about 4 feet thick.—A. I understand.

Q. What kind of a wall was it that they went through?—A. It is a frame building—weatherboarding.

Q. How thick is that wall?—A. Is a frame cottage, lined inside, coiled.

Q. They went through there. Now, how many were there of those shots?—A. I think six.

Q. Six of those, and the great number of holes are to be accounted for by the fact that the same bullet made more than one hole?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. Some of them made two or three holes, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, they went through two or three different partitions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some of them went clear out and struck the rear of the annex of the Leahy Hotel, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Have you any objection to asking him how many shots struck the house altogether?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. About how many shots struck the house altogether?—A. About eight, I think.

Q. But they made about twenty holes?—A. I think they made twenty-three holes.

Q. Twenty-three holes, and only about eight shots that struck the house. Well, I believe that is all I care to ask.

Senator WARNER. I have no questions.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

The WITNESS. Mr. Foraker, before I retire I should like to state that in coming here from St. Louis the other day I picked up the Washington Post and in it there is a sort of yellow-journal statement that I had said that if Mr. Foraker ever came to Brownsville he would be tarred and feathered. It also said there was a porter on the car who refused to make up our beds. I wish to say that all of that is untrue. There is no truth either in the statement that I made that remark, nor is there any truth in the Pullman car incident.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You did not make any such remark?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. I would be perfectly safe, would I, in going to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; and I think if you would you would find that the people would treat you properly.

Q. I greatly appreciate that assurance.—A. Well, sir, I wanted to put myself right.

Q. You did not draw a .45 on the porter?—A. I did not have any.

Q. Well, Mr. Cowen, I thought so little of that story when I saw it in the paper, that I did not remember it.—A. Yes, but my State papers will have that story about me all over the State.

Q. You do not carry a gun when you go traveling around in Christian countries, do you?—A. No, sir; there is $1,000 fine and a year in jail for it in my State.

Q. That was simply a reporter who did not have the love of truth in his heart or the fear of the Lord before his mind, I suppose?—

A. A fellow that wanted to make up a good, catchy story, and get some money out for it.

Q. Do you remember seeing any reporter?—A. I believe there were one or two reporters on the road asked for an interview, and we said we had no statement to make.

Q. You did not give him any statement at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any idea who this man was?—A. No, sir; I do not know

Q. Well, we have only good reporters here, so you need not be worried.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Might not some passenger have told a newspaper man that story?—A. That is quite probable.

Senator WARNER. I was not going to ask any questions about that newspaper story, but I am very glad Mr. Cowen has made the statement.

TESTIMONY OF BERNARD L. KOWALSKI.

BERNARD L. KOWALSKI, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Give your name in full?—A. Bernard Louis Kowalski.

Q. What is your age?—A. I am 16 years of age.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Brownsville, Cameron County, Tex.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. All my life.

Q. Is your father in business there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is the district clerk of Cameron County, and he is in the grain business—broker and grain business.

Q. And you have lived there all your life in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Cowen was living on the 13th of last August, the night that the shooting up occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there that night?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. Just state what was the occasion of your being there.—A. Well, sir, I was attending that children's party that they had there.

Q. There were a large number of children there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Ranging from what ages?—A. From 6 to 16, I believe.

Q. Up to your age?—A. Yes, sir; up to my age.

Q. One of the Cowen boys is about your age?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Harold Cowen?—A. Harold Cowen is about my age.

Q. That evening when you were there did you see any of the colored soldiers, and hear them make any remarks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If so, state what you saw and what you heard.—A. I was sitting on the window sill there, facing the alley.

Q. The window sill of the Cowen house?—A. The Cowen house, yes, sir; and the window is not far from the fence at all; it would be about 5 feet from the fence; and while I was there, there were some negroes there talking, and they were looking through into the cottage, and I heard one of them say, "They are having a fine time in there, but in about a half an hour they will not have such a nice time;" and just about then Gertrude Cowen, that is Harold Cowen's sister, and some other young lady there—the children of the younger crowd had already been to have their refreshments—then they came and called us older boys and girls to come in, right about that time.

Q. Do you know about how long that was before the party broke up?—A. A very short while before. Just as soon as we had our refreshments we left there.

Q. Do you know about what time it was that the party broke up?—A. I think it was about twenty minutes to 12, half past 11, or somewhere around there.

Q. And then where did you go when the party broke up?—
A. Well, I had my little brother along with me—he is 12 years old—and I took two girls to their homes—Dealva Smith and Nina Smith—took them to their home; that is about a block from Elizabeth street, just out of my way, and then I went right straight home.

Q. Went home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you when the firing commenced?—A. I was in my room at home.

Q. And where was your home?—A. My home was on Elizabeth street; it would be about nine squares from the post.

Q. Nine squares?—A. Nine blocks; yes, sir.

Q. So that you could not tell from that distance just where the firing was located?—A. Well, I could hear very well. I sleep upstairs in the front room, facing Elizabeth street, and my room has four windows in it—two to the front, one facing on the south, and one to the north—and the one facing to the south looks right straight down to the post, and I had all the windows open at the time. I was undressing then, when the shooting commenced, and I could tell from where the shooting was coming.

Q. Did that shooting seem to come uptown—that is, from the fort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during the shooting it continued coming up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you heard that shooting, did you make any remark to your mother, or to anyone, as to who it was doing the shooting?—
A. Yes, sir. When I heard the shots, this came up to my mind right away, what I had heard, and my mother was awake, and in the door I said, "Mamma, those are the negroes doing the shooting." I went to wake my father up. There are seven brothers of us, and I went to wake all the others.

Q. How many brothers?—A. Seven; but there were two younger than I am. My other brothers slept downstairs, and I went to wake them up, because the shooting seemed to be approaching nearer.

Q. Did you tell your mother that remark that you heard made by these colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these colored men that you heard make this remark dressed in soldiers' uniforms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was about what time, as nearly as you can remember—how long before the party broke up?—A. About half an hour, or twenty minutes before.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Then you heard this remark about 11 o'clock, I suppose?—
A. Yes, sir; a little before—I mean to say a little after 11.

Q. Did you tell anybody that you had heard such a remark, there at the party?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not tell Mrs. Cowen?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Cowen there at that time?—A. I don't remember who was there.

Q. Did you see Mr. Cowen there that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not go to look for him—to tell him that you had heard a negro soldier make that remark?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just what was that remark?—A. Well, they said: "They are having a fine time there, but in about a half an hour they will not have such a nice time."

Q. About an hour from now they will not have such a nice time?—
A. In a half an hour.

Q. In a half an hour they will not have such a nice time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That, you think, was about 11 o'clock?—A. Well, about 11 o'clock.

Q. About a half an hour before the party broke up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that hurry you in getting away?—A. No, sir; it did not.

Q. Where was this man who made that remark?—A. He was out in the alley. There were from four to six men.

Q. Four to six men were together. Did they have their guns?—
A. No, sir; I didn't notice any guns. I did not stay looking at them.

Q. How were they dressed?—A. Well, they were dressed in their uniforms.

Q. You could see their uniforms without any trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe their uniforms, please.—A. Well, they had those blue shirts and their belts, without cartridges.

Q. Did they have on any coats of any kind?—A. Yes, sir; some of them had coats and some had shirts only.

Q. Some had coats and some had only shirts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But they all had belts with cartridges in them?—A. No; I did not notice any cartridges in them.

Q. But they had belts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of belts were they?—A. Those regular belts that they wear in the parade.

Q. The same kind of belts they wear when they turn out on parade, you mean, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see those distinctly?—A. Well, not very distinctly, but as they started off, going towards the post, I could notice.

Q. Did they leave there as soon they made that remark?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they go?—A. They went towards the post. It is about 50 yards from the Cowen house to the post.

Q. You heard that remark distinctly, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how far away from you were they?—A. About 6 feet away from me.

Q. About 6 feet away from you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were talking in a loud tone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As though they wanted you to hear?—A. I could not say that.

Q. You were in plain view of them, weren't you?—A. Yes, sir; but I had my back to them.

Q. You had your back to them?—A. Yes, sir; when I heard the remark, I looked around toward the alley.

Q. When you heard that remark—had you seen them before you heard the remark?—A. No, sir.

Q. And were they walking by as they made the remark?—A. No; it sounded like some of them wanted to go on. Some said "Come on."

Q. When you looked around were they standing still or walking away?—A. They were standing still.

Q. They were standing still; just standing, looking in at the window?—A. Yes, sir. They were not right at the window. There is a fence about 4 feet from the window.

Q. And they were outside the fence, of course, in the alley, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no walk out in the alley, is there?—A. No, sir.

Q. It has no sidewalk?—A. No, sir.

Q. How wide is that alley?—A. It is a narrow alley; I could not say how wide it is; I have no idea at all.

Q. Were they in the middle of it, or right by the fence?—A. Right close to the fence.

Q. They were close up to the fence?—A. Not right up to the fence, but a little more close to the fence than in the middle.

Q. They were nearer to the fence than they were to the middle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they standing in a bunch?—A. No, sir; they were not.

Q. Was there a lamp out in the alley that shed light on them?—A. No, sir; just the light from the house. The house was all lit; all the windows and doors open.

Q. That is, the windows and doors of the Cowen house were open?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that lighted up the alley, did it, so you could see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard one of those men say what, now?—A. "They are having a nice time in there, but in about a half an hour they will not have such a nice time."

Q. And you did not ask them what they meant by that?—A. No, sir; it did not leave any impression on me at all, because right then they called me, called us, and they were playing the piano, and I just looked around, and we had to go in to have our refreshments.

Q. They called you to hear the piano played?—A. No, sir; to go and have our refreshments.

Q. This was before you had your refreshments, was it?—A. Before we had our refreshments; yes, sir.

Q. This was before you had your refreshments, and just at the moment that he made that remark you were called for refreshments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went right off to the refreshments, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not stop to talk with anybody on the subject at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. And never thought any more of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Until the firing commenced?—A. Until the firing commenced; yes, sir.

Q. Then you told your mother you had heard that kind of a remark?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever tell anybody else anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have never before testified as a witness, have you?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first tell somebody about this, beside your mother?—A. Well, my mother told my father about it. I did not care about being a witness, and I thought that my testimony would not be needed, they had so many better ones than mine. I thought they had better testimony than mine.

Q. You did not attach much importance to this remark, did you?—A. No.

Q. It was not said in an unkind way, was it, or a threatening way?—A. Well, the way I heard it, they said—that is all I heard—

"They are having a nice time in there, but in about a half an hour from now they will not have such a nice time."

Q. Had you been about the fort, any while the soldiers were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were in and out, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in there to see the baseball games, or to fish, or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir; I never went fishing, but I believe I saw a baseball game there once.

Q. While the colored troops were there, I mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not see them misbehaving at all towards you, did you, in any way?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. You had no trouble with them?—A. None at all.

Q. And you had no objection to their being there?—A. No, sir.

Q. No prejudice against them?—A. No, sir.

Q. No objection to their coming to Brownsville?—A. I never said anything about that.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. There was something said about the piano playing. Mrs. Cowen gives music lessons, doesn't she?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was this—a large party of young people?

Senator WARNER. The evidence is there were thirty or forty children there.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What kind of a party—dancing?—A. They were having some young folks playing, running around the house, and dancing. One of the young ladies was playing the piano.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Your father is the clerk of the court, is he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he here?—A. No, sir.

Q. He has the same name that you have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are junior, are you, is that it?—A. No, sir; I am Bernard Louis.

Q. Was anybody sitting with you in the window when you heard that remark?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were there all alone?—A. Yes, sir. Some of the children were sitting right in front of me.

Q. There was a great clattering and noise, and chattering of tongues, all the while, was there not, going on, with the party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were 36 children in that party, were there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this room you were in was full of children, was it not?—A. No, sir; it was not quite full. There were some out on the front porch.

Q. Some were out there, but they were scattered all around?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were all laughing and talking and having a good time?—A. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF R. B. CREAGER.

R. B. CREAGER, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Give your name in full.—A. Rentfro B. Creager.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty.

Q. What is your business?—A. A lawyer, a practicing attorney.

Q. At what place?—A. Brownsville, Tex.

Q. How long have you lived in Brownsville?—A. Brownsville has been my home for twenty-two or twenty-three years, though I was absent from there for several years during that period.

Q. Where were you then?—A. I was in college for five years.

Q. At what place?—A. At Austin, and at the State University, the Southwestern University.

Q. In that State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But Brownsville is your home?—A. Brownsville is my home and has been my home for twenty-odd years.

Q. Do you occupy any official position there?—A. I am United States commissioner there, and also deputy clerk of the United States circuit and of the United States district court for the southern district of Texas.

Q. How long have you been United States commissioner?—A. Five years.

Q. Appointed by the United States judge?—A. Yes, sir; the judge for the southern district of Texas, Judge Burns.

Q. Do you have a large acquaintance at Brownsville?—A. Oh, yes, sir. In a town of that size I think I know practically all of the inhabitants. There are about 7,500 people in the town, I suppose, or 8,000, and excepting the new arrivals, I think there is hardly a man, woman, or child in the town that I do not know.

Q. Do you speak the Spanish language?—A. I do; yes, sir.

Q. That becomes a necessity there, does it not, for a person doing business?—A. Yes, sir; almost so; especially those of us who are the older citizens there; all of us speak it, practically. I speak it practically as well as I do English.

Q. You knew at the time of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry coming there—the colored soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the change made from the white soldiers to the colored soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will get you to state if in all your acquaintance there, which you say is large, you ever heard any threats made by anyone against the colored soldiers if they came there?—A. Absolutely none, sir. I will modify that in this way, by saying, until after the shooting up of the town on the night of the 13th.

Q. You heard some remarks then?—A. Oh, yes; the talk was common after that.

Q. That was after the shooting up of the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am speaking of prior to that.—A. Prior to that; no, sir, not a word in the nature of a threat.

Q. Had colored soldiers been stationed there at any time when you were in Brownsville before this Twenty-fifth?—A. Yes, sir. The last time was in the latter part of 1900 or 1901, there was a company of negro soldiers there. I do not recall, I believe it was the Tenth Cavalry, I will not be sure as to that, however. It was under Captain Ayres. I knew him fairly well. From that time up until the arrival of this battalion of the Twenty-fifth we had white soldiers. That is, from the departure of this company or troop under Captain Ayres, we had white soldiers.

Q. I assume that you have heard of what we are pleased to call here the Tate-Newton incident?—A. I am quite familiar with it; yes, sir.

Q. When you say you are quite familiar with it, what do you mean by that?—A. I mean this, that the incident attracted a good deal of talk and attention at the time, and Mr. Tate came to me with reference to the matter shortly after the occurrence, asking my assistance, stating to me that charges, I believe, had been preferred against him with the collector of customs.

Q. Colonel Vann?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Vann, and stating his side of the difficulty to me, and asking my advice in general as to what he should do under the circumstances. Then of course I heard it from many other people also.

Q. And you knew about the Evans incident?—A. In the same way. Mr. Evans also came to me, requesting that I go to Major Penrose with reference to the matter.

Q. Did you go to see Major Penrose with reference to that matter?—A. I did.

Q. When was that?—A. That was the morning of the 13th.

Q. And the shooting was on the night of the 13th?—A. The night of the 13th.

Q. You were around the city all the day of the 13th?—A. Yes, sir; I came up from Point Isabel in the morning. I had my family at Point Isabel, on the Gulf coast, 20 miles from Brownsville.

Q. That is a kind of summer resort?—A. A summer resort; and I make it a practice to come up each morning on the early morning train, and return at night.

Q. You were not at Brownsville on the night of the shooting, then?—A. No, sir; I was at Point Isabel that night, and learned of the shooting at about 8 o'clock the next morning, on my arrival at Brownsville.

Q. Now, Mr. Creager, in your own way, just state what you saw and heard generally then of the shooting there, and what you did.—A. My first information of the shooting came to me from a Mexican hack driver. I was accustomed to drive in from the station to my office, passing by the post-office to get my mail each morning, on reaching town, and this morning, on getting into my hack, the driver, in a rather excited manner, began at once to tell me of the occurrence of the night before, saying that the negroes had broken out of the post and had, he told me, killed three men. He was still, and a good many others were, under the impression, I found, up until 9 or 10 o'clock, that more people had been killed than really were killed. As a matter of fact, as you well know, only one man was killed and one wounded; but he informed me, I believe—my recollection now is—that three had been killed, and that several hundred shots had been fired into houses and hotels, and so forth, and so on. On getting uptown, I found the streets full of people and a good deal of excitement prevailing. At the post-office there were probably thirty or forty people congregated, discussing the matter, and I then got their version of it and discovered shortly afterwards the true facts, or what I have since learned were the true facts, approximately.

Q. Right there, at the time, was there any difference of opinion as to who it was, as to what body of men, not individuals, but as to the body of men who had done the shooting up of the town?—A. Absolutely none. There was no more doubt in the minds of the people of Brownsville then as to who did the shooting than there is now. They knew who did the shooting.

Q. Now just go on from there.—A. After discussing the matter possibly with fifteen or twenty people I finally reached my office. Of course, this delayed me considerably. On reaching my office, I had barely walked in when my telephone rang, and some one, speaking from the quartermaster's office in Fort Brown, requested me on behalf and in the name of the major to come up to see him at once.

Q. That is, Major Penrose?—A. Major Penrose, not saying what for; but, of course, I could surmise. I at once went down, took a hack, and went up to the post, and I found sentries on duty about every 12 or 15 feet along the wall. You know full well the situation of the wall there. I was at first refused admittance, the sentry telling me that they had orders to admit no one. Well, I asked him to call the officer, the white officer in command, and one of the lieutenants stepped out, I don't remember who it was, and I did not know him at the time, but I told him who I was, stated to him that I had been sent for by Major Penrose, and he at once ordered that I be admitted. I drove to the administration building, so called, and had possibly an hour's talk with Major Penrose—I don't remember how long it lasted. Do you wish me to go into this conversation with Major Penrose?

Q. Well, if it was about this shooting up of the town?—A. Oh, yes; entirely. He stated to me first that he had sent for me, as a lawyer and as a Federal official, to ask my assistance with reference to this trouble—this shooting—and with reference to ferreting out the guilty parties; and from that time on, of course, our conversation dealt entirely with the facts of the shooting, as we knew them.

Q. Without attempting to go into the entire details, in that conversation was there any doubt expressed by Major Penrose of the fact that some of his men had done the shooting?—A. In that conversation, yes, sir; in this way—well, he conveyed the impression to me, by his manner and the expressions he would use, that he hated to believe the facts, and he would use this expression, "If my men did this shooting, no punishment would be too severe," or words to that effect, and on two or three occasions using the expression, "If my men did this shooting," or "did this thing;" but toward the latter part of our conversation, especially after Mayor Combe brought in some shells that he had picked up on the streets and showed them to him, he ceased to speak in that way, and then it became simply a discussion as to the best means of getting at the guilty parties in the command. He recognized, in words and in his manner and in every other way, before Mayor Combe and myself left his office that morning, that his troopers had done the shooting.

Q. Before Mayor Combe brought those shells, did Major Penrose say anything to you about having seen shells that Captain Macklin had picked up at the corner or mouth of the alley and the garrison road, between Elizabeth and Washington streets?—A. No, sir; if he did, I do not recall it, and I think I would remember it. I do not recall his mentioning any shells being picked up by any of his officers. I will say with reference to that, I had heard one of the policemen say that he had seen one of the white officers picking up what he supposed to be shells very early in the morning, at about daylight.

Q. But Major Penrose did not mention that, as far as you remember?—A. As far as I remember, he did not; and I think I am safe in saying he did not—at least I do not recall it at all. While we were talking, and I had been there possibly fifteen minutes to half an hour, Mayor Combe came in and brought with him these shells, and placed two or three of them on Major Penrose's desk. Major Penrose was sitting at his desk and I opposite him, and Mayor Combe walked up and placed the shells on the desk in front of him, and told him, "Well, these are some out of many that were picked up," "that I picked up," or "that were picked up on the streets this morning;" and Major Penrose made a remark to the effect that that was conclusive, or seemed conclusive, or that there could not be any further question—words to that effect; and from that time on there was absolutely no doubt expressed by him as to his men having been guilty.

Q. Did you see Major Penrose after that, at other times?—A. I think not, sir; not for any extended conversation.

Q. Did you see any of those shells that were picked up?—A. I saw thirty-odd of them. I went up to look at them. I hunted up the chief of police first to get them from him. I wanted to be sure that they would be in a safe place. He told me that they had been turned over to the mayor, and were then up in the market hall, or the city hall above the market. I decided I would go down and look at them just to satisfy my own mind as to what they had found, and I found in the possession of one of the policemen up there, in the city hall, a bandoleer—you know what it is, of course, a species of shoulder belt—

Q. Yes.—A. And about thirty-odd shells. There were two or three loaded shells among them.

Q. Are you somewhat familiar with firearms?—A. Well, fairly so, as far as a citizen usually knows about such things; yes, sir. I have hunted a good deal, and own a number of rifles myself, though I am not an expert, by any means.

Q. Did you know what kind of shells they were, those empty shells?—A. They were Springfield army shells. There can not be any question about that. I was entirely satisfied in my own mind at the time that they were, and I still am. I had seen those shells and had used them myself on the target ranges.

Q. At what target range did you use them?—A. At Point Isabel. They had recently established a new range at Point Isabel, or near Point Isabel.

Q. That is twenty-odd miles from Brownsville?—A. Twenty-odd miles from Brownsville, and during the summers, as I stated at the opening, I was stopping at the Point, and frequently stayed over a day or two at a time when business was not pressing in town, and I did, on a number of occasions, go out to the range with friends of mine among the officers.

Q. That is, when the Twenty-sixth was there?—A. When the Twenty-sixth was there. They had the same gun, however; the new Springfield army rifle.

Q. And this ball cartridge which you saw there—this complete ammunition which had not been discharged—was that the Springfield cartridge?—A. Yes, sir; it was the same as the empty shell, except that it was loaded.

Q. Did you notice those shells, as to whether or not, in your judgment, they had been recently fired?—A. Well, I made no careful investigation, but they certainly had not been fired any length of time. They were new shells. I had them in my hands, I suppose every one of them, took them up, looked at them, and replaced them in a paper sack, or bag of some kind, in which they were, together with the bandolcer; took them all out, just looking into them, looked into the pockets of the bandolcer, and then replaced them all in the sack. They impressed me as being shells freshly fired. They were not corroded in any way.

Q. This was after you had met with Major Penrose that you examined these shells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The shooting up of the town, of course, created a very considerable excitement?—A. Yes, sir; a very great deal of excitement. The town people were in fear of still further outrages.

Q. How did that fear manifest itself among the citizens, particularly the women of Brownsville?—A. Well, the women remained in their homes. You would not see a woman on the streets at all for several days, or very rarely, and a number of the families left town.

Q. To go where?—A. Some of them went to Matamoros, and my recollection is that some went to Point Isabel; some who were not there already.

Q. After the colored soldiers left, did they then return, and was there the same condition as before, as to people being on the streets, the women and children?—A. Oh; yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Creager, are you reasonably acquainted, and do you know something of the character of the Mexican portion of your people?—A. Yes, sir; I think I am pretty familiar with them.

Q. I will get you to state whether or not it is a fact that the Mexicans had no prejudice whatever against the colored people.—A. They have absolutely none. The Mexican receives the negro on terms of equality. In Mexico itself the negro is received in the higher circles of society. Along the border the negro is received as an equal by the Mexicans, and so far as any prejudice on their part is concerned, there is certainly absolutely none.

Q. Were you present at the meeting that was called on the 14th, with reference to this shooting—a meeting of the leading citizens?—A. I was; yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend the investigation?—A. No, sir; I was, as I told you, spending my nights at Point Isabel, and my days were pretty well filled with necessary office work. Of course I took a great deal of interest in the matter, and assisted in every way I could, but as to attending any formal investigations, I did not.

Q. In all of the time since this investigation began, until now, has anything come to your knowledge or been called to your attention, which leads you to believe that anyone except the members of that troop did the shooting up of the town?—A. There has not, Senator.

Q. No circumstance whatever?—A. Absolutely none.

Q. If any such circumstance had come to your attention, you would have no objection to telling it, and running the facts down, would you?—A. I most assuredly would not; and in that connection, Senator, I want to say this, that in all human reason it would be absolutely impossible for a conspiracy to have existed in that town, of the magnitude that such a conspiracy would of necessity have been, without its having come to my knowledge. I have business relations with all classes of the people there, from the lowest Mexicans to the best of our people. Many of them are in my office daily. They consult me as a lawyer about the most intimate matters, and it is absolutely impossible that any conspiracy should have existed there without its having come to my knowledge. I say impossible, in all human reason, in a town of that size.

Q. Were you in Brownsville when Lieutenant Leckie came there to make some investigations with reference to this shooting?—A. Yes, sir. My recollection is he came there twice. I saw him there on two different occasions.

Q. Did you go with him on any of those investigations?—A. No, sir; I met him on the street casually, and he told me generally that he was down there, or was sent down there, to make certain investigations, and I learned that he was taking certain measurements in the houses, or some of the houses that had been fired into, and we had some conversation about the character of rifle used by the Mexican soldiers—the Mexican army.

Q. What was that conversation?—A. Well, substantially this: It occurred at night. I met him on the sidewalk. This was for the second time. The substance of his statement was that he had intended going to Matamoros to examine the rifles that the Mexican army were using, but that he had not had time that day, and was going to leave the next morning, and consequently would not have time. He asked me if I knew anything about them, and I told him very little. He asked me if I knew the number of lands in the rifle, and I told him no, I was not positive; and he then stated, "Well, it will not be —;" he named the rifle. I really have forgotten what rifle it is that they are armed with, but he named it, and said, "I understand that this rifle will not chamber our Springfield ammunition, anyway," giving that as a reason for it not being necessary to push that investigation further; that is, that the shell would not fit into the chamber; that the Springfield shell would not go into the chamber and allow a closing of the breach mechanism of the Mexican army rifle.

(At 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the committee adjourned until Thursday, June 6, 1907, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Thursday, June 6, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, Pettus, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF R. B. CREAGER—Continued.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Mr. Creager, please take up each of these bullets which are before you, if you will, keeping them separate so that they will not get mixed, and state what you know about each package and its contents. Please read the indorsement on each envelope as you take up the bullet.—A. This envelope, No. 1, has the following indorsement upon it:

This envelope contains rifle ball (marked "M" for identification) extracted from top of old well in F. Yturria's yard. This ball passed through kitchen. (See affidavit of Teofilo Martinez of date January 8, 1907.)

That is my signature. This other envelope I know nothing about. That is indorsed: "Department of Commerce and Labor, Bureau of Standards."

Q. That is the inside envelope?—A. Yes, sir. The bullet is one that I marked myself, and this envelope the indorsement on which I first read is the one that I indorsed.

Q. Please take up the next envelope.—A. This second envelope, marked "No. 2," is indorsed as follows:

This envelope contains rifle ball (marked "XX" for identification) extracted from roof of Wreford's office, on corner Elizabeth and Thirteenth streets, by Cecillo Lingoria and José Garcia Afiorga. (See affidavits of Cecillo Lingoria of date January 8, 1907.) R. B. Creager, United States commissioner.

Q. That was signed by you?—A. That was signed by me; yes, sir; and this is the bullet.

Q. That you marked?—A. That I marked; yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you have any peculiar mark with each of them?—A. I marked each separately. You will notice in regard to each of the bullets, with the exception of one, that they are fractured and broken in some peculiar way. Of course it is conceivable that another bullet might have been broken in the same way and similarly marked, but I am positive as to this.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Where did you mark it?—A. You will see it is marked "XX" on the lead, where the steel jacket was broken away.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Please take up the next envelope.—A. This next envelope is indorsed as follows:

This envelope contains rifle bullet (marked with—

A portion of that word has been torn away, but I know what it is. It is the word "deep"—

With deep "X" across base and "T" near point, for identification), extracted from beam in his residence by Dr. C. H.—

That word was "Thorn." That has been torn off also.

Extracted from beam in his residence by Dr. C. H. Thorn. (See affidavits of C. H. Thorn and W. B. Linton, of date January 7, 1907.) R. B. Creager, United States commissioner.

That is my signature. That has a "T" filed upon the steel jacket, and a deep "X" cross mark on the base where the lead shows.

Q. That is the bullet that you marked?—A. Yes, sir.

Envelope No. 4 is indorsed as follows:

This envelope contains "jacket" of rifle ball as extracted by Martin Hanson from wall of Miller Hotel. (See affidavits of Martin Hanson and W. B. Linton, of date January 7, 1907.) R. B. Creager, United States commissioner.

That is also my signature. That is simply the steel or nickel jacket. The lead was entirely emptied out. It was taken from the brick wall. I had it attached to this card, which reads, "Martin Hanson, contractor and builder, Brownsville, Texas," but it has been detached from it.

Q. The steel is gone of that bullet?—A. No, sir; the lead is gone. We were unable to find the lead. That is, Mr. Hanson was unable to find the lead. That was in the interior of a brick wall. The original affidavits should be here somewhere. I sent them.

Senator WARNER. I am not reading these affidavits, but I am just identifying them.

Senator FORAKER. Yes; I understand. I assumed that you just wanted to identify them.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Proceed with the next envelope.—A. This next envelope is indorsed as follows:

This envelope contains rifle ball marked "L. C." for identification, extracted from brick wall on Fourteenth street by L. R. Cowen. (See affidavits of L. R. Cowen and W. B. Linton, of date January 7, 1907.) R. B. Creager, United States commissioner.

That is my signature. A portion of that bullet appears to be gone. It has evidently struck some hard substance and the lead has been emptied out of the steel jacket, and then doubled back upon the steel jacket, and the steel jacket itself has been twisted and doubled back upon itself. It contains, still, on the forward end of it, a little mortar, or pieces of brick, or something of that character.

No. 6 envelope is indorsed as follows:

This package contains two sections of wall of residence of L. R. Cowen, the smaller containing rifle ball. (See affidavits of L. R. Cowen and Martha Hanson, of date January 7, 1907.) R. B. Creager, United States commissioner.

That also is my signature. Now, this bullet was not marked by me for identification, because it was embedded in the wood at the time I sent it, and I desired to send it in the exact condition in which it was found. This wood is a portion of a beam out of Cowen's house, which was sawn therefrom by Hanson, the city engineer, and a carpenter by trade, and given to me in that condition—that is, the bullet embedded in this wood. It has since been extracted from the wood. The bullet was in this smaller piece of wood.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Did that piece belong on here [indicating with pieces of wood]?—A. Yes, sir. You will notice that I marked them each with an "X" on the two faces to show the two sides that went together. I think that is the position in which it was [putting pieces of wood together]. The bullet evidently entered there, striking flat, or almost flat, having previously struck some substance or article that caused it to turn in its flight. It penetrated it in about that position and was located in this block of wood. This space here was filled in with wood [indicating]. That portion is gone. Now, to the best of my recollection, from as much as I could see of the bullet—I could see a portion of the side only—that is the bullet. Of course I can not be positive as to that.

Q. But you are positive that a steel-jacketed bullet was in this wood?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is, that small piece of wood; and it entered the larger piece of wood which you have on the side of which "M. Hanson" is written?—A. This; yes, sir [indicating].

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. What is this cotton lint which is sticking on here?—A. I had it packed in a box with cotton to prevent jarring and breaking when I shipped it on.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I would like for you to state what kind of wood it is.—A. I judge it to be pine wood. I am not an expert on the subject, but it looks to be pine wood.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Where was that piece of wood in the house?—A. You will understand, Senator, that I did not see this taken from the house, but Mr. Hanson's affidavit will explain just what portion of the house it was taken from. As a matter of fact, it was taken from one of the upper beams, high up in the room, after having passed through a number of walls and partitions.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Is that all you have there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you see other shells—that is, shells that were picked up there—exploded shells?—A. Yes, sir; I saw possibly thirty—from thirty to thirty-five.

Senator WARNER. Take the witness.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The first one of those bullets that you identified just now I understood you to say was taken from the wall in front of Mr. Yturria's residence?—A. Yes, sir; from the wooden top of an old cistern or well.

Q. Were there two bullets taken from that well?—A. I do not know, Senator; I could not tell you that.

Q. We had a bullet before us two days ago—one of the three first sent to the Senate by the President—which, as I remember, was recognized and identified as having been taken out of the wooden frame of the well of the Yturria residence.—A. Yes, sir; I do not know whether there was more than one or not. I could not tell you.

Q. You did not yourself take any of these bullets out?—A. No, sir.

Q. These bullets were all gathered up by citizens and brought to you, and they made affidavits before you telling where they got them, and so forth?—A. With the exception of the one that was taken from the Thorn house. I was present and saw that extracted myself. None of the others, however. I saw them in the operations of getting them out—for instance, breaking away bricks in a brick wall to get at the one in the King Building—but I did not see them actually extract any bullet except the one from the Thorn house.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM CROZIER, CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, U. S. ARMY.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Scott.)

By Senator LODGE:

Q. General Crozier, there has been some conflicting testimony before this committee as to the length of time necessary to clean an army rifle after firing so that it will pass an inspection directed to discovering whether it has been recently fired. I should like to ask you if you have made any tests to determine that question.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is suggested, General, by a member of the committee that before you go on I should ask you what position you now hold. Of course we know.—A. I am Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army; and I have made or caused to be made some such experiments, in my presence, at the request of the Secretary of War and of members of this committee.

Q. Will you kindly state what tests you made, and how they were made?—A. I first had four rifles, which were clean, fired four rounds each over at Fort Myer, and sent immediately in to my office, which they reached within a few hours of the time when they were fired. These rifles I had cleaned in different ways, one of them by using a rag and the brass cleaning rod and the sal soda solution which is prescribed, one by using a rag wet with water alone, and one by using dry rags alone. One of them was left and not cleaned until the next day. In each case the cleaning was done in less than three minutes, except in the case of the one which was left until the next day. That then required very much greater time for cleaning it.

Q. That was the one where twenty-four hours elapsed?—A. Yes, sir; after twenty-four hours elapsed it required from fifteen minutes to half an hour to clean it, with a great deal of rubbing and scrubbing.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. The experiments were on the new Springfield rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The one now in use?—A. Yes, sir. The second time, I had these rifles cleaned by using the thong and the brush which is furnished for the purpose.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Before you pass from that, let me understand. I understood you had five rifles, or four?—A. Four rifles. They were fired five rounds each.

Q. They were fired five rounds each, four rifles; and in the second experiment you had the same number of rifles?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And the same number of shots were fired?—A. They had been fired the same number of rounds, five rounds each, and they were sent to my office on the same day, so that they reached it a few hours after the firing. These I had cleaned by using the thong and brush, and afterwards by pulling a rag through by the thong instead of forcing it through by the cleaning rod, as I had done before. The brush pulled through easily, as of course it always does. There was some trouble in pulling through the rag. It stuck, and in one case we broke one of the thongs. These thongs, by the way, are not strong enough, and will be made stronger hereafter. In the case where we cleaned the rifle by pulling the brush through and pulling the rag through afterwards, and the thong did not break, the whole thing occupied three minutes. In the case where the rag stuck and the thong broke, the rag had to be afterwards pushed out by the cleaning rod, and the time required was about double. The third case was the one in which two rifles were fired at Fort Myer, also five rounds each, and were brought to my office immediately afterwards. Of these rifles I had one cleaned in the darkness, in a room where the light was absolutely excluded, and it was cleaned by drawing the brush which is provided for the purpose, by means of the thong, five times through the barrel, and that is all that was done, and that occupied just one minute.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Was that cleaned sufficiently to pass inspection?—A. Well, it is here, sir; the rifle is here.

Q. Yes; but I am not an inspector of rifles, and you are. Could not you tell me?—A. I will state this about it: In looking through the rifle it is difficult to see whether it has been fired, but I am of the opinion, without having tried it with this particular rifle, that if we were to draw a clean rag through the rifle we would get a little mark on it. It would not come through absolutely clean; but, as far as the appearance of it is concerned, I would not be able to say from looking through it that it had been fired.

By Senator LONGE:

Q. Who cleaned these rifles in your presence?—A. Captain Rice, of the Ordnance Department.

Q. He cleaned them all?—A. He cleaned these last ones I am speaking of, and an employee in my office, a man by the name of Palmer, cleaned the first ones.

Q. Was he a peculiarly expert man?—A. No, sir; he was not. He was not expert at all in this kind of work, except that he was more or less familiar with handling the arm; but he had not cleaned very many.

Q. And he was not as expert as the average soldier?—A. I should say not; no, sir.

Q. You brought those two rifles here?—A. I brought those two rifles, one of which has been cleaned by drawing the brush through it with the thong five times and the other has not been cleaned at all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. It has not been cleaned at all?—A. It has not been cleaned at all; no, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. That, of course, is a very hasty method of cleaning?—A. Yes, sir; that is the method that is followed by the soldiers usually on the firing range. They draw the brush through while the deposit in the barrel is still fresh, because it is more easily cleaned in that condition, and when a gun has been left twenty-four hours or more it is much more difficult to clean.

Q. But the maximum time, where the thong brush was used, was six minutes?—A. Yes, sir; that was where the cleaning was done on the same day.

Q. On the same day—that is, within five or six hours of the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Fort Myer is how far from Washington?—A. I would say about 2½ miles from the War Department.

Q. They were fired there and brought over to that Department?—A. Yes, sir. I have no record of the exact time at which they were fired, but I was informed by the commanding officer that they had been fired the same morning they were sent over.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. The dirt in the barrel does not get very hard much under twelve or fifteen hours, does it?—A. No, sir, it does not; but in addition to the hardening of the residue, the difficulty of cleaning after a few hours results from the fact that there is a slight action of the residue on the metal, and the process becomes more like cleaning a rusty piece of metal.

Q. Now, General, I want to ask you a few questions in regard to the bullets which were brought from Brownsville and subjected to examination under the direction of the War Department. Do you know what led the Department to enter upon that microscopic investigation?—A. Yes, sir. The matter originated with a letter from a man up in Maine. I have the letter with me, if the committee would care to hear it read. Shall I read it?

Q. Yes, if you please.—A. It is addressed to the President, and the heading of the letter has upon it, "Ora W. Knight, M. S." and "State Assayer. Analytical and Consulting Chemist and Microscopist. Member American Chemical Society." I mention this because the man was unknown to me; I did not know what his standing was.

Q. That is the letter head that you are reading?—A. Yes, sir; that is on his letter head. I have not read everything that is on the letter head. This letter reads:

BANGOR, ME., January 14, 1907.

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Though I have carefully followed the accounts of the affair at Brownsville, Tex., in the daily papers, it was not until a certain article in the Boston Journal of to-day caught my eye that the fact was fully brought home to me that there was in the possession of the authorities most valuable evidence which would show just who the guilty parties were and that the importance of this evidence was not realized or understood by those who had it in their possession. This then is my excuse, and I also consider it my duty to write you. The article in to-day's Boston Journal stated that among certain articles of evidence secured by the Assistant Attorney-General during his recent visit to Brownsville were a number of discharged cartridges which were of a type which is was only possible to use in a Springfield rifle. These cartridges, however, are more valuable as evidence than seems to be realized. To show you just what value as evidence these may prove to have, I trust I may be pardoned for going back some time to refer to a murder case tried in the courts of Maine. This was the case of State of Maine v. Terrio, which was tried at the Somerset County supreme judicial court, September term, 1901.

At this trial it was conclusively brought out that the firing pins of certain rifles which figured in the case had individual characteristics, and that these characteristics were imparted to the primers of all cartridges struck by them in precisely the same way that a steel die makes its corresponding obverse imprint on any metal surface it is hammered into. To be brief, the attorneys for the defense did not take any stock in this theory which tended to show that a certain shell found near the body of the murdered man was fired in the defendant's rifle and not in any other rifle owned in that region. I was then connected with the University of Maine and took absolutely no stock in this theory, and was employed by the defense to investigate and if possible disprove the theory. After securing a very great number (over a hundred) of firing pins and inserting these in rifles and firing shells with them I became fully convinced that each firing pin had on its surface irregularities, visible under the microscope, and that these irregularities were plainly impressed on the primers; or, in other words, a given exploded shell could be viewed under the microscope, and the firing pin that exploded it could be then picked from all the others at hand. In other words, after a careful investigation, I was compelled to fully accept the theory which at first I took no stock in and which I was practically hired to disprove if possible. My testimony in court fully substantiates that of the prosecution regarding this theory. In other court cases in Maine since then shells from the scene of the crime, together with rifles of various persons, have been brought and the rifle containing the firing pin that fired the shot readily detected.

Prof. Frank N. Whittier, of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., will most certainly strongly support my assertion that given an exploded shell and several rifles, including the one that fired the shell, and this rifle can be picked out. George W. Gower, esq., Skowhegan, Me., formerly county attorney of Somerset County, will vouch for the truth of this theory.

The point on which hinges the individuality of the firing pins of various rifles is this: The ends of these firing pins are "turned" and irregularities, pits, and "tearings" occur in the knoblike end of the metal. The exact size, shape, and relative distance of these from each other is such that it would be absolutely against the laws of chance to find two firing pins with exactly the same number of pits and irregularities of the same size and shape and the same distance apart. These irregularities are communicated to the shells fired by each firing pin and the soft copper primer is exactly adapted to take a perfect impression of the end of the firing pin, the downward stroke of the firing pin and the back kick of the explosion forcing the metal of the primer into the firing pin so as to leave on the primer a very clear impression of the firing pin.

Of course you see the bearing of this on the Brownsville affair. It seems reasonable to me to suppose that every individual soldier always had assigned to him a certain gun for which he was responsible, and the Army records should show the number of the gun issued to each soldier. Now, if every gun which was at Fort Brown at the time of the affair there is secured and its firing pin removed (of course each firing pin being carefully marked in some way to indicate the rifle to which it belongs) then a careful microscopical examination of the firing pins and comparison with the indented primer of each shell will show which, if any, of the firing pins exploded each shell, and knowing the firing pin and its rifle will lead to identification of its owner.

Prof. N. E. Whittier, of Bowdoin College, and myself put many hours of study on this question, on opposite sides in the legal case previously referred to, and I feel assured that he will verify any claims I may have made. Either he or I can prove conclusively by actual test that this rule of firing pin marking the primer can be depended upon. If this information leads to measures being taken which will identify any of the participants in the outrage I shall be satisfied.

Very respectfully,

ORA W. KNIGHT,
State Assayer.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Before going further, I would like to return for a moment to the cleaning of the guns, and ask you what, if anything, you did towards the cleaning of the magazines of the rifles, and whether they were necessary to be cleaned; if there was a powder in them?—

A. I did nothing towards cleaning the magazine or the chambers.

Q. Why?—A. Because the effect of the firing would not show back there. The effect of the firing would be apparent only in the bore of the gun.

Q. You mean, then, that it is not necessary to clean the magazine of the rifle after shooting it five times?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or the chamber?—A. No, sir.

Q. It never becomes dirty?—A. Not from the firing. The cartridge case forms a perfect gas check, and nothing gets back to the chamber or the magazine—the breech mechanism.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Then, on that same line, why do they open that chamber when inspecting arms?—A. Because the chamber could become dirty from other reasons. It may have dust in it, or too much grease from improper oiling, or the bright parts may become rusty, or it may be otherwise in improper condition.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. That letter that you just read then, General, was the cause that led to these elaborate microscopic investigations at Springfield?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those have already been testified to here, and are in the report of our hearings, so that I shall not go into those now; but I desire to ask you a few questions of more general nature in regard to those bullets which were brought from Brownsville and submitted to the War Department for examination, and which you have examined yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could those bullets have been fired from what is known as a Mexican Mauser?—A. No, sir; they could not. I will say in connection with that answer that the examinations of these bullets were mainly made by my direction, and I can only testify as to reports made to me which I received, in connection with a cursory examination of the bullets in my hands, and without instruments, but from the reports made, which are available, and from the examinations made by me, these bullets could not have been fired from a Mexican Mauser, for the reason that they are now larger than the bore of that gun. Therefore they could not have been through it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Which set of the bullets are you testifying about? We have one set of three and one set of six.—A. This refers to all of those bullets which came into my possession from the committee, through the War Department. Of course, I have no way of tracing them.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Could they have been fired in a Remington or a Winchester?—

A. They could not, for the reason that the marks upon them show four grooves, from the corresponding number of lands, while the Remington and Winchester have, the one seven and the other six grooves.

Q. Could they have been fired in the Spanish Mauser?—A. That determination is more difficult, but the conclusion, which has come from an examination of them, is that they could not. Their size is not exactly right, although it is much nearer than in the case of the Mexican Mauser. Also, this slight difference in the size of the bore causes a difference in the length of the land marks made upon bullets fired through each. The larger bore makes a shorter land mark, that is, measured on the length of the bullet. The smaller bore makes the longer land mark; and there is a difference observable between the length of the land mark on these bullets and the length of the land mark on bullets fired through the 7.65 millimeter Mauser, which is, I understand, the one you are referring to.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Bullets fired through what?—A. The 7.65-millimeter Mauser, the Mexican Mauser being a 7-millimeter rifle.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Now, they could have been fired in the Krag rifle?—A. Yes, sir; we are unable to tell from the bullets themselves whether they have been fired in the Krag rifle or a United States rifle of the model of 1903.

Q. Have you seen the shells that were picked up in the streets of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If these bullets from Brownsville were fired from the shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville, could they have been fired from the Krag rifle?—A. They could not. The shells are too large.

Q. In what way are they too large?—A. They are too long, and also too large in diameter, and they would not go into the Krag chamber.

Q. Then, those bullets brought from Brownsville and those shells brought from Brownsville in combination could only have been fired from the Springfield new model rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Taking into consideration the reports that were made to you, and your own examination of the bullets and the shells sent to you by the committee, in your opinion as an expert, from what sort of a gun were they fired, and what gun?—A. As an expert, I would have to assume data. If they are taken together, the cartridges and bullets, and considered in connection with each other, they could have been fired from no gun known to me except the model of 1903 Springfield rifle.

Q. In your opinion, from what gun were they fired, taking that into consideration and admitting those to be the facts?—A. Admitting those to be the facts, they were fired from that gun.

Q. Is that your opinion, admitting those to be the facts?—A. Admitting those to be the facts; yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is to say, these bullets are apparently just such bullets as you would expect to find fired out of Springfield cartridges?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And assuming that these empty shells were the shells that held the bullets, then you would assume that it was a Springfield rifle from which they were fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But, aside from that premise, they might have been fired out of either a Krag or a Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They might have been fired out of a Krag carbine, also?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is to say, the Krag carbine and the Krag rifle and the Springfield rifle all have the same number of lands?—A. Yes, sir; and the bullet is the same for each.

Q. Each has four lands, and the bullet is the same?—A. Yes, sir; and the bullet is the same.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You are only speaking as to the bullet now?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Certainly, you are speaking only as to the bullet. That is to say, the bullets used in all these guns are steel-jacketed bullets, with lead fillings?—A. That is true, except that the material of the jacket is copper and nickel, and not steel.

Q. It is cupro-nickel, copper and nickel combined?—A. Yes, sir; copper and nickel.

Q. We have fallen into the use of the other term, but we mean cupro-nickel, all the time.—A. We have in the past used some steel jackets which consisted of a sheet of cupro-nickel rolled on a sheet of steel, and that perhaps gave rise to that impression.

By Senator LONGE:

Q. Did I understand you to say, General, that the jacket which is ordinarily called the steel jacket is made of an alloy of nickel and copper?—A. Yes, sir; of an alloy of nickel and copper. But a number of years ago this jacket was made of a sheet which consisted of a sheet of steel on which was rolled a sheet of alloy of nickel and copper; so that both metals were in the jacket.

Q. Now it is only an alloy of copper and nickel?—A. Now it is only an alloy of copper and nickel; yes, sir.

Q. Are any other kinds of bullets used by the troops for any purpose, not steel jacketed?—A. Yes, sir; not jacketed at all, that is.

Q. Yes; not jacketed at all.—A. Yes; we issue some that are not jacketed at all, for special purposes. We have a gallery practice bullet which is not jacketed, and a guard cartridge.

Q. A guard cartridge?—A. Of which the bullet is not jacketed.

Q. That is, with a low charge of powder?—A. They are both used with a low charge of powder.

Q. The same cartridge?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Then you have some dummy cartridges?—A. With the dummy cartridge the bullet is the same, but there is no powder charge; and in order to very thoroughly distinguish that from a live cartridge, the cartridge case is corrugated, and there are holes bored in it besides.

Q. Did you send one of those to us as an exhibit?—A. I think I did; although it has been a long time since, and I could not be positive about it.

Q. The gallery practice cartridge and the guard cartridge each have a reduced number of grains of powder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A reduced charge of powder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how far the guard-cartridge bullet will carry?—A. Of course that will depend on the elevation at which it is fired. I do not remember what we call the range table for the different elevations.

Q. All that is set out correctly in this book issued by the War Department, entitled "No. 1923, Description and Rules for the Management of the U. S. Magazine Rifle, Model of 1903, Caliber .30?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All this is the result of careful examination and preparation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is issued officially for the use of the officers of the Army, and everybody that has occasion to handle the guns and ammunition?—A. Yes, sir. Will you kindly tell me the date of the one you have there?

Q. This is dated March 3, 1904.—A. Well, there has been no material change since then.

Q. It is practically the same?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this says that the charge of powder in the guard cartridge is 15 grains of powder as against 42 or 43, perhaps, in the regular ball ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, as I understand you to say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is no jacket of any kind on this guard cartridge bullet?—A. No, sir; there is none on the guard bullet.

Q. The intention of that is that it shall be used simply for garrison purposes?—A. Yes, sir; usually in guarding prisoners.

Q. In guarding prisoners, or in guarding a reservation such as that at Fort Brown?—A. The object is very apparent, that we do not care to have the bullets flying to long distances.

Q. The velocity of the bullet from the reduced-range cartridge is only 1,150 feet per second, while the velocity of the bullet from the regulation ball cartridge is over 2,000 feet per second?—A. Yes, sir; about 2,200 feet a second.

Q. That varies a little?—A. Yes, sir. We have been aiming to have it 2,200 feet.

Q. According to this pamphlet the guard cartridge is intended for a range of 100 yards, and has sufficient accuracy for a range of 150 or 200 yards. A range of 100 yards requires an elevation of the sights to 500 yards, and ranges of 150 and 200 yards require elevations of 600 and 700 yards, respectively. That is right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that to make one of these bullets used in the guard ammunition carry a distance of 100 yards, you would raise the sight elevation to 500 yards, and if you wanted it to go 150 or 200 yards, you would raise the sight to 600 or 700 yards, respectively?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is when you are sighting directly at the object.

Senator FORAKER. Yes; we understand that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. And that is the kind of ammunition it is intended that the troops shall have for use in the garrison?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Raising and lowering the elevation of the sights will make no difference in the distance the ball will carry, will it?—A. If you put your sights at a higher elevation, your gun will be pointed up in the air more, and of course the bullet will go farther.

Q. If it did not hit the target, it would go the same distance, whether the sight was lowered or raised?—A. It would bring up on the ground sooner.

Q. Suppose you just raised the gun up, whether the sight was raised or not, the bullet would go the same distance?—A. If you held it up at the same angle, it would go the same distance.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. It would make no difference in the point-blank range, would it?—A. That term is apt to be loosely used. There is no such thing as a point-blank range.

Q. I was using that term in the common acceptation.—A. The range for that is always selected. For instance, if you do not set the sight for the range of 100 yards, if you keep the sight down, that means that the bullet will rise above the level of your eye, between the muzzle of your gun and the target, and then will come down to it again at the end of the 100 yards.

Senator LODGE. That is what I understood it to mean.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Can you tell me how much lead there is in the filling of the ball cartridge?—A. I can not tell you; no, sir; exactly. The weight of the bullet is 220 grains. What proportion of that is lead and what is jacket I do not know.

Q. That is not stated in these regulations. We have had some trouble about it. Can you not take a bullet apart and have it weighed and give us that information?—A. Yes, sir; I could have it ascertained from the factory.

Q. I would like to know also whether that is pure lead.—A. It is not pure lead; no, sir.

Q. What is the composition?—A. It is an alloy of lead and antimony.

Q. What is the proportion of antimony?—A. As I remember, it is about 10 per cent antimony, but I would not be perfectly certain about that.

Q. About 1 to 10?—A. As I remember it.

Q. That is to say, the jacket is of cupro-nickel and the filling is a composition of lead and antimony?—A. Yes, sir. The proportions of the jacket are about 85 per cent copper and 15 per cent nickel, as I remember them.

Q. You will give us definite information on this point, will you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can not tell us then, either, what the steel jacket weights—the cupro-nickel jacket?—A. No, sir. I can tell you the thickness of it. It is two one-hundredths of an inch on the body of the bullet and three one-hundredths of an inch at the point.

Q. It is thicker at the point than on the body?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what is the thickness at the base?—A. The same as at the body. It does not entirely cover the base, but is folded in over it.

Q. It is just folded in over it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to a cartridge. That is a Springfield cartridge. That is split at the nose, so as to exhibit the thickness of the jacket.—A. Perhaps I had better be a little more accurate in my answer. Within a comparatively short time, I do not remember exactly the time, but perhaps a couple of years, the thickness of this jacket over the body has been changed from one and one-half hundredths to two hundredths.

Q. This is two hundredths, is it not, probably? I have not measured it. That is a cartridge of the present manufacture?—A. It seems to be about that. [After further examination of cartridge.] That is a cartridge manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal in December, 1905.

Q. It is the same, is it not, as the cartridge manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company?—A. In all essential particulars; the same size, shape, weight, and form.

Q. And the same cartridge is manufactured at another arsenal?—A. Not another arsenal, but two other manufacturing concerns manufacture it.

Q. Which two are they?—A. The Winchester Arms Company and the United States Cartridge Company. The Winchester Arms Company are at New Haven, and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company is at Bridgeport, and the United States Cartridge Company is at Lowell, Mass.

Q. I hand you a bullet, No. 1, of the exhibits that have been identified, one of the bullets found at Brownsville and brought here, and ask you to look at the base of that, and state whether that exhibits the thickness of the jacket.—A. (After examining bullet.) This shows the jacket folded over the base.

Q. At one side it is folded over. Is it folded over at the opposite side?—A. At the opposite side it is distorted, apparently by having passed through something, and the exact construction, the thickness of the jacket—

Q. You can not tell?—A. No, sir; I can not tell.

Q. Look at this bullet, Exhibit No. 2 of the Brownsville bullets, and see whether, looking at the base, you observe the thickness of the jacket.—A. The jacket is folded over in this case.

Q. You think it is folded over there also, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It appears to be much more than two-hundredths of an inch in thickness?—A. Yes, sir; but that is only the apparent thickness. That dimension arises from the jacket being folded over the base.

Q. I wanted to know whether that was the real or only an apparent thickness from being folded over?—A. Yes, sir; that is from being folded over.

Q. But the body of the jacket is two one-hundredths of an inch in thickness?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of the 220 grains would be jacket and what part would be lead?—A. I can not say that exactly, but certainly not over 5 per cent would be jacket.

Q. Not over 5 per cent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not almost equal in weight to the lead filling. General?—A. Oh, no, sir; the jacket is very much lighter than the filling.

Q. You examined all those nine bullets, did you, that were brought before us?—A. Casually only, in my hand; not minutely.

Q. You have not examined them with a view of testifying about them?—A. No, sir; not personally.

Q. I understand you to say, however, that you have sufficiently examined them to be able to tell us that you can not tell whether they were fired out of a Krag or a Springfield, simply looking at the bullets?—A. Yes, sir; that is from my personal experience. I prefaced my statement with the statement that I am basing this testimony on reports that have been made to me.

Q. Yes, I know; but you have looked at the bullets enough to testify to that on your own account, have you not? Simply looking at the bullets and nothing else, is not that your opinion, that they might have been fired out of either a Krag or a Springfield?—A. Oh, yes, sir; they might have been.

Q. You can not tell, from just looking at the bullets and nothing else, which gun they came out of?—A. No, sir; I can not; and I do not think anybody can by any kind of an examination they might make.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I want to ask you one question about these bullets. You say 10 per cent of the bullet is what sort of metal?—A. Antimony.

Q. Does that apply to all bullets, or only to the specific ones fired from the Springfield rifle?—A. Lead rifle bullets in general are alloyed with antimony to make the lead a little harder.

Q. Does the same proportion hold only as to those particular ones fired in the Springfield rifle, or does it also apply to those of the Krag-Jørgensen and the Mauser, or is there any difference in the lead?—A. Whether the proportions are the same I do not know, or whether they alloy entirely with antimony. Tin is sometimes used.

Q. Could that be ascertained?—A. By a chemical examination; yes, sir.

Q. It is easily distinguishable whether these bullets here were made by you or by other manufacturers by the proportion of alloy?—A. If other manufacturers use a different proportion, which I do not know.

Q. You think the proportions are the same?—A. I do not think that the proportion is very different, because the result to be obtained is about the same; the object is to get about the same degree of hardness.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Can you tell us whether pure lead is used in any of the ammunition used by the Government?—A. It would only be used, if used at all, in the guard-cartridge bullet, or in the reduced-range cartridge bullet. In regard to those I am not certain.

Q. Is there any difference between the reduced-range cartridge and the guard cartridge, or are they not the same?—A. I think there is a difference. I think the bullets are different in weight. That pamphlet, however, will show that.

Q. I know nothing except what is in this official publication, and as I have understood up until now, the guard cartridge and the reduced-range cartridge are the same thing; sometimes one name is applied and sometimes the other. Here is the guard cartridge described on page 46 of this pamphlet. Is not that the reduced-range cartridge? That is shown in figure 147.—A. No, sir. This one on page 47, figure 148, the gallery-practice cartridge, is a different one, you see. You see the bullet is quite different [indicating].

Q. Well, is not the gallery-practice cartridge intended for practice in the gallery?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not for guard purposes?—A. No, sir.

Q. The reduced-range cartridge is the 15-grain cartridge, is it not, as you testified a moment ago when I asked you about it, containing 15 grains of powder?—A. That is the guard cartridge.

Q. Is not that what you call the reduced-range cartridge?—A. No, sir; it is not. The reduced-range cartridge is the one shown on page 47, here.

Q. How many grains of powder are there in that?—A. The proper name for that, by the way, is the gallery-practice cartridge, and that has only 3 grains of powder.

Q. Only 3 grains?—A. Only 3 grains, as against 15 grains in the other.

Q. That is intended for use in a building, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is what you refer to when you speak of the reduced-range cartridge, what we have been calling the gallery-practice cartridge.—A. Now, perhaps I ought to go a little further than that and say that we have made, although we have not issued it to the service in general, a reduced-range cartridge which is between the gallery-practice cartridge and the regulation cartridge. The reduced-range cartridge is good for practice at 300 or 400 or 500 yards, but not at the extreme range of 1,000 yards, and it was gotten up for use at posts where they did not have the extreme range, and where the country about was thickly settled, and there would be danger in using the regulation cartridge. That cartridge, however, has not been issued to the service.

Q. Inasmuch as that cartridge was not in use in August, 1906, and is not yet issued, I will not ask you about that, as it has no relation to this matter. I call your attention to page 268 of the hearings before this committee. On that and the following pages you will see the reports of the commanders of those three companies as to their ordnance, what was issued to them, and I call your attention to the column to which I point, the right-hand column, under the heading "Caliber .30 rifle, model 1903." I wish you would read what that says, in that right-hand column.—A. (Reading:) "Ball cartridges, reduced range," and then in parentheses, "Guard cartridges." This officer reports himself as having received 650 of these from another officer, that being the total for which he is accountable.

Q. Now, we have understood all the while that that was a 15-grain cartridge. Are we mistaken about that?—A. I will say that, although he is not correct in describing his ammunition, that is the 15-grain cartridge.

Q. That is what the testimony shows it is, I believe. Each of the companies seems to have had the same number issued to it—650 rounds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention now to the description given in the return of the commander of Company C, in that same column. There it is described as "Ball cartridges, reduced range," and the number of rounds is 650?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let us see what the record of D Company says. That, you see, says simply, "Guard cartridges, 650 rounds?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, we have understood all the while—I have, at least—that that was the 15-grain cartridge.—A. I think that is correct, sir; but those cartridges should have been properly described by their official designation of guard cartridges.

Q. Now, that bullet has no jacket on it of any kind, has it?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is just a lead bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us whether that is pure lead, or whether that is a composition of some kind?—A. That is stated in this pamphlet, sir; that the composition is lead and tin.

Q. Lead and tin; in what proportion?—A. That is not given.

Q. Can you get that for us and give it to us?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would. Is that composition different from that of the lead in the ball cartridge?—A. The bullet in the ball cartridge is a composition of lead and antimony.

Q. So you have stated. I did not know but what you might want to modify your answer.—A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. What cartridge is that which has tin in it?—A. The guard cartridge.

Q. What is the difference between the ball cartridge and the guard cartridge in their use by the troops? Do they have ball cartridge and guard cartridge issued to them?—A. They have regulation service cartridges and guard cartridges both. They are both ball cartridges.

Q. Did these troops at Brownsville have both?—A. They are both ball cartridges as distinguished from blank cartridges, which have no bullets.

Q. Did these troops have both?—A. Yes, sir. They are generally issued. I suppose these troops had both. I can not speak of my own knowledge in regard to their particular possession.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I have here these nine bullets, and I wish you would take bullet No. 9, which is one of three that was sent to the Senate by the President when he submitted Mr. Purdy's report. Look at this bullet No. 9, please, and tell us whether you think that is a Springfield bullet.—A. (After examination.) This has the more prominent characteristics of the Springfield bullet. It has been so distorted, however, that it is difficult to say positively. The jacket appears to be such as we have on the Springfield bullet.

Q. Or the Krag, either one?—A. Yes, sir; or the Krag. It has the general appearance, and it has four land marks on it.

Q. Do you observe any abrasion on it?—A. There is some abrasion. There is some foreign substance sticking to it. Whether it gained or lost in weight could be told by weighing it.

Q. That is one of the bullets reported on by Lieutenant Hawkins?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He reports it, I believe, to be of full length, and, as I understand it, he reports it to be of full diameter, and yet he reports it as weighing only 200.3 grains.—A. Well, sir, I should say it would be difficult to tell accurately what the diameter of the bullet is; it is so distorted.

Q. I would think so, too; but there is no trouble whatever to tell the length of it, is there?—A. The base of it is distorted. You can see that that smooth folding over of the jacket metal is not observable on the base. The base is rough, and it is difficult to tell.

Q. What should be the length of the bullet to be of full length, do you remember?—A. I don't remember, sir.

Q. He gives the full standard length here. I can understand that you need not keep that in your mind, but he gives it as 1.255 to 1.265. That is correct, is it not? That means an inch and 255 thousandths to an inch and 265 thousandths.—A. That is the tolerance in the manufacture, one one-hundredth of an inch.

Q. And he gives the actual length of that as 1.262, which is seven one-thousandths more than the minimum and three one-thousandths less than the maximum.—A. Apparently; yes, sir.

Q. Three one-thousandths of an inch less than the maximum would not be perceptible to the naked eye?—A. Not to the eye; no, sir.

Q. And that is a greater length than the bullet next above described by him, which is 1.235?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The bullet above weighs 218.4, while this weighs only 200.3.—A. In that case it appears that the longer bullet has the less weight.

Q. Yes; the longer bullet has the less weight.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet the diameter is given here as the same, practically?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It should be 0.301 to 0.302, but it has—A. The full diameter is the one below it, sir; 0.308 to 0.309.

Q. I am giving the amount above. He gives first the diameter across the lands.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. 0.301 to 0.302.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is as it should be, and he gives it as 0.305.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the diameter is a little greater across the lands?—A. A little less.

Q. A little less—A. Than the prescribed.

Q. And the other diameter, across the groove, he finds is too much deformed to give. Of course that is manifest to the eye. Now, that diameter across the lands is the same diameter, practically, as the one above, is it not—practically 0.300, as against 0.305?—A. There is a difference of 0.005 of course.

Q. That could not be perceived by the eye, could it?—A. It would be impossible.

Q. It would be almost impossible to measure it if we had an instrument of five ten-thousandths with which to measure it, would it not?—A. Well, the measurement would become a little bit doubtful even with instruments.

Q. When it gets down to ten-thousandths—I should think so. Now, can you tell us, after your attention has been called to all these facts in reference to the bullet, what kind of a bullet it is, with any confidence?—A. Only within limits. That is, as far as my examination of it here in my hand is concerned, it might be any one of two or three bullets.

Q. That is, it might be a Krag rifle bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A Krag carbine or a Springfield rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or it might be a Mauser bullet?—A. Yes, sir; as far as I could tell by simply examining it in my hand, it might be a Mauser.

Q. And from the weight given it might be a Mauser, might it not?—A. If I remember rightly, the weight, which is given there, is still a little more than the weight of the Mauser bullet, but that is only an impression.

Q. The difference between the weight given and the weight ascertained by weighing it is almost inappreciable, is it not—between the Mauser bullet of regular weight and this weight?—A. Although I knew a short time ago, I do not at this moment recall the prescribed weight of the 7.65-millimeter Mauser bullet.

Q. You say the Mexican army is supplied with the 7-millimeter rifle?—A. That is our information.

Q. Are you aware that it has for the past two years been supplied with the 7.65-millimeter also?—A. No, sir.

Q. In part supplied with it?—A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. You have no information of that kind?—A. No, sir. I think the last published information, as furnished by the bureau of information of the War Department, gives the 7-millimeter Mauser as their rifle.

Q. That is, that the whole Mexican army is furnished with only the 7-millimeter rifle, is your impression?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have had no information to the contrary?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. You do not know that during the last two years they have been issuing the 7.65 millimeter?—A. No, sir; I am not aware of it.

Q. Made for the express purpose of accommodating our Springfield rifle caliber?—A. That I am not aware of.

Q. You have never heard of that at all, until it is suggested now?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, what change would have to be made in a Krag rifle to accommodate a Springfield cartridge? Just let me call your attention to this rifle that I hand you. That is a Krag, is it not?—A. That is a Krag rifle; yes, sir.

Q. That was furnished by the War Department. That is what our Army carried until 1906. Now, the Springfield cartridge is too long, and has too great a diameter to fit into that chamber.—A. Yes, sir. I have one here. You can try it.

Q. Yes, I understand, but what would it be necessary to do to enable it to fit in there?—A. To get it to go in?

Q. I will ask you, General, if that bore could not be enlarged without any difficulty whatever, so as to accommodate this cartridge?—A. The bore could be enlarged so as to get the cartridge in, but it is still the wrong kind of a cartridge for use in this gun, because you will observe that whereas the Krag cartridge has a rim which brings up against the base of the barrel, and over which the extractor works to get the case out, the model 1903 has no such rim, but has a cannellure.

Q. But would not the extractor work in that cannellure just the same?—A. I do not think this extractor would go down into it.

Q. You never tried it, because you never saw a Krag that was bored out so as to accommodate the Springfield cartridge, did you?—A. No, sir; I did not. It is speculation on my part.

Q. Now let me ask you if there is any difficulty whatever about boring that barrel so as to accommodate this cartridge?—A. I take it to be easily done.

Q. Easily done, and have you never heard of its being done?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. Do you not know, General Crozier, that it is actually done by those who have Krag rifles, to accommodate the Springfield cartridge, since the Springfield cartridge was brought into use?—A. No, sir; that is news to me.

Q. News to you, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Do I understand you to say if the bore was enlarged that that cartridge could be fired from that gun?—A. I do not see any reason why it should not be fired from the gun, sir; but I should suspect that the extractor would not work very well with it, and that it would not be a very workmanlike piece of mechanism when you got through.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I should like you to look at the extractor and inform me what practical difficulty there would be about its catching in the cannellure, as in the other case it does over the rim.—A. Well, sir; I could not say that it would not do so. I simply mean to say that it would be a place where I would anticipate difficulty. In the first place, the rim, I think, is larger in outside diameter than the base of the 1903 cartridge.

Q. Let us see if it is.—A. I will try it and see.

Q. You can determine that by simply putting them together, can you not?—A. (After examining the two cartridges.) Yes, sir. You see, as I anticipated, there is a slight difference in the diameter.

Q. A slight difference in the diameter, but is there enough difference to amount to anything?—A. I could not say that it would prevent its working.

Q. You never made any experiment with it?—A. No, sir; never tried that.

Q. Now, General, what is the equivalent in millimeters of our No. .30 caliber?—A. It would run out to several decimal places, but it is about 7.64.

Q. It would be exactly 7.625, would it not?—A. I could compute it for you in a moment, if you will wait. Taking the millimeter in inches as 0.0394, which runs it out to four decimal places, the equivalent of our .30 is 7.614, as I compute it.

Q. That is seven millimeters and sixty-one hundredths?—A. And six hundred and fourteen thousandths.

Q. That would be the exact equivalent of the No. .30?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have seen it stated somewhere that it was 7.625. Now I call your attention to these two bullets, General. Notice the lands upon them. You will notice that they extend up farther on the one than they do on the other, apparently, do they not?—A. Both bullets are very much distorted. There appears to be a full-length land on this one and also a full-length land on that one.

Q. And the full-length land on this one extends a little bit farther, does it not?—A. I can not say, sir.

Q. I will ask you to look at the photograph of the two bullets shown at page 2269 and tell me if there is not substantially or almost the same difference in the length of the lands of the two bullets I have shown you and the two bullets given there?—A. I should say not. There is quite a perceptible difference in the length of the lands in this bullet on page 2269.

Q. How much of a difference is that?—A. As I should estimate it, I should say there is nearly a tenth of an inch.

Q. And you would think that the lands on these bullets were practically the same in height?—A. Let us look at them again. I can not see any difference in the length of those lands, sir. There is only one approximately good land left on there that I can see.

Q. You think they are the same, do you, General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the 7.65-millimeter gun would accommodate that bullet without any trouble, would it not?—A. I think it would, without difficulty.

Q. Or a 7.62-millimeter, either one?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Senator LODGE. Do you mean the bullet or the cartridge?

Senator FORAKER. I am speaking just of the bullet alone. [To the witness.] Now, General, about the cleaning of these guns. You first had four guns fired over at Fort Myer, each gun fired five times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then those guns were brought to your office in the War Department building, I suppose, and you had them there cleaned, some two or three hours after the firing?—A. Yes, sir; a few hours. It might have gone on to four or five hours after the firing, but it was the same day.

Q. Can you tell us just how long it was?—A. No, sir; I can not; because I do not know the exact hour at which they were fired.

Q. Where are those guns?—A. They have been sent back to Fort Myer. They were not preserved in the condition in which they were left by the cleaning.

Q. So we can not have the benefit of looking into those gun barrels to see how effectively they were cleaned?—A. No, sir; I am sorry to say that can not be insured.

Q. Who saw the gun barrels after they were cleaned besides yourself?—A. Captain Rice, of my office.

Q. Did you examine the chamber to see whether or not it was in anyway soiled or dirtied by the firing?—A. Yes, sir; I had the guns in my hand and looked into them for that purpose.

Q. You examined the chamber to see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you observed that there was no dirt of any kind in the chamber?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. None was perceptible at the time you examined them?—A. There was none, sir.

Q. And that was within two or three or three or four hours, as I understand you, after they were fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never saw them afterwards?—A. No, sir; I never saw them afterwards.

Q. You handed them back to the man who brought them to you?—A. I directed Captain Rice to send them back to Fort Myer, and he sent them back by one of the War Department messengers.

Q. These were guns belonging to the troops stationed at Fort Myer?—A. They belonged at Fort Myer and they were sent to me by the commanding officer.

Q. Who is the commanding officer who sent them to you?—A. Colonel Hatfield.

Q. What troops are at Fort Myer now?—A. Some troops of a cavalry regiment; I am not sure of the number of the regiment.

Q. Was it this Colonel Hatfield of the cavalry regiment who sent them to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they the Springfield rifles, such as the infantry carry?—A. Yes, sir; the infantry and cavalry now carry the same guns.

Q. They have precisely the same guns now, haven't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Formerly there was a difference, when we had the Krag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between the Krag carbine and the Krag rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The rifle was longer?—A. The rifle was longer; yes, sir. Now they have the same guns.

Q. Who brought them over—Captain Rice?—A. No, sir; I did not see the messenger. I do not know who brought them over. I could only guess.

Q. Did you see them before they were cleaned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You examined them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you discovered no dirt at all in the chambers?—A. No, sir.

Q. As a result of the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the barrels seem to be powder stained perceptibly?—A. The barrels had the dull look that comes from firing the smokeless powder. It is a very different appearance, you will understand, from that which came from firing guns with the old charcoal powder.

Q. So I understand. Your regulations here, that you have officially issued, explain that.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who besides yourself examined the rifles after they had been cleaned?—A. I examined them and Captain Rice examined them.

Q. You and Captain Rice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any other officer?—A. On one occasion—I think it was on the first occasion—General Garlington was present.

Q. Now, General, would it be very much trouble for you to have these same rifles, or rifles like them, fired five times, and bring them here and let them be cleaned in the presence of this committee?—A. No, sir; that could be done.

Q. That could be done?—A. Easily.

Q. With somebody to examine them after they are cleaned?—

A. Yes, sir. I would only say with reference to that, Senator, that it would be necessary to have the time definitely known in order to get them here the same day, in order to have the circumstances the same, the same day that they were fired.

Q. We could do that. I would like to have them here when the officers of the Twenty-sixth are here, and let them inspect them.—A. Yes, sir. There will be no difficulty about it.

Q. It is impossible to do that as to the four rifles with which you made your first experiment?—A. Yes, sir; because there has been no preservation of those rifles in that state.

Q. And it is equally impossible as to the rifles used in the second experiment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then in the third experiment, you used only the two rifles?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And we have them?—A. They are here now, sir.

Q. And one of them has been cleaned, and the other is just as it was after firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can leave those rifles with us, can you not?—A. I can do so; yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us which one has been cleaned and which one has not, and indicate it on the card?

Senator LODGE. One of these says that it has been thoroughly cleaned.

Senator FORAKER. They both say they were thoroughly cleaned before firing, as I understand it. Let me see if that is not what it says. It says, "This rifle was thoroughly cleaned and fired five shots with service ammunition."

A. The reading on this other tag is identical.

Q. So far as the card is concerned, you can not tell which rifle has been cleaned and which has not been cleaned. Of course, anybody can tell by looking at the bore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you to look into the bore and tell me which one has been cleaned, so we can mark it, or which one has not been, either one. I have an idea which one is cleaned and which is not, but I want your testimony instead of mine.—A. (After examining the two rifles.) This one has not been cleaned.

Q. And this one has been cleaned. Let us mark this one.—A. The number of the rifle will tell you.

Q. If you will just mark it "cleaned."

Senator WARNER. Put the number of the rifle down.

The WITNESS. No. 198263 is the one which has been cleaned.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, mark that "This rifle clean."—A. Had not that better appear in my testimony, because if I put it on this card it may look as though it was put on at the time of cleaning.

Senator FORAKER. It will appear in the testimony.

Senator WARNER. Put the number of the gun in the testimony.

Senator FORAKER. The witness testifies to the number of the gun.

The WITNESS. 198263.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is the gun that has been cleaned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you just put on the card there, General, a cross or something, so that we will not have to look at the number.—A. I want it to appear, however, that it is only my observation now, this testimony that it has been cleaned, and not from having marked it before.

Q. Those guns were examined after they were cleaned, in all cases, by only yourself and Captain Rice, except possibly in one instance General Garlington was present and looked at them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were cleaned to your entire satisfaction, to the entire satisfaction of all of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you clean them with reference to their standing an inspection such as guns are subjected to at the regular inspections in the service?

Senator WARNER. That is, with reference to the powder stains.

A. No, sir; I cleaned them only with reference to the possibility or otherwise of seeing whether they had been fired since they were last cleaned.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Whether or not they had been fired. You had no other object than that?—A. That is all.

Q. But you did undertake to clean them sufficiently to make it clear that there were no evidences of firing left?—A. Yes, sir; exactly, sir.

Q. So that if there should be any evidences of firing left the cleaning would not have been thorough, would it?—A. That is undoubtedly the case.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. They were cleaned so they would pass an ordinary inspection?—A. An inspection for the purpose of seeing whether they had been fired. They may be inspected for various purposes—inspected to see whether a man keeps the magazine of his rifle clean, or to see whether he lets dust get into the receiver.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. But to be cleaned so as to pass inspection to determine whether they had been fired, all stains of powder would have to be removed from the barrel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if there were any stains in the chamber, they would have to be removed, too?—A. Yes, sir; if there should be stains from firing, which there would not be, however.

Q. What is that statement?—A. I say, if there were any stains in the chamber produced by firing of course they would have to be removed; but there would be no such stains, because firing does not make any.

Q. That is your experience?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever served in the line since the new Springfield was issued?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have never been in command of troops—you have been on staff duty all the while?—A. Yes, sir; since the issue of this rifle.

Q. I ask you, so that it will appear in the record. Was that the case with the Krag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That there were no powder stains in the chamber, from firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. No matter if you fired the gun a hundred times?—A. Unless there should be a defective cartridge case. We sometimes would have that.

Q. That is, the shell, as we call it?—A. Yes, sir. Sometimes the primer, which is of soft metal, would be pierced, and powder would blow back through the hole thus made. That, of course, is a defective condition.

Q. Now, would it change your opinion any to know that men who handle these guns, and who have fired them on the target ranges, have testified here that from firing even one shot there is always more or less of stain in the chamber as well as in the barrel?—A. I should say that their observation was entirely different from my own, of the same circumstance.

Q. To what extent have you had experience with the firing of either the Krag or the Springfield?—A. I have served with troops in the field armed with the Krag, and I have fired the gun considerably myself—not a very great amount.

Q. And you never found any powder stains at all in the chamber?—A. Never observed any powder stains in the chamber; no, sir.

Q. And when you came to inspect a gun you never expected to find any powder stains in the chamber?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is it or is it not likely that in cleaning one of these guns the chamber would become soiled from the water, if water should be used, getting it in the barrel?—A. That is quite possible, sir.

Q. Is not that almost inevitable?—A. It is so likely that we prescribe a method for avoiding it, which is to plug the rear, plug the chamber.

Q. You prescribe the plugging up, do you not, of the lower end of the barrel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The bore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So as to prevent the water or oil or any other fluid substance from escaping, if it be used?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. While we are on that subject I should like to have the Senator refer me to the testimony about the chamber being powder stained.

Senator FORAKER. I know it was testified to repeatedly.

Senator LODGE. By whom?

Senator FORAKER. By soldiers who had the guns and cleaned them.

Senator LODGE. Do you mean by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth?

Senator FORAKER. Soldiers of the Twenty-fifth and, I think, soldiers of the Twenty-sixth, also.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I understand you in the case of a defective cartridge shell the chamber would become soiled sometimes?—A. It might, sometimes; yes, sir.

Q. Can you state proportionately how often that might happen in the usual use of guns; that is, as one to four hundred or one to five hundred, or what the proportion is?—A. It is very rare. I should say certainly not once in five hundred times. That is just a rough guess, however. It is very rare.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The man who cleaned the guns that were used in the first experiment was a Mr. Palmer, so I understand you?—A. Mr. Palmer; yes, sir.

Q. What is his first name?—A. I don't remember. He is an employee of the Ordnance Office of the War Department.

Q. Is he in the United States Army service?—A. He is a civilian employee of the War Department.

Q. And you said he had no expert knowledge about cleaning guns?—A. No, sir; he does anything of that sort when we have it to do in the Ordnance Office here. Sometimes guns and pistols are sent to us and they have to be cleaned, or some little thing has to be done, and he does it; but he is a carpenter by trade, not an armorer.

Q. I suppose you knew you were going to make this experiment, and made all preparations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you commenced to time the man from the time he started to use the instruments in the bore of the gun?—A. Yes, sir; preparations were carefully made beforehand, so that the time does not include anything necessary to make preparations.

Q. It does not include anything whatever except to clean the bore, and in the way you have indicated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, who did the cleaning of the guns that were used in the second experiment?—A. That may have been Palmer or Captain Rice. They were both present. I have forgotten which one handled the guns. It was done under the observation of all of us.

Q. And in the third experiment?—A. In the third experiment Captain Rice actually handled the guns.

Q. And we have the gun now that Captain Rice cleaned?—A. Yes, sir. This was the third experiment that I saw, Senator. It was really the fourth experiment. It slipped my mind, because I did not see that. The third experiment was very similar to the fourth experiment; that is, two rifles were fired and were brought over, and were cleaned there by Captain Rice, or one of them was cleaned by the Captain or under his direction. The exact circumstances of that cleaning I am not aware of, as I was not present.

Q. Do you know where the two guns are?—A. I don't know. They were sent back.

Q. The guns were returned to Fort Myer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever known of an enlisted man in the service being timed as to the cleaning of a gun; and if so, how long it took him?—A. I never have known of a case.

Q. Have you ever heard of anyone testifying to cleaning a gun in such time as you indicated a gun can be cleaned in, even as to the barrel of the gun?—A. I don't remember any such testimony. I have read in the newspapers certain testimony that has been given before your committee here.

Q. Did you read any of the testimony given before the Penrose court-martial on that subject?—A. No, sir; I did not read that testimony.

Q. Are you not aware that the judge-advocate who conducted that case—Captain Hay, I believe, was it not—is that his proper title, judge-advocate?—A. Judge-advocate.

Q. Are you not aware that he called a sergeant from the Twenty-sixth Infantry and had him testify on that subject?—A. No, sir; I am not aware of that. I have no recollection of having read anything in connection with the cleaning of a gun. I read no testimony before that court in connection with the cleaning of guns.

Q. Let me read you what he said. I read, at page 531 of the testimony given at the Penrose court-martial:

Q. Please give your name, your rank, and your present station.—A. Earl M. Gebhardt; first sergeant Company F, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Do you know the accused?—If so, state who he is.—A. Yes, sir: Major Penrose.

Q. How long have you been in the service?—A. Fifteen years, sir.

Q. Have you ever been in active service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where and when?—A. Philippine Islands, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903.

Q. What arms have you used in your service?—A. The old Springfield carbine, caliber .45, and the Springfield Long Tom—that is, the rifle—caliber .45, Krag-Jørgensen, and this new Springfield rifle.

Q. You are familiar with the present rifle used—the so-called Springfield rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the present Springfield rifle require an armrack in anywise different from that required for the Krag?—A. Yes, sir; requires a shorter one.

I read that to show his experience in the handling of guns, and the length of his service as a soldier, and the character of that service. Now, I will pass over that part of his testimony which relates to something else, and come to that which relates to cleaning. I read now from page 532, about the middle of the page:

Q. What implements are generally used in cleaning a Springfield rifle?—A. Usually the brass cleaning rod is supplied by the Ordnance Department.

Q. Are any other implements ever used?—A. There is a thong and a wiping brush carried in the butt of the piece.

Q. Have you ever fired black powder in any of the various service rifles that you have just mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of powder is contained in the service cartridge to-day?—A. Smokeless powder.

Q. Is there any difference in the fouling of guns by the use of black and smokeless powders?—A. Yes, sir; there is quite a difference. The black powder fouls easy and is hard to clean; the smokeless, it takes more shots to foul it, and it is easier to clean on the start, but it takes three or four days to get it all out—to thoroughly clean the piece.

Q. How many shots are required to foul the bore of the present rifle?—A. One will slightly foul it, but it will take 8 or 10 shots to foul it so it is hard to clean.

Then he testifies about another matter, and I do not care to take up time with that. I now read from page 533:

Q. How long would it take to clean the bore of a rifle properly after having been fired, say, ten to twenty times, with any implements?—A. At least twenty minutes.

Q. You couldn't remove the powder stains inside of twenty minutes, say?—A. It couldn't be; no, sir.

That was his testimony. And at least eight or ten men, I think I may safely say, of other commands have testified here to substantially that same effect; and practically all the members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, who were supplied with these guns, testified to the same effect. That does not change your opinion at all as to the length of time required for cleaning the rifle?—A. No, sir.

Q. Let me ask you what command you were connected with in the field service?—A. My last field service was on General Chaffee's staff in the Peking relief expedition. Before that I was on General Schwann's staff in the campaign in the southern part of the island of Luzon in the Philippine insurrection.

Q. When were you in the immediate command of troops last?—A. I have not been in the immediate command of troops since 1879.

Q. Since 1879?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the Krag rifle used in the Government service then?—A. No, sir; the old Springfield.

Q. What rank did you then hold?—A. Second lieutenant.

Q. And you were not in command of a company?—A. I served in the field in command of a portion of my company.

Q. Of a portion of your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that was the old Springfield rifle, using black powder?—A. Yes, sir; very different material.

Q. And your experience with that would not be of any benefit as to these new rifles?—A. No; it would be of no value.

Q. It would be no criterion?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that since high-power rifles have come into use in the service you have not been in command of troops in the field, and you have had no occasion personally to make an inspection of guns, to see whether or not they were clean enough to pass such inspections as officers in the service are expected to make?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Captain Rice, whom you speak of, is connected with the Ordnance Department, is he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long has he been in the Ordnance Department?—A. About nine or ten years.

Q. And in what capacity?—A. He has served at Sandy Hook proving ground and served at the Manila ordnance depot.

Q. The Sandy Hook proving ground is for heavy ordnance, coast artillery, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where else?—A. He served at the Manila ordnance depot, as I have also, where the duty is to supply and look after all the arms used in the Philippine Islands. At present he is on duty in my office.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. At the Manila depot you supply every kind of arm?—A. Every kind of arm.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Every kind of arm. That is to say, he had the responsibility to see that requisitions for arms and ammunition were properly filled—had the responsibility of all such things?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is their business?—A. Yes, sir. It is their business out there to know all about them. They had to make repairs.

Q. Did he have anything to do with the cleaning of guns?—A. Not in a military sense; not by troops.

Q. Not in a military sense. He has been in that service for the past eight or nine years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us more accurately as to that?—A. I could, with the Army Register.

Q. How was he employed before that time? I have here the official Army Register for 1907, according to which it appears—A. He was in the cavalry at first, I think, sir.

Q. It appears from this official Army Register that Capt. John H. Rice accepted a detail on staff, I suppose it means, the 1st of December, 1898, ordered to service in the Ordnance Department; was transferred to the Ordnance Department in 1898.—A. Yes, sir; that is about what my recollection was.

Q. So that it would be eight years since he had been connected with troops. Now, do you know what service he was in before that?—A. In the cavalry, I think, sir.

Q. Do you remember in what year he was graduated from the academy?—A. That I could not say exactly. I think somewhere about 1894.

Q. Can you tell us where he served, in what country, I mean? Was he in the Philippines? You have testified that he has been in Manila.—A. Yes, sir; in the Ordnance Department.

Q. He was in the Ordnance Department when he was in Manila?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did not serve in the Philippines with his troop of cavalry?—A. No, sir.

Q. What rank did he have when he was transferred to the Ordnance Department, if you remember?—A. As I remember, he was a second lieutenant of cavalry. He was transferred to become a first lieutenant of ordnance.

Q. I suppose that is correct. I just want to see. So that prior to 1898 he was serving with his command, with a troop of cavalry?—A. That is probable, sir. I have no direct recollection.

Q. That indicates it, does it not?—A. (Referring to the Army Register.) This indicates that he was graduated from West Point on the 12th of June, 1893; that he was then assigned as second lieutenant to the Third Cavalry, that he served as such until the 21st of November, 1893, when he was transferred to the Ordnance Department, accepting this transfer on the 1st of December of the same year.

Q. So that he was out of the academy and serving with a troop of cavalry, as the record indicates, about five years before he was transferred to the Ordnance Department?—A. About five years; yes, sir.

Q. What was our cavalry armed with at that time?—A. It was armed in the later portion of it with the Krag-Jørgensen carbine.

Q. About what year was the Krag-Jørgensen issued to the cavalry—that is, the carbine?—A. As I remember, it was about 1893, but I would not be positive.

Q. What did they have before that?—A. The Springfield carbine of caliber .45, using charcoal powder.

Q. Now, are you familiar with any guns or arms except only those used in the Army—that is, are you familiar with sporting guns and the ammunition used in them?—A. Not very.

Q. Can you tell us what is meant by .45-75 Winchester?—A. I do not know what is the significance of those terms, .45-75, as used in connection with that gun.

Q. What do you understand by the Colt .45 revolver?—A. That is the caliber of the Colt revolver—caliber, forty-five hundredths of an inch; and the Winchester, I should say that was a Winchester of caliber forty-five hundredths of an inch and that it is to use a charge of powder weighing 75 grains.

Q. That is the way we understand it here.—A. But those are special designations, and they are not always the same in meaning.

Q. Can you tell us the kind of a bullet that is used in the .45-75 Winchester?—A. Not—

Q. I do not expect any accurate answer, General, unless you happen to know it.—A. I have had the Winchester rifle, caliber .45, in my hands, and have seen the ammunition, and my recollection is that it is a lead bullet, not jacketed.

Q. Just a lead bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without any jacket on it at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you have never made any special examination, I imagine, of any of these matters, have you, so as to carry the figures in your mind?—A. No, sir.

Q. I am not asking you for the purpose of embarrassing you in any way. I assume there are a great many of these things that you might not know about unless your attention was called to them.—A. There are a great many that I know in a general way, but would not care to give accurate testimony about.

Q. Now, going back to this microscopic inspection. You believe in this theory upon which that was made, do you?—A. I have no evidence except that which has been submitted to the committee. It was an entirely new subject to me.

Q. It seems plausible to you, does it?—A. It seems to me to be plausible; yes, sir.

Q. And you have not any doubt about its having been accurately made?—A. I have no doubt that it has been very carefully made, and

I would attach great weight to the reports made; but from my own personal examination of the marks on these cartridges, I am not prepared to substantiate the accuracy of the report. I have not gone into it sufficiently.

Q. All I want to know, General, is, whether or not we can safely rely on that report, in your judgment?—A. You may certainly rely on the good faith of it.

Q. On the good faith of it, and it seems to you entirely plausible, does it not?—A. It does; yes, sir.

Q. And you have read the report carefully?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you see no ground on which to criticise it?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You accept it yourself as satisfactory?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With all that it indicates?—A. I do; yes, sir.

Q. Well, I do, too; so we agree about that; so we will not waste any more time on that. Now the 7.65 millimeter is the gun the Spanish troops had.—A. Yes, sir; of which we got quite a number in this country.

Q. We have a good many of them in this country, haven't we?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could not the bore of the 7.65-millimeter gun be changed in the same way that I understood you to say the bore of the Krag might be changed, so as to accommodate the Springfield cartridge?—A. It looks plausible, sir. I could not say that it could not.

Q. There would not have to be anything at all done, would there, General, except only to enlarge the bore, and that might be done like any other—A. There are so many little details, with reference to the working of the extractor and the action of the firing pin, and so forth, that it would be difficult to say, without trying it, but I do not see any reason why it should not be done.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Before you go on with that, what is done to enlarge the chamber?—A. They would have to ream it out. The process would probably be to unscrew the barrel from the receiver and then ream the chamber out to the new size.

Q. Ream it out. That has to be done by machinery, of course?—A. Yes, sir; that is done by machinery.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where would you find such machinery?—A. It might possibly be slowly done in any good machine shop; but to be done in quantity it would probably have to be in an armory somewhere. They would have to make a reamer; but it would not be an impossible operation in any good machine shop.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. They could do it in Springfield, couldn't they?—A. Yes, sir; they could do it in Springfield.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. They could do it in any good machine shop anywhere in the country, General, could they not?—A. It looks as though they could.

Q. Is there anything simpler, now, than reaming out, and in that way enlarging, the bore of anything in metal?—A. That is a very simple operation.

Q. Very simple; just as simple as it can be. It does not need an expert, does it?—A. It would need an expert to do it, but there are plenty of them to be found.

Q. How much enlargement would there have to be, to allow this cartridge to enter that bore?—A. I could answer that better by looking at the cartridge, and measuring it.

Q. Now, what is the difference in the diameter of those two shells?—A. As far as the diameter is concerned, a few hundredths of an inch only.

Q. Two hundredths?—A. A few hundredths; but in regard to the length, there is a difference of something like three-eighths of an inch, I should say.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. The chamber would have to be lengthened three-eighths of an inch?—A. Yes, sir; the chamber would have to be lengthened three-eighths of an inch. Now, there is another question comes in, whether or not the Krag barrel would be strong enough to stand the pressure of the larger charge. That would be something about which I do not care to give testimony.

Q. But if we wanted to go out and shoot up a town, and had no other way of doing it, we might take the risk?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. And establish a machine shop!

Senator LODGE. Establish a machine shop and ream out the guns.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You do not have to establish a machine shop. I understand you to say it could be done in any good machine shop in the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. If you had the guns.

Senator FORAKER. Well, I have proven that you had the guns. I will prove one thing at a time, gentlemen. We are getting along very well. Now, it is not quite our adjourning time, but I should like to have the General come back after the recess, if I am not troubling him too much. I should like to look over my notes. These two guns that the General brought here, I want them preserved just as they are.

(At 12 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m. the committee adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, Pettus, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM GROZIER, CHIEF OF ORD-NANCE, U. S. ARMY—Continued.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please look at the exhibit now shown you, being No. 4 of the bullets, and tell me of what it consists.—A. That looks like a piece of the metal jacket of a bullet.

Q. The lead filling has entirely disappeared, apparently, has it not?—A. It is pretty thoroughly gone; yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever experimented or conducted experiments to see under what circumstances the jacket will be stripped off the lead, and the lead disappear, as in this instance?—A. I never personally conducted any such experiments. I know of such, however. It is sometimes done by firing a bullet into water. That constitutes one of the reception tests in the purchase of ammunition.

Q. It will be stripped off by firing the bullet into water?—A. Bullets are sometimes fired into water to see if it will strip off. It ought not to, but it sometimes does.

Q. Did you ever know of its stripping off from merely being fired into water?—A. I have not observed any case myself, but I know that it sometimes occurs.

Q. It occurs usually, does it not, when it is fired as into a brick wall, or into gravel, or some such substance as that?—A. It might, in any such case as that.

Q. That, I understand, was taken out of a brick wall, was it not?—A. From the indorsement on the envelope, it was taken from the wall of the Miller Hotel.

Q. That was a brick building.

Q. When fired into a brick wall that is liable to occur?—A. I should say it might.

Q. Is it not liable to occur when it is merely fired into a wooden door, for instance, or into a pine or frame building?—A. I have never known it to be done in such a case. I do know it is sometimes done by just firing it through the gun.

Q. Through what?—A. Through the gun. It strips off in the air sometimes. That occurs generally in the case of a very badly worn gun or too thin a jacket.

Q. That would be very rare?—A. Yes, sir; that would be very rare.

Q. Where did you ever hear of a case like that?—A. I have heard that in tests at the Springfield Armory, where, firing over water, they would sometimes notice that after a good many rounds the jackets would strip off and drop into the water. You would see them dropping into the water. That is to say, you would see something dropping into the water, and would know it was a jacket.

Q. What would become of the lead in that instance?—A. That would pass on and be lost. In my testimony this morning I told you that within a comparatively short time past the thickness of the jacket had been increased from one and a half to two hundredths of an inch. That was to keep it from stripping.

Q. How long ago was that increase in the thickness of the jacket made?—A. I should say something like two years ago.

Q. That was done before the Springfield rifle was adopted, was it not?—A. It was before it was issued to the service.

Q. Before it was issued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All these cartridges made since December, 1905, have had this thicker jacket, have they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, General, about the deflection of bullets, have you ever made experiments to determine to what extent these bullets may be deflected, fired from these higher-power guns, by meeting with obstructions?—A. Never any experiments with that object.

Q. Have you had occasion to observe what kind of wounds these high-power projectiles make, at close and long range, respectively?—

A. I have seen some of them, and know of others. I saw a Filipino who had been shot immediately before, within ten minutes, at a range, I should say, of something like 40 yards. I observed carefully the character of the wound.

Q. Where was he hit, what part of the body?—A. He was struck below the left shoulder, in the back. He was running away from the firer, and apparently stooping as he ran, so that the bullet ranged upwards and to the right, and came out on the right side of his neck. The wound of entrance was a small, round hole. The wound of exit was a gash apparently between 2 and 3 inches long, considerably longer than the longest dimension of the bullet which made it.

Q. Now, have you ever seen any other case similar to that; in a general way similar, I mean?—A. I saw two or three wounds that a colored soldier had received perhaps a month before, and which were nearly healed. These wounds were simply small spots by that time.

Q. Were those wounds at short range or long range?—A. I think that was long range.

Q. That was long range?—A. Yes, sir; I judge so. I am not absolutely certain.

Q. Is it not true that these high-power projectiles at short range are liable to lacerate and tear a great deal more than they will after they have gone a distance of 400 or 500 yards?—A. That is most difficult to make a positive statement about. There are instances both ways. I have given you an instance where at short range the bullet tore a large gash at the wound of exit, as I say, larger than the longest dimension of the bullet. I could tell you of other instances from common knowledge. I know of another instance in Cuba, which is a well-known case, where an officer was shot by one of his own sentinels with a Krag rifle. The distance was said to be about 20 paces. The sentinel challenged him, and the officer dropped to avoid being shot, and he was shot with this Krag rifle in the abdomen, and the wound ranged downwards; but he was well and about again, I understand, within ten days.

Q. What officer was that?—A. An officer by the name of Hunter, of the artillery.

Q. Of the artillery?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that wound was inflicted by a projectile fired out of a Krag rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At a distance of 20 or 30 paces?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not see the wound?—A. No, sir; I can not testify to that of my own knowledge.

Q. Do you know what kind of wounds were made? How did the wound at the place of exit correspond with the entrance wound?—A. I know nothing about it, except that it is the general belief as I have stated here.

Q. A great many people who have had very ugly looking wounds which they received in Cuba were up and about within two or three weeks after they received them, were they not?—A. I understand so.

Q. I remember the case of General Mills. I saw him, I think it was not longer than three weeks after he had been wounded at Santiago, shot through the head; a very ugly and bad wound, and still he was up and about, and got entirely well within a short time. But still that was a very ugly wound.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it does not follow that a man may not get up soon if he has an ugly wound, nor does it follow if he has an ugly wound that he would not get up soon, would it?—A. I can not make any generalization about it.

Q. You remember the case of General Mills, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would look at the bullet I hand you, and see the position that it was in in that wood. It was testified this morning, by Mr. Creager, that that bullet went clear through there, I understand. Mr. Creager testified that this bullet was found in such a position as to indicate that it was not going straight forward, but sidewise, when it stopped. That is a common thing, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is due to what you call tumbling, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; and we call the effect produced on what it strikes that way "keyholing." You can see the reason of it.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. It knocks the piece out on the opposite side?—A. No, sir; it makes an elongated hole when it strikes, shaped like a keyhole.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is, it makes just such a mark on the wood as the imprint of the bullet would make [indicating with bullet in block of wood]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When is it that one of these high-power projectiles does this tumbling, at long range or short range?—A. It would depend on whether it was fired from a good rifle. If it was fired under normal circumstances, I suppose you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Under these circumstances it should not tumble unless it should strike some object, at any range. It should go practically to the end of its flight without tumbling. But if it should strike an obstacle, that might cause it to tumble also, at any range.

Q. At short range or long range?—A. Yes, sir; at either short range or long range.

Q. So that tumbling is due to the effect upon it of striking something?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not a natural condition of the bullet?—A. Not a natural condition of the bullet when fired from a normal rifle.

Q. When the bullet is on its flight at short range there is a lateral motion of the bullet, which is called the explosive effect of the bullet when it strikes an object?—A. I do not think that can be asserted; no, sir. These bullets when they first leave the gun, although it can not be positively stated, may have a slight wobbling motion about their axis.

Q. Due to the rotation?—A. Due to the rotation, yes, sir; due to the rotation and the resistance of the air. This is a little bit of an abstruse subject, but I will try to make myself understood. Sometimes, in firing at very short range, we find that projectiles do not strike absolutely point on, not only bullets of small arms, but projectiles from artillery, and if we want them to strike directly point on, we must shift the target a little farther away. That arises from what is called the precessional motion. That is a scientific term, which means a slight revolution of the axis of the bullet around the line of flight, such as you sometimes see in a top when you first spin it. It is exactly the same kind of a motion, produced in the same way. Now, in a short distance this bullet, if the rifle and everything is in good condition and everything is proper for the projectile, will steady itself, keeping the axis of the bullet practically coincident with the projectile's trajectory, just as a top will finally go to sleep and cease its wobbling motion.

Q. What distance is necessary to make one of these bullets steady itself?—A. We have not tried to determine it.

Q. Have you not what is called the "humane zone?"—A. Not accurately determined.

Q. It is not, in the use, in the firing of these projectiles? Does it not mean that after one of these bullets has gone a distance of 400 or 500 yards it has so steadied itself that if it strikes a man it will go through him without tearing him all to pieces, and that before that time, short of that distance, it is much more apt to tear and make ugly wounds?—A. The behavior of these bullets under experiments we have made is so erratic that I can not make any generalization, and I do not believe that anybody can.

Q. Is it not true that you do speak of a "humane zone," and does not that have reference to just what I have indicated?—A. That has no general use in the military service. You will not find it in any of our instructions.

Q. No; it is not in any of the instructions, but I find it in all discussions on this subject.—A. Yes. The statements about it are nearly all speculative.

Q. I am not sure but what you have it in this book here. I have seen it in some of the official documents.—A. I do not remember it.

Q. The humane zone spoken of is that part of the flight of the bullet after it reaches a distance of 400 to 500 yards from the gun, up to the distance of 1,000 to 1,500 yards; showing that it is not accurate; but there is a portion of the flight of the bullet during which time the bullet goes much more steadily than it does during other portions of the flight?—A. I do not think there is any determination of any such zone.

Q. Did you not ever hear it spoken of?—A. I have heard it spoken of, and have heard this subject discussed a great deal.

Q. You have heard it spoken of, and it has reference to exactly the idea that I am trying to express?—A. Yes; I understand the idea and I understand the reference to it.

Q. But what you want to say is that there is nothing accurate about it?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. It may be that way, or may not be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The flight of these bullets is erratic?—A. I mean to say that this effect you speak of, this lacerating effect in a wound which takes place at different ranges, has not been tied up to the range with any accuracy.

Q. I understand you to say that; but still, during the early flight of the bullet, there is more rotation about the axis of the bullet; that is undoubtedly true, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The velocity is greater, is it not, as it leaves the gun?—A. Yes, sir; but this little precessional motion which I speak of, which is not the rotation of the bullet around its own axis, but the rotation of the axis of the bullet around the trajectory of its flight, around the line of flight—

Q. I understand.—A. That will result from the bullet leaving the bore with its axis not exactly coincident with its line of flight.

Q. I understand that exactly. That is to say, the bullet itself swings about the direct line?—A. Yes, sir. That is a very slight motion, of course.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I am very much interested in this, and I would like to ask a question right at this point. Is that the general rule as to all bullets, or is it only that they may do that? I want to get at this, whether a bullet may do that, or whether it always has that little motion?—A. The best we can say about it is that it may do it. We are satisfied that it is sometimes done. We are not satisfied that it always occurs.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You can not always tell?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whenever you have a chance, however, to demonstrate whether it does or not, is it not the case that it appears to have done it?—A. I will state it perhaps a little differently. In many cases where we have had an opportunity we have found that it does so, and we have had to move the target a very little farther back.

Q. You have not had any opportunity to determine that it did not do it in every case?—A. No, sir; but with that, the motion is very slight.

Q. Now, during this precessional flight of the bullet, if it meets with an obstruction, is it not more apt to be deflected than after it steadies itself, as you have said?—A. Although this precessional motion is very slight, I should say that the probabilities are in favor of it.

Q. And the precessional motion is during the early flight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many yards from the gun would that precessional flight extend?—A. I have no experiments on which to base an answer, but judging from all our target-practice results it would be within 100 yards—in fact, well within 100 yards.

Q. Would it not be as much as 400 or 500 yards, General?—A. No, sir; I should not think so. Our firing against screens and for penetration is made within such range as that, and the flight of the bullet proves to be direct in such cases.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to learn what the effect of a bullet passing near one would be in the matter of producing a concussion that would be felt by the individual?—A. I have heard some bullets which I thought were passing quite near to me, Senator, and the effect was simply a short, quick, sharp sound. I can illustrate it, but it could not be taken down.

Q. No; but what would be the effect on an individual if a bullet were to pass in close proximity to the face and head? Would there be a concussion that the individual would feel, aside from the noise?—A. I have never had any pass close enough to me to feel that.

Q. And you have made no experiments in that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what the effect would be of a bullet coming into a room like this from a high-power gun?—A. No, sir.

Q. For instance, passing under the ceiling above this table, would the concussion be sufficient to put out a lamp?—A. I could make no better guess as to that than anybody else.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Would it move every paper on this table?—A. I have had no experience. I could guess as to that as well as anybody else.

Q. If anybody gave such an opinion as that it would be a guess, would it not?—A. Somebody may have seen it tried, and I do not know.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. If an officer of the Army came here and testified that he had had personal experience and made personal observations of that kind, you would not be disposed to dispute his statement, would you?—A. No, sir; I would not.

Q. Or to set him down as trying to swear falsely?—A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. But suppose a man had not had the experience and just gave his opinion, you would have as much right to your opinion as he would have to his?—A. If he was in the same situation as I was in, I would think our opinions would be of about equal value.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. As to reaming out these guns, you spoke of this being something that could be done in any machine shop. Could it not be done without going to a machine shop? Are there not implements, such as hand reams, which are used by all mechanics for boring steel; or have you had any experience?—A. There are drills, hand drills.

Q. Yes.—A. And hand reamers; and if one had sufficient skill and unlimited time, and did not mind the expense, I should say that it was not impossible to ream a piece of steel out without going into a machine shop.

Q. Do you think it would be a very difficult matter with a hand ream, such as they have in general use in all machine shops of the country, to ream out the bore of one of these guns and enlarge it in the way we were talking about this morning?—A. I think it would be a very difficult matter, but I would not say it was impossible.

Q. You would not say it was impossible?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have had no experience on that point?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Just one question. What is the life of a gun—that is, before the lands become worn so that it is no longer fit for use?—A. We consider the admissible life of this model of 1903 rifle to be between 3,000 and 3,500 rounds, after which its accuracy is impaired beyond the point at which we think it ought to be used in the military service.

Q. And as to the bullet from a Springfield rifle, in passing through the tissues of the body, whether it would make a larger hole at the point of exit than at the point of entrance, you have no knowledge?—A. I mentioned one case that came under my own observation, of a Filipino.

Q. Had the bullet struck a bone in that case? Do you know whether it had been deflected or not?—A. The wound of exit was larger than the longest diameter of the bullet. The theory that is sometimes used to account for that is that it will drive a stream of blood ahead of it—a sort of semiliquid stream ahead of it—which will break out through the skin, making a gash larger than any dimension of the bullet.

Q. Of course the effect of these bullets is very erratic, and you say you can get no definite rule as to it—that is, as to the deflection—how they may be deflected?—A. By obstacles?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; that would be very erratic. A deflection by any obstacle would be very erratic, and you could not say how the bullet would go. A bullet fired normally into a homogeneous medium, such as a wooden block, would go nearly straight. I have known of instances where the bullet has been cut out, and it was found it had gone nearly straight. But where it goes into one kind of material and then into another, out of one into another, the bullet would go in almost any direction.

Q. Just what would produce the stripping of the jacket from the bullet is indefinite also, is it not?—A. It can be done in a number of ways.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What would be the effect of shooting into a wheat field or a corn field; what would be the probable effect on the bullet?—A. Well, I should not expect firing through wheat to deflect it, but firing through corn might or might not. With reference to this question that you just asked, about wounds of exit, in my statement of the theory with regard to the bullet driving a semiliquid stream before it, a bullet was at one time used, although I do not know to what extent, in the British service, or proposed, which they called the hydraulic bullet. The bullet had a little hole drilled down into the point a short distance, a quarter of an inch, and the idea of that was that that hole would fill with liquid, and that liquid would form something of a continuous body before the bullet and be driven ahead of it, and make a lacerating wound. That is speculative, also.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You have tables in this publication of the War Department giving rules for the management of the United States magazine rifle, showing what the deviations from the straight line are likely to be?—A. Yes; I think they are called there drift tables or deviation tables.

Q. Yes; drifting, horizontal deviation, you mean, from the right to the left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then is there a vertical deviation also?—A. The vertical deviation we take account of is simply that which is due to the attraction of gravity, and having the bullet drop down below the tangent of the trajectory.

Q. The deviations are sometimes to the right and sometimes to the left?—A. Yes, sir; they are sometimes to the right and sometimes to the left; generally speaking, in a rifle with a right-handed twist, they are to the right.

Q. When is it they are to the left?—A. Generally speaking, when they are to the left; that is, when the twist of the rifling is such that the bullet rotates to the left.

Q. What is the twist in our Springfield rifle?—A. To the right.

Q. Is not the deviation to the left in the first instance and to the right later?—A. The deviation in the Krag-Jørgensen rifle was at first to the left and then to the right. I do not remember exactly how that is in the Springfield rifle. But the drift is always to the right, with a right-hand twist, although the muzzle may throw to the left, and cause early deviation to the left.

Q. I call your attention to page 55 of this book. I do not know that I correctly understand it, but as I do understand it, that table is intended to show the horizontal deviation to the right and the left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understand the explanation preceding the table to be that the bullet when fired out of this Springfield rifle which has the twist of the rifling to the right, will deviate first to the left, up to 1,500 yards?—A. Yes, sir; up to 1,500 yards.

Q. And then it turns and deviates to the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it deviates as far as one-tenth of an inch at 300 yards, three-tenths of an inch at 400 yards, four-tenths of an inch at 500 yards, six-tenths of an inch at 600 yards, seven-tenths of an inch at 700 yards, eighth-tenths of an inch at 800 yards, 1.3 inches at 900 yards, 1.5 at 1,000 yards, 1.7 at 1,100 yards, 1.8 at 1,200 yards, and then reducing to five-tenths of an inch to the left at 1,500 yards, and then it deviates to the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the extent of 1.1 inches at 1,600 yards. Then at 2,500 yards it has gotten up to 39.4 inches deviation to the right, has it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These tables are based, I suppose, on experimental practice?—A. Yes, sir; on actual firing.

Q. That is without regard to the effect of the wind?—A. Yes, sir; without regard to the effect of the wind.

Q. That is a very strong deviation to the right, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is more than 3 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In addition to that deviation to the left and then to the right, there is the vertical deviation due to the decreasing of the velocity?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the effect of gravity on the bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is given also, I suppose, in this book?—A. Yes, sir; that table gives it.

Q. That is the table which I see here [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you please tell us what the deviations are, according to that table? I do not want you to go over all of those figures, there are three pages of them, but in a brief way tell us what the summit of the trajectory is; that is, I suppose, the highest point it reaches. Take, for instance, at 100 yards.—A. It rises eight one-hundredths of a foot. If the projectile is fired at a target on the same level as the muzzle of the gun, and placed 100 yards away, this means that the bullet will rise eight one-hundredths of a foot between the muzzle of the gun and the target.

Q. At 1,000 yards, how much will it rise?—A. According to this table it will rise 21.26 feet.

Q. Now, see what it is at 1,100 yards?—A. 28.03 feet. That is to say, the bullet rises 28.03 feet in going 1,100 yards.

Q. At 2,500 yards, how much does it rise?—A. At 2,500 yards it rises 325.07 feet.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. It rises 325 feet?—A. Yes, sir; in 2,500 yards, according to this table.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. No; I think we are in error, General. Let me call your attention to the fact that that is when it is fired at the range, but the distance—A. The distance from the muzzle of the gun at the highest point of the trajectory is a different affair.

Q. When you fire at a target 2,500 yards away, when the bullet is 1,452.7 yards from the muzzle of the gun it will be 325.07 feet higher than the muzzle of the gun?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. How would you ever hit anything that way?—A. You must know how far away it is. This is illustrative of the main source of inaccuracy of fire; that is, misjudgment of the range. You must know the range in order to have the bullet come down at the right place.

Q. You govern that by the gun itself?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The object of range control in the artillery is to get the range, by triangulation?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. All this is dependent upon the angles of departure and elevation, and the time of flight, as shown in this table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at page 52 we have another table headed, "Ordinates of Trajectory Above Line of Sight." One hundred yards away there is no rise at all, is there?—A. First, when firing at 100 yards range, the trajectory above the line of sight at 100 yards is zero. That is, it comes down again.

Q. If it rises at all, it comes down again?—A. Yes, sir: rises and comes down again. Now, at 200 yards range the height of the trajectory at 100-yards distance is thirty-six one-hundredths of a foot, and at 200 yards it is zero, because it comes down to it again. This table does not give the highest point, but gives the height at various points, 100 yards apart. Take the next, at 300 yards. A bullet fired at 300 yards range, at 100 yards is seventy-eight hundredths of a foot above the line of sight, at 200 yards it is eighty-three hundredths of a foot, and at 300 yards it has come down to zero again.

The CHAIRMAN. And beyond zero it would strike a point lower?

The WITNESS. Yes; unless it strikes against the target and stops. Now, going down to the bottom of the page, taking 2,500 yards range (which means that with the gun sighted at an elevation suitable for striking the target which is on the same level with the muzzle of the gun, 2,500 yards away), at 100 yards away the elevation is 31.39 feet, at 200 yards away the bullet is 68.04 feet in the air above the line of sight, at 300 yards away it is 100.79 feet in the air, at 400 yards away it is 132.45 feet in the air, and so on.

Q. Now, it is going up?—A. It is going up all the time. At 600 yards it is 191.46 feet in the air; at 700 yards it is 218.19 feet in the air.

Q. Without reading all of those figures, go to the last one.—A. At 1,200 yards it is 311.41 feet in the air. Going on to page 53, we find that at 1,500 yards it is at its highest point as given here, 324.54 feet in the air.

Q. And then it comes down to zero again?—A. At 2,500 yards it comes down to zero, on the line of sight.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. It simply describes a circle?—A. It is either a parabola or an ellipse, but it is a curve.

Q. In order to travel that distance it is necessary for it to go on a curve; it can not travel straight?—A. It must go on a curve; yes, sir. (Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF CAPTAIN WILFORD J. HAWKINS, U. S. ARMY—
Recalled.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Lieutenant Hawkins, you conducted the examination at Springfield of these bullets and shells, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to which you have testified already before the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made the microscopic examinations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to ask you first—in fact principally—a few general questions. Could these bullets that were brought to you from Brownsville, and which you examined, have been fired out of what is commonly called the Mexican Mauser?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why?—A. Because the bullets that were turned over to me measured across the grooves from 308 to 309 thousandths of an inch in diameter, and the caliber of the Mexican Mauser is 7 millimeters, which is about two hundred and eighty-six thousandths of an inch across grooves.

Q. They would have been too large for a Mexican Mauser?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How could you distinguish them from a bullet fired from a Remington or Winchester?—A. They can be distinguished from a Remington on account of the fact that the bullets that were turned over to me had four land marks, while the Remington rifles are made with seven lands; and hence the bullets coming from the Remington would have seven land marks, and the Winchester rifle has six lands, so that the bullet fired from the Winchester rifle would have six land marks, whereas the bullets turned over to me had four land marks only.

Q. They all had four lands only?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could they have been fired from the Spanish Mauser? I call it the Spanish Mauser simply to distinguish it from the Mexican Mauser.—A. The Spanish Mauser of what caliber?

Q. The ordinary caliber of those taken in the war with Spain?—A. No, sir; that is a 7.65-millimeter Mauser, which is about 0.302 inches in diameter on the caliber size.

Q. I can not hear what you say.—A. I say these bullets could not have been fired from what is called the Spanish 7.65-millimeter Mauser, because the caliber of the 7.65-millimeter Mauser is greater both as to the caliber size and as to the groove diameter. The groove diameter of the 7.65-millimeter Mauser is about 313 to 313½ thousandths, whereas in our rifle the diameter across the groove is 308 to 309 thousandths.

Q. Are there any other Mausers in use in this country—in common use?—A. There are some 7-millimeter Mausers.

Q. That is the Mexican Mauser, is it not?—A. There are several models of the 7-millimeter Mausers. They are all either 7 millimeters or 7.65 millimeters.

Q. I mean are there any other calibers except the 7 and 7.65 millimeter?—A. There are: yes, sir.

Q. Of the Mauser type?—A. No, sir; but there is an 8-millimeter rifle of the Mannlicher type.

Q. That rifle is on sale in this country?—A. Yes, sir; there are a few of them on sale in this country.

Q. Not in general use?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could these bullets have been fired from the 8-millimeter Mauser?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why?—A. Because these bullets now are smaller than the bore of the 8-millimeter Mannlicher.

Q. Is there any type of Mauser from which these bullets could have been fired?—A. Not to my knowledge: no, sir.

Q. Would a bullet fired from a Mauser exhibit, under examination, any distinguishing mark as compared with these Brownsville bullets, in size or length of the land marks?—A. Yes, sir. If one of our bullets was fired from the 7.65-millimeter Mauser, the length of the land marks on such a bullet would be less than the length of the land marks on a similar bullet fired from the model of 1903 rifle or from the model of 1898 United States rifle.

Q. Did you make any examination or tests as to the differences you have just described?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean as to the length of the land marks which you have just described?—A. I measured the length of the land marks on the last three bullets which were turned over to me. On the six bullets I did not measure the length of the land marks, because that point was not then patent to me. I did not realize that that difference existed.

Q. After you measured the land marks on these three bullets, did you then compare them with the land marks on the bullets fired from the Mauser?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the difference?—A. The length of the land marks on the three last bullets which were turned over to me corresponded in length with the length of the land marks produced by our rifles—by the model of 1898 rifle and the model of 1903 rifle.

Q. But differed from the Mauser?—A. Yes, sir. In other words, the length of the land marks on these last three bullets you turned over to me was greater than the length of the land marks as produced by a 7.65-millimeter Mauser rifle.

Q. Was that difference in length which distinguished them from the Mauser sufficient to be visible by photographing or some process of that kind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you photograph them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the photographs here?—A. Yes, sir; I have them in my bag in the other room.

Senator FORAKER. Here is the reproduction of the photograph, at page 2269 of our record.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Judging by the bullets alone, these nine Brownsville bullets might have been fired either from the Krag of the model of 1898 or from the new model Springfield of 1903? That is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By no examination that you made were you able to settle definitely any distinction between them—between the Krag and the Springfield?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see the shells that were picked up in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could those shells, with those bullets, have been used in a Krag?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. Because the shell was too large to enter the chamber of the Krag rifle and have the bolt locked into the firing position.

Q. The only rifle that would have taken those shells and bullets in combination, then, would have been the Springfield new model?—A. Those were the only Government rifles. There is a Winchester rifle which is chambered for the model of 1903 ammunition.

Q. And how many lands has that Winchester rifle?—A. That model of Winchester rifle has six lands.

Q. Six lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean, was there any rifle that would have fired those bullets out of those shells and made that number of lands, four lands, other than the new model Springfield rifle?—A. No, sir.

Senator LODGE. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, you spoke of a Winchester rifle being chambered so as to accommodate the Springfield cartridge. What do you mean by chambering the Winchester rifle?—A. I mean that the recess which is reamed in the end of the barrel is made to such dimensions that it will accommodate the 1903 cartridge.

Q. That is, by chambering a Winchester so as to accommodate this larger and longer Springfield cartridge, you mean that they simply reamed out this bore, do you not [indicating with rifle]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a very simple operation, is it not?—A. With a proper tool, it is.

Q. What would you need in order to do that?—A. We use a power-reaming machine, with several reamers.

Q. Could you not do it with a hand reamer such as is used in mechanical shops?—A. Hardly; no, sir.

Q. How much pressure can you bring to bear by the ordinary brace-and-bit reamer called the hand reamer—or are you familiar with that?—A. Yes, sir; we use that style of reamer sometime for altering the head spaces.

Q. By changing the head spaces, you mean changing the bore in the barrel so as to allow the use of a larger cartridge?—A. The head space technically is the distance from the base of the cartridge to the head of the bolt.

Q. So as to let the cartridge go clear in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the bolt will have its full and proper operation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to do that, if you were going to do it at the Springfield Arsenal, you would have the facilities for doing it?—A. Yes, sir; we can alter the head space there by a few thousandths; but if you were going to take out a considerable amount of metal, that would be a very difficult and tedious operation.

Q. They do that whenever they change the bore of the Winchester rifle?—A. The Winchester rifle that is made for the model of 1903 ammunition is made for that purpose.

Q. Do they not change them after they are manufactured?—A. No, sir.

Senator LONGE. They are manufactured that way throughout, are they not?

A. Yes, sir; they are manufactured to take the Government ammunition.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is a part of the original manufacture, as you understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any personal experience on that?—A. None, except my experience in the manufacture of arms.

Q. What is the difference between the Springfield cartridge and the Krag cartridge?—A. I can not give it to you offhand.

Q. Not more than three-eighths of an inch, is it?—A. Something like that.

Q. Not as much as half an inch?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the difference in diameter between the Springfield and Krag cartridges?—A. It is a matter of hundredths of an inch.

Q. How many hundredths, perhaps?—A. I can not say exactly, sir. I should say from an estimate that it would be perhaps three-hundredths on the diameter.

Q. It would not require a great deal of reaming, would it, in order to enlarge the bore of the rifle in order to admit that cartridge?—

A. Not a great deal, with the proper sort of reamer; but with the hand reamer, to take out three-hundredths on the diameter is a very considerable operation.

Q. Did you ever see the operation performed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have seen them try to do it with the hand reamer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did they succeed in doing it or not?—A. Well, I think you misunderstand me. I have seen the operation of reaming out a model of 1903 chamber so as to vary the head space perhaps a thousandth or two-thousandths, and even that requires considerable pressure.

Q. They do that with the hand reamer, do they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you think if they wanted to do as much as two or three hundredths of enlarging it would be a difficult operation?—A. Yes, sir; it would be quite a difficult operation, because it would be two or three hundredths over the entire surface of the chamber, which in all would amount to a considerable amount of metal.

Q. It would be simply enlarging the bore, so that the diameter of the bore would be that much greater?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if it were enlarged that way for the distance in there—that would correspond to the increased length of the Springfield cartridge over the Krag cartridge—it might fit in as well as the other cartridge, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; there would be that amount of enlargement to make on the diameter; and then besides that the shoulder in the chamber would have to be carried forward by the difference in length.

Q. So I understand. That was a part of the question, the difference in the length of the cartridge.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Lieutenant, passing from that, what did I understand you to say was the difference in the width of the lands of the 7-millimeter gun and the Springfield gun?—A. I said nothing about the width of the lands.

Q. I understood Senator Lodge to ask you about that.

Senator LODGE. That was in regard to the Winchester and Remington lands; about the number.

The WITNESS. About the number.

By SENATOR FORAKER:

Q. Well, he asked you whether or not these bullets might not have been fired out of a Mauser rifle, and you said they could not have been fired out of a Mauser rifle, because there was a difference in the width of the land, as well as in the length of the land?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was the Mauser?—A. I said nothing about the width.

Q. There is no difference in the width of the 7-millimeter or 7.62-millimeter, is there?—A. The width of the lands in the 7.65-millimeter rifle is about fifty-eight thousandths of an inch.

Q. We have here a table furnished this committee by the War Department, printed at page 1369 of our hearings, which shows that the Krag-Jørgensen modified rifle was the equivalent of the 7.62-millimeter, was it not? No. 30 caliber; number of grooves, 4. It gives the width of the groove, but the width of the land is 0.0589.—A. It is 0.058905, to be exact, as measured on the arc.

Q. That is as it is given here [indicating in table]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is the same for the Springfield, as shown by this table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am speaking of the lands now, not of the grooves. There is a difference in the grooves, is there not, very slight?—A. Yes, sir; according to the table.

Q. Hardly perceptible. It would be almost impossible to measure that difference, would it not, in a groove made on a bullet?—A. No, sir; you can measure it very accurately with the Pratt & Whitney measuring machine.

Q. The width of the land is 0.0589, as given here. That is the same also for the Springfield, and it is the same for the Krag; so that looking at a bullet and seeing four lands on it you could not tell from the width of the lands whether it was a Krag or a Springfield?—A. No, sir.

Q. They are exactly the same, intended to be. Now, we come down to the 7.65-millimeter gun. That is supposed to be in use by the army of Argentina. That is a Mauser gun. What is that the equivalent of in our caliber, in our numbering—our inches?—A. It is equivalent to 0.302.

Q. To 0.301, is it not, as given in this table?—A. Accurately, it is 0.301188.

Q. Now, what is the width of the land in that rifle?—A. As I remember, from the measurements I have made, it is about 0.0589 inches.

Q. I call your attention to what this table shows. This is supposed to be official. It says here 0.059, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the difference between 0.059 and 0.0589?—A. It is one ten-thousandth.

Q. One ten-thousandth. That is imperceptible in examining the bullet with the naked eye, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It would be difficult to measure one ten-thousandth in the width of a land, would it not?—A. It is difficult, but it is done.

Q. Yes; it can be done. Now, what is the equivalent of our .30 caliber? I will just ask you to look at that and see. It is not necessary to have it figured accurately. Is not 7.62 millimeters given in this table as the equivalent of our .30 caliber?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, our present rifle is given as having a caliber of 0.30 inch, or 7.62 millimeters. That is practically true, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then a 7.65-millimeter gun would be a little larger in the bore than our caliber .30, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It would be three-hundredths larger, would it not?—A. About eighteen ten-thousandths larger.

Q. No; it is the difference between 7.65 and 7.62, which would be three-hundredths of a millimeter, I mean.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that would be the equivalent of just one-thousandth, would it not?—A. According to that table; yes, sir.

Q. Yes; so that the 7.65-millimeter Mauser is just one-thousandth greater in caliber than our .30 caliber?—A. Yes, sir; according to the table.

Q. And that accounts for the fact that when you fire a Springfield bullet out of a 7.65-millimeter gun, the land does not make the mark quite so far up towards the point?—A. Yes, sir; but as a matter of fact the 7.65-millimeter rifles run nearer 0.302 than they do 0.301.

Q. Then this table is not accurate?—A. They always work with a tolerance, of course, in manufacturing any gun.

The CHAIRMAN. Who furnished that table to us?

Senator FORAKER. The War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. That is practically correct, but is it correct down to the ten-thousandths, out to the higher decimals? The question arises from time to time, and it seems that this table is as near as is practical, but yet it does not give down to the very small fractions.

The WITNESS. It does not go, I believe, beyond the third decimal place.

Senator FORAKER. It goes in some places to four decimal places. The length of the cartridge case is given as 2.2115. There is no practical difference between what the Lieutenant has stated and what is in the table.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, there are quite a number of 7.62-millimeter guns in use in the different armies of the world, are there not?—A. 7.62?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I do not think there are a great many of those.

Q. I will ask you to look at this table. I want to put this in the record, simply. According to this table, the arm used by the Mexican army is a Mauser, 7 millimeters in caliber, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the arm used by Argentina is a Mauser, 7.65 millimeters, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then Brazil uses a gun of 7 millimeters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Orange River uses a 7-millimeter Mauser?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Chile uses a 7 millimeter gun and Colombia uses a 7-millimeter gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Peru has a gun of 7.65 millimeters, has it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Uruguay uses 7 millimeters; Austria-Hungary has the Mannlicher, which is 8 millimeters. There is another 8-millimeter gun used by France, but that is a different gun; that is the Lebel gun; but all these 7-millimeter guns have four lands, have they not, all that I have called attention to, according to this table?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. Most of those are 7 millimeters.

Senator FORAKER. Yes; most of them are. Peru has one at 7.65, and Bolivia 7, and Russia has a Mouzin, a 7.62-millimeter gun. Turkey has 7.65.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. All those different countries I have mentioned have 7.65, have they not?

Senator WARNER. All what countries?

Senator FORAKER. That I have just mentioned now. They all have 7.65 millimeters, each with four lands.

(The stenographer here read the countries mentioned by Senator Foraker using the 7.65-millimeter gun, as follows: Argentina, Peru, and Turkey.)

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. 7.65 and 7.62 are practically the same, are they not?—A. They differ by three one-hundredths of a millimeter.

Q. Three-hundredths of a millimeter? How much is that in inches?—A. It is about eighteen ten-thousandths of an inch.

Q. You can shoot the same bullet out of either one of those guns, can you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the marking of the lands on the bullets would be practically the same, would it not?—A. As to width; yes, sir.

Q. As to width. They would not go quite so far up on the bullet in the larger-bored guns as they would in the smaller bored, of course. That is the only difference, in the length of the land marks?—

A. That, and the diameter across the grooves on the bullets would be different, of course.

Q. Now, you conducted this microscopic inspection, the report of which was submitted to us some months ago, of the shells that were supposed to have been picked up in Brownsville, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You, and who was it that engaged in that with you?—A. Mr. Spooner.

Q. You remember the one to which I refer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made that examination very carefully, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your report was carefully prepared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And entirely reliable, in your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would not retract anything now or modify anything that you have said in that report?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You have been for some time at Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been in charge, or partly in charge, of the manufacture of rifles?—A. Yes, sir; I have had charge of several of the shops at Springfield.

Q. And therefore you have a thorough practical knowledge of the manufacture of guns and rifles?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. These nine Brownsville bullets all had the marks of four lands on them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was none there with the marks of any more lands?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. And you have given the dimensions of the bullets and the weight of the bullets, respectively, accurately in your report, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as nearly as you could you have measured accurately the width of the grooves and the lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, the report puts before us in epitome everything you know in regard to the subject, as the result of that investigation?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. How long have you been in Springfield?—A. I was there from September, 1905, until the 1st of May of this year.

Q. About a year and a half?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you before you went there?—A. I was stationed at Sandy Hook.

Q. At the proving grounds?—A. Yes, sir; for about fourteen months before that.

Q. Had you had any experience in manufacturing before you went to Springfield?—A. Yes, sir; I graduated from a manual training school and also studied at Cornell in the engineering department.

Q. You had had the scientific training in the schools?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that is all the actual manufacturing you have ever been engaged in, in the year and a half or more you have been in Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. We have here in this volume the report which you made, and we have in this evidence we have taken another report which the clerk of the committee will give you, and of course your testimony given to-day will be printed to-morrow. I want to suggest, unless you have proofread them very carefully, that you do proofread all three of them.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suggest that because they are so technical; just as I asked the question, how far down the decimals went. We want to know all about it. We want to know exactly what it is, if we should stop at the first, second, third, or fourth decimal. We want to know where we are, in the figuring.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood from you that these tables are made up without extending the decimals, usually, down beyond the second or third figure, in giving dimensions?—A. That table that I just saw?

Q. Yes.—A. It appears to be accurate up to and including the third place, but not beyond that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are stationed here now, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On duty in the Ordnance Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since what time?—A. Since the 1st of May.

Q. We would not have to send to Springfield for you if we wanted you again, then?—A. No, sir.

TESTIMONY OF LIEUT. COL. FRANK BAKER, U. S. ARMY.

Lieut. Col. FRANK BAKER, U. S. Army, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Your name in full is Frank Baker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your age?—A. Fifty-seven years.

Q. What is your rank in the Army?—A. Lieutenant-colonel, in the Ordnance Department.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Army?—A. Twenty-five years in the Army and four years at the Military Academy.

Q. Where are you on duty now, Colonel?—A. At San Antonio Arsenal, Tex.

Q. How long have you been on duty there?—A. Since November 12, 1906.

Q. You were a member of the Penrose court-martial, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Purdy exhibit to you a lot of exploded shells and cartridges at San Antonio?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time was that, Colonel?—A. It was some time, I think, in the month of December. I have no means of fixing the exact date.

Q. That was the only time that he exhibited them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those were cartridges and bullets, or whatever they were, alleged to have been picked up in the streets of Brownsville, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many of those cartridges were there that you saw?—A. Well, I did not count them. I should think there were at least a dozen empty shells and three or four loaded cartridges.

Q. What ammunition was that, Colonel—those loaded cartridges?—A. That was identical in its markings with the Government ammunition which is used in the model 1903 rifle, so called.

Q. And the exploded shells, to what ammunition did they belong?—A. To the same, with this exception, that some of those shells, as I recollect it, belonged to ammunition which had been made by private manufacturers, which manufacturers had been making cartridges for the Government.

Q. When you speak of private manufacturers, what do you mean by that?—A. The United States Cartridge Company, of Lowell, Mass.; the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, of New Haven, Conn., and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, of Bridgeport, Conn., are the ones I have in mind.

Q. They manufacture the cartridges for the Government also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could those cartridges—that is, that ammunition—have been fired from a Krag?—A. No.

Q. Why not?—A. I tried the shells which were shown to me, in a Krag rifle, and it was impossible to insert them into the chamber by about half an inch, as I recollect. It was a material distance, evident to the eye.

Q. They were too long, were they?—A. Too large.

Q. Too large?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But it was the Springfield ammunition?—A. Ammunition suited to the Springfield rifle; yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. I think that is all.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. KATIE EMMA LEAHY.

Mrs. KATIE EMMA LEAHY, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Your name in full, Mrs. Leahy.—A. Katie Emma Leahy.

Q. Is your husband dead?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a soldier, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of what regiment?—A. The Eighth Cavalry.

Q. And where is your home now?—A. Brownsville, Tex.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. All my life.

Q. What is your business there, Mrs. Leahy?—A. Hotel keeper.

Q. You run what is called the Leahy Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been conducting that house?—A. About two and a quarter years, since February 8, 1905.

Q. What is the location of your house there with reference to the streets? That is, what street is it on?—A. On the corner of Elizabeth and Fourteenth streets.

Q. It is on the corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator BULKELEY. No. 3 on the map.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You were there when the colored troops came there?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Does your house extend back from Elizabeth street to the alley, or is there a back yard?—A. There is a wood shed directly on the alley, and then there is a small yard, probably about 6 feet between the kitchen and this wood shed, and the bathroom is on the alley. It extends just from there to the main street.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Is that covered or uncovered, between the kitchen and the wood shed?—A. It is uncovered, just a small piece.

Q. The wood shed is separate?—A. Yes, sir; the wood shed is separate. There is just a width of about 10 feet between the kitchen and the wood shed.

Q. How large is the wood shed, would you think, about?—A. The wood shed, bathroom, and outhouses run the length of the lot, from across the back part of the alley, and that is about 12 feet wide.

Senator FORAKER. Making 18 feet.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Twelve feet deep and then extending the depth—A. The house runs like this [illustrating], and it runs the whole length across here—the wood shed, bathroom, and outhouses. Then there is a small space of about 10 feet, 8 or 10 feet, between this wood shed and my kitchen wall.

Senator OVERMAN. About 18 feet from the kitchen wall to the alley.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. The wood shed is on the alley, is it?—A. (Referring to the map.) This is the alley. The alley is just about a foot farther out than this here.

Q. This is that alley here?—A. Yes, sir; there is at least 18 feet there between there and the alley. I have never measured it, but that is my guesswork.

Q. Between the alley and the house?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Eighteen feet?—A. Fully; yes, sir; that is, if I am guessing right.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And in that space is the wood shed, and back on the alley?—A. Within this 18 feet; yes, sir.

Q. You were in Brownsville when the colored troops came there, the Twenty-fifth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never had had any trouble with the colored troops?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Did you have any objection to the colored troops coming there?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. Nor any objection nor prejudice against a soldier, whether white or black?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. You were in Brownsville on the night of August 13, the night of the shooting up of the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you at the time the shooting commenced?—A. Inside my bedroom.

Q. Had you gone to bed?—A. No, sir.

Q. In what direction was the first shooting you heard?—A. In the direction of the post.

Q. And then how did it proceed? Did it come towards your house, down in that direction?—A. It did, sir.

Q. Are you accustomed to hearing the reports of the guns that the soldiers had in the fort there?—A. I have occasionally, sir, during target practice—I have heard them at target practice.

Q. The reports of those guns that you heard that night, the best you could tell, were they the reports of army guns that you heard?—

A. They were high-power rifles. As for saying that they were army guns, I would dislike to say so.

Q. What is that?—A. They were high-power rifles, that is all I could tell.

Q. High-power rifles. Now, the parties doing this shooting, in the first place, you located near the fort, or at the fort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then did they apparently come down the alley?—A. Did what? May I ask what was that question?

Q. The parties doing the shooting, how did they proceed, up into the town?—A. Well, I heard the shooting first, and I went upstairs and saw them shooting off of the galleries.

Q. Off of the galleries?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the gallery in sight from your window?—A. Not my bedroom, but from a window where I went, upstairs.

Q. Where was that window or room located in your house?—A. It was the third window in the upstairs, from the alley.

Q. The third window from the alley?—A. Upstairs, on Fourteenth street.

Q. How many stories is your house?—A. Two, sir.

Q. This was in the second story, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw this first shooting from the gallery?—A. No, sir; I heard the first shooting, and saw the fifth shot as the flash left the gun.

Q. The fifth shot?—A. Yes, sir; off of the balcony.

Q. Could you tell what barracks that was from?—A. The middle barracks, the second barracks from the river.

Q. That is what we call barracks B, as it is marked on the map there?

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Was it this barracks to the left of the gate as you go in there?—A. It was the second barracks. I could not see the first to the river. It was the second to the river.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. The second to the river. Here is the river down below there.—A. Then it would be B barracks that I saw, for it was the second barracks.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The second barracks from the river?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. (Pointing to the map.) This is the first one from the river, and this is the second one?—A. That is the one there—from that barracks.

Q. B barracks?—A. On the back balcony.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. It was the flash of the fifth shot that you heard from there?—A. I heard it and saw it.

Q. Saw it, I mean.—A. I saw the sixth, saw the seventh, saw the eighth, and saw the ninth.

Q. Now, after that, Mrs. Leahy, where were the parties, so far as you could judge, that were doing the shooting?—A. They were shooting indiscriminately then on the galleries, and it seemed to be between the wall and the barracks. I went downstairs and walked out into the street, because I thought it was a fire on Elizabeth street. When I was on the street the bullets flew around me.

Q. And then where did you go?—A. The first volley sort of stunned me for a moment. It surprised me. When the second volley came I realized that the town was being shot on, and I went back and went upstairs into this window and watched them still shooting off the barracks and heard them shooting in the post.

Q. At first you thought it was a fire?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Now, did you see the parties near your place when they came down there near your house?—A. Yes, sir; after that—some time after that.

Q. Well, what did you see there?—A. I heard them still shooting up the alley. They stopped at the mudhole, turned around, and shot into the Cowen house. They walked around the mudhole and then shot into the Cowen house.

Q. The Cowen house is just across Fourteenth street from your house?—A. Yes, sir. They stopped in the middle of the street. When they stopped in the middle of the street one man touched the other on the shoulder and looked up at the window where I was and said something that I could not understand. The other man looked up and said, "No; keep straight ahead and shoot to the front." and a volley was shot down the alley towards the Miller Hotel.

Q. You heard those voices. Did you see the faces of the party?—A. Distinctly—of those two men only.

Q. Of those two men. What were they—colored men or white men?—A. They were two negroes. One was a black man, the other was a yellow-faced negro, with spots on his face, and distinctly negro features.

Q. How were they dressed—in citizens' clothes or soldiers' uniforms?—A. No, sir; they had soldier clothes on—khaki suits on—and one had a blue shirt.

Q. They were in plain view of you at that point?—A. Clearly; yes, sir.

Q. Where were they when you saw them?—A. Right in the middle of the street, sir.

By Senator LONGE:

Q. In the middle of Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Well, then, which way did the shooting continue?—A. Up the alley, sir; up towards the Miller Hotel.

Q. Up towards the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Miller Hotel was on Thirteenth street?—A. Thirteenth street.

Q. Did you see any more of the parties there?—A. Yes, sir; there was fourteen other men with them.

Q. How did you know there were fourteen?—A. I counted them, and I am sure there were fourteen others; I may have made a mistake in the counting, but I doubt it.

Q. Did you notice how those others were dressed?—A. They were in khaki uniform.

Q. Were they colored soldiers?—A. I think so. I did not see them clearly or distinctly.

Q. You did not see their faces?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. But they were dressed in the soldiers' uniform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are quite clear about that, Mrs. Leahy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was it that you saw those two, you say, so distinctly?—

A. Because they were looking up at the window when the men shot around them. They were looking straight at me and I saw them.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Which way were those men facing?—A. Looking straight at me, and I was looking at them, as they said "Keep straight ahead and shoot to the front." I could not help but see them.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Was your house shot into at all?—A. Yes, sir; there were two bullet holes in my kitchen wall, and, I believe, four in the back fence.

Q. Now, these parties, in what direction were they going, if at all, when you first saw them?—A. They were coming up the Cowen alley towards the hotel.

Q. And they got out into Fourteenth street from the Cowen alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were in the street; that is, the parties were going in the direction of Twelfth street on the alley; that is, going across the street there, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anything more of them that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What next did you see?—A. About fifteen minutes after, my daughter, my sister, one of Mr. Cowen's children, and Mr. Elkins saw six of them returning to the post, and I presume an hour after, I saw one of the men that I saw shooting in the alley go back with Captain Lyon and his company.

Q. You thought one of those men you saw with Captain Lyon was one of those men that you saw in the street?—A. I do not think so, sir; I am positive of it.

Q. Which one was that?—A. It was the black man, a dark, black face.

Q. Where were you at the time the company returned—Captain Lyon's company?—A. I was standing at my front gate with Herbert Elkins.

Q. How near did they pass by you?—A. About 5 or 6 feet, sir.

Q. About how many shots were fired in all there?—A. Not less than 300 or more than 500—between 300 and 500, sir.

Q. The shooting up of the town created a great deal of excitement there, did it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mrs. Leahy, you keep a hotel there, and a good many people stop at your house, do they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From that night on have you ever heard any opinion expressed there, other than that it was the negro soldiers who did the shooting up of the town?—A. No, sir; unless it was some strangers from the North that knew no better.

Q. Strangers from the North—what do you mean by that?—A. I mean guests coming in my house: the majority of them were from the North.

Q. Mr. Leekie stopped at your house, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; several times.

Q. What was his business there?—A. Lieutenant Leekie told me one time he had been sent down there to examine the windows where we saw the shooting from, also to trace the bullet shots in the houses.

Q. Did you go with him to the window?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Could you see the barracks from where you were standing there?—A. Yes, sir; two-thirds of it.

Q. You showed them to him?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What did Lieutenant Leckie say to you, if anything, about the parties who had done the shooting up of Brownsville?—A. What did he say to me about it?

Q. Yes; as to how it was done.—A. I don't think Lieutenant Leckie ever expressed his opinion in my presence.

Q. How many times was he there after the shooting?—A. Two or three times, I don't remember exactly, but it was two or three times.

Senator Scott. I have to go, and I want to ask this lady just one or two questions, so that I may understand her.

Senator Warner. Certainly.

By Senator Scott:

Q. Madam, you say that these two men whom you saw so distinctly came up this alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were at the window here [referring to the map]. Did they turn up this street?—A. Yes, sir: they came up the alley, turned into Fourteenth street, and stood about where that No. 4 is, right there.

Q. Right in the center of the alley?—A. In the center of Fourteenth street. I was right in the window, right there, sir.

Q. How far was it from the window to where the two stood, when you heard them talking?—A. It must have been at least 35 feet away, sir, fully that, if not more.

Q. Were you a witness before the grand jury?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you knew that man in Captain Lyon's company, when he went back to the fort why didn't you point him out and have him arrested?—A. Because I was never asked to do so, sir.

Q. But you could have picked him out?—A. I could have picked out the two men. I am sure I could have picked out those two men if I had seen those troops at that time; and one of them, if ever I see him again I will recognize him.

By the Chairman:

Q. Did you know the men's names?—A. No, sir; I never saw them before that night.

By Senator Foraker:

Q. Have you ever testified before?—A. I testified before Mr. Purdy and before the Penrose court-martial, sir.

By Senator Lodge:

Q. As to those two men whom you saw there in the middle of the street, were they in the light of the Cowen house?—A. No, sir; I had a lantern back of me in the window, and when they shot the guns, the flash of the guns threw the profile of their faces so clearly that I saw them as clearly as I see you at present; but it was only those two that I saw clearly, and I saw that they were colored people, and in the uniform of the United States Army.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There is no lamp in the alley, is there, Mrs. Leahy?—A. No, sir; the nearest lamp in the street is on the corner of Elizabeth street, and the light that I had back of me.

Q. I want to get that a little more accurately. This spot on the map to which I point, No. 3, represents your hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That fronts on Elizabeth street and also on Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were in your room upstairs, about to retire, as I understand it?—A. No, sir; my room is downstairs, and I went upstairs, into a room upstairs.

Q. You were downstairs when the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many shots did you hear at first?—A. Four.

Q. Well, were they fired in rapid succession?—A. No; the first three shots seemed to be a little scattering; they did not seem to come from the same gun, sir.

Q. Different kinds of guns?—A. No, sir; they were the same sound, but not as if they had been shot from one gun, and shot at a distance.

Q. They were high-power shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to the reports?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the way it sounded to you—those were the very first shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, can you tell us where those four shots were fired from?—A. No, sir; I would give a whole lot if I could. They came from the direction of the post, but I did not see them.

Q. You were downstairs in your hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, about where in the hotel was your bedroom?—A. Right opposite.

Q. Not in the building which is there indicated?—A. No; my back stairs run right back, and my room runs like this [indicating on the map].

Q. The wood shed and the other outhouses you speak of front on the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they are about 12 feet in depth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They run from Fourteenth street up the alley a distance of how far?—A. Fifty feet, I think.

Q. Then you have a separate, detached building from that shown on this map?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that detached building you have your bedroom?—A. Yes, sir; right in here [indicating].

Q. That is right in this court, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Made by the "L" of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how far is it away from the main building? Do you have to go out of the main building?—A. Yes, sir; I have to go entirely out of the main building and cross the yard to get into my room, and it must be about the distance from here to that window [indicating].

Q. As far as from here to that window?—A. Surely.

Q. That would be 20 feet?—A. It is fully that, sir.

Q. Your room, in which you were about to retire, is in a separate building from that shown on this map, separated by a distance of about 20 feet from the main part of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far is it from this L to which I am now pointing?—A. Just about that distance.

Q. About the same?—A. Yes, sir; about that.

Q. Is it that distance also from this?—A. No, sir; I do not think it is quite that far from there, and the staircase I went up was right here [indicating].

Q. You came out—A. I came out of that room there and crossed the yard and went upstairs into the room.

Q. You heard four shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were still in your room?—A. No, sir; I heard one, and went upstairs immediately, to see where the fire was.

Q. Did the first shot cause you to go upstairs?—A. It did, sir; because I thought it was a fire.

Q. How much time elapsed from the firing of the first shot until the second, third, and fourth shots?—A. It must have been two or three seconds.

Q. They were all fired, then, before you went upstairs?—A. Those four were; yes, sir.

Q. Those four were all fired before, and you could not locate them accurately?—A. No, sir.

Q. Because that building was between you, evidently, and where they were firing?—A. Yes, sir; I don't know where they came from.

Q. You went upstairs, then, into what story of that building?—A. The second story.

Q. Is that a two or a three story building?—A. Two-story.

Q. Only two stories; and how many rooms are there in the L part, fronting on Fourteenth street?—A. Three.

Q. Well, were you in one of the rooms in this L part? I call the narrow part the L part.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the front of that a two-story building?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is only one story?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it is only the rear that is two stories, and you were in which one of those rooms—the one next to Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir; the one next to Elizabeth.

Q. Now, about how long is this L, the narrow building? That is, how far was it from the rear of your building to the window out of which you looked?—A. I should judge, sir, about 30 feet.

Q. You said your wood shed stood on the alley, fronting on the alley, and it was 12 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you thought it was 10 feet from the wood shed to the rear of your kitchen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your kitchen is at the rear of this second-story L?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be 12 feet for the wood shed, and 10 feet for the space between would be 22, and then what is the size of those rooms upstairs—are they all the same size?—A. No, sir; the room I was in is a good deal larger than the other two.

Q. How large was the room on the end of that L?—A. I never measured it.

Q. No; but can you get at it?—A. Yes, sir; I think about 12 feet wide.

Q. And that was occupied by Mr. Elkins?—A. Mr. Elkins, and the next by Mr. Parks.

Q. By Judge Parks?—A. Yes, sir; and I was in the next window. The other window was right here, about in the middle.

Q. The Elkins room would be about 12 feet, and Judge Parks's room about 12 feet?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. And then the room you were in was about how large a room?—A. Mine was a little bit larger, probably 14 feet, but the window was in the middle.

Q. So that it would be 12 feet for the wood shed and 10 from the wood shed to the rear, then two rooms of 12 feet each, 24 feet, would make 46 feet, would it?—A. It would, fully, sir.

Q. And then your window was about in the middle of your room?—A. I think it was about 50 feet from the window where I was to the alley.

Q. About 50 feet from the window where you stood to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you saw first the flashes of shots from B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understood you to say that you had counted so accurately that this flash that you saw was the flash of the fifth shot that you heard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you heard the sixth, the seventh, the eighth, and the ninth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And saw the flashes also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were all fired one after another, from the rear of B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could not be mistaken about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were looking out of that window in the upper story of your L at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was immediately opposite you?—A. My house and the Cowen house, with a yard between.

Q. That is to say, you had an annex fronting on Elizabeth street, on the opposite side of Fourteenth from you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Running back towards the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about what is the distance from the Cowen house to the rear of that annex of yours? What is the space between the two houses?—A. It must be fully the width of this room; that is, 20 to 25 feet, I think.

Q. Well, this is 25 feet wide.—A. Fully as wide as this.

Senator WARNER. I will say this room is 20 feet wide.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Well, 20 feet.—A. Remember that I am not a mathematician. I have no education. You ask me these things, and I am guessing at them. If you wanted exact measurements, you should have told me and I would have taken them before I came up here.

Q. No, we don't want that. All we want is just your best judgment. We understand that. Your view of the barracks was from your window up in that upper story, out between the Cowen house and the rear of your annex?—A. No, sir; the side of my house, not the rear; the side of my house and the Cowen house both face in Fourteenth street.

Q. Yes; I understand they do.—A. This is my house.

Q. Your view, I say of the barracks was gotten from the window, looking between the two houses, out to the barracks?—A. I saw two-thirds of it.

Q. Well, I will get to that. Now, is there anything standing between the rear of your annex and the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir; an orange tree.

Q. There is an orange tree standing there, isn't there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was in August. Was that in leaf at that time?—A. I don't know.

Senator FORAKER. Let me have the copy of the Purdy testimony.

Senator LODGE. Here is the photograph.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. We have a picture here [showing witness picture No. 13].—
A. That is it, but that picture was taken several months after.

Q. When was it taken—in December, was it not?—A. When Mr. Purdy was there. He was down the latter part of December. Yes, I believe, that is correct.

Q. He was there Christmas week, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he took the picture Christmas week?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This tree probably had as many leaves on it in August as it did Christmas week?—A. Maybe more.

Q. More, I should judge it would have.

Senator LODGE. I did not know that orange trees shed their leaves.

A. No; but it did not obstruct my view.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. We see in the picture a tree. It did not obstruct your view at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw right through that tree?—A. I saw through the leaves and over that.

Q. You saw through the leaves?—A. I saw through that and saw them on the gallery; saw men moving and saw the shooting.

Q. You saw the men who were doing this firing moving back and forth, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw them by the light of the flashes of the guns?—A. And lanterns that they had.

Q. And they had lanterns, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Walking up and down there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men did you see moving back and forth on the upper porch of B barracks?—A. I never counted them.

Q. Well, can you give us any idea?—A. No, sir.

Q. All you can remember is that you saw men?—A. Moving back and forth.

Q. Were they in uniform?—A. I could not tell you, sir; could not see.

Q. Could you tell?—A. No, sir; I could not see that far.

Q. Well, you could see that there were men there moving back and forth?—A. Yes, sir; I could see that there were men moving back and forth, but I could not tell at that distance what they had on.

Q. You could not tell what they had on. Could you tell whether they had guns?—A. No, sir; but when they shot I saw the flashes of the guns. I knew they were guns. Anyhow I heard the reports and supposed they were guns.

Q. You heard the reports when they fired and you saw the flashes of the guns. Didn't they light up the situation so you could see?—
A. Yes, sir; but not at that distance; I could not see.

Q. Not at that distance?—A. No, sir; that is about 280 or 300 feet away from me.

Q. What kind of a night was that?—A. It was what I would call a dark, starry night, sir.

Q. More than usually dark—a dark, starlight night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But it was more than usually dark, was it not?—A. Well, I would call it a dark, starry night, I don't know what you would call it. It was a dark night and starlight.

Q. That is all right. Now, let us get back. You saw these men fire, and then, at sometime, you went downstairs again, as I understood your testimony?—A. I did.

Q. Just when was that? You will excuse me for asking you, because I could not hear everything you said in reply to Senator Warner.—A. I am up here to be asked anything you care to, and I will answer you truthfully and to best of my ability.

Q. Yes; I have no doubt you will answer to the best of your ability.—A. Oh, and truthfully, remember.

Q. Now, let me ask you at what time it was you went downstairs again?—A. I went downstairs while these men were shooting in the Cowen alley and let two policemen into my yard and locked them in the bathroom.

Q. You saw just two men come up the alley, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Let me get it correctly. You first saw two men, did you?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You did not see two men?—A. No, sir; there were sixteen of them.

Q. Didn't you state to Senator Warner that you first saw two men come up the alley?—A. I saw two men distinctly, but I did not see those two men come up the alley alone.

Q. You saw sixteen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You counted them; saw them distinctly.—A. Only two distinctly.

Q. You saw only two distinctly?—A. Distinctly; yes, sir.

Q. And you saw them distinctly when—when they fired their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the flashes of the guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no other light by which you could see them?—A. Only the corner lamp and the lantern that I had back of me.

Q. Only the what?—A. Only the corner lamp and the lantern I had back of me.

Q. The lamp on the corner is this lamp on Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think that throws any light on the alley down at Fourteenth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It threw light all the distance down there?—A. Not all the distance, but part of it. Some trees shade the other part of the street.

Q. Are there any trees in front of your house on Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; they shade part of the street.

Q. A row of trees is right along there, isn't there?—A. Two.

Q. Two trees?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not two rows of trees?—A. Two trees.

Q. And then there is a tree right opposite the Cowen house, on the corner, is there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a tree is that?—A. I believe they are ash trees.

Q. What kind of trees are those two in front of your house?—
A. Ash trees.

Q. How tall are they? Are they as tall as the house?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Now, when these 16 men came up, then, they came up all together, did they?—A. There was two, and a few feet farther back there was four, and then ten.

Q. And then ten?—A. They were within a space, I suppose—the space was probably as far as from here to that gentleman there.

Q. You saw the two first?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then how far was it back to the four?—A. They were 2 or 3 feet back.

Q. You saw four men more, and then how far back were the other ten?—A. A few feet back were the other ten. They seemed to be scattered. They did not seem to be just exactly together; seemed to be bunched.

Q. These ten were scattered?—A. Yes, sir; seemed to be bunched.

Q. Were the four marching abreast?—A. No, sir; two, and then the other two back of them.

Q. So they came up two by two?—A. Well, I don't know as you would call it two by two; two in front and a space, and then back of them were four, and then these others were bunched.

Q. The four were two by two, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the ten were in a bunch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, who did the firing there at the corner?—A. Those men did.

Q. The two men, or did all join in the firing?—A. Two men shot at that mudhole, and then—

Q. Let me locate that mudhole, now. Where was that—in the alley before they got to Fourteenth street?—A. No, sir; right in front of the Cowen house, right at the right of the tree.

Q. The mudhole was just as they came out of the alley onto Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; but in front of the Cowen house.

Q. In front, you mean by the corner of the Cowen house?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. The mudhole was in the alley, was it not?—A. No, sir; on Fourteenth street.

Q. On Fourteenth street—the mudhole was on Fourteenth street, right at the edge of the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said they walked around the mudhole?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did they stop right at the mudhole?—A. Stopped right in front of the mudhole.

Q. Right in front of the mudhole; that is, on Fourteenth street?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then from that point they shot into the Cowen house?—
A. I saw them shoot back, but I would not like to say it was into the Cowen house, sir.

Q. Did you see any shooting into the Cowen house?—A. I did.

Q. I mean, except what they did there?—A. At the mudhole?

Q. Yes.—A. The time that I saw them shoot deliberately into the Cowen house was when they started to go up the alley; some of them started up Fourteenth street, turned back, and shot into the Cowen house, and went on up the alley.

Q. Was that before they reached the mudhole?—A. It was after, and after they had crossed the street; after I had seen them, sir.

Q. That is, they did not shoot into the Cowen house, so far as you observed, until after they had passed the mudhole and had crossed Fourteenth street?—A. I think—when I saw them shooting at the mudhole, I think they shot up in the air. They seemed to shoot over. They held their guns up like that [illustrating], and it seemed to go over the houses.

Q. That was right at the corner of the alley and Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then they passed to the other side of Fourteenth street—that is, the side opposite the Cowen house—and stopped and fired from a point—A. They stopped in the middle of the street again, and that is when I saw those negroes.

Q. I wish you would take this pointer and step to the map and tell me just where they stood when they were doing the firing.—A. When I first saw them, I saw the flash of the guns right here [indicating], but I could not see them.

Q. You saw the flashes of the guns, but could not see the men at all?—A. I could not see the men at all; I could only see the light and hear the reports of the guns there. When they got here to the mudhole they stopped and walked around it, and then they shot back, and it seemed to me the guns were pointed over the houses.

Q. That is, they shot into the air?—A. Yes, sir; and one of the men turned around; it seemed his gun got caught; I don't know what happened to it, and the other man seemed to help him with it, and they walked in the middle of the street. There is where they looked up and saw me at the window.

Q. That was right in there [indicating on the map]?—A. Yes, sir; right in there.

Q. Right in the middle of the alley and the middle of Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; and that is when I saw two of those men.

Q. At that time?—A. Yes, sir; and then is when he said, "Keep straight in front and shoot ahead."

Q. That is the nearest point they were to you?—A. He recognized me. He could not help but recognize me. They said, "Mrs. Leahy."

Q. You heard them say, "Mrs. Leahy?"—A. I heard them say, "Mrs. Leahy. Keep straight to the front and shoot ahead."

Q. You heard them say, "That is Mrs. Leahy?"—A. Not "That is Mrs. Leahy," but "Mrs. Leahy. Keep straight to the front and shoot ahead." They were both looking up, and the other men were shooting around them, and I could not help seeing those two men.

Q. Right there the men round about them fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they fire—in what direction?—A. Up the alley.

Q. Up toward the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not then firing back towards the Cowen house?—A. No, sir.

Q. About how many shots were fired right about there?—A. I think there must have been about ten of them shooting—eight or ten.

Q. And while eight or ten were shooting around them, they were looking up at you, and then you could see them distinctly?—A. I saw them distinctly.

Q. One was a very dark man, a negro, and the other was a mulatto?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the mulatto had a spot on his face?—A. He had spots on his face. I could see spots, something on his face; I could not see distinctly, spots or pimples or something, I could see spots on his face.

Q. I do not know that I understand you. You saw spots, but can not tell whether they were pimples or not?—A. I could not tell. They were spots, blacker than his face.

Q. About how many spots were there?—A. I could not possibly tell. I did not count. I saw spots all over his face.

Q. If he was such a singularly spotted man as that, he would be easy to find, wouldn't he?—A. I think if ever I lay eyes on the man I will recognize him.

Q. You think you would?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is he the man that you saw in Captain Lyon's company?—A. No, sir; it was the black man I saw in Captain Lyon's company.

Q. You did not see the spotted man in with him?—A. No, sir; I have never seen him since.

Q. But the black man who was with him you did see?—A. I saw him with Captain Lyon's company.

Q. What was there about him that enabled you to distinguish him from everybody else?—A. His features. I believe, sir—I dislike to say that I could recognize him to-day, but I did that night.

Q. You recognized him, then, distinctly?—A. Yes, sir; then I did. I saw those men leave there, and they started up this way; some started up the alley, and some started this way. Those two that started this way turned back, when they got out of the alley, turned back and shot into the Cowen house. That is one of the shots that broke the mirror.

Q. Two men turned from the alley, up towards your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And came in as far into the alley, according to the way you pointed, as to the rear of your house?—A. No, sir; they came up about 5 feet.

Q. About 5 feet from the alley, into Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; then they turned.

Q. Shot into the Cowen house?—A. And went back up in the alley.

Q. And when they got into the alley at Fourteenth they turned and shot into the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the shot that broke the mirror?—A. I am sure, sir; one of the shots that broke the mirror.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you ask her whether the two men who did that were the ones she recognized?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Were those the two men that you recognized?—A. I don't think they were. At that point I could not say whether they were the same men or not.

Q. Did you see anybody down here right immediately in front of your house?—A. Firing—no sir.

Q. Nobody there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you, from where you were, see those men who were firing into the rear of the Cowen house while they were yet in the alley?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Q. You could not see that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And then when they went up the alley around the corner they disappeared from your sight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the last you saw of them until you saw them returning?—A. I saw six return, sir.

Q. Six of the fourteen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they came down Elizabeth street?—A. No, sir; they went back by the alley, the way they came.

Q. And where were you when they passed?—A. In the same window.

Q. You were still in your window?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what point was it that you left this room upstairs, and your position at the window, and went downstairs?—A. I left that window three times, sir, during the shooting. I went out on Elizabeth street once. I went downstairs and put some policemen in my bathroom, hid them.

Q. I will get to that in a minute.—A. Then I went across and brought the Cowen family over into my house, before I saw those men go back.

Q. The first time you left, you went upstairs and looked out and saw them firing from the upper gallery of B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you stood there and watched awhile, and then for some reason you went downstairs?—A. I went downstairs because when I saw them shooting off the galleries, I was positive it was a fire in the post, and my house opposite was empty that night, and for my own self-protection I went over to take care of my own property, and walked out in the middle of the street to see where the fire was at, and the bullets flew around me, and I realized 'hat the town was being shot up.

Q. You went downstairs and came out on the Elizabeth street front of your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And passed out onto Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Crossed Fourteenth street?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Over to your empty house?—A. No, sir; I walked out in the alleyway and stood right out there. This is my alley—a little alleyway in there—and that is always left open for the benefit of guests that come in late at night, and I stood right out here.

Q. You stood right in front of your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not go over to the other house?—A. No, sir.

Q. While you were standing here shots were passing over your head?—A. Yes, sir; all around me.

Q. Where did they seem to come from?—A. I saw flashes come from this gate and from here [indicating].

Q. You saw flashes coming out of the main gate of the garrison?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And coming over the garrison wall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. East of the gate?—A. On that side.

Q. On the side of the gate opposite from the river?—A. No, sir; this way. I stood here facing the gate. They came this way.

Q. They came from the gate towards you?—A. To the left of the gate.

Q. They came from over the wall to the right of the gate as they looked out towards you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to the left of the gate as you looked up towards them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see those flashes?—A. I could, sir.

Q. How many shots were fired down the street while you were standing there?—A. I don't know.

Q. You have no idea?—A. No, sir.

Q. No idea whatever?—A. None whatever. They sounded like a whole lot to me while I was standing out there.

Q. Sounded like a whole lot. How long do you think you stood there?—A. I suppose it must have been a couple of seconds. They shot a second time, and that brought me back to my senses and I got in.

Q. You stood there long enough to see a lot of shots from the gate and a lot of shots from the wall by the side of the gate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you went back into your house and went upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And looked out again towards this second barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you saw them still firing from the upper gallery?—A. I saw a few shots from off the upper gallery, and a few shots came from the bottom gallery. They seemed to me from the top gallery and the bottom gallery.

Q. That is, they were firing from the lower gallery as well as from the upper gallery?—A. I saw flashes from the lower gallery and the top gallery.

Q. About how many shots did you see—how many flashes from the lower gallery?—A. I did not count them, sir; I don't know.

Q. Give us some idea.—A. I can not do it. I did not keep track of them at all.

Q. You counted at the beginning?—A. Yes, sir; because it was customary for me to count shots when I would hear them.

Q. It is customary. Do you hear shots frequently?—A. Occasionally.

Q. Occasionally, and you always count the shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You counted the first shots, but those got too many for you, and you stopped counting?—A. Oh, I had stopped counting long before that.

Q. How long did they fire from the upper gallery and the lower gallery, then, after you went upstairs the second time?—A. Oh, I don't know, it must have continued fully ten minutes from the time of the first shots until I saw them shooting at the Cowen house.

Q. Until you saw them shooting into the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was fully ten minutes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the time when you saw the first shots until you saw them shooting into the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it when you went back up there the second time that you saw those men come down the alley and cross Fourteenth street?—A. No, sir; I had already been down a second time out of that room, sir.

Q. You saw those men come down the alley and cross Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you went down the first time, didn't you?—A. Oh, no; oh, no, sir; long after that.

Q. Long after that?—A. Yes, sir; ten minutes is a long time when there is a lot of shooting.

Q. Yes; it is a good while. We want to get as near the facts as we can. So it was after you went up the second time that you saw the men come down the alley and cross Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, was it while you were there the second time that you saw it?—A. That I saw what?

Q. Saw these men come down and do that shooting at the corner of the alley and Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, at the same time you saw them shooting from B barracks, did you?—A. No, sir; after they came out in the alley I saw no more shooting in the post, sir.

Q. All this shooting was before they came into the alley?—A. Yes, sir; the shooting that I saw from the barracks was all before they came into the alley.

Q. How long was it from the time you saw the first shots until you saw them shooting here at Fourteenth and the alley?—A. It must have been ten minutes, fully.

Q. About how long did that firing continue after?—A. I think the firing must have continued about ten minutes longer.

Q. About twenty minutes all together?—A. The firing, from the first shot until I saw those men returning back to the post, was just thirty minutes.

Q. And the firing continued down the alley towards the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir; it must have been ten or fifteen minutes that they kept shooting up the street.

Q. Well, now, you said you went down a second time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that after they had crossed the alley?—A. No, sir.

Q. Crossed Fourteenth street, I mean?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they still at Fourteenth and the alley?—A. No, sir; they were up in the Cowen alley somewhere, and two policemen came along and asked where the fire was, and I told them there was no fire, that the negroes were shooting up the town, told them to jump in at my gate, and I put them in my bathroom, and told them under no penalty to leave there until I told them, for no reason whatever to leave there, it did not matter who came in; to stay there until I let them out; which they did.

Q. And they did that?—A. Yes, sir; I am to blame for it. I showed my cowardice by not leaving them out there and fighting with them.

Q. Nobody has made any charges against anybody on that account that I know of. Was it the second time you came downstairs that you discovered them?—A. It was the second time. It was only about two seconds after that that I saw those soldiers cross that street.

Q. This was when you came downstairs the first time or the second time?—A. The second time, sir.

Q. I understood you to say it was when you went back upstairs the second time that you saw the soldiers come out of the alley and cross Fourteenth street?—A. Well, that was the second time I went upstairs. The first time I walked out on Elizabeth street, and the second time I came down and put the two policemen in the house, in the bathroom.

Q. Did you see the policemen before you came downstairs?—A. Why, yes; they were right under my window, and asked where the fire was.

Q. They did not say they were running away from the soldiers?—

A. They did not know the soldiers were out shooting, sir. They thought it was a fire.

Q. Were they on duty there?—A. They were—not on that block; I don't know who they were.

Q. Where did they come from?—A. I don't know.

Q. How did they happen to be there at that hour?—A. They were hunting the fire.

Q. Well, were they running or walking?—A. No, sir; they were walking.

Q. And they spoke to you while they were down on the street and you were upstairs at that window?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They called up to you?—A. They asked me, "Where is the fire?"

Q. And you ran down and put them in the bathroom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they want to know why you wanted to put them in the bathroom?—A. I told them the negroes were shooting up the town.

Q. You told them you had already found out what was going on?—A. Yes, sir; I had, out on Elizabeth street.

Q. Don't you think they ought to have gone out and looked after that trouble?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. They were but two men, with six-shooters, with probably half a dozen shots, and I knew the negroes were well armed. I knew the negroes would not come out to shoot up the town without they were well armed.

Q. You knew that?—A. Positively, or they would never have left the post. They never would have left the post if they had not had plenty of ammunition.

Q. At that time you did not recognize anybody?—A. I had not seen them yet. They had not come up there.

Q. So it was after you had come downstairs a second time and put the policemen in the bathroom and gone up the stairs a third time that you saw—A. That was the second time. I only came down twice then. I went out on Elizabeth street once, and came down and put the policemen in the house the second time.

Q. What I want to know is, whether you saw these soldiers come up the alley and stop at Fourteenth street and do this firing before you put the policemen in the bathroom?—A. No, sir; I saw them about a second after.

Q. You had put the policemen away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a place of safety?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you had seen the soldiers, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you knew before you saw those soldiers that it was the negroes shooting up the town?—A. Certainly; with those shots from the post, sir, I could not help but know it.

Q. What was that remark?—A. I said I could not help but know it, when I saw the shots coming from the post.

Q. Do you know Mr. Louis R. Cowen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He lives right opposite you there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him that afternoon or that evening?—A. I saw him, sir, about a half an hour before the shooting.

Q. You saw him about a half an hour before the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you see him at that time?—A. Now, wait; that is a mistake of mine. It must have been an hour—between an hour and a half an hour before—at my house.

Q. Was he in your house, or where was he?—A. He was on my front gallery.

Q. Have you what we call a porch?—A. Yes, sir; well, a porch on Washington street and on Elizabeth street, all around the house is a porch.

Q. Yes; that is indicated here; that is, the porch. He came in onto your gallery and sat there and talked to you, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir; and Judge Parks, and I don't know who else. There was a couple of guests.

Q. How long did he talk with you there?—A. He must have been there probably a half an hour.

Q. What did you talk about?—A. Well, that is more than I can tell you, sir, for I don't remember.

Q. Was there anything said about any trouble likely to happen in town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who spoke of that?—A. Mr. Cowen and Mr. Parks and myself.

Q. What did Mr. Cowen say about it?—A. Mr. Cowen said—the Evans affair had happened the night previous, and he said that if any one of those niggers ever touched or insulted his wife, one of his children, or one of his lady friends, that he would take his Winchester and go down and kill them.

Q. He said that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Right there on your porch that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say anything about making preparations to kill them?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Didn't he say anything about having bought some ammunition that afternoon?—A. No, sir; not that night.

Q. He did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't he tell you? I ask you to think about it; you need not answer until to-morrow.—A. I don't need to think it over. He told me the next day, but that night he did not tell me he had made any preparation at all.

Q. He did not tell you that evening before the shooting that he was afraid there was going to be trouble on account of this Evans matter?—A. Oh, that was general talk all over town, sir.

Q. All over town, they were talking about the Evans matter, were they?—A. That is what I understood.

Q. There was a great deal of indignation on account of it?—A. Most naturally, sir.

Q. Yes; of course, it would be very natural; but they were talking it over freely, all over town, were they?—A. I was told so. I did not hear it; I was told so, but I never left my home.

Q. You heard this from everybody you talked with, didn't you?—A. No; I heard it, general conversation in the house.

Q. You heard it from Mr. Cowen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he pretty violent in his talk?—A. No, sir; that is all he said.

Q. He only said he would kill them?—A. Yes, sir; and any other man would say the same thing, you or any other man.

Q. Oh, I expect so.—A. I know it.

Q. Now, did he say anything at all—you may think about it until morning—about having purchased a lot of ammunition?

Senator WARNER. Why should she think about it until morning when the lady has already answered the question?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I ask the question again.—A. There is no necessity for my thinking about it, because I remember very distinctly he did not say that night that he had bought any ammunition or that he had made any preparation; but the next day he told it in my courtyard or some part of the house.

Q. That is, the next day he did tell you that he had gone out the day previous and bought some shells, but it was the day after he made that assertion. That will do until to-morrow morning. I will have to ask you to come back again to-morrow morning.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

UNITED STATES SENATE,

Friday, June 7, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Scott (acting chairman), Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, Pettus, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. KATIE EMMA LEAHY—Continued.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Just a word or two. I asked you last evening whether you remembered about Mr. Cowen telling you the night of the 13th, before the firing, that he had purchased some ammunition that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you did not, but that he told you that the following day.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, who were these two policemen whom you shut up in your house?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you not know their names?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see them around about your part of the town?—A. Yes, sir; I know all the policemen by their faces, but I do not know who they are. I do not know their names.

Q. You do not know their names?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were these two policemen on duty there that night?—A. I do not think so. I think they were just walking around to see where the fire was.

Q. Where were they when you first saw them?—A. They turned the corner of Elizabeth street and were coming down towards the alley.

Q. On Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was before the soldiers had come up as far in the alley as Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that orange tree that stands between your Annex and the Cowen house is higher, is it not, than the window in your second story? I will ask you to look at this photograph.

Senator WARNER. I submit that she can tell better without the photograph.

Senator FORAKER. I want to identify it by the photograph.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How about that, Mrs. Leahy?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. I could not tell you whether it is as high as the window or not.

Q. You could not tell?—A. No, sir.

Q. There is the photograph, which is numbered "13," an exhibit attached to the Purdy testimony. It says: "Taken from room in which Mrs. Leahy stood, showing gallery of barracks." According to that, that is the tree between the two houses to which I point, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to that the top of it is up higher than—A. No, sir.

Q. I say that according to that picture the top of the tree is as high as the roof of the barracks.—A. It may look like that in the picture, but it is not so by looking out of the window.

Q. How is it?—A. I could see the whole top of the barracks distinctly.

Q. You stated yesterday, as I understood you, that you saw the flashes of the guns from the upper gallery as you looked through the leaves.—A. No; not through the leaves. I looked over the tree. I could see the gallery very distinctly.

Q. You looked over?—A. Yes, sir; I saw the flashes on the bottom probably through the leaves, but I saw them very clearly and distinctly.

Q. About how far away from you was that?—A. I believe it is about 280 or 300 feet.

Q. And from your window in your second story you looked out over the top of this tree and saw these men walking on the upper gallery of B barracks at the time when that firing was going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While we are looking for that passage in your testimony of yesterday, I want to ask you again about these policemen. How long did you keep them in that room?—A. Oh, about an hour and a half—two hours.

Q. An hour and a half. Then it was until long after the firing was all over?—A. Oh, sure.

Q. Yes. And did they retain their arms in their possession while they were in there?—A. Certainly.

Q. You did not take them away from them?—A. No, sir.

Q. There is some testimony on that point, as to whether you relieved them of their arms or not; and you did not?—A. I did not, sir.

Senator WARNER. I know of none.

Senator FORAKER. Mr. Elkins testified on that general point.

Senator SCOTT. He testified, if you remember, that she said they could go, but to keep the guns to defend themselves.

The WITNESS. Now, please, one moment. Mr. Elkins has made a mistake. Mr. Elkins never knew that I had those policemen in my bathroom until after the shooting, if I am correct, which I am sure I am. I left the window, went downstairs, put them in there and told them not to make any noise, and to stay in there, it didn't make any difference what happened, for they would be killed if they left that room. Then I forgot entirely that I had done so until, long after the shooting, Judge Parks came back from uptown, where I sent him to hunt for Louis Cowen, and he told me there were two policemen killed—at least missing, and they expected they were killed, because they could not be found anywhere in the city or in their homes. Then I remembered that I had put them in the bathroom.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. And then you liberated them?—A. No, sir. Judge Parks and my sister did so.

Q. They went and opened the door and let them out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the door locked?—A. No, sir; just closed.

Q. They could have come out at any time?—A. Yes, sir; but I had instructed them not to do so.

Q. You had instructed them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no official position?—A. Oh, certainly not.

Q. You simply assumed, there, to give them instructions, and they obeyed, as I understand?—A. Sure.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you tell them that was a matter of caution, to save their lives?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, why did you think the policemen needed special protection?—A. I didn't think that; never thought of them being policemen, sir, at the time.

Q. You did not put anybody else in a bathroom?—A. I didn't see anybody else.

Q. You didn't see anybody else at all?—A. Excepting those soldiers.

Q. If anybody else had come around, would you have put them in some room for safety, also?—A. Probably so.

Q. What is it?—A. I might have done so.

Q. Why did you not put Mr. Elkins in some room?—A. Mr. Elkins was in his room, sir.

Q. He was in his room, upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Judge Parks?—A. He was in his room.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. It was time for people to get out of the way, wasn't it?—A. What is it, sir?

Q. I say it was time for people to be getting out of the way and to be hid, was it not?—A. If you had walked on that front street, you would have thought so, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Whatever the reason may have been, you did put them in, but you did not deprive them of their arms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any other policemen about there that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did these policemen do when you let them out of the bathroom; did they remain there or go away?—A. Judge Parks took them off, and I don't know where they went.

Q. Judge Parks took them away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Judge Parks is dead now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He died at your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About when?—A. Two or three weeks after; I don't remember, sir.

Q. He fell out of the window, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Out of the window of that same middle room of the three upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He fell out onto the sidewalk on Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he killed instantly?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. What is it?—A. We found him dead. He was dead when I saw him, so that I suppose he was killed instantly.

Q. He was found in the morning, about what time?—A. No, sir; it must have been—I don't know, but it was about 3 o'clock, I think.

Q. About 3 o'clock in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how he came to fall out of the window and get killed?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. May I ask you had you retired when this firing commenced this night?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had just gone to your room with a view to retiring?—A. I had just undressed and wound my clock and was just about to go into bed when I heard this shot.

Q. Did you stop to redress yourself before you went out?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You just went as you were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I read from your testimony as given yesterday, as reported at page 2902 of our hearings, as follows:

Q. We see in the picture a tree. It did not obstruct your view at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw right through that tree?—A. I saw through the leaves and over that.

Q. You saw through the leaves?—A. I saw through that, and saw them on the gallery; saw men moving and saw the shooting.

Is that statement of yours, made yesterday, as I have just now read it, correct or not?—A. I saw clearly the gallery, and on both sides. That tree did not obstruct my view from my window whatsoever.

Q. You could see?—A. Or if the tree did, I could see, positively, through it, and I saw over it. That tree did not obstruct the gallery of the barracks, none whatever.

Q. That is to say, if the tree was so high you could not see over it, you saw to the right or left or saw through it?—A. Saw right in front of it [indicating].

Q. That is to say, you had no trouble in seeing what you have reported?—A. None whatever.

Q. And you saw distinctly the flashes of the guns from the barracks to the number you have indicated, and you saw men moving backwards and forwards carrying lanterns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than one lantern?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many lanterns?—A. I saw them two or three times, at the very least.

Q. Was the building lighted up?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was all dark?—A. Nothing but these lanterns were lighted that I saw, sir.

Q. Did you hear them forming their companies?—A. I heard them calling the roll.

Q. Where were they when they were calling the roll?—A. I do not know, sir; I just heard it.

Q. You heard them calling it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The roll was called at different points, according to the testimony given here. Can you tell any point at which you heard them calling the roll?—A. No, sir; I just heard the roll called.

Q. Did you hear the bugle sound?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About when did you hear the sound of the bugle first?—A. Just before I saw—a few minutes before I saw—those soldiers returning back to the post.

Q. Just a few minutes before you saw the soldiers returning to the post?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not hear the bugle sound when the men were firing, or before they were firing at the Cowen house?—A. Sir?

Q. Did you not hear the bugle sound before the firing which you have described at the Cowen house?—A. I do not remember, sir.

Q. You might have heard it before that?—A. I might, but I do not remember it.

Q. You do not remember about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you did hear it just before you heard the men returning?—A. Before I saw them returning, sir.

Q. Before you saw the men returning. Senator Scott wants me to ask you what kind of a night that was.—A. It was what I would call a dark, starlight night.

Q. What is the answer, now?—A. I said that it would be what I would call a dark, starlight night.

Senator FORAKER. That is all I care to ask.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you go over to the Cowen house that night?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. After the shooting?—A. While the shooting was continuing up the alley between my house and farther up.

Q. Why did you go over there?—A. Because Mrs. Cowen jumped to her window and called out to me and said, "Oh, Katie, my God, they have shot into my house, and we are frightened to death." And I said, "Where is Louis?" and she said, "He is downtown;" and I said, "Do you want us to come over?" and she said yes, and I went across there and Judge Parks and Mr. Elkins hollered and said that they would go over and get them if I would wait, but by the time they got down there I had the Cowen family over into my house.

Q. How many of them were there?—A. There were the five children and the servant girl and Mrs. Cowen.

Q. You took them over into your house, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You asked her where Willie was, or Louis?—A. Louis.

Q. That was Mr. Cowen, the head of the family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you see him that night?—A. He didn't come back home until I sent Judge Parks after him. After Judge Parks took the policemen out, I sent him to go and find Louis, and I told him not to come back without Louis. Mrs. Cowen was in hysterics, and I haven't any sympathy with a woman in hysterics.

Q. You sent Judge Parks after Louis Cowen, and that was after you let the policemen out, and you kept the policemen shut up for an hour and a half or two hours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it must have been as late as what, half past 1 or 2 o'clock, before Mr. Cowen came home?—A. Yes, sir; fully.

Q. Fully 2 o'clock. In what condition was he? Had he been drinking or not?—A. I would hate to say, sir, because he talked about suing the Government for $50,000 for damages to his house and family, and I got tired of listening to it, and I went out to my room.

Q. You did what?—A. I got tired of listening to him and went out to my room.

Q. That night; he talked to you that night about suing the Government for $50,000?—A. He didn't do it to me, but to the people who were in the room.

Q. In what condition was he, intoxicated or not?—A. I would hate to say, sir; for I don't remember. I know he came back with a bottle of whisky and a bottle of beer and a sandwich. I met him at my front gate.

Q. Did he seem to have been drinking?—A. Not more than usual.

Q. Not more than usual? There was nothing unusual in the condition he was in that night?—A. I have never seen Mr. Cowen that I would call intoxicated.

Q. If he was not intoxicated, there is no harm in saying that he was not intoxicated, is there?—A. No, sir. I don't know that he was intoxicated. I would hate to say.

Q. I am asking you for information. He had this whisky and beer and sandwich?

Senator WARNER. The whisky was outside of him.

Q. (Continuing.) But the whisky was in a bottle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he apparently been drinking any? I will ask you that question again.—A. Yes, sir; I believe he had. He looked like it.

Q. He seemed very much excited, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And talked in the way you have indicated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought it was rather extravagant talk under the circumstances, did you not?—A. I did, sir; at a moment like that.

Q. What?—A. I did think so, at a moment like that, after his wife and little children had been in the danger they had been in, because I realized it, if he didn't.

Q. He said that long afterwards, when he came back, after staying away from them?—A. Yes, sir; I know nothing would have kept me away.

Q. He was not in any hurry to get home after the firing was over?—A. I sent Judge Parks after him.

Q. Did you send Judge Parks after him twice?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Judge Parks went, and was gone some time, and failed to find him?—A. Yes, sir; he failed to find him and came back and told me these policemen were missing, and then I remembered having the policemen locked up, and then he let the policemen out, and then I told him to go and look for Louis Cowen again, and not to come back without Louis, and he brought Louis back, and when Mr. Cowen came to my gate I said, "Louis, where have you been? Your house has been shot to pieces, and all of your little children and your wife are over here in my house. Where were you to leave another woman protect her?" He said, "I couldn't get back home, because I hadn't a six-shooter, and the bullets were flying all up the street." That was his language.

Q. There were no bullets after the firing was over?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you experienced no fear in going around to look after matters at that time?—A. I do not know what fear is.

Q. You do not know what fear is?—A. I know a whole lot of the balance of the people hid under their beds.

Q. Can you tell us who else hid under their beds?—A. Oh, no; I wouldn't take the time to remember that.

Q. Well, we only want to get at the facts. Did any of them who have been testifying here hide under their beds?—A. You must ask them that and not me. I can tell you what I heard and saw, but I can not tell you what other people heard and saw. Remember I am here to tell the truth. Remember that was only hearsay.

Q. Yes; we would like to have you tell what you heard. We have been having hearsay here; a great deal of it.—A. If I told you what I heard on the subject of the nigger raid, it would take me a year to do so, and you would all be tired and disgusted.

Q. To talk about what the people of Brownsville did, and how they acted, getting under beds, and so forth, as well as other kinds of talk?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. To get back to Mr. Cowen, did he go over to his house after Judge Parks brought him home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he and Judge Parks go over there?—A. Yes, sir; I went with them. His wife also went.

Q. To hunt him?—A. No, sir; I had brought them over to my house.

Q. Yes.—A. He came to my house first. I met them at the gate, and then we went over to his house—his wife and Judge Parks and myself. I do not know whether any of the balance of the people went or not.

Q. How long did you remain over there?—A. I suppose about ten minutes, probably. We looked through the house.

Q. And then he returned with you to your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did he and the whole family remain in your house that whole night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did he remain? Where was he stationed during the night?—A. He was stationed right in my courtyard, right in front of my door.

Q. Was he armed?—A. Oh, yes; he brought his gun over when we came back from his house.

Q. And that was a Winchester?—A. I believe it was. I have been told since; I didn't know what it was that night.

Q. But he did bring his gun, and he took position in front of your door and sat there until morning; did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On guard?—A. I suppose he must have been on guard when he sat there with a gun in his hand all night. I don't know what else it could be.

Q. What I want to know is whether you put him on guard?—A. Oh, Senator, don't ask such ridiculous questions, please. I put him on guard! Why should I want that man, after I had sent for him and brought him back where I was taking care of his wife and children, to guard me?

Q. That is what I wanted to know, particularly after you told us just a moment ago that you were not afraid of anything at all; I wondered why you should suddenly want a guard. Well, you did not put him on guard. How did he happen to take station right in front of your door and stay there until morning?—A. Because he was in the courtyard, and my room is almost opposite my side gate, and he seemed to think that if anybody was to come in, that would be the only way they could get in.

Q. That was back in the rear of the hotel, was it not, that is the rear from Fourteenth street?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And the rear also from Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was back in the L?—A. Yes, sir; but this is a little alley-way, I should call it, just a sort of little garden, and the gallery at the side of the house, and he could look almost right over there and see anybody come in at the side.

Q. But that was about the best-protected and safest place he could get, was it not?—A. You must ask him that.

Q. No; I am asking you. He was practically surrounded by the buildings, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the woodshed was next to the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you were at hand if any danger should arise?—A. I don't think that is just, exactly.

Q. What is that?—A. I do not think that is just.

Q. Why not?—A. Because it is not.

Q. Well, you were pretty much managing everybody and everything in that neighborhood that night, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were not afraid of anything at all?—A. Never known what fear was in my life.

Q. Not even afraid of lightning?—A. Yes, sir; but that is what God creates, not what man does. I am afraid of God, sir; that is why I am here to tell the truth. Do not forget that, please.

Q. No; we will not forget that. So that you are afraid of the power of the Almighty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When He is moved to wrath, or when He sets the laws of nature into dangerous operation. Well, we will not discuss that. I only wanted to get the facts about it. Now, did you see Mr. Cowen the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was he doing the next day?—A. He came in and talked, like the balance of the people. I assure you I didn't do anything but move around the house all day long.

Q. Move around your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was in, talking like the balance of the people. How were they all talking?—A. How were they all talking?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't believe I heard Mr. Cowen make very many remarks at all, the next day, excepting that he had been warned that there was going to be some shooting done after pay day.

Q. What?—A. He said that he had been warned that there was going to be some shooting done after pay day.

Q. That is, he was telling that the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was telling that somebody had warned him. Now, who was it he said had warned him?—A. He didn't say the next day who warned him, and I never did hear who had warned him.

Q. Have you never heard until this time?—A. I don't believe I ever heard Mr. Cowen say so, but I know who did warn Mr. Cowen, because a man told me so.

Q. Who was that?—A. Bill Henry.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Called William Henry?—A. I suppose so, because we call him Bill Henry.

Q. He is a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. He is a colored man and lives in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He testified before the grand jury?—A. I do not know.

Q. Well, we have his testimony. Did you ever hear of anybody warning Mr. Cowen or anybody else that there was going to be a shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not hear of any warnings at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had not had any trouble with any of the soldiers?—A. Oh, no; never had.

Q. Or any of the officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Some of the officers boarded at your house?—A. Most all of them.

Q. All of them?—A. Not all of them, but most all of them. All of the single officers in the post, I think.

Q. All of them that boarded out in town boarded with you?—A. I believe all of them excepting one.

Q. Who was that?—A. I do not know, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Mrs. Leahy, you have heard since that it was this man Bill Henry, or William Henry, who warned Mr. Cowen that after pay-day there would be shooting?—A. Bill Henry told me so.

Q. He told you so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. After I went home from San Antonio he told me.

Q. Have you heard it said there as a matter of hearsay that any other parties were warned?—A. Yes, sir; Bill Henry told me that a man by the name of Johnson had gone into Allison's saloon and had warned Allison and a man by the name of Taylor not to leave his family and come home that night, because they were going to shoot up the town. I also heard from Mr. Billingsley that his servant man had told him so, and he had warned citizens, or some of the citizens, of the fact that evening; and they laughed at him.

Q. Mrs. Leahy, is your mother alive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does she live in Brownsville?—A. She is an invalid; yes, sir.

Q. What part of Brownsville does she live in?—A. Right opposite my old home, known as the Leahy house; on some of my own lots—my property, sir.

Q. In the morning after the shooting did you go to your mother's house?—A. I went down, sir, between 5 and 6 o'clock—about 5.30.

Q. In going to your mother's house from your house which way did you go?—A. I went down the Cowen alley, and down the post fence to my house—my mother's.

Q. That is, you mean you went down what we call the garrison road between the post and the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you got to the garrison road you would go in what direction?—A. Down towards Jefferson street, right straight down the garrison wall.

Q. That is, away from the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. We have Elizabeth street and Washington street and Adams, and then comes Jefferson, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you went by the barracks this morning, did you see any of the soldiers? And if so, state what they were doing.—A. Yes, sir; I saw all along the garrison fence men posted, armed.

Q. Yes.—A. I also saw, I should presume—I am almost positive—five or six men sitting on the gallery upstairs cleaning guns.

Q. In which barracks was this, do you remember?—A. B barracks.

Q. B barracks. And what time in the morning was this?—A. 5.30. I was back to my own house after 6, to serve first breakfast.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You saw five or six men on the back porch of one of these barracks buildings cleaning guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which one of the buildings?—A. B barracks.

Q. B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anyone on either of the other barracks porches cleaning guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. You just saw five or six men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they doing?—A. They were polishing up the tops of the barrels and pulling rags through the barrels—some sticks, or something; I don't know what it was.

Q. This was 5.30 in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was this before sunrise or after?—A. After sunrise. It was daylight. I couldn't tell you whether the sun was up, but it was daylight already.

Q. I want to know whether it was as late as sunrise?—A. I don't know; I couldn't tell you. It was daylight, that is all I can tell you.

Q. You saw everything perfectly clearly?—A. As clear as I could look out of that window and see, now.

Q. As clear as it is now?—A. I don't suppose it was probably as clear as it is now, but I could see as clear as now.

Q. Did you see any officers out there?—A. I did not. I saw only one officer, and that was down by the gate.

Q. That is, this large gate [indicating on map]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know who that officer was?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. I want you to locate him as nearly as you can. This is the gate and there is the Cowen alley—the mouth of it [indicating on map].

Where was he?—A. He was on that walk, just about where the pointer is.

Q. Inside of the reservation?—A. Oh, yes; he was inside.

Q. Inside of the reservation, somewhere near B barracks, which is next towards the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw the officer there? What was he doing?—A. He did not seem to be doing anything, but just standing there.

Q. Well, did he have on his sword and a revolver?—A. I couldn't tell you, sir.

Q. Was he in full uniform?—A. No, sir; I am not positive, but it was either an olive drab or a khaki he had on; but I think, if I am not mistaken, it was an olive drab.

Q. Do you know Captain Macklin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it he?—A. No, sir; I am positive it was not Captain Macklin I saw that morning.

Q. You are positive it was not Captain Macklin?—A. Yes, sir; I knew Captain Macklin personally.

Q. You knew Captain Lyon?—A. I have since, but I did not know him at that time.

Q. Did you know Captain Macklin at that time?—A. Yes, sir; he used to call at my house.

Q. Captain Lyon you did not know then?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you knew him since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know how the officer looked?—A. No, sir; I was in too much of a hurry to pay any attention. I was going to see how my mother was.

Q. Did you look carefully enough to see it was an officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you can not tell us whether it was Captain Lyon?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Captain Lawrason?—A. I did, sir. I saw him there that morning.

Q. At this same time?—A. No, sir; I think it was after that I saw Lieutenant Lawrason. He was near the little gate. That was between 7 and 8 o'clock.

Q. You knew him well?—A. Yes, sir; I knew him well.

Q. It was not Lieutenant Lawrason, then, whom you saw at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Lieutenant Grier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know him at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he not board with you?—A. Afterwards.

Q. Afterwards?—A. Yes, sir; he boarded there afterwards.

Q. Did any of the officers come out and board with you after this shooting affray?—A. Lieutenant Grier.

Q. Lieutenant Grier did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He took his meals in your house?—A. Yes, sir; he and his wife both, for a month.

Q. For one month after this shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did he remain and on what account did he remain there?—A. As quartermaster, sir.

Q. He was quartermaster?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He remained behind to transfer the baggage?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And quartermaster's stores?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during all that time he boarded with you at your house?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. He and his wife?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know him, then, very well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it he you saw?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Let me see, was there any other officer who was there? You know Major Penrose, do you not?—A. Yes, sir; I have met Major Penrose since, but I do not know whether I would recognize him to-day if I saw him.

Q. Could it have been Major Penrose you saw there?—A. It must have been either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon.

Q. It must have been either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon that you saw there at 5.30 in the morning, and at the time you saw either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon you also saw five or six men on the rear of B barracks, upper gallery, cleaning their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That will do.

Senator WARNER. That is all, Mrs. Leahy.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS HAROLD COWEN.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Scott.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is your name in full?—A. Louis Harold Cowen.

Q. What is your age?—A. Nineteen; I was 19 this March—the 10th of March.

Q. You are the son of Louis R. Cowen?—A. Yes, sir; I am the son of Louis R. Cowen.

Q. How long have you lived in Brownsville?—A. I have lived in Brownsville pretty near all my life, although I have been with my grandparents also.

Q. Where was that?—A. In San Antonio and in different parts of Mexico with them.

Q. You know the time the colored soldiers came to Brownsville?—A. I know the time. I was not there, though. I was in San Antonio when they arrived in Brownsville. They arrived in Brownsville before I did.

Q. You were sick there with typhoid fever?—A. Yes, sir; I was sick in San Antonio.

Q. About how long before the shooting up of Brownsville was it that you returned?—A. It was thirteen days. I got there on August 1.

Q. Your mother was with you over there a part of the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your father came over there to see you?—A. Yes, sir; he was in San Antonio also.

Q. You were in Brownsville the night of the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; I was in Brownsville.

Q. There was a party at your house, a children's party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without going into details, had you gone to bed when the shooting commenced?—A. I was partly undressed when I heard it. That is, before the shooting I had commenced to go to bed. Just before that I thought I would go out into the yard, and just look around, and I happened to close the alley gate. I guess that was a few minutes before the shooting began. I had just gotten into the dining room when the shooting began, and I heard one or two shots, I think it was between four, five, or six, I didn't exactly count them. That was not a volley. I thought it was a fire, at first, so that I wanted to go out and see, but my mother was very nervous and did not want me to, and as my father was not at home at that time I thought I would stay with them. I heard a volley after that, and I knew that it was something more than a fire.

Q. Where was that firing? Was it down in the direction of the barracks?—A. It seemed to me like it was in the post; yes, sir.

Q. It seemed so to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had not entirely recovered from your sickness, had you, at this time?—A. I had been up. I had already recovered of it, but of course I was not strong. It takes some time to get strong after being in bed the length of time I was.

Q. What time did your father leave home that night?—A. I did not pay very strict attention to that. I think it was almost 11 o'clock.

Q. What had he been doing in the evening, there?—A. I saw him playing with the children that night. He was amusing them all; they were all playing together, and he was showing them games, there.

Q. When you heard the shooting that you thought was in the barracks, afterwards which way did the shooting come?—A. It seemed to come up that alley. I don't think they lost any time in coming up, either. They were advancing very rapidly—the shots were.

Q. About how many, do you know, or were you in any condition to count the number of shots?—A. I didn't know what the trouble was. I didn't think of counting the shots or anything else. I thought more of finding out what the trouble was.

Q. Your house was fired into. How many shots were fired into your house?—A. I think it was something like eight or ten; something like that.

Q. Through how many rooms did the balls go?—A. I think it was five rooms.

Q. Through five rooms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how high from the floor did those bullets go?—A. At a height of 4 or 5 feet.

Q. During the shooting, or just about as it closed, where did you and your mother and the children go?—A. We went over to Mrs. Leahy's, to the Leahy house.

Q. Mrs. Leahy came over for you, did she?—A. Yes, sir; she came across the street.

Q. And how many of you children were at home then?—A. There was my mother and four sisters and my little brother besides myself and the servant.

Q. You are the oldest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have a baby sister?—A. Yes, sir; she was not born at the time.

Q. How old is she?—A. If she is not three months, she is pretty near it; something like that.

Q. How old?—A. Almost three months old. I do not know exactly how old she is.

Q. You did not see any of the parties who did the shooting?—A. No, sir; I did not see any. I thought it best to keep out of the windows.

Q. And your mother got the children under the bed, and every way she could, did she, to protect them?—A. Yes, sir; they all got under the bed, except my mother and myself stayed out most of the time.

Q. Your father had not gotten home before you went across to the Leahy Hotel?—A. No, sir; he had not gotten home yet.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Had you retired yet or not when the firing commenced?—A. No, sir; I had not gone to bed.

Q. You had gone to your room?—A. I went into my room and started to undress, and I walked out in the yard and was walking around there for one or two minutes, and I went to close the alley gate.

Q. I can not hear you, Mr. Cowen. If you will just answer the questions I ask you, we will get along. I want to know what room you occupied, or were about to retire in?—A. I was about to retire in my own room.

Q. What room is that?—A. That is the one near the alley, the southeast room of the house.

Q. The southeast?—A. More east.

Q. That would be on the end of the house next to Elizabeth street?—A. No, sir; it would not be Elizabeth street.

Q. Oh, it would be on the end of the house, then, next to the alley?—A. The south part of the house; the southern part of the house next to the alley.

Q. That is to say, you were in one of the rear rooms and that one next to the alley?—A. Yes, sir; the end room facing the alley.

Q. Where did the bed stand in that room?—A. The bed stood right close to the window.

Q. Right close to the window?—A. There were two windows—one on the south and one towards the alley.

Q. One window in your room looked out towards the fort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The figure to which I point is intended to represent your house.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I point now to the alley at the rear of the house. That is the room you occupied?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large is that?—A. I never measured the room.

Q. It looks like a square room.—A. It is almost square.

Q. It has one window looking out on the alley?—A. One facing the alley and one on the yard.

Q. Your bed stood where?—A. Right here, between the windows. It faced this window here, but did not cover that one.

Q. Which one did it not cover?—A. The one facing the alley.

Q. The one facing the alley and not covered by the bed was open?—A. It was open; yes, sir.

Q. And not covered by the bed?—A. The bed did not cover it at all.

Q. And it did not stand in front of it?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Was the window up that night?—A. They were all open, excepting the blinds; the blinds were open.

Q. They were wooden shutters, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had just gone into your room when you heard the firing commence?—A. I had been in there; I had just come from the other side, from the dining room.

Q. You had just come from the dining room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a light in the dining room, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any light in your bedroom?—A. No, sir; but the light from the dining room makes it almost the same as if it was in my own room.

Q. I only want to get the facts. There was a door between the dining room and your bedroom through which the lights which were in the dining room would shine?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you closed your door yet?—A. I never close it.

Q. You never do close it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was anybody else up about the house?—A. Yes, sir; all the children were up, I think.

Q. The children were up, and your mother was up, was she not?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know which ones of the children were up. I guess one or two of them might have gone to bed.

Q. You heard the firing, and what did you hear; how many shots?—A. I did not count them. At first I heard about four or five shots.

Q. Four or five shots? What kind of shots did they seem to be—from what kind of guns?—A. What I judged them, they seemed to be a rifle, a heavy rifle, a very strong rifle.

Q. They seemed to be high-power rifles?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard four or five shots? Then what did you do when you heard those shots?—A. I wanted to go out and see what it was.

Q. Did you go out?—A. I went and looked out of the window and the door.

Q. You went back into the dining room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And looked out of the windows and the door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there two windows in the dining room?—A. There is one window and the door.

Q. There is one window and the door. They look out to the rear towards the fort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you looked out of the window?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was the light still burning in the dining room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long was it, now, until they got up to where your house was, after that?—A. About a minute and a half.

Q. About a minute and a half. You said it seemed like they lost no time in getting there; they got there very quickly?—A. From the time I heard the shooting in the post, I think a minute and a half would be pretty fast, to run and jump that wall, and run up there, and do what they did.

Q. From the time you heard the first shots, you think it was about a minute and a half until they commenced firing into your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you when they commenced firing into your house?—A. I did not know they were firing into the house; I could not see them; but I walked through into the hall.

Q. You walked through into the hall?—A. I walked in towards Elizabeth street.

Q. Towards Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where was this firing at that time?—A. At that time it seemed to be in the alley, right close to my house.

Q. You knew that shots were striking the house?—A. It is pretty hard to say when the shot strikes it. I didn't have any idea of what was going on.

Q. You did not have any idea?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see anybody at all?—A. No, sir.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES N. LUNKENHEIMER.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Scott:)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-six.

Q. What is your business?—A. Train conductor; railroad conductor.

Q. On what road?—A. The St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railroad, between Bay City and Brownsville.

Q. Where is your home?—A. Brownsville.

Q. That is your headquarters?—A. No, sir; our headquarters are Kingsville, but my lay over is there; it is my headquarters, virtually.

Q. How long have you lived in Texas?—A. Nine years.

Q. Where did you live prior to that time?—A. Houston; Lufkin.

Q. Before you went to Texas where did you live?—A. In Pennsylvania.

Q. Are you a native of Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been engaged in railroading?—A. Twenty-seven years.

Q. Do you remember the time that the Twenty-fifth Infantry, colored troops, came to Brownsville?—A. I do.

Q. Were you conductor on the train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what part of the route were you conductor in bringing them to Brownsville?—A. From the delivery from the S. A. and P. road.

Q. Where is that?—A. At Sinton.

Q. What distance is that from Brownsville?—A. One hundred and sixty-two miles.

Q. And they were on your train from that until the arrival at Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will get you to state, Mr. Lunkenheimer, if you heard, or had with any members of those companies, any conversation, or did they speak anything, concerning Brownsville, the character of the town, the people, and so forth.—A. On leaving Sinton it was just about good daybreak. I did not make the run of my train then. The Major, he was asleep.

Q. Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir; Major Penrose, he was asleep, and I didn't make the run of my train until after I left Robbston.

Q. By making the run of your train you mean taking up your tickets?—A. Yes, sir. It was a crowded train and there was only one party holding the tickets, outside of the family tickets, and I made that run between Robbston and Kingsville, that is the branch that goes to Corpus Christi. Now, I didn't get the family tickets until after I left Kingsville. After I left Kingsville I got on the rear car, and I took the family tickets. Between there and along about Catharine, I think it was, that is a 52-mile run. After I got the family tickets I was going through the train.

Q. That is, the cars that had the colored troops?—A. Yes, sir; and in going through the train I was hailed by a couple of the boys in the seats—there were four sitting facing each other—and they says, "Say, Cap"—

Q. Were these colored troops?—A. Yes; I had nothing but colored troops. They said, "Say, Cap, what kind of a town is Brownsville?" I said, "It is a right good little town, but it is nothing but a Mexican town, though." They says, "Any colored there?" I said no, I didn't think there was a half a dozen families in the town. He says, "Christ, ain't there any saloons there?" I says, "Oh, yes; saloons galore." He says, "Any colored saloons, are there?" I says, "No; if there is I don't know it; but I have got some boys working for me that drinks there."

Q. That is, you meant colored railroad men?—A. Brakemen.

Q. Brakemen?—A. Yes, sir; brakemen. Then I believe the same party spoke again—no; it was the party next to him. He says, "Well, we don't care whether there is any of them or not. We will drink in any of these damn bars. We will do like we did in so and so," mentioning the place they were from.

Q. Do you remember the name of that place?—A. No, sir; that place, I do not. He says, "When we first went to so and so we couldn't get a damn thing in the place, but, by God, we were not there but two weeks when we showed them where to drink; gave them a couple of clips under the lip, and we could get any damn thing we wanted in town."

Q. That was the way he spoke?—A. Oh, yes. So, you know [witness indicating by grimace]. That is the way they spoke it. I went on. They stopped me and talked, and I spoke to them and then went on. On going out, a big ginger-cake darkey spoke to me—got me out on the platform.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What was that expression?—A. A big ginger-cake darkey.

Q. Ginger-cake darkey?—A. Yes, sir; between a yellow and a white, what we call a ginger-cake darkey; he came out on the platform, and he says, "Now, wasn't that nice?" He says, "Now, that is just the way with this regiment." He says, "We have got some of the nicest boys in this regiment that you can find anywhere, and then," he says, "we have got some of the toughest. Now," he says, "that is just the kind of people that does the dirt, and we all have to take the blame."

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Was this colored man who was doing this talking one of the soldiers?—A. One of the soldiers; oh, yes. We had nothing but soldiers on the train; nothing but soldiers.

Q. Did you have any talk in either of the other cars?—A. Oh, yes, sir. I went farther, and I don't know whether it was the next car or the next car in front of that, but it was towards the head end—I was going towards the head end—what we call the head end is the engine—and I was stopped again and asked the same question, and I told him, "Yes; nothing but a Mexican town." "Any colored there?" "No; no colored there that I know of. I don't think there is half a dozen families in the town." He says, "Holy Christ!" (The witness here used a foul expression.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Go ahead.—A. I told them they could do like my boys did, they could get them Mexican girls. He says, "No; I am tired of Mexicans, I have had lots of Mexican in the Philippines." Then the man next to him said, "Any white folks there?" I says, "Yes; lots of white folks there." "Well, by God, they are good enough for me," he says. Then I didn't say no more.

Q. This was conversation directly with you by members of that regiment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not in Brownsville the night of the shooting?—A. No, sir; the following.

Senator WARNER. Take the witness.

Senator FORAKER. I have no questions to ask this witness. Now, I believe this is the last witness you have?

Senator WARNER. Yes. It is my understanding that we are now to adjourr. until Monday.

(At 11.45 o'clock a. m. the committee adjourned until Monday, June 10, 1907, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Monday, June 10, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Warner, Pettus, Taliaferro, and Overman.

Senator WARNER. I would like to put in the record at this point the testimony of one witness who was subpoenaed, but who has not gotten here, Mr. Odin. I am going to offer in evidence his testimony as taken by what is called the Purdy investigation, as found at pages 75 to 83 of Senate Document 155. He was one of the eye-witnesses there.

(The testimony referred to is as follows:)

Mr. HALE ODIN was first duly sworn by Mr. Purdy, and, upon being afterwards examined by him, testified as follows:

Q. Mr. Odin, what is your business?—A. Land and immigration.

Q. And how long have you been in that business?—A. Thirty-one years.

Q. What is your age?—A. Fifty-four.

Q. To what parts of the United States does your business call you?—A. To all parts.

Q. What place do you regard as your home?—A. San Antonio, Tex.

Q. How long have you lived here in this vicinity?—A. About twenty years.

Q. Where were you born?—A. In Detroit, Mich., but came to Dallas, Tex., with my parents while an infant. Graduated at Ann Arbor in the class of '72.

Q. You are a married man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What family have you?—A. A wife and five children.

Q. They live with you, do they?—A. Yes, sir; all except one.

Q. Were you in Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been there on that visit?—A. Six weeks.

Q. What members of your family accompanied you to Brownsville?—A. My wife and five children.

Q. I presume your business required you before that time to make frequent visits to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you well acquainted with the people in Brownsville generally?—A. Yes, sir; very well.

Q. When you visited Brownsville on that occasion where did you stop?—A. At the Miller Hotel.

Q. Mr. Odin, I will show you this plat (Exhibit A), and ask you to locate your room in the Miller Hotel (which is No. 5 on the plat).—A. It was the room cornering on the alley and Thirteenth street, second floor.

Q. How large is that room?—A. About 20 feet square.

Q. What windows has it in it?—A. Two windows opening on the alley and two opening on Thirteenth street.

Q. Were you in that room with your wife on the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what other members of your family were with you?—A. My five children.

Q. Were they all in that room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, will you proceed to state, in your own words, just what you know about the shooting which occurred on that night in the city of Brownsville?—A. At 11.55 p. m. on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, I was sitting in the alley window of our room in the Miller Hotel, on the second floor, when I heard shots in the direction of the alley towards the fort. I noted the time; it was 5 minutes of 12, and I counted about 60 shots before they arrived at our windows. During this time I called my wife, and immediately after she and my little boy came to the window we heard persons upon the run coming towards us in the alley from the direction of Fort Brown, and when they passed our windows I counted 6 negro soldiers, 3 abreast in two columns, with one soldier running alongside, who stopped, crossed the alley opposite our windows, and one large negro soldier gave the order "Halt!" and said "There he goes; shoot!" and they fired a volley. Immediately one other negro soldier joined them from the same direction from which the other 7 had come. Then there were four more negro soldiers followed and joined the other eight, these four coming also from the direction of Fort Brown through the alley. Before the first soldiers arrived I noticed a large black dog running through the alley ahead of the soldiers, and supposed that it was a mad dog that they were chasing and shooting at.

Then a second order was given to fire and they fired again to the left or towards the river. Then one large negro soldier stepped back to the center of the alley, slightly in the rear of the other eleven, and raised his gun, and at this time another volley was fired. Immediately following this report the large negro with freckled face fired point-blank at us—Mrs. Odin and my son Lee and myself in the window. The ball from his rifle passed through the lower window sash and up into the ceiling in our room and the jacket of the bullet fell back on the floor. I picked it up the next morning and later forwarded it to the Secretary of War. We had a lamp in the room burning but turned partly down. From the flashes of their guns we could see the soldiers distinctly and I discerned their uniforms and dress and the color of their faces and could hear the voices as the command to fire and other remarks were made. Seven of these soldiers had on their usual dark brown uniforms; four were without jackets and one without a hat—was bareheaded. They all carried rifles and one carried a revolver—possibly two. The one that gave the order carried a revolver. When the two volleys were fired the large negro soldier, who gave the order, said "We got that white s— of a b—," and immediately after the shot that was fired into our window the other negro, who fired the shot at us, said "We got another white bastard." This was immediately following this shot directed at us when our little son fell back upon the floor as if shot, and we picked him up.

Q. What did you do then, Mr. Odin?—A. We heard a heavy fall as of a horse or some animal, and a groan which sounded like the groan of a dying horse. Then we heard a scream from a man, and immediately following this we heard somebody running northward up the street that faces the Miller Hotel, which is Elizabeth street. Then an order was given to "shoot this way," and a volley was fired to the right on Thirteenth street. Then they crossed Thirteenth street, nearly to the opposite side, and fired a volley into the Miller Hotel from Thirteenth street.

Q. Where were you and your wife standing at that time?—A. I was standing at the window looking out on Thirteenth street.

Q. You had left the window facing on the alley?—A. Yes, sir; had just stepped across the room.

Q. Who, if anyone, was with you at the window?—A. Mrs. Odin.

Q. And where did you see these men at that time—where were they standing?—A. They were nearly to the alley on Thirteenth street—on the north side of Thirteenth street.

Q. About how many men did you see there?—A. Twelve men.

Q. Did you at that time stop to count them, or was your estimation just made from the general appearance?—A. I saw them all pass over and I counted them and said to my wife, "There are just twelve of them."

Q. Now, you may go on and state what happened then.—A. After firing at the Miller Hotel they passed northward up the alley—a part of them at least.

Q. Did you see any go east on Thirteenth street?—A. No, sir; but of course some may have gone east on Thirteenth street without my having seen them.

Q. Where did you hear firing then?—A. In about two minutes after they passed northward up the alley I counted five more shots, and in about two minutes thereafter 12 negroes—negro soldiers—appeared again going towards Fort Brown, and crossed Thirteenth street and entered the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel.

Q. Going in what direction?—A. Going towards Fort Brown on double-quick and passed out of sight.

Q. Did you hear any more shooting after that?—A. I did not.

Q. So the last shooting you heard was up the alley, on the north side of Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when these soldiers were in Thirteenth street at the mouth of the alley, at the time they were doing the shooting into the Miller Hotel, could you see how they were dressed?—A. Yes, sir; they were dressed in brown uniforms and a broad-brimmed soft hat, such as the soldiers wear.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, at the time they were in Thirteenth street there, could you distinguish the kind of dress that they had on at any time other than when they were firing?—A. I could when they were in Thirteenth street, but I could not when they got into the alley.

Q. Then when they were in the alley, either to the north or to the south of Thirteenth street, you could not distinguish the way in which they were dressed, except by the flashes of their guns?—A. We could tell them when they were at the rear of the Miller Hotel when they were not firing.

Q. But when they were across the street, to the north of Thirteenth street, you could not tell them except for the flashes of their guns, or how they were dressed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you describe as nearly as you can the light, if any, that seemed to be upon these men during the firing that night in Thirteenth street, out of the alley?—A. The lights from the street lamps from Elizabeth and Washington streets gave us plenty of light to distinguish them plainly, and their dress, and to tell distinctly that they were negroes.

Q. Did you have any difficulty at the time, Mr. Odin, in seeing the faces of these men?—A. No, sir; for they were at times looking up directly towards the window.

Q. And you state positively that they were negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And dressed in the uniform of the United States soldiers such as were stationed at Fort Brown at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, will you state as to the character of the voices of these men who spoke during the shooting?—A. They spoke in the manner and vernacular of the negroes. If I had not seen them by the flashes from their guns I would have known by their voices that they were negroes by the manner of their speech and accent.

Q. Now, you state that you were sitting in one of the windows facing on the alley in the rear of the Miller Hotel, on the second floor, when you first heard shots that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what direction were those first shots that you heard?—A. Down the alley, towards Fort Brown.

Q. And from the time you heard those first shots until the time you heard the last shots to the north of Thirteenth street, in the alley, about how many minutes elapsed?—A. About twelve minutes.

Q. Did you, Mr. Odin, see the lieutenant of police, Dominguez, on that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear a horse going by on Thirteenth street in the direction of Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was that before you heard firing or saw them firing in the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel?—A. About a half minute.

Q. Did you see any person on Thirteenth street during the time of this firing other than these colored soldiers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Tillman has stated that he passed along Thirteenth street, going toward Washington street from Elizabeth, a short time before the firing occurred in the vicinity of the Miller Hotel. Did you see or hear him?—A. I heard some one person pass up Thirteenth street.

Q. But you did not see him?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was before the firing had approached the alley towards the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Odin, whether you know where Mr. Starck's house is located that was fired into that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will show you this plat (Exhibit A) and point out to you the location of Mr. Starck's house (which is No. 6 on this plat) on Washington street between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, and ask you whether you heard any firing in that direction on that night?—A. I did not.

Q. After these men passed across Thirteenth street, going north in the alley, you heard some firing in the direction in which they had gone, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many shots?—A. Five.

Q. Where were you at that time?—A. I was standing at my window facing on Thirteenth street.

Q. Did you remain at your windows during all this time, or did you at times go back into the room with your wife and children and then return to the window again?—A. I only left the window once during the time the shooting was going on, and that was during the time they were shooting north of us up the alley and while the soldiers were out of my sight.

Q. When your little boy fell back into the room, what did you do then?—A. My wife said, "They have shot Lee," and I said, "I reckon not; see if there is any blood on him;" and he said, "Mamma, I am not shot, but they came pretty near me." I was standing at the north window at the time.

Q. Where were your other children during this time, Mr. Odin?—A. They were in bed, except our little girl, who was standing by our side.

Q. Was she with you while the firing was going on in the alley at the rear of the hotel?—A. Yes; standing behind us.

Q. How old is she?—A. Three years old.

Q. Your other children were in bed, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they were asleep or not?—A. They were all awake, except the older one.

Q. How old is he?—A. Eleven years.

Q. He did not awaken during all the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Odin, as you sat at the window on the night of the 13th of August, about 12 o'clock, and heard the shooting down in the vicinity of Fort Brown and farther down the alley in the direction of the fort, did you anticipate at that time that there was any trouble or that the soldiers were shooting into the houses in the city of Brownsville?—

A. No, sir.

Q. After the soldiers reached the rear of the Miller Hotel did you anticipate that there was any trouble of any kind?—A. No, sir; not until they shot at the policeman.

Q. And then, for the first time, you appreciated the fact that there was serious trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after that was it that the shot was fired into your room facing on the alley?—A. Immediately after that.

Q. From the time when you heard the first shots until you heard the last ones that night was there anyone in your room other than the members of your family?—A. Yes; Mr. Davis, the hotel clerk.

Q. About what time did he come into your room during that shooting?—A. He came into our room during the time that the soldiers were up the alley at the rear of Tillman's saloon.

Q. Was he the only one in your room during the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So during the time that the soldiers disappeared up the alley going north nobody had been in your room except the members of your family?—A. No, sir.

Q. And during that whole shooting did you or Mrs. Odin or any of your children leave your room?—A. No, sir.

Q. What light was there in your room that night when the shooting commenced?—A. A small oil lamp, turned partly down.

Q. Was the light turned down before any shooting commenced at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the progress of the shooting was the light interfered with in any way by either you or your wife?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was left in the same condition as when the shooting began?—
A. When they left the alley going north my wife blew out the light.

Q. Mr. Odin, from the time that the men appeared there at the rear of the alley until they disappeared in the alley across the street, and during the whole of that shooting, both into your room and at the officer going down the street, and the different volleys that you have spoken about, about how long a period of time elapsed, in your judgment?—A. About one and one-half minutes, more or less, I should judge.

Q. I will ask you, from the direction of that shot which entered your room, where it must have been fired from?—A. From about the center of the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel.

Q. Did you go into the room on the third floor immediately over your room that next morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know, then, what became of that shot that went into the ceiling of your room?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long after this occurred, on the night of the 13th of August, was it before you and your wife and family left Brownsville?—
A. We left on the following morning, the 14th of August.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To Corpus Christi and San Antonio.

Q. Have you been back to Brownsville since that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you describe more particularly the condition of the window sash, the window out of which you were looking at the time the shot was fired on that night apparently at you and your wife?—A. The lower sash of the window was raised to the height of our heads, and we were looking out with the top of our heads underneath the sash, and there was a wire screen in the lower half of the window. I was at the left side of the window, Mrs. Odin next to me on the right with her head close to mine, and our little boy at her side, with his face against the window screen. The ball entered the screen, then went through the sash, passed through it diagonally, and then went into the ceiling at about 4 feet from the rear of the room. Just before this shot was fired the little boy raised up and said, "Mamma, what is going on?" I said, "They are shooting the mad dog," and then the shot was fired into our window.

Q. At the time this was fired into your window, will you state more particularly what you saw and heard in the alley?—A. Immediately before this shot was fired in our window, the other soldiers fired a volley apparently down Thirteenth street to the left, and almost instantly the man who fired at us raised his gun and shot into our window and the flash from the other soldiers' guns revealed his face plainly, looking up and shooting at us, and he exclaimed, "We got another white bastard."

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, I will ask you about the distance from your window to the man who fired the shot at you?—A. I should say from the end of his gun to our faces it was about 12 feet.

Q. Do you recall anything else that happened there that night, concerning which I have not interrogated you, and about which you care to make a further statement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you before the grand jury or the citizens' committee that investigated this affair?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you made any written or sworn statement to anyone other than the statement you make here to-day?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, you have testified as to what you saw and heard there that night; I will ask you whether there has ever been any doubt in your mind as to whether those men were negro soldiers?—A. Not the least.

Q. You stated in the former part of your testimony that there were 12 negro soldiers in the rear of the Miller Hotel, and that you saw them and counted them; will you explain how you happened to count them there that night?—A. Because the first six came up three abreast in two columns, with another negro at their side, making seven. They stopped at the mouth of the alley and then one by himself followed behind on the run as the other ones ahead, and directly four more came up two abreast on double-quick or on the run; that made twelve.

Q. So, Mr. Odin, from the arrangement in which these men came up the alley you were at once enabled to make a calculation as to how many men there were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not all huddled together in a bunch or crowd?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you have stated that when the men came back after the firing had ceased up in the rear of Tillman's saloon that there were 12 of them, and that you saw them out of your window which opens out onto Thirteenth street. I will ask you how you made that estimate as to the number?—A. Because they came three abreast in three columns and two abreast following behind, and one nearly at the front at the side. The three in front stopped about 10 or 12 feet from the mouth of the alley or in the street, by an order to halt. The next three were close behind them, also the next three, and also the remaining two, and the single one was nearly at the front of the first row of three. Then the second row filed up in line with the first, and the remaining six separated about 10 feet from them to the west, and they stopped in the same order, and they came down the alley. Then some order was given (I could not hear that distinctly), and they formed a line of six about 10 feet apart, and remained about six or eight seconds, apparently looking up and down Thirteenth street. Then they formed in columns of three again, and an order of march was given, and they passed towards the fort, across the street and down the alley on the opposite side from our window, and disappeared.

Q. How were they marching—running or walking?—A. They were on the double-quick; they started on the double-quick. But about the time they entered the alley they were running very fast.

Q. Could you tell whether or not at that time they broke their formation?—A. Yes; I could see them as they passed along; they were in file as they passed out of sight.

Q. But at that time you state that they were running?—A. Yes, sir; and I heard them running after that.

Q. Did you see them enter the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir. I went over from the Thirteenth street window to the rear alley window and saw them as they passed out of sight.

Q. And how far down the alley were they, about, when you lost sight of them?—A. About 15 or 20 feet down the alley from my window, I should judge.

Q. And that is the last you saw of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Odin, I will ask you whether you saw any empty shells in the streets of the city of Brownsville the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State under what circumstances.—A. I went into the alley about 5 o'clock the next morning and picked up a handful of empty shells. I found these shells all the way from the middle of Thirteenth street and in the mouth of the alley and down the alley at the rear of the hotel and some of them near the mouth of the alley north of the hotel, and soon after this I met a policeman who had several shells in his hands and I gave him part of those I had, and presently (I don't know how long) the mayor and several other citizens assembled, who also picked up a number of shells in the vicinity of the hotel.

Q. What did you do with the shells that you picked up?—A. I gave them to the policeman and to the mayor. I brought 5 home with me and I gave them to different people. I don't remember to whom I gave them. I gave them all away.

Q. I will show you these empty shells and ball cartridges which were given into my possession by the mayor and sheriff of Cameron County, and ask you whether the ones which you picked up on the morning of the 14th of August in the streets of Brownsville in the vicinity of the Miller Hotel were similar to those?—A. Yes, sir; they appear to me to be the same.

Q. Were you at home at the time that your wife made this statement to Mr. Stevens and the clerk here at San Antonio a few weeks ago?—A. No, sir; I was in Nevada, Mo.

Q. Do you think of anything else with reference to which you care to make a statement?—A. I would like to explain that the reason I was so certain about the shooting and the identity of the persons who did it, and about the number of shots fired, is because I have all my life been in a country where there has been a great many town "shoot-ups" (that is what they call them), and been accustomed to hearing shooting in the frontier towns, and on several occasions I have been in towns where there was a good deal of shooting done, that it became almost a habit that I kept pretty correct account of what happened. I was not alarmed or scared. In fact, I did not believe that there was anything serious happening until we heard the policeman's horse fall and immediately saw the negro raise his gun to shoot into our window. Then for the first time I realized it was a town "shoot-up."

D. H. HART,

Clerk United States Court, Western District of Texas.

By A. I. CAMPBELL,

Deputy.

Senator LODGE. Mr. Chairman, when General Garlington testified before the committee he was asked in regard to the length of service and record of Mingo Sanders, and there was some question as to the length of service of other soldiers, and as to whether other records were so clear as his. I applied to the War Department for information, and received the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 8, 1907.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: In response to your telephonic request of June 5 to be advised as to whether there is anything extraordinary in the length and character of the service of Mingo Sanders, late a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, also to be furnished with a brief record of a number of men, if there are any, who have served as long as Sanders, or longer, with equally good character, I beg leave to advise you as follows:

The official records show that Mingo Sanders, when discharged from Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 22, 1906, had a total service of twenty-five years, six months, and seven days. His character during prior enlistments is recorded as excellent and very good.

There are many men now in the Army who have rendered honorable service for twenty-six years or more, but it is believed that the following statements of service, compiled after a somewhat hasty search of the records, will be sufficient for your purpose:

David Robertson, sergeant, first class, Hospital Corps, has served fifty-three years in the Hospital Corps and in General Service. His character is recorded as excellent.

Frank M. Marshall, sergeant, first class, Hospital Corps, has served forty-seven years in that corps. His character is recorded as excellent.

Lewis Schultz, private, General Recruiting Service, has served thirty-six years in Troop M, Third Cavalry; Company H, Eighth Infantry, and General Recruiting Service. His character is recorded as excellent.

Richard O. R. Bergath, ordnance sergeant, U. S. Army, has served thirty-three years in Troops I and B, Eighth Cavalry; Companies C and D, Second Infantry, and noncommissioned staff. His character is recorded as excellent.

Joseph Boan, ordnance sergeant, U. S. Army, has served thirty-two years in Company D, Eighteenth Infantry; Battery B, Second Artillery, and noncommissioned staff. His character is recorded as excellent.

William G. Hardy, color sergeant, Fourth Cavalry, has served thirty-one years in Troop A and band, Seventh Cavalry; band and noncommissioned staff, Fourth Cavalry. His character is recorded as excellent.

Charles E. Mossey, sergeant, General Recruiting Service, has served thirty years in Battery I, Fourth Artillery; Battery B, Second Artillery, and General Recruiting Service. His character is recorded as excellent.

Felix Muraszko, commissary sergeant, U. S. Army, has served thirty years in Company E, Engineers; Troop K and noncommissioned staff, First Cavalry, and noncommissioned staff, U. S. Army. His character is recorded as excellent.

Albert E. Honnen, first sergeant, Seventy-eighth Company, Coast Artillery, has served thirty years in Battery I, Fifth Artillery; Battery G, Fourth Artillery; Battery G, Second Artillery; Battery H, Seventh Artillery; Ninety-seventh Company, Coast Artillery, and Seventy-eighth Company, Coast Artillery. His character is recorded as excellent.

John McGuire, private, Nineteenth Company, Coast Artillery, has served thirty years in Battery C, Fourth Artillery; Thirty-eighth Company; Coast Artillery; One hundred and second Company, Coast Artillery, and Nineteenth Company, Coast Artillery. His character is recorded as excellent.

Robert Knox, private, Company D, Twenty-seventh Infantry, has served thirty years in Company K, Fourth Infantry; Company G, Eighteenth Infantry; Company G, Third Infantry; Company D, Seventh Infantry; General Recruiting Service; Company F, Fourteenth Infantry, and Company D, Twenty-seventh Infantry. His character is recorded as very good.

John H. Staab, sergeant, Thirty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery, has served twenty-nine years in Battery A, Fourth Artillery, and Thirty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery. His character is recorded as excellent.

Edwin A. Wilcox, sergeant, Sixty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery, has served twenty-nine years in Company K, Seventh Infantry; Company G, Twenty-second Infantry; Battery F, First Artillery; Battery II, Fourth Artillery; Thirty-fourth Company, Coast Artillery, and Sixty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery. His character is recorded as excellent.

Patrick Moriarty, sergeant, One hundred and twenty-fourth Company, Coast Artillery, has served twenty-nine years in Company E, Fourth Infantry; Ordnance Department; Battery B, Fifth Artillery, and One hundred and twenty-fourth Company, Coast Artillery. His character is recorded as excellent.

Edward Hogan, first-class private, Ordnance Department, has served twenty-nine years in Company C, First Infantry; Company G, Tenth Infantry; Battery F, First Artillery, and Ordnance Department. His character is recorded as very good.

In addition to the foregoing, it may be of interest to you to know that the official records show that there are 2,466 enlisted men on the retired list of the Army. A majority of these men served more than thirty years, and many of them served very much longer than that.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

Senator FORAKER. In connection with the introduction of that letter which the Senator from Massachusetts has offered, I desire to ask whether that letter states whether these men were none of them ever reprimanded or court-martialed?

Senator LODGE. The same statement is made in the letter about their records as is made about that of Mingo Sanders.

Senator FORAKER. The question that I asked General Garlington was whether there was another man with twenty-six years' continuous service who had never been court-martialed or reprimanded.

Senator LODGE. I asked that and they have told me that every one of these cases was that way.

Senator FORAKER. I did not notice that they answered specifically in regard to that point. I would like to have the War Department answer as to the point of my inquiry, whether there was any such record as that of Mingo Sanders, of such a length of service without reprimand or court-martial. It may be. I do not know about it.

The CHAIRMAN. We can get that information from the Department, of course.

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

TESTIMONY OF ALEXANDER J. LEVIE.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please state your name in full, so that we may have it in the record.—A. Alexander J. Levie.

Q. Are you in the military service of the United States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what organization do you belong at this time?—A. Company A of the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Company A of the Eighteenth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since when have you belonged to A Company of the Eighteenth Infantry?—A. Since the 14th of May.

Q. Of this year?—A. Of this year.

Q. Where were you in the service, if in the service at all, prior to that time?—A. I served from February, 1904, until the last of July, 1906, at Fort Brown, Tex.; the remainder of the time at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

Q. I want to get what regiments you have served in. When did you first enlist in the service?—A. January, 1895.

Q. In January, 1895?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you enlist?—A. At Louisville, Ky.

Q. And in what command?—A. The Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. The Eighteenth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was for an enlistment of three years?—A. Three years; yes, sir.

Q. Did you serve out that enlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you serve with your regiment during that time?—A. At Fort Bliss, Tex., and San Antonio, Tex.

Q. And then when that term of enlistment expired did you reenlist; and if so, in what command?—A. The same company.

Q. Company A?—A. Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. And you served another term of three years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then when that term of enlistment expired what did you do?—A. I reenlisted in the same company.

Q. And served again three years?—A. Three years.

Q. Making nine years in all that you served in A Company and in the Eighteenth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you reenlisted in what command?—A. Company L of the Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Company L of the Twenty-sixth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And served with it, as you stated a while ago, while it was at Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, from what time in 1905?—A. 1904.

Q. 1904?—A. Some time in February.

Q. Until it left Brownsville, in 1905?—A. 1906.

Q. Yes; 1906. At what time did you leave Brownsville?—A. I left Brownsville on the 30th day of July.

Q. The 30th of July, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did your company leave there?—A. My company left there, I think it was, the 4th of July.

Q. Yes; the 4th of July; and were you or not of the detachment left behind—we have some testimony on that point—when your battalion went away from Brownsville?—A. I was one of that detachment.

Q. And you remained with that detachment until the 30th of July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, arrived before you left—the colored troops?—A. They arrived, I think, two days before I left.

Q. That would be July 28?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What rank did you have while you were in the Twenty-sixth Infantry?—A. I served two years and six months as a private; the remainder of the time I served as sergeant, L Company.

Q. Of L Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were made first sergeant at what time?—A. I was made first sergeant about the 1st of September.

Q. Of 1906?—A. 1906.

Q. And you served in that rank, did you; until you were discharged?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And went out of the service at the expiration of that enlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you come to reenlist in the Eighteenth Infantry?—A. Well, it was my old regiment, and I had a preference for it.

Q. You wanted to go back to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What rank have you in the Eighteenth?—A. Private.

Q. And you reenlisted in the Eighteenth in May last, a little over a month ago?—A. The 14th day of May.

Q. And that regiment is now stationed where?—A. At Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Q. Is that regiment under orders to go to the Philippines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Sergeant, tell us whether or not you were pretty well acquainted in Brownsville before you left there.—A. I knew a good many people there.

Q. State whether or not you knew a policeman by the name of Genaro Padron.—A. I knew him by the name of Padron.

Q. Padron?—A. Padron; yes, sir.

Q. You remember him, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Distinctly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether or not you saw him on any occasion shortly before the colored troops came there; and if so, give the date when it was, if you can, and the place and the circumstances.—A. I saw Padron on the evening prior to the arrival of the troops there.

Q. That is, if they arrived on the 28th, this would be on the 27th of July?—A. Yes, sir; the 27th.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. At the corner of Elizabeth and Twelfth streets, I believe, in front of the Merchants' National Bank.

Q. State whether or not there were others present.—A. Yes, sir; quite a number.

Q. Who, if you can remember?—A. Well, I didn't pay any attention at the time. I knew at the time a great many people who were there, but accurately I could not recollect very many names that were there.

Q. About how many people were present, if you can tell?—A. I should say about twenty-five or thirty people.

Q. About twenty-five or thirty people?—A. At least.

Q. About what time of the day was that?—A. In the evening, sir; it was just about sundown.

Q. How did you happen to be there at that time?—A. I had walked out of the garrison that evening down into the town.

Q. Were the colored troops expected at that time?—A. They were expected that evening.

Q. State whether or not you heard any conversation at the time and place mentioned in regard to their coming; and if so, by whom was that conversation, and what was said.—A. The people had congregated on the street that evening, expecting the arrival of the colored troops, and I had heard the remarks, and I halted at the corner of Twelfth and Elizabeth streets. They were very much worried, apparently, at the sending of the colored troops to Brownsville.

Q. State whether or not the remarks were of a friendly character in respect to their coming, or of a hostile character.—A. I should say hostile.

Q. Well, proceed.—A. They contended that the War Department knew the feelings of the people of Brownsville, that they would not stand for the colored troops, and that they were going to get rid of them. An old gentleman who was there made the remark that the first crooked move they would make they would annihilate the whole shooting match. Some one amongst the crowd made the remark that it might be a hard proposition to do up the battalion of the soldiers. He continued, saying that if there wasn't enough people in Brownsville they would call in the farmers from the surrounding country. Another gentleman who was there, whom I did not know, but afterwards found out who he was, said that if they wanted any assistance just to let them know and they would come down any time.

Q. Did you find out what his name was?—A. I inquired of a man I knew, of Brownsville, and was told that his name was McLean, and that he was a school-teacher at or near Santa Maria.

Q. That he was a school-teacher at or near Santa Maria?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While this conversation was in progress, did you or not see the policeman Padron?—A. This old gentleman then went on to tell about how many times the colored troops had been in Brownsville, and while this conversation was going on, two policemen came up, Dominguez and Padron.

Q. Dominguez. Was that the lieutenant of the police force?—A. That was the lieutenant of police.

Q. You knew him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew him well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what occurred after they came up?—A. When the old gentleman got through, some one said: "Now, you policemen have got to keep your backbones about you; we are going to stand by you, and we don't want you to give those niggers an inch." Padron pulled a dirk out of his sleeve—he was standing very close to me—and exhibited it and said that he had that for cutting purposes.

Q. State what was done with that; whether it was exhibited to the crowd generally.—A. Yes, sir; it was passed amongst the crowd.

Q. What did you say?—A. It was passed amongst the crowd, and they all looked at it.

Q. Please describe that dirk.—A. It seemed to me to be what we call, what the Filipinos call, a stiletto, with a brown handle to it, and a blade fully 6 inches long.

Q. What do you mean by a hilt?—A. The crosspiece at the end of the blade.

Q. A crosspiece?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It had a handle with a crosspiece that would protect the hand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then a straight blade?—A. A straight blade, only it was sort of octagon shape.

Q. State whether or not that was exhibited there in the presence of the lieutenant of police, Dominguez.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to the persons in the crowd generally?—A. Yes, sir; to persons in the crowd. It was passed amongst the crowd.

Q. They took it and handed it about, and you saw it returned finally to Padron?—A. I can not remember it being returned to him.

Q. But you say that he had it, and took it from where?—A. He had it in his sleeve—pulled it from his sleeve.

Q. And said that he had that for—what was the remark?—A. He made a remark, a foul epithet to it. The substance of it was that he had it for cutting purposes.

Q. Cutting purposes. I wish you would look at the knife I now hand you and state whether or not that was the knife that he had and exhibited [showing knife to witness].—A. It was not a knife at all.

Q. It was not this knife?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see this knife at all on that occasion?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see that knife before?—A. (After examination of knife.) No, sir.

Q. Now, Sergeant, while you are on the stand I will ask you about another matter. You had experience in cleaning guns, of course?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had to clean guns all these years that you were in the service?—A. Had to clean my own gun; yes, sir.

Q. You carried the Krag rifle and the Springfield rifle during that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were familiar with both?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Can you tell us what your experience has been in the cleaning of these high-power guns after they have been fired; how long it takes to clean one of them so as to remove all stains of powder and make it pass inspection, particularly a rigid inspection?—A. Well, it is a difficult matter, I consider. It is a difficult matter to clean a gun. I do not think that I could clean one in at least less than half an hour.

Q. Is that, according to your observation, the experience of other enlisted men in the commands where you have served?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It takes all of them about that time?—A. I think so, and longer.

Q. Could you clean one of these guns, after it had been fired, in the dark so as to make it pass inspection?—A. I do not think I could.

Q. What has been your experience in the use of the thong brush that is supplied with the gun, found in the butt of it, for cleaning it?—A. It is not generally used; it is not used at all, in fact.

Q. Why is it not used?—A. There are no results from it. In the first place, after firing the gun you would not dare to put any kind of rag on the end of that thong brush. It would break and stop the gun.

Q. It would break?—A. It would break, yes; you could not pull it through your gun.

Q. Would it clean the gun if it did go through?—A. No, sir.

Q. How do you have to clean the gun in order to get it thoroughly cleaned?—A. Well, the majority of the men use this solution of sal-soda and water, and rags.

Q. What is your experience in the cleaning of guns, as to setting them aside and looking at them later and finding what the condition may be?—A. I find that no matter how careful you are—that is my experience, at least—after cleaning a gun, you may think you have it thoroughly clean, and in several hours afterwards, if you look at it, it looks very foul, and it will continue so for several days.

Q. So that you have to reclean it and retouch it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To keep it clean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your opinion, could a gun be thoroughly cleaned—just the barrel of it—in two or three minutes of time, either by a rod and rags, or by the thong brush with rags, or in any other way that you know of?—A. From my personal experience, I do not think it could.

Q. At least, that is your experience?—A. That is my experience.

Q. And that is the experience of the men with whom you have served?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of men cleaning their guns, after they had been fired, in anything like as short a time as ten or fifteen minutes, so that they would pass inspection?—A. If a man had all the facilities, he might be able to do it.

Q. He might be able to do it in fifteen minutes?

Senator WARNER. He said ten or fifteen minutes.

Senator FORAKER. I am going to put the ten in.

A. He might do it if it was to pass immediate inspection.

Q. Immediate inspection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, in ten or fifteen minutes?—A. Yes, sir; or probably half an hour; but not any longer, I don't think.

Q. That is, it might pass inspection in half an hour or an hour afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or perhaps two or three hours afterwards?—A. Well, it would begin to show, and creep up again.

Q. It would begin to show?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is your experience?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If anybody has ever had a contrary experience, you never heard of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard of anybody cleaning these guns in any shorter time than your experience has shown you was necessary to clean them?—A. To thoroughly clean a gun, I certainly could not do it in less time than half an hour.

Q. Have you any relation whatever to the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. None whatever.

Q. Or to these colored troops?—A. None whatever.

Q. Or have you any interest in them?—A. None in the least.

Q. While you were sergeant of the guard, was it or not your duty to inspect the guns, to inspect the guards, for instance?—A. I have never been sergeant of the guard, sir. I have always inspected the company guard that mounted.

Q. You have always inspected the detail from your company?—A. Yes, sir; from my company.

Q. Was it your duty as inspector of the company guard to inspect their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you have had experience not only in cleaning guns, but also in inspecting guns, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I would like to have now the two guns that were left here the other day by General Crozier, so that I may let the Sergeant look at them.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you ever inspect any guns about two hours after they had been fired?—A. Yes, sir; that is, my own.

Q. Any but your own?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You have no interest whatever in this controversy, Sergeant, have you?—A. None in the least, sir.

Q. I wish you would look at the two guns now shown you. First tell me what kind of guns they were.—A. (Examining one gun.) This is the latest model Springfield rifle.

Q. That is the gun you now carry?—A. That is the gun we now carry; yes, sir.

Q. And that is the kind the Twenty-sixth Infantry had at Fort Brown?—A. I think not.

Q. Before they left there?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the difference about this gun?—A. This has the 1905 sight.

Q. There is a difference in the sight?—A. And this is equipped for the knife bayonet.

Q. For the knife bayonet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you had guns different in that respect?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But so far as the barrel and the chamber is concerned, it is the same gun?—A. I think it is identical.

Q. The only difference between the later issue and the former issue was the difference as to the sight—A. And the bayonet.

Q. And the bayonet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you kindly look at these guns and tell us whether they are clean or not? Look at both of them; see if you can get the light through them.—A. (Removing breech bolt from one gun and sighting through barrel). This rifle would not pass inspection under any officer in the service.

Q. That rifle would not pass inspection under any officer in the service. Lay that gun aside and take the other one.—A. (After examining second gun.) This one is equally as bad.

Q. That is equally as bad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would that pass inspection under any officer under whom you have ever served?—A. This one [indicating]?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. You are looking simply at the barrel?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. The rifle that the witness was first shown is No. 245484. The rifle last shown to the witness is No. 198263.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Would you allow a man of your company to go on guard with a gun in that condition?—A. No, sir.

Q. What would you do with a man if he should present himself for duty with the guard with a gun in that condition?—A. It would be my duty to put on the supernumerary of the guard.

Q. To do what?—A. To put on the man detailed for supernumerary and send this man back to the quarters.

Q. Would you report him?—A. I would report him to the company commander.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you ever see those guns before?—A. Those guns [indicating]?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. They are both alike—that is, the guns are of the same manufacture and each is in a foul condition?—A. Each of them is in a foul condition.

Q. They are equally foul?—A. Pretty near so; yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by "pretty near?"—A. Well, I would say that one is equally as bad as the other.

Q. Equally as bad as the other. They show no signs of having been cleaned, either of them?—A. They may have been partially cleaned, but the powder has crept up on them since they have been fired. They occur to me as guns that have been fired.

Q. Both of them show evidence of having been partially cleaned?—A. They might be.

Q. You see no difference in them?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say powder may have crept up on them?—A. Powder has crept up in them, if there was an effort made to clean them.

Q. And you say after a gun has been cleaned so that it will appear all right within a few hours after it is cleaned, this may appear in the gun?—A. It will appear; yes, sir; that is my experience.

Q. That is usually after eight or ten hours, is it not?—A. Less time.

Q. What time?—A. Two or three hours; you can see the evidence very plainly.

Q. When they appear perfectly clean before that time, these stains will appear afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You say there has been an attempt to clean both of them?—A. There may have been; I can not say.

Q. Is one of them fouler than the other or are both about the same?—A. I think both about the same.

Q. You could not distinguish which of the two is the cleaner?—

A. Just looking at them, I thought the first gun I looked at was a little fouler than the last one.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The first was a little more foul?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Which is the first gun you looked at?—A. I couldn't tell you, sir.

Q. Look at them.—A. You mean examine them?

Q. Look at them, yes; and see if there is any difference.

(The witness here removed the bolts from both guns and looked through the barrels.)

A. This gun here is, I would say, the fouler of the two.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is the number of that gun?

Senator FORAKER. Look at the number and see what it is.

The WITNESS. 245484.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And what is the number of the other?—A. 198263.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he call the latter the cleaner of the two?

Senator FORAKER. He said the first one was the fouler of the two and the last one was more clean than the other.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. A gun that was cleaned twenty-four hours ago so that it would pass inspection now would show signs of the powder creeping up on it?—A. That is my experience; yes, sir.

Q. Although it would pass inspection at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the soldier would think that he had his gun clean?—A. A man that has any experience of course knows that he has not got it clean. It takes several days so that it will remain in that condition.

Q. What is that?—A. It takes several days to get a gun so that it will remain clean.

Q. To get all of the powder out of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, you have to clean it and reclean it and keep cleaning it?—A. Yes, sir; for several days.

Q. But, as I say, the gun that has passed inspection, that appears bright and clean, after standing some hours powder creeps up on it?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. However clean the soldier has apparently gotten it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when you speak of inspection, a gun passing inspection, you mean to pass it as a gun, as an entire gun—that is, all of it, the barrel and the bolt and the magazine and everything about it—the barrel outside and inside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it it would take but a very short time, would it, Mr. Levie, simply to clean the inside of the barrel itself so as to remove the powder stains, where you take it very shortly after it is fired?—A. Well, that is practically the only part that you have to clean.

Q. You do not have to clean the magazine? No powder goes back in the magazine?—A. Some burnt powder goes back in the magazine.

Q. How can any burnt powder get back in the magazine?—A. I don't know that I am able to—

Q. Is not that a very rare thing, and is it not only in a case where the primer of the cartridge is defective, and the striker pierces through, and that lets the gas of the powder back?—A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. You do not?—A. I am speaking now from experience, mind you. I find that on shooting these rifles you might not notice after firing, say 15 or 20 shots, but you will find that evidence of the powder, it seems, gets in the magazine. It is sort of waxy here [indicating] and it will make your gun run hard.

Q. After how many shots?—A. I don't know that I have had experience to say how many shots.

Q. Fifty or a hundred?—A. Oh, less.

Q. How many?—A. I am not prepared to state how many shots I have fired a gun without noticing any evidence of this, but on a day's shooting, say firing 60 rounds, you will find considerable evidence.

Q. How many times do you have to insert the ramrod—that is, the cleaning rod, as we call it—with sal soda, to remove the powder after it has been fired five or six times, and do it shortly after it has been fired, within an hour or five hours afterwards?—A. I do not know that I could give you any accurate idea how many times you would have to pump it up and down. The way I usually clean a gun, I clean it from the breech end with the rod. The way the soldiers usually do, and particularly myself, is to get about 2 inches of water in a bucket, with the solution of sal soda, so that the water will not get up on the iron here [indicating], because it will stain the iron wherever it gets on the iron; so that it will not get up but 2 or 3 inches and get up on the barrel, and so as to get the suction.

Q. So as to get the suction at the muzzle of the gun?—A. Yes, sir; so as to get the suction.

Q. Then, how many times do you have to work that up and down?—A. Probably fifty or a hundred times.

Q. Probably fifty or a hundred times?—A. I should think so; probably five minutes—that is, that would be the first thing we would do.

Q. Then what would be the next thing you would do?—A. Then thoroughly dry it out with rags.

Q. How long will that take?—A. It will take equally as long.

Q. Equally as long?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Then the gun is clean?—A. No, sir; then we go at it with the same solution of sal soda again.

Q. You go at it with the same solution again?—A. Yes, sir; and raise up more of that.

Q. And then you dry the gun again?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you through then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you give it the third dose of sal soda?—A. If it didn't look right, I would give it a third dose.

Q. Is it clean then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you give it a fourth dose?—A. If it looks bad enough, I give it the fourth dose.

Q. Then you go through another ten minutes. Then it is clean?—
A. Then we generally polish them out with this metal polisher.

Q. How long does that take?—A. I couldn't say exactly how long.

Q. Would that take ten minutes more?—A. I would think so; fully ten minutes.

Q. Ten minutes more?—A. And to get that out I wipe it out clean afterwards.

Q. So that you have altogether, now—in all—fifty minutes. That is correct, is it not?—A. I didn't count.

Q. You have taken fifty minutes in getting it thoroughly clean?—
A. I didn't count up how many I went; but I would say that the number of times that you would give it the solution of sal soda would all depend on how it looked in the barrel after you got through.

Q. Yes; and you might give it the first time the solution of sal soda, and it would appear clean?—A. If it would appear clean, we would wipe it out and give it the scrubbing out with the pomade—what we call pomade—which is a metal polisher.

Q. Then how long would it take to get that cleaned out?—A. It could be done in ten minutes.

Q. It could be done in ten minutes?—A. Yes, sir; the pomade.

Q. The pomade would take ten minutes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the sal soda how long?—A. I would say that the sal soda—

Q. Altogether?—A. The sal soda and the dry wipings would take ten minutes.

Q. That would take fully ten minutes?—A. Yes, sir; that will take fully ten minutes.

Q. That would ordinarily get the barrel of the gun clean?—
A. Usually.

Q. That would be the case; that is your observation, you say, as well as your experience?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard an old gentleman talking, you say. Who was that old gentleman?—A. I had seen him around Brownsville a good many times, but never knew his name. I asked a Mr. Falgout, a carpenter that used to work in the post, who he was.

Q. Was he there at the time?—A. Mr. Falgout?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; he was in the crowd.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. How do you spell that name?—A. F-a-l-g-o-u-t.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What does he do in the post?—A. He sometimes worked there as a carpenter.

Q. Was he a citizen there in the town?—A. He was a citizen of Brownsville.

Q. So that you asked him what this old man's name was?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. Well, as well as I can recollect, he told me it was McDonough.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. M-c-D-o-n-o-u-g-h?—A. I think that would be it; yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. We have not heard of him before.

Senator FORAKER. Yes, you have. I made an inquiry about him.

Senator WARNER. Well, Senator, I do not remember it. Pardon me.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. About how old a man was he?—A. I should think about 60 or 65 years of age.

Q. With gray hair?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whiskers?—A. He had chin whiskers.

Q. A mustache?—A. A mustache and chin whiskers.

Q. A mustache and chin whiskers?—A. Yes, sir; he was shaved down to here [indicating], as well as I can recollect.

Q. His chin whiskers were gray?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How tall a man was he?—A. I should judge about as tall as I am; 5 feet  $7\frac{1}{2}$  to 5 feet 8 inches.

Q. Did he exhibit any weapons?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did he say?—A. His first remark that I heard him make was that the first crooked move they made they would annihilate the whole shooting match.

Q. The first crooked move they made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They would annihilate the whole shooting match?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else was said?—A. He then proceeded to tell about the number of times that the negro troops had been there, and what they had done with them.

Q. That old man did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many times did he say the colored troops had been there?—A. He said that that would be the fourth time the negro troops had been there, when they got there this time.

Q. You say he told about the other times they had been there. What did he tell?—A. He went on to say that General Sheridan brought the first ones that ever were there, during the war, and he said a good many of those got discharged there and remained around there. "But," he says, "they are all gone. We used to call them wild-cat niggers, and occasionally one of them was found dead in the brush, but nothing was thought about it."

Q. Nothing thought about it; yes?—A. Speaking to some of them that he knew there, he said, "If you remember, old man John White killed the last of them."

Q. Killed the last of them; yes?—A. Yes.

Q. That is, those that were discharged?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't kill any except those discharged?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just let them get discharged and then killed them?—A. Yes, sir; so I understood.

Q. So that they didn't do anything with the colored troops as troops, but let them get discharged and then killed them?—A. That was the first ones.

Q. What did they do with the next ones, kill them after they were discharged?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did they do with them?—A. He spoke about a troop that Captain Ayres had down there, and said that they made them walk the chalk line. That is about the only remark he made about them, that they made those niggers walk the chalk line.

Q. Was that the remark he made?—A. As near as I can recollect, that is about the remark he made, that they made them walk the chalk line.

Q. What else?—A. The conversation got general then as to what they had done with different niggers there that got discharged—those old ones.

Q. But the troops themselves—had you heard of anything being done with the troops except Captain Ayres's company that they said they had made walk the chalk line?—A. Those first ones—

Q. But that was after they were discharged?—A. No, sir; before they were discharged. "Of course," he said, "in those days we could do just as we liked with niggers. We could handle them." Those were the ones that Sheridan brought down.

Q. I suppose General Sheridan being along they could handle them just as they pleased?—A. I knew nothing about that, sir.

Q. Then what else was said?—A. There was something said about how some of the young fellows had beaten them, downtown, with bricks, and so forth; just jokingly.

Q. What did they say?—A. This man McLean spoke of young Egley beating one of these men down with a brick. He laid for him in an alley.

Q. This man McLean was what age?—A. To look at him, I should say about 40 years of age.

Q. He seemed to be a desperado?—A. No, sir; he seemed to be a very well-dressed gentleman.

Q. A peaceable-looking, nice-looking man?—A. Yes, sir; he appeared to be.

Q. What other remarks did you hear?—A. I don't know of any other remarks that particularly settled on my mind, sir. There was considerable talking; everybody was doing considerable talking during the intervals.

Q. Everybody where?—A. In the crowd that was standing there.

Q. Anywhere else?—A. No, sir; I left and went right home from there.

Q. You heard no talk before or afterwards?—A. No, sir; I never mixed up with the people of Brownsville.

Q. Answer my question. You heard no talk before or afterwards because you did not mix up with the people of Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is all the conversation you heard?—A. I heard some conversation from men in Brownsville.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What was that?—A. I had heard conversation from the better class of citizens, who objected to the negro troops coming there.

Q. From whom?—A. Mr. Cross's clerk.

Q. What was his name?—A. I don't know his name.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did he have more than one clerk?—A. We called this his business clerk. We done considerable business there, the quartermaster did, and I had occasion to go there occasionally.

Q. What sort of a looking man was he?—A. He was a man about 5 feet 10. I think he is a Mexican. I know he didn't speak any English except through his interpreter.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You heard him speaking through an interpreter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom was he speaking to through an interpreter?—A. He was speaking to me, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Who was the interpreter?—A. He was a Mexican, too.

Q. What was his name?—A. I can't tell you his name.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. How did you come to talk with him through an interpreter about these troops?—A. I was doing business there for the quartermaster, purchasing goods.

Q. And what did he say?—A. He said they were very much astonished at the Government sending them down there; that they didn't want them down there at all.

Q. What else?—A. That was about the gist of his remarks.

Q. Did you hear any other remarks that were made?—A. From him?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I can't recall any there.

Q. What else did you hear?—A. I have heard other people talk in the same strain.

Q. Who else? That is, that they did not want colored troops there?—A. Mr. Maltby.

Q. What did he say?—A. That they did not want the colored troops there.

Q. What threats, if any, did he make?—A. He did not make any.

Q. He did not make any threats whatever?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Cross's clerk did not make any threats?—A. No, sir.

Q. And the only thing that approximated a threat that you say you heard was in this crowd?—A. Was in this crowd; yes, sir.

Q. What day of the week was that?—A. I can not recall the day of the week.

Q. Or the day of the month?—A. It was on the evening of the 27th.

Q. What makes you remember that it was the evening of the 27th?—A. I fix that from the time the colored troops had got there, and the time I left there. They got there the evening of the 28th, and I left there the morning of the 30th.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Were there any other soldiers down there when you were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went down there alone?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You had your uniform on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of a soldier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who were in that crowd?—A. I can not remember of only two or three that were there at that time. I remember distinctly Mr. Thorn being there. He was the first man that got hold of this dagger.

Q. That is Doctor Thorn?—A. Doctor Thorn.

Q. The dentist?—A. The dentist.

Q. Who else?—A. I knew a man named Neal that was there, and a Mr.—

Q. What did Mr. Neal do?—A. I never saw him do anything, sir, so far as my recollection goes.

Q. You mean that he had no business?—A. He had an income, from what I could learn. I never made any particular inquiries about him at that time.

Q. That is, he was a retired merchant?—A. He was a middle-aged man; he was not an old man, but quite an aged man; he had a gray moustache.

Q. You understood he had retired from business and had an income?—A. No, I can't say that; I don't know that I ever heard anything regarding him.

Q. You say that he had an income?—A. I understood that he did.

Q. Then you knew something about him. Did you make any inquiries regarding him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who did you tell about this thing?—A. The only person I told about it at the time was Mr. Sharpe, the next morning; the only one I spoke to about it.

Q. Who was Mr. Sharpe?—A. The post blacksmith there.

Q. Did you mention it to anybody else?—A. I mentioned it, possibly three months afterwards, to my company commander.

Q. Who was that?—A. Captain Baldwin.

Q. Anyone else?—A. The next time I mentioned it was to Major Penrose.

Q. To Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. As far as I can recollect, it was some time about the 1st of last April.

Q. Were you a witness in the Penrose court-martial?—A. I was not.

Q. How came you to mention it to Major Penrose?—A. Major Penrose sent for me; he asked me if I would report to his quarters; he was at San Antonio at the time; I went down there.

Q. Was that at the time the court-martial proceedings were going on?—A. Afterwards; afterwards. It was possibly pretty nearly a month afterwards, as far as I can recollect.

Q. How did he come to send for you?—A. I don't know, sir; I never did know.

Q. Did he ask you about this conversation?—A. He said that he had heard I had overheard a conversation.

Q. And that is all you told it to?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. You say you overheard this conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not directed to you? You were not all there talking together about this matter?—A. Sir?

Q. These people that were collected at the time you speak of were all talking among themselves, or did you overhear something that some of the party were saying?—A. I was standing at the corner there and they were collected around the corner—at this corner.

Q. Those people were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were one of the party?—A. I happened to be there; yes, sir.

Q. Then why do you say you overheard it?—A. Well, I thought that was the proper way to put it.

Q. Were there any efforts made to conceal at all what was being said?—A. None whatever.

Q. Were they not talking right out to everybody that was in the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you call that overhearing a conversation?—A. I probably should have said "heard."

Q. So that you wish to correct that expression?—A. Yes, sir; it probably would be better.

Q. Did you join in the conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you speak to anybody?—A. I asked Mr. Falgout who those two gentlemen were?

Q. And he told you?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Do you understand Mexican?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did not Padron speak to you through an interpreter?—A. No, sir; he always spoke to me in English.

Q. Good English?—A. Not good English; but he can speak English.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Did you examine this dirk?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you handle it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then how are you able to describe it?—A. It was passed around through the crowd.

Q. It was passed to everybody in the crowd but you?—A. Everybody that reached for it got it I guess, in turn.

Q. But you did not reach for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And yet you have described it with great accuracy here today?—A. It was as close to me as this gentleman is here [indicating the stenographer].

Q. You say Padron speaks English?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. He speaks it quite well, does he not?—A. Broken.

Q. Quite well?—A. I can understand him very well.

Senator OVERMAN. Anybody could understand him?

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You had known him some time?—A. From the time I had been there, all the time I had been there. I had seen him as a policeman. He was a policeman on duty on Elizabeth street.

Q. You knew him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He seemed to be a quiet and peaceable man?—A. I never knew anything against him.

Q. You were there how long?—A. Two years and six months.

Q. And you had seen him; you were downtown, and you would see him frequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And talk with him?—A. I can't say that.

Q. And the lieutenant of police, you knew something of him?—A. I had seen him.

Q. And you knew something of his reputation there, did you, as an efficient, honest, reliable man?—A. I can't say that I did. I never heard anything against him or for him.

Q. Neither for nor against him?—A. No, sir.

Q. He was there in the crowd. What did he say?—A. He didn't say a word; at least, I didn't hear him. He may have spoken in Mexican, but I would not understand that.

Q. He may have spoken in Mexican?—A. He may have.

Q. Did he take the knife?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Did he see the knife?—A. Oh, certainly; could have seen it. He was standing right alongside of Padron at the time. They both came up together.

Q. And you say it was a kind of novelty?—A. It seemed so.

Q. And it was passed around?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was there novel about it?—A. It seems they made the remark that they had never seen one like it before.

Q. A knife like that?—A. It was not a knife, but a dirk.

Q. I know, but a dirk knife?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They never had seen one like it before?—A. That was the expression; yes, sir.

Q. The blade was how long?—A. I should say fully 6 inches.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You say you were first sergeant in the Twenty-sixth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And now you are a private?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. How long since you reenlisted?—A. I reenlisted on the 14th of May.

Q. This year?—A. This year.

Senator WARNER. That is all, I think.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You retained your rank of sergeant until your term of enlistment expired and you were discharged from the Twenty-sixth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any trouble at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you your discharge with you?—A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. If you had stayed in that regiment, you could have retained your rank as sergeant?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You preferred your old regiment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had served three terms of enlistment in it, and wanted to go back to it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Where did this conversation about the knife occur; where were they standing?—A. Right at the corner, in front of the Merchants' National Bank; that is the first bank out of the post from Brownsville, just on the corner, of, I think, Twelfth and Elizabeth streets.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Had you taken any drinks that day?—A. I do not drink at all, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You do not drink at all, do you, Sergeant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now let me ask you another question. You were asked whether or not any powder stains were ever found in the chamber of a gun, and I understood you to say that burnt powder seemed to get into the magazine?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that might come in from the firing of one shot or half a dozen shots as well as from 50 shots, might it not?—A. Well, it might take some time for any amount of it to collect in there.

Q. I will ask you if when the extractor pulls the exploded shell back into the magazine, if that is not when the gas or burnt powder might escape from the bore into the chamber?—A. If I said burnt powder, I want to correct that. I should have said that it was unburned powder.

Q. Unburned powder?—A. Yes, sir; unburned powder.

Q. I wish you would look at the chambers of these two guns that were submitted to you a while ago, and see in what condition they are.—A. (After examining gun.) I can see no evidence of it in this gun at all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What do you say?—A. I can see no evidence of it, no traces of it at all, sir.

Q. Do you see any traces of it on the other one?—A. (After examining the other gun.) No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You can see no traces of powder in either of those guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you if, when the bolt goes forward and the cartridge is exploded, and then the man in charge of the rifle draws the bolt back, if the ejector, as it is called, does not seize upon it and pull it back into the chamber, opening up the barrel into the chamber?—A. When the bolt is drawn back the shell will come back. It is released here. When this thing throws it up, and it flies out [indicating], there is no particular direction that it will fly in. They may fly in any direction.

Q. That is, the shells may fly in any direction, but this is drawn back so as to open up the barrel [indicating with gun]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. One shell is pulled back here to be thrown out, and then there is a clear entrance from the chamber into the barrel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever observed any gases or anything escaping, after firing, from the barrel into the chamber?—A. No, sir; no gas.

Q. It all goes forward, does it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I only asked for information.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understand from you that this is invariable; that to clean a gun immediately after it is fired is a simple matter, and it looks clean; but later on, and invariably, the gun will show signs of powder?—A. It will look worse than before you started to clean it.

Q. Is it possible, then, to clean a gun immediately after it has been fired so that it will remain clean, say six months—perfectly clean in the barrel?—A. I never had that experience, sir.

Q. In all cases the discoloration and dullness will come back, and the gun has to be cleaned at some time afterwards to make it perfectly clean?—A. Yes, sir; that is my experience.

Q. So that after firing a cartridge, if you clean it, it may pass inspection at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But in a week or a month it will need cleaning again?—A. Well, our experience is this, sir: We watch them very closely two or three days afterwards, and we clean them very thoroughly two or three days afterwards; and we finally get them so that we will not have to draw a rag through them in probably six months. It depends on the climate you are in.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Just one question. This new smokeless powder fouls the barrel in a very different way from the old-fashioned black powder?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Suppose a gun is cleaned and then set aside for three or four days and then looked at, will not the barrel look foul again? Will not the stains reappear?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. They will not reappear, however, if the gun is thoroughly cleaned?

The WITNESS. You are speaking about cleaning the gun once?

Senator LODGE. Cleaning the gun once.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Cleaning it for an ordinary inspection?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. So that if you clean it two or three hours after it is fired and then set it aside, the barrel will become foul again if it is not cleaned again?—A. That is my experience, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. But if the gun is thoroughly cleaned, as you would clean it if you were to work on it thirty minutes, that gun would not become foul again? If the gun were as thoroughly cleaned as it might be in thirty minutes, then it would not become foul again, as I understood you to say?—A. It will reappear.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. In other words, it is impossible to clean it in just one cleaning, so that in a day or two afterwards it will not look foul?—A. Well, I will not say impossible, because they might take considerable time on it and might get it out; but I have never devoted enough time to my gun so that I ever got it clean.

Q. And you have devoted as much as thirty minutes?—A. More.

Q. More than thirty minutes?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In your gun it has always reappeared again, so as to require a second cleaning?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The gun before you which you think is the cleaner, can you tell whether that gun has been cleaned at all from the present appearance of it?—A. No; I would not like to say.

Q. Would your gun become as dirty after you had spent thirty minutes in cleaning it—would your gun become anything like as dirty as that gun is?—A. I don't think it would become as foul as that gun is.

Q. Neither one of these guns would pass the inspection of an officer whom you have ever served under, as I understand you?—A. Neither one of them; no, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. The one that is not so foul as the other, could you tell whether that would pass an inspection soon after it had been cleaned, four or five hours afterwards?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that might have been cleaned so as to pass inspection?—A. You can wipe a gun out so that it will pass inspection a very short time after.

Q. Did you ever try the thong and brush?—A. I did when they got it first. The one that I have got now has never been out of my gun.

Q. Would it not be possible to take that thong and brush, and if the string did not break, take a rag and pull it through there, and then clean the gun sufficiently for it to be inspected, say two hours after the shooting, if it had only been shot five times?—A. Well, my judgment would be that with the thong and brush you could not.

Q. If the string did not break?—A. I have tried it on the range, firing between different ranges, to clean it, when we first got it.

Q. Did you try it with the rag?—A. Yes, sir. I may say, sir, that in firing at the target, between different ranges, I always attempt to clean my gun as well as I can, to get as much of the gases and lead out of it as I can, before I fire at the other range, but I never could do anything with this thong and brush, sir.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. What was your occupation before you went into the Army?—A. Carpenter.

Q. Where?—A. In Michigan.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Where did you enlist?—A. Louisville, Ky.

Q. How did you happen to go to Louisville, Ky., to enlist?—A. I left the north on account of it being so cold, came down to work for the winter, and when I went down through the Southern States I found I could get no employment there.

Q. What Southern States had you been in before you went into the Army?—A. Kentucky, and I have been down at Birmingham, Ala.

Q. Senator Pettus's State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you stay in Birmingham?—A. I stayed there a little over a week, sir.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I came back to Louisville, Ky.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I stayed there from some time in November, I think, until January, the latter part of January. I worked there for a Mr. H. H. Thornberry, who was a lawyer, I believe, in Louisville, Ky.

Q. Worked as a carpenter for a lawyer?—A. No, sir; he had a small home just outside of the city, near Jacob Park, and he employed me to do such work as was to be done around there. I was willing to do anything. I could not get any employment.

Q. You were not carrying on your trade there at all?—A. At the same time I did some carpenter work for him. I put up a stable for him.

- Q. Where did you work before you went to Louisville?—A. Bad-axe, Mich.
- Q. Were you raised in Michigan?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Where were you raised?—A. Canada, sir.
- Q. How long were you in Michigan?—A. Something like six years.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES W. NEWTON—Colored.

JAMES W. NEWTON, colored, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator FORAKER:

- Q. State your name in full.—A. James W. Newton.
- Q. Were you a member of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry in August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Last year?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. To what company did you belong?—A. Company C.
- Q. Were you with your company at Brownsville, Tex.?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How long had you been in the service prior to that?—A. About seven years and four months.
- Q. Where did you first enlist?—A. At Greenville, S. C.
- Q. And in what command?—A. In the Twenty-fourth Infantry.
- Q. And how long did you serve there?—A. I served in the Twenty-fourth Infantry five years, eleven months, and five days.
- Q. Then you served two enlistments?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the exact time, you say?—A. Five years, eleven months, and five days.
- Q. How did you happen to be discharged before the expiration of your full term?—A. The first time I was discharged on account of short remaining term, for the convenience of the United States Government.
- Q. That was the first enlistment?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And the second time you served out your enlistment in full?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And then you reenlisted in the Twenty-fifth?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. In Company C—where was it that you reenlisted this last time?—A. In Fort Missoula, Mont.
- Q. Were both regiments there, the Twenty-fourth and the Twenty-fifth?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How did you happen to enlist in the Twenty-fifth; was the Twenty-fourth there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where was the Twenty-fifth?—A. The Twenty-fifth was in Fort Niobrara, two battalions.
- Q. And when you were discharged from the Twenty-fourth at Fort Missoula you went from there to Fort Niobrara and enlisted in the Twenty-fifth, is that it?—A. No, sir; I reenlisted at Fort Missoula for the Twenty-fifth.
- Q. How did you come to change regiments?—A. I thought that the Twenty-fifth was going back to the Philippine Islands before the Twenty-fourth, and I intended to go back to the Philippine Islands with them.
- Q. Had you served in the Philippine Islands?—A. Yes, sir; on the first enlistment.

Q. You had been there with the Twenty-fourth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During your first enlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when did you return from the Philippines?—A. February, 1902.

Q. You were with your company when it left Fort Niobrara, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And went to Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been testified here that there was some trouble in Brownsville between a man by the name of Tate and a soldier by the name of Newton who belonged to Company C. Are you the soldier?—A. Yes, sir; I am.

Q. Please describe to us what occurred. Tell us all about it in your own way. First, let me ask you when it was, if you can tell?—

A. The 5th of August.

Q. On the 5th day of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remember what day of the week that was?—A. It was on a Sunday, if I am not mistaken.

Q. About what time was it—what o'clock?—A. Between 8 and 9 o'clock, as nearly as I can recollect it.

Q. In the evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it before or after dark?—A. After dark, sir.

Q. Well, now, where did it happen?—A. It happened below the post-office, sir; in that section.

Q. Can you tell us on what street the post-office is situated?—A. I don't know but one street; I think it is Elizabeth street. That is the only street I know there.

Q. Is it situated on the street that leads out from the gate of the garrison?—A. I think it is, sir.

Q. At your left is a map hanging on the wall [referring to the map]. This is the reservation. Here are the barracks. That is Elizabeth street.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Here is D barracks, and B barracks, and C barracks, and the unoccupied barracks.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The guardhouse up here, the hospital over here, the officers' quarters over here, and the administration building here. Now, where is the post-office? Is it on this street that you enter when you go out at the gate and proceed in a straight direction?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is the street it is on, sir.

Q. You think it is. Well, about how far from the garrison is the post-office situated, if you can tell?—A. I think it is three or four blocks, more or less, sir.

Q. You don't know exactly?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not familiar with the streets there?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long had you been at Brownsville?—A. I had been there ever since my battalion arrived there.

Q. Only about a week prior to this time, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The testimony is that you arrived there on the 28th of July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this was the 5th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you been around through the town any, up to that time?—A. I think I had taken a walk about three times.

Q. Had you become familiar with the streets?—A. No, sir; not very.

Q. Or with the location of the buildings?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, this was Sunday evening, August 5, between 8 and 9 o'clock. Where were you going, and were you in company with anybody; and if so, with whom?—A. With Private Frank J. Lipscomb.

Q. Was he of that same company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you going?—A. We were taking a walk, and had been by the post-office, sir.

Q. You had been by the post-office?—A. Yes, sir; and on the way from there up the street.

Q. And you were beyond the post-office, were you, going from the garrison?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you armed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Neither of you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any kind of weapon?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were either of you drunk?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had either of you been drinking?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was Sunday evening. Well, now, what occurred? Just tell that in your own way.—A. As we passed beyond the post-office here, there was a party of ladies standing on the sidewalk, and they were standing in such a position that we had to walk by file in order to pass them, and as I passed them I said something to Frank—I have forgotten what it was—and when I looked around this way again, why, some one had drawn back, and as I turned that way he struck me with a revolver and knocked me down.

Q. Did you pass through that crowd of ladies?—A. No, sir.

Q. Standing on the sidewalk?—A. No, sir; between them and the fence.

Q. You went between them and the fence?—A. Yes, sir; they standing around to my left—to our left—and we had to walk by file in order to keep from pushing against them.

Q. Were you going from the post still?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On which side of the street were you—the right-hand side as you went out?—A. The right-hand side; yes, sir.

Q. And the ladies were standing on the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was a space to the right between them and the fence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between the sidewalk and the fence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you came up you say you stepped off towards the fence and passed around in single file?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you strike any lady?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or jostle any lady?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or touch any lady?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you try to go through the crowd of ladies?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you speak to any of the ladies?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you speak to anybody?—A. No one at all, only my comrade who was with me, sir.

Q. Did you know the man was going to strike you until he did so?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was it he struck you with?—A. It was a revolver, sir.

Q. And what effect did it have on you?—A. It knocked me insensible for a few seconds.

Q. You fell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. After I came to myself he was covering me with his revolver, and he told me to get up and leave.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I understand you went between the ladies and the fence?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you not have gone out on the other side, next the street and got past?—A. Not without walking out in the street.

Q. You could have stepped out in the street. How many ladies were there there?—A. There seemed to be a party of about six or eight.

Q. Six or eight ladies standing right there. You could have stepped off the sidewalk without any trouble?—A. There was room enough.

Q. There was room enough for you to run between the ladies and the fence?—A. Yes, sir; without disturbing them.

Q. You did not want to get off the sidewalk?—A. No, sir; I did not think it was necessary, as there was room to pass.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You could pass to the right of them, between them and the fence, without touching anybody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Tate has testified two or three times in regard to this matter. I read from an affidavit, or a statement made by him, found at page 89 of Senate Document 155, which was an exhibit of the report made by Major Blocksom. I want you to follow me as I read this and state whether or not it is true. Mr. Tate says:

On Sunday evening, August 5, 1900, at about 9 o'clock, I was walking down Elizabeth street in this city, in company with my wife and little daughter, Mrs. Virgle Wilkins, Mrs. H. Falsans, the two Misses Brulay, and Mrs. Fannle Putegnat. The ladies stopped to chat in front of the vacant lot next to the Stow residence and in front of Capt. Robert Dalzell's residence. They had stood there possibly three or four minutes when two negro soldiers came along the sidewalk going north. On reaching the ladies, who were standing close together in the middle of the sidewalk, the negroes, instead of stepping around them (as they could have easily done, since there was the vacant lot on one side and the street upon the other) pushed and elbowed their way through them, jostling and rubbing against them as they crowded through.

A. There was a fence there instead of a vacant lot.

Q. I was going to ask you. There was a fence there and not a vacant lot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a distinct recollection of there being a fence there?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a fence was it?—A. It was a picket fence; what I presume they call a common picket fence, I think.

Q. A common picket fence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At any rate, there was a fence there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The point I particularly want to confer with you about is whether or not you did, as he says, elbow your way through the ladies?—A. No, sir.

Q. "Jostling and rubbing against them as they crowded through?"—A. No, sir.

Q. That is, you deny that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Unqualifiedly, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He says further:

My wife, who was standing next to me, was rudely jostled by one of them.

A. No, sir.

Q. That is not true, is it?—A. No, sir.

Q. He says:

I immediately drew my revolver and struck one of them—the one who jostled my wife.

So he identifies you in that way, if you are the man who was struck, as the one who jostled his wife?—A. He is mistaken.

Q. You deny that statement also, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He further says:

The other immediately took to his heels and ran away.

That was your companion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Lipscomb. Do you know what your companion did, too?—

A. No, sir.

Q. He further says:

Any statement that I cursed either of these negroes is unqualifiedly false.

A. He did, sir.

Q. He did curse, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say?—A. He told me, after I had recovered myself and made an effort to get up, when I seen he had me covered with a revolver, he told me to "Get up and leave, or damn you I will blow your brains out. I will learn you how to get off the sidewalk when you see a party of white ladies standing there."

Q. Did you make any answer to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you swear at him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or at anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you entirely conscious or not, immediately after the blow was struck you?—A. Yes, sir; I was conscious.

Q. He did not destroy your consciousness so but that you knew all the while what you were doing?—A. Yes, sir; after I recovered.

Q. He says:

I told the one I knocked down that he would probably now know better than to run into white ladies on the sidewalk.

He made some such remark as that, as I understood you?—A. No, sir; he did not make the remark in that manner, sir. He made it with an oath, as I have before said.

Q. At page 2365 of the testimony taken by this committee he testified in effect the same, as to the circumstances, and as to your jostling these ladies. All statements of that same general character, namely, that you crowded through and jostled the ladies; all such statements as that are untrue, are they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked a moment ago if you could not have stepped off on the other side out into the street. I suppose you could have done that, could you?—A. I could have did so, but there were passing room there, Senator.

Q. You could have stepped to either side, so far as that was concerned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you show any disrespect of any kind whatever to the ladies or to the man who struck you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you any thought of any difficulty whatever?—A. No, sir.

Q. With him or anybody else?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you do in regard to this matter?—A. After I returned to the post I reported to my company commander.

Q. When did you return to your post?—A. Immediately afterwards, sir.

Q. Who was your company commander?—A. Captain Macklin.

Q. You went immediately to him and made a report?—A. Yes, sir; after I first went to the quarters.

Q. Went to your company quarters?—A. To the company quarters first, and then from there to his quarters.

Q. What did you go to your company quarters for?—A. I wanted to wash some blood off my face.

Q. Did the wound bleed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Bled down over your face?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went to Captain Macklin and reported to him; told him all about it, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that he would report the facts to Major Penrose.

Q. Did you take any further steps in regard to the matter?—A. No, sir; no more than that I went to the hospital and was summoned by Major Penrose, I think the next day, to make out an affidavit, something like that.

Q. You were summoned by Major Penrose himself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The following day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to Major Penrose when you were thus summoned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was to give a statement of the facts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what steps he took, or what he said he would do about it?—A. Yes, sir; I know what he said he would do.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that he would report the facts, I think it was, to the collector of customs—no, sir; I did not know who the man was, and he first had to find out. So the hospital corps man, Sanborn, who dressed my wound the next day, asked me who struck me, and I told him I didn't know who the man was. He asked me, "Was he a tall man?" I told him "Yes." "Wearing a very broad-brimmed hat?" I said, "Yes." Said he, "I think I know who he is. I think he is the same fellow who has been beating up the Twenty-sixth Infantry around here."

Q. Said what?—A. "I think he is the same fellow that has been beating up the Twenty-sixth Infantry around here."

Q. Who said that, Sanborn?—A. Yes, sir; of the hospital corps.

Q. He was the hospital attendant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he the man who waited on you?—A. Yes, sir; the next day.

Q. Do you know a hospital attaché by the name of W. C. Nolan?—A. No, sir; Sanborn is the only one that I know of.

Q. Sanborn?—A. Yes, sir. I was dressed by some one the same night that I was struck, but I don't know who he was.

Q. Getting back to that, after you were struck you went back to your barracks and washed the blood off your face before you went to your captain's quarters, Captain Macklin, and reported to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you said something about going to the hospital?—A. Yes, sir; I did go to the hospital the same night.

Q. Went up to the hospital right after you reported to the captain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did you go there for?—A. To get it dressed, sir.

Q. To get your wound dressed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can't you tell me to whom you reported when you got there?—

A. To the hospital?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't know, sir. I was looking around trying to find some one, and I think I went around to the dispensary, and I knocked on several doors, and they had gone to bed. He got up and asked me what was the matter, and I told him I was hurt, and he lighted the lamp and said, "Let's see;" asked me how did I come by this wound, and I told him I was knocked in the head with a six-shooter, and he asked me who was it did it, and I told him I didn't know.

Q. Who was that man that you had that conversation with?—A. It was the man who dressed the wound that night.

Q. Do you know who that man was?—A. I don't know his name, sir.

Q. Well, where was it you saw Sanborn, whom you mentioned a moment ago, and what was it you said to him?—A. The next day I went on sick report, and the surgeon sent me to the dispensary to have the wound dressed the next morning.

Q. That was the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you saw Sanborn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he asked you to describe this man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you described him as a tall man, and so forth, he made the remark—what was it?—A. He said, "Yes; I think I know him; he is the same one that has been beating up the Twenty-sixth Infantry."

Q. The Twenty-sixth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. W. C. Nolan testifies that the night you were hurt you came to the hospital, and this is what he says. I read first from the testimony of W. C. Nolan as taken by Mr. Purdy and reported at page 125 of the Purdy testimony, Part II of Senate Document 155. Mr. Nolan testifies:

I was on night duty at the hospital that night—came up to the hospital that night. After I had gone to bed I saw a man out on the front porch and he did not seem to know where he was going. I got up and went to the door, and asked what the trouble was, and he said, "I am hurt."

Do you remember meeting a man in that way and having that kind of a conversation?—A. No, sir; he had gone to bed, and I had to knock at several doors and ring bells to get them up.

Q. Finally somebody did come there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were out on the porch when somebody came to you?—

A. Yes, sir; in the rear.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And he had gone to bed?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. He had gone to bed, had he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He says:

I walked into the dispensary and sat him down in a chair and looked at him and found that his face was all covered with blood, and he had several cuts about his head.

Was your face still covered with blood?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was your wound bleeding still?—A. No, sir; my face was not covered with the blood. I was bleeding slightly at that time.

Q. Was your wound still bleeding?—A. Slightly bleeding.

Q. How were you keeping the blood from your face?—A. By my hat.

Q. By your hat?—A. Yes, sir; it was pulled tightly on my head.

Q. Might it not have come down onto your face, as he describes? How many cuts did you have on your head?—A. Two, sir.

Q. On which side?—A. The left, sir.

Q. He says:

I got some water and stuff and washed him off and asked him what was the matter.

Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said, "I got hit in the head with a six-shooter." Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. "I asked a good many questions about the accident, to see if he had been drunk, as we are supposed to find out about that, and I don't think that he was; he did not have any signs of having been drunk." I understood you to say that you had not been drinking at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. "I asked him how he got that lick, and he said he went by the post-office and some one ran out and hit him with a six-shooter. I asked him if that was all that he did—just go by the post-office—and he said that it was. I asked him who it was that hit him, and he said, 'Oh, that's all right; we'll get them sons of bitches some day.'"—A. No, sir; that is untrue.

Q. You did not make any such statement as that to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. "I told him then that he ought not to talk that way. I heard afterwards that the man who struck him was the man who claimed that this fellow ran between two white ladies." Now, with the exception of that remark by you, is that substantially a correct account of what happened?—A. The remarks that I made to the hospital corps?

Q. With the exception of what you deny, is the rest of it about correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you make any threats to him of any kind whatever?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever make any threats to anybody of any kind whatever?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any threats to your captain?—A. No, sir.

Q. To Major Penrose?—A. No, sir.

Q. To any officer?—A. No, sir.

Q. To any of the noncommissioned officers of your company?—A. No, sir.

Q. To any of the men in the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you on the night of the shooting?—A. I was on guard, at the guardhouse.

Q. You were on guard that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on post or off duty when the shooting commenced?—A. Off duty, sir.

Q. You were off duty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What relief were you on, if you remember?—A. No. 4, the third relief.

Q. You were on the third relief?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember who was corporal of your relief?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was he?—A. Corpl. Anthony Franklin.

Q. Were you asleep or awake when the shooting commenced?—A. Asleep, sir.

Q. And where were you?—A. I was in the guardhouse, sleeping near the sally port.

Q. What awakened you?—A. The reports of firearms first awakened me.

Q. The shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That awakened you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got awake and heard the firing continuing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any intimation until you were awakened that there was to be any shooting of any kind that night by anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you tried to organize any conspiracy to shoot up the town in revenge for your wound?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you ever talked of such a thing or had you ever heard of such a thing as a lot of soldiers going out to shoot up the town?—A. No, sir.

Q. That night or any other night?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never had heard of such a thing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you were in the guardhouse when the shooting commenced? Now, what did you do, as nearly as you can tell?—A. When I got up I heard the sergeant of the guard calling out, "Guard, outside." Immediately after I got outside the call to arms sounded.

Q. Who was the sergeant of the guard?—A. Sergt. James R. Reid.

Q. And you heard him as soon as you got awake, calling, "Guard, outside?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go outside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As quickly as you could?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was done with the guard?—A. The guard was fallen in, sir.

Q. Fell in—the guard was formed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the reserve, the two reliefs that were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what happened further, if you can tell?—A. The sergeant verified the guard. Then he taken two men and a corporal to send to No. 2 post.

Q. Two men and a corporal to go to No. 2 post?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was No. 2 post?—A. In the rear of the barracks.

Q. Why did he send anybody to No. 2 post?—A. Because I heard him calling, "Guard, No. 2."

Q. You heard the sentinel—you could hear him calling, "Guard, No. 2?"—A. Yes, sir; I could hear him continuously calling "Guard, No. 2," sir.

Q. And who was it that the sergeant sent there—who were the corporal and men?—A. Corporal Burdett, of B Company, and Private Mitchell, of C Company, is one of the privates, but I don't remember the other private.

Q. After they were dispatched, state whether or not the bugle was sounded.—A. Yes, sir; the call to arms was sounded, sir.

Q. Who was the bugler?—A. Musician Robinson.

Q. Were you there when the call to arms was sounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, what later was done with the guard? How were they disposed?—A. They were deployed around the guardhouse, deployed at each corner of the guardhouse, and the rest of it in front, sir.

Q. Where were you stationed?—A. I was stationed on the side. I could show you.

Q. I will call your attention to the map, then. There is the guardhouse, No. 37 on the map. Do you see it?—A. Yes, sir. I was stationed on this corner, sir, the left-hand corner.

Q. You were stationed at what corner?—A. This lower corner, sir.

Q. Here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In front?—A. No, sir; facing the street, facing the fence.

Q. Which way did you face?—A. Out this way, towards the garrison wall.

Q. This red line is supposed to be the garrison wall.—A. Yes, sir; towards the wire fence.

Q. It is a wire fence there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a brick wall down here?—A. Lower down, sir.

Q. Behind the barracks, and you were stationed—I see there is a little building marked “fire house?”—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you with respect to that building?—A. I stood at this corner. There is a ditch runs there, about 10 feet—

Q. Ten feet from what?—A. From the guardhouse.

Q. Ten feet from the guardhouse, and between the guardhouse and the fire house?—A. Yes, sir; between.

Q. And you were stationed there by that ditch?—A. Yes, sir; this side of the ditch.

Q. That is, between the ditch and the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anybody there with you?—A. There was a sentinel on the upper corner.

Q. Were you opposite the corner of the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next to the wire fence out on the garrison road and next to the parade ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the corner to which I point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were about 10 or 12 feet from that?—A. As nearly as I can remember, sir. It may not be quite so far.

Q. How were you stationed?—A. Lying down.

Q. Were you told to lie down by anybody; and if so, by whom?—A. By the sergeant of the guard.

Q. Were all the guard told to lie down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were placed there, and you were lying down. Now, was there somebody opposite the other corner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then were others stationed around in the rear?—A. At the other corners; yes, sir.

Q. And somebody in front?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the way the guard were stationed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you remain there that night?—A. About an hour or more.

Q. About an hour, perhaps. In the meanwhile, what did you do after the firing?—A. The firing ceased after we deployed in such manner, sir.

Q. After you were deployed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the sergeant of the guard present there all the while?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were all the corporals of the guard present there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the other corporals besides Corporal Franklin?—

A. Corporal Wheeler and Corporal Burdett.

Q. Did you see all those corporals there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men did you see there when the guard was formed?—A. I don't remember, sir, how many men there were.

Q. Were any of the men missing?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you hear of anybody being missing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did this first firing that awakened you seem to be located?—A. On that side of the garrison, sir.

Q. You say on that side—do you mean out behind the barracks?—

A. It sounded that way.

Q. Towards the town?—A. Yes, sir; it sounded in that direction.

Q. Couldn't you tell whether it was outside or inside the garrison wall?—A. Not before I awakened, sir; not until we came out from the guardhouse.

Q. Not until you came out?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is, when you first heard it you could not just tell where it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Only that it was down there somewhere in that direction?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you got into position out there near the ditch, 10 or 12 feet away from the guardhouse, stationed there as a sentinel, and lying down, could you still hear the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If so, where was it?—A. It sounded in this direction, there, sir.

Q. That is, down along what we call the Cowen alley, as I point to it here?—A. Yes, sir; it was in that direction.

Q. The firing seemed to go farther away from the fort, did it not?—A. I don't understand.

Q. The firing seemed to go farther away from the fort, did it not, uptown?—A. Yes, sir; that is the way it sounded to me.

Q. Now, do you know who did that firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever request anybody to avenge this striking you by Mr. Tate?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever suggest anything to anybody, such as going downtown and punishing anybody for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say you do not know who did the shooting that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. No knowledge of it at all? Have you at any time ever refused to tell anybody all you knew about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, in short, you had nothing to do with it, and do not know who did have anything to do with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were one of the 12 men arrested, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And taken to Fort Sam Houston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were visited there by General Garlington, were you not?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember his visit to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you keep from him any information whatever that you had?—A. No, sir.

Q. Told him everything you knew, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You denied to him that you had anything to do with the shooting, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And denied that you had any knowledge of anybody who did have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have told that same story, in that same way, to everybody else, haven't you?—A. I did not have as much to say to General Garlington as I have said here, because he did not require as much, sir.

Q. He did not ask you so much?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you answered everything that he asked you, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have you ever at any time refused to answer any questions?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever, when inquired of about this, taken on a "wooden" look?—A. Sir?

Q. Have you ever, when inquired of about this matter, put on a "wooden" look?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or a stolid look?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you changed your expression in any way on that account at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Charges were preferred against you that you had participated in that. Have you at all times been ready to be tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never asked that the trial be postponed?—A. No, sir.

Q. In what capacity did you serve in your company—I mean did you serve as company clerk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who appoints the company clerk?—A. The company commander.

Q. That was Captain Macklin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any trouble of any kind with your officers?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I put in evidence here the record of this witness as furnished by the War Department and found at page 263 of Senate Document 155.

The matter referred to is as follow:

JAMES W. NEWTON.

Enlisted March 20, 1899; was honorably discharged as a private of Company F, Twenty-fourth Infantry, March 5, 1902, for the convenience of the Government; character good.

Reenlisted April 5, 1902; was discharged as a private of Company K, Twenty-fourth Infantry, April 4, 1905, on expiration of term of enlistment; character very good.

Reenlisted June 1, 1905; was discharged without honor as a private of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 10, 1906.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Was there a James Newton in Company D?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a different man altogether?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any initial to your name?—A. My name, sir, is James W. Newton.

Senator FORAKER. I have put in evidence the record of this witness as found on page 263 of Senate Document 155, and I call attention to the fact that the remarks after his discharges, prior to his discharge without honor, are, following the first discharge, "character, good;" following the second discharge, "character, very good," then, "discharged without honor." Now, at page 222 of the hearings before this committee I find a copy given of the charge and specifications preferred against this witness, and I put them in evidence in this connection, as follows:

Charge and specification preferred against Private James W. Newton, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Charge.—Conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in violation of the sixty-second article of war.

Specification.—In that Private James W. Newton, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, did without authority take from his or other companies stationed at Fort Brown, Tex., one (1) magazine rifle, caliber .30, model 1903, and did, singly or in company with other party or parties unknown, take part in a disturbance in the streets of Brownsville, Tex., in which disturbance one citizen was killed and another wounded, by loading with ball cartridges and firing said rifle in said streets of said town and causing damage to the property of the inhabitants of said town. This on or about August 13, 1906.

H. CLAY M. SUPPLEE,
*First Lieutenant and Battalion Adjutant,
Twenty-sixth Infantry, Officer Preferring Charge.*

Witnesses: Sergt. James R. Reid, Company B; Sergt. George Jackson, Company B; Private John Hollomon, Company B; Sergt. Darby W. O. Browner, Company C; Corpl. Charles H. Madison, Company C; Corpl. Wille H. Miller, Company C; Private Charles W. Askew, Company C; Private Oscar W. Reid, Company C; Corpl. David Powell, Company D; Private James C. Gill, Company D; Private Joseph H. Howard, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

In confinement since August 25, 1906.

Rate of pay, —.

Previous convictions, four—December 2, 1905; April 28, 1906; June 4, 1906; June 23, 1906.

[First indorsement.]

FORT SAM HOUSTON, TEX., August 28, 1906.

Respectfully forwarded to the military secretary, Department of Texas, recommending trial by general court-martial. Under paragraph 962, Army Regulations, these charges have been investigated by the undersigned, as far as practicable with the means at hand, and I am of the opinion that it is doubtful if the allegations as set forth can be substantiated.

C. J. T. CLARKE,
Major, Twenty-sixth Infantry, Commanding.

Q. I find also this statement following the specifications:

Previous convictions four—December 2, 1905; April 28, 1906; June 4, 1906; June 23, 1906.

Do you know what those convictions were on account of?—

A. There are some that I remember what they were for.

Q. What was the nature of them?—A. The first one that I was tried for was absence without leave.

Q. What was that? Do you know what your punishment was?—A. A fine of $3.

Q. And what were the other punishments?—A. There was only one I remember of. The next one was for coming in off a practice march for foot inspection, and I was in the bathroom before that time; I was told to go to my bed, and I went to get a drink of water before I went there, and was caught in the bathroom. That was a fine of $1.

Q. How much was the punishment in the other two cases, if you remember?—A. They were $1 also, but I don't remember what they were for.

Q. One of those punishments was a fine of $3?—A. Yes, sir; that was the first offense.

Q. And that was for being absent without leave?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Absent from where, from camp or the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; from the garrison.

Q. One of them occurred at Fort Niobrara?—A. At Fort Niobrara.

Q. And the other punishments were $1 each, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. Now, I have sent to the War Department and obtained the official record, which confirms what the witness says, and I desire to insert here the following letter from the War Department, giving the military record of James W. Newton, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 5, 1907.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, United States Senate.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 4th instant, received to-day, in which you request the military record of James W. Newton, late private, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, with special reference to the "previous convictions" mentioned in the charge and specification for violation of the Sixty-second article of war, four in number, namely, December 2, 1905, April 28, 1906, June 4, 1906, June 23, 1906, I am directed by the Secretary of War to advise you that the records show as follows:

James W. Newton was enlisted March 29, 1899, and was discharged March 5, 1902, on account of short remaining term of service, a private, Company F, Twenty-fourth Infantry, with character good.

He reenlisted April 5, 1902, and was discharged April 4, 1905, by expiration of service, a private, Company K, Twenty-fourth Infantry, with character very good.

He reenlisted June 1, 1905, and was discharged without honor November 22, 1906, per paragraph 1, Special Orders, No. 243, War Department, November 9, 1906, a private, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, service not honest and faithful.

He was tried by summary courts as follows:

On December 2, 1905, and sentenced to forfeit $3 of his pay; on April 28, 1906, and sentenced to forfeit $1; on June 4, 1906, and sentenced to forfeit $1; and on June 23, 1906, and sentenced to forfeit $1.

The nature of the offenses for which the soldier was tried by the before-mentioned summary courts is not of record in the Department, and there is no record of his trial by a general court-martial while serving in Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Where are you living now?—A. In Greenville, S. C.

Q. That is your home, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was your home before you went into the Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was testified by General Garlington that you had some kind of trouble on account of which you were arrested before you went into the Army. Can you tell us what the trouble was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. I was coming from a rehearsal one night and some of my friends got into trouble, and I was arrested with the same gang, sir.

Q. Were you with the party that was making the trouble?—A. No, sir; I was arrested with the same party, by them coming down the same street which we were coming up.

Q. What do you mean when you say you were attending a rehearsal, a rehearsal of what?—A. A rehearsal of a play for the benefit of the A. M. E. Church.

Q. They were going to give a church benefit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. An exhibition for the benefit of the church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were rehearsing for the play?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had been there in attendance upon that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you connected with the play?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what way?—A. I was one of the players, sir.

Q. One of the what?—A. One that was to take part in the play, sir.

Q. Do you remember what the play was?—A. "The Robbery and Murder of Col. Delmont De Rosa."

Q. Where did you get the text of that play?—A. I don't know, sir. Mrs. Emma J. Foster produced it. I don't know where she got it.

Q. How many people were connected with that play?

Senator WARNER. Is this important?

Senator FORAKER. Yes; I want him to tell about it.

A. As nearly as I can remember there was about fourteen.

Q. And you were on your way home from that, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were engaged in that for the benefit of the church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you ever had any trouble of any kind in that community before this time?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long was that before you enlisted?—A. I think it was over a year before I enlisted.

Q. Did that trouble have anything at all to do with your enlisting?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not enlist to get away from home to escape the law, or anything of that kind, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you have been back home since you were discharged without honor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are living in that same community?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any trouble there at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have not been arrested?—A. No, sir.

Q. How have you been employed?—A. As a daily laborer, sir.

Q. What kind of labor are you employed at?—A. Partly painting sometimes, sir; and then again working at a lumber company.

Q. Working at whatever you can get to work at, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you had nothing to do with the disturbance that led to the arrest?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were people who were ahead of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they going home from the rehearsal also?—A. I don't know, sir. One of the men had left before we had—left the house—and he went out and got into trouble and brought us into it the next day; but we didn't know anything about it, and we were arrested the next day. He called our names, therefore we were arrested and had to suffer the same as he did, sir.

Q. You had to suffer the same as he did?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the result of that arrest? Were you convicted of anything?—A. Yes, sir; a fine of $10.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I was going to bring that out. You were fined, although the facts were as you have stated?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. What part did you take in the play?—A. I was a detective.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You were the detective?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did you study the work of detectives in that connection?—A. Just as it was in the play, sir; no further than was required in the play.

Q. You never have acted as a detective except in that case?—A. That is the only time, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you were downtown two or three times in Brownsville before you had this trouble with Tate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you downtown any time after that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never outside again after that?—A. Not down in that direction; only just outside of the garrison.

Q. About where outside of the garrison?—A. I don't know the street. It is on this street next to the wall over there—up above the guardhouse.

Q. Where were you there?—A. At this discharged soldier's saloon, sir—Allison's saloon.

Q. At Allison's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you there?—A. I was there Saturday and Sunday and Monday.

Q. You were there the three days after you were paid, including your pay day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were paid off on Saturday, the 11th, weren't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were not out of the garrison except to go to that saloon after you were struck by Tate?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any talk in regard to your being struck by Tate, either at the Allison saloon or at any other place, of the character I have mentioned—that is, discussing it with a view to revenging yourselves?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard that. Were you in any other saloons downtown?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever try to go into any of them?—A. No, sir; after I heard we were not allowed, I did not attempt to go in.

Q. You heard after you went there that you were not allowed to go into the saloons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any resentment towards the people of Brownsville on that account?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever discuss that with anybody as something that ought to be revenged?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never complained of that to anybody, did you?—A. Sir?

Q. You never made any complaint of that, did you, to anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you never sought to go into any saloon?—A. No, sir.

Q. Except the Allison saloon, kept by a discharged colored soldier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Senator Taliaferro wants me to ask you what the trouble was that you and others were arrested for in Greenville about a year before you enlisted, when you were going home from the rehearsal?—

A. This fellow struck another with a rock or something.

Q. He struck a colored man?—A. Yes, sir; they were all colored.

Q. He struck another colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did not strike a white man, did he?—A. No, sir.

Q. White men had nothing to do with the quarrel?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what they were quarreling about, or is that material—I do not care anything about that. You need not bother.—

A. No, sir; I did not know the nature of the disturbance.

Q. You were not present and you did not see it, and you only know what you heard about it afterwards; is that true?—A. Yes, sir.

(At 12 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m. the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of recess, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Warner, Pettus, Taliaferro, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES W. NEWTON (COLORED)—Continued.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, Mr. Newton, do you know Sergeant-Major Taliaferro, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He testified before this committee. At page 1552 the following report of his testimony is found:

Q. You heard of this striking of Newton, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you pay any attention to that?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Why not?—A. Because Newton was a man who drank to excess, and I thought he was liable to get into trouble most any place, at any time, and I merely thought that he had been downtown drinking and got into a fight down there and got beat up.

Q. That was his reputation, was it?—A. Yes, sir; that was my opinion of it.

Now, in view of that testimony, I will ask you to state, Mr. Newton, whether or not you were in the habit of drinking while you were a member of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, and whether you drank to excess while you were a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—

A. Yes, sir; I drank, but not to an excess, sir.

Q. Did you have any fights, or get beat up, or anything of that kind?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. That is, you would take a drink, would you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you drunk at any time—ever arrested for drunkenness?—
A. No, sir.

Q. None of these fines of a dollar each was on account of drunkenness?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Wouldn't you know?—A. I have most forgotten what the offenses were. Three of them I do remember, you know, and the others I don't remember just for what.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. In one case you were fined $3. Do you remember what that was for?—A. Yes, sir; that was for absence without leave.

Q. Not drunkenness?—A. No, sir.

Q. In neither of the other cases was it drunkenness, so far as you can remember?—A. No, sir.

Q. You remember about it?—A. I remember two others, sir.

Q. You remember two of the others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they?—A. One of them was for being out after check.

Q. After check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Yes.—A. And the other was for not appearing at the proper place for foot inspection.

Q. For foot inspection?—A. For foot inspection, after we had had one of those practice marches.

Q. And the other you do not remember?—A. No, sir; I don't remember.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. How many times were you arrested while you were a civilian, in North Carolina?—A. Once.

Q. Only once? You told about that this morning.—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I believe that is all I care to ask now.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Mr. Newton, the one time you were arrested, which has been brought out by questions of Senator Foraker, you were perfectly innocent of any charge then?—A. Where was that at, sir?

Q. At your home.—A. At my home?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were tried before the court?—A. I was tried and fined; yes, sir.

Q. And fined?—A. Yes, sir; a fine of $10 I had to pay.

Q. And the charge was assisting somebody in hitting another with a rock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of you were charged with doing that?—A. There was eight or ten of us, I think, had it.

Q. Eight or ten of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many rocks did you hit the man with?—A. He said he was stoned, so he said.

Q. He was stoned?—A. Yes, sir. Some one threw rocks at him, and then he said one had hit him with a rock.

Q. And you were not near the parties who threw the rocks?—
A. No, sir.

Q. It was a little strange that you should have been convicted under those circumstances, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the man that was stoned?—A. A man by the name of Anderson Johnson.

Q. Had you had any trouble with him?—A. Me?

Q. Any of you that were arrested?—A. I had no trouble with him.

Q. Any of you?—A. I didn't know, sir. They say that a man by the name of Hopkins had trouble with him.

Q. He left the rehearsal before the rest of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of this play. What was it, the Robber and what?—A. Yes, sir; he left before we did.

Q. What was this play—it is not important, but what was it—the Robber and the what?—A. The one which we were practicing for?

Q. Yes.—A. It was "The Robbery and Murder of Col. Delmont de Rosa."

Q. And when this man was returning from this rehearsal was when he was stoned?—A. I don't understand you.

Q. It was when you were returning from one of those rehearsals that this man claimed he was stoned by a lot of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you and several others were arrested for doing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You denied it then?—A. Denied?

Q. Denied that you stoned him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They all denied it, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Every one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody admit that he stoned him?—A. One said that he hit him with a rock on account of his drawing a revolver on him.

Q. Drawing a revolver?—A. Yes, sir; but we were named, and therefore we had to suffer the consequences.

Senator FORAKER. I did not hear that.

The WITNESS. We were named, I say, and therefore we had to suffer the consequences.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is, the man who was stoned called your name?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked if you drank, and you said you never drank to excess?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you were asked if you were ever drunk. You did not answer that.—A. Not during the time I was at Niobrara.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Not while you were at Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Where else?—A. In the Philippine Islands.

Q. While you were on duty?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was while you were there with the soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many times?—A. We were in Manila.

Q. How many times were you drunk there?—A. I was drunk several times, but I had no trouble about that.

Q. I know, but I just asked you. Did you get into trouble with the people in the town there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You know Mr. Taliaferro?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his position in the regiment?—A. He was my first sergeant, and afterwards my battalion sergeant-major.

Q. Sergeant-major, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think that Taliaferro was mistaken in this testimony read to you by Senator Foraker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said, when he was asked why he didn't pay much attention to it:

Because Newton was a man who drank to excess, and I thought he was liable to get into trouble most any place, at any time, and I merely thought that he had been downtown drinking and got into a fight down there and had gotten beat up.

A. No, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. That was his reputation, was it?—A. Yes, sir; that was my opinion of it.

A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You were in Allison's saloon every day after it was opened?—A. Sir?

Q. You were in Allison's saloon every day?—A. After it was opened.

Q. Every day after it was opened you were in there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing in there?—A. They had games going on in there, such as montecarlo.

Q. Did he have any liquor to sell?—A. No, sir.

Senator TALIAFERRO. Let him tell about the games.

Senator OVERMAN. I am going to; yes.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you drink any liquor there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Only beer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were there every day?—A. Yes, sir; I took a few beers there; but mostly my going there was on account of the games.

Q. What games did you play?—A. Monte.

Q. Monte?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Gambling games?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were gambling?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. How long were you in the Philippines?—A. Two years and a half.

Q. You do not remember how many times you were drunk there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You could not keep account of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you gamble any in the Philippines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you were drunk and gambling in the Philippines?—A. Not while gambling; I would not be drunk.

Q. You were not drunk while you were gambling?—A. No, sir.

Q. Only gambled when you were sober?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not take anything to drink while you were gambling?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you had gone out there with those soldiers and shot up the town and shot off the arm of one of the policemen, and killed one of the citizens, you would have admitted it, would you not?—A. If I had did so?

Q. Yes; you would have admitted it if you had done it?—A. I knew nothing of it, sir.

Q. You knew nothing of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you had done it you would have admitted it?—A. If I had done it?

Q. Yes.—A. That I would have admitted it?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I would not have admitted it.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Would you not swear falsely to conceal it?—A. If I did it myself, sir?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, yes, sir; if I had did it myself, I would.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You were arrested twice, and two of these arrests were for being out after check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Check is 11 o'clock, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what time did you get in that night?—A. I had been in and went out again.

Q. You had been in and answered check and went out again?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was this?—A. This was in rear of A quarters at Niobrara.

Q. How did you get out?—A. Just the plain way of going out.

Q. You just walked out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No trouble to get out after check, was there?—A. No, sir. They had a patrol out that night, though, when I went out and I didn't know it.

Q. Patrol out where?—A. At Fort Niobrara.

Q. Yes; but I say there was no trouble about getting out?—A. No, sir.

Q. There is no trouble to get out at Brownsville, if you wanted to?—A. I don't know if there was, if a man wanted to get out.

Q. I am asking you; there would not have been any trouble to get out if you had wanted to get out, after check?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any of the soldiers could go out? There was only one man back there, Sentinel No. 2?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he had all that range in front and rear of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there would have been no trouble about getting over the wall and going out after check, would there?—A. I guess there wouldn't be.

Q. Without his seeing or knowing anything about it?—A. I guess there wouldn't be.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. What sort of an association have you in the Army, if you have one, for the soldiers to stand by each other if they get into trouble?—A. Not any that I know of.

Q. Haven't you any association?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Don't you know of an association in the Army for the soldiers to stand by each other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You talked that among each other?—A. After the firing occurred I heard them talk about that.

Q. After the firing occurred you heard them talk about that each man must stand by the other?—A. Nothing like that.

Q. What was that?—A. They were wondering who did it.

Q. Nothing was said about that they must stand by each other?—A. I never heard anything to that effect, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. This day you were knocked down, you and Lipscomb were together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been away from the post?—A. We had been away from the post three-quarters of an hour, as near as I remember.

Q. Where had you been?—A. We had been up near this saloon which I am speaking about now, where Allison was keeping, but it was before he opened, I think. Down by the post there is this street, Elizabeth—I don't know the names of the streets, but I know Elizabeth. We came from the post-office and were on the way from the post-office. We had left the post-office, going out that way.

Q. What time did you go out of the barracks, the post?—A. We went out somewhere about 8 o'clock, as near as I can remember.

Q. And this striking of you was 9 o'clock?—A. Somewhere between 8 and 9. I can't say positively, because I had no timepiece.

Q. And where had you gone in the meantime?—A. I don't know the names of the streets, but I could show you which way we went.

Q. You went up towards where Allison afterwards established this saloon?—A. In that direction.

Q. And how far in that direction?—A. We went out above the wire fence, along about there, sir, above this last quarters, through in this direction and downwards [indicating on map].

Q. You went past the last quarters; that is, the unoccupied quarters?—A. Yes, sir; the unoccupied quarters. The map does not show the street we went.

Q. Then you went uptown, north?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Did you go on a street or an alley?—A. This was a kind of an alley.

Q. There is the alley [indicating on map].—A. We went higher up than that.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Up beyond Adams street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you up there for?—A. Just walking around through the town.

Q. Where were you going?—A. Just looking around the town. We were newcomers, and we were just looking around the town.

Q. Making observations?—A. Yes, sir; just walking around.

Q. What was up there to observe?—A. We were just getting familiar with the streets, as near as we could, so that if we should have to go anywhere we wouldn't get lost.

Q. It was not much of a town to get lost in, was it?—A. I don't know whether it would be or not, but anybody not familiar with the place that way they would be apt to get mixed up very quickly.

Q. Get lost, how? If you were out at night?—A. I suppose you would.

Q. You didn't expect to get lost in the daytime?—A. I suppose not.

Q. You were familiarizing yourself with the streets, so that if you were out at night you would not get lost?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you expect to be out nights for?—A. Well, going out on pass.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. How many drinks had you taken before you were knocked down?—A. I hadn't taken any.

Q. Any beer?—A. I hadn't taken any.

Q. You had not taken a drink that night, of beer or anything else?—A. No, sir; because I didn't have any money.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you go out in town after you were struck?—A. No farther than this saloon up here—Allison's.

Q. Allison's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't go out in the town at all?—A. No, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. The saloons keep open on Sunday, then?—A. I think that they do, sir, if I am not mistaken.

Q. Speak a little louder.—A. I think that they do, because we never went in any that night, and I don't remember whether they were open or not.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The Allison saloon kept open on Sunday?—A. That was the first Sunday he had been there, the 12th.

Q. Where did Allison sleep the night of the shooting up of Brownsville?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Didn't you ever hear?—A. I think that some one said that he was at his saloon, if I am not mistaken.

Q. Did not some one tell you that he was sleeping in the post?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. You never heard that?—A. No, sir.

Q. After you were struck you came back and reported it to your captain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To anyone else?—A. After he reported it to Major Penrose, then I was called upon by Major Penrose to make a statement, after I told him what the hospital corps man, Sanborn, had said about it. Then he sent for me and asked me if I knew the man, and I told him that I didn't, but I thought Private Sanborn did, and Sanborn told Major Penrose that he didn't know positively whether his name was Tate or Bate—there was two of them that did that sort of thing to the soldiers—and he would try to find out which one it was, and Major Penrose asked him to find out which one it was, and he said that he would, and then he told me to keep quiet until he found out which one was it.

Q. Private Sanborn had told you?—A. Yes, sir; he was the one who dressed the wound the next morning for me.

Q. And what was it Private Sanborn told you?—A. He said that he thought that he knew who this fellow was; that he had also been beating up the Twenty-sixth Infantry around there.

Q. He belonged to what company?—A. To the hospital corps.

Q. To the hospital corps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to the hospital before you saw Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir; both times before seeing him.

Q. You went up there to get your head dressed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you got there it was so late, or for some reason, the man in charge of the quarters had retired, and you had to rap there some time before you could get him up?—A. Yes, sir; at the hospital, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time was it that you went up there?—A. I don't know what time it was. I think they go to bed very early, though, at the hospital.

Q. What do you say?—A. I think it was very early, though.

Q. Have you not any idea?—A. Some time near 10 o'clock, I should say.

Q. Was it not near midnight?—A. No, sir.

Q. Ten o'clock, you think?—A. Yes, sir; somewhere near that time, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Witness, the Senators are speaking in a good loud voice in addressing you, and I want you to do the same. It is very difficult to hear, and you must speak louder.

The WITNESS. Very well, sir. I will do so. I am a little hoarse, but I will do so.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. They told you a man by the name of Tate or Bate had struck you?—A. I don't know exactly the name of this man who struck me.

Q. Did you try to find out where Tate or Bate lived?—A. No, sir; I didn't try to find out where he lived at.

Q. You did not want to know where he lived?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You went up to this man who was in charge there, a Mr. Nolan, who was connected with the hospital corps. He says he was on duty the night that you were hurt, and he says that he had gone to bed and you came up, and roused him up. That is true, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he asked you what you wanted, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him that you were hurt?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true. And you showed him your head?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where the gashes were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where the cuts were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true?—A. That is true, sir.

Q. And of course he asked you how you received that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him how you received it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Q. You told him you got hit in the head with a six-shooter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what else did you tell him?—A. He asked me where I was at when I got hit. I told him where I was on Elizabeth street when I got hit, and he asked by whom, and I told him I didn't know who it was.

Q. You told him you were near the post-office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Walking by the post-office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some one ran out and hit you and you didn't know who it was?—A. No, sir; I didn't tell him that some one ran out and hit me; but he asked me what was the reason of his hitting me, and I told him that I was passing a party of ladies, and that I asked him to tell me what the reason was, but he just covered me with a revolver, and I had to move on.

Q. Mr. Nolan says that when he asked you who struck you, you said, "Oh, that is all right." Did you say that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And then you added, "We will get them s— of b—s some day."—A. No, sir.

Q. You never told Mr. Nolan any such thing?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. How did you feel about it? Did you feel pleasant about being struck?—A. I felt all right after I made a report to Captain Macklin and he said that he would make a report to Major Penrose. I thought it would be carried out.

Q. Did you tell your comrades about it?—A. I told the men in the quarters, when I came back, how I got my head cut, and I told them—

The CHAIRMAN. Witness, again I must tell you that you must remember to speak louder.

The WITNESS. I told the man in charge of quarters when I returned.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Who was that?—A. Corpl. Willie H. Miller.

Q. Did you tell anybody else?—A. I think some asked me. I retired to bed very quickly afterwards, sir.

Q. That night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had they not gone to bed when you got in that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. What time was it when you got back from the hospital?—A. A little after 10. They were all in the pool room at that time, and I knew by that that taps hadn't gone then.

Q. You talked generally about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not tell them you were struck without any cause whatever?—A. I told them that I was struck without any cause, but after that night I did not have anything more to say about it to them, because no one didn't question me no more after that first night.

Q. And this first night, who was in the pool room? They were all around you and you showed them the gashes on your head.—A. I remember Corporal Miller.

Q. Did you not talk to the others, didn't you say?—A. I don't know their names; I have forgotten them.

Q. They were members of your company—I don't care about the names?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Eight or ten of them?—A. Yes, sir; I told them how it occurred.

Q. You told them about the brutal way in which you had been attacked?—A. I didn't tell them the "brutal way" or anything like that.

Q. You told them you had been attacked without any cause?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that this man had knocked you down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And cursed you after you were down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say about it?—A. They had nothing to say, only that it was a poor way to treat a person, or something like that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. They said it was a poor way to treat a person?—A. Yes, sir; that it was a poor way to treat a person.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Anything else?—A. That is all I heard. They continued playing pool, those that were there.

Q. But I am asking you, was there anything else said?—A. No, sir.

Q. They just said that it was a poor way to treat a person and turned around and went to playing pool, and paid no further attention at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next day your head was bandaged up?—A. No, sir; the bandage was taken off.

Q. Taken off when?—A. It came off during the night.

Q. Then it left the scar?—A. Yes, sir; but it was fixed over with absorbent cotton.

Q. You went up again and had it fixed over with absorbent cotton, and put a bandage around your head?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did it stick there?—A. It had some plaster around it.

Q. Did any of your comrades ask you how that came about?—A. They could not see it on account of my hat.

Q. You kept it concealed?—A. It was where it could not be seen after my hat was put on, after being bandaged.

Q. Did anybody else ask you about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Except Major Penrose?—A. No, sir; no one else that I remember.

Q. You never spoke of it again to anyone?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just avoided it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you?—A. Major Penrose said that he would see about it.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. When you went down to the barroom that next day, you talked about it in the barroom, did you not?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. When did he say that he went to the barroom the next day?

Senator OVERMAN. He said that he went to a barroom the next day.

Senator FORAKER. The saloon was not opened at that time.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The 11th, 12th, and 13th were the only days that the saloon was opened?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you went there?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN :

Q. The saloon was open on Sunday?—A. Yes, sir; and the morning of the 13th.

By Senator WARNER :

Q. You were never asked by the rest of them at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. As to how it happened?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You felt pleasant about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were satisfied?—A. Yes, sir; after Major Penrose said that he would see about it, I felt satisfied about it.

Q. When you heard the shooting that night, where was the shooting, the night of the 13th?—A. It was somewhere in the town, as near as I could judge, sir.

Q. How far uptown?—A. I could not say.

Q. How far away from the barracks?—A. The first I had heard, after I had got on the outside of the guardhouse, it seemed very close to the barracks, and the town, somewhere.

Q. Close to the barracks and the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which was it nearest to?—A. I mean on the other side of the barracks, in the rear.

Q. Between the barracks and the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, in the road?—A. That is the direction it sounded to me [indicating].

Q. That is, the road down by the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; it sounded in that direction.

Q. That is the first shooting you heard?—A. That is the first I heard, sir.

Q. It sounded like high-power guns, did it not?—A. I don't know what kind they were, sir.

Q. You have been in the Army six years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have heard high-power guns discharged?—A. Yes, sir; but you can't tell very well the difference between—

Q. Between?—A. Especially when one is kind of excited, sir.

Q. Did you have any idea whether those were high-power guns or not?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. You could not tell whether they were shotguns, pistols, or rifles?—A. No, sir.

Q. What do you say?—A. No, sir; I could not tell.

Q. Now, this shooting you say seemed to be there in the road back of the barracks?—A. That is the way it sounded when I was first awakened, as I before stated, sir.

Q. Then the shooting went uptown?—A. Yes, sir; it sounded as if so.

Q. And it continued the same kind of shooting—that is, it was volleys?—A. No, sir; it sounded scattering to me, sir.

Q. Speak a little louder, now.—A. It sounded scattering to me—like scattering shots to me, sir, was the way it sounded in town after I heard the first firing.

Q. What was the first firing, volleys?—A. It sounded like that when I first awakened.

Q. And after that it was the same character of guns, was it not?—A. It seemed so, sir.

Q. Yes. Did you not hear any shots fired inside of the barracks?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. But you heard the call. "Guard, No. 2?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard no shots whatever inside of the barracks?—
A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. How long did that shooting continue?—A. As near as I could judge it to be, at least ten or twelve minutes, more or less.

Q. Near that time, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, did you make any inquiry as to who were doing the shooting?—A. That night, sir?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I never thought about that, sir.

Q. You were in there and were placed as a sentinel and were ordered to lie down on the ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard all this shooting and never thought anything about who was doing the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; because I wasn't close enough to anybody to ask them or to have any conversation with them.

Q. Were you not close enough to the sergeant of the guard when he was there?—A. Yes, sir; the sergeant of the guard was there, but he had to deploy his men, and I was obeying orders at that time.

Q. You were obeying orders, and the guards came out and the others came out, and you formed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were counted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did that take?—A. I don't know how long, sir.

Q. You heard the call to arms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard all that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all this shooting was going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you never asked one of your comrades the cause of the shooting?—A. No, sir; not until it was over.

Q. I asked you that night, before you went and lay down, and you said you did not.—A. I understood you to say while it was going on.

Q. Oh! But you were not ordered to go back and lie down while it was going on. It was over at that time?—A. That is what I understood you to say, sir.

Q. After it was over, did you ask anyone?—A. After it was over I asked. But I understood you to say while it was going on.

Q. If you understood me that way, that is all right. Excuse me.—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. After it was over, whom did you ask?—A. After it was all over I asked several. We were sitting there on the bench after we came off guard, and we were talking about who did it, and nobody seemed to know.

Q. Nobody there?—A. Nobody seemed to know, and then I retired to bed.

Q. What do you say?—A. I went to bed afterwards; after I asked and gained no information, I went to bed.

Q. What did you ask?—A. I asked them did they know what was all that racket going on, and some said they didn't know.

Q. They didn't know?—A. No, sir; they didn't seem to know; and the more I inquired the less information I received.

Q. The more you inquired the less information you received?—
A. Yes, sir; as to what was going on, as no one knew.

Q. Who refused to give you information, if anyone?—A. Those that didn't know and couldn't say.

Q. Those who did not know? They could not very well give you information; no.—A. Yes, sir; and those were the only ones I asked.

Q. Did you ask the sergeant of the guard?—A. No, sir; I had nothing to say to him about it.

Q. Did you ask the corporals?—A. Two of the corporals were present at the time I was in conversation, Burdett and Franklin.

Q. What did Burdett say?—A. He didn't know what it was.

Q. What did Corporal Franklin say?—A. Neither one of those knew.

Q. Was there any other noncommissioned officer there?—A. Those are the only ones that I remember.

Q. Now, is not that a little strange that you should not ask? Did you ask whether it was the citizens doing the shooting?—A. Whether it was the citizens?

Q. Yes.—A. I didn't ask whether it was the citizens; I asked who was it?

Q. Did you ask whether it was the soldiers who had done the shooting?—A. No, sir; I didn't ask the question in that manner, sir.

Q. How did you ask it?—A. I asked who could it have been who did all that firing on the outside? I told them it sounded something like the Philippine Islands.

Q. Sounded like the Philippine Islands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did it sound like the Philippine Islands?—A. Because we used to be aroused nearly every night in that manner.

Q. It sounded like the Philippine Islands; like the guns the soldiers used?—A. No, sir; more like insurgents.

Q. What?—A. It sounded more like insurgents' arms.

Q. It sounded more like insurgents' arms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of guns were those?—A. Such as Remingtons and Springfields—something like that.

Q. Now, you say that it sounded like Remingtons and Springfields?—A. As near as my belief; to the best of my belief.

Q. The best of your belief is what?—A. Is that they sounded in that manner.

Q. What manner?—A. As I stated, like the Philippine Islands, those Remingtons and such things.

Q. But my last question following your answer was, It sounded like Remingtons and Springfields?—A. Yes; that is the one you asked me.

Q. That is the answer you made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the Remington an army rifle?—A. I don't know whether they use them in the United States Army or not, sir.

Q. How many shots did you hear?—A. I could not tell exactly how many, sir.

Q. A hundred?—A. It was a great many, I don't know whether it was a hundred or not, sir.

Q. It sounded for ten or twelve minutes?—A. Something about that time, sir.

Q. As though a battle was going on—the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; quite a fusillade.

Q. Quite a fusillade?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all the conversation you and all the other members of the guard had there, as far as you know, is what you have narrated here?—A. Yes, sir; what I have told you, sir.

Q. The next day did you have any talk, making inquiries who it was—on the 14th?—A. Yes, sir; after I had come from the administration building, I heard them talking about it in the quarters.

Q. Talking; how talking? What were they saying?—A. Just wondering, like anyone else, like I aforesaid; wondering who did that, and that they would like to know.

Q. What else?—A. That is all I could find out about it, sir. They were wondering who did it.

Q. Did you not hear a word said as to who it was who possibly did the shooting—not as to the individuals, but as to whether it was soldiers or citizens?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mexicans, or somebody?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard a word?—A. I never heard anything like that at all.

Q. That never was discussed?—A. Not in my presence, sir.

Q. Never at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you at any time afterwards discuss whether it was the citizens or soldiers who had done the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever express an opinion as to which it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have one?—A. Not at that time, sir—who it was.

Q. When did you have an opinion?—A. You mean to express to the people?

Q. Yes.—A. And my comrades, on things like that?

Q. Yes.—A. I never was questioned about it after the 14th.

Q. What is that?—A. I never was questioned about it after the 14th at all, sir.

Q. And you never said anything more about it?—A. No, sir; until I was confined, and I wondered what I was confined for; and I asked and inquired then what I was confined about, and no one knew what I was confined for, sir.

Q. You heard no shots coming from the barracks?—A. Yes; there were some coming across the grounds there.

Q. Oh, you heard some?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you hear those?—A. When we were in ranks, and the guard was forming.

Q. Now, when you were in the ranks, and the guard was forming, you heard shots coming over your head?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Three or four, there, came over.

Q. Well, did you say anything when those shots were coming over your head and the fusillade was going on; did you say anything to the men about being in danger of being hit there?—A. No, sir; because he deployed us as quickly as possible, sir.

Q. There was no remark made upon it at all?—A. No, sir; I didn't, sir.

Q. And there was none made to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not tell them that night that you heard those shots going over, and it must have been the citizens doing the shooting?—A. I don't remember speaking to anybody that night.

Q. Or the next day?—A. At that time; I don't know whether I remember saying anything at that time about it.

Q. You never said anything of the kind?—A. No, sir; I don't remember, unless I spoke it to Major Penrose.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you go out on patrol that day, out in town?—A. No, sir; not that night.

Q. Was anybody of the guard taken out on patrol duty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not go?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many of your company were detailed with you for guard duty that night?—A. Four of us, on guard.

Q. Do you remember who they were?—A. I remember three. Yes, sir; I remember the four, now. There was Collier, Rogers, and myself, and Mitchell. I think he relieved a sick man, if I am not mistaken. I think he was supernumerary.

By Senator TALLAFERRO:

Q. What time were you struck over the head with the pistol?—A. The 5th of August.

Q. What time of day?—A. It was at night.

Q. What time of night?—A. It was between 8 and 9 o'clock, as near as I recall, sir.

Q. It was not as late as 9, you think?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was.

Q. You were arrested under the charge of having been one who did the shooting there at Brownsville?—A. I guess that I were, sir, but I never could find out. I asked Captain Macklin why I was arrested, and he didn't know, sir, when I was placed in confinement.

Q. You had an idea that you were arrested as being one of the parties who shot up the town?—A. That is all I thought about after I was arrested.

Q. Why did you think that?—A. By me being struck; that is why I thought I was placed there; that was the onliest thing I could think of why I was arrested.

Q. What time did you go to the hospital?—A. When, that night, sir?

Q. The night you were struck?—A. It may have been about 10 o'clock, sir; on or about that time.

Q. Where did you go immediately after you were struck?—A. I came back to the quarters. I came from the quarters first, then to Captain Macklin's quarters.

Q. You went to Captain Macklin's quarters before you went to the hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you stop anywhere in the town after you were struck before you went to your company's quarters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Captain Macklin told you to go to the hospital?—A. I don't remember whether he did or not, sir; but after leaving him I went to the hospital, sir.

Q. How long were you in the company's quarters?—A. I stayed there long enough to wash my face, sir, and the wound also.

Q. Then you went directly to Captain Macklin's quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you there?—A. Long enough to explain what had occurred to me, sir, and to listen to what he had to say. I don't know how minutes that were, sir.

Q. So that it was over an hour after you were struck before you appeared at the hospital?—A. It was on or about that time, sir.

Q. And you felt that you had been struck without any cause or provocation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you felt no resentment about it?—A. Not after I reported it to them and they said they would see after it, sir.

Q. You made no complaint at the hospital or to your comrades after your head was dressed?—A. No, sir; not after my head was dressed.

Q. You didn't complain of it at all?—A. I told of it at the hospital when I first went there that night, and then the next day Doctor Combe he asked me—

Q. I am speaking of the night you were hurt. The night you were struck is what I am speaking of, not the next day.—A. That night?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; after I returned from the hospital I was questioned about it.

Q. You made no complaint at the hospital of having been struck?—A. Yes, sir; I told the man that dressed my head that I had gotten struck.

Q. That you had gotten struck: but you made no complaint about it? You did not express any resentment?—A. No, sir.

Q. You thought that it was all right that you should be knocked down without any cause or provocation, and that you should have your head dressed and should make no complaint of it at all?—A. Yes, sir; after the officer to whom I reported it said that he would see about it, I thought I had gone through the right process then, sir.

Q. You did not denounce the man who struck you without cause?—A. I didn't denounce him?

Q. I say that you didn't denounce the man who had struck you without any cause?—A. No, sir; I didn't know who it was at that time.

Q. You could have denounced him without knowing who it was.—A. I told him that I had gotten struck by a man, but I didn't know who it was.

By Senator PERRUS:

Q. You did not know who it was?—A. That is what I told Captain Macklin. I said that I had been struck by a man. He asked me who it was, and I told him I didn't know who it was.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. You are perfectly sure that in passing those ladies on the street you did not even brush against them, even unintentionally?—A. No, sir; we had plenty of room to pass them, and I did not brush against them.

Q. You did not touch them at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you get anything to drink after you were struck that night?—A. No, sir; I didn't go back in the town any more.

Q. You did not get anything as you were coming down to the quarters?—A. No, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. The regular channel, when you were hurt and went into the barracks, was to report to your noncommissioned officer as to the happening out in town, was it not?—A. It was not the regular thing, but I told him as I met him. He asked me, as I came into the bathroom, what was the matter, and I told him that I had been struck.

Q. But ordinarily, when anything of that kind happens, what is the regular channel to bring the matter up? You wanted redress, I suppose. Now, what was the regular channel? Was it not to tell of the incident to a noncommissioned officer and then to let him ask you what had happened, and how?—A. The man that was in charge of quarters, sir.

Q. Well, after you washed, you reported to him, and then you were sent to your captain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And next you were sent to Major Penrose?—A. No, sir; I did not go to him that night.

Q. But you went to the hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were put on the sick list the next day, or that night?—A. The next day.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. You expected your commissioned officers to look after this, and see that the man who struck you was punished. Is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever gone to school anywhere?—A. Sir?

Q. Did you ever go to school anywhere?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At Greenville, S. C.

Q. How long were you in school there?—A. I don't know the number of years. I reached the sixth grade, sir.

Q. How is that?—A. I went as high as the sixth grade.

Q. The sixth grade?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you in the Philippines?—A. Two years and a half.

Q. Were you under fire there at any time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many skirmishes or battles were you engaged in?—A. In the battle of San Augustine, the battle of Rio, the battle of San Luis, and the battle of Negillion, and several other skirmishes that I have no record of, sir.

Q. You were under fire how many times, all told, in the Philippine Islands?—A. I could not really say, sir.

Q. Were you ever engaged in any fights, after you got in the Army, with citizens before this, or were you ever injured in any way by citizens before this?—A. No, sir.

Q. This is the first time you were ever in any trouble with any citizens after you were in the Army, near the post?—A. Yes, sir; that is my belief.

Q. This was the first time you were ever in any trouble after you enlisted in the Army, with citizens or near the post?—A. Yes, sir; to my belief.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not want to keep reminding you, but it is just as easy for you to speak louder as it is for the Senators, and I insist that you speak louder.

A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Why do you say "to my belief?"—A. These things happened quite a while ago.

Q. Can't you tell whether you ever had rows with the citizens or not, after you got into the Army?—A. Well, I had none, sir.

Q. Why did you say "to my belief?"—A. Well, I want to be positive about it, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. Then you state positively that you never had any quarrel or fight with any citizen near any army post at which you were stationed?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. Let me ask you again, as nearly as you can tell, how many times have you been under fire while you were in the Army?—A. Eight or ten times, as nearly as I can remember, sir.

Q. And you were in four battles that were reported?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator PERRUS:

Q. Did you get leave to go downtown that night?—A. The night that I was out, sir?

Q. The night that you were struck?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you happen to go?—A. Well, we were just walking around. It did not require any pass unless—

Q. Just walking around?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that against the rule or not?—A. It was, sir.

Q. How is that?—A. It was against the rule, I presume, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. It was the custom that you could go out without a pass, was it, or that the soldiers could go out into the town without passes?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You did not have to have a pass to go downtown, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you were present in the barracks when there was a formation of the company, that was all that was required, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had to be there when there was a roll call, or where the company was required to turn out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But between times you could walk where you liked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not necessary for you to have a pass to go downtown, then, was it, at any time?—A. No, sir.

By Senator TALLFERRO:

Q. But didn't you have to get leave from the officers to leave the barracks?—A. Not at that time we did not, unless we were going to old Mexico, and we could not make it over there and back in time, without having a pass.

Q. You were not required to stay in the barracks except when the officers gave you a pass or gave you leave to be absent?—A. No, sir. It has been the customary rule to go out between those times without any pass, around the town, so as to be present, as he has before said.

Q. You were only required to be there at roll calls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And guard mounts, and things of that sort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no rule requiring the soldiers to be within their quarters or within the camp limit where they have not gotten leave to go out?—A. There was not any published at that time, that is, sir.

Q. What is the rule in the Army?—A. I don't know, sir, exactly.

Q. Did you leave your quarters whenever you pleased in the Philippines, without leave to go?—A. Yes, sir; we did not use any passes there.

Q. Go anywhere you pleased, outside of the camp limits?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Just so you were present when you were required to do duty?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Ask him if they were not required to be in after check roll call.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You could not go out after check roll call at night?—A. No, sir; we were not allowed.

Q. You were not allowed to, you were expected to be in at check roll call and to remain in for the night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see there is some difference in the testimony as to whether there was a fence at the place where you passed these ladies, and where you were struck. I understood you to testify that there was a fence there. Is your recollection distinct about that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a fence there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether there was a vacant lot there? I see it stated by somebody that there was a vacant lot at that point.—A. We had passed the vacant lot, sir, already.

Q. A vacant lot on which a church stood?—A. We had passed the vacant lot, sir.

Q. You had passed the vacant lot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were down opposite the point where there was a fence?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. When he struck you, did you fall against the fence or in the street?—A. Fell down on the sidewalk.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I did not understand you to say that you fell against the fence?—A. No, sir; I was on the sidewalk.

Q. You fell right on the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He struck you just as you were stepping back onto the sidewalk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you had passed around the ladies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say anything to you before he struck you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not know you were going to be hit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Until he hit you?—A. No, sir.

Senator WARNER. He has testified to all that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. In answer to Senator Overman you said you were in Allison's saloon every day. You mean every day after he opened up?—A. Sir?

Q. In answer to Senator Overman you testified that you were in Allison's saloon every day, after he opened up his place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was Saturday, Sunday, and Monday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was his saloon open on Sunday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were there, then, on that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you were not in any saloon in Brownsville during the whole time you were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never tried to go into any, I understood you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a night that was, any circumstance that causes you to remember whether that was a dark night or not?—A. The night that I was struck?

Q. No; I mean the night of the shooting. But first, I will ask you, that was after dark when you were struck, as I understand you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am speaking now about the night when the shooting was done, the night of the 13th. Do you remember any occurrence that you can recall that will enable us to judge how dark it was?—A. It was a very dark night, as near as I can remember, sir; very dark.

Q. I do not know whether it was from you or from somebody else, so excuse me if I ask you, did anybody approach the guardhouse while you were on duty, who was challenged, and made to come forward and disclose who he was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that?—A. Sergeant Taliaferro was one, sir.

Q. Were you there when he appeared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far away could you recognize him?—A. I could see him about as close as from here to that door there. There is a light there also at the guardhouse, on No. 1 post.

Q. That was because there was a light there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anybody else? Do you remember Mrs. Matlock coming?—A. There was two women came also.

Q. Well?—A. And the quartermaster's clerk, he came there also, and was sent back to his quarters. Those are the only ones that I remember.

Q. Do you remember how near they got to you before you could recognize them?—A. No, sir; I only heard the challenge by other sentinels.

Q. They did not approach and pass you?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You were asked something about whether, if you had done anything, you would admit it, or not. A man who informs upon another in the Army does not stand very well, does he?—A. Sir?

Q. A soldier who informs upon another soldier in the Army does not stand very well?—A. I don't know, sir, about that.

Q. You don't know how that is?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it is customary for one soldier to give another away, to inform upon him?—A. No, sir; I guess that they would do so.

Q. You think they would, right along?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No trouble about that at all?—A. I don't think there is, sir.

Q. Did you ever inform upon anyone?—A. No, sir; I had no cause to ever do so, sir.

Q. When you were at Fort Niobrara, did your command have any trouble with citizens?—A. I don't know, sir. I came there very late in 1905. They did not have any during the time I was there.

Q. But you had heard of it, had you?—A. Yes, sir; I had heard of it.

Q. You were out in town there?—A. Sir?

Q. You were out in town at Fort Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The saloon was how near the post there?—A. Well, sir, about a mile and a half.

Q. Who kept that saloon?—A. Charles Price.

Q. There was another, was there not, there?—A. And there was one about 2 miles.

Q. Kept by whom?—A. Stratton, I think, his name is.

Q. Well, there was another, was there not?—A. No; the next one is about 4 miles.

Q. And that was kept by whom?—A. Valentine, in the city.

Q. You knew where all those saloons were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Visited them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you mean to tell us a while ago that if you had been guilty you would swear falsely in order to protect yourself?—A. I understood them to say, if I had did this, would I have told it, or something like that.

Q. If you had done this would you tell it, or would you deny it, or do you know?—A. Oh, I don't guess that I would tell it, sir, if I did it.

Q. You would not tell on yourself, you think?—A. No, sir.

Q. Perhaps not. Have you sworn to any false statement whatever in connection with this matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now or at any other time?—A. No, sir.

TESTIMONY OF FRANK J. LIPSCOMB (COLORED).

FRANK J. LIPSCOMB, colored, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please give us your full name.—A. Frank J. Lipscomb.

Q. Where do you live now?—A. In Bessemer, Ala., sir.

Q. Has that been your home heretofore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are you employed there, if at all?—A. I am employed by the Woodward Iron Company, in their ore mine.

Q. In their coal mine?—A. Ore mine.

Q. How long have you been working there?—A. Well, I worked there ever since I was large enough to work; about eight years, I think.

Q. Were you a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry while it was at Brownsville last year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What company did you belong to?—A. C Company.

Q. How long had you been in the service?—A. Two years and four months, I think.

Q. Then you were discharged without honor, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to say to the witness that Senators ask their questions in a loud voice so everybody can hear, and I want you to reply in a good, loud, round tone, so we can hear.

Senator FORAKER. Speak out so we can hear. I want to put in evidence the record of this witness as furnished by the War Department, and as found at page 262 of Senate Document 155. It is short and I will read it:

FRANK J. LIPSCOMB.

Enlisted July 16, 1904; was discharged without honor as a private of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 23, 1906.

Q. You were serving your first enlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When that shooting affray occurred at Brownsville, Tex.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were there with your company at that time, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said you had been employed for eight years at the place where you are now working?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is in somebody's ore mine at Bessemer, Ala.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were working there, then, before you enlisted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you were discharged you went back there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been working there ever since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are under employment there now, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in company with Private James W. Newton, of the same company that you belonged to—Company C of the Twenty-fifth Infantry—when he had some trouble with a customs officer by the name of Tate, in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. Now, tell us, if you can, the date of that occurrence?—A. Well, I don't just remember the date now.

Q. Can you tell us what day of the week it was?—A. No, sir; I don't remember that now.

Q. Can you tell us whether it was on Sunday or not?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was on Sunday.

Q. You don't know whether it was Sunday or not?—A. No, sir.

Senator WARNER. He does not think it was, he says.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Can you tell us what time in the day it was?—A. It was about 9 o'clock in the night.

Q. About 9 o'clock in the night, whatever night it was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was after dark, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now proceed and tell us in your own way what he and you were doing, and what this occurrence was—how it all came about.—A. Well, we were walking down the street, and we came to where there was some ladies standing on the sidewalk, and when we got to where they was, why, we turned out on the inside of the sidewalk and as we got opposite this man he knocked Newton down, and I walked on down the street by him, and when he turned to me, why, I had passed him, and I just went on down the street; and that is all there was to it.

Q. Now, Lipscomb, when you saw Tate knock your comrade, Newton, down, did you leave there in a walk or did you run, or how?—

A. I walked right straight on down the street, but I did not run.

Q. You went right on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not stop to have any controversy with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see him strike Newton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he strike him with?—A. With a six-shooter.

Q. Did he say anything to Newton before he struck him?—A. No, sir; I did not hear him say anything.

Q. Now, did you or Newton, either one, instead of going around the ladies, as you describe, push your way through them as they stood on the sidewalk?—A. No, sir; we did not touch them at all.

Q. Did either one of you brush against them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did either one of you jostle them in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Intentionally or otherwise?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Was there plenty of room to step around them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know this man was going to strike Newton until he did strike him?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you hear him say anything to Newton after he knocked him down?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Tate has testified in this case—I will not stop to read the exact language unless Senator Warner prefers it—that he struck Newton because when you and Newton came up Newton pushed his way through the crowd of ladies who were standing there, jostling his wife among others. Is that statement true or not?—A. No, sir; I don't think Newton struck either one of them.

Q. You say you don't think. Do you know whether he did or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. I mean do you know whether he went through the ladies or went around them?—A. He went around them—he went around them.

Q. You are positive he did not go through them?—A. No, sir; he did not go between them.

Q. Through the crowd?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you positive he did not jostle any of them?—A. No, sir—yes, sir; I am positive he did not touch any one of them.

Q. That he did not do it?—A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you go through them single file or together?—A. Went through them single file.

Q. Were you ahead of Newton or behind?—A. I was behind Newton, sir; Newton was in front.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What were you and Newton doing downtown that night?—

A. Why, he was going down to a friend of his that lived down near the depot, and he asked me to go with him.

Q. You were simply accompanying him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any arms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you been drinking?—A. No, sir; we had not been drinking at all.

Q. Had not been in any saloon that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you frequent the saloons of Brownsville any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in any of them at any time?—A. No, sir; I never was in none of them.

Q. Never in any of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, after this man Newton was struck and knocked down, what did you and Newton do? You went on. Did he join you again or not?—A. No, sir; when I seen him again we were back at the barracks.

Q. You did what?—A. We went back to the barracks before I saw him again.

Q. Did you run right off and leave him there wounded?—A. Yes, sir; I went.

Senator WARNER. He said he walked.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you go away from him and leave him all alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just walked away?—A. Yes, sir; walked right on down the street to the next corner, and went on around to the barracks.

Q. What street were you on when this occurred?—A. Well, I don't know the name of the street. I did not stay there long enough to learn.

Q. When you turned off that street, did you turn to the right or to the left?—A. Turned to the right, sir.

Q. You turned to the right and went where?—A. Went down to the next street and came right on back up to the barracks.

Q. Up to the next street. If you were on Elizabeth street, you went up then to Washington, I suppose, if that is the next street to the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a map at the left of you on the wall. Let me call your attention to what that shows [referring to the map]. This is supposed to be the line of barracks; there is the gate that goes out onto the main street, going downtown, or uptown, whichever you call it. This is Elizabeth street. Is that the street you were on, to start with?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The street which you entered upon when you went out of the gate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were several blocks away from the fort, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you passed the post-office yet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had gone by that, and then after the occurrence you went to the next street beyond and turned to the right, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went one square, onto the next street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be up to Washington street, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you came back to the barracks by way of Washington street?—A. Yes, sir; came right to the barracks.

Q. And came back alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not see Newton at all?—A. No, sir; not until I got back.

Q. Did you walk all the way or run?—A. I walked all the way.

Q. You walked all the way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Walked pretty fast, or otherwise?—A. Walked; no, sir; just taken my time.

Q. Did you or not have any uneasiness about Newton, how he would get back?—A. Why, yes; I did; but he was back to the barracks by the time I was.

Q. He was back by the time you were. Didn't you feel it was your duty to look after him? You must have known he was hurt, didn't you?—A. I did not think I could do him any good.

Q. You did not think you could do him any good?—A. Only by reporting it. If I had got back to the barracks in time enough I could report it.

Q. You intended to?—A. If I got back in time, but he was back there as soon as I was.

Q. To whom were you going to make report?—A. To the company commander.

Q. That was who?—A. Captain Macklin.

Q. But when you got back there Newton was there?—A. Yes, sir; me and him got there just about the same time.

Q. And what occurred then?—A. Well, he went and reported it hisself.

Q. And did you go with him to report it?—A. No, sir; I did not go to the captain until the next morning.

Q. You went the next morning to see Captain Macklin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you happen to go to see him the next morning?—A. Well, he sent for me.

Q. He sent for you, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did he want to know?—A. Well, he just asked me how it was, and I stated to him just the same as I did here.

Q. And then did you go with Newton anywhere that night, after you saw him at the barracks?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not go to the hospital with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know what occurred there?—A. No, sir; I don't.

Q. Did you see Major Penrose in regard to the matter at any time?—A. Yes, sir; the next day.

Q. Did he send for you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you told him all about it, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he ask you what had occurred, or what did he ask you?—A. Yes, sir; he asked me what had occurred, and I told him just like I have told you all.

Q. Now, where were you the night that the shooting occurred, August 13?—A. I was in the quarters, sir.

Q. In C Company barracks, you mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Upstairs or downstairs?—A. Upstairs, sir.

Q. Well, were you asleep or awake when the firing commenced?—A. I was asleep, sir.

Q. What awakened you?—A. I was waked by the sound of "to arms" sounding.

Q. The call to arms sounding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there firing going on when you got awake?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do when you got awake?—A. I hurried and dressed and went downstairs.

Q. Did you get a gun or not?—A. I did not get my gun the first time I went downstairs.

Q. Why didn't you get your gun?—A. The gun racks were locked.

Q. It was locked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you afterwards get your gun; and if so, when?—A. Yes, sir; after I came back the gun racks were open, and I got my gun.

Q. You ran downstairs without any gun, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you ran back upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you find the gun rack open?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it opened, do you know?—A. It was cut open with an ax, I think.

Q. Did you get your own gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or somebody's else gun?—A. I got my own gun.

Q. How do you know you got your own gun?—A. Well, I know it by the number; I had the card.

Q. You knew where your gun stood in the gun rack?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got your hands on your own gun?—A. Yes, sir; I got my own gun again.

Q. Do you know whether your comrades of your company got their own guns or not?—A. All of them did not get their own.

Q. All of them did not. Some of them got other guns, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you had your own?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, you were with your company from that time on that night?—A. Yes, sir; I was with my company from that time on until morning.

Q. Did you have anything to do with this shooting up of Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody who did?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. In your own company or any other company?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did you make any threats or hear any of the men make any threats?—A. No, sir.

Q. To revenge themselves upon the people of Brownsville for this attack on Newton?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you anticipate any such occurrence as that of the night of August 13?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You did not know anybody was going to shoot up the town?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had never heard such a thing suggested?—A. No, sir.

Q. If any conspiracy was organized among the men of your company or the men of that battalion to shoot up the town, you did not hear of it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Have you at any time concealed any knowledge of what occurred that night from anybody?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. You have been willing and ready at all times to tell all you knew?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you now know or have any reason to suspect who did that shooting?—A. No, sir; I have not; none at all.

Q. Do you know of anything that causes you to have a suspicion that anybody in your company had anything to do with it?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Mr. Tate said nothing there when he struck Newton?—A. I did not hear him say anything.

Q. You were right there?—A. Yes, sir; I passed by him as soon as he struck him.

Q. But you were just behind Newton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that Newton was how far in front of you when he was struck—a step or two?—A. About a couple of steps—as near as—

Q. A couple of steps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you walked on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Going away from the barracks; that is, down the street?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not hear a word said by Tate?—A. No, sir.

Q. To Newton?—A. No, sir.

Q. Before or after?—A. No, sir.

Q. And Newton got right up and walked away as though he was not much hurt, didn't he?—A. I don't know, sir. I left Newton there, sir.

Q. I find in your affidavit, your statement on page 134 of Senate Document 155, the following questions and answers, Mr. Lipscomb; I don't know whether they are correct or not:

Q. What did the man say to him?—A. I never heard him say anything.

Q. Did Newton get up again?—A. Yes, sir; he got up.

Q. What did he do?—A. Not anything.

Q. Where did he go?—A. He went on down the street and I turned the corner. After I turned the corner I did not see him any more until we got to the quarters.

Q. Did he go towards town or towards the barracks after he was hit?—A. He went on downtown from the barracks.

Q. Did he appear to be hurt much?—A. No, sir; he didn't appear to be.

Is that as you remember it, now, Mr. Lipscomb?—A. No, sir; I don't remember saying that.

Q. What is that?—A. Not as I remember, I don't remember that.

Q. You heard what I read to you, Mr. Lipscomb?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?—A. Well, I don't know, sir. I don't remember it that way. I told it just like it was a while ago.

Q. Yes; but I want you to understand. I am simply reading here what purports to have been a statement made by yourself in an investigation down there. You remember when Colonel Lovering was down there. It is reported here. The fact is, Mr. Lipscomb, letting that go, you did go on uptown, as we call it, or this way, from the barracks, until you got to the cross street, and then you turned up to the right, and Mr. Newton went on, going uptown, and you left him when you turned to the right?—A. No, sir. I left him when the man knocked him down. I went on down the street.

Q. And left him lying there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the question appears here:

Q. Did the man that knocked Newton down say anything to either of you?—
A. No, sir; he did not say anything to me.

A. No, sir.

Q. I will leave that. It will show for itself. This shooting that you heard, was it before or after the call to arms, when you were awakened?—A. I was awakened at the time the sound to arms went.

Q. At the time they were sounding the call to arms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where did the shooting seem to be then, Mr. Lipscomb?—

A. It seemed like it was in town, from where I was.

Q. Well, near the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed like it was near the barracks, right across the fence.

Q. Right across the barracks fence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That sounded like high-power guns, didn't it, Mr. Lipscomb?—

A. Yes, sir; it sounded like it was large-caliber guns.

Q. You have heard the army guns frequently? The sound was the same, was it not?—A. No, sir; it sounded like it was heavier than those.

Q. Heavier?—A. Yes, sir; had a heavier sound.

Q. Did you look out to see where it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. And then after the first shooting it seemed to go uptown, did it, the parties doing the shooting—away from the barracks?—A. No, sir; I don't remember whether it went uptown or not. All of it sounded like it was all about in the same place to me.

Q. So that you may understand the question before you answer it, there is that road between the barracks and the town there. Calling that the barracks road, you know what I mean, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Running up by where Allison's saloon was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, with reference to that road, where did the shooting seem to be?—A. Well, it seemed like it was right near that road there.

Q. What do you say?—A. It seemed like it was about in that road.

Q. And back of which barracks?—A. It looked like it was between B Company and D Company barracks.

Q. D barracks is the one nearest the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that shooting that you heard seemed to be right in the road down there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many shots did you hear in there?—A. I don't remember how many shots there were.

Q. Quite a number?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you pay attention to the shooting after that?—A. No, sir.

Q. The call to arms was sounded when you were awakened? You got up and dressed and went downstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you look for your gun before you went downstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the officer in charge of quarters?—A. Sergeant Brawner.

Q. Did you look for him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see him that night?—A. Yes, sir; I seen him after.

Q. How long afterwards?—A. Well, it was not very long afterwards.

Q. Was it after the shooting was all over; and if so, how long?—A. Oh, well, just about four or five minutes, I reckon, after the shooting was over.

Q. You saw him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did he come from?—A. I think he came out of the orderly room, the office; I am not certain.

Q. You think he came out where?—A. Of the orderly room; the office. We call it the orderly room.

Q. That is downstairs?—A. That is downstairs.

Q. Did you ask him where he had been?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you tell him you had had to break open the gun racks to get the guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say where he had been?—A. No, sir; I did not hear him say.

Q. Who was with him?—A. Him and Sergeant Harley was together when I seen him.

Q. Do you know where they had come from?—A. No, sir; I don't know really where they came from.

Q. And where were they standing when you saw them?—A. They were coming through the library when I seen them, from towards the orderly room.

Q. Through the library?—A. Yes, sir; the library is the hall just where you come out of the orderly room, you come right out into the library.

Q. That is the first time I have heard of the library. Is the library in the hall?—A. Yes, sir; it is just the hall.

Q. The books are in the hall?—A. Yes, sir; and papers.

Q. And that hall leads from the outside, does it not?—A. No, sir; it leads from the inside of the orderly room.

Q. That hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there is a cross hall that it strikes, does it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. When the call to arms was sounded, was the firing still going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any idea what it meant?—A. Sir?

Q. Did you have any idea what it meant?—A. What, the call to arms meant?

Q. The firing?—A. No; I did not.

Q. Did you think the fort was being attacked?—A. No, sir; I did not know what it meant.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Just one question more. Did you ever talk with any of them afterwards as to who did this shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear any of the soldiers talk as to who did the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never heard it discussed at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Yet you were there as a member of Company C?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not arrested, were you, Mr. Lipscomb?—A. No, sir.

Q. So you were there with the company until they left Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mixing with them every day and meeting with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you never heard this discussed at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear the Newton incident discussed—the striking of Newton?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard of the alleged assault upon Mrs. Evans, didn't you?—A. Mrs. who?

Q. Mrs. Evans?—A. I don't remember that name.

Q. Well, the woman that was alleged to have been pulled off her horse, and somebody charged that it was a soldier that did it.—A. Yes, sir; I heard some one speak about it.

Q. Did you hear of that before the shooting up of the town?—A. Yes, sir; I think I did.

Q. Where was that discussed?—A. I think I heard it at the guardhouse; I was on guard.

Q. Did you hear it given as the reason why the men were all compelled to come in at 8 o'clock that night, the 13th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the passes taken up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was discussed that night, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said about it, Mr. Lipscomb?—A. Well, there was nothing said about it; just said everybody had to be in.

Q. And they said the Evans incident—the assault upon Mrs. Evans—was the cause of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the soldiers seem to be pleased that they were going to be kept in that night?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed so.

Q. They seemed to like it?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed so.

Q. When Newton was struck you left him there. Did not some of your comrades ask you how it was that Newton got struck?—A. No, sir; they did not ask me.

Q. Did you ever tell anybody?—A. No, sir; never did have any talk about it, only with the captain and the major.

Q. None of them ever asked why it was that you went away and left him there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never spoke of it to any one of your comrades?—A. No, sir; only the major and the captain.

Q. They were your officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Never spoke of it in barracks at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. One way or the other?—A. No, sir.

Q. And never spoke of this shooting up of the town in the barracks at all, one way or the other?—No, sir; I did not know anything about it.

Q. Well, afterwards, as to who did it?—A. Who did it?

Q. As to who did it; yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Whether it was the soldiers or citizens?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were on guard that night?—A. No, sir; the night before.

Q. Oh, yes; you are correct. That was the night of the 12th—the night of the Evans incident?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correct, Mr. Lipscomb. But none of these facts were ever talked about at all among you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear of this man Reid being pushed off of the gang plank at the ferryboat, into the mud or water there by the river?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of it. I think I was on guard that night, at the time.

Q. Did you ever hear the boys talk about that in quarters?—A. No, sir; I think it was reported at the guardhouse that this man got shoved overboard, or something.

Q. You never heard it talked of at all in the barracks?—A. No, sir.

Q. None of these things?—A. No, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. When the call to arms was sounded, was it not your duty to take your gun downstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not take it down because you could not get it out of the rack—is that the reason?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who broke open the rack?—A. I don't know, sir, who broke it open.

Q. You did not think the fort was being attacked, that the barracks were being fired upon, when you heard this shooting and the call to arms?—A. No, sir; I did not know what it meant.

Q. Didn't you feel any uneasiness in going downstairs without your gun, when this shooting was in the road right by the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; I was a little uneasy, but I did not know what it meant.

Q. You went right down without it?—A. I went downstairs; yes, sir.

Q. Did you go outside the barracks?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long were you downstairs before you went back?—A. Just long enough to turn around and go back.

Q. Who broke open the rack?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. It was intact, all in order, when you went downstairs?—A. Yes, sir; it was all right.

Q. You tried to get your gun before you went down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw it was all right then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You hurried downstairs and hurried right back, and it was broken open?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know who did it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not see anybody with an ax?—A. No, sir.

Q. You got your gun then and went downstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you see Sergeant Brayner, who was in charge of quarters, about the time the gun racks were broken open?—A. I don't remember whether it was at the time the gun racks were broken open or not.

Q. Where were you when you saw him and Sergeant Harley?—A. I was coming downstairs.

Q. That is the first time you came down?—A. No, sir; the second time.

Q. Well, the firing was not over then, was it?—A. Yes, sir; the firing was over when we got out.

Q. When you got out with your gun the firing was over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far were you from the street on which you turned to the right, to go to Washington street, when Newton was struck?—A. Well, I don't remember; it was not very far.

Q. Were you or not near to the corner?—A. I was not very far from the corner.

Q. Was that or not the nearest way, apparently, out of the trouble?—A. Yes, sir; the nearest corner, the first corner I got to.

(At 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m. the committee adjourned until Tuesday, June 11, 1907, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, June 11, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, Pettus, Taliaferro, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF ALEXANDER J. LEVIE—Recalled.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Mr. Levie, you testified yesterday. You told me outside the committee room just now that you saw in the paper some statement attributed to you which was not correct. Will you tell me what it was?—A. It was as to the inspection of those rifles.

Q. Just what was the statement?—A. The paper reported me as stating that the rifles would stand inspection.

Q. Your statement was that they would not stand inspection?—A. Yes, sir; that they would not stand inspection under any officer under whom I had served.

Q. At your request I have looked at the record, so that you may correct that if you want to, and I find that at page 2944 you are reported as saying, after you had removed the breech bolt from one gun and sighted through the barrel, "This rifle would not pass inspection under any officer in the service."—A. No, sir.

Q. What was your statement?—A. Under any officer under whom I had served.

Q. Yes. I so stated at the time, "under any officer under whom you had served." The next question is:

Q. That rifle would not pass inspection under any officer in the service?

I want to state that what I said was, "under any officer under whom the witness had ever served," or words to that effect.

Then, on the next page I find that after you had looked at the next rifle you were asked these questions and gave these answers:

Q. Lay that gun aside and take this other one.—A. (After examining second gun.) This one is equally as bad.

Q. That is equally as bad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would that pass inspection under any officer under whom you have ever served?—A. This one [indicating]?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Sergeant, I want to ask you another question on my own account. Going back, I understood you to say yesterday that after you had cleaned a rifle you followed it up for a day or two to see whether it fouled up.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do that?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. State whether or not if a rifle be thoroughly cleaned it will foul up.—A. No, sir; after I get mine clean—

Q. Did you not state yesterday, in substance, that you never had been able to get your gun so clean that it would not foul?—A. That is on the first day's cleaning?

Q. Any cleaning?—A. I didn't put it that way. I didn't mean to put it that way. On the first cleaning.

Q. The record will show just what you stated. Now, Mr. Levie, as to this correction you make, the record reads as follows:

Q. Now, will you kindly look at these guns and tell us whether they are clean or not? Look at both of them; see if you can get the light through them.—A. (Removing breech bolt from one gun and sighting through barrel.) This rifle would not pass inspection under any officer in the service.

A. That is what I wish corrected.

Q. That is as reported.—A. That is what I wish corrected.

Q. Yes. The next question and answer are:

Q. That rifle would not pass inspection under any officer in the service. Lay that gun aside and take the other one.—A. (After examining second gun.) This one is equally as bad.

A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I will ask you this question: If a rifle be dirty from firing—stained—would that be disclosed by drawing a white rag through the rifle?—A. I do not quite understand your question, Senator.

Q. If a rifle be dirty from firing would that be disclosed by drawing a white rag through the bore of the rifle?—A. It would not remove the powder stains.

Q. No; but I mean would the powder stains show on the white rag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like, then, for you to take that gun that was cleaned and draw a white rag through it with the cleaning rod. Just make that experiment as to that rifle.

(The gun referred to and a brass cleaning rod and rag were here handed to the witness.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is the number of that gun?—A. 198263.

(The witness here ran the rod, with a rag upon it, in at the breech of the gun and drew it back again out of the breech.)

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What is the result?—A. (After examining rag.) Apparently there is both powder stain and rust.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Which are the powder stains?—A. This is powder stain [indicating on rag] and this is the rust [indicating].

Q. That is not a very dirty gun, though?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that what you call a dirty gun?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Would a gun in the condition indicated by the stains on that rag pass a rigid inspection under any officer under whom you ever served?—A. I state that it would not pass inspection.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Would you say that that gun had not been cleaned at all?—A. No, I would not.

Q. How about that other gun?—A. I would not go on evidence to state that I could tell a gun that hadn't been cleaned.

Q. How is that?—A. I would not state that I could identify a gun, I would not attempt to go on record as saying that I could identify a gun that no attempt had been made to clean from one that had been cleaned.

Q. Would not any gun that had been cleaned after a time show rust?—A. If very thoroughly cleaned they will not, sir.

Q. Ordinary cleaning?—A. That was my experience; for three or four days I had to clean mine every day.

Q. But to pass an ordinary inspection; I suppose a gun would pass an ordinary inspection within three or four days after that. Would not any of those guns that had passed an ordinary inspection show a little more rust or powder stain?—A. If they hadn't been looked at, yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. If they had not been what?—A. If they had not been looked at and cleaned.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. That is your experience?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. But if they had been thoroughly cleaned they would not?—A. I wish to state, sir, that I never had any experience that I could get a gun clean on the first cleaning, thoroughly clean, but I have been able to get it thoroughly clean by looking at it and cleaning it again, as I have stated.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You never have been able to do that?—A. No, sir; I never have been able to do that.

Q. What you mean by cleaning a gun thoroughly is to clean the gun and then to clean it again, and then to clean it the third time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then to clean it even the fourth time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say, then, that although a gun may have been cleaned and passed an ordinary inspection, three or four days afterwards it would show more or less powder stains and rust?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. I do not want to ask you any more questions.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Sergeant, it would not do that if you had done as the ordinary soldier does, after you had cleaned it run a rag through it with oil on it?—A. This powder I find the most difficult that I have ever undertaken to get out of a gun. When I would think I had my rifle thoroughly cleaned, and when I had worked on it I would conscientiously say sometimes as long as a half an hour, and even put the pomade to it and polished it out, I have found that I would have to do that for several days to get it so that it would not rust.

Q. That is, to polish it with this oil?—A. With this pomade; yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF MAJ. CHARLES W. PENROSE, U. S. ARMY—Recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. Major, you will consider the oath that you formerly took covers your testimony now.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major, since you were on the stand Capt. William Kelly, of Brownsville, has testified before this committee. I call your attention to what he said at pages 2548, 2549, and 2550. I will read you what he said. I will just read all of this as a predicate to the examination that I want to make of you on this subject:

Q. Did you go up to the garrison during that time?

That is, while the troops were there.

Q. Did you go up to the garrison during that time?—A. Only once.

Q. When was that?—A. I think it was on the Saturday evening before.

Q. Before the shooting affray?—A. Before the shooting; yes, sir.

Q. What was going on when you were there?—A. Nothing. My son was with me, and we went to call on the commanding officer, Major Penrose.

Q. Your son was with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he at home at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he there at the time of the shooting affray?—A. No, sir; he left Monday morning.

Q. Just before it happened?—A. Just before it happened.

Q. You met Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir; we met him on the walk.

Q. Did your son know him?—A. Yes, sir; I think he did. Yes, he did; because he introduced me.

Q. You had not met Major Penrose?—A. Not until then.

Q. That was the first you saw of Major Penrose?—A. That was the first I saw of him.

Q. That was on Saturday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was pay day, also, was it not?—A. I believe it was; I am not sure about that.

Q. Did you see the troops under arms at all during the time they were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see any parade?—A. There was no parade.

Q. What time was this?—A. In the afternoon, between 3 and 4 o'clock, I should judge.

Q. Did you see any of the soldiers around about the quarters, when you were there?—A. In passing into the fort you passed by the flank, between two of the barracks; that is, you passed in at the gate between B and D barracks.

Q. D barracks is below, towards the river?—A. Yes. You passed in there and there were always a number of the men loafing around the quarters on either side. There were a number of them that day, I remember. I remember that my son said to me, "Penrose can not keep those fellows in much order." There were no two men dressed alike.

Q. They were not on duty of any kind?—A. Not any.

Q. But they were simply about the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; they were simply about the barracks.

Senator FORAKER. Now, I pass over to the next page, omitting all on that page, and going to the top of page 2550, as follows:

Q. You did not see any of them misbehaving?—A. No, sir.

Q. The only thing you took exception to was that they were unsoldierly?—A. An unsoldierly looking lot of niggers.

Q. They did not salute their officers with the military air which you thought they should?—A. No.

Q. And some of them went without coats?—A. Yes; very frequently without coats.

Q. That was August?—A. Yes.

Q. And in Texas?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the southerly part of Texas?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is pretty warm away down there, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they the only people who were going without coats?—A. No, sir; they were not the only people who were going without coats; there were lots of people who were going without coats; but a soldier is supposed to at least go on the street, when he moves out of his barracks, neatly and properly dressed; and when he does not it is the fault of his officers.

Q. And did you see anything at all, only this diversity of dress, as I will call it, that made you think they were slovenly?—A. I could tell. I think I know a soldier when I see one.

Q. Did you ever observe any disobedience on their part of any command or order?—A. I never saw them under the command of their officers at all that I know of.

Q. Did you get acquainted with their officers?—A. Very few of them.

Q. Did you get acquainted with Captain Lyon?—A. No.

Q. Or Captain Macklin?—A. Macklin I met the same evening that I went down to call on the commanding officer.

Q. You met him in the quarters of the commanding officer?—A. No, sir; at his quarters.

Q. You went up to his quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get acquainted with Lieutenant Lawrason?—A. Yes, sir. We went up to Lieutenant Lawrason's quarters.

Q. Did not these seem to you to be very soldierly officers?—A. Lawrason looked all right; he seemed to be a soldierly officer.

Q. He looked all right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is a citizen of Louisiana, is he not?—A. I do not know.

Q. You did not know about him in that respect?—A. No, sir.

Q. He is a graduate of West Point?—A. Yes.

Q. You thought that he was all right. And do you mean to have us infer, by saying that he looked all right, that the others did not impress you as being all right?—A. I must say that Major Penrose did not.

Q. He did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. In what way did he not?—A. Well, he came up the walk that evening without any collar on and no coat.

Q. Without a collar?—A. He had no collar; a fatigue shirt and no collar on.

Q. Well, that was a thing to take exception to, under the circumstances. And did you see anything else wrong with him?—A. No. That was not wrong. I am just simply remarking that the man was not neat and trim as an officer should be in the presence of his soldiers in the garrison.

Q. How else was he dressed?—A. He had on an ordinary and not very clean khaki uniform.

Q. An ordinary and not very clean khaki uniform. And how were the other officers dressed?—A. Those that I saw—I think Lawrason was possibly officer of the day—he had a sword on, and he was in fatigue uniform and looked all right. Grier had been quartermaster, and he told—

Q. Did you and your son talk about the negro soldiers while you were on that trip?—A. I think the casual remark was made by Will as we came up, "Those fellows do not look as though they were under good control."

Q. As if they were under control?

Senator WARNER. He said good control.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Under good control?—A. Yes, sir.

I will stop there. Now, Major, do you remember the visit to you that Captain Kelly testifies about in what I have read to you?—A. Yes, sir; very distinctly. Captain Kelly called at my house several days before the evening of the 13th, I do not remember what date it was, and was accompanied by his son. With my wife I was at dinner, and the servant brought the cards to me. I did not see Captain Kelly at that time. I did not see him that evening. I did not see him or lay eyes on him until the morning of the 14th, when he came in at the head of the citizens' committee to call on me. I never laid eyes on Captain Kelly until that morning. I was introduced that morning to Captain Kelly by Mayor Combe. That was several days before the 13th.

Q. That is when he called?—A. When he called; yes, sir. Now, I do not remember the date, but I know it was several days, for this reason, that a few days before this shooting occurred, in company with Captain Macklin I went to return Captain Kelly's call. We went to his house and there I met his son, young Captain Kelly, of the Ninth Cavalry, I think. I did not see the older Captain Kelly. His son excused him, saying that he had a headache that evening. We sat on the porch and talked for some little time, and young Captain Kelly brought up the fact that we had met before during the Spanish-American war, when he was in charge of several pack trains that were shipped on the same boat that we went over to Porto Rico on.

Q. Is it true or not that you met him on the walk?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Is it true or not that you met him at any time when you were without a collar and without a coat, and in a dirty khaki uniform?—A. Senator, I do not think that anybody ever saw me without a coat or collar in the post, or in a dirty uniform. I am clean, if I am nothing else in the world. Another thing, it was my invariable custom at Brownsville, after the first two or three evenings we were there, to have my bath directly before dinner, and to get into a white uniform. I did that always.

Q. He states here that he called about 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon.—A. He did not, sir; he called after 6. We were at dinner. Our dinner hour was 6 o'clock.

Q. What was your dinner hour?—A. Six o'clock.

Q. You did not go out when the cards were brought to you?—A. No, sir; I did not. We were at dinner, and they left the cards and then left themselves.

Q. They were gone before you got the cards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you never saw him at any time or place until the morning of the 14th?—A. I never laid eyes on the man until the morning of the 14th.

Q. Now as to your men. Were they slovenly dressed or slouchy in their manner, as he describes them to have been, or what was the truth about that?—A. I was with that battalion for nearly three years, and I never saw any evidence of it in any way. They were an unusually clean lot of men. He says he saw some men with leggings and some without. Now, that is true. Many of these men had still the long trousers, and I permitted those men to wear their long trousers when they were not on duty. When they wore the long trousers they did not wear leggings. All our work was done in the chambray shirt and belt, and the breeches and leggings. The men were permitted to go in town in their chambray shirts.

Q. That was a part of the regular prescribed uniform?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it not?—A. Yes, sir; the prescribed uniform, and it was the uniform that I prescribed for all work at Brownsville—at Fort Brown.

Q. And it was a part of the regulation and practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To parade men with just the chambray shirts?—A. Yes, sir; in hot climates.

Q. In hot weather?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that there was nothing unusual about that, was there?—
A. Nothing at all, sir; I would like to state, though, most emphatically, that no one ever saw me in any such garb as that—never at any time or any place.

Q. Now, since you testified, Mrs. Leahy has testified, and at page 2921, in her testimony, occurs this, speaking about her mother:

Q. What part of Brownsville does she live in?—A. Right opposite my old home, known as the Leahy house; on some of my own lots—my property, sir.

Q. In the morning after the shooting did you go to your mother's house?—

A. I went down, sir, between 5 and 6 o'clock—about 5.30.

Q. In going to your mother's house from your house which way did you go?—

A. I went down the Cowen alley, and down the post fence to my house—my mother's.

Q. That is, you mean you went down what we call the garrison road between the post and the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you got to the garrison road you would go in what direction?—

A. Down towards Jefferson street, right straight down the garrison wall.

Q. That is, away from the river?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. We have Elizabeth street and Washington street and Adams, and then comes Jefferson, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you went by the barracks this morning, did you see any of the soldiers? And if so, state what they were doing.—A. Yes, sir; I saw all along the garrison fence men posted, armed.

Q. Yes.—A. I also saw, I should presume—I am almost positive—five or six men sitting on the gallery upstairs cleaning guns.

Q. In which barracks was this, do you remember?—A. B barracks.

Q. B barracks. And what time in the morning was this?—A. 5.30. I was back to my own house after 6, to serve first breakfast.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You saw five or six men on the back porch of one of these barracks buildings cleaning guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which one of the buildings?—A. B barracks.

Q. B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anyone on either of the other barracks porches cleaning guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. You just saw five or six men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they doing?—A. They were polishing up the tops of the barrels and pulling rags through the barrels—some sticks, or something; I don't know what it was.

Q. This was 5.30 in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was this before sunrise or after?—A. After sunrise. It was daylight. I couldn't tell you whether the sun was up, but it was daylight already.

Q. I want to know whether it was as late as sunrise?—A. I don't know; I couldn't tell you. It was daylight; that is all I can tell you.

Q. You saw everything perfectly clearly?—A. As clear as I could look out of that window and see now.

Q. As clear as it is now?—A. I don't suppose it was probably as clear as it is now, but I could see as clear as now.

Q. Did you see any officers out there?—A. I did not. I saw only one officer, and that was down by the gate.

Q. That is, this large gate [indicating on map]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who that officer was?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. I want you to locate him as nearly as you can. This is the gate and there is the Cowen alley—the mouth of it [indicating on map]. Where was he?—

A. He was on that walk, just about where the pointer is.

I will explain to the committee that the walk in question was the walk going into the reservation from the gate. [Reading:]

Q. Inside of the reservation?—A. Oh, yes; he was inside.

Q. Inside of the reservation, somewhere near D barracks, which is next towards the river?—A. Yes, sir.

I wish to say to the committee that I said B barracks and not D barracks. I pointed to this point indicated on the map, as I remember very distinctly. [Reading:]

Q. You saw the officer there? What was he doing?—A. He did not seem to be doing anything, but just standing there.

Q. Well, did he have on his sword and a revolver?—A. I couldn't tell you, sir.

Q. Was he in full uniform?—A. No, sir; I am not positive, but it was either an olive drab or a khaki he had on; but I think, if I am not mistaken, it was an olive drab.

Q. Do you know Captain Macklin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it he?—A. No, sir; I am positive it was not Captain Macklin I saw that morning.

Q. You are positive it was not Captain Macklin?—A. Yes, sir; I knew Captain Macklin personally.

Q. You knew Captain Lyon?—A. I have since, but I did not know him at that time.

Q. Did you know Captain Macklin at that time?—A. Yes, sir; he used to call at my house.

Q. Captain Lyon you did not know then?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you knew him since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know how the officer looked?—A. No, sir; I was in too much of a hurry to pay any attention. I was going to see how my mother was.

Q. Did you look carefully enough to see it was an officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you can not tell us whether it was Captain Lyon?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Captain Lawrason?—A. I did, sir. I saw him there that morning.

Q. At this same time?—A. No, sir; I think it was after that I saw Lieutenant Lawrason. He was near the little gate. That was between 7 and 8 o'clock.

Q. You knew him well?—A. Yes, sir; I knew him well.

Q. It was not Lieutenant Lawrason, then, whom you saw at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Lieutenant Grier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know him at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he not board with you?—A. Afterwards.

Q. Afterwards?—A. Yes, sir; he boarded there afterwards.

Q. Did any of the officers come out and board with you after this shooting affray?—A. Lieutenant Grier.

Q. Lieutenant Grier did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He took his meals in your house?—A. Yes, sir; he and his wife both, for a month.

Q. For one month after this shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did he remain and on what account did he remain there?—

A. As quartermaster, sir.

Q. He was quartermaster?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He remained behind to transfer the baggage?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And quartermaster's stores?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during all that time he boarded with you at your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He and his wife?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know him, then, very well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it he you saw?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Let me see, was there any other officer who was there? You know Major Penrose, do you not?—A. Yes, sir; I have met Major Penrose since, but I do not know whether I would recognize him to-day if I saw him.

Q. Could it have been Major Penrose you saw there?—A. It must have been either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon.

Q. It must have been either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon that you saw there at 5.30 in the morning, and at the time you saw either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon you also saw five or six men on the rear of B barracks, upper gallery, cleaning their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That will do.

Senator WARNER. That is all, Mrs. Leahy.

(Witness excused.)

Now, Major, can you give us any information as to what was happening about 5.30 to 6 o'clock on the morning of the 14th in the rear of B barracks?—A. Yes, sir; I think you will recall my testimony on that point before. As soon as it was daylight in the morning I myself went to the rear of the barracks, and I examined them all very carefully—all of the barracks in fact—but I commenced with C Company and then I went to B Company and then to D Company. I examined the barracks, both the lower and upper balconies. I was looking for bullet scars. That was certainly at half past 5 in the morning. I think first call for reveille was at 5.45—5.25, I think, first call was—and reveille at 5.30. It was just as soon as I could see that I went along the barracks. I was there probably before reveille, and I was there, I think, when reveille sounded. I went along there as soon as it was light enough to see. As soon as reveille was sounded, examination of the rifles was made in accordance with orders that I had given early that morning. As soon as it was light enough to see, the companies were paraded and examination of the rifles held at that time, and I presume it took until after 6 o'clock, because I did not note the time myself; but I was there myself from one end of those barracks to the other, and after I completed the three barracks that were occupied I went up and looked at the vacant set of barracks.

Q. If there had been any men on the upper rear gallery of B barracks at the hour of 5.30 to 6 o'clock in the morning of the 14th, cleaning guns or doing anything else, you would have seen them, would you not?—A. I think so; undoubtedly, sir. It may have been this way, Senator. If you recollect my examination before, there were seven men of B Company whom Lieutenant Lawrason, in examining his company, had put to one side. He asked me to examine the rifles of those seven men. I did. After I had completed my examination I called to Captain Lyon and asked him to examine these rifles, which he did. We found no powder stains whatever. The bores were simply dirty; from standing in the racks, probably. Now, when we got through with those men I directed them to join their company. Lieutenant Lawrason had gone out with B Company to relieve C Company, which was on guard, and it is just possible that those men may have wiped their rifles out with rags, but I did not see it, and I do not think they did, because I did not leave there until 8 o'clock; I did not leave that vicinity until 8 o'clock that morning.

Q. But did they have any opportunity to clean their rifles or wipe them out or do anything else to them before they were inspected by their officers that morning?—A. No, sir; I do not think it is possible. I think it is utterly impossible. Captain Macklin made his headquarters right there at the gate. His company was on guard and was standing right along the wall, along that entire wall, and Captain Macklin was right at the gate, excepting during intervals when he would go down the line.

Q. So that he was in a position to know what was going on there, after daylight?—A. As soon as it was daylight he could have seen it, undoubtedly.

Q. And how long did it take you to make the inspection of the rear galleries of the barracks?—A. I should think half to three-quarters of an hour.

Q. Did you see any men with guns in their hands until after the men were paraded?—A. I did not, sir; excepting those on guard.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether or not people were allowed, after the firing that night, to come up that alley and pass up the garrison road, as Mrs. Leahy describes she did; do you remember whether any order was given?—A. I am under the impression that Mayor Combe told me he would not permit anyone on that street at all; that he would so post his policemen that no one would go on that street. I do not recall seeing anyone on the street myself—I am referring to the street right along the wall.

Q. The garrison road?—A. The garrison road, or sometimes called the firing line.

Q. You did not see anyone pass up there that morning?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. And you were out examining these barracks, where you could have seen anybody passing up and down, from early daylight until these troops were inspected. Their arms were inspected, were they not?—A. Yes, sir; I could have seen anyone. They might have, up above somewheres, gone into that road where I could not see them, but at the gate I think I could have seen anyone.

Q. You remember the Tate-Newton affair?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Newton and Lipscomb make any report to you; and if so, when and what was it?—A. I sent for the men, sir, after that report had been rendered to me by Captain Macklin that this difficulty had occurred between Newton and Tate and examined them both and had their testimony put in the form of an affidavit, which I think is before the committee. I examined first Newton and then Lipscomb. That was the 9th or the 10th, I think. I have forgotten that date. I think I made the report to the collector of customs on the 10th, and I presume that must have been the 9th—the 8th or the 9th, I have forgotten now—but I think the copy of my letter to the collector is in evidence here.

Q. And that would show all that?—A. Yes, sir; I know it is here.

Q. The point is, did they show any resentment or any ill disposition?—A. Not at all, sir. Newton told me his story in a very calm, straightforward way, and he showed nothing of that sort whatever. He appeared to me to be rather hurt that a thing of that kind could happen. I questioned him very closely about it. I asked him if he could have even brushed against these ladies in any way, and I told him at the time that I was investigating it, and if I found that he had been rude to these ladies I should punish him to the very limit, and if, on the other hand, I found that he was not rude I should do what I could to have the matter rectified.

Q. He seemed satisfied with that, so far as you were concerned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you accompanied the battalion when it went from Fort Niobrara down to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were on the train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About where in the train did you ride?—A. Our coach was the last coach on the train, sir.

Q. Do you remember a place called Sinton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether you were up or not at that time when you passed there?—A. I was not up when we arrived at Sinton.

Q. What time was it?—A. It was very early in the morning, some time, sir. When I woke up it was daylight; I got up and dressed and went out on the platform before the train pulled out of Sinton.

Q. So that you were up and out on the platform at Sinton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before the train left there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the conductor who had charge of the train?—A. I do not recall his name at all, sir; I do not know whether I ever heard his name.

Q. Did you see the conductor?—A. Yes, sir; I saw the conductor.

Q. Did he make any complaint to you of any kind of improper conduct on the part of the men in deportment or in language or in any other way?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. You heard of none?—A. No complaint whatever was made to me.

Q. What is it?—A. No complaint was made to me, nor did I hear of any.

Q. It was testified by General Garlington, who has appeared before the committee since you testified, that you told him that Captain Macklin had told you about covering up some shells in the alley with his foot. I wish you would tell just what that was?—A. A shell.

Q. What?—A. A shell; he told me. The general must have misunderstood me, sir. I told him that Captain Macklin told me that right at the mouth of the alley—may I show the committee here just what I mean, on the map?

Q. Yes; certainly.—A. I don't think that this barracks is located exactly right [indicating B barracks]. I think that this end should come up here [indicating].

Senator FORAKER. These other witnesses have told us the same thing.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. B barracks should go higher up?—A. Yes, sir; B barracks, because there is a latrine right in the center of that barracks, and it is right on a line with that alley.

Q. The side of the alley next to the river, on the line of that [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir; that is, the prolongation right in here would bring it right here [indicating], and you can see directly in that alley from that.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. From the center of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; it may be a little to one side of the center, but I think it is in the center [indicating]. That morning when I sent Captain Macklin out to see if he could find some shells, he picked up some along here [indicating].

Q. When you say "he picked up some along here," indicate in words where that would be.—A. Running from the garrison road, from Elizabeth street up to the alley. There is a little oil house right in here [indicating on map], and I think it was beyond that oil house. He told me when he came back, and he had these shells and clips in his hand, that he had found a shell right opposite the mouth of the alley.

Q. A shell?—A. A shell, and that he did not pick it up because he saw people down the alley and looking up that way, evidently.

picking up something themselves, and he did not pick it up, but put his foot on it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is what you told General Garlington?—A. Yes, sir; I must have told General Garlington that.

Q. One shell and not a number of shells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. We only want to get what the facts are. You did not see Captain Macklin pick up any shells?—A. No, sir; I walked around this way [indicating], and when I came back Captain Macklin came in, as I told you, with his arms folded that way [indicating] and we walked out in this path across here a little way—the path goes straight across here—and he opened his hands and in his right hand he had the clips and in his left hand he had several shells.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I understood you to say on your former examination that there was evidence on these shells of recent firing?—A. Yes, sir; they looked to me like they had been recently fired.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. But you did not examine them?—A. Not closely. I picked up two of them in my hand and saw that they were Frankford Arsenal shells.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I did not hear that.—A. I picked up two of them.

Q. And what did you find?—A. They were Frankford Arsenal shells.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Why did Captain Macklin wish to conceal that shell?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Did you not ask him?—A. He said he saw several men picking up something in the alleyway, and he did not want them to see what he was doing. Captain Macklin is here and you can ask him about that.

Q. I wanted merely to know what he told you.—A. That is what he told me.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you instruct him to preserve, to keep, those shells?—A. No, sir; I did not give him any instructions about them. He told me some time afterwards that he had put them in a drawer of his company desk—that was some time afterwards, when we were hunting for them—and that desk had been shipped from Fort Brown to Fort Sam Houston.

Q. Did you look for them before the desk was shipped?—A. No, sir; that was after we left Brownsville.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, as to the character of the night, whether it was dark or otherwise—

Senator WARNER. I will submit, Senator, that Major Penrose has testified as to the character of that night, right along.

Senator FORAKER. I think if you will let me explain what I have in mind, you will see that it is all right.

Senator WARNER. I make the suggestion only in the interest of saving time.

The CHAIRMAN. Several witnesses have testified as to the character of the night.

Senator FORAKER. They testified only in a general way. When Major Penrose testified first he had not any of these statements which I want now to call his attention to.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Could you recall any incident, which you could relate to us, which would indicate how dark it was?—A. Yes, sir; I could not tell one of my own officers over 10 feet away.

Q. You could not tell one of your own officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. That you remember very distinctly?—A. Very distinctly.

Q. It was as dark as that?—A. It was as dark as that. I remember in walking up and down the line where the men were all posted, and I recall it when Hairston came to my house.

Q. Hairston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was the sentinel?—A. Yes, sir; No. 3 around the line of officers' quarters. He came around to my quarters, and I almost ran into him when I came out of the door, and I could not distinguish who the man was at all, and I did not know until the next morning at 9 o'clock, when I inquired.

Q. You did not know who he was?—A. I say I ran into him, brushed against him, as I came out of the house. Of course I did not look particularly to see who it was. And in walking up and down the line I had to go very close to the officers to tell whether they were white men or colored men.

Q. Now, I call your attention to the corner of Fourteenth and Washington streets. I am pointing to it [indicating on map]. State whether or not one standing at that corner and looking down Fourteenth street could see men crossing Fourteenth street on the Cowen alley, and see them distinctly enough to count them and tell what kind of clothing they were wearing, and whether they were white men or colored men, without any artificial light and aid. Could one do that?—A. I do not think it is possible, sir.

Q. Yes.—A. I do not think it is possible.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether or not, standing in the window in the second story of the Leahy House, and looking out across Fourteenth street and across the alley to the place to which I now point, namely, the side of the alley opposite the Cowen house, one could see that night distinctly enough without any artificial light to recognize men and determine whether they were white or colored and how they were dressed?—A. I do not think so, sir.

Senator PETTUS. Say, by the flash of the guns.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Well, by the flash of the guns?—A. No, sir; you could not by the flash of the guns.

Q. Now, tell us whether or not the flash of the guns would aid in that?—A. I do not think at all. It is so instantaneous, so slight, that I do not think you can distinguish anything by the flash of the gun.

Q. Could one, looking out of the upper story of the telegraph building, at the corner of Elizabeth street and Garrison road, for instance, see people clambering over the wall up about the mouth of the Cowen alley?—A. No, indeed, sir. No, sir; they could not.

Q. There are no lights in there in that locality at all, are there?—A. No, sir; there was a light at the gate.

Q. What kind of a light was that?—A. An oil lamp.

Q. An oil lamp?—A. Yes, sir. I couldn't tell you how many candlepower; I don't know.

Q. At the gate. That is 130 feet from the mouth of the Cowen alley, is it not?—A. About that, I believe, sir. But I was going to say this, Senator: There is an oil house I intended to tell about in here [indicating on map].

Q. Yes; where is that?—A. About between the figure "4" and the letter "F" [indicating on map].

Q. Right in there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With reference to B barracks?—A. Yes, sir; it is shown in one of the pictures attached to Mr. Purdy's report. Now, it had been raining and was quite muddy.

Q. It had been raining?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was quite muddy?—A. Yes, sir; and from the light here I could see there was a mud puddle about there [indicating on map].

Q. How far is that point from the gate?—A. I presume that is 40 feet, maybe 30 or 40 feet. Now, I am guessing, gentlemen, I do not know absolutely.

Q. There was a mud puddle there?—A. There was a mud puddle there I could see. When I went down the line I went around this mud puddle, and went right in behind it to inspect these men along the fence, and I got in this mud puddle right around east of this oil house, that I didn't see at all. I got in water that came over the lacings of my shoes.

Q. You got in it before you knew it was there?—A. Yes, sir; before I knew it was there.

Q. And you were looking where you were going?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether or not you could see the men posted as sentinels there?—A. I could not until I got out beyond the oil house. I could not until I got close to them.

Senator TALIAFERRO. Does the witness understand that a number of witnesses have testified that they did see these men under the conditions which you are describing?

Senator FORAKER. I have not recited that to the witness, but I have no objection to doing it if it is desired, at the request of Senator Taliaferro.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. At the suggestion of Senator Taliaferro, I will say to you that a number of witnesses have testified—Mr. and Mrs. Rendall have testified—that they saw people assembling up near or opposite the mouth of the alley; saw them going over the wall at about that point—I can not give the exact language from recollection—and Lieutenant Dominguez testified that he looked down from the corner of Washington and Fourteenth streets, along Fourteenth street, and saw two squads of soldiers of four men each cross Fourteenth street, in the alley, and recognized their uniforms, and that they were colored soldiers. Now, knowing that that has been testified to—

Senator SCOTT. Mrs. Leahy testified that she saw 16.

Senator FORAKER. I am going to speak of that.

Q. (Continuing.) Knowing that these witnesses have testified to these things, does that change your belief?—A. No, sir; it does not.

Q. Mrs. Leahy has testified, as nearly as I can recall her testimony, that she looked out of her second story window and saw 16 men come up the alley and cross Fourteenth street after doing a lot of firing in that neighborhood, and she describes them with great accuracy, as to their clothing, and so forth. Would the fact that she so testified change the opinion that you have given, that they could not see them?—A. No, sir; I think they are mistaken.

Q. Mr. McDonald testified that he stood at the corner of the alley, the mouth of the alley, and looked down Fifteenth street and saw men about the gate, about the telegraph office, I think, opposite the gate, and that they divided there and some went up Elizabeth street, but some came up to the alley and turned down the alley, and after they turned down the alley he came to the corner and looked down and saw them firing into the Cowen house, and he said that he could recognize them and distinguish that they were soldiers? Do you think that he could do that?—A. I do not, Senator.

Q. Mrs. Leahy testified not only that she saw 16 men, but that she saw two of the men so distinctly that she could describe them accurately, one as a very dark negro and the other as a mulatto with spots all over his face.—A. At what distance, sir?

Q. He was in the alley, somewhere about the alley and Fourteenth street, somewhere about that corner, and she was upstairs in her house.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. She testified, when I asked the question, 35 feet.

Senator FORAKER. She said 35 feet, but it was evidently 60 feet [indicating on map].

Senator WARNER. I submit that we should go by the evidence.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. She said that she should judge it was about 35 feet. Do you think she could—A. I do not, gentlemen. My recollection of that night is very, very distinct.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Would it not depend on the lights in the houses whether she could or not—from the windows?—A. Yes, sir; she might if there were any lights.

Q. You do not know anything about the lights?—A. No, sir; I do not know.

Q. You were not up there to see the lights?—A. No, sir; and I do not know anything about the lights at all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. They have testified that there was only one light in the Cowen house after the firing commenced, and that one of the first shots, after the first bunch of shots, extinguished that light, and after that there was no light anywhere in that vicinity.

Senator WARNER. Senator Foraker, you are in error. There was more than one light.

Senator FORAKER. Where?

Senator WARNER. In the Cowen house.

Senator FORAKER. There was one in the front part of the Cowen house and one in the middle of it—and that was extinguished also by the concussion—which, if it gave any light, would throw light out towards Fourteenth street.

Senator WARNER. I suppose the Major is now testifying as an expert.

Senator FORAKER. No; he is testifying to a fact.

Senator WARNER. I do not see how he can possibly testify to a fact if he is not testifying as an expert.

Senator FORAKER. He is giving us the benefit of his opinion as to what could be seen, based on the character of the night at that time. Now, I put that in this way: I want to recall that there were two lights burning when the shooting commenced in the Cowen house. Mrs. Cowen testified that both were extinguished, one by a mere concussion, I think she said, and the other by the lamp being broken.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, assuming that there was no light there at the time of this firing, it is your opinion, as I understand it, that it would be impossible for her to see men and recognize them at that distance?—
A. That would be my opinion.

Q. Was there anybody in your battalion that had so many spots on his face that you could recognize him, or ever did recognize him, even in broad daylight?—A. I do not know that I understand you, sir.

Q. Was there anybody in your battalion who had so many spots on his face that you could recognize him or his spots even in broad daylight? Do you recollect anybody?—A. It seems to me there were two. There were a few men—three or four men—that were freckled, in the battalion.

Q. Freckled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, how freckled?—A. They were rather light mulattoes, and were freckled.

Q. Were they freckled and spotted to such an extent that you could distinguish them in the nighttime—such a night as that?—A. No, sir; I could not do that.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Not knowing the condition of these streets up there, and the extent of the lights there, would you pretend to say that these people who have sworn that they saw these people were mistaken?—A. If there were lights, that alters the case entirely. I am supposing that there were no lights. I am testifying as to the night itself and what I saw. I do not know what they saw in the streets.

Q. You are taking the conditions?—A. The condition of the light that night.

Q. Of the lights in that part of town?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it, except that one light there [indicating on map].

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. As an evidence of the darkness of the night, you cited the fact that on coming out of the house you did not recognize a soldier?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a light in your house?—A. There was a light upstairs, not downstairs. There was only a lantern.

Q. Had you dressed by a light?—A. The slight light which came from this lantern, which was in the other room. It just shone in through the door.

Q. Had you dressed by the light?—A. Yes; that light I am telling you of.

Q. It was light enough for you to dress by?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go out immediately afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would that make any difference, coming out of a light, into a dark night?—A. No, sir; the light was not bright enough for that.

Q. Would not any light tend to make it darker if you immediately came out of it into the night?—A. Well, it was quite as dark after I had been out some time as it was when I first came out, sir. I do not think that affected my eyes at all, sir; the slight light I had there.

Q. There were lights at the gate?—A. Yes, sir; there was a light at the gate.

Q. Then a man standing at the mouth of the alley and looking down at the gate where the soldiers were assembled—you say he could not recognize them?—A. I say that I do not believe that he could. I don't know.

Q. You are not prepared to say that those witnesses who have sworn that they saw these people testified falsely?—A. No, sir; I would not say that, but I do not see how it was possible for them to see the distances they claim.

Q. You are quite satisfied that you could not see?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not so certain as to what other people might have done?—A. No, sir; I can not tell what other people could do, but the night was so dark that I do not see how anyone could see that distance at all.

Q. I notice you wear glasses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you use them at night?—A. Always, sir. I always keep them right alongside of my bed, either on a table or a chair, and I put them on as soon as I get up. The glasses correct the vision, so oculists tell me, it is normal with glasses.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is, with glasses your vision is normal?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Where was the light at the gate?—A. Right on one of the posts, the post on the east side of the gate. There is a small gate. There is a large gate to the wagon road, and there is a small gate to the footpath, and it was on the post, or I think there was an iron rod that went over the gate, and it was suspended from that. I think that shows in one of the pictures.

Q. There was only one lamp there?—A. Only one lamp.

Q. And that was over the pedestrian gate?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator BULKELEY. Not three lights.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Supposing a man were sitting in the window here in the Cowen house, and there was a light in that window, and right under that window some soldiers passed, going on down, do you suppose he could see them as he was sitting in the window, right at the window, within 6 feet?—A. I think he might.

Q. That could have been possible?—A. That could have been possible.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I show you the picture in the Purdy report.—A. No. 5.

Q. Does that correctly represent the lamp over the little gate?—A. Yes, sir; I think that lamp is right there. There is no lamp beyond that at all.

Q. There were no lamps that night over the big gatepost?—A. No, sir; there was no light over the big post. I don't think they are fixed for lights at all.

Q. It has been suggested here by a question, I don't know whether you know or not, that the fort has been dismantled since, that it had been dismantled when these pictures were taken, and perhaps the lamps that had been over the post at the big gate had been removed. Have you a recollection whether there were any lamps over the post?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. Just the one lamp?—A. I think there was just that one lamp lighted.

Q. I did not quite finish my examination. Mrs. Leahy testified that she was in the upper story of her boarding house, and that she looked out—

Senator WARNER. In the second story.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. In the second story, and looked out across Fourteenth street and up towards B barracks, looking between the Cowen house and the annex to her house, as shown in picture No. 13, of the Purdy testimony—A. Let me see that.

Q. And that she saw men walking back and forth on the upper gallery of B barracks and saw flashes of guns from there. State whether or not that was, in your opinion, possible.—A. I do not think so, sir.

Q. I call your attention to the fact that there seems to be a tree there.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to that picture, which it says below is taken from that very window where she stood, that tree rises to the height of the roof of the barracks, does it not?—A. Yes, sir; a portion of it rises to the height of the barracks.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. May I ask a question there? Major Penrose, were you ever in the rooms of the Leahy Hotel?—A. No, sir; I was never inside the Leahy Hotel.

Senator WARNER. I think it will appear from the testimony that that tree did not obstruct the view at all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. She said that she either looked over it or looked through the tree, through the leaves of it.

Senator WARNER. I think that Mr. Leckie himself has testified that the tree did not obstruct the view.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I have not looked through his testimony, but my recollection is that the tree did obstruct the view. I am not sure that I am right about it. Now, Major, there was a good deal of other testimony given by different witnesses as to what they saw at different distances and under different circumstances, but I pass all that by. What you have testified to would apply to any similar testimony, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; I think it would.

Q. And your experience, was that the night was so dark you could not distinguish your own officers 10 feet away from you?—A. They were within 10 feet before I could distinguish that they were my officers—white men.

Q. Now, something was said by Captain Kelly and some others about your troops being not well disciplined. Can you tell us what the record of your battalion is in that respect, down to the 13th of August?—A. I think the records will show, sir, that it was an excellently disciplined battalion.

Q. And well drilled?—A. Well drilled. I consider it one of the best that I have ever seen.

Q. Were the men of a character hard to get along with, or otherwise?—A. No, sir; they were very easy to discipline.

Q. As a rule deported themselves well?—A. As a rule, they behaved themselves very well. That can be borne out by the records of the post, the summary court record, the records of courts-martial, and also, I think, by any officers who have seen them, either before this occurrence or afterwards.

Q. Now, afterwards, since August 13, and particularly since they have been discharged, what has been their records, in so far as you know, as to deporting themselves properly?—A. So far as I know their record has been excellent. I know at the time of their discharge, when we were discharging them at Fort Reno, I was in constant communication with the chief of police of El Reno, the town 5 miles distant, and he told me that he did not see a drunken man, nor did he have any disorder among those men of any kind. He told me that he would not know that the men were being discharged at all.

Q. Did you have any special experience in the inspection of the Springfield rifle after you were supplied with that?—A. No, sir. About the only time that I have seen them to examine them would be at muster, at the end of the month.

Q. Your line officers did that?—A. Yes, sir. They are the ones who know a good deal more about it than I do.

Q. I believe that is all I want to ask you, Major Penrose, unless there is something you want to state?—A. I think there is nothing more, sir, that I wish to state.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Major, I should like to ask you a few questions about that firing; in the early stage of it. It seems to be testified to by a number of persons that there was firing near B barracks on that occasion; right at B barracks. Now, how can you account for it being possible that nobody at B barracks knew who it was?—A. I don't know, Senator; I don't know, sir. I wish I did. I wish I could account for it.

Q. Well, Major, will you please, in your own way, explain fully to the committee the change which had taken place in your opinion as to who did that shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also account, if you can, if the men did not do it, who did?—A. Well, I don't know that I can account for that part of it. I can tell you the reason of my change, sir. At the time I was at Fort Brown, when this shooting occurred, up to the time we left there, up to the time those men were discharged, up to the time of my trial, and during a portion of my trial I was of the opinion that these men had done that shooting. I so reported it on several occasions, which, I think, is all of record before this committee now. It was during my trial that my opinion commenced to change, and it was principally on the testimony of the witnesses that came from Brownsville as to what they were able to see that night. I did not think, and I do not think, that it is possible for them to have seen what they claim to have done on that night. I know the conditions that night, perfectly, myself. I know what I could see, and I can not see how it was possible for anyone to see at 125 feet, to be able to distinguish whether men were white or black, whether they were in civilian garb or in the uniform of a soldier. Then it was also brought out before my court the fact that Captain Macklin found a number of these shells and five clips in a very small space; I think he said about 18 inches in diameter.

Senator FORAKER. About 10 inches.

A. Well, that is my recollection. I may be a little wrong, but I will say 18 inches—that he found those clips and shells together. I know it is impossible to eject shells from a gun and not have them fly off at various angles, and to a much greater distance than that. I feel satisfied in my own mind that the only way those shells could have gotten there in that particular position was by them being put there.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Were those all the shells that were found?—A. All that Captain Macklin found.

Q. There were other shells?—A. I am not sure that they were all that Captain Macklin found, but he found them in that small space.

Q. Were all the shells that were found within a space of 10 inches—were they all found in a little bunch?—A. That Captain Macklin found?

Q. That anybody found.—A. I don't know. It was only reported to me that others were found up that alley; that was by the mayor.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Was this shell that he attempted to conceal found within this area?—A. No, sir; that was beyond that; that was right at the mouth of the alley.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. But, Major, you made up your mind that your soldiers had done the shooting without hearing any testimony of the eyewitnesses as to the soldiers being seen?—A. Yes, sir. Mayor Combe, Captain Kelly, and all of the gentlemen of that committee had told me that different people at Brownsville had reported seeing those men.

Q. But didn't you make up your mind that your men had done it when you saw that those were army shells, that they were freshly fired, and you found no bullets through the quarters? Taking that into consideration, didn't you make up your mind then that your soldiers had done it?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. When those gentlemen told you that those men had been seen on the streets did you not at that time remember the darkness of the night as distinct'y as you do to-day?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. Why did you believe it then and discredit it to-day?—A. Because I thought there might have been some lights that they might have seen them by which I did not know of at that time.

Q. Do you not still concede that there may have been?—A. There may have been in the Cowen house; that is the only thing I know about any lights being seen.

Senator HEMENWAY. I was going to suggest that Senator Pettus has put a question, and that the witness should be allowed to answer it.

Senator OVERMAN. I thought he was through.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Will you please finish your answer to my question?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to know fully what produced this change in your mind, in your opinion, as to who did that shooting?—A. I am trying to give it to you, Senator. There was another question or two asked of me, if you will remember.

Q. I want you to explain it fully in your own way.—A. Yes, sir. Well, as I say, the darkness of this night and the finding of those shells—my opinion commenced to change at that time. Then there was the testimony that was produced before this committee as to the experiment that was made at the Frankford Arsenal, where they found that 11 shells were fired from one gun.

Senator FORAKER. A Springfield?

A. One Springfield rifle that had been locked up in the arms chest at Fort Niobrara and was not opened until the morning of the 14th of August. They claim that 11—I think it is 11—of those shells, or 11 shells, fired from that gun, were found in the streets of Brownsville. Those shells were brought down from Fort Niobrara to Brownsville. They were open, on the back porch of B Company. They were open there several days, I don't remember how long. I can see no way in the world that those shells could have been fired in the streets of Brownsville. There is another thing: I think they were taken out there and put there. That is the reason that I have changed my opinion, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You think those shells were put all over the town in order to give the idea that the soldiers did the shooting?—A. I think certainly those 11 shells were, sir.

Q. Well, but it is in testimony and, I think, uncontradicted, that shells were picked up at a great many points?—A. Yes, sir; so I understand.

Q. Your idea is that they must have been put there, at all those points?—A. That is my idea of it, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Do you think those freshly fired shells that were found there at the mouth of the alley were brought down from Niobrara?—A. I think so now.

Q. And put there?—A. I believe they were, sir.

Q. Yet you say they were freshly fired?—A. They had the appearance to me. They had only been fired a month before.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Who do you think brought them from Niobrara?—A. B Company brought them down.

Q. Who do you think distributed them in the streets?—A. I don't know, sir, unless some of the people of Brownsville.

Q. How did they get out of the custody of B Company?—A. They were open on the back porch of B Company, and were left there for several days, Senator—this box was. I think the testimony so shows here.

Q. They were at least more accessible to the members of B Company than they were to the public at large?—A. Yes, sir; that would be very possible that they were.

Senator SCOTT. I should like to hear the answer to Senator Pettus's question, if I can get it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you have anything further to say in answer to the question of the Senator from Alabama, you will, of course, proceed with it and make full answer.—A. I should state in connection with that that there was the behavior of the men before this shooting occurred. They had been an excellent lot of men. We had never had any trouble with them; they were well disciplined, well drilled, easy to handle. From the time that this shooting occurred none of them was permitted to leave Fort Brown at all. We took them up to Fort Reno, Okla., and there they were confined absolutely to the limits of the post—the post proper. They were not permitted to leave it under any circumstances. I gave them extra drills, extra guard, and had them working at fatigue whenever they were not drilling or on guard, the whole day long. Those men took all that without a murmur or a complaint of any kind. There were five of the men who disobeyed that order and went to town. They were each tried, dishonorably discharged, and sentenced to eighteen months' confinement at the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and that was reduced by the reviewing authority to six months. Those five exceptions were the only ones that disobeyed any of the orders that were issued at all. Finally the order came for their discharge. They were discharged at that post, a half a company at a time. They were paid off. They had anywhere from fifty or sixty dollars to, some of them, twelve or thirteen hundred dollars. They went to this little town, which was full of temptations, and, as I stated before, there was not a single man found drunk, nor was there a disturbance of any kind or character reported of these men, and I talked with the chief of police over the telephone frequently. Now, taking into consideration the conduct of these men both before and afterwards, and what I have before stated, leads me to believe that the men did not do that shooting.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Is that your full answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Major, can you explain in any way why so many persons have testified that there was firing near B barracks, and a considerable number of shots—five, or six, or seven, or eight, or maybe more—how does it happen that so many witnesses, almost every witness who has testified has stated that there was firing at B barracks—how could that happen without all those witnesses just willfully testifying falsely?—A. I don't know, Senator. I don't pretend to be able to answer that. I am only giving you my impressions, sir. You asked me for that, for my reasons for changing.

Q. Does not your theory involve a contradiction of all these people, of all the witnesses who have testified that there was firing at B barracks or near there?—A. By the men?

Q. Well, by somebody.—A. Yes, sir; by somebody—yes, sir; it does.

Q. If there had been firing there, would not those men necessarily—somebody in those barracks—have known who it was?—A. I think so. I think they would. We have never been able to find out from any of the men. I have questioned every noncommissioned officer several times and a great many of the privates myself.

Q. Major, don't you know that when negroes or any other men who have been subjected to slavery have been accused of crime they are apt to testify together? Don't you know that as a fact in the history of the world?—A. Yes, sir; I think I do, sir. I have stated, too, that I think the negro is much more secretive than the white man, in my experience with negro troops.

Q. Major, can you account for that firing in the neighborhood of B barracks, if there was any, by any theory that you have in your mind?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Does not your present position involve the proposition that there was not any firing near B barracks?—A. I do not understand your question.

Q. Does not your present opinion and testimony involve the proposition that there was no firing that night at or near B barracks?—A. No, sir; I do not think so, because I heard firing in the rear of B barracks. I heard it myself. It was in that general direction. I thought it was in the rear of B. or maybe C.

Q. Have you any theory as to how that could have been done without the soldiers knowing who did it?—A. No, sir; I have not.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. You think some of them must have known who did it?—A. I have thought—

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. You have thought what?—A. I say I have thought a great deal over the matter. I have questioned all those men, I have tried as hard, I think, as any man in the world could, to come at some conclusion, and I have not. The more I think of this thing the more I am muddled over it—I don't know.

Q. Major, are you not perfectly satisfied now that one man was killed and that a town officer was crippled in that shooting?—A. It was reported to me that a man was killed, Frank Natus. It was reported at that time that the lieutenant of police was wounded in the arm, and I have since seen him, and he has lost his right arm.

Q. Have you any doubt of that now?—A. About his losing his arm; no, sir.

Q. About his being shot on that night?—A. No, sir; there is no doubt in my mind about that.

Q. And at the place where it is said he was shot?—A. No, sir; there is no doubt in my mind.

Q. Well, have you any doubt about the man being killed?—A. No, sir; there is no doubt, I don't think so. I have every reason to believe that he was.

Q. "Every reason to believe." Is it not a matter of fixed certainty in your mind?—A. Yes, sir; I can say that it is a matter of fixed certainty.

Q. That the man was killed and that another one was badly crippled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you any theory on which you can try to explain to this committee how that happened, and who did it?—A. No, sir; I have not. Since I do not think it was the men, I haven't any theory about it. I don't know surely who did it.

Q. If there had been a dozen shots, or say five or half a dozen shots fired at or about B barracks that night, do you think it is possible that the soldiers would not have known it?—A. No, sir; I think the soldiers would have known it, if they had been fired.

Q. Does not the testimony of the soldiers of your command, if it is true, prove that there was no firing at or near B barracks that night?—A. Why, no, Senator; I have understood all along that that firing was in the alley. That has always been my belief.

Q. Sir?—A. In the alley, right at the mouth of the alley in the rear of B barracks; that is where I think it was, where I located it myself, when I first heard it. It was either that or possibly the western end of C.

Q. Could there have been any firing at or near B barracks without some of your soldiers knowing who did it?—A. No, sir; I do not think so. I think at the barracks they would have known it.

Q. Does not your present theory prove that there was no firing there?—A. At the barracks; yes, sir.

Q. At or near, or in the street there?—A. I say in the mouth of the alley. Do you call that near?

Q. At or near the barracks?—A. I think the firing was at the mouth of the alley.

Q. Major, does not that prove too much?—A. Sir?

Q. Does not that theory that there was no firing there prove too much—prove more than you could believe?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you got it in your mind now, Major—you testified as to your belief—that there was no firing at or near B barracks?—A. I do not think there was any firing at B barracks. I think there was firing in that alley.

Q. Firing in that alley, right at it?—A. Right across the wall.

Q. In that road?—A. In the garrison road.

Q. The garrison road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think there was?—A. That is the way it sounded to me that night.

Q. Oh, well, I am speaking about your present belief.—A. Yes, sir; my present belief is that there was shooting there.

Q. Could that have been done without the soldiers, some of them, knowing about it?—A. I think it might have been done in that alley, yes, sir; without their knowing it.

Q. Four or five or six shots, and coming from different parts of the alley?—A. I did not know that they had come from different parts of the alley.

Q. Well, supposing they did come from the junction there of the alley with the garrison road, could that have happened without some of the soldiers—there are always some men awake if your discipline is followed up—there is always somebody on guard?—A. There is. There was a man on guard that night. Yes, sir; I think it could have happened, and he not know it.

Q. It could have happened without the men knowing it?—A. I think so; yes, sir. I think it could have been so.

Q. What could have become of the men?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You can not account for how they came there—somebody else having come there and fired and left without anybody seeing them?—A. That might have been done.

Q. You think that could have been done?—A. Yes, sir; I think that could have been done.

Q. Major, upon your theory that none of your men knew anything about it, does not that involve too much?—A. Well, that might seem to you so, sir; and it may seem so to some of the rest of the gentlemen of the committee, but it does not to me.

Q. It does not to you. Major, according to your experience—I am speaking now with the utmost deference and asking you from your personal experience—is not the commanding officer always, if he is an upright, honest, honorable man, always inclined to protect his soldiers against all charges?—A. Well, I can not say against all charges. I think he would protect them just as far as it lay in his power. I would not protect any man if I knew that he was guilty. I never have.

Q. If you knew he were guilty?—A. Yes, sir. I expect that possibly if there were a doubt I would be inclined to give him the benefit of it. I think, maybe, I would.

Q. Major, is it not your experience that the officers in command of a company or a regiment or a battalion, or any other officer—I am speaking of honorable, upright officers—are they not always strongly disposed to believe that which favors the men as against that which implicates them?—A. No; I do not think so, Senator. I think they are willing to look at it fairly.

Q. Do you think that a man in your position could be an absolutely impartial judge?—A. I think I could.

Q. You think so?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. Have you never thought otherwise about other upright officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. You think any upright officer is bound to be an impartial judge in reference to his men?—A. I think he is, just as far as it is possible for him to do so.

Q. As far as it is possible for an upright officer—should he not feel an interest in his men?—A. Why, certainly; I said a few moments ago that they are inclined toward the men.

Q. Would not a man of that sort naturally incline to think that it was his duty to protect his men?—A. Why, of course, he would protect his men.

Q. Sir?—A. Of course he would protect his men; there is no question about that; but I think any honorable, upright man, such as you speak of, would be an impartial judge in a matter of that kind, and if he found his men were wrong, he would be just as quick and willing to punish them as anyone else.

Q. Do you think he could be an impartial judge?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. And you think any honorable, upright man would be an impartial judge?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I think.

Q. Major, if there were a dozen or half a dozen shots right close to B barracks that night, if there was such a thing, on what theory could you explain it?—A. Only that some men came down there and fired them.

Q. Came down from where?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, you had your pickets out that night, didn't you?—A. I had a sentinel out.

Q. Well, sentinels?—A. Yes, sir; there was one sentinel there.

Q. Sentinels were scattered about the town?—A. About the post, sir.

Q. About the post?—A. About Fort Brown.

Q. How far out? Mention the outposts.—A. Are you speaking of the night of the 13th-14th?

Q. Yes; I am speaking of the night of the shooting.—A. Yes, sir; I can show you just where they were.

Q. Point out the spots.

Senator FORAKER. Before the firing.

(The witness here stepped to the map.)

The CHAIRMAN. Try to describe it in such a way that the reporter can take it down, so that it will be intelligible in print.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Call them out, so that the reporter can take them down.—

A. Post No. 1, as it was called, was over at the guardhouse. The guardhouse is right here.

Q. Name it, so that the reporter can take it.—A. Post No. 1 was at the guardhouse; No. 2 was around C, B, and D Company barracks. He marched around those barracks, keeping the barracks on his left. No. 3 was around the line of officers' quarters, keeping those on his left. He marched around in this way. No. 4 was at the quartermaster's stables, coming up as far as the commissary, and they have got this building marked "granary," but that is wrong. He came up to that granary marked there. He marched around in through there. That was No. 4. Those were the posts that were on that night.

Q. Major, you had three in the garrison road, hadn't you? You have mentioned that there were three in the garrison road.—A. No, sir; there were none in the garrison road. There was no one here, Senator, at all.

Q. Where was his station?—A. The one man marched right around these quarters.

Q. And that was all that there was on that side?—A. That was all that was there; yes, sir.

Q. One man on the whole of the garrison road, in front of the barracks?—A. In front and rear, Senator. He walked completely around. He walked in this interval between the vacant barracks and C, and came down here to this end of D, around D, and back again.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. He came down here, in between the wall and the rear of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; between the wall and the rear of the barracks.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Move that pointer slowly around there, so as to mark it out. (The witness did as requested.)

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Was there no man on guard in the barracks?—A. No, sir. The non-commissioned officer in charge of the barracks is detailed from day to day. He has to remain in the barracks during the twenty-four hours, but he is not awake at night.

Q. Then you had but one man near the barracks at all on guard that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, Major, does not your theory involve the question that there were not any soldiers down as low as Fourteenth street that night, that there was no soldier who fired a shot below Fourteenth street or on Fourteenth street?—A. I don't know, sir. I have never stated that was the theory.

Q. Sir?—A. I have never stated that there was no one on Fourteenth street. I have stated that I did not believe those soldiers did it.

Q. I understand that; but my question is, Does not your theory that your soldiers did not do it involve the proposition that there was not any of them that fired a shot on that road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That not one of them fired a shot west of the north and south line?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your theory is that no soldier fired a shot that night prior to this row or in it?—A. Yes, sir; No. 3 or No. 2 sentinel, who gave the alarm, he fired three shots.

Q. Yes; I remember his testimony. He said he fired three shots.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, is that the way to give an alarm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there is something serious going on, the soldier is authorized to fire his gun?—A. Yes, sir; he fires his piece and calls for the guard, adding the number of his post.

Q. Was there no guard down in the city that night?—A. No, sir. Do you mean soldiers?

Q. Oh, yes; I am speaking of the soldiers.—A. Oh, no; I had no right to put any men in town.

Q. Have you any theory as to who did this shooting?—A. No; I can not say that I have any theory. I do not know.

Q. Well, you do not know. I did not suppose you knew. Nobody thought of your knowing, but I am asking you, have you a theory?—

A. I don't know, I am sure, sir. The theory—well, I have not any theory. I simply do not know, Senator. I have no theory. I do not think the men did it, and I think—

Q. Have you any opinion at all?—A. Yes, sir; I have an opinion about it.

Q. What is it?—A. I think some people of the town did that shooting.

Q. The people of the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the shooting?—A. I think so.

Q. What do you suppose was the motive for the people of the town in doing the shooting?—A. I don't know.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Have you any opinion about it?—A. No, sir; I have no opinion about it at all.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Have you any evidence?—A. No, sir; not a bit, Senator; not a bit.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Well, do you doubt that these houses were shot up, as it has been testified?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you think the people of the town did all that shooting?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. When did you come to that conclusion?—A. At the end of my trial, and after reading the testimony that had been produced before this committee.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Major, do I understand you that you wish this committee to understand from your testimony that you are convinced to a moral certainty, without any doubt in your mind—A. Oh, no.

Q. That those soldiers did not do that shooting?—A. Yes, sir; I do not think the soldiers did the shooting.

Q. Have you any doubts about it?—A. No, sir; there is not a doubt, I do not think, in my mind about it at all.

Q. You do not think—are you convinced to a moral certainty, so that you have no doubt about it?—A. I could be convinced, of course, if it is shown—

Q. Are you now convinced to such an extent that in your mind it is a moral certainty, that you have no doubt whatever, that your soldiers did not do it? Could you say that now?—A. That is putting it in the strongest way in the world.

Q. Well, that is it.—A. I do not think that my men did that shooting, Senator.

Q. But you have not answered my question. I want you to answer that question.—A. Yes, sir; I will say that I do not think they did it.

Q. I do not ask you what you think about it. Are you convinced in your own mind from the evidence, from all the circumstances?—A. Yes, sir; I am convinced.

Q. To a moral certainty, to the extent that you have not a single scintilla of doubt, that your soldiers did not do that shooting?—

A. I think I can answer that in the negative; yes, sir; that is what I think.

Q. I do not ask you what you think.—A. Yes, sir; that is what I think.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Major, will you explain to the committee how those particular houses happened to be shot as they were on any theory? I do not mean on the facts that you know, but what is your theory about it? What is your belief from what you know as to who did it?—A. Well, I don't know, Senator, how they came to be shot up.

Q. You could not—A. I have told you that I did not believe my men did it; further than that I do not know, sir.

Q. But your belief is, without knowing, that the citizens of Brownsville did the shooting?—A. I think so.

Q. Have you a belief as to what part of the citizens did it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now give us your reason for believing that the citizens of the town did it?—A. There was shooting down there; there were houses shot into; there was a man killed; there was a man wounded. I do not think that my men did it; therefore I must think that the people of Brownsville did it.

Q. That is your only reason?—A. That is the only reason, sir.

Q. You think your men were innocent?—A. I do.

Q. Therefore the town was guilty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is your argument or theory?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Major, what convinced you of that, contrary to your first opinion?—A. I have tried to tell you, Senator. It was the evidence that was produced before my court, and that was produced here.

Q. Major, do you think it possible that all these witnesses who have testified as to the shooting and as to the identity of the parties who did the shooting, could have been false?—A. I hate to think anybody is false, Senator, but I can not believe the way they have testified.

Q. You can not believe them?—A. No, sir. I hate to make a statement of that kind, but still it conflicts entirely with my own belief on the matter.

Q. And you changed your opinion by reason of what occurred on the trials?—A. Yes, sir; my own and this investigation.

Q. You do not think it is possible that as upright a set of men as you commanded, every one of them that have testified, have agreed on one story, and stuck to it?—A. I do not think it is possible for that number of men, sir.

Q. You do not think it is possible?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. But you would rather believe them than all the witnesses that have testified on the other side?—A. Yes, sir; that is my belief.

Senator PERRUS. I am through with the witness.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Major, as I understand, without going over your former testimony again, those guns, in your opinion, were high-power guns?—A. Yes, sir; I thought so.

Q. You never have had occasion to change that opinion?—A. No, sir; I still think so.

Q. Now, Major, after the shooting of course you were very much concerned to find out the cause of it and the parties who did the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the most important matter that you had?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And one of the most important you ever had in your life, was it not, Major?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had been in command of that battalion how long?—A. Over two years, sir.

Q. You were very much attached to them?—A. Yes, sir; I was attached to the men.

Q. They were a fine body of men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well disciplined?—A. I considered them so.

Q. And you were proud of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the condition, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this shooting occurred, and you heard the high-power guns. That necessarily made some impression on your mind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to the parties doing the shooting, and it necessarily followed from that, did it not, Major, that possibly some of your men were engaged in that shooting?—A. No; I did not think so that night.

Q. I did not ask whether it was a belief or not, Major, but whether the firing made an impression, not that it amounted to a belief, that some of your men might have been engaged in that shooting, from the character of the guns being used?—A. No, sir; it did not strike me that night; I did not think of it in that way—

Q. Well, now, Major—pardon me; go ahead; I do not want to interrupt you.—A. I was only going to say, as I have stated before, that I had in my mind the Evans incident, and I thought a lot of people had come up there and were indiscriminately shooting into the barracks. That was the first thing that went through my mind, and I held that thought until the next morning.

Q. Now, I will come down to that, Major. That night you retired about 3 o'clock in the morning?—A. I did.

Q. Without going over your testimony, in the intervening time between the cessation of the shooting and the time that you went to your quarters to bed you had made inquiries, had you not, an investigation, the best you could?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had talked with whom?—A. I had talked with all the officers. I had talked with a good many of the men. I had talked with Howard, with Tamayo; I had talked with Mayor Combe, who came in, if you remember, about 1 or half past 1 o'clock in the morning.

Q. Yes.—A. I had talked with them all.

Q. But Mayor Combe at that time had found no shells, and had said nothing of any shells.—A. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. Mayor Combe at that time had said nothing about anybody seeing your men or the circumstances under which they saw your men?—A. Yes, sir; he told me that night that one party of five had been seen together, and one of three.

Q. Where?—A. Well, I don't think that he stated in what part of the town it was.

Q. But you knew the character of the night then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, you went on and you saw Tamayo—this scavenger?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He told you his story about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a good many of your men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next morning you got up about 5 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; certainly as early as that.

Q. And the first thing that you did was to examine the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You commenced with which barracks?—A. I commenced with C Company barracks.

Q. That is, on the east end of the barracks?—A. The east end.

Q. You examined downstairs and upstairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand from your testimony, you examined all except the roof?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You examined B barracks thoroughly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You examined D barracks thoroughly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both the upper and lower galleries?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To see if there were any physical evidences of your post having been attacked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You found none?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did that make no impression upon you whatever?—A. Yes, sir; it did then.

Q. What impression did that make upon you, Major?—A. That impression—I commenced to think then, that maybe Doctor Combe's report to me the night before might have been true, that my men did the firing.

Q. Notwithstanding that you had had the report of your commissioned officers and noncommissioned officers, the scavenger, and the guard the night before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard their statements?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet, with the character of your men before you, their discipline, and all of that, the physical fact presented to you the next morning led you to think—that is, from the examination of the barracks I am speaking of now—A. Yes, sir; I understand you.

Q. I want to get that first. There was nobody had said anything to you then as to the circumstances under which they had seen your men?—A. Simply what Mayor Combe had told me, nothing more than that, at that time.

Q. How long did it take you to make this inspection of the barracks?—A. Well, I presume it was half or three-quarters of an hour, I don't know exactly, sir.

Q. It was daylight, of course, or you could not have inspected them?—A. Yes, sir; I waited until it was daylight.

Q. Half or three-quarters of an hour—of course I do not expect you to know exactly.—A. Yes, sir; that is about it.

Q. You inspected those barracks, and you found no evidence at all?—A. None at all.

Q. Of any attack upon the fort?—A. Of any bullet marks.

Q. Well, of any attack on the fort? You found no evidence of any attack on the post?—A. No, sir; there were no scars, bullet scars, of any kind.

Q. Well, I do not care about scars, or anything else—A. And that was the only thing I was looking for.

Q. Major Penrose, I asked you a question; I do not care whether they were scars or anything else. Did you find from the physical examination any evidence whatever that the post had been attacked?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. It was then that you directed Captain Macklin to make an examination for shells?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you had gotten through the inspection of the barracks—that is correct?—A. That is correct.

Q. Where were you when you directed Captain Macklin to make this inspection?—A. I was right at the gate. I met him at the gate.

Q. Standing at the gate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he went along by the wall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which way did he go first? Did he go down by the river front first?—A. No; he went up towards the alley.

Q. He went up towards the alley, along the garrison wall?—A. The garrison road.

Q. And you stood there?—A. I stood there for a while.

Q. Right at the gate?—A. Just inside of the gate. I don't know that I was exactly at the gate. I think I was inside the gate. I don't think I went out.

Q. You would not undertake, of course, at this time, to tell where you were standing every minute?—A. No, sir; not at any time.

Q. But this was some time between 5 and 6 o'clock you were standing there?—A. Yes, sir; it was between 5 and a little after 6, I think, probably.

Q. You were there until after 6?—A. I think it was a little after 6; yes, sir.

Q. Now, Captain Macklin came back to you with certain shells and clips?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him pick those shells and clips up?—A. No, sir; I did not. I do not recall seeing him pick them up at all.

Q. And when he showed you those shells and clips—this was after you had made the inspection of the barracks—and with all your attachment to the men and confidence in them, you said to Captain Macklin, "My men have done this shooting?"—A. Yes, sir; I said, "I believe my men have done this shooting."

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. May I ask you right there, did he tell you then that he found them within a space of about 18 inches or a foot?—A. Not at that time, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I was going to ask that question. What conversation did you have with Captain Macklin as to where he found those shells?—A. I asked him where he found them, and he told me along the wall, as I recall it, from the oil house to the alley.

Q. That he had found those shells along the wall from the oil house to the alley. You are familiar with the location. That would be a space covering how many feet?—A. Oh, maybe 60 or 70 feet.

Q. And it was at this same conversation he told you about finding one shell in the mouth of the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he had pressed that into the ground with his foot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because he saw other men, other parties, in the alley, he thought, picking up shells?—A. Picking up shells; yes, sir.

Q. Why did he say that he thought it was best for him to press that into the ground?—A. He did not say, Senator. He simply told me.

Q. Did you ask him?—A. No, sir; I do not recall that I asked him at all why he did it. My mind was so taken up, probably, that I did not think of that. It did not occur to me.

Senator OVERMAN. May I ask a question?

Senator WARNER. Yes; certainly.

By Senator OVERMAN :

Q. He told you he found those shells along the wall, from the oil house to the mouth of the alley, a distance of about 60 feet?—

A. I think that is about the distance.

Q. That was immediately after he found them?—A. Yes, sir; as he came in the gate with them.

Q. Some time after that he told you he found them within a space of about 18 inches?—A. I do not say that he said that he found all of them. He found some of them that way.

Q. You prefer to accept his later statement than the statement he made immediately after finding them?—A. What was that, sir.

Senator LODGE. That he had found them along the wall.

By Senator OVERMAN :

Q. You said that was the one thing convinced you that your men did not do it, because those shells were found within a space of 18 inches.—A. Yes, sir; that was afterwards.

Q. I say you prefer that statement of Captain Macklin, made some time after, that he found them within a space of 18 inches, than the statement that he made immediately after he had found them, that he found them within a space of 60 feet?—A. Well, he did not say anything to me about finding those in that small space at first.

Q. If I understand you—A. My impression is, if I can explain it, sir, that it was from the oil house up to the alley. Now, that distance may be more than 60 feet, or less, I am not sure, and I do not wish to be quoted as saying that I am sure of it. He just simply said that he found them along there, and that he found this one shell in the mouth of the alley, which he put his foot on. It was after that, but I don't recall whether it was that day or the next day that he told me he found them in that circle.

Q. You preferred to accept his later statement than the one he made down there?—A. I accepted them both, Senator.

Q. Didn't he say he had found them along the wall?—A. Well, yes.

Q. From the oil house to the alley?—A. Yes.

Q. And the next statement that he found them within 18 inches?—

A. I don't think he found them all there. He had picked up some along the wall, and he found these others that were there together.

Q. Go ahead.—A. I am sure he did not make that statement—that he found them all there.

By Senator WARNER :

Q. Then, to go back, to follow this along logically—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When those shells were exhibited to you, it was your conviction then that some of your men were connected with the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you continued to examine into it for days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And continued up to the 15th of August, two or three days after the shooting, when you made your report?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And notwithstanding the character of your men and their good discipline, to give you the benefit of your exact language, you said:

Were it not for the damaging evidence of the empty shells and used clips, I should be of the firm belief that none of my men was in any way connected with the crime; but with this fact so painfully before me, I am not only convinced it was perpetrated by men of this command, but that it was carefully planned beforehand.

A. Yes, sir; that was my report.

Q. At that time you had examined every noncommissioned officer, had you not?—A. On the 15th; yes, sir; I think I had at that time.

Q. And you had examined a great many of the soldiers?—A. No; I can not say that I had on the 15th examined a great many of the soldiers. I am not sure that I examined all of the noncommissioned officers at that time, but I had examined a good many of them and some of the enlisted men.

Q. At that time had Captain Macklin made any further report to you as to where he found the shells?—A. I think that he had; I am not sure about that.

Q. And the circumstances under which he had found them?—A. My mind is hazy, Senator, about the time he told me about those shells being in that position.

Q. That was quite an important matter, though, Major?—A. And I believe that it was after that report, but I am not sure, sir; I think that it was.

Q. A month afterwards, or such a matter, in September, you made another report, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Captain Macklin had told you before that, hadn't he?—A. Oh, yes. He had told me before that, certainly before that.

Q. About these shells?—A. Yes, sir; this was before that.

Q. And you had continued your investigation clear up through, or over a month, Major?—A. Yes, sir. I understand what you mean.

Q. I think it was the 20th of September, or something of that kind?—A. Yes, sir; I understand what you mean perfectly.

Q. I do not intend to commit you to my statement of the date, but you had gone on with all this investigation, and you were still of the opinion, were convinced that your men had done the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made the drastic recommendation of discharging that battalion by piecemeal?—A. I did.

Q. That is, 20 per cent of it one month, 20 per cent the next month, 20 per cent of it the third month, and 20 per cent the fourth month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the firm conviction that they were guilty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They all had denied it to you, had they not?—A. Every one of them.

Q. Why didn't you believe them?—A. Because there had been nothing at that time to make me believe anything to the contrary, sir. I had received the reports of the shooting up of this town, and I believed them at that time.

Q. You know the town was shot up?—A. Oh, yes. I will express myself in this way, that I had not heard any of the testimony relating to it. I had better put it that way, and, as I stated here before, up to the time of my court-martial, and even during a portion of it, I felt, sir, that those men were guilty. It was then that I commenced to change my opinion.

Q. Now, Major, if it were not for the fact that witnesses swore that they saw your men on that night, and you knowing the character of the night it was, and your disbelieving that kind of evidence, you would still be of the opinion that your men did the shooting?—

A. Yes, sir; I could not help it.

Q. Could not help it; and it was the evidence of parties who said they saw them that changed your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you wish to be understood fully?—A. I do; yes, sir. I wish to state that that was—

Q. Have you any explanation or qualification to make of your answer, Major? If you have, I want you to make it.—A. No, sir; I can not say that I have anything. That was one of the things. You must remember, Senator, that I said that the experiments that were conducted with those rifles, and the 11 shells that were claimed to have been fired from this rifle that was in the box, that we know was packed up at Fort Niobrara and never opened until the morning of the 14th, that has had a great deal to do with it.

Q. Whether those had been opened until the morning of the 14th, Major, would depend upon the evidence of the very men who appeared before you and the other officers, and testified that they had had nothing to do with the shooting, and knew nothing of it?—
A. Oh, no, sir; pardon me on that. Lieutenant Lawrason testified to that.

Q. Lieutenant Lawrason put them in the box, but they were entirely in charge of the noncommissioned officer?—A. They were in charge of the noncommissioned officer, that is very true; but he testified distinctly that the box had not been opened; that he knew it had not been opened; that he opened it himself that morning, the morning of the 14th.

Q. You mean that Lieutenant Lawrason testified that he put them in the box, but Lieutenant Lawrason did not testify that that box had never been opened from the time it was closed at Fort Niobrara until he opened it at Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir; that was the testimony.

Q. You rely upon that belief of the testimony? That had an effect upon you?—A. A very decided one, sir.

Q. And up until that time you had no doubt?—A. Now, let me see whether I understand you about that, sir. Up to—

Q. Up to the close, I do not want—

Senator HEMENWAY. I should think that the statement of the witness ought to go as to when his doubt began. He has repeatedly stated—I hate to drop in here to protect an officer of the United States Army, but it seems necessary—he has repeatedly stated that all of these statements together gradually changed his belief, and now I object to a single proposition being put as to his being asked if that alone changed his opinion.

Senator WARNER. I am not doing that.

Senator HEMENWAY. If you are not doing it, then my objection does no harm.

Senator WARNER. I certainly do not intend to. (To the witness.) As I understood your testimony, Major, before, without turning to it, you remained of this opinion until the close of the evidence for the prosecution in your court-martial?

The WITNESS. I think if you will recall, sir, that I corrected that answer; said that it was undergoing a change during the prosecution.

Q. During the prosecution?—A. Yes, sir; you might say it commenced with the beginning of the prosecution.

Q. I want your statement in full.—A. That is it. I think that is the statement given before. I think you will find that in the printed evidence.

Q. Very well. I shall not take the time to look it up. I have no reason to contradict your statement about that.—A. That is what I think I said.

Q. Then it went on up to that time, and you had talked with General Garlington when he was out there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with Colonel Lovering?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Major Blocksom there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had gone over all the facts pertaining to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you never expressed a doubt, did you, to either one of those officers but that it was your men who did this shooting?—A. No, sir; that was all before my trial.

By Senator PERRUS:

Q. Major, I understand, and I want to know if I understand correctly, that you have not changed any matter of fact that you testified to heretofore. You do not intend to change any matter of fact? It is only your opinions that have changed?—A. I do not intend to change anything, sir.

Q. Sir?—A. I do not intend to change anything.

Q. You have changed your opinion, haven't you, Major?—A. No; I gave my opinion here before.

Senator LONGE. He means since the beginning.

By Senator PERRUS:

Q. I mean from the start.—A. Oh, yes; I changed, from the time of the shooting at Brownsville.

Q. I want to know if you have changed any facts, outside of opinions.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I think what the Senator wants to know is, whether you wish to correct any statements of fact that you have made heretofore.

By Senator PERRUS:

Q. Do you mean to contradict anything you stated as a matter of fact heretofore?—A. No, sir; I do not know that I have.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. One or two other questions. Some of your soldiers wore leggings and some did not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they habitually went that way; some of them having short trousers with leggings, did they?—A. Trouser-breeches—not habitually; no, sir. They did not go habitually that way. Those men were permitted to wear their long trousers when they were off duty; they still had some of them and I wanted to let them wear them out.

Q. Some of them wore them that way and some did not?—A. When they were off duty, sir; never on duty.

Q. And these blue chambray shirts?—A. Chambray shirts; yes, sir.

Q. Blue?—A. Yes, sir; blue shirts.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did some of them wear caps at some time?—A. They should not have had any caps; no caps allowed at all.

Q. They had them?—A. Yes, sir; they had the full-dress cap.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you know the fact—it is on that point—that it was alleged that the cap of one of the soldiers had been found? What was his name?—A. The clerk of C Company.

Q. Askew?—A. Askew. I was told that there was a cap found in the street with Askew's name in it.

Q. You knew that he produced two or three caps to show that his cap had not been taken?—A. He produced three caps and two hats, I think.

Q. And one of the caps he produced you found, from your investigation, was about three sizes too large for him?—A. No, sir; I do not know that. I was there when the caps were brought in—the caps and hats—and I do not recall that there was any one that was too large for him.

Q. I do not assert that as a fact. I ask you if you remember that it was?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Senator FORAKER. Do you claim that there is any testimony about that?

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I do not claim that as a fact, and I take your testimony when you were on the stand before.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. My remembrance is that your testimony now is substantially the same as it was then.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with reference to those men cleaning guns on the barracks, of course when you were down under the barracks, whether there were men cleaning guns there on the upper gallery, you could not tell yourself?—A. No, sir; if there had been some men directly above me, I could not have seen them, but I do not think that was possible. I do not think that was possible for them to be cleaning rifles at the time I was making that inspection and I not see them.

Q. When this question was asked you by Senator Foraker with reference to those men, and whether you could see them or not, with reference to the seven men, you said something—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What connection did that have with it at all?—A. Nothing—well, in this way, that after those seven men were inspected by Captain Lyon and myself they were directed to join their company, which was then on guard.

Q. That was after the inspection?—A. It was after the inspection. That was probably half past 6 in the morning.

Q. That is what I understood. I wanted to get it clear.—A. We had the quartermaster-sergeant get us a ramrod—one of these ramrods like this—and Captain Lyon and I put that rag through each one of these rifles. Now, it is possible that might have been seen, but it was not on the porch. That was in front of B Company barracks.

Q. But we were talking about the porches, the galleries, as you call them.—A. No, sir; there was no one there when I was there, and I do not think it could have been.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. You spoke of a gun locked up at Fort Brown, one which was said to have been tested at the arsenal, which was said to have been fired a number of times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever noticed any inaccuracy in the marks of the guns, the mark that the bullet leaves on the shell?—A. On the shell?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I have not. I have never tried any experiment of that kind at all.

Q. Have you heard of any?—A. Yes, sir; such as I have read of this experiment that was made at the Frankford Arsenal.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Springfield?—A. Springfield Arsenal.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. Have you heard of any mismarks in the manufacture of those guns, outside of that one?—A. I don't know that I understand what you mean, Senator.

Q. We have it here stated from the arsenal, and by the officers who made these guns and the shells, or who ordered them made, that one of those guns that was locked up fired a number of those shots.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, I want to know if you have ever heard of any inaccuracies in those marks that are made on the shells?—A. No, sir; if I understand you right, I don't know that I ever have.

Q. That is the only one you ever heard of?—A. As I understand it, sir, they picked out four rifles that shells were supposed to have been fired from, that they picked up in the streets of Brownsville. They were determined by means of a microscope, principally from the position of the firing pin striking the cap, the different location of that, and I believe some marks of the ejector, and by that means they were able to locate different rifles as having fired different shells. I do not know that there has been anything to change that at all.

Q. You do not believe in that report, though, that was made by the officers who made the guns?—A. Oh, yes; I do.

Q. You do?—A. Why, certainly I do. I have no reason—

Q. I understood you to say that that gun that they said was fired there was locked up all the time?—A. So it was.

Q. And therefore could not have been in that firing?—A. That is what I stated, sir; but I do not see that that changes my statement at all, if I understood you right.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. You mean it could not have been fired out of the gun that night?—A. It could not have been fired out of the gun that night.

Senator FORAKER. They do not say it was fired that night.

By Senator PETTUS:

Q. That is what you mean?—A. No, sir; I do not think it could have been fired out of the gun that night.

Q. It could have been fired at some other time, you think?—A. I think it was fired—it was fired at the range at Fort Niobrara, Nebr.

Q. How could that have been fired at the range when it was locked up in the box all the time?—A. It was not, Senator. You do not understand me. That rifle was used during the target-practice season of last year at Fort Niobrara; but before we left Fort Niobrara that rifle was locked up with other rifles, when brought down to Brownsville, and that was not opened until we got to Brownsville.

Q. Was not used at Brownsville at all?—A. No, sir; not used at Brownsville at all; was not even opened there.

Senator FORAKER. At this point I want to introduce and have printed in the record certain documents which have been received from the War Department. This is a report, with accompanying indorsements and papers, of an investigation made by F. H. French, lieutenant-colonel, of the Inspector-General's Department, United States Army, as to the allegations made before this committee that a number of Government rifles were defaced by destroying the numbers thereon, and that a number of rifles and a quantity of ammunition were sold or given away.

The documents referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 27, 1907.

The COMMANDING GENERAL, SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
St. Louis, Mo.

SIR: I am directed by the Acting Secretary of War to inclose herewith the accompanying extracts from the testimony before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs relating to the affray at Brownsville, Tex., with directions that you cause a thorough investigation to be made of the allegations contained therein that a number of Government rifles were defaced by destroying the numbers thereon, and that a number of rifles and a quantity of ammunition were sold or given away. The investigation should include an inquiry as to the methods prevailing in certain organizations of the Twenty-sixth Infantry in regard to the care of and accountability for ammunition.

The testimony indicates that certain officers and enlisted men have probably been guilty of a violation of the sixtieth article of war, and, if such be the case, they should be brought to trial as provided for in that article. As the testimony adduced is partly hearsay, however, the Acting Secretary of War directs that you cause a thorough investigation to be made of the whole matter and that you take such action as the case demands, reporting to this Office the result of the investigation and the action taken thereon.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
St. Louis, Mo., April 30, 1907.

Respectfully referred to Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, inspector-general of the division, for investigation and report.

By command of Brigadier-General Williams:

W. P. BURNHAM,
Major, General Staff, Chief of Staff.

AFFRAY AT BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS.

[Second Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
St. Louis, Mo., May 21, 1907.

Respectfully returned to the adjutant-general, southwestern division, inviting attention to report herewith.

F. H. FRENCH,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Inspector-General.

[Third Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
St. Louis, Mo., May 21, 1907.

Respectfully returned to The Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C., inclosing report of Lieut. Col. F. H. French, inspector-general, which has just been received.

From a reading of the report and conversation with Colonel French, it appears that Companies K and M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, were careless in the care of ammunition; that Company K had six surplus Krag rifles; that they have disappeared, and the evidence is not clear as to what became of them. That the quartermaster-sergeant of Company K sold 1,000 rounds Krag ammunition to Mr. Field, of Brownsville, Tex., and that that ammunition is still intact in original package; that the only person against whom serious charges would lie is the quartermaster-sergeant of Company K, who has been discharged and whose whereabouts is now unknown.

As this report has been urgently called for by wire from the War Department, it is forwarded without action or further remark, as it is not considered expedient to delay the report in order to give the matter due and careful consideration.

W. P. BURNHAM,
Major, General Staff, Chief of Staff,
(In the absence of the division commander.)

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
St. Louis, Mo., May 21, 1907.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
St. Louis, Mo.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of an investigation of certain allegations regarding the defacing of Government rifles and the sale of rifles and ammunition at Fort Brown, Tex. This investigation was made pursuant to instructions contained in letter dated War Department, The Adjutant-General's Office, April 27, 1907.

The testimony was given under oath administered by me, and after completion in each instance it was read over to the deponent and by him pronounced correct. It will be found herewith.

The evidence shows that there were at least six Krag-Jørgensen rifles in K Company, Twenty-sixth Infantry, that were surplus—that is, in excess of the number for which the company commander was accountable. How they became so is not positively stated, but probably in consequence of the sinking of a boat on which the property was being shipped near Nueva Caceres, P. I. These rifles—six selected ones—were not turned in to arsenal when the change was made to the Springfield model 1903, but after the numbers had been erased were placed on a high shelf in the company storeroom at Fort Brown, Tex. No further trace of four of them can be found, but the remaining two were seen later on in the company storeroom at Fort Sam Houston and then disappeared. None of the guns is around the company now, and I have not been able to get any clue as to the whereabouts of any of them. Corporal Ryan, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry, who, as artificer of the company, blotted out the numbers on the rifles, is with the company. He claims to have done this in obedience to orders from the then company quartermaster-sergeant, Joseph Cheesman, who was discharged the service in August or September, 1906. I have written to Cheesman's relative, as stated on the descriptive card, but have received no reply. Another address was furnished me to-day, but a reply to any letter sent this man is hardly probable, as he left with funds belonging to a library or reading association of his comrades. The evidence points to Cheesman as the man who sold 1,000 rounds of Krag ammunition to H. M. Field, of Brownsville, stating that the ammunition was obsolete, as the Krag rifles had been turned in and he had orders to sell it. Other ammunition was sold to Mr. Field by a discharged soldier named William Voshelle, who was employed as a teamster at Fort Brown, Tex., and claimed to have received it from Lieut. H. G. Leckie, Twenty-sixth Infantry. The latter testified that he gave the gun, a Winchester, to Voshelle, and some ammunition which he had bought, and that there might have been a few rounds of Government ammunition in the lot. The exact number of cartridges in this last transaction is uncertain. Mr. Field's clerk showed me the box from which he said they had sold a few, and it still contained, to the best of my judgment, about 500 rounds in cartons holding 20 each. The clerk also showed me the wooden box containing the thousand rounds which Artificer Ryan delivered at Sergeant Cheesman's orders. The box has not been opened, the seal being intact.

There was no evidence found to show that Capt. D. W. Kilburn, Twenty-sixth Infantry, the officer accountable for the ordnance at the time of the sale or disappearance, or any other officer, had knowledge of this property being surplus or of its being sold, nor could I get any information that such practices were carried on in any other companies.

But the evidence showed carelessness in looking after ammunition at Fort Brown, Tex., at the time the troops left that post to change station to Fort Sam Houston, Tex., by which some loose cartridges were stolen. The 200 rounds given to United States Commissioner Creager by Lieutenant Parker's order were used in firing a private gun belonging to the commissioner by some civilians, some officers, and some enlisted men.

At San Antonio, Tex., I was shown an affidavit or certificate from Capt. J. R. Church, Medical Department, who is now in Cuba, denying that he had had a surplus gun given him; this paper was forwarded to the War Department in reply to a letter from the Chief of Ordnance reporting the irregularities as developed by the Senate committee and requesting that an explanation be required. Lieutenant Schmidt has resigned from the service and his present post-office address is not known.

The testimony of Capt. D. W. Kilburn, Capt. H. E. Ely, First Lieut. Mack Richardson, First Lieut. G. S. Gillis, Second Lieut. H. G. Leckie, all of the Twenty-sixth Infantry; of First Sergt. F. G. Butler, Q. M. Sergt. J. A. Means, Sergt. C. A. McCarty, Sergt. Frank Wesner, Corpl. William Ryan, Artificer Noble Onan, Private Algeron Jebb, Private J. J. Barnett, all of Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry; of Private Henry Watson, Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, and of Charles Rose, a civilian, was taken at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; that of H. M. Field and Conrad L. Cloetta at Brownsville, Tex.; that of Capt. C. F. Bates, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and of Post Q. M. Sergt. E. I. Sharp at Fort Bliss, Tex., and of First Lieut. Allen Parker, Twenty-sixth Infantry, at St. Louis, Mo.

United States Commissioner Creager and Mr. Fred Starke had left Brownsville, Tex., to go to Washington prior to my arrival and their testimony could not be taken.

Very respectfully,

F. H. FRENCH,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Inspector-General.

INVESTIGATION BY LIEUT. COL. F. H. FRENCH, TWELFTH INFANTRY, ACTING INSPECTOR-GENERAL, INSPECTOR-GENERAL SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION.

Capt. DANA W. KILBURN, being sworn, testified as follows, questioned by Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry:

Q. What is your name, rank, and regiment?—A. Capt. Dana W. Kilburn, quartermaster, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been regimental quartermaster?—A. Since July 14, 1906.

Q. What was your command before that time?—A. Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. From what time to what time did you command Company K?—A. From March 21, 1901, to April 1, 1903, and from January 25, 1904, to April 2, 1906; and from April 2, 1906, to May 31, 1906, I was carried in command of the company, but was actually in command of the post of Fort Brown, Tex., and First Lieut. Allen Parker, Twenty-sixth Infantry, was in actual command of the company. I left Fort Brown, Tex., on June 2, 1906, for Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

Q. What orders or instructions did you have for your company in regard to issuing ammunition to enlisted men?—A. No ammunition was issued to enlisted men except on my orders, except in cases where they had hunting passes. It was customary at Fort Brown to allow them to take a reasonable amount of ammunition with them, the amount depending upon the length of time they were to be away.

Q. Did they have any instructions about turning in surplus ammunition after returning from the trip?—A. Not to my knowledge—that was left entirely with the quartermaster-sergeant, but I supposed that the surplus would be turned in, but I never gave instructions to that effect.

Q. How about ammunition for target practice—what was the manner of issuing?—A. The artificer with the quartermaster-sergeant would take the ammunition out to the point of firing and each man as his name is called would get a box of ammunition and go to the firing point, and after firing return his unused shells and clips and they would be kept and put in the sling cells at once.

Q. Do you know of any sale of ammunition in your company or in any other company for the benefit of the company fund or for any other purpose?—A. No, sir; most emphatically, no.

Q. Either the Krag or Springfield ammunition.—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Does your answer refer to any sale to either H. M. Fields, of Brownsville, or Mr. Creager, the United States commissioner, or Mr. Fred Starke, of Brownsville?—A. I mean my answer to cover all the cases. I do not know of ammunition either being given away or being disposed of unlawfully by anyone.

Q. In your inspection of company quarters, did you ever make an examination of the men's lockers to see if they had surplus ammunition in the lockers, or did you ever see any surplus ammunition in their lockers?—A. I never noticed any in the lockers, but I do not remember of having all the property taken out to see what was in the lockers. I may have done so, but I do not remember any case now.

Q. Was any report ever made to you or did anything occur that would have caused you to make this examination for surplus ammunition?—A. No, sir.

Q. It has been testified at Washington that there were some surplus rifles in your company; that is, K Company. Have you any knowledge of any surplus rifles; that is, any rifles, either the Krag or Springfield, that were more than the property accountability, or were not on the papers?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Neither kind?—A. Neither kind; no, sir.

Q. You were in command of the company in the Philippines?—A. For a portion of the time; yes, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the sinking of a casco over there with Government supplies aboard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any stores, to your knowledge, saved from that wreck?—A. Not to my personal knowledge; no, sir.

Q. When was this?—A. I am not absolutely certain as to the dates, but can tell you almost, because on account of my own personal movements about that time. About the 17th of September, 1901, I was ordered from Baao, Camarines Sur, to Nueva Caceres as a judge-advocate of a military commission, or a general court-martial, then in session at Nueva Caceres, P. I., and I turned the company over to First Lieut. William Crutts, of the Philippine Scouts, and on September 30 we got telegraphic orders for the one battalion to go to Samoa on account of the Balangiga massacre. I at once asked to be relieved from the court to go with my company. The company came down on cascos, or, rather, catamarans, which were constituted of barotos, with bamboo flooring between them, and First Lieut.—he was at the time second lieutenant—George S. Gillis, Twenty-sixth Infantry, was in command of my company and brought it down the river, where one river ran into another just below Nueva Caceres, where one of the catamarans ran onto a sunken pile and was upset, throwing the men and property into the river. The river was very high at that time and three of the men were drowned. This catamaran had property from K Company, L Company, I Company, and M Company, Twenty-sixth Infantry. The next day—this was about 9 o'clock at night—the next day, so I was informed, although I did not go personally to the place, they made some attempt to recover the property. But if any property was recovered I never knew what it was. I know, however, that I and M companies, Twenty-sixth Infantry, lost all their books and clothing records, because First Lieut. Wait C. Johnson, who was commanding M Company, had to make a certificate as to the clothing allowances for the men for the preceding six months.

Q. As a result of this wreck, or for any other reason, did your company have any surplus rifles?—A. No, not to my knowledge—to the best of my belief; no. The reason for this statement is that when I turned over the company property to Second Lieut. George S. Gillis on the 2d of April, 1903, there were no surplus rifles or surplus ammunition then in my company.

Q. There is a property book kept in the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the guns issued to the men charged to them by number?—A. By number; yes, sir; and each man's number is kept on the bottom of his bunk.

Q. Now, can a man who is separated from the company for any reason and who is turning in his gun for any reason, get credit for his rifle if he does not turn in the numbered rifle which is charged against him?—A. No, sir; he would not. He would have to answer to me why, and what became of his other rifle.

Q. Have you at any time ever sold or given away any rifles?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any rifle in your possession that is not accounted for on the papers—I mean any rifle belonging to the United States?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you give a rifle or sell a rifle to Captain Church, of the Medical Department?—A. No, sir; I did not. He was assigned to my company during the target-practice season of 1904, and he was at that time issued a Krag rifle and ammunition, which he kept in his quarters. When he left Fort Brown, in June, 1904, the rifle was turned in.

Q. That rifle was one of the regular property accountability?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there ever any surplus rifles in the K Company?—A. Well, when we came back from the Philippines—or, rather, when the company went over there—it had 150 men in it; it was cut down to 106 and then it was cut again to 80, I think, and after one of these reductions I had about 15 or 20 rifles more than I had men in the company. Some time while I was at Fort Brown I requested authority, and got it, to ship these surplus rifles to the arsenal, and they were shipped. I am not absolutely positive whether they were shipped or whether I turned them over to Lieutenant Richardson at Fort Brown. My impression is that they were shipped.

Q. How about Post Quartermaster-Sergeant Sharpe; did you ever give him a rifle, or did you sell him a rifle?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or did you issue him a rifle?—A. I issued him a rifle because he was formerly first sergeant of the company and assigned to the company for target practice.

Q. He has since been made post quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Yes, sir. He was made post quartermaster-sergeant while I was away on leave, and left the company.

Q. Did you give or sell or issue to Lieutenant Schmidt a rifle?—

A. He had one in his possession while he was officer of the company, but I did not sell it to him or give it to him, and to the best of my knowledge and belief that rifle was turned in to the company when he left.

Q. If it had not been turned in would you have been short in your accountability to the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you not have known it if it had not been turned in?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about some ammunition being found at Fort Brown after the company left there?—A. No, sir. I left Fort Brown about a month before the company left.

ALGERNON JEBB, sworn and questioned by Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testified as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Private Algernon Jebb, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Were you stationed at Brownsville in May and June, 1906?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did your company leave Brownsville and come here?—

A. I believe they left there about the 5th of July.

Q. Were any men left behind at Brownsville after the company started?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in that party that was left behind?—A. No, sir; I came on with my company.

Q. What duty were you performing at that time?—A. Just the same duty as an original private.

Q. Not an artificer or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. When your company left the barracks at Fort Brown, did you see any ammunition lying around loose or in bandoleers?—A. I seen lots of ammunition—no; I won't say lots, but I seen ammunition lying about the quarters.

Q. Loose or in bandoleers?—A. Just lying here and there, loose and in bandoleers; that is, I seen one or two bandoleers lying outside the quarters, but I did not suppose there was any ammunition in them; that is, bandoleers on just one side.

Q. You testified before the Senate committee at Washington a month or two ago—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your testimony before the committee you gave evidence regarding going to see Mr. Fred Starck in reference to the sale of ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want you to repeat that, or tell me what it was.—A. I will tell you, Colonel, if I have to repeat the statement, I will repeat it just the same as I told it to the Senate committee.

Q. Well, just tell me about it in your own language.—A. Well, I was informed that K Company had extra ammunition, that is, Krag ammunition, to sell, and I asked Mr. Starck—well, I says, I might as well repeat the whole thing—I was on special duty; had been ordered by the commanding officer to ship to Point Isabell, understand?

Q. Go ahead.—A. And in coming back I met Mr. Starck, and I asked Fred Starck, "Do you want to buy any ammunition?" He says, "Yes; I want to buy ammunition." I says, "What you willing to give for it?" "Well," I says, "I don't know how much there is or anything about it, but I have got the authority." I says, "to ask you if you want to buy it." He says, "What you want for it?" And I says, "I want a cent and a half." "Can't give you a cent and a half," says he; "give you cent a round for it." That was right in front of the post-office, and I says "I will see the parties about it; if they want to sell it to you all right, and if they don't all right." I don't believe the ammunition was ever sold to Mr. Starck at all. This is the statement I made before the committee—Mr. Starck asked me just as I said—I asked Mr. Starck did he want to buy any.

Q. Was there any ammunition sold to Mr. Starck?—A. Not that I know of: not that I know of.

Q. Who told you that the company had ammunition to sell?—A. Well, it was Corporal Ryan, Artificer Ryan he was at that time; he is now corporal.

Q. Did he authorize you to sell any?—A. No; he did not authorize me to sell any; he simply stated the quartermaster-sergeant told him he had surplus ammunition to sell. He did not authorize me to sell any.

Q. Have you ever sold any ammunition?—A. No, sir; I have not. I never did.

Q. Have you ever given any away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom?—A. Well, I have given it to my friends, rangers, etc.

Q. Were you not accountable for this ammunition that had been issued to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you get it, then?—A. In the first place, after leaving the target range, I was detailed by Major Cook to drive a team for Lieutenant Harris, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, who was in charge of a party for surveying—that is, mapping service—I don't know what you call it. Well, we was issued ammunition by the ordnance officer, and Sergeant Hopkins gave me a number of rounds of ammunition. I then went to my quartermaster-sergeant, K Company, Twenty-sixth Infantry, and says: "I have got a gun. I have got a Krag gun," says I, "Will you give me some ammunition?" "Yes, all you want." I got about 50 rounds from him. He says to me, he says: "When you want any more, come back here and get it." That is why I say it was plentiful. I always got all the ammunition I wanted. I was on detail ninety days with Lieutenant Harris—three months.

Q. To whom did you give this ammunition?—A. Well, I can't call the rangers' names, except Sergeant McCauley, who was stationed at Harlingen. I can not call the other rangers' names.

Q. You gave it to some rangers, did you?—A. Yes, sir. They came and said to me, "Jebb, have you got any ammunition," and I says, "Yes, I have got ammunition." They said, "We would like to have the whole outfit, wagon and all." I says, "Do you want some ammunition?" He says, "Yes." They were willing to take a box—20 rounds in a box. I told them to go to the jockey box and help themselves to it. I carried out about 120 rounds in the jockey box—I can't say 120 rounds—I carried five or six boxes, and then I carried one box in the wagon that we carried for shooting purposes, such as anything we wanted to shoot—jack rabbits, or anything like that.

Q. Did you give any to any other persons than to the rangers?—

A. No, sir; I do not believe I did.

Q. What kind of rifles were you armed with at that time?—

A. Krag carbine. We started out with a Krag rifle, the same kind the infantry use, but we turned it in and got a carbine.

Q. Turned it in where?—A. Turned it in to the ordnance officer.

Q. Where?—A. At Fort Brown.

Q. Why did you turn in the rifles and take the carbines?—A. We carried the carbine because it was better for our purposes for shooting game while we were on the trip.

Q. Now, was there any other way that you could get ammunition in quantities besides the way you have stated that you got it from the quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Ammunition was plentiful.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. In every corner.

Q. Did you get it simply for the asking for it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When it was given to you in this way was it not charged to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. No account kept of it?—A. No, sir; I don't suppose there was.

Q. The quartermaster-sergeant would give it to you direct from the storeroom?—A. He'd say, "Jebb, go and help yourself."

Q. What was the name of this quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Well, we had several quartermaster-sergeants down there in Brownsville with K Company since I have been in it. I have been in the company since 1903.

Q. Give the names of some of them.—A. There was Sergeant Snyder, Sergeant Short, Sergeant Riley, Sergeant Cheeseman. Now, I never had any trouble with any quartermaster-sergeant in getting anything I wanted.

Q. Were these quartermaster-sergeants at Fort Brown at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they all allowed you to take ammunition freely?—

A. They gave me anything I wanted—didn't allow me to take it—I went and asked for it and they would tell me to go and help myself.

Q. Was that the Krag, or Springfield as well as the Krag?—

A. Well, no; can't say that. Krag ammunition, as I stated before, was plentiful. Springfield ammunition being the new ammunition, firing on one range like at Point Isabell, was kinder scarce, but we always had plenty.

Q. Of what?—A. Both Krag and Springfield.

Q. At the target range could you get all the ammunition you wanted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you obliged to turn back what you did not use, or could you bring it away from the range?—A. There was no account kept of it.

Q. No account kept?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you have instructions or orders to turn back what you did not use?—A. No, sir. The quartermaster-sergeant kept the ammunition in his tent and we could go out there and take four or five or six bandoleers—60 rounds of ammunition in each bandoleer for Springfield rifle. We would carry that out to the target range, for instance, when we were shooting for sharpshooters, and we used so much at that range and carried it to the next range, say we quit that range, some of the men would pick up that loose ammunition that was left out there and carried it back. Others would not pick it up; they would leave it there and some of the officers would take it back to the station and turn it back to the quartermaster-sergeant; others would say, "We'll just keep this ourselves." Out of 60 rounds in a bandoleer there might have been 10 or 15 rounds taken, perhaps 40 rounds taken out of a bandoleer, they would take right to the tents and never turn it in to the quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. Now, did you see much ammunition lying around loose around the barracks at Fort Brown—either loose or in bandoleers?—

A. Well, I can't say I seen any lying loose—our company commander was pretty strict about that—but I can say we had ammunition in our barracks, had it in our lockers where the company commander could not see it—all kinds of ammunition.

Q. Do you know whether any of this ammunition was sold?—

A. No; I could not say it was sold, because I never seen it sold and never seen any money received for it; never heard anyone say they ever received money for it. The first ever I heard was when Corporal Ryan made his statement before the Senate committee that he sold 2,000 rounds to Mr. Fields; this is the first I knew about it. I might have made a mistake there. I have seen ammunition given away in the vicinity of Brownsville for drinks—just for drinks—that was at Mr. Oden's saloon. I have seen ammunition given away there and he giving the men a drink for taking it down there.

Q. Was any ammunition to your knowledge sold for the benefit of the company fund?—A. Well, I can tell you, the quartermaster-sergeant had surplus ammunition, I don't know what authority he had to sell this, but I know that it was at auction.

Q. The ammunition was sold at auction?—A. It was at auction—anyone could come along and buy it. I think the quartermaster-sergeant had taken the responsibility on himself. I made the statement before the Senate committee that any quartermaster-sergeant, since canteen had been cut off, if he did not make, scrape, and steal all he could get hold of he did not remain long in his position. That is just what I said before the committee. I do not know what became of it, whether it went in the company fund or not, but I think he was the responsible man for the surplus ammunition.

Q. Name some of the quartermaster-sergeants that had ammunition for sale in this manner.—A. Sergeant Cheeseman.

Q. Any others?—A. No; can't say Sergeant Short or Sergeant Riley. I never seen any there to sell anything like Sergeant Cheeseman. He was the only man who ever tried to do it.

Q. Did you see any ammunition in a bandoleer or in two bandoleers in the orderly room of K Company after the company had left barracks to come up here?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Corpl. WILLIAM RYAN, sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testified as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Corpl. William Ryan, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Were you stationed with the company at Fort Brown?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What rank did you have or what positions did you hold?—A. I have held the positions of artificer, corporal, and private.

Q. Did you have any control over the company ammunition while the company was stationed down there?—A. Well, I had access to the ammunition belonging to the company.

Q. As artificer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also as corporal?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who had charge of it?—A. Well, the quartermaster-sergeant has charge, he and the artificer as a rule carry the key to the store-room, and usually the company commander and the first sergeant. These are about the only ones having access to the company store-room—the company commander, first sergeant, and artificer.

Q. Did your company have any surplus ammunition down there at Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind?—A. We had some surplus Krag ammunition and also some Springfield ammunition.

Q. Was any of this ammunition sold down there?—A. I know of 1,000 rounds that was sold; yes, sir.

Q. To whom?—A. To one H. M. Fields, of Brownsville.

Q. Tell us all you know about it.—A. All I know about it is I was told by the quartermaster-sergeant to deliver 1,000 rounds of ammunition to H. M. Fields and collect for it and turn the money over to him, the quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. Did you do this?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you deliver it?—A. To some man—a Mexican man—who was at that time employed by Mr. Fields. I presume he was one of his clerks.

Q. Did he pay you for it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. Ten dollars.

Q. What became of this money?—A. I have no idea, sir; I turned it over to the quartermaster-sergeant and got back to my company.

Q. You turned it over to whom?—A. The quartermaster-sergeant. His name was Joseph Cheeseman.

Q. Did you take this ammunition downtown and deliver it to Mr. Fields?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts was it delivered?—A. It was delivered at his store. I do not know what street it was on. There are only two streets in the city that I know the names of, one is Washington and the other—now what is the name—

Q. You took it to his store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Fields there himself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he hand you the money?—A. No, sir; it was handed me by the clerk, or by this Mexican man.

Q. And you handed this money to whom?—A. To Sergeant Cheeseman in person.

Q. Do you know what Sergeant Cheeseman did with the money?—A. I do not know exactly, sir; but I remember very distinctly when I gave him the money he said, "That will be a few more messes of vegetables." He remarked that he was going to buy vegetables for the company. I know personally he always carried a small slush fund for the company—that is, all the time I was artificer he always had a slush fund. He would sell bacon and dried fruit or anything the company did not use; he would sell that at the market price and buy vegetables from farmers, etc., for use of the company.

Q. Why do you call it a slush fund, selling bacon, etc., isn't that authorized?—A. I don't know whether it is authorized or not, but it has been the practice ever since I have been in the Army. Most of the quartermaster-sergeants we have had have always had a small slush fund; that is, one unbeknownst, as a rule, to the company commander, that was not carried in the company fund book.

Q. Did you deliver any ammunition to any other civilian than to Mr. Fields?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you receive any instructions about preparing some ammunition to be delivered to a civilian?—A. Yes, sir; I got an order one day from Corporal Means, now quartermaster-sergeant of K Company, to prepare 200 rounds to be turned over to him to be delivered to a party in town.

Q. Did you prepare that ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How?—A. I simply took small pasteboard boxes—20-round boxes—and wrapped them up in a piece of paper and tied a string around them to hold them together.

Q. To whom did you give this ammunition?—A. To Corporal, now Sergeant, Means, who was then company clerk and noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters at that time.

Q. Did he tell you that he had authority to take this ammunition?—A. Yes, sir. I asked him by whose orders it was I was to deliver this ammunition and he said he had an order from the company commander.

Q. Did he show you this order?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were any others present at the time?—A. No, sir; I don't think there was. The company was absent at that time—they were away on the range.

Q. Did you regard that as sufficient authority to give away property of the company, to have a man come to you and tell you he had an order from the company commander?—A. I think it would be sufficient authority—a man acting in his capacity at the time; he was in charge of the quarters, was the only noncommissioned officer there at the time. I considered it lawful or I would not have delivered it.

Q. How many rounds did you say there were?—A. There were 200 rounds in that package.

Q. Now, going back to this ammunition that was sold to Mr. Fields, how did you take that down to him—how was it carried to him?—A. In a carriage—that is, one of those hacks; one of those Mexican hacks.

Q. How was the ammunition; was it in pasteboard boxes?—A. It was in a wooden case.

Q. Original case; never been opened?—A. Never opened; no, sir.

Q. Did you carry that case down that way, or did you put it in another receptacle?—A. Put it in another box, a kerosene box.

Q. Why did you put it in a kerosene box?—A. That was the quartermaster-sergeant's orders, sir.

Q. For what purpose?—A. I do not know what his purpose was, sir; I do not know.

Q. He said nothing to you?—A. No, sir. He told me to put it in a kerosene box and deliver it to Mr. Fields.

Q. For whom were these 200 rounds intended that you prepared?—A. I understood, sir, it was for Mr. Creager, for the United States commissioner in the city.

Q. Did you hear what became of that ammunition after it was delivered to Mr. Creager?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you come up with the company, from Fort Brown up here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were artificer at the time the company came up here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any ammunition in a bandoleer or in several bandoleers left in the company quarters?—A. Yes, sir; I know of some that was left there.

Q. How was that?—A. It was left there through mistake, sir. We had orders to issue the company 10 rounds, that is, each man 10 rounds of ammunition, before we left Brownsville, and the sergeant told me to go to the ammunition box and get out as many bandoleers as I thought would be sufficient, and distribute this ammunition. We were very busy and I did not take time to count the ammunition, but pulled out some eight or nine bandoleers and carried them to the storeroom where it was distributed to the company. After that we had about two bandoleers with half of the ammunition left. I asked the sergeant what he was going to do with it. He said, "Leave it here and we will take it down with us in the morning." I got out early next morning—it was dark—and went to the storeroom to see if anything was left—the ammunition was hanging high and I did not think to look up for it and went away and left it there through oversight.

Q. Did you see ammunition either loose or in bandoleers lying around the company quarters, or behind the company quarters where any unauthorized person could get it?—A. You mean during our stay there, sir?

Q. Yes; and more especially about the time the company came back from the range.—A. Yes, sir. All of our empty shells and clips and bandoleers and also loose ammunition was stacked in the back yard between the quarters and the walls and it remained there, as well as I remember, until a day or two before we left.

Q. Where anybody could get it if they wanted it?—A. Yes, sir; anyone could have carried off the whole business if they had been a mind to, because there was no guard there at that time.

Q. Was not there room inside to place it?—A. No, sir. Our storeroom there is very limited—is very small—and as we were packing our stuff up—we had a great many boxes, packing boxes which took up considerable room and for this reason most of our packing had to be done on the outside, all of our company property was on the back porch for two or three days before we left until it was turned over to the quartermaster to ship. It was packed, marked, and loaded right down on the back porches.

Q. Wasn't any guard placed over this ammunition?—A. Not to my knowledge. I don't think there was, sir. At least I never seen any.

Q. Did you deliver the 200 rounds of ammunition to Mr. Creager?—A. No, sir; I did not, sir.

Q. To whom did you give them?—A. Sergeant Means.

Q. Now, Corporal, while you were artificer or at any other time during your connection with the company have you seen any surplus rifles around the company?—A. I seen six surplus rifles; yes sir; after we turned in our Krag rifles—I don't know whether they were surplus or not, but there were six not turned in.

Q. Your company had orders to turn in the Krag-Jørgensen rifles?—A. Yes, sir. We had orders to turn them in.

Q. And after these were boxed and shipped you saw six Krag-Jørgensen rifles around your company quarters?—A. Yes, sir; there were six after those were shipped.

Q. Did you help in packing these rifles to be turned in?—A. Yes, sir; I did practically all of it, sir.

Q. Do you remember how many rifles you packed?—A. I am not positive, sir, but I think 70.

Q. Were you told to pack a certain number?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that number—the number your company commander was accountable for on his papers?—A. Yes, sir; that is it exactly, sir.

Q. And you packed all he was accountable for on his papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there were six Krag-Jørgensen rifles left after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those rifles any special ones, or were they just any that had been turned in by the men—did you pick out six of them to be retained?—A. I selected them. I had orders from the quartermaster-sergeant to select six—he told me to pick out six of the best and pack up the other seventy, and as I packed them into the box one by one, when I came across one that looked to be a good one I inspected it carefully and if it turned out to be a good one I kept it out and kept this up until I had selected six and packed the rest.

Q. What did you do with the six then?—A. They were stored away over in the storeroom, sir.

Q. How were they stored, were they stored in boxes or not?—A. No, sir; they were packed on top of a shelf, a shelf probably a little higher than that one [refers to shelf about 7 feet high and about 2 feet wide], probably 2 feet higher than this. The shelf was also wider than this one and probably 8 feet high.

Q. Who gave you this order to pick out the six rifles?—A. The quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. What was his name?—A. Joseph Cheeseman.

Q. Was anything done to those rifles before they were put on the shelf?—A. Yes, sir. It was something like a week or more the sergeant came to me—the rifles were setting in the gun rack—he came to me and told me to take the official numbers off of them if I could—he asked me if I could do it and I told him I could. He told me to take the numbers off of them and put them away out of sight.

Q. How did you take these official numbers off?—A. With a center punch and a light hammer. A center punch is just a small punch, but has a small bullet on the end and forms a kind of groove across the numbers. The numbers are set in slightly, and by just tapping on the punch it makes a slight depression where the numbers were, and it destroys the numbers and at the same time it is almost unnoticeable.

A person just looking at the rifles could not tell what the number of the rifle was.

Q. Who was in command of the company at this time?—A. I am not positive about it, sir; I am not sure. I don't know whether it was Captain Kilburn or whether Lieutenant Parker had taken command, but it was just about the time that Captain Kilburn had—was relieved of the command.

Q. Can you tell me what month it was?—A. I am not sure, but it seems to me like the latter part of May.

Q. 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you fix it by anything happening around the company at that time or about that time?—A. That is, the date, you mean, sir?

Q. Yes; about that time?—A. I could not say exactly, sir; I do not remember. I was very busy at the time packing stuff and making arrangements to come here and shipping stuff to the range. I was working most every minute of the day and did not give the matter any serious thought at the time and am not positive about the date. As well as I remember it was some time in May—as well as I remember it was some time during the latter part of May; it may have been a little before or a little after.

Q. Do you remember any of the numbers that you crossed out?—A. No, sir; I never looked at the numbers.

Q. Where were those numbers—on what part of the gun were they?—A. They were along the left of the barrel, where the bullet goes in. The numbers are right near the chamber or breech, on the left-hand side as you look towards the muzzle.

Q. The number of the rifle, then, is what you mean by the official number?—A. Yes, sir; the number of the rifle.

Q. And that number is stamped in on part of the barrel itself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you put these rifles up on top of a shelf—you say a pretty high shelf?—A. Yes, sir; I judge about 7½ or 8 feet—I can not say exactly.

Q. Did Sergeant Cheeseman see you put them up there, or did he know that they were up there?—A. No, sir. He asked me later on where I had put them, and I told him they were up on top of the shelf.

Q. Now, what became of these rifles; did you pack them? You say you were packing the company property.—A. No, sir; I did not pack them. I do not remember of ever seeing them after that, with the exception of those two I seen at this post after the company came up here.

Q. Where are they now—those two?—A. I do not know, sir. I have not seen them since I was discharged. I was discharged the 10th of January. They were there just about the time—no, it was about three weeks after the company came back from Camp Mabry—I was straightening up in the storeroom and I seen the rifles—

Q. You came back from Camp Mabry when?—A. We came back some time, I think, in September.

Q. Last year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw these rifles in your company quarters at that time?—A. At that time, yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard anyone say anything about the disposition of these six rifles or what became of them, any of them or all of them?—

A. The only one I heard anything about was one I heard was sold by Sergeant Cheeseman to an ex-sergeant that used to be in the company. I do not know whether that was the truth or not.

Q. What was the name of the ex-sergeant?—A. His name was Sergt. James Short.

Q. Is he now in the service?—A. I do not know, sir; I don't think he is.

Q. Who told you that Sergeant Cheeseman had sold this rifle to Sergeant Short?—A. Sergeant Short told me himself, sir.

Q. Did he tell you the amount he paid for it?—A. As well as I remember, sir, he said he paid $14.25 for it.

Q. Did you hear of the disposal of any of the rest of these guns?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Only that one?—A. That is the only one I ever heard of being sold.

Q. Do you know to whom any of these guns whose numbers were altered had been issued—to what men?—A. Well, sir, as well as I remember—if there was no change made—one of the rifles kept out belonged to me—that is, it was one I had turned in before I received the new Springfield. There was one that we did not pack with the rest that belonged to Private Jebb, but I do not remember whether any one was put in its place or not.

Q. What do you mean by "we;" did anyone help you?—A. Private Jebb—he was helping me one day in the storeroom—he was in there helping me select these guns; he was also helping to pack them.

Q. Pack what?—A. He was helping me pack the rifles in the cases.

Q. Those that were to be sent away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Corporal, how does it come that you had surplus guns in your company?—A. I do not know, sir. I do not know where they came from. I was not with the company all the time—still I have been with it now on the fourth year, but how they came with the rifles I do not know. I did not know anything about the surplus rifles until we were ordered to turn ours in. Where they came from I do not know.

Q. Did you hear anything in the company as to the way they had become surplus?—A. I heard some men talking about it, yes sir, afterwards, but, as the saying goes in the Army, a man can hear most anything around a company.

Q. What did you hear these men say?—A. They claimed the rifles were either captured or were secured in some way in the Philippines.

Q. They were United States Government rifles, weren't they? I supposed they were Krag-Jørgensen rifles, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not likely that they would be captured, is it?—A. Yes, sir; quite a number were captured in the islands.

Q. That had been surrendered and recaptured?—A. Yes, sir; that way.

Q. Did you hear anyone say they had been gotten in any way other than having been captured?—A. I heard some man say they had been gotten when a casco was wrecked in the Philippine Islands—that they got them out of the wreck—but, of course, whether there is any truth in it or not I do not know.

Q. Can you tell me the names of any of the men who said this?—
A. No, sir; I do not have any recollection. Nearly all of the men that were there at that time have been discharged and left. We only have a very few now in the company that were with the company in the Philippines. I don't believe there are more than two or three.

Q. Name some of these.—A. One is Artificer Onan, and Sergeant McCarty.

Q. Were these six rifles the only ones you ever saw—that is, the only surplus rifles you ever saw—in the storeroom or around the company?—A. Yes; they were the only ones I ever saw, sir.

Q. Now, Corporal, you have testified here of the manner of disposal of one rifle.—A. Yes, sir; one that was sold to ex-Sergeant Short.

Q. Now, in your testimony before the Senate committee, didn't you state you had heard what had become of some other rifles—that is, surplus rifles?—A. The Senate committee asked me if I ever heard of any rifles that were given away, and I told them I do not know anything positive, but that I had heard some of the men say rifles had been given away.

Q. What did you hear—were given to whom?—A. Well, I understood one was given to Sergeant Sharpe, post quartermaster-sergeant at Fort Bliss, Lieutenant Schmidt, and one to Captain Church, of the Medical Department.

Q. That would account for four of them and would leave the two you have seen here.—A. Well, I do not know when these rifles were supposed to have been given away; don't know whether it was afterwards—that is, after we turned ours in—or not. It might have been before or afterwards; I don't remember which.

Q. When were you relieved as artificer of the company?—A. When I was discharged the 10th of last January—no; I was relieved and appointed a corporal just a day or so before I was discharged, but I was still in the storeroom until I left the company.

Q. The last time you saw these two rifles was around about September?—A. It was some time last summer. I do not remember exactly; possibly it was in August—along about August or September.

Q. Now, didn't you see them between summer and the time that you were discharged the service?—A. I don't remember of having seen them, sir.

Q. When you were discharged who was put in charge of the storeroom in your place?—A. Artificer Onan, sir.

Q. He is in charge of it now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell him anything about these surplus rifles?—A. No, sir.

Q. When he took your place?—A. No, sir; he had not been appointed when I left. He was appointed after I had gone away. He was appointed in my place, but he did not relieve me, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you were appointed corporal before you left?—A. I was, sir; I think a day or two before I left.

Q. And no artificer appointed then?—A. No, sir; he was appointed after I left.

Q. In your testimony at Washington the following appears [reads]:

Q. Do you know of anybody else selling or giving them away?

This refers to the rifles, and your answer is [reads]:

I understand Captain Kilburn has one himself.

What can you say about that?—A. Well, sir, I worked around Captain Kilburn's quarters, and before I left there there was one in his quarters.

Q. You did see one?—A. Yes, sir; also a lot of other old rifles and ammunition—in the way of old relics, I suppose. The Captain had a lot of curios—Mausers, bayonets, and the like—kind of junk, you might as well call it, in the way of rifles.

Q. You say you saw them in his quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was this?—A. A good many times. I was artificer of the company and was required to go there on numerous occasions in connection with my work.

Q. When was the last time you saw them?—A. The last time I remember seeing it was when I started packing Captain Kilburn's property just before he left Fort Brown.

Q. That was in what month and what year?—A. That was, I should think, in April or May, the latter part of April or May, the latter part of April, or somewhere along there.

Q. In what year?—A. 1906.

Q. Did you notice this gun? Did you see whether the number had been erased on it or not?—A. I never did look at it; no, sir. There was nothing special about it to attract my attention, and I never paid much attention to it. It was common thing in officers' quarters to have a rifle or bayonet around.

Q. You say you packed Captain Kilburn's property for shipping?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you carry that gun to the company quarters to be turned in?—A. I do not remember of it, sir; I do not remember turning it in.

Q. If it had been turned in, it would have been turned in to you or the quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Possibly it may have been turned over to the first sergeant. In case the quartermaster-sergeant or myself happened not to be there, the captain, if he had anything to be left for us, always left it in care of the first sergeant in our absence.

Q. Did you see the order—the written order from Lieutenant Parker—directing that those cartridges be turned over to Mr. Creager?—A. I don't remember exactly whether I did or not. I remember Sergeant Means came to me and says, "Ryan, I want you to get 200 rounds of Krag ammunition and tie it up for Mr. Creager." I asked him, I says, "Who gave you that order?" He says, "I have a written order from the company commander." I says, "Do they want me to take it down and deliver it to Mr. Creager?" He says, "No; turn it over to me; Mr. Creager is coming after them." I didn't like to do it much and hesitated; the corporal got pretty mad—that is, he got a little angry—about it and asked me whether I was running the company or whether the company commander was running it. I went back to the storeroom and studied over the matter. Of course the corporal was left in charge of the quarters; he was the only noncommissioned officer there, and there was no commissioned officer there, and as I had received orders I thought the matter over of course and packed the ammunition up and turned it over to him.

Q. How did you pack it?—A. I wrapped it up in wrapping paper and tied a string around it to keep it from falling apart.

Q. When was this?—A. That was some time during the month of June; the company was down at the target range.

Q. This was Krag ammunition?—A. Yes, sir; Krag ammunition.

Q. In packing the rifles to be sent away, six good ones were retained and the rest shipped, as I understand?—A. Yes, sir; all the rest were shipped, sir.

Q. What was the object in erasing those numbers and putting the guns upon the shelf, as you testified?—A. Well, the only object I had was I just obeying orders of the sergeant—I did it by his orders.

Q. He gave you the orders to do that?—A. Yes, sir; I never did anything without being told by him or the company commander.

Q. Did he say anything to you in reference to these guns—about the disposition of them in any manner?—A. Never mentioned it to me; no, sir. Well, I did hear him remark they were for sale. It seems to me, as well as I recollect, he asked me if I knew anybody who wanted to buy any—told me if I saw anybody who wanted to buy one to send them to him. I never saw anybody and never looked for anybody.

Q. Did he state for what purpose he wanted to sell the rifles, whether it was for the company fund or not, or for the company?—A. No, sir. He told me—I asked him what the price of the rifles would be—I was thinking a little about buying one myself, and he said he couldn't take less than the Government price for them. "They belong to the company," he says, "and the money is to be used in the company fund, and I couldn't take a cent less than the actual cost of the rifles." That is, as well as I remember, $14.25.

Q. When was the first time that you saw these rifles?—A. That was when I was packing up—it was some time in May—May or probably the first part of June, some two or three weeks before they were finally shipped.

Q. When was Sergeant Short discharged?—A. I do not remember exactly when it was, sir; but it was some time after the company got back from Camp Mabry—it was some time from September until I was discharged.

Q. Some time between September and the end of the year, last year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did Sergeant Short buy this rifle, according to the information you have had?—A. According to the information I had, he bought it and paid for it at Brownsville.

Q. At Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir. Yet he did not take possession of the rifle until he reached here—that was some time last fall that he took the rifle and shipped it or took it home with him or shipped it, I don't know what he did with it.

Q. Who told you all this?—A. I don't remember who it was. Sergeant Short mentioned it to me before we left Fort Brown, and after we got here he was talking to me about his buying one of these rifles. I knew he contemplated buying one of them for a long time.

Q. Did anybody else speak to you about this—Sergeant Short's transaction?—A. I do not recollect anyone ever mentioning it.

Q. Did the quartermaster-sergeant say anything to you about it?—
A. No; he never mentioned any of his company business to me outside of the storeroom.

Q. Who was the quartermaster-sergeant at the time Short was discharged?—A. Sergeant Means was quartermaster-sergeant at the time he was discharged.

Q. Did you pack that rifle you say you saw in Captain Kilburn's quarters—that Krag rifle—at the time you packed his property?—
A. I do not recollect seeing it at the time I packed his property.

Q. You say you have no recollection of seeing it, and that you have no recollection of packing it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what became of it?—A. I have no idea, sir.

Q. How were loose guns—that is, guns in use by the company—taken care of—how were they kept in the storeroom?—A. They were all kept in racks, sir. We had a rack about 5 inches from the floor for the butt of the guns to rest on—that was on the left of the door—a short sack in the corner, and there was a longer one over in the corner near the fireplace, the guns are placed in these when not in use; but there is no lock and key on the racks, but of course the storeroom is locked at all times.

Q. And the six surplus guns. Were they kept in the same racks?—
A. Yes, sir; they set there for some time after we had packed the rifles that were accounted for and shipped them away.

Q. Then, when you erased the numbers you put them up on the shelf?—A. Yes, sir; I took them out of the rack myself, erased the numbers, and the sergeant told me to put them away out of sight so nobody could see them in case they came in. He told me he didn't want anybody to know they were there—he meant an inspector might come, I suppose, I did not know—I did not ask him.

Q. Did you report to your company commander that there were six surplus guns, or any surplus guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you report that fact to any officer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you report it to your first sergeant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you talk to any officer, noncommissioned officer, or any other enlisted man about those six surplus guns?—A. Why, I suppose it has been mentioned from time to time among the men in the company, sir; I don't remember making it a point to tell anybody about it; in fact, I never thought anything about it much, myself—most any man in the company at that time, I suppose most any of them would tell you, any of them who were there at the time—it was no secret throughout the company about the surplus guns being there.

Q. Now, tell me the names of some men who are now in the company and who knew of the surplus rifles being there—being in the company at that time—some who are still in the company, and would know it at that time.—A. Well, Private Jebb—he seen them, and, of course, I suppose Sergeant Means and Sergeant McCarty and Sergeant Wesner. Of course I don't know whether they ever seen the rifles or not. Probably they have heard something about them. I am not sure, but they should have heard about them same as anyone else.

Q. Who is the first sergeant of the company?—A. Frank Butler, sir.

Q. Was he in the company at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position did he have in the company at that time?—
A. Duty sergeant.

Q. Or was he company clerk?—A. He was duty sergeant at that time, at the time we left there, sir. He was company clerk some time ago, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with the present artificer, Onan, in reference to these rifles, the disposition of them?—A. Not that I know of, sir. I don't remember that I did, sir.

Q. Do you remember what you testified before the Senate Military Committee in regard to that matter?—A. I do, sir.

Q. And what was that?—A. I stated before the Senate Military Committee that Onan had told me he had to turn his rifle in, as Lieutenant Schmidt was going to take it, and that he did turn it in and Lieutenant Schmidt was going to take it away.

Q. Take it where?—A. I don't know, sir. He told me Lieutenant Schmidt told him one of the rifles had been given to him and that he had selected Onan's rifle; that he had shot with that rifle at Ringgold in 1905, and that he liked it, and that was the reason he selected Onan's rifle.

Q. Did Lieutenant Schmidt leave the company about that time?—
A. Yes, sir; a short time after that—it was not long after that.

Q. I will read your testimony here. It says, "You know Lieutenant Schmidt shot with it up at the range and fell in love with it, and he is going away and the captain told him he could have a rifle and so he selected mine to take away with him." Now, in the testimony, the artificer states that the lieutenant took that rifle away with him—was that a correct statement?—A. Yes, sir; that is the way I understood it at the time. Of course I did not see Lieutenant Schmidt when he went away, and don't know that he took the rifle.

Q. I am not asking you if he took the rifle, I am asking if that is a correct statement made to you.—A. Yes, sir; as well as I remember it was.

Q. Who was captain at that time?—A. Captain Kilburn.

Q. The captain he refers to here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean Capt. D. W. Kilburn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Onan turn his rifle in to the company and get credit for it?—A. Yes, sir; I should think so; everybody turned in their rifles.

Q. At the time you refer to in your last answers, did Artificer Onan turn in his rifle to be given to Lieutenant Schmidt?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Who was the artificer at that time?—A. As well as I remember, sir, it was Edward Case, a man named Case.

Q. Where did this conversation between you and Onan occur?—
A. In the squad room.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. Upstairs in the squad room at Fort Brown, Tex.

Q. What time was this?—A. In 1905, sir; shortly after we came back to Fort Brown from Fort Ringgold.

Q. Was the captain present with the company at that time?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you know whether Lieutenant Schmidt took this rifle away with him or not?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did you pack up Lieutenant Schmidt's property for shipment?—A. No, sir; I was not artificer at that time, sir.

Q. When were you first relieved as artificer?—A. That was at Ringgold—during target practice at Ringgold.

Q. In what month was that?—A. As well as I remember it was either June or July.

Q. 1905?—A. 1905; yes, sir.

Q. Why were you relieved at that time?—A. Why, as well as I remember, I believe I was absent overnight.

Artificer NOBLE ONAN, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testified as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Noble Onan, artificer, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been in Company K?—A. I have been in Company K since October 10, 1901.

Q. How long have you been artificer of the company?—A. This last time I have been artificer about three months and a half. I was artificer once before—during my first enlistment.

Q. Whom did you relieve as artificer this last time?—A. I did not relieve anyone, sir. Corporal Ryan was discharged and went away, and when he was discharged and went away I was appointed in his place.

Q. How long a time elapsed between his discharge and your appointment?—A. It was about three or four days, sir; I don't remember just exactly.

Q. As artificer, did you have charge of the company property?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have access to the storeroom. I can go in there and work, handle the stuff, but do not have charge of it.

Q. Have you seen around the company, or in the company store-room, or anywhere else around the company, any surplus rifles; that is, rifles that were not borne upon the company property return?—A. No, sir; I have not—not since I have been artificer I haven't saw any.

Q. Did you see any rifles—that is, any rifles that were surplus before you were appointed artificer?—A. No, sir; I did not know of any surplus rifles—never saw any—did not know of any at all. If there were any in the company, I never saw them.

Q. Did you ever hear of any surplus rifles or have any conversation with anybody in regard to surplus rifles in the company?—A. I don't think I did, sir. I may have heard it mentioned that there were surplus rifles, but I did not know that they were there myself.

Q. You were at Fort Ringgold in 1905?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the target practice there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What conversation did you have with present Corporal Ryan in regard to surplus rifles at that time?—A. I did not have any conversation with him at all in regard to surplus rifles. If I did, I don't remember it. I don't remember anything about it. I did not mention surplus rifles to him or anything about it. If there were surplus rifles, I didn't know anything about it.

Q. What conversation did you have with him regarding giving up your rifle to Lieutenant Schmidt?—A. Well, now, I had a rifle, and it was a good rifle—a good shooting gun—Lieutenant Schmidt had used it up on the range, and it seems he taken a liking to it, and he wanted a gun—they were going to have target practice down there on the grounds—they had a small range outside of the company's ground—he wanted to practice himself, you know, and I had orders from the quartermaster-sergeant to turn this gun over, and I turned it over to the quartermaster-sergeant, and I mentioned it to Ryan. I told him, I says, “I am going to lose my gun.” He says, “How is that?” “I have got orders,” I says, “to turn it over to the quartermaster-sergeant,” which I did. I don’t know where it went, and I never saw it any more.

Q. Did you say anything to Corporal Ryan, as he is now, in reference to Lieutenant Schmidt taking your gun away?—A. No, sir; I did not. I did not know what he was going to do with it. I don’t even know that he got it—don’t know whether he got the gun or not.

Q. Did you tell Corporal Ryan that the captain had given Lieutenant Schmidt your gun—that Captain Kilburn had given him a gun?—A. No, sir; I don’t remember ever mentioning the captain’s name at all, sir. His name might have been mentioned, but I don’t remember it.

Q. Then, you gave up your gun by order of the quartermaster-sergeant?—A. On the orders of the quartermaster-sergeant; yes, sir.

Q. Who was the quartermaster-sergeant at that time?—A. Sergeant Cheeseman.

Q. What conversation did you ever hear in the company in regard to surplus rifles?—A. I don’t know that I ever heard any conversation at all, sir, in regard to surplus rifles. I have heard it mentioned that there were surplus rifles at that time in the company, but I don’t know where they came from. I did not see any, and I was in the storeroom as artificer two years, and if there had been any surplus guns it looks like I would have saw them.

Q. When were you artificer and in the storeroom—that is, the two years that you state?—A. 1901 to 1903, sir.

Q. Were there any surplus rifles in the company at that time?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. You would most likely have known it if there had been any surplus rifles at that time?—A. I think I would; yes, sir. I never kept the property books and never kept the rifles, but I think I would have known it if there had been any extra guns.

Q. Weren’t you there with the quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn’t he have charge of the rifles at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is it not quite likely you would have heard about them?—A. Yes, sir; more than likely I would.

Q. And you never heard from him or had any talk with him about any rifles that were surplus—that is, rifles that were not accounted for on the property return?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Can you recollect the name of any man in the company that you heard mention anything about the surplus rifles?—A. No, sir; I can not. Most of the men now in the company are new men; there are only a few now in the company that were with it at that time.

Q. But there are some in the company—that is, some old men in the company?—A. Yes, sir; very few.

Q. Do you recollect whether any of them spoke to you or had any conversation with you or talked to you in regard to surplus rifles?—A. No, sir; I do not. I don’t remember any name I ever heard mention it. I don’t remember who it was at all.

Q. Did you remain at Fort Brown after the company left to go to Camp Mabry or did you come with the company?—A. No, sir; I came with the company.

Q. Did you ever hear that a rifle was given to Lieutenant Schmidt, or to Post Quartermaster-Sergeant Sharp, or that the captain had a rifle in his possession that was not on the papers?—A. I don't think that I did, sir. I remember nothing about it at all. If I heard anything about it I don't remember it.

Q. Never heard anybody say anything in regard to these matters?—A. No, sir; I don't think I ever did.

Q. Are there any surplus rifles in the company now?—A. No, sir. If there is I don't know anything about it. I have never saw any since I have been the artificer.

Q. Have you been in your company storeroom recently?—A. Yes, sir; I have been all through it, seen everything in it.

Q. How long ago?—A. Two or three weeks ago. I have to go there every once in a while, and if there had been a rifle in there I would more than likely have found it.

Q. Have you ever seen around your company any rifles with the numbers erased?—A. No, sir; I have never seen any in my life; no, sir; never did.

Q. When you turned in your rifle at Fort Ringgold, what became of it?—A. I never turned it in at Fort Ringgold, sir.

Q. Did you turn it in after you came back?—A. Yes, sir; two or three weeks after we came back to Fort Brown—I don't remember how long but it was quite a long time.

Q. You never saw it after that time?—A. No, sir. After I turned it in to the storeroom I never saw it. I do not know where it went to.

Q. Did you help pack Lieutenant Schmidt's property for shipment when he left?—A. No, sir; I don't think he had any property to pack.

Q. Have you any surplus ammunition in your company?—A. No, sir; we have not.

Q. You are artificer now?—A. Yes, sir. There is none in the storeroom, probably the men may have some in their lockers to keep as relics, but there is none in the storeroom—not a one.

Q. Do you know of any ammunition being sold?—A. No, sir; I do not. Don't know anything about ammunition being sold at all—never was interested in that.

Q. How do the men get this surplus ammunition that you state they may have in their possession?—A. How did they get them?

Q. Yes?—A. Why, on the target range lots of times, probably they would put some in their pockets—that is, if they have got it—I don't know that they have got any—I have not saw any. I haven't saw a Krag ball in I don't know how long, but it has been a long time, though.

Q. You spoke of them getting them on the target range—how do they get them there?—A. Well, it may be they would be issued so many rounds to fire and they would not fire them all, and they would take them away on their person.

Q. Is there no accountability—no record of the number of rounds that they get?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is there no record kept of the number they fire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, how could they have a surplus?—A. It is easy enough to get surplus ammunition on a range. They could easily enough have 10 or 12 rounds to fire in a skirmish run and not fire them all—something like that.

Q. If you were short in the ammunition that had been issued to you, could you go to the quartermaster-sergeant and get more to replace it?—A. Yes, sir; I could.

Q. Which would probably be charged to you?—A. I don't know that it would—never seen a case of that kind where it was charged. It is very seldom that a case like that comes up. We issue a man 10 rounds, which is put on the property book just the same as a rifle is charged—10 rounds to each man—and I have never saw a case yet where any of them had lost their ammunition.

Q. Do men ever give their ammunition away?—A. I don't know, sir. I never did. I never saw anybody give any away.

Q. You have never given any away?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never given any away to any of the rangers or anyone else?—A. No, sir; I have not. I would not have given it to the rangers if I had had a carload of it—I don't like them well enough.

First Sergt. FRANK G. BUTLER, sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. State your name, rank, company, and regiment.—A. Frank G. Butler, first sergeant, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been in Company K?—A. Since June, 1904.

Q. What positions have you held in the company?—A. I was company clerk, corporal, sergeant, first sergeant since that time up to the present time.

Q. When were you company clerk—between what times?—A. From the latter part of 1904 until about December, 1905—not all that time, but during that time.

Q. Where was the company stationed during that time?—A. At Fort Brown, Tex.

Q. The latter part of 1904?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You joined the company at Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear at any time of any surplus rifles in the company? By surplus I mean rifles that were not borne on the property return.—A. I remember hearing that the company had some extra rifles in the Philippines before they were brought back to the States, but I did not hear whether they brought the extra rifles with them or not. The rifles, other than those actually in use, were kept in the storeroom, and I never had anything to do with the storeroom.

Q. You were in the orderly room and made the property returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not quite probable that you would have heard it if there had been surplus rifles?—A. Well, I do not know; might have heard it and might not.

Q. Did not you have to account for certain property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to property returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the company had been short any property or there had been any surplus is it not quite likely you would have heard it?—A. If there had been any surplus the company commander, I suppose, would have told me to take them up.

Q. And he did not direct you to take any up on the return?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear or did anybody tell you anything about any rifles being surplus in the company storeroom there at Fort Brown?—A. I have no recollection that anybody ever told me.

Q. You heard nothing at all about them either in casual conversation with any of the company clerks?—A. Only just as I have stated, that the company had some in the Philippines.

Q. You never had any shortage of guns?—A. No, sir.

Q. How are guns issued to men—how is accountability kept of guns that are issued to men?—A. Each man is issued one rifle and the number recorded opposite the man's name on the property book.

Q. Were you company clerk at the time the Krag rifles were turned in and the Springfield rifles substituted?—A. No, sir; I had been relieved prior to that time.

Q. Who relieved you?—A. I think Corporal Means; I am not sure, but I think it was Corporal Means. He is now quartermaster-sergeant. He was company clerk at the time.

Q. About last June—1906?—A. Yes, sir. I was on detached service at that time with a topographical survey and I was not in the company when the rifles were turned in.

Q. When the men turn in their guns for any reason are they examined to see that they turn in the same gun that was issued to them?—

A. Yes, sir; that is the duty of the quartermaster-sergeant to see that they turn in the same gun that was issued to them, but very often guns are exchanged. Some times when a man is discharged who has a good gun that some one else wants they will exchange guns, but they will have to look up the quartermaster-sergeant and have the numbers changed on the book—on the property book.

Q. When you were out on this survey, did you give any ammunition away, or did you see any ammunition given away?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were there any rangers with you at any time during this survey?—A. No, sir. There was one second lieutenant, myself, and two privates and nobody else.

Q. Was Private Jebb with you?—A. No, sir; he was not with the same party. Jebb was with Lieutenant Harris, I was with Lieutenant Hanford—a different detail altogether.

Q. Do you know where Sergeant Short, formerly of your company, is now?—A. No, sir; I have never heard of him since he has been discharged. I don't think anybody in the company ever heard from him after he left.

Q. Do you know where Sergeant Cheeseman is now?—A. No, sir; but I would like to know.

Q. Have you had any notification in the company of his being reenlisted?—A. No, sir; not up to the present time.

Q. Do your company records show where his home was?—A. I think he gives his home as United States Army. The home of a man who has had more than two or three enlistments is given as United States Army.

Q. Do the books show what relatives he wished to have informed in case of accident to him?—A. I don't know; they should show; I can tell by looking it up.

Q. Why would you like to know where Sergeant Cheeseman is?—A. Because when the sergeant left the company he carried the reputation of being dishonest—he went off with our library funds. If I knew where he was I would like to try to get these funds, as I was interested in the library.

Quartermaster-Sergeant MEANS, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. James A. Means, quartermaster-sergeant, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Since August of last year.

Q. What positions did you have in the company prior to this?—A. Corporal and company clerk.

Q. At the same time?—A. No, sir; I was company clerk before I was made sergeant.

Q. Before you were made sergeant you were company clerk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between what times were you company clerk; what dates?—A. I was company clerk from about November, 1905, until August, 1906, when I was made a sergeant. I think those are about the dates, I am not positive.

Q. At Fort Brown were there any surplus rifles in your company?—A. I have heard it said that there were, but I don't know only from hearsay, I never saw any.

Q. I mean by surplus rifles rifles that are not carried on the property return.—A. Yes, sir; that is what I understood you to mean.

Q. What did you hear; what is the substance?—A. Well, I heard, casually, that there were several surplus rifles they had over in the islands, but I am sure I never saw any of them.

Q. Who are some of the men that told you there were surplus rifles?—A. I could not say now, sir; it has been so long ago I can't say; just casually talking among the men, that is all my knowledge.

Q. Did the first sergeant of the company say anything to you about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the quartermaster-sergeant or artificer say anything about them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any surplus guns in the company since you have been quartermaster-sergeant?—A. No, sir; there was never any turned over to me, no guns or ammunition of any kind in excess of what was accounted for.

Q. Did you see any guns in the storeroom at any time that were not accounted for on the property return?—A. No, sir.

Q. As company clerk you would know how many guns were on the return, and following it up as quartermaster-sergeant you would know how many guns you would be accountable for?—A. Yes, sir; I would know how many I had in the storeroom.

Q. At any time were any guns in the storeroom or around the barracks or any other place you know of, any rifles that were not on the papers?—A. Not to my knowledge; no, sir.

Q. Corporal Ryan has testified that he erased the numbers on some rifles, that these rifles were surplus in the company, and that he saw two of the rifles after he came here.—A. That is possible.

Q. Now, have you any knowledge of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen these rifles here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about them?—A. When I was made quartermaster-sergeant at Camp Mabry, Sergeant Cheeseman—I relieved him. He was quartermaster-sergeant. I was home about two weeks, then we went to Camp Mabry. In the meantime he had been up and down to Camp Mabry and the quarters, and I do not know whether he unpacked any rifles or had any rifles there at that time or not. I know there were none in the storeroom when I came back there.

Q. None around the company since you took charge?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. Have you ever seen any rifles with the numbers erased on them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Blocked out by any tool?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at Fort Ringgold with the company at target practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give Onan any instructions about turning in his gun?—A. No, sir. I was a private then.

Q. Were you not company clerk then?—A. No, sir. Well, I was, temporarily, only for several days.

Q. Now, do you recall telling Onan to turn in his gun, that Lieutenant Schmidt wanted it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you company clerk at the time the Krag rifles were shipped back to the arsenal from Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear anyone say at that time that there were some rifles in the storeroom that had not been shipped, that were surplus and not on the property accountability?—A. No, sir; I don't have any recollection of hearing anything of the kind.

Q. Did you send a list of the numbers of these rifles that were turned in at that time?—A. Yes, sir; I made a list of the numbers of the rifles that were put in the box, put in with the guns, also a screw-driver.

Q. A list of the rifles—that is, the numbers in each box was put in the box?—A. Well, I suppose it was put in the box. I made out a list of the numbers and turned it over to the artificer—he did the packing. He would bring a list to me in the orderly room and I would make it out on the typewriter.

Q. Were those lists the same as those that had been issued to you—originally to the company?—A. Yes, sir; they were company rifles that were packed the same, I suppose, as were on the invoices and receipts.

Q. Was any comparison made between the numbers you sent away and the lists of the numbers that were received from the arsenal when the guns were received?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. Then there might have been some rifles that were not on the invoices of the company sent back, could there?—A. I suppose it might be possible; sometimes guns are exchanged.

Q. It has been testified here that six rifles were altered by erasing the numbers on them, that these six rifles were not shipped back, that they were surplus and were left in the company room. Now, that change could have been made without being detected unless you compared the number of the rifles as they were invoiced to you from the arsenal with the numbers that were shipped, could it?—A. Yes, sir. If the numbers—if the list which was received with the guns had been retained.

Q. Were they not kept?—A. I don't know, I never seen them.

Q. Was Corporal Ryan the artificer in June, 1906, May or June, 1906?—A. I think so.

Q. At the time the company was at Point Isabell for target practice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give him any instructions at that time in reference to 200 rounds of ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were those instructions?—A. I gave him instructions to have 200 rounds of ammunition brought to me from the storeroom that I was to give Mr. Creager, of Brownsville, on the written order of Lieutenant Parker.

Q. Who was Lieutenant Parker?—A. He was first lieutenant of the company.

Q. Was he in command of the company at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What directions did he give you in regard to these cartridges—simply to give them to Mr. Creager?—A. Yes, sir; the order read something like this, if I remember right: "Corporal Means: Have 200 rounds of ammunition brought from the storeroom and Mr. Creager will call for them in the morning," or in the afternoon I think it was.

Q. This was a written order you received?—A. Yes, sir; a kind of a pencil notation; yes, sir.

Q. Did you give them to Mr. Creager?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were they wrapped up?—A. They were just wrapped up in paper.

Q. They were in the original boxes—pasteboard boxes—with a paper around them?—A. I think so; I did not open them at all.

Q. The artificer handed you the paper package consisting of these 200 rounds and you gave them to Mr. Creager?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you give them to him?—A. In the orderly room; he called for them.

Q. Did he pay you anything for them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know for what purpose they were intended?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what was done with them after he got them?—A. No, sir; but I suppose for hunting purposes. I didn't ask about that at all; it was none of my affairs. I was just carrying out orders of the company commander.

Q. Have you that penciled slip giving the order?—A. No, sir.

Q. Threw it away?—A. I think so; or laid it on the desk, probably, and became lost. I haven't seen it since.

Q. Did you remain at Fort Brown after the company left to come up here or to Camp Mabry?—A. No, sir; I came with the company.

Q. Do you know anything about some ammunition being sold there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either in bandoleers or loose?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it.

Q. Did you see any loose ammunition around or behind the barracks or in the back yard after the company returned from Point Isabell from the target range?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you made an examination of your company property in the company storeroom here recently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long ago?—A. About two weeks.

Q. Can you swear positively, as the result of this examination, that there is no surplus rifle in your company now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you swear positively that you do not know or have not heard of any rifles being disposed of that were surplus in your company?—A. That were disposed of?

Q. Yes; has anybody disposed of any surplus rifles I mean?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have heard nothing and know nothing, excepting those remarks and reports that have been going around your company?—A. That is all, sir.

Q. Know nothing of your own knowledge and have never seen any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it the custom down at Fort Brown, owing to the difficulty in getting supplies in the way of sporting goods—was it not the custom to loan to reliable citizens in town ammunition to be returned at such time as they could get their supplies?—A. Yes, sir.

JOSEPH J. BARNETT, being sworn and questioned by Lieutenant-Colonel French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Private Joseph J. Barnett. Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Were you in Company K at Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain at Fort Brown after the company left to come up here some time last summer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you or your party clean up the barracks after the company left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you find in reference to clothing and ammunition there?—A. Well, there was quite a lot of cast-off clothing that had been worn by the men and quite a lot of loose ammunition that was left.

Q. What kind of ammunition was this?—A. Both the Springfield and the Krag-Jørgensen.

Q. Any Springfield ammunition in bandoleers?—A. Yes, sir; there was one bandoleer that I know of.

Q. Where did you find that?—A. That was found in the first sergeant's room.

Q. Who was the first sergeant at that time?—A. Sergeant Rose.

Q. Whereabouts did you find them?—A. It was hanging behind a curtain. We hung his clothing upon a wire which held the curtain and the ammunition was hanging behind this curtain.

Q. What disposition was made of this loose ammunition?—A. Well, as we cleaned up the squad room, we swept out, and picked up the loose ammunition and put it in a box. As well as I remember it was an ammunition box. It was dumped in there and put out on the back porch, but what became of it I don't know; it was all thrown in there loose. Those little Mexican boys were hanging around, and when we would throw out any articles of clothing they would grab them and run with it, and I am under the impression that these Mexican boys carried the ammunition off with them. I think they did. I can not swear that they taken it, but I think they did. At least it disappeared.

Q. Who was in charge of your party?—A. Sergeant Snyder.

Q. He is here now?—A. No, sir; he is discharged.

Q. Do you know where he is?—A. I think he is in Washington—Washington State.

Q. Is he in the service now?—A. No, sir; not unless he has recently reenlisted.

Q. Was any of this surplus ammunition sold that you know of?—A. Not to my knowledge; no, sir.

Q. Was any of it given away? Any that you know of?—A. No, sir.

Q. About how much loose ammunition was there?—A. There must have been—that is, including both the Springfield and the Krag—between five and six hundred rounds, but there was more of the Krag than there was of the Springfield.

Q. Where was this ammunition?—A. Out on the back porch.

Q. Was there not room on the inside of the quarters?—A. Well, we were cleaning up, sweeping the room, cleaning off the shelves, and we threw the ammunition out in the box and carried it out on the back porch—we could not leave it in the quarters.

Q. You testified that this ammunition disappeared—how do you know that it disappeared?—A. Well, when we got through in the afternoon I came back to look for it and looked in the box and it was gone; I do not know where it went or anything about it.

Q. Could it not have been taken indoors. Could not the sergeant have put it away and you not have known?—A. No, sir; I looked in every room in the building. I remained in K Company's quarters until I came up here—slept there.

Q. Did you say anything to the sergeant about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there no conversation at all about it?—A. There were no questions asked about the ammunition at all more than was made by me. I remarked, "I wish I was going a hunting; I would have all the ammunition here I would want," and some one says, I don't know who it was, he says, "It is a pity." I am under the impression, but I can't swear to it, that those little Mexican boys, scavengers, we called them, carried it away, because they were grabbing everything we threw out in the yard, taking cast-off clothing and everything.

Q. Did you find anything else in the company barracks besides ammunition and clothing?—A. No, sir; that is all.

Sergt. CHARLES A. McCARTY, being sworn and questioned by Lieutenant-Colonel French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Sergt. Charles A. McCarty, K Company, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been in K Company?—A. Ever since it has been organized, except about nine months when I was absent.

Q. Were you with the company at Fort Brown, Tex.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have charge of the company storeroom at any time while you were there at Fort Brown?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. How long have you been a sergeant of the company?—A. Four months.

Q. Were you ever company clerk at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Artificer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Sergeant, have you heard at any time in the company that there were any surplus rifles? Have you heard any report or talk among the men at any time that there were surplus rifles?—A. No, sir; I don't remember of ever hearing anything in regard to surplus rifles. I heard there were surplus rifles, but never gave it much thought.

Q. What I mean by surplus rifles is rifles not carried on the company return.—A. What I always supposed were surplus rifles was rifles in the storeroom not on the company papers.

Q. Were you with the company in the Philippines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know about the wrecking of a casco or barota out there with rifles and other Government property aboard.—A. There was one wrecked while we were on the way to Nueva Caceres.

Q. Give me the circumstances.—A. All I know in regard to it the boat sunk. I suppose the rifles went down with it, because four men were drowned among one of the companies. Others swam ashore and they left their rifles.

Q. Rifles went down with it?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose they did; I do not know; but I don't suppose they swam ashore with them, as they had to swim almost half a mile.

Q. Did they ever get any of these rifles?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever hear any remark in the company or elsewhere that any of these rifles that went down with the boat had been secured later on?—A. No, sir. We went direct from there to Samar and never returned there at all until a year and a half afterwards.

Q. And never heard of the rifles being secured at that time?—A. No, sir. I was a new man in the company at that time and did not know what the army regulations were, and if I had heard it I would not have given it much thought, because I would not have realized what they were talking about.

Q. Then you have heard nothing at all in reference to the company not accounted for on the company papers—in other words, surplus rifles?—A. No, sir; except that I heard some of the men talking about this case here.

Q. What did you hear?—A. I heard that an investigation was being made about surplus rifles in K Company. That is all I heard.

Q. Do you know where Sergeant Short is?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where Sergeant Cheeseman is?—A. I heard that Cheeseman was in Alabama somewhere.

Q. What place in Alabama?—A. I do not know; I heard it, but I don't remember the name.

Q. Who told you he was there?—A. I don't recollect. It was just after he was discharged, I asked somebody where he was and he told me Alabama. I asked where he lived, because he went away with our library fund—I was interested in that.

Capt. HANSON E. ELY, being sworn and questioned by Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. Please give your name, rank, regiment, and your command now.—A. Hanson E. Ely, captain, Twenty-sixth Infantry, commanding Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been in command of the company?—A. Since the 9th of December, 1906.

Q. Have you at any time made a careful inventory of the company property, the property that you were accountable for?—A. Yes, sir. On or about the 2d of January I took an inventory to see that all the property reported turned over by the preceding company commander, First Lieutenant Richardson, was on hand, and found it to be there. Since the report of the Senate investigating committee, in Washington, was published, about six weeks ago, I took Lieutenant Richardson with me and made a careful inventory for the express purpose of ascertaining if there was any Krag ammunition or rifles in the storeroom, because it had been stated that there had been some at Brownsville; but I could not find any whatsoever.

Q. You received the property from whom?—A. Well, I received it from Lieutenant Richardson, but I receipted to Captain Kilburn for it. Between the administration of Captain Kilburn and myself, for a certain period, Lieutenant Richardson had command of the company, but did not take over the ordnance, and I receipted directly to Captain Kilburn for the company ordnance.

Q. Did you ever hear anything as to the character of Sergeant Cheeseman since he has been discharged?—A. I only know what the first sergeant and the quartermaster-sergeant have told me in reference to a company library fund. I inquired about the library which we are getting up for use in the Philippines, and they told me that Sergeant Cheeseman, who was formerly the quartermaster-sergeant of the company, had collected a sum from the men of the company, I think about $27, and that he carried this away with him. That is all I really know about his character.

Lieut. MACK RICHARDSON, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. H. F. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. Please state your name, rank, regiment, and company.—A. Mack Richardson, first lieutenant, Twenty-sixth Infantry, K Company.

Q. Were you in command of K Company at any time during the past year?—A. Yes, sir; I was in command of K Company from the 9th or 10th of September until the early part of December. I think Captain Ely relieved me—that is, I was nominally in charge, but I was on sick report most of the time—was on sick report from the 1st of October to the middle of February.

Q. Who was really in command of the company at the time you were on sick report?—A. I think Mr. Gillis was in command at the time.

Q. Did you take any inventory of the property or receipt for the property?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What did you find when you made your inventory?—A. Well, I took the property over from Lieutenant Parker, who had, or had had charge of the company. I only made a hurried inventory—just satisfied myself that all of the property was there.

Q. When was this?—A. That was long about—must have been about the 7th or 8th of September.

Q. Did you go into your company storeroom at that time?—A. Yes, sir; made inventory of the property in the storeroom at that time; yes, sir.

Q. Did you find any surplus rifles or ammunition in the company storeroom at that time?—A. We found no surplus rifles, but I did not count the ammunition—I just took his word for it. There was some in the storeroom, but whether there was any surplus I do not know.

Q. Did Lieutenant Parker tell you anything about any rifles being surplus at that time?—A. No, sir; he did not mention it.

Q. Did you hear anything about the company having any surplus rifles at that time?—A. At that time; no, sir.

Q. Or any other time?—A. Nothing until this testimony was given before the Senate committee at Washington. When the question came up Captain Ely and I went down and took inventory of the property in the storeroom.

Q. What was the result of this inventory?—A. We found no surplus rifles at all.

Q. How long have you been connected with Company K?—A. Only since September.

Q. Only since September?—A. Yes, sir. I was adjutant two years prior to that time, battalion adjutant.

Q. Of the Third Battalion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At any time have you heard of any rifles being surplus in K Company or in any of the other companies?—A. I don't remember, sir, of having heard anything.

Q. At no time?—A. No, sir. If I did I don't recollect it now.

Q. By surplus I mean the usual acceptation of the term—that is, rifles that are not on the papers.—A. Not on paper; that is what I understood.

Q. Have you ever heard of the numbers on any rifles being obliterated?—A. Nothing only what I saw in the newspapers giving the testimony in Washington.

Q. Did the first sergeant of the company, the quartermaster-sergeant, or the artificer, or any other man make any report to you that there were surplus rifles or that there was surplus ammunition in the company at the time you took charge or any other time?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. You would probably remember it if a report like that had been made to you?—A. Yes, sir; I would.

Q. And you are positive no report was made to you at any time?—A. Yes, sir; at any time.

Lieut. GEORGE S. GILLIS, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, testifies as follows:

Q. Please state your name, rank, regiment, and company.—

A. George S. Gillis, first lieutenant, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. And on duty with what company?—A. I am at present on duty with the machine-gun platoon, Second Battalion.

Q. What company were you connected with last year, 1906?—

A. I don't remember the dates. I was with G Company and E Company since I was relieved as battalion quartermaster in 1904. I was assigned to E Company, and upon my promotion was transferred to another regiment and assigned to G Company.

Q. Were you on duty with K Company at any time in 1906?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was that?—A. I don't recollect the dates.

Q. About what time of the year?—A. I can't remember.

Q. Who was in command of the company at the time?—A. Lieut. Mack Richardson.

Q. Did you command the company part of the time, or was Lieutenant Richardson nominally in command of it?—A. No, sir; he was not.

Q. Now, is there no way in which you can determine the dates when you were in command of the company?—A. Yes, sir; I have my orders, I can get them in just a minute.

Q. Please get them.

(Leaves room, returns with book.)

A. On October 2, 1906, I was ordered to take command during the sickness of Lieut. Mack Richardson, of Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the company prior to October?—A. Not during that year.

Q. Now, when you took command, did you make an inventory of the property or take over the property?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. At any time while you were connected with the company last year did you hear anything of any rifles being surplus in the company; that is, rifles in the company not carried on the papers?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did any noncommissioned officer or any officer tell you that there were any surplus rifles in the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the artificer make such report or tell you that there were surplus rifles in the company at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any rifles being surplus in that company at any time?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Or any other company?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with or were you in command of K Company at any time in the Philippine Islands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. I joined K Company in July, 1901, and assigned to a platoon of that company. I was with the company about a month when I was assigned to Company M. I was transferred in September to Company H and did not return to Company K until September, 1902, I believe.

Q. When you were with K Company in the islands did any accident happen to a casco or barota by which some of the company property was lost?—A. No, sir; not while I was with the company.

Q. Did you hear of any accident that happened to K Company's property by the sinking of a barota or boat of any kind over in the islands?—A. All I know was learned from reading the public documents that supported that fact, which was evidence about a board of survey.

Q. Were you a member of that board?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you happen to read the documents, then?—A. I don't remember, sir. It occurs to me that I saw such evidence as that on the company records that there had been property lost, but that is very vague in my recollection.

Q. According to your recollection of what you read or heard at any time, what property was lost; I don't mean the exact amount, but the class of property?—A. Well, sir, that is very hard to answer, because to my recollection there was property from other companies, and some men, I believe, were drowned at the same time, but I have a very slight recollection of what was lost.

Q. Name some of the classes of property that you do remember.—A. Well, ordinary company property, I believe; some tentage, men's clothing, ammunition, and rifles, I believe.

Q. Have you had any conversation with anybody in reference to this loss?—A. I don't recollect any particular conversation. I was stationed with Lieutenant Johnson of my company afterwards and he gave me quite a full account of the occurrence in a general way.

Q. Where is Lieutenant Johnson now?—A. I believe he is on leave now.

Q. Did he belong to Company M at that time?—A. Yes, sir; battalion adjutant.

Q. How did you have access to these records?—A. I don't remember anything definite about that. It seems to me that what I saw of this was in the company records of M Company. I am not sure I saw it anywhere else.

Q. Were you informed by anybody at any time that in consequence of this accident there were any surplus rifles in either M or K Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have command of K Company in 1903?—A. Yes, sir; I took command about April 1, 1903—relieved Capt. D. W. Kilburn, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Did you take an inventory of the property at that time?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did you find any property that was surplus?—A. To the best of my recollection, no; I did not.

Q. Did you make a careful inventory?—A. No, sir; I did the usual way of taking over ordnance property, checked it up and signed the receipts.

Q. And did you go through the storeroom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And saw no surplus guns there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did, not hear of any surplus guns in the company?—A. No, sir; not to my recollection. I did not.

Q. If you had heard it you would remember it now?—A. Yes, sir; I would have investigated.

Q. And you know of no surplus guns in the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you turn over any guns that were surplus to your successor?—A. No, sir; he receipted for the same number of guns that I did.

CHARLES ROSE, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. What is your name and present occupation?—A. Charles Rose, motorman for the Transit Company.

Q. And your present residence?—A. 315 North Picket street.

Q. Have you ever been in the service—in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your service, different grades, company, and regiment?—A. I was in the infantry—K Company, Twenty-sixth Infantry—as private, duty sergeant, quartermaster-sergeant, and first sergeant.

Q. Were you with K Company at Fort Brown in 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you serve in the company in April, May, and June, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What rank did you hold then?—A. First sergeant.

Q. As first sergeant did you have occasion to go into the storeroom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in the storeroom?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see there or any place else any surplus rifles; that is, rifles that were not borne on the property return?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of there being surplus rifles in the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. No surplus rifles of any kind?—A. No surplus rifles of any kind to my knowing; never heard of any.

Q. All the rifles that were in the company that you know of or heard of were accounted for on the paper?—A. Yes, sir; on the ordnance returns.

Q. Were you with the company in the Philippines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about the sinking of a boat over there with company property?—A. I heard of such a thing; yes, sir. I was private in the company at the time, and, so far as I was concerned, I did not know the least thing about it, sir. I just heard about a boat being sunk in the river.

Q. You were there at the time it was sunk?—A. I was in town; yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to the shore to see the wreck or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir. We were stationed in town—the river was about a mile away and I didn't go down there at all.

Q. As a consequence of this boat sinking, have you ever heard of any guns being surplus in the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Of no property being surplus in the company?—A. None, whatever.

Q. When were you discharged?—A. The 28th of July, 1906.

Q. Did you come up here with the company?—A. No, sir; I left the company in Austin.

Q. You were discharged at Austin?—A. At Camp Mabry; yes, sir.

Q. Who was the artificer of the company at the time you left it last July?—A. At the time I left the company last July?

Q. Yes.—A. I think it was Artificer Ryan, if I am not mistaken; but I am not positive.

Q. He was artificer at Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir; part of the time.

Q. Was he artificer when the rifles—the Krag rifles—were packed to be turned in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he ever tell you or make any report to you about being ahead some rifles down there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was quartermaster-sergeant down there?—A. Sergt. Joseph Cheeseman.

Q. Did he ever make any report to you about surplus rifles?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the company fund?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any return of it or know how it, or any of it, was spent and what it was spent for?—A. Yes, sir; I always knew how much there was and what it was expended for, but the company commander always kept the company funds.

Q. And expended the money—bought things for the company?—A. Yes; he and the quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. The quartermaster-sergeant bought things for the mess at times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any ammunition being sold?—A. No, sir.

Q. And the proceeds being used for the benefit of the company mess?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear at any time that ammunition was sold there or elsewhere?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or given away or exchanged for anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. No transaction of that kind?—A. No, sir; none whatever, to my knowledge.

Q. Is it possible if surplus ammunition had been sold by the quartermaster-sergeant and the money used for the benefit of the mess you would have heard of it?—A. Yes, sir; I was right there all the time, and it looks like if anything like that would have occurred I would have been one of the first to have known it.

Q. And you know of no transaction of that kind?—A. None whatever.

Q. Either there or elsewhere?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear or have you any knoweldge or have you heard any report of Captain Kilburn having a Krag rifle that was not on the company papers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any rifle being given or issued to Doctor Church, who was down there with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Wasn't a rifle issued to him for target practice?—A. Not from our company. If there was, I don't recollect it.

Q. Was a rifle sent over to the captain's quarters down there—Captain Kilburn's quarters?—A. No, sir; not by me.

Q. Do you know of any that was sent over there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Ever hear of any that was sent over there?—A. No, sir. The captain used a rifle while on the range with the company, but the rifle was always kept in the storeroom and cleaned by the artificer and never went out except when the captain was actually using it on the range.

Q. Was there ever a rifle in Lieutenant Schmidt's quarters?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. If there had been one there, would you have known it or not?—A. Well, yes, sir.

Q. And you know of none there in his quarters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either issued or given to him?—A. No, sir. He was not issued a rifle. He used one of the company rifles, but it was kept in the storeroom except when he was actually using it. If there was ever any in his quarters it was just after he had returned from the range and only kept it there a short time until it could be sent to the storeroom; but so far as a rifle being issued to him there is nothing about it to my knowledge.

Q. Did you know Post Quartermaster Sharp?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there ever any rifle ever given to him from the company?—
A. No, sir; not to my knowledge. I was a duty sergeant when he left Fort Brown. I was not first sergeant of the company at the time; I was duty sergeant; but I never knew of any rifle being given him.

Q. Did he take any rifle away with him?—A. I don't know, sir. If he did, I don't know it. I never saw him when he went away.

Q. You were present with the company, were you, when it returned from the target range at Point Isabell in 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any loose ammunition or ammunition in bandoleers around the quarters?—A. No, sir; we had all the ammunition in a box and shipped it back by train and stored it in the storeroom. There was no loose ammunition at all.

Q. It has been testified by Corporal Ryan, I think, that there was a box of loose ammunition on the back porch there—Corporal Ryan or Private Jebb has testified to that effect, Sergeant. Do you know anything about that?—A. No, sir; I don't know of any loose ammunition there, because we were very careful about ammunition and rifles, and always as soon as we were through at the range all the ammunition, empty shells, was shipped back and placed in the storeroom under lock and key.

Q. Was it reported to you that one or two bandoleers of ammunition had been left open in the orderly room or in one of the small rooms of the barracks when the company left Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. No report of that kind, and never heard of any such surplus?—
A. No, sir.

Q. When did you last see Sergeant Cheeseman?—A. I don't just recollect what date, but it was along about the last of September, last year.

Q. And whereabouts was that?—A. It was down at my house on North Flores street.

Q. Was that before or after he was discharged?—A. After.

Q. How long after he was discharged?—A. He was discharged some time in August and this was the latter part of September.

Q. Had the company returned at the time he was at your house?—
A. No, sir; the company was still at Austin.

Q. Do you know where he is now?—A. No, sir. I have not heard from him since he left—last September.

Q. Do you know where he could be addressed by letter?—A. No, sir; I don't know his address if he was at home. I think it is some place in Mississippi.

Q. Sergeant, you know Artificer Ryan, of K Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his reputation for truthfulness?—A. Good, so far as I know, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard anything derogatory to his truthfulness in any way?—A. No, sir. He was always a straightforward, trustworthy man as far as I knew. I was in the company with him three years.

Q. And how about Sergeant Cheeseman?—A. Sergeant Cheeseman was the same.

Q. Thoroughly reliable?—A. Yes, sir. Sergeant Cheeseman I would personally trust with anything.

Q. Did you ever hear that Sergeant Cheeseman had taken away some money that the men in the company had contributed to a library fund?—A. I heard it after he was discharged and it was a great surprise to me.

Q. Now, Corporal Ryan has testified that there were six surplus guns in the company and that he, by the direction of Sergeant Cheeseman, erased the numbers on these six guns; that when he came up here he saw two of the guns in the storeroom, but he does not know what has become of them. What do you think about his testimony?—A. Well, if there was ever any surplus guns around the company I certainly would have known it. I was first sergeant of the company and had the keys to the storeroom. Ryan was artificer most of the time, but if there had been surplus guns in the storeroom I certainly would have known it. His testimony, I think, must be untrue—you asked me what I thought of it?

Q. Yes; but there was nothing to be gained by telling an untruth, was there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any reason you can think of for him to make a statement of that kind when he knew it was untrue? Now, would a man make a statement that was untrue without having a reason for it?—A. It does not seem that he would. I don't see that he would gain anything by telling an untruth—it was nothing to him.

Q. Nothing, except that he was under oath, he was testifying as a witness under oath. Who kept the keys to the storeroom?—A. The quartermaster-sergeant kept them the most of the time. The quartermaster-sergeant or myself.

Q. Did the artificer have keys to the storeroom?—A. No, sir. When he wanted to go in there and work he would do so in our presence. It was seldom that the storeroom was left unlocked. The quartermaster-sergeant might have left it unlocked if the artificer was working in there to be gone a short time, but not long at a time.

Q. Could the quartermaster-sergeant or the artificer have taken any gun out of the storeroom and disposed of it without your knowledge?—A. Yes, sir; they could have done it; because the quartermaster-sergeant had keys and had access to it when I would be in the orderly room at work—that is on the other side of the building. Such a thing was possible, but not probable.

Q. Sergeant, was it an easy matter for the men to get surplus ammunition if they wanted it—that is, more ammunition than had been issued to him and that he was accountable for on the property book?—A. You mean while he was on the range?

Q. At any time—on the range or in the post?—A. No, sir; it was not an easy matter at all in our company, because the ammunition was issued to each man on the range as he used it, and on coming from the range the ammunition was packed up.

Q. How about a man losing a few rounds of ammunition; could he go to the quartermaster-sergeant, tell him that he had lost it, and have it replaced?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose he could, but I never saw a case like that happen in our company. The ammunition was issued to the men in our company right on the firing line and he would have no excuse to lose it.

Q. Suppose he did not fire the number of rounds that was issued to him and put it in his pocket, couldn't he get a surplus that way?—A. Yes, sir; he could do it.

Q. And in the garrison, suppose a man on guard duty lost some ammunition out of his belt while on guard or at drill, could go to the quartermaster-sergeant and get it replaced?—A. Yes, sir; but the ammunition used in the garrison is entirely different from that used at the target range—that is multi ball.

Q. Was there any other ammunition than multi-ball ammunition carried in the cartridge belts?—A. When they were actually guarding prisoners the ball ammunition was used.

Q. And if he should lose some of the ball ammunition, could he go to the quartermaster-sergeant and have it replaced?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose he could.

Q. And when a man wanted to get ahead in ammunition that he wanted to give away or sell, he could get it by telling that he had lost what had been issued to him?—A. I suppose he could. It never happened in our company. I never replaced a single cartridge, but I suppose such a thing could have been done.

Q. Was Corporal Ryan, as he is now, at work in the quartermaster's department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was this?—A. I don't recollect the dates.

Q. About what time?—A. I couldn't say even within a month of the time. It has been a couple of years ago, the last of 1905 or first of 1906; I forget.

Q. And what was the reason he was relieved?—A. Well, I don't know. I can not state the exact reason he was relieved. It has been so long ago I can't recollect. He was relieved by the quartermaster for something; I can not state. I have forgotten what.

Q. At the request of the quartermaster?—A. Yes, sir; he was relieved at the request of the quartermaster. I can not state exactly, but I think it was for misconduct.

Q. To the best of your recollection, was it for misconduct or was it because the funds had run out or because there was not more work for him to do?—A. There was plenty of work there for him to do. It was something the quartermaster had him relieved for—I have forgotten—I knew at the time, but I have forgotten what it was. I know he was relieved at the request of the quartermaster for something. I recollect the quartermaster on two or three occasions was going out through the town picking up quartermaster property. This man was in the quartermaster's department.

Q. Was Ryan company artificer when the company was up at Ringgold in 1905?—A. To the best of my knowledge he was artificer and was relieved while we were there.

Q. What was he relieved for?—A. I recollect that mighty well—for neglect of duty.

Q. Was there any report or any remarks connecting Ryan with the sale of Government property at any time that you know of?—A. Well, I don't recollect of any. But, as I stated a while ago, he was at work in the quartermaster's department and the quartermaster was going around the town picking up Government property and Ryan was relieved, but whether he was accused of selling anything I can not say; I don't recollect.

Q. What duty was he on in the quartermaster's department?—A. He was just laborer as far as I recollect.

Captain KILBURN—Recalled.

Q. Captain, you understand you are still under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear anything derogatory to Corporal Ryan's reputation as a trustworthy and reliable man?—A. Yes, sir. I was on leave from December 8, 1904, to May 2, 1905. When I returned and took command of the company in May, 1905, it was reported to me—I am not sure whether it was Lieutenant Leckie or Lieutenant Parker; I remember I talked with Lieutenant Leckie about it afterwards—that Ryan had been relieved as laborer in the quartermaster's department on account of quartermaster property going out from the storeroom. There was no direct evidence against him. I probed the matter as well as I could at that time, but could find no evidence. I did not pay very much attention to it. What makes me speak so positively about it at this time, that I did not pay much attention to it at the time—did not attach much weight to it—was that a short time after this I made him artificer first, I think, and afterwards made him a corporal. I was sent over to New Orleans on a general court-martial case in July, 1905, and while I was away Lieutenant Parker reduced Ryan. Lieutenant Parker reported to me that this man Ryan had a common-law wife down at Brownsville and there had been a good deal of shooting outside there, and there was something connecting Ryan with a company revolver and some shots fired: I forget exactly, but it was something of that kind. I looked into the matter, but could find not evidence one way or the other sufficient to put him before a summary court, and reduced him to the grade of private. Now, my recollection is, but I am not positive—I could tell by referring to the company records—whether the reduction made by Lieutenant Parker was made before or after target practice of 1905. I had always looked upon, and still do, Ryan as an honest and faithful man, but I think that Ryan when not in the company is a great talker—I am giving you this as my personal knowledge of the man. I believe he draws conclusions and he says anything so much, even when there is no truth in it, that he finally believes it himself. I do not say that he would deliberately say anything to depart from the truth, but he is excitable and of a nervous disposition. Yet I would be willing to send Ryan downtown with a hundred dollars to deposit for me. That is my opinion of the man. I might add a little to that. When the clipping from the Washington Post was referred to me for explanation I asked Captain Ely to see Ryan—I did not care to see Ryan myself—I did not want it to appear that there was any collusion or attempt at collusion. I sent for Ryan and in the presence of the judge-advocate, Capt. Charles E. Hay, had him questioned and he voluntarily made the statement at that time in the presence of Captain Hay and myself that the clipping was entirely wrong in a great many respects, and I picked out the statements and asked him if so and so and such and such were the answers meant by him, and he said no. I had affidavits made—written out by the clerk in the chief quartermaster's office. There were three affidavits in triplicate and Ryan at the same time by Captain Hay. The affidavits were read over to him carefully before signing. One copy was given to him; I kept two copies, one to forward with the papers and one to keep with my papers as a retained copy. After I had him brought before the judge-advocate of the summary court and sworn, because I went up and had a talk with General McCaskey, the department commander, relative to this matter, and he told me, "I want a full report, because if it does not cover every point, I will have to refer it to my judge-advocate for investigation and report." After reading this affidavit of Ryan over they would compare it with the testimony quoted in this clipping and the question would naturally arise, "This man made two different statements; which is correct?" Then I called Ryan up and showed him just exactly what he had done, and told him, "I want to know whether you are going to stand by this or stand by the other testimony," and he stated he was convinced that he was nervous and rattled before the Senate committee. I added that last statement to his affidavit and in order not to embarrass the judge-advocate of this department in case it was referred to him, I went to the judge-advocate and explained the matter.

Q. Now, Corporal Ryan has testified positively that there were six surplus rifles in the storeroom of K Company, that he altered or erased the numbers on them, and that they were not shipped back with the other rifles that were turned in to the arsenal. He states also that he saw two of these rifles in the company storeroom after coming up here. He testified to the same effect as to the six rifles before the Senate committee. Do you think this testimony could be accounted for by any explanation that he has made in his affidavit?—A. Frankly, I do not.

Q. Is there any reason that you know of that he could have for making these statements if they were not true?—A. No, sir; I don't know why he made a statement like that. It seems preposterous that a man would voluntarily, without some motive, make up a story like that out of his own mind.

Q. Is there any reason he could have had—any grudge against you—to account for his stating these things?—A. Not that I know of. I always tried to treat him fairly. I had to punish him several times, but believe he realized the punishment was justifiable.

Q. Is there any reason he could have done this in order to be revenged on Sergeant Cheeseman?—A. Not that I know of. I think that their relations were amicable. If there had been any friction, I think Sergeant Cheeseman would have come to me and asked to have him relieved, as he did on one or two other occasions in regard to other artificers. The point I make in the whole investigation, Colonel, is this: If there were any rifles there—I do not know whether there were or not—they were there without the knowledge, consent, or acquiescence of the four or five company commanders that have been in charge of the company since they left the Philippines. If there were any surplus rifles in the company I was not cognizant of it, and I do not know of it even to this day.

Private HENRY WATSON, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Henry Watson, Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Rank?—A. Private.

Q. Were you with your company at Fort Brown in 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain behind when your company left Fort Brown to come up here or to go to Camp Mabry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any bandoleers with ammunition in them around in the barracks?—A. I saw empty bandoleers—none with ammunition in them.

Q. Did you see any ammunition in bandoleers hanging in the orderly room of K Company or any of the small rooms?—A. No, sir; I was not in K Company barracks.

Q. After the company left you know nothing at all about any bandoleers of ammunition being left in any barracks?—A. There was lots of loose ammunition left in M Company barracks, but none in bandoleers.

Q. What kind?—A. Both Krag and Springfield, also empty shells.

Q. What became of these?—A. I and Private Ward picked up the most of them we found and put them in a box as we cleaned up the quarters. When we were through we emptied them, and the good ammunition was put back in this box, while the clips and shells were put out on the dump.

Q. Was this loose ammunition placed out in the yard or on the back porch?—A. No, sir; the ammunition was left in the box. Afterwards I believe they were removed, at least they were not there when we came away. I remained with M Company quarters with the detachment for some time. I think this ammunition was there in the boxes all the time we stayed there. Then we were quartered in I Company barracks—the place had already been cleaned up, but there was no water there and we had to go back to use the water for bathing and washing to M Company. In M Company's quarters there were a lot of magazines and newspapers. We would go there and get these and go back to the other barracks to read. The building was open.

Q. Do you know what became of the ammunition that you picked up and had put in this box?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Was it brought up here?—A. I think not. It was not brought up with us, because there was only one box.

Q. Was any of that ammunition sold?—A. Not that I know of. Just before we left there the Mexican boys asked for ammunition: said they could sell it and get a good price for it, but if any was sold I never knew it. I never saw any sold.

Sergeant MEANS—Recalled.

Q. You remember you are still under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you wish to make any modification or explanation of your answer to the last question?—A. Only that I misconstrued the meaning of the question. I thought that it meant sporting goods and ammunition or anything similar to that loaned to citizens in town awaiting their own supplies. We loaned such articles to them for their accommodation. That is the way I thought the question was meant, but as to loaning ammunition in particular, I don't know of a case previous to this one.

Lieutenant LECKIE.

Q. Please state your name, rank, and regiment.—A. Second Lieut. Harry G. Leckie, Twenty-sixth Infantry, Fort Sam Houston.

Q. Were you stationed at Fort Brown at any time in 1906?—A. Yes, sir; I was at Fort Brown up to June 2, 1906.

Q. Were you quartermaster there at any time?—A. Yes, sir; I was quartermaster there for about eighteen months. I was quartermaster up to June 2—eighteen or twenty months.

Q. Was Corporal Ryan employed in the quartermaster's department there while you were quartermaster?—A. When I relieved Lieutenant Thompson as quartermaster, Corporal Ryan, then Private Ryan, was a laborer in the quartermaster's department. He had been helping in issuing clothing and looked after the equipage and such work as that.

Q. Did you retain him as laborer in the quartermaster's department?—A. No, sir; I relieved him about two weeks after I was made quartermaster.

Q. Why did you relieve him?—A. Well, of course I could not say that Ryan took anything—I had no direct evidence against him and did not know it to be a fact, but I relieved him because I was missing stuff. At the time he was the only man who carried the keys and I relieved him—I did not consider him to be a man to be trusted with clothing, equipage, and such as that. I did not bring any charges against him because I had no testimony against him, except that I would go and count the stuff and see that it was there and afterwards not be there. For that reason I had him relieved.

Q. You heard nothing against his truthfulness and honesty?—A. No, sir; I never heard anything against his truthfulness.

Q. What reputation did he bear generally?—A. Well, he is a man that talks a great deal, easily excited.

Q. I mean as to truthfulness.—A. I do not know, I never heard anyone say anything against his truthfulness or honesty—only what I say myself—I had the man relieved for that reason.

Q. When you were at Fort Brown did you hear of any rifles being surplus in any of the companies there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any report or rumor or anything of that nature?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever hear of any ammunition being sold there?—A. No, sir.

Corporal RYAN—Recalled.

Q. Corporal, you understand you are still under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you authorize Private Jebb to see Mr. Fred Starek, of Brownsville, in reference to buying some ammunition from the company?—A. No, sir; I did not authorize him to see any person.

Q. Did you ask him to see Mr. Starek?—A. Did not ask him to see anybody, sir.

Q. When was this ammunition sold to Mr. Fields?—A. I am not positive about the date, sir. I do not have any recollection as to the exact date.

Q. About when?—A. It was somewhere during the spring of 1906, as near as I can come to it.

Q. Was it before or after the company went to target practice at Point Isabell?—A. I don't just remember, sir. There were so many things happening then, I don't know whether it occurred then or not.

Q. You testified that you saw a rifle in Captain Kilburn's quarters. Was that a Krag rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when did you see it there, before or after you packed the Krag rifles to be turned in?—A. It seems to me that I have seen it there before and after, both, sir. I am not positive, but it seems to me like—no, I guess it was after that. We had not sent the Krags away, but it was after we had turned them in to the storeroom—they were not packed until the month of June, when the company was away. That was part of the reason I was left back and did not go to Point Isabell—to pack these rifles.

Q. Did you pack this rifle with the Captain's property for shipment up here?—A. If I did, I don't remember it. The Captain had a good many old rifles, sir, and I couldn't say exactly whether the rifle was among these or not; I don't remember seeing it.

Captain ELY. The Krag rifle is very different from the old Mausers you state Captain Kilburn had in his quarters—very different in appearance, is it not?

A. Yes, sir; there is quite a difference in the appearance.

Q. If there had been a Krag rifle packed among the effects of Captain Kilburn, you probably would remember it, would you not?—A. I think I would, sir.

Corporal RYAN. Colonel, I would like to make a verbal statement in regard to the transaction with Mr. Starck.

Colonel FRENCH. Any statement you make will be taken down and considered as part of your testimony; remember you are still under oath.

Corporal RYAN. Sergeant Cheeseman told me one day that he had some surplus ammunition for sale; that he wanted to sell it to get some more money to buy vegetables for the company, and things like that, and asked if I knew anybody in town that wanted to buy any. I told him I did not, and he said, "Don't you know some of those rangers or river guards that might buy some of it." I said, "I can't say myself, there is only a few of these men I know, but," I says, "probably some of the older men would likely know some man who would like to buy some of this ammunition," and he says, "Who would be a good man to put next to this," and I says, "Jebb is a man that is teaming for the Government and is probably acquainted with everybody in the city, in and out of the city," and I says, "He would be a good man," and just as I stepped out on the back porch I met Jebb and I told him what Sergeant Cheeseman had told me in reference to this ammunition, and told him if he seen anyone that wanted to buy any ammunition to send him to sergeant, and Jebb says, "All right, I will: I think I know a party who will take two or three hundred rounds of it," and I says, "Well, if you see him ask him about it and tell him to see the sergeant." The sergeant did not authorize me to make any statement to Private Jebb, he just asked me if I knew who would be a good man to sell the ammunition. I did not tell him to see any particular person, in fact, I did not know Mr. Starck.

Captain ELY. You say Sergeant Cheeseman asked you who would be a good man to put next to this?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he mean that he wanted to keep this thing secret, this proposed selling of ammunition?—A. I don't know whether that was his intention or not; I did not think so at the time. The reason he asked, the way I interpreted his meaning, was that he wanted me to give him the name of some man that was well acquainted with those river guards, rangers, etc.

Private Jenn—Recalled.

Questioned by Captain ELY.

Q. This ammunition that you gave to the rangers—this ammunition was given to you for the purpose of hunting on this trip, or for what purpose?—A. Well, for the purpose of hunting or shooting birds or anything.

Q. It was not expected that you would account for it again?—A. No, sir.

Colonel FRENCH. Did you help Corporal Ryan, or Artificer Ryan, pack the Krag rifles that were turned in by the company at Fort Brown, around about May or June, 1906?—A. Yes, sir; a certain part of them. As I said, I was detailed on this special duty for shipping stuff to Point Isabell, and during the rest of the day had nothing to do except to take care of one horse, and I helped Artificer, now Corporal Ryan to oil a lot of these Krag-Jørgensen guns and to pack one box—I think I helped him pack one box—I think there were 20 put in that box.

Q. Did you, while you were in the storeroom then, see any guns that were not oiled or not to be shipped away?—A. Well, there were a number of guns that were never oiled, and I heard the quartermaster-sergeant say—I don't remember whether it was the morning we packed the guns or the morning before—but I heard him tell Artificer Ryan that he wanted those guns that had been picked out set aside.

Q. How many of the guns were there that he picked out?—A. Well, I could not say, only just what Artificer Ryan says. He says, "I am going to pick out the best of them," and I says, "Here is a good gun, mine." I says, "take that," and it was set on one side of the storeroom with others—four or five—there might have been five.

Q. Your gun was one of those that was set off to one side, was it?—A. Yes, sir; that is, if it was not changed. It was set to one side when I picked it out.

Q. Was it oiled and prepared for shipment?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was; I don't believe it was oiled.

Q. Who was the quartermaster-sergeant that gave Artificer Ryan orders to set these guns aside?—A. Sergeant Cheeseman.

Q. Did you ever hear what became of these rifles that were selected and set to one side?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you ever hear any report or any statement—any rumor—as to what became of them?—A. Only what I read—what he gave in his testimony.

Q. What who gave?—A. Artificer Ryan.

Q. You never heard any statement in the company?—A. No; only a rumor.

Q. And what was that rumor?—A. That so and so has taken this gun; but I never paid any attention to the name.

Q. Did you hear that Sergeant Short had taken his gun away—had bought his gun and taken it away?—A. Just a rumor, sir; I can not swear to it.

Q. I am asking you whether you heard that rumor?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard just a rumor that Sergeant Short bought his gun and took it away, but I don't know whether he took it away or not; I never saw him.

Captain ELY. You say that the quartermaster-sergeant had authority to sell this ammunition. Do you mean that the company commander had authorized this?

A. No, sir; I don't know whether the company commander authorized him to do it or not.

Q. Well, in speaking about selling ammunition to Mr. Starck, you stated to Mr. Starck that you "would see the parties about it." Did you purposely avoid giving the names of the parties who was to sell the ammunition to Mr. Starck—you did not want him to know who it was who was authorized to sell the ammunition?—A. I told Mr. Starck who wanted to sell it—that is, the quartermaster or artificer.

Q. You mean the quartermaster-sergeant or artificer?—A. Yes, sir.

Sergeant WESNER, being sworn and questioned by Lieut. Col. F. H. French, Twelfth Infantry, testifies as follows:

Q. What is your name, rank, company, and regiment?—A. Frank Wesner, sergeant, Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. How long have you been in Company K?—A. Two years the 2d day of March.

Q. Were you with the company in the Philippines?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you with the Twenty-sixth Infantry in the Philippines?—A. No, sir.

Q. Sergeant have you heard any story, any rumor, or any report that there were surplus rifles in your company at Fort Brown?—A. No, sir.

Q. Fort Ringgold or here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never hear anything of the kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't you heard men speaking about it in the barracks?—A. Recently; ever since I read that report of Corporal Ryan; that was the first I knew about it.

Q. Did any of the men ever say the rumor was correct?—A. No, sir; I never heard anybody say anything about it.

Q. Have you heard anything about any ammunition being sold down there at Fort Brown?—A. No, sir.

Q. Know nothing at all about it?—A. No, sir.

H. M. FIELDS.

I have been sick all the time, but that day I crawled out into the warehouse, and the clerk told me that there were some cartridges for sale; that he had been told by the officer or enlisted man who had them for sale that they were cartridges belonging to guns that had been turned in, and they had a right to sell them. And I made the remark to him that I thought it was a thing they would never sell without authority. Another time I bought a gun and 1,000 cartridges from a driver named Voshelle, or Vohelle, a discharged soldier, a teamster. The gun was not an army gun, but a pump gun. The cartridges were the same that the other soldier brought here.

The man owed me a bill, and he turned in the gun and cartridges, and I paid him the balance. The man told me that Lieutenant Leckie, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, had given him the gun and cartridges. I spoke to Lieutenant Leckie about it, and he told me he had a right to the gun, that it was his—Lieutenant Leckie's—gun, and he gave it to him—the driver. These purchases were made about a year ago, just before the Twenty-sixth went away; about a month before. There is not much sale for these cartridges, but the gun has been sold.

CONRAD L. CLOETTA.

The man came here himself—it's a soldier—and he asked me if he could sell some shells, and I told him I would see Mr. Fields. And Mr. Fields told me to ask him if he had authority to sell the shells; that he could buy them, as he wanted to resell them, without going into any trouble. I don't know the man's name, but he was a corporal or sergeant; I am not sure. He said that the cartridges were some surplus of the company and that they had orders to sell them. He didn't say anything about whether they were for the company mess or not. We paid him $10 for the thousand rounds. I have the thousand shells here now, but the rounds that went with the gun has been partly sold. We bought part of a box with a gun—that is, we did not buy it; we were forced to take it to get a bill paid. We bought the gun from Voshelle—William Voshelle, I think. He was a teamster. He had been a soldier. He said that Lieutenant Leckie had made a present to him of the gun and shells—that is, I am not sure of the shells, but he made some reference to the gun—and that he was to leave, and he owed us a bill and wanted to give the gun and shells in payment. The man who sold us the thousand shells said they had a surplus; that they were about to leave and did not care to take them away.

Second Lieut. HARRY G. LECKIE.

Questioned by Colonel FRENCH:

Q. You understand you are still under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember a man by the name of Voshelle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; he was teamster for a while and corral boss under me.

Q. What do you know about his selling a gun and some ammunition to Mr. Fields there?—A. I gave Voshelle a box magazine Winchester rifle that shot 30/40 ammunition, which carried the same as Government rifles—that is, the old model.

Q. That is the Krag?—A. Yes, sir. And when I was down at Brown I saw the gun and he told me Voshelle had sold it to him.

Q. Who told you, Mr. Field?—A. Mr. Field; yes, sir.

Q. Did they show you the ammunition that he sold them?—A. No, sir. I saw the gun setting upon a shelf and I recognized the gun and asked where he got it and he told me that Voshelle had given it to him for a debt he owed him before he left.

Q. What did they say to you, if anything, about the ammunition he sold them?—A. He said nothing at all about any ammunition, the question never came up at all.

Q. Did you see any Government ammunition in the store when you were there at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. They showed me a box about half full of Krag ammunition that they said had been bought with this gun from Voshelle, that he stated he wanted to dispose of it down there; that he was going away and did not want to take it away with him. Do you know anything about this?—A. The ammunition I gave him, sir, was soft point, same as is used for game purposes—some of it was soft point and some of it was short range, shot only 10 grains. I had used the gun at the target range, shooting the steel jacket, and it is possible the ammunition I gave him had a few rounds of Government ammunition. I could not say there was and could not say there was not. I put it all in a pile and gave it to him.

Q. In what shape was this ammunition? I mean was it in the boxes, the original boxes, or was it loose?—A. Some of it was loose, I think. All of it was put in a thousand-round box—piled in there.

Q. In pasteboard boxes?—A. Some of it was in pasteboard boxes like the Government 20-round boxes, I know that.

Q. This appeared to be original ammunition in the pasteboard boxes, 20 to the box, and packed in a wooden box like the Government uses in shipping ammunition?—A. I put it in one of those wooden boxes with a tin lining—the top had been torn off of it and I screwed it back together.

Q. About how many rounds did you give him; how many would you estimate?—A. I could not say, Colonel.

Q. Did you give him as many as 500 rounds?—A. I don't know, it might have been as many as 800 and it might not have been more than three or four hundred. There might have been other rifle ammunition mixed with it. I had three or four other rifles and bought ammunition for them—they were Winchesters and one Stevens. There might have been Government ammunition in the box as I had Government ammunition at different times.

Q. Was there as much as 500 rounds of Government ammunition in the box, according to your recollection?—A. No, sir; there was not that much, because I did not have that much to start with. I never had over a box or two at a time.

Q. You mean pasteboard boxes, one or two at a time?—A. Yes, sir; and maybe some scattered ammunition. I used a rifle for hunting purposes, but I never used steel jackets in this gun except to experiment with it. I have bought steel jacket ammunition from the Winchester Arms Company at different times.

Q. Then, to the best of your recollection, there could not have been more than twenty or thirty rounds of ammunition in the box, if there were any?—A. Not over twenty or forty, if any.

Post Q. M. Sergt. EBER I. SHARP, U. S. ARMY.

I served in Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry, and was made battalion sergeant-major in March, 1903. I served with Company K at Fort Brown, Tex., when I was battalion sergeant-major and later on post quartermaster-sergeant. When I was first sergeant of K Company I kept all the records and wrote the returns, etc. The quartermaster-sergeant was always in immediate charge of the property. Sergeant Shrewsbury was quartermaster-sergeant when I left the company. He told me one day shortly before he died that he was ahead some rifles; I don't think he stated the number. I want to change that; I don't want to make such a positive statement as that he was actually ahead, but from what he did say I inferred that he was ahead. I asked him for a certain rifle one day for my own use, and he gave it to me, and remarked that I might keep it, or something to that effect. It was a gun that was fixed up for orderly work and I wanted it because it was easier kept. Now, I kept that gun in my possession or with my effects—not always directly with me—until on or about the 1st of January, 1904. I turned it in at that time to the quartermaster-sergeant of K Company, who, I think, was Sergeant Short, or it might have been Sergeant Cheeseman. The noncommissioned officers of the company knew that I had this rifle, because I was asked about it once or twice. That is the extent of my knowledge or understanding of any surplus rifles in that company. I can not think who was quartermaster-sergeant at that time, at the time I turned it in, but I know that Sergeant Blind—Arthur Blind—was first sergeant. I don't think I can remember of any remarks of that nature—referring to surplus guns in K Company—except what Sergeant Shrewsbury said. I don't think I have ever heard anything of that kind except what I have read in the papers after the Brownsville affair. I have spoken with several parties, discussed the proposition of what was going on down there, and I have expressed it as my belief that there were surplus guns in K Company. That belief was established on what Sergeant Shrewsbury told me. There were no guns lost in my company by the wrecking of a boat over in the Philippines. We did lose some guns under another circumstance. That was in October, 1901. My company was ordered from southern Luzon to the island of Samar, and all surplus accouterments and ordnance was packed and stored, I think, by the quartermaster in Nueva Caceres. We had no occasion to have these with us again until after July 1, 1902, and then we were stationed at Baler, province of Principe. Our stuff that was stored in Nueva Caceres was then shipped by boat to us at Baler. And in checking up the property there was one chest or one box containing six rifles, more or less—I don't know just what the number was—was found to be short, found missing. That was covered by a survey report, probably about September, 1902. Capt. D. W. Kilburn, Twenty-sixth Infantry, was responsible for the property. I think that was all the rifles we ever lost while we were in the Division of the Philippines while I was with the company. I think Corporal Ryan in his testimony was referring to the rifle which I turned in, and, if I am not mistaken, I turned it in before he joined the company. I swear I have not in my possession a Government rifle which was formerly on the accountability of K Company, but which is now surplus. I have not had any since January 1, 1904, except one issued to me for target practice and for the division rifle competition of 1904, which I think came from K Company, as I was attached to that company for target practice. I turned that in to the quartermaster-sergeant of the company when I got back from the competition. I don't recollect just who it was, but it must have been Sergeant Short. I don't know where Sergeant Short is now: I don't know whether he is yet in the service or no'. I don't know anything about Sergeant Cheeseman, except that I understood that he was discharged by purchase, I believe. I don't know where he could be addressed. Sergeant Snyder's post-office address is Rural Route No. 1, Winlock, Clark County, Wash.

This rifle I got from Sergeant Shrewsbury was not marked in any way, except that the stock had been shellacked. I never heard, to the best of my recollection, any remarks or rumors or talk in the company about any surplus rifles except what Sergeant Shrewsbury told me. I used to get ammunition from that company to practice with, and I think I used more than my allowance that year. I did not hear at Brownsville or any other place anything about the sale of surplus ammunition. The last I heard of Sergeant Blind was, indirectly, that he was in the street car service at San Antonio. He relieved me as first sergeant of that company, K Company. I want to change my testimony about this. Blind relieved me as first sergeant, but he was discharged the latter part of November or the first of December, 1903, and Rose was made first sergeant, and he was the first sergeant when I turned in the rifle. He is now in the street car service at San Antonio, while the last I heard of Blind he was running a saloon in Matamoros, Mexico. I never heard of any surplus rifle being in the possession of Captain Kilburn, but I know he kept a rifle at his quarters all during the target season. I know nothing of any surplus rifle being turned over to Lieutenant Schmidt. He was in command of the company, and I think he was accountable and responsible for the ordnance in December, 1903, and January, 1904, about the time when I turned in the rifle. I never heard any talk that he had a surplus rifle in his possession, a rifle that was not on the papers. I was post quartermaster-sergeant at Fort Brown when Ryan, of K Company, was on extra duty as laborer in the quartermaster's department. He was relieved because it was believed he was carrying public property into town and selling it. Lieutenant Leckie preferred information against him before the United States commissioner, Creager, but the evidence was not enough to bring him to trial. His reputation always was that he was big-mouthed—that is, he was always talking and making a big story out of a small article.

Capt. CHARLES F. BATES, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Several weeks ago, it might possibly be two months, I was in the quartermaster storehouse and there was an exchange of a sentence or two between Sergeant Sharp and myself in regard to the Brownsville matter. The gist of it was in reference to the possibility of there having been some modern high-power guns in the possession of people of Brownsville at the time of the Brownsville affray. To the best of my recollection, Sergeant Sharp stated that he knew that eight Government rifles had been disposed of in that vicinity. I don't desire to say from my recollection that the sergeant meant that he could prove that or that he himself personally saw the rifles disposed of, but I gathered a distinct impression that he had heard about it in some way. I didn't take particular notice of it at the time, because I thought it might be a mere hearsay report. I understood from this conversation that these eight rifles were surplus rifles belonging to some one of the companies of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, but not actually carried on their returns. The sergeant did not say anything about the manner in which these rifles had been made surplus. He did not tell me what company they came from.

Post Q. M. EBER I. SHARP—Recalled.

I am sure I did not state definitely 8 rifles, I may have said 7 or 8. I was always under the impression that there were surplus rifles in K Company. Of course, this impression was merely a satisfaction of my own, it was not substantiated by anything. A man went from here to San Antonio in charge of prisoners or recruits or somebody, about the time Major Penrose's trial was going on, and he told me that there was talk to that effect; that is, there were surplus rifles and they had been disposed of. And I mistrusted at the time he was telling of it that there was surplus rifles in K Company, because I was satisfied that they had surplus rifles. I have always had the satisfaction in my own mind that a part or all of those rifles that were lost at Nueva Caceres might have been subsequently found after the company went back to Nueva Caceres, and if they were, it would leave from 6 to 8 surplus rifles to be taken up as found. Whether they did that or not I don't know. When the exchange of the new rifles for the old ones took place in 1906, the old rifles, if they had been found and taken up, would have been turned in; otherwise they would have been remaining with the company and wouldn't be considered as part of the equipment any more, and therefore would be available for other disposition. Now, that's the way that I arrived at my belief that there were surplus rifles in the company. And they might easily have found their way into the hands of citizens. I was satisfied also that there were surplus rifles in K Company because Sergeant Shrewsbury told me so, or gave me to understand that there was. I don't think I had any other reason for thinking there were surplus rifles in K Company, unless it was this talk about the Brownsville affair that confirmed my belief. Brownsville was the first station that K Company occupied after returning from the Philippines, and was there until the old rifle was displaced by the new one. And there was no demand or call for rifles before they got there. This is one of the reasons why I concluded they had been sold there. The people living in and around Brownsville have a good many rifles, high-power rifles, such as Winchesters, and so forth, in their possession, showing that they use them or have occasion to use them. I think I have seen a Government rifle in the possession of a person outside the post at Brownsville. I couldn't describe any specific place or party, but soldiers quite often went hunting with civilians and furnished them rifles, at least I have known it to be so. I can state one instance, but I can not tell the time. There was a colored man residing just outside the post. His name was Mack Hamilton, or he was called Mack Hamilton. I saw him going down the road behind the barracks with a rifle on his shoulder, and although I could not swear it was a Government weapon, I believed it to be so. I didn't think at that time that there was any cause for suspicion that he had no right to have it, because he worked in the post for Captain Baldwin. He was outside the post and he was going towards his house. He lived outside the post. I did not hear anything while I was there that led me to form a conclusion that rifles were being sold in town.

Capt. CHARLES F. BATES--Recalled.

Now that the sergeant (Sergeant Sharp) has spoken of K Company, I think I recollect that he mentioned it at the time he spoke of the rifles. To the best of my recollection the sergeant did mention 8 rifles; he might possibly have said at least 8 rifles, but I am sure he used the number 8.

First Lieut. ALLEN PARKER, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Please state your name, rank, and residence.—A. Allen Parker; first lieutenant, Twenty-sixth Infantry; Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

Q. Were you stationed at Fort Brown, Tex., during 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With what company were you there?—A. Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. Did you have command of the company at any time?—A. I did.

Q. From what time to what time, approximately?—A. I arrived at Fort Brown September 10, 1904, and joined my company. The company was then commanded by Capt. D. W. Kilburn, Twenty-sixth Infantry. Captain Kilburn was granted a leave of absence December 5, 1904, and returned to duty on or about May 5, 1905. During the latter part of May, 1906, Captain Kilburn was ordered to Fort Sam Houston, Tex., headquarters Twenty-sixth Infantry, for the purpose of being made regimental quartermaster. During his absence I was in command of the company. On May 30, 1906, Second Lieutenant Dunford, Twenty-sixth Infantry, on duty with the company, left Fort Brown with the company and marched to Point Isabel, Tex., to the target range, about 22 miles below Fort Brown. June 1 I went to Point Isabel by rail and assumed command of the company. I retained command of the company until about the 1st of September, 1906.

Q. During the time last year you were in command of the company were you accountable for the company property?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you make any inventory of the company property?—A. I did not, except the quartermaster property.

Q. In whose name was the property accountability?—A. The quartermaster, Fort Brown, was accountable for the quartermaster property and Capt. D. W. Kilburn, Twenty-sixth Infantry, accountable for the ordnance property.

Q. Did you at any time hear any report or rumor or talk of any kind that there were surplus rifles in K Company, or any other company? By surplus I mean rifles that were not down on the ordnance property returns.—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. It has been testified to that there were at least six surplus rifles in K Company and that the numbers on these rifles were marked out. Do you know anything about these rifles or about their being altered in any way?—A. I do not.

Q. You never heard anything of such an affair?—A. I did not.

Q. You know nothing, then, by hearsay or by rumor, that there were surplus rifles in any of the companies at Fort Brown?—A. Not while I was on duty with the regiment. All rumor to that effect is what I have read in the daily papers since I left the regiment, in September, 1906, or is based on clippings from the daily papers.

Q. It was testified that while the company was at Point Isabell, on the target range, you sent a written order to Corporal Means to turn over 200 rounds of ammunition to Mr. Creager, the United States commissioner at Brownsville. What have you to say in regard to this?—A. That is correct, sir. Mr. Creager has a cottage at the Point and was down there at the time with his family. He would go back to his business in Brownsville when necessary, returning, when through, to his family at the Point. Mr. Creager possessed a high-power rifle—I am not positive, but I think a Winchester, .30 caliber. I saw the rifle and passed some comment on it. Mr. Creager informed me that he had no ammunition. I told Mr. Creager that I would give Corporal Means, who was then in charge of quarters at Fort Brown, a note for Corporal Means to turn over to him, Mr. Creager, 200 rounds of Krag-Jørgensen ammunition and he could bring it down with him the next time he came. The ammunition was turned over to Mr. Creager and he brought it to Point Isabell, where later Mr. Creager, Mr. Brulé, Corporal Wesner, Lieutenant Dunford, possibly one or two other men in the company—I am not sure at this time—and myself fired this ammunition from Mr. Creager's rifle at the target range. Mr. Kennedy also fired the rifle.

Q. Was this surplus ammunition?—A. As to that I can not say, sir; as I had not taken an inventory of the ordnance property.

Q. Did you ever hear that there was surplus ammunition in the company?—A. The year before the battalion conducted its target practice at Fort Ringgold. There was, I think, at the beginning of that practice some surplus ammunition; yet I can not state just positively; but I state this because I am inclined to believe we fired more than our authorized allowance while at that range. Just how the ammunition stood at the end of the season and since then I do not know.

Q. What do you know of your own personal knowledge or by hearsay, report, or in any other manner, concerning the sale of surplus ammunition at Fort Brown?—A. I know nothing myself, and only what I read in the papers concerning it.

Q. Did you at any time give orders to or authorize the company quartermaster-sergeant or artificer to sell Krag ammunition for the benefit of the company fund?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. After the Krag rifles were turned in was any authorization given by anybody at Fort Brown for sale of Krag ammunition that was on hand, the money to be turned into the company fund or company mess?—A. I never heard of it, if it was, sir.

Q. If such authorization had been given by the post commander, you would probably have heard of it, would you not?—A. I probably would, as I had command of the company from June 1 until about September 1.

Q. It came out in this investigation that the Krag ammunition was sold to civilians, the noncommissioned officer making the sale stating that he was authorized to do so; that this ammunition belonged to rifles which had been turned in and that they did not want to carry it away with them from Fort Brown. What can you say about this?—A. That is the first I have ever heard of it.

Q. Were you on duty with the Twenty-sixth Infantry in the Philippines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With what battalion were you then?—A. I was with the Third Battalion.

Q. Were you on duty with the Third Battalion at the time it was ordered to the island of Samar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the wrecking of a boat containing property belonging to that battalion about this time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any rifles lost by this wreck that you know of?—A. I can not state positively that there were; I have heard that there were rifles lost.

Q. Have you ever heard that these rifles, or any of them, were subsequently recovered?—A. I have heard it mentioned at different times, more in a joking way than otherwise.

Q. State some of the things that you heard in this connection.—A. I have heard that several rifles belonging to M Company, Twenty-sixth infantry, were lost in the Bicol River at Nueva Caceres, P. I., when a catamaran containing a number of men of that company struck a sunken pier and was capsized. I have heard that the company losing them did not make much of an effort to recover them, as they thought they would get new ones to replace them. I have heard that quartermaster-sergeants of other companies did recover some of them, but I can't say positively that this is so; I do not know it to be so.

Q. Then, these guns recovered by quartermaster-sergeants would probably be surplus in other companies?—A. If they recovered them they would apparently be surplus, if they had all the guns they were accountable for at that time.

Q. Did you ever see around your company any guns that were surplus?—A. I do not remember of having ever seen any surplus guns around my company.

Q. Or hear of any that were surplus?—A. I do not remember of having heard of any surplus guns in the company.

Q. How about any of the other companies? Did you ever see any surplus guns around them or hear of any surplus guns around them other than you have just testified to about the quartermaster-sergeant having surplus guns?—A. That is the only way in which I ever heard of any surplus guns around the companies.

Q. Do you know where Sergeant Cheesman is now?—A. No, sir; he was discharged at Camp Mabry.

Q. Do you know where a letter could be sent to him?—A. If I am not mistaken, Sergeant Cheesman told me that his home is in St. Charles, St. Charles Parish, La. He also stated that he was going home, and that he was not going to reenlist. It may be that a letter addressed to him there would reach him.

Q. What is Corporal Ryan's reputation for truth and honesty?—A. Corporal Ryan has a reputation in the company of being what the men would call "windy," and it was a matter of comment that he was always talking. I can not recall any instance of his having been found not telling the truth. I remember hearing some talk among the officers at headquarters that it was suspected that he was dishonest while on duty in either the quartermaster department or commissary department, I can not recall which.

Q. Is there any further information that you can give that will assist in this investigation, either through rumor, hearsay, or from your own knowledge?—A. There is not. June 1 I assumed command of the company at Point Isabell, and as Captain Kilburn was ordered to San Antonio at this same time there was no time to transfer the ordnance property. The company returned to Fort Brown June 30, and on or about July 5 the battalion left for Fort Sam Houston. About July 15 the regiment left for Camp Mabry, near Austin, Tex. The ordnance not required for use by the company was left stored at Fort Sam Houston. This ordnance was boxed at Fort Brown for shipment to Fort Sam Houston while I was with the company at Point Isabell, and so far as I know it had not been unpacked when I was relieved from command of the company in order to proceed to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., for duty. I was relieved from command of K Company, Twenty-sixth Infantry, by Lieutenant Richardson, Twenty-sixth Infantry, but there was no transfer of ordnance property, as Captain Kilburn was still accountable for the same.

INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
St. Louis, Mo., June 3, 1907.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
St. Louis, Mo.

SIR: In connection with my report of the 21st ultimo, covering an investigation of the alleged sale of surplus arms and ammunition at Fort Brown, Tex., I have the honor to forward herewith an affidavit of Q. M. Sergt. Jerry S. Riley, Company C, Twenty-second Infantry, which corroborates the testimony already secured as to the six surplus guns.

I have written to the postmasters at two places in Louisiana for information concerning Joseph Checsmen, formerly quartermaster-sergeant of Company C, Twenty-sixth Infantry, but both replied that they knew nothing of him. No reply has been received to my letter of May 22, 1907, to Harry C. Snider, the quartermaster-sergeant of Company C, referred to in inclosed affidavit.

Very respectfully,

F. H. FRENCH,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Inspector-General.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
St. Louis, Mo., June 4, 1907.

Respectfully forwarded to The Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C., in connection with the report forwarded on May 21, 1907.

W. P. BURNHAM,
Major, General Staff, Acting Chief of Staff.
(In absence of division commander.)

Report of May 21 left with Chief of Staff May 26 by General Ainsworth.

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, one Jerry S. Riley, quartermaster-sergeant, Company C, Twenty-second Infantry, who, upon being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he was in Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry, from about October 16, 1903, to November 10, 1905, when he was discharged. That dates are from memory.

That he served as quartermaster-sergeant from about December 16, 1903, to September 22, 1904; that he never served in the Philippine Islands at any time, and that he joined the Twenty-sixth Infantry at Brownsville, Tex., about October 16, 1903, relieving Company Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider as quartermaster-sergeant, December 16, 1903.

That he was relieved as quartermaster-sergeant about September 22, 1904, by Company Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider.

That when he took over the property at Brownsville, Tex., there were on hand five or possibly six Krag rifles, which he believes were surplus and not carried on regular returns. That all these rifles were turned over by Sergeant Riley to Company Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider when he was relieved as quartermaster-sergeant.

That he has no personal knowledge as to how the surplus rifles were accumulated. That he was told by Company Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider and also the company artificer, Onan, that they had been picked up over in the Philippine Islands from insurrectos, and that two of them had been picked up in a creek where they had been concealed by Filipinos. That he has no further information as to how they became surplus.

That about January or February, 1904, he heard that the former first sergeant, whose name he can not recall, and who had been discharged about a week, had a Krag rifle down in Brownsville at his boarding house, and that he went down and secured the rifle and brought it back to the company. The discharged first sergeant claimed the rifle was his, that it had been given to him by Company Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider, but gave it up without protest when called upon to do so.

That, so far as he knows and believes, there were no other rifles taken away from the company.

That outside of above information he has no knowledge of how the rifles were made surplus, but that some of the following-named persons might give some information in regard thereto: Captain Kilburn, Twenty-sixth U. S. Infantry, Company Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider, and Artificer Onan, then in Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

That as a matter of fact he knows nothing about the rifles except as above, from what he heard in the company. That the rifles were received by him and when he was relieved as quartermaster-sergeant they were turned over by him to Quartermaster-Sergeant Snider, succeeding him, and very little attention was paid to the matter.

Further deponent saith not.

J. S. RILEY,

Quartermaster-Sergeant, Company C, Twenty-second Infantry.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 28th day of May, 1907, at Presidio of Monterey, Cal.

TESTIMONY OF MAJ. CHARLES W. PENROSE, U. S. ARMY—Continued.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. Major, what is the usual course of procedure in case of disturbance of this kind in the Army?—A. As thorough an investigation as it is possible to make.

Q. By whom is it made?—A. That is made by the post commander.

Q. Then after his investigation is concluded, what is the next step?—A. If, during this investigation, enough evidence is adduced to reasonably suppose that anybody may be guilty, it is customary to confine the accused person and prefer charges against him.

Q. What was the result of your investigation?—A. I could not find that my men had anything whatever to do with the trouble in Brownsville.

Q. What charges, if any, were filed against any of the men of your battalion?—A. Of my own knowledge, I am not certain, sir. They were taken to Fort Sam Houston, Tex., confined there, and charges, I believe, preferred against them, under the sixty-second article of war.

Q. What officer, other than yourself as commanding officer of the battalion, had authority to prefer charges?—A. Any officer can prefer charges, sir.

Q. By whom were the charges preferred?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. It is a matter of record that charges were preferred?—A. Yes, sir; I think they were.

Senator FORAKER. Here is a record of the charges (handing volume to Senator Hemenway).

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. These charges were preferred, as this record shows, by H. Clay M. Supplee.—A. Supplee, yes, sir. He is battalion adjutant of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, I think.

Q. After charges have been preferred, what is the next step?—A. They are referred to the post commander and the post commander makes an investigation, and if in his opinion the charges can be sustained he so indorses on the back of the charges and they are forwarded to the department commander, who, if he considers the charges are valid, orders a general court-martial for the trial of the person accused.

Q. Were these charges referred to you as post commander?—A. No, sir.

Q. To whom were they referred?—A. They must have been referred to the post commander at Fort Sam Houston.

Q. Who was post commander at that time at Fort Sam Houston?—A. I think Maj. C. J. T. Clarke, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, was in command at that time. The permanent commander was Col. George Le Roy Brown, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, but I am under the impression that he was away.

Q. Under the rules governing the Army, was it not the duty to refer them to you?—A. No, sir; not to me.

Q. Do you know what disposition the post commander made of the charges when they were referred to him?—A. My recollection is that in conversation with Major Clarke some time afterwards he told me that he found that the charges could not be sustained, and so indorsed on the back of them that in his opinion the charges could not be sustained.

Q. Then what followed?—A. They should have been referred to the department commander; and from the post commander's indorsement I suppose he took no further action in the matter. I do not know now, sir, whether they were referred to a court or not.

Q. I find here the report of Clarke, commander. It says:

Respectfully forwarded to the military secretary, Department of Texas, recommending trial by court-martial under paragraph 962, Army Regulations. These charges have been investigated by the undersigned as far as practicable with the means at hand, and I am of the opinion that it is doubtful if the allegations as set forth can be substantiated.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. You say you do not know whether there was ever a trial by court-martial or not?—A. I think not, sir. I do not know, though, positively. I am pretty sure they were not brought to trial by a court-martial, but I was not stationed at Fort Sam Houston, so that I do not know, sir.

Q. In view of your recommendation, and in view of your opinion at the time, why was there not a court-martial and why were not these soldiers tried in the regular and ordinary way?—A. I think because they could not get the necessary evidence to sustain the allegations.

Q. What is your rule in conducting courts-martial? Are they conducted along the line of ordinary criminal cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where the prosecution must make its case?—A. Must make its case; yes, sir. The prosecution first makes its case, and then it is followed by the defense.

Q. What reason, if any, is there why these soldiers should not have been tried in the ordinary and regular way?—A. That there was not sufficient evidence against them to warrant their trial.

Q. Well, do I understand that this action has been taken without any evidence being adduced that would warrant the War Department in trying these soldiers?—A. Will you please repeat that question?

Q. I say, are we to understand that this action has been taken without any evidence being adduced that would warrant the War Department in trying these soldiers in the ordinary way?—A. Yes, sir; I think—

Senator TALIAFERRO. You are asking him to answer a question, Senator, that may involve some criticism of the Department.

The WITNESS. I do not want to be put in the light of criticising the Department, and I hope that you will strike this out. The men were not tried, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. I do not want to ask you any question that you do not want to answer. You were asked this morning about your own theories. I do not know that they have any particular bearing upon this case, as you are not the trial court, but the examination was pursued with a great deal of vigor, as if your opinions were material, and I am going to ask you a few questions along that line. The gentleman who lost his life—his name I can not now remember.—A. Natus.

Q. Natus. He was a saloonkeeper and gambler?—A. I have so understood.

Q. In how many different places in Brownsville did they conduct gambling houses and saloons?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about any rivalry existing between the various keepers of saloons and gambling houses in that city?—A. No, sir; I do not know of any rivalry. I presume there was the usual rivalry that usually exists with those people, but I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether or not they conducted their business of gambling and selling liquors on Sunday?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know whether they conducted the business of gambling at nights in these various places?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Do you know Captain Kelly?—A. Capt. William Kelly?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard his statement, or heard of his statement before this committee, that he would be as quick to believe the colored soldiers as he would the Mexican residents, barring a few of the leading families, did you, and that he would not care to believe either?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard that he made such a statement.

Q. How many men in your battalion had been under fire, either in battles or in skirmishes?—A. Well, I do not know that I could answer that positively at all, Senator, but as a rough estimate I should think that there probably were 30 per cent of them, maybe 40 per cent of them.

Q. From your knowledge of these men, their bravery in battle, following the flag of their country, and their general behavior, would you believe them on oath?—A. I would, sir.

Q. You think their evidence should be given the same weight as that of any other American citizen?—A. I do, sir.

Q. You think it equally as good as the testimony of the Mexican residents of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Senator HEMENWAY. I do not believe I have any further questions

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. How long were you at Brownsville, Major?—A. We arrived on the 28th of July and we left the 26th of August, I think it was; the morning of the 26th of August.

Q. About a month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know the people of Brownsville pretty well?—A. No, sir; there were very few indeed that I had met; very few.

Q. Did you know Mr. Rendall?—A. No, sir; I had never seen the man, that I know of, until after the 13th of August. I think I only saw him once then, when I went to the telegraph office myself to send a telegram. Am I right as to Mr. Rendall being the operator?

Q. No; the operator was Sanborn.—A. No, sir; I do not think I ever saw Mr. Rendall until he testified before my court.

Q. You do not know his reputation in Brownsville?—A. No, sir; I do not know him at all.

Q. I understood you to say, Major, that the people of Brownsville did this shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you also to say that you knew of no motive?—A. Yes, sir; that is right.

Q. And that there was no evidence—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That they had done it?—A. None that I know of at all, sir.

Q. Do you not think it a serious charge to make against the people of a community?—A. I do, sir.

Q. Without evidence, without motive or the appearance of motive, that they had shot up a town as Brownsville was shot up that night?—A. Yes, sir. I was forced into it. I did not like to say anything of the kind, Senator. I should have liked to have avoided it; but I do not believe my own men did it, and as long as I felt that way I did not see who else could have done it except the people of Brownsville. I am very sorry to have to make such an admission.

Q. There is no evidence that they did it?—A. None that I know of.

Q. I say none that you know of?—A. Yes, sir; not that I know of.

Q. There is some evidence that your men did it?—A. I believe it is so testified—before my court. I know it has been, before my court and here.

Q. There has been evidence given that your men did it, outside of this evidence that your men were recognized?—A. No, sir.

Q. The finding of the shells and other circumstances of that kind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Circumstantial evidence that your men did it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with that evidence in existence, and no proof that the people of Brownsville did it, and no motive for the people of Brownsville to do it, as far as you know, you still adhere to the statement that in your judgment the people of Brownsville did that shooting?—A. That is the only conclusion that I can come to, sir.

Q. And you reach that conclusion only because you can not locate or identify the parties that did the shooting?—A. That, and that I do not believe my men did it. I have taken it into consideration. I have tried to tell the committee of everything that has led me to this conclusion. I have tried to do that in my answer to Senator Pettus.

Q. Now, I do not want to be understood as criticising you, Major, for changing your views about this case.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But it seems to be a fact that you did not change your views until you became one of the accused?—A. I was never accused of the thing, sir.

Q. Were you not court-martialed?—A. I was court-martialed, but not for the shooting up of Brownsville.

Q. Were you not court-martialed for a want of discipline which, if it had existed, would have prevented this shooting up of Brownsville?—A. That was the basis of the charges, of which I was acquitted.

Q. That was the basis. I say, then, that made you practically one of the accused.—A. I can not see it in that light, sir.

Q. If you had been convicted of those charges, you would have been as responsible for that shooting, if your men did it, as the men themselves.—A. I do not think so, sir.

Q. If your want of discipline had made it possible for that to be done, you think you would not have been responsible?—A. I do not see how I could have been held personally responsible. If they had found that there was lack of discipline, I would, of course, have been punished for this lack of discipline; but as far as having any participation in the shooting up of Brownsville is concerned, I do not see how I could have been held responsible personally for that.

Q. You understand, Major, that I did not mean anything of that kind?—A. I hope not, sir.

Q. That you were out there with a gun shooting up the town.—A. No, sir.

Q. I simply want to call attention to the fact that under the testimony you did not change your view that your men did this shooting until you were court-martialed, until the beginning or during the progress of, or at the conclusion of, your court-martial proceedings?—A. That is right, sir.

Q. And I want to ask you in all fairness whether or not you were influenced by that court-martial proceeding to look for some escape for your men?—A. No, sir; I do not know that I was, for any escape for my men. I can not put it that way.

Q. We will change that word.—A. What influenced me was the testimony that I listened to there, which was adduced by the prosecution on my court-martial.

Q. The testimony?—A. The testimony; yes, sir; that and the testimony that has been brought out here.

Q. Was there any testimony, any definite testimony, before the court-martial, showing that your men did not do this shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has there been any definite testimony before this committee showing that your men did not do this shooting, except the denial of such of your men as have been examined?—A. Not that I am aware of, sir. Not that I have seen, and I have followed it pretty closely.

Q. What testimony do you refer to?—A. I mean the testimony given by the people of Brownsville as to what they could see that night. They have testified they could see and distinguish negro soldiers at certain distances that I am positive in my own mind that they could not see.

Q. Why did you reach this conclusion? The statements were all before you when you reached the conclusion that these men did this shooting?—A. No, sir; they were not all before me. It was in a very vague way that I received it. Very little.

Q. Had you not been told by Mayor Combe that your men had been seen on the streets doing the shooting that night?—A. That was an ex parte statement. They had not been submitted to cross-examination or anything of the kind at that particular time.

Q. I am not dwelling on the accuracy or inaccuracy of that statement or testimony. I am dealing with the testimony.—A. That is what I want to do, sir.

Q. I want to try to bring out, if I can, whether or not those facts were before you when you reported in your judgment your men did that shooting?—A. The only facts before me at the time I made that report were from the report of Mayor Combe, when he came in to see me early on the morning of the 14th, at 1 or half past 1 in the morning, in the day, when the citizens' committee came in to see me. They then told me that my men had been seen in the streets doing the shooting. That was the testimony I had before me at that time. That was the statement, rather, that I had before me at that time.

Q. And you concluded afterwards that those statements were inaccurate, because you recalled that that night it was so dark that you could not recognize one of your officers within 10 feet of you?—A. That was it, sir.

Q. Did you not know when Mayor Combe made that statement to you that it was as dark as you afterwards recalled it was?—A. Yes, sir; I did; but I did not know under what circumstances these people who reported to Mayor Combe had seen these men at all. He simply made the blind statement in the matter that five men had been seen in one party and three in another. He did not tell me the circumstances under which they were seen at all.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Did you see the testimony taken before the citizens' committee, before the court-martial?—A. You refer to the citizens' committee?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; I had all of that.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Before you made your report you had that?—A. No. You mean that first report I made, of the 15th?

Q. Yes.—A. No; I do not think I had that—I did not have all of it until about the time of my court-martial.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. When was it that you first recalled that this was such an unusually dark night?—A. That very night, sir.

Q. What?—A. There never was any question in my own mind about this being an unusually dark night. It was apparent when I first stepped out of the house that night.

Q. When was it that you first felt that the statement that your men had been seen on the streets doing this shooting was inaccurate because of the darkness of the night?—A. Well, that was during my trial, in the presentation of the prosecution, when the witnesses testified that they saw these men at various distances.

Q. Now, tell us, Major, why that did not occur to you when you made your report?—A. Simply because I knew nothing, as I have stated before, about the conditions under which these men were seen. I did not know but what there were lights; I did not know but what they saw them in lights that would be brilliant enough for them to easily distinguish them. I did not know anything about it at that time.

Q. Do you know anything about it now? I beg your pardon, finish your answer.—A. Nothing but what I have been told, and what has been brought out in testimony, as to where lights were in that part of town.

Q. It has been brought out that there were several lights in the Cowen house, I think.—A. Yes, sir. There was a light in the Cowen house, and I think that the testimony showed that the first shot or shots put that light out.

Q. The first shots?—A. I think that was it.
Senator LODGE. Put out one light.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Do you mean the first shots?—A. Was there more than one light? I meant the first shots into the house, of course. I did not mean the first shots down below.

Q. You did not mean that?—A. No, sir. Of course I do not mean the first shots that I heard, which I thought were in rear of B or C Company's barracks; but I presume that they were shots that occurred afterwards. If they were down by the Cowen house they must have been.

Q. Approximately, about what was the length of that beat of that sentinel who marched around the occupied barracks?—A. Well, I should think that must have been 300 yards. Three hundred yards, I should think, from the eastern end of C Company barracks to the western end of B Company barracks. That is an estimate only, sir.

Q. Was he required to keep moving on his beat all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think the first firing was on the garrison road, about the mouth of the alley?—A. The first shots that I heard seemed to me to be off in the direction of what is marked there as the commissary-sergeant's quarters. That is a little row of houses in there. I heard two distinct shots, and it struck me they were in that direction. Immediately afterwards there were six or eight shots fired very rapidly, and then three distinct shots that seemed to be right over by B or C Company barracks. Then there were a whole lot of scattering shots. Some of them sounded like they might have been attempts at volleys, and scattering shots in between. I could not pretend to say how many.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I understand that you were convinced that your men did this shooting first on circumstantial evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then when you had the positive evidence of fifteen or twenty people that saw them, that changed your mind?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Now, Major, you say this sentinel was required to keep up his march right around those barracks?—A. Yes, sir; that is the instruction of the sentinel always.

Q. And the point in the barracks opposite the mouth of the alley was about midway of his beat? I understood you to say that the center of B barracks was about opposite the mouth of the alley.—

A. Yes, sir; the center of B barracks. You see, he came around in front as well. He marched right around the barracks.

Q. Yes. So that that sentinel could not have been, at the outside, over 150 or 175 yards from the mouth of the alley?—A. Yes, sir; that would be about it.

Q. And how far were the men in the mouth of the alley from B barracks?—A. I think it is about 50 or 60 feet from the wall to B Company barracks.

Q. I want to submit, Major, if it is not an extraordinary thing that that firing could have been done on the garrison road, with your sentinel marching around those barracks, and with B Company barracks fully occupied, without some of the men being able to give you some idea of who did it.—A. Well—

Q. I want to ask you if that is not really a suspicious circumstance?—A. If I had thought that night that the men did it, I should certainly think so. I did think so at first. A party could have crept up and shot from that wall without anybody ever being any the wiser for it or knowing it.

Q. But there is no evidence whatever that any shot was fired towards the barracks that I know of.—A. I admit that, sir; I have admitted that right along.

Q. So that that would seem to do away with the contingency of the men slipping up to the wall and firing over into the barracks into the grounds?—A. Well, that is possibly so, but I believe that it was.

Q. If we concede for the moment that your men had nothing whatever to do with this firing, that not one of them was connected with the firing, is it not to your mind a suspicious circumstance that that sentinel and no man in B barracks should have any explanation to offer of the firing that occurred so near the barracks as you think this firing did?—A. No; there were some of the men, if I recall it correctly, who stated that they did see shots; they saw flashes outside of that fence.

Q. Some of your men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they make any statement of that kind to you?—A. Yes, sir; I think some of them made it to me. They made it in their affidavits that have been produced that they saw shots outside of the fence. I can not recall now who they were, but I can look the matter up and tell you from their affidavits. I think those affidavits are all in evidence here.

Q. If it is in evidence here, there is no need for you to go to any trouble about it.—A. I believe it is.

Q. I did not recollect that any of your men admitted that they knew of any shooting as near the barracks as the mouth of the alley there on the garrison road, except the three shots which were fired by your sentinel.—A. Yes, sir; some of those men have stated that they saw shots outside of the fence. I think there are some men in B Company and some in D Company who testified to that.

Q. There was a witness who testified that he was at his house on Washington or Adams street—Washington, I think, perhaps—when the firing commenced; that he came down Washington street to the garrison road, and down the garrison road to the mouth of the alley.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And saw some of your soldiers collected in the garrison road opposite the telegraph office, on the corner of Elizabeth street; that he saw them approach the alley, as he thought, and he backed back a little way from the alley to keep from being seen, and he distinctly saw them turn into the alley. He then ran down and looked up the alley and saw them shooting into the Cowen house.—A. The Cowen house; yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Now, in your judgment, would you say that that witness could not have seen that?—A. Yes, sir; I do. I believe he could not have seen it.

Q. One witness testified that he followed some soldiers up the alley up to Thirteenth street, and saw them pass around into Thirteenth street at the corner of the alley, and under that light, and go up Washington street. He was in the alley and put his head out from the alley here [indicating on map]. He was peeping around the corner, and he saw them go around this corner and go up Washington street [indicating].

Senator FORAKER. He saw them turn the other way, Senator. They went right in front of Mr. Porter's house.

Senator OVERMAN. At any rate, he was looking around the corner, at the alley, and he saw them when they went around this way, when they went around by this light, at the corner of Washington street [indicating on map].

Senator BULKELEY. That light is on the sidewalk, you know, and not in the middle of the street, as it is represented on the map.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, wherever it is.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. He put his head around this corner and saw some men turn up there. Is that possible?—A. I do not think so, sir.

Q. Under the light?—A. No, sir; that is a very, very small light.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. There is light enough at the gate, the small gate, I take it, for a man at the mouth of the alley to have seen a body of five or six men collected at that telegraph office, would there not be?—A. I do not know about that, sir.

Q. Without recognizing the men?—A. I do not know whether you could see even with that light there at that distance. I would be inclined to doubt that they could see well enough to know whether they were soldiers or civilians or to know whether they were negroes or white men. I have tried that so often.

Q. I waived that point, Major. I asked you if there would not be light enough for a man at the mouth of that alley to see that there was a body of men congregated at that telegraph office.—A. There might have been. I do not know. With that light there he might have seen them.

Q. Having seen the men there, would he have had any difficulty, in your judgment, in observing that they were coming up the garrison road and going into the alley?—A. I think that he would.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major, if a man located at the corner of the alley and Thirteenth street, to which I am pointing, could look up and see men passing out of Thirteenth and turning into Washington street, a man situated in the house numbered 10, looking out of the windows into Washington street, would certainly be able also to see them, would he not?—A. Certainly; if he could see them the other way, certainly he could. But I do not believe he could.

Q. But if a man was watching out to see anybody and could not see anybody, it would cause you to doubt whether the other man down here could see anybody?—A. I do not believe he could see that distance.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. If the parties living in this telegraph office, Mr. Rendall and his wife and the telegraph operator, all three of whom lived there, were alarmed by the early shooting and were looking out there when this was going on, observing and saw no soldiers and heard no soldiers in the neighborhood or on the sidewalks around, would that not rather discredit the testimony of a man who said he stood 120 feet away and saw them?—A. That is what I am basing my judgment on, sir.

Senator BULKELEY. I believe that is the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Rendall and Mr. Sanborn, that they saw no soldiers. Mr. Sanborn said he saw one man going into the gate, a soldier, with a gun, and that is all he saw; and Mr. Rendall and his wife, as I understand their testimony, only saw figures inside of the reservation, passing up back of B barracks, and as they thought, as they testified, jumping over the wall, no nearer to them than—

Senator TALIAFERRO. Now, in using that testimony to combat that which I mentioned, do I understand that you admit the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Rendall and the telegraph operator?

Senator BULKELEY. The testimony is all there, that is all. You were asking about one part of the testimony and I asked about the other.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major, this shooting was done by somebody?—A. It certainly was, sir.

Q. That is the first conclusion. Then, if it was not done by anybody connected with the battalion, it was done by somebody who was not connected with the battalion, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. So that if in the way you have described you have reached the conclusion that your men did not do it, it follows, does it not, as a necessary consequence, that somebody outside did do it?—A. Yes, sir; that is it.

Q. And when you say "the citizens of Brownsville," you mean somebody other than your men?—A. Yes, sir; somebody other than my soldiers. Of course it was some one other than the soldiers.

Q. That is, they may have lived in Brownsville or they may have lived in the vicinity of Brownsville, for that matter.—A. Yes, sir; they may have come from Mexico, as far as I know.

Q. You do not pretend to say, except that it was somebody other than your men?—A. Except that I do not believe my men did it.

Q. The chairman wants me to ask you whether you have any individual in mind who was guilty of this shooting?—A. No, sir; I have not. I do not know.

Q. And having reached the conclusion that your men did not do it, you were influenced, as I understood you, by these various elements which I will enumerate: First, the good conduct of your men, their denial of their guilt, and your confidence in their truthfulness, and in this microscopic inspection to which you refer, and the unreliability, as it impressed you, of the witnesses who claimed to have seen them that night and to have identified them. All those things had their proper influence in bringing you to the conclusion you finally reached and still entertain, as I understand it?—A. That is it, sir. That is what I have tried to explain to the committee.

Q. Well, I understood it, and I think everybody else does. That is all I want to ask you.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Major, I want to ask you a question. Do you know of any feeling that existed on the part of Tillman and Crixell and other saloonkeepers, or by them against the saloonkeeper that was discharged from your battalion?—A. No, sir; I do not know anything about it, Senator. I never knew of such a saloon being in existence until this matter occurred; I never knew that there was such a saloon.

Senator SCOTT. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Major, just a question. You have said that you would believe your men under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are aware that a great number of them have been examined under oath, and all of the noncommissioned officers, by Colonel Lovering?—A. Have what, sir?

Q. Have been examined before Colonel Lovering?—A. Yes, sir; he examined a great many of them. I do not know whether he examined all or not.

Q. Well, you are familiar with their testimony?—A. Yes, sir; I think I am familiar with all the testimony taken at that time.

Q. And that did not change your opinion?—A. No, sir; it has not changed my opinion.

Q. You after that recommended the discharge of the men in the manner you did?—A. Yes, sir; I did that. I have stated that my opinion commenced to change, and did change, during my trial. Up to that time I believed that the men were guilty.

Q. Yes. Now, about the men who were arrested, and Major Clarke's report that he could not find evidence under the charges sufficient to warrant a trial; that is, you mean the trial of the individuals who were arrested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is it?—A. Yes, sir. We always have to prefer charges against each individual man.

Q. Under those charges they could not find evidence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That applied to the individuals?—A. Yes, sir; under arrest at Fort Sam Houston at that time.

Q. That did not change your opinion?—A. No, sir.

Q. That your men had been guilty of doing the shooting?—A. My opinion changed, Senator—

Q. But that incident did not change your opinion?—A. No, sir.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Were these men who were put under arrest supposed to be the ones most likely to be concerned in it?—A. I don't know, sir, by what process of reasoning Captain McDonald selected those men to have warrants issued for them.

Q. Captain McDonald selected those men?—A. Capt. William McDonald, of the Texas Rangers. He was the one—either he, or he got some one to swear out the warrants for these men. They were served on me in the presence of Mr. Kleiber, who is the district attorney for that particular judicial district of that part of the country; and on the strength of that I placed those men in confinement.

Q. The military authorities had nothing to do with their arrest?—A. Nothing at all, sir. This was a warrant issued on me out of Judge Welch's court.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You have spoken of Mr. Kleiber there, the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He took hold of it after the citizens' committee got through?—A. He was one of the committee which I requested be appointed. If you will remember, I wrote a letter to Captain Kelly and asked him if he would not appoint a committee and come into the post and make such investigations as he cared to. Mr. Kleiber was a member of that committee.

Q. Did Mr. Kleiber ask you why it was you did not have the guns inspected that night?—A. Did Mr. Kleiber ask me?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; not that I am aware of. I do not recall that he did.

Q. You can not recall having had such a conversation, or you having given an excuse to him why it would have been useless to have the guns inspected?—A. To Mr. Kleiber?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not recall it, sir. I do not think that I did. Mr. Kleiber, with the other three members of this committee, came out to the post two or three times before this man McDonald was brought out, and I had a good many talks with Mr. Kleiber, but I do not recall anything was stated at all about the inspection of the rifles. It may be that I told him that I had an inspection of rifles as soon after daylight in the morning as possible, but I do not recall it, Senator, although I may have, because we talked about a great many things.

Q. The particular point I am calling attention to is not the inspection the next morning, but why you did not have an inspection that night?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect any such conversation.

Q. You do not recall saying to him, in substance, that that would have done no good; in substance, that the men could have cleaned the rifles in the morning?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You have no remembrance of it?—A. I have no recollection of it. I realized perfectly well that it would be almost impossible to inspect those rifles at night. It is a very difficult matter to detect at night whether a rifle has been fired or not. But I do not recall that, Senator.

Q. That is all I want to ask.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major, you have two or three times been asked about your recommendation that the battalion be discharged piecemeal, 20 per cent at one time and 20 per cent at another, and so on?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recommendation.

Senator FORAKER. That recommendation which Senator Warner speaks of is the one found at page 105 of Senate Document 155, part No. 1, dated September 20, 1906?

Senator WARNER. Yes.

Senator FORAKER. I would like to have that printed in the record in full at this point.

The document referred to is as follows:

FORT RENO, OKLA., September 20, 1906.

The MILITARY SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, Tex.

SIR: In obedience to the department commander's instructions, contained in your telegrams of August 26 and 28, the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, have been held at this post without privileges of any kind, and prior to arrival here, from August 14 to 27, were confined strictly to the limits of Fort Brown, Tex. Therefore they have had no liberty of any kind or character for over a month.

Since arriving at Fort Reno, in addition to allowing no privileges whatever, and being confined within the limits of the post, I have given the enlisted men of these companies extra guards, extra drills, and constant police work, besides having tattoo roll call for them, and always one and sometimes two check inspections after the regular 11 o'clock p. m. inspection.

At first I was under impression that these extra drills, police, and privations would have the effect of inducing some one who was not among the criminals, but who has the knowledge of the guilty parties to the shooting at Brownsville, to give some information that would lead to the detection of some of the men, but up to this time it has proven an utter failure, and I doubt very much if it will ever accomplish the desired results. In fact, I am of the opinion that it is having the contrary effect, by keeping the men constantly on their guard, and this view is shared by the officers of the battalion, as well as many of the old noncommissioned officers who are thoroughly reliable and trustworthy, and whose opinions in such a matter are worthy of consideration.

In view of this fact, I respectfully suggest that one of the two following plans be authorized:

First. Take off all restrictions imposed, return to the regular routine of post duty, and lead the men to believe the whole Brownsville matter has been dropped, but have three colored detectives enlisted and one assigned to each of the three companies.

Second. That authority be granted by the Secretary of War to discharge, if necessary, all but 20 per cent of the enlisted men of the three companies, the discharges to be so notated that enlistment again would be impossible.

To carry out this latter suggestion, I would have it published to the men that on a certain specified date, a month later, for instance, if the criminals were not detected and reported, 20 per cent of each company would be discharged. At the end of a second period of thirty days, if the men still remained undetected, a second lot of 20 per cent of the original numbers of the companies would be discharged, and so on, in periods of thirty days, until but 20 per cent of the men are left. The men discharged, in all cases, to be selected by the company commanders.

This latter is a drastic measure and should, in my opinion, be resorted to only after the first suggestion had been given a fair trial and had proven a failure.

I am strongly of the opinion that but few men have any knowledge of the deplorable Brownsville affair, but it is quite evident that these few will never betray their comrades under present conditions. The majority of the men, particularly the old soldiers who have served their country for years gallantly and faithfully and borne themselves honorably, feel this matter very deeply, and I believe are doing all they can to detect the guilty, but it must be remembered the negro race is a very secretive one, and those having knowledge of the shooting, without being participants, will hesitate a long time, under most adverse conditions, before giving information.

I recommend that the first plan be given a fair trial, for once the present restraint is removed and the men given the usual liberty they will be much more apt to talk, and especially after drinking a little; but to be reasonably hopeful of success detectives must be employed.

Very respectfully,

O. W. PENROSE,
Major, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I notice you say with respect to it that you recommend that as an alternative provision?—A. Yes, sir. There was another recommendation that I favored. There was a second recommendation there that I favored being tried first.

Q. I want to ask you about this. You say:

I am strongly of the opinion that but few men have any knowledge of the deplorable Brownsville affair, but it is quite evident that these few will never betray their comrades under present conditions. The majority of the men, particularly the old soldiers who have served their country for years gallantly and faithfully and borne themselves honorably, feel this matter very deeply, and I believe are doing all they can to detect the guilty.

Now, all that was believed, of course, by you at the time?—

A. Why, certainly, sir.

Q. You were writing exactly as you thought about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all that I want to ask now.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Major, just a question. You said you would believe your men under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you believe that they would have admitted the fact to you if they had been connected with this shooting?—A. You mean if any participated in it?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I do not believe they would have told the truth about it if they had been connected with it. I was speaking generally, of course, that I would believe my men.

Q. You do not mean to say to this committee that if a number of your men did this shooting—assuming for the moment that they did—and an additional number knew of it, that those men would admit the facts to you; that you would believe them if they said that they did not do it?—A. I believe if any great number had known by whom the shooting was done—if it was done by these men—that they would have come to me and told me about it. I would certainly have believed them.

Q. Suppose there had been a conspiracy among your men to shoot up that town and that a few had been delegated to do the shooting, that would have made them all parties to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you believe that under those circumstances your men would have told you the facts?—A. If there had been a conspiracy, I do not suppose they would.

Q. I understood you also to say that the colored man was secretive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was secretive by nature?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You meant, I suppose, in dealing with the white race?—A. Oh, yes, sir; entirely.

Q. Do you not think it is equally characteristic of the colored man that he is very communicative in dealing with his own race?—A. No; I do not think they are, sir. Now, Senator, I am speaking about colored soldiers. I do not know a thing in the world about colored people outside of colored soldiers. I wish to limit my remarks to colored soldiers. I do not know a thing about anything else. Of course I have seen colored people, like a great many of the rest of us have, but not to know anything about them, except colored soldiers.

Q. You do not mean to say to this committee that you believe that these men did not do the shooting because they have come here and sworn that they did not do it?—A. That is one of the reasons.

Q. That is one of the circumstances?—A. Yes, sir; it was one of them. I have tried to give them all.

Q. Still, you believe if these men had done the shooting they would have come here and sworn they did not?—A. I suppose they would. I do not suppose a man would come here and convict himself.

Q. Yes. That was exactly the way I felt about it.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Do you think it would make any difference whether they were white or colored in regard to that?—A. I do not think it would; no, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. I should like to ask the Major a question. You were acquitted on the court-martial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were acquitted on the ground that the soldiers did not do the shooting?—A. There were exceptions made in the verdict, which stated that the soldiers, on the opinion of the court, did do the shooting.

Q. So I understood the finding of the court-martial.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That the soldiers did do the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the impression made on the court-martial, by the testimony which changed your mind, was not the same?—A. Not the same; no, sir. I differed with them in that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Were the men on trial before the court-martial?—A. They were not, sir.

Q. Were they represented before the court-martial?—A. They were not, sir; had no representation.

Q. The man who was on trial was acquitted, and these men who were not on trial were convicted?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I give notice that in due time that matter will receive attention.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. I want to repeat my question. I have not interrupted heretofore, and I would like to be allowed to ask this question, if I may. The court-martial has stated in its decision that the men did the shooting?—A. Yes, sir. I thought I answered your question, sir.

Q. You regard those microscopic examinations as final?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. That is, you think it is absolute proof?—A. I should think so; yes, sir.

Q. And of course you are aware that the microscopic examinations showed that there were several guns which could have been used?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Therefore, as you regard them as absolute, it all turns on that one gun which you say could not have been used?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it impossible that that gun should have been taken from that box?—A. I think it was; yes, sir; from the testimony of the company commander.

Q. I heard the testimony of Lieutenant Lawrason, if it is he to whom you refer.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I have read it since the committee sat in the morning, and I can not find anything in it that indicates impossibility; but that may be my fault.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The box was not locked?—A. It was screwed down, as I understand.

Q. He did not seem to know whether it was screwed down or nailed down.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that is unimportant.—A. I think he stated, though, that in his opinion it had not been opened.

Q. Yes, that in his opinion it had not been opened.—A. Yes, sir. I do not know of anybody that could be as good a judge as Lieutenant Lawrason. He saw it packed up at Fort Niobrara and he saw it opened at Fort Brown.

Q. But you think that it is impossible that that could be opened and nailed up again?—A. Yes, sir; I do not think that was done.

Q. Then you think the microscopic examination was right about all these other guns?—A. I think it was probably right about that gun.

Q. Then how about the others?—A. I think they were probably right about that.

Q. Then will you explain to me what your theory is about the matter?—A. I think those shells were fired on the range at Fort Niobrara, Nebr. We had just completed our target practice before we went to Fort Brown, Tex. Each company has what is known as a decapper, which is a little instrument that takes the cap out of the fired shell. B Company had broken its decapper, and they took all of their shells, or almost all of them, that had been used on the range at Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown, with the intention of getting a new decapper and then sending the shells back to the arsenal. We get a certain proportion of cartridges for empty shells. That box was carried to Fort Brown, was opened a few days after the battalion arrived there to get some things out of the top of the box in which these cartridges were packed, and that box was left open on the back porch of the barracks for several days, I do not know how many. It contained all of these shells, or nearly all of them, that were fired on the range at Fort Niobrara, Nebr.

Q. Then am I right in supposing that your theory is that the people who did the shooting took these shells out of this box and scattered them in different parts of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I think.

Q. In order to direct suspicion to the soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then that, of course, implies that it had been a matter of some days that this plan had been carried out? I mean, I do not suppose they took them that evening, probably.—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. You think they took them that evening?—A. No, sir; I do not know. I do not know when they might have been taken.

Q. But anybody could come up on the porch of the barracks and take them any time? There was no difficulty in getting them?—

A. No, sir; I think they could have, under the circumstances there. They were left open on the porch of the barracks.

Q. Anybody could come up from town and come up on the balcony and fill their pockets with shells for that purpose or any other purpose?—A. Yes, sir; I do not know that there was any difficulty about it. A sentinel was put there for the purpose of keeping a lot of these Mexicans away from the barracks. He was put on shortly after we arrived there. They complained that things were being stolen from the barracks. It was possible that anybody could have obtained these shells when the sentinel was at one end of his beat or at the other.

Q. I see.—A. In the daytime his beat was in the rear of the barracks, but after retreat it extended entirely around the barracks.

Q. And that these persons, with a view to this shooting up of the town and misleading public opinion as to who did it, supplied themselves with these shells?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. And scattered them about the streets? So that your first impression, that those shells had been recently fired, was, of course, a mistaken impression?—A. I said "recently fired." I do not know that you can—if a shell has been left out in the weather any considerable length of time it becomes a little corroded, almost always. If it is out there, I presume, a week or so, it becomes so. The shells I saw were not corroded. They might have been just fired at Fort Niobrara and have been perfectly bright. They come out perfectly bright after being fired.

Q. They must have been those fired at Fort Niobrara, if your theory is correct.—A. I think they were.

Q. (Continuing.) That the troops did no shooting the night before?—A. I think they were; yes, sir. We had no target practice at Brown at all.

Q. So that they must have been taken, of course, for that purpose?—A. I think so.

Q. To place in different portions of the town?—A. Yes, sir. Senator LODGE. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, Major, just a word. If those 11 shells that the report showed were fired out of this gun which was in the box, were in fact fired out of the gun, and the gun that night was in the box, it was impossible that they should have been fired that night in Brownsville, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that gun which was in that box that night locked up in the storeroom had never been fired, had it, except only at Fort Niobrara?—A. That was all, sir. It had never been taken out of the box at Brownsville.

Q. And Sergeant Blaney, whose gun it was, you say was one of the best soldiers of your company?—A. Yes, sir; he was a very good man. I considered him so.

Q. And when he came back his gun was returned to him in the same condition in which he had given it to the quartermaster-sergeant when he left, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I am told.

Q. He so testified.—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Major, suppose the quartermaster who had that gun and box in his keeping had been in the conspiracy, may it not have been possible for them to have opened the box and taken that gun out and given it to some soldier and then put the gun back afterwards and fastened up the box again?—A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. And nailed up the box again?—A. I do not think it could have been done. To open that storeroom and get that gun, considering the noise that it would have made, and put it back again would have been impossible; and they had other things piled on top of it. You remember the testimony as to that?

Q. Yes.—A. And then going in there about 1 o'clock—

Q. I remember the testimony. But suppose they were all in the conspiracy, could not that box have been opened and the gun taken out?—A. Oh, yes, sir; if they were all in the conspiracy, I suppose so.

Q. If the whole company was in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not mean the officers, of course—the commissioned officers.—A. Yes, sir; if the whole of B Company had been in it, I suppose it could have been done; but I think it is extremely improbable.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major, the gun was smeared with cosmoline, was it not?—A. I believe it was.

Q. And all the guns in the chest were fastened down with cleats?—A. They have cleats that hold both the butt and the muzzle, and it is customary, when they are packed away, to smear them all over with cosmoline.

Q. Would it not be a very improbable thing that men going out to shoot up the town would go to get a gun out of an arm chest in that position, when they had a gun rack full of them?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. And is it not necessarily so, that whoever did this shooting did some planning about it, and a good deal of planning?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. It was well thought out?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. With all you have been able to do, and you have done everything you could think of to do, you have been unable to get any clew in regard to it?—A. Not the slightest, at all.

Q. And that was the experience of Major Blocksom and General Garlington and Colonel Lovering also, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it must have been extremely well planned and extremely well carried out if men in the battalion did it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Must it not?—A. It must certainly have been.

Q. And if, as Senator Overman suggests, they were all in a conspiracy, it would be still more difficult, would it not; that is to say, the difficulties would increase as they would increase the numbers engaged in it?—A. Yes, sir; undoubtedly.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Was there any more difficulty in getting a gun out of that box that was locked up than in getting a gun out of that rack that was locked up?—A. Yes, sir; I think there was, sir. Well, I don't know; I could not say that. They would have to break open the rack if it was locked up, and they would have to break open the box if it was locked up.

Q. That is what I say; and there is about as much difficulty in getting a gun out of this rack as in getting a gun out of a box?—

A. The box had a lot of other stuff on top of it—company property—bunk irons, I believe, and possibly some mattresses. I have forgotten exactly what he said it was under.

Q. But, as far as the difficulty was concerned, I understand you to say that it was just as difficult to get a gun out of the rack as it was out of the box, and just as difficult to get a gun out of the box as out of the rack?—A. Yes; unless they had a key to the rack. They would have to break the rack open to get a gun out without the key.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Would there have been any difficulty, then, after the firing was over, after the men were dismissed, to return the gun to the arm chest and screw down the lid and pile up the furniture and everything on top of it again?—A. I do not think so, sir.

Q. You have no doubt but what that gun was in that arm chest?—A. No, sir; there is no doubt in my mind about it.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. That is only an opinion?—A. Yes, sir; all of it is only my opinion.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. I am not familiar with court-martial proceedings, Major, and I assume you are. Is it customary for a court-martial to render a verdict against persons or parties who are not on trial before them?—

A. Senator, that, in a measure, would be criticising the court-martial that tried me if I answered that, and I would rather be excused from answering the question.

Q. I have not said that any court-martial has done this, you know.—A. No; I understand that. If you will pardon me, I would rather not answer it.

Q. No; I will not press the question. You did answer a question in regard to the verdict that convicted the troops of doing the firing?—A. Yes, sir; that is apparent from the record itself.

Senator BULKELEY. Well, I read over the verdict, and I do not find anything that convicts the troops or accuses them.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. EDGAR A. MACKLIN, U. S. ARMY—Recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. You will remember, Captain, that you are still under oath.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Captain, since you testified a Mr. Billingsley, from Brownsville, has testified, and I read to you from the testimony as given by him, as found in our record on page 2475. Mr. Billingsley being on the stand was asked the following questions and gave the following answers:

Q. Were you in Mr. Crixell's place on the 13th of August?—A. Yes, sir; I went in there that evening.

Do you know Mr. Billingsley, let me ask?—A. No, sir; I would not know him if I saw him.

Q. He testified, as I will read presently, that he furnished milk and dairy products to the officers at the fort.—A. I did not keep a mess or did not run my own household at the fort. I lived with my company, had my meals brought over from the company, and I never used milk and never bought anything from him.

Q. I see. Now, I will read further from this:

Q. Were you in Mr. Crixell's place on the 13th of August?—A. Yes, sir; I went in there that evening.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Crixell?—A. I did; with Mr. Joe Crixell.

Q. Is he the proprietor of the saloon?—A. He was bartender that evening.

Let me ask you, do you know Joe Crixell, who kept a saloon there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. Were there any officers in there then?—A. Yes, sir; Captain Lyon, Captain Macklin, and Lieutenant Lawrason were in there.

Q. Where were they and where were you with reference to the door?—A. Well, sir; I can indicate it to you by this table. They were, say, at the far end of the bar down here. This would be the far end of the saloon and the door fronting on Elizabeth street. They were at the far end, at the far end of a counter as long as this table. I stepped in, facing them, right at the door. I stepped in, and as I walked to the end of the counter—we very often shake dice down there for the drinks—and I said to Crixell, "I will shake the first dice out of the box for the drinks." Seeing these men in there was why I went in. I went in for a little information. Crixell came up to me and brought the dice box and threw the dice out on the counter, and I began talking to him, and I said, "Have you heard anything more about the Evans affair?" He says, "Nothing, particular." I says, "What do these officers say about it?" We were talking in a very low tone, not intending to be heard. He says, "Nothing." I says, "Have they done anything, or do they act like they are going to do anything in regard to this matter?" He says, "I don't think they will do anything," and I says, "Well, there ought to be something done, some way." I says, "At the rate these fellows are carrying on here I don't think that the soldiers or the officers either ought to be allowed in town if they don't do something to help or assist us or to stop these men from conducting themselves the way they are acting in the city." Then I turned around and walked out.

At page 2479 he testified in reference to the same matter, commencing near the bottom of the page:

Q. About what time was it that you went to Crixell's saloon and saw these officers?—A. I don't know certainly, but it was between 1:30 and 3 or 4 o'clock.

Q. Did you see them go in there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You said you went in there for information.—A. I saw them standing in there talking to Mr. Crixell, and I thought it was a good chance to find out something about the Evans affair.

Q. You went in simply to learn, as you inquired of Mr. Crixell, what they were going to do or had done about the Evans matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Crixell answered that he did not think they were going to do anything?—A. That is what he said.

Q. That he had not heard them say?—A. That he had not heard them say whether they were going to do something about it or not.

Q. And then you said that you did not think that either officers or men ought not to be allowed in town?—A. If they did not make some effort to catch the guilty parties.

Q. If they did not make some effort. Had you made inquiry of anybody else to find out whether they were making efforts to find out the guilty parties?—A. I don't know that I did, but I thought that was a good place to find out if they had done anything.

Q. Have you narrated everything that occurred there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all that you said?—A. Yes, sir; that is all that I said, and then I walked out.

Q. They did not say anything to you at all?—A. No, sir; they never spoke to me.

Q. They never spoke to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Crixell did not speak to them at all?—A. He turned back to wait on them, and I walked out of the saloon.

That is the testimony of Mr. Billingsley. Now, I read from the testimony of Joseph Crixell, at page 2484 of our hearings, at the bottom of the page. Speaking of you:

Q. What did he say there, if anything, as to the result, the probable result, of such conduct by the citizens, as that of Mr. Tate, in striking the colored soldier and knocking him down with a pistol?—A. On the 13th between 2 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, Captain Macklin and Captain Lyon and Lieutenant Lawrason came into the saloon, and they asked me to serve them three gin fizzes, and while I was mixing up the drinks he asked me, he says, "Joe, have you ever heard anything about a nigger being hit over the head with a six-shooter around here lately?" I said, "Yes; I heard a little about it." He said, "Have you heard the particulars about it?" I said the only thing I heard was that Mr. Tate, this customs officer, hit a nigger over the head with a six-shooter because this nigger would not give the sidewalk to some ladies.

Senator FORAKER. Speak a little louder.

A. (Continuing.) I told them that I had heard about the nigger being hit over the head with a six-shooter, and he asked me if I had heard any of the particulars, and I told him that I had heard that Mr. Tate had hit this nigger over the head with a six-shooter because the nigger had pushed his wife, or some other lady that was with him, off of the sidewalk, or something like it. Captain Macklin told me then, he says, "Yes; that is what they claim, but," he says, "Major Penrose and myself have investigated this thing thoroughly, and we have found out that these negro soldiers have been imposed on by the citizens and Federal officers of this town," he says, "and this thing has got to be stopped." He says, "Now, Joe, suppose these niggers would jump that barracks fence and shoot this damn town up any of these nights." He says, "We could not prevent it."

Q. Do you know Mr. Billingsley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him in your saloon that afternoon?—A. Yes, sir; just about that time. Just about the time that Captain Macklin made that remark Mr. Billingsley came into the front door and called me to the other end of the counter and asked me to shake for the drinks. He always was in there once or twice a day and wanted to shake dice for the drinks. I did. I left the officers at one end of the counter and went to the upper end of the counter, where Mr. Billingsley was, to shake with him; and when we got through shaking, and I was putting up his drink, he says, "Joe, have you heard anything about Mrs. Evans being assaulted by some negro soldier?" I said, "Yes; I heard something about it." He says, "Yes; that is bad." Then, of course, he was talking to me in a low voice; he says, "Have they found out anything about this fellow? Have they found out the guilty negro?" I says, "No; not by the way they talk." And then he says, a little louder than what he was talking to me before, he says, "Yes; it is a shame. We ought not to allow even these white officers to come in town. They are just as bad as the negroes;" and he walked out. Of course, after he walked out, I walked right back to where the officers were drinking, and Captain Macklin looked at me and smiled, and then he turned around and looked at Captain Lyon, and said something low, that I couldn't hear, and he looked at me again, and he says, "Yes; these niggers will surprise th's fellow yet," now referring to Mr. Billingsley, who had just walked out.

Now, Captain, I will ask if you remember, since I have read that to you, being in Mr. Crixell's saloon, the one kept by Joseph Crixell in Brownsville, at the time mentioned? He says that on the afternoon of August 13 you went in there about 3 or 4 o'clock, I think, in the afternoon.—A. No, sir; I was not there.

Q. Were you there at all that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what hour in the day?—A. Mr. Lawrason and Captain Lyon went out on a practice march on the morning of August 13. My company drilled. My drill was over at 9 o'clock, and after the drill I went over to the house and changed my clothes, and then walked down to as far as the Brownsville Herald printing office—I don't know whether it was the Herald, but I think it was the Herald office, it was a printing office—to get some printing that I had ordered there for my company. On leaving the office Captain Lyon and Lieutenant Lawrason were coming in, returning from their practice march.

Q. About what hour of the day was that?—A. That, I should judge, was between 9.40 and 10 o'clock, somewhere near, very close to 10 o'clock, probably at 10 o'clock. I told Captain Lyon that his printing which he had ordered there at the office was finished, and asked him if he wanted me to get it, and he said yes. I stayed in that printing office for about 10 or 15 minutes. When Captain Lyon and Mr. Lawrason returned to the town, which was a very short distance from the post, we all three went to Crixell's saloon, and we ordered three gin fizzes, one apiece.

Q. And this was about what hour of the day?—A. About 10 o'clock in the morning, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Billingsley there at that time?—A. I would not know Mr. Billingsley, Senator, if I were to see him.

Q. And you do not remember seeing him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did you hear anybody make any remarks of the character mentioned by him and Mr. Crixell, as made by Billingsley at that time?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Were you in that saloon again that day at any hour of the day?—A. No, sir; not at all that day, and not during my tour of duty. I don't think I ever was in that saloon again during my stay in Brownsville. That was the last time.

Q. Did you have any talk with Mr. Crixell of the character described by him?—A. I did not; no, sir.

Q. Did you make any remark to the effect that those negroes would surprise that fellow yet?—A. No, sir. A remark of that kind in my position would be suicidal. I never made such a remark as that.

Q. Did you say anything about those negroes jumping over the wall some time and coming up and shooting up the damned town?—A. No, sir; not in any way.

Q. No such remark as that was ever made?—A. No, sir; not at any time.

Q. All the time that you were in the saloon you were in the company of whom?—A. Captain Lyon and Mr. Lawrason.

Q. And they were near enough to you at all times to hear everything you said?—A. Yes, sir. We were right together at the lower end of the bar.

Q. You therefore flatly contradict the statement, do you, which has been put into your mouth?—A. I do, most assuredly; yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever have such a thought in your mind at any time prior to the 13th day of August, 1906, that the negro soldiers of that battalion would go out and shoot up the town, jump over the wall, or get out into the town in any other way?—A. No, sir. As I have already testified, they were a well-behaved battalion. I never anticipated such a thing. If I had, I might have taken steps to have prevented it.

Q. Now, I will read from his testimony, at page 2494, further, on that same subject:

Q. Now, this was the afternoon of the 13th, when Captain Macklin and Captain Lyon and Lieutenant Lawrason came together into your saloon, as I understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Later than 1 or 2 o'clock, but not later than 5?—A. Not later than 4.

Q. Not later than 4?—A. No, sir.

Q. And they came in and ordered some drinks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they order?—A. A gin fizz each.

Q. They each wanted a gin fizz?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You sold it to them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they drank it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And while they were there getting their gin fizzes, and while you were waiting on them, Mr. Billingsley came in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he called you to one side?—A. No, sir; he just called me to the other end of the counter.

Q. To the other end of the counter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far away from them?—A. Twenty-four feet.

Q. Twenty-four feet?—A. Yes, sir; but they were not exactly on one end. They were about one-third of the way—that is, taking two-thirds of the counter, they were separated from Mr. Billingsley.

Q. Did he call you to the other end of the counter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you got up there he asked you what these officers were doing, or going to do, about finding out who assaulted Mrs. Evans?—A. Well, he asked me if I had found out anything through them about if they had found out who was the guilty nigger.

Q. He wanted to know whether you had found out through them whether they had found out who was the guilty negro?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the first time you had seen Mr. Billingsley that day?—A. The first time I had seen him that day.

Q. Did he seem to be excited?—A. Not until I told him that there was nothing done yet, by the officers' talk.

Q. Had you had any talk at all with these officers at that time?—A. I just had talked to them.

Q. About the Evans matter?—A. About the Evans matter?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, in connection. When he asked me about this nigger being hit over the head, and all that, in connection with that.

Q. No; I am talking about the Evans matter. Did you have any talk with these officers about the Evans assault before Mr. Billingsley came in?—A. I do not think that we had touched that point—that is, to amount to anything.

Q. Did you talk about it at all?—A. I believe Captain Macklin did mention something about it.

Q. About the Evans matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not know, Mr. Crixell, when you came back to them—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) That they at that time did not know anything about the Evans matter; that it was not known in the fort until Mayor Combe went to the fort to see Major Penrose, about half past 5 in the evening?—A. It was in the paper that morning.

Q. Do you not know that Major Penrose did not know anything about it until that evening?—A. That they did not know anything?

Q. I ask you if you did not know at that time that these officers did not know anything about the Evans matter?—A. No; I know that they did know.

Q. You know that they did know?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know that they knew?—A. Simply because they were in the saloon before that, just after Captain Macklin got in from the like.

Q. From where; the heights?—A. Yes; from out on the like; that is, he went out of the town on a march.

Q. They went out on a practice march, you mean?—A. Yes, sir; and just as they got in they came in my saloon, and everybody was talking about this matter already.

Q. Early Monday morning?—A. Not early. He got in just about 12 o'clock.

Q. Twelve o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; I think that was the time he got in.

Q. Captain Macklin was officer of the day that day, was he not?—A. He went in as officer of the day afterwards.

Q. Was he wearing his sword and his revolver and his sash and belt that day?—A. I believe he had his sword on.

Q. When he was down in the saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that usual, for an officer of the day to wear his sword and revolver and belt and sash?—A. I don't know anything about it.

And he further testifies, on pages 2496 and 2497, being all the testimony of Mr. Crixell on that subject. It is a little handier to have it inserted in the record here:

Q. You are sure this was in the afternoon of the 13th?—A. I am sure of it.

Q. After the Evans matter, and before the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with them when they were in there about the Evans matter?—A. Yes; just as I stated before; I am not sure if we talked about that matter or not, but I think we did.

Q. You have undertaken to give us the conversation you did have, and it related solely to the Tate matter?—A. How is that?

Q. You narrated the conversation you did have, in answer to Senator Warner's questions, and that conversation related only to the Tate matter?—A. Yes, sir; especially.

Q. You did not tell us, when you told Senator Warner about it, anything about the Evans matter?—A. I am not saying that yet, either.

Q. I understand from what you are saying now that you had some conversation—A. I say maybe I did. I am not sure of it.

Q. At any rate, when Mr. Billingsley asked you what you had found out, you told him that you did not think that they had done anything?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you add that you did not think they were going to do anything?—A. No, sir; I said I did not think they had done anything.

Q. Mr. Billingsley immediately then made another remark to you and left the saloon?—A. That is all the remark he made.

Q. What was it?—A. He says this way. He says, "It is a shame;" he says, "We ought not even to allow the white officers in town; they are just as bad as the niggers."

Q. Did he say that in a pretty loud tone?—A. Not too loud, but loud enough for them to hear it.

* * * * *

Q. Did he use any profanity when he made that remark?—A. Well—

Q. Didn't he swear a great big, ugly oath?—A. That is the only—

Q. And haven't you testified once before, to Mr. Purdy, that he did use an oath?—A. I testified before Mr. Purdy.

Q. You gave your affidavit to Mr. Purdy, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not printed, but you gave it all the same?—A. Yes, sir; I know I gave it.

Q. And didn't you in that affidavit recount this same conversation?—A. I am pretty sure that it is the same that I am saying here. Of course it is a matter of eight or nine months ago. It may be one word, you know, that I may forget, but it is just on the same principle—the same thing.

Q. The reason I made the remark that that affidavit was not printed—it is no secret that this affidavit was taken, but the Secretary of War stated that he withheld this affidavit because it affected Captain Macklin, who was then under charges, and would be court-martialed and tried.—A. Yes, sir.

Now, was the Evans matter talked about by you or not—I mean you and Captain Lyon and Mr. Lawrason—when you were in that saloon?—A. To the best of my recollection, Senator, we did not know anything about it at that time.

Q. At that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had been drilling all the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go out to drill at that time?—A. I usually got up about 6 o'clock, and we went out to drill at 7.

Q. You had to get up and have your breakfast and everything and get ready?—A. And the companies going on the practice march left the post at 6 o'clock.

Q. And at the time you were in there did you have any talk with Crixell on that subject?—A. I do not recall any, sir; not at all.

Q. Did you have any talk among yourselves?—A. No, sir; not among ourselves.

Q. Did Crixell make any inquiry of you in regard to it?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Now, Captain, you remember the Newton-Tate affair?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remember the Newton-Tate difficulty. Tate was a customs officer, and he attacked Newton, who was a private in your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the affair. Can you tell us about Newton—what kind of a soldier he was, and what kind of a man he was, generally speaking?—A. Soon after I took command of my company, which was Company C of the Twenty-fifth Infantry—

Senator WARNER. I will say that you will find all that in his evidence before.

Senator FORAKER. I do not think I asked him anything about it when he was here before.

Senator WARNER. Go ahead.

Senator FORAKER. I think he testified before the court-martial, but I do not think I asked him anything on the point here.

The WITNESS (continuing). A. Soon after I took command of my company—Company C of the Twenty-fifth Infantry—which was in December, 1904, I made Newton my company clerk. I always regarded him as a very trustworthy man, and a man of very good character. I think it is possible that I had him tried once, but not over once.

Q. The record shows that he had four convictions while he was in Company C of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and that he was fined $3 in one case, and in each of the others he was fined $1.—A. Yes, sir. They are all minor offenses; but as the average soldier goes, he was a very good soldier.

Q. Those fines and punishments would indicate that those were not serious offenses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what did he do as to this trouble, so far as you were aware of it, after it had occurred? Did he come to you about it; and if so, what did he do?—A. I believe that he came to me immediately.

Q. That night?—A. He came to me before 9 o'clock on the night that it occurred. The exact date I have forgotten, but I think it was a week before the 13th of August. He reported the matter to me in toto, and I told him that I would report that matter to Major Penrose, the commanding officer, and have it investigated.

Q. The testimony is that this happened probably between 8 and 9 o'clock on Sunday evening, August 5.—A. Yes, sir; it was just a week before the 18th.

Q. And at any rate, right afterwards he came to you. Was the wound still fresh?—A. Yes, sir. He had been to the hospital to have it dressed. He went up to the hospital to have it dressed, I believe, and then came to me. He was not in a very excited state, and I told him: "You go home, Newton, and I will report the matter to Major Penrose in the morning, and we will have it investigated."

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. He came to you before 9 o'clock?—A. I think it was; yes, sir.

Q. He had already been to the hospital?—A. I think so. I am not quite positive on the dressing of the wound, whether I saw the dressing or the wound itself. It was a long time ago, but I was very much impressed by his coming right there on my lawn, and I believe that Mr. Grier was present at the same time when he came up.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The testimony is that he went to his barracks after he was hurt and washed the blood off his face, and then he went to you and reported, and then he went to the hospital. May that be correct?—A. It is possible it is. It is a long time and I have had a good many things to think of since.

Q. However that may have been, did he seem to be satisfied when he had turned the matter over to you?—A. He seemed perfectly satisfied, and he was perfectly calm and cool about it.

Q. What was his disposition? Was he a revengeful, plotting, dangerous kind of a man, or the opposite?—A. I don't think he was; no, sir. He was the opposite.

Q. The opposite of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Rather a quiet man?—A. A very quiet man, very peaceable; I never had any trouble with him at all.

Q. You knew him very well?—A. I knew him very well. I saw him constantly for four or five hours a day, every day for over a year, and then I used to see him casually at drill after I relieved him from the office. I got a better clerk.

Q. Was he such a man as you think would form a conspiracy and lay a plot or arrange a plan to go out and shoot up the town at midnight?—A. No, sir; I don't think he could; I do not.

Q. And now, as to Lipscomb, what sort of a man was he? Was he a man who was disposed to tell the truth, or otherwise?—A. I always found him so. He was a very quiet, orderly soldier.

Senator WARNER. This has all been gone into before; I call that to your attention.

Senator FORAKER. Very well, I will pass it.

Senator WARNER. In the interest of the economy of time, that is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Now, Captain, it was testified by General Garlington that Major Penrose told him that you told Major Penrose that at the time when you were out there, the morning after the shooting, looking for shells, that you covered up some shells with your foot, out in the alley. Tell us what the fact is in regard to that matter.—A. As I have already testified—

Q. In that connection, let me ask you to tell us again, although you told us once, what you found in the way of shells and where you found them.—A. As I have already testified, I stated that I went outside the garrison wall, and walked down the wall to near the mouth of what is known as the Cowen alley, or the alley, and I found these shells in a radius of about 8 inches, and there was one shell off about 4 or 5 feet that I did step on, and I believe that I told Major Penrose that; in fact, I am certain that I did. The rest of the shells were all in one bunch.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Didn't you tell Major Penrose that you found those shells, some of them, between the oil house and the mouth of the alley?—A. No, sir. The oil house is inside the wall.

Q. Well, opposite that oil house, from that point up to the mouth of the alley, didn't you tell Major Penrose that you found some of those shells there?—A. No, sir; I am positive that I told him that I found all those shells at the head of that alley.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you find any along the wall?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You went along the wall?—A. Yes, sir; I went along there.

Q. But you found the shells, all with the exception of one, in a bunch, as described by you, at the mouth of the alley?—A. Yes, sir. I went along the wall, from what is known as the D Company sink, which is shown on the map possibly.

Q. B Company sink is not shown there, but the testimony of Major Penrose was to the effect that the B Company sink, the eastern end of it, was on a line with the western line of that alley.—A. This is D Company, sir.

Q. Oh, D Company.—A. I went from there. I could indicate it on that map.

Q. I wish you would take the pointer and indicate it.

Senator WARNER. May I make this suggestion, not in the way of criticism, but are we to go into all this examination again? It was all gone into before. I do not want to cross-examine him. Certainly it makes it no better to swear to it twice or three times.

Senator FORAKER. The only reason is that General Garlington testified to something entirely new, and the witness ought to be allowed to explain it, I think; but I do not want to go into it for one minute if you do not. I am satisfied with the testimony about the shells just as it stands, so I will accept your suggestion. If it is not necessary to go into this, I will examine him on other points.

Senator WARNER. This was gone into fully.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I understand. I do not want to appear to evade anything. Now, can you recall any circumstances that will indicate the darkness of the night, any experience that you had, meeting men, or the difficulty you had in recognizing men?—A. Yes, sir; I had several personal experiences that night. After Major Penrose put my company on the chain of sentinels, it was necessary for me to visit those sentinels, and at the upper end of the garrison, extending beyond the garrison wall, I had several posts, just how many I have forgotten now, and in one or two instances I could not find them, and had to call out to them to locate them; and in those cases I found the men within 10 or 15 feet of me. Shortly after—well, it was after my return to Fort Reno—I saw a statement that the night was a moonlight night, and I looked the matter up on the calendar and found that the moon set on the night of August 13 at about 9 o'clock, I think it was. It was a very dark, what we call a dark, starlight night. The stars were very bright, as they are in the Tropics. Otherwise it was very dark.

Q. How far away from you, according to your recollection, could you distinguish the kind of clothing the men were wearing, if you could see them, as to whether they wore uniforms or not?—A. Well, I should say 10 or 15 feet, Senator; not over that.

Q. You would not think it possible to tell whether the men you might see were white men or negroes, at a distance of a hundred feet away in the dark?—A. I don't believe you could tell it at 15 feet; in fact, on those visits there that I went on, I carried my revolver in my hand.

Q. All the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you could not tell whether they had on yellow uniforms or not?—A. You could not see at all. Everything was just a blank.

Q. What is your experience as to the flash of the guns lighting up and enabling you to see?—A. I do not recall that I have ever had any experience in seeing any guns fired at night at all, Senator.

Q. Now, Mrs. Leahy has testified since you were on the stand. Do you remember her?—A. Yes, sir; very well.

Q. Without stopping to read her testimony, she testifies that the morning after the firing, about 5.30 o'clock, she left her home and went up Fourteenth street to the Cowen alley, and then turned to the right on Cowen alley and went up to the Garrison road, where I point. This is the Leahy Hotel here.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That she left her hotel, went up Fourteenth street to the Cowen alley, then along the Cowen alley to the Garrison road, then up the Garrison road past Washington and Adams streets, up to Jefferson street, to where her mother lived, and she testified that she returned at 6 o'clock, or in time to get breakfast at 6 o'clock, or some such expression as that, and that at that time, between 5.30 and 6 o'clock, as she came out of the mouth of the alley and turned up the Garrison road, she saw five or six men—soldiers—on the upper rear gallery of B barracks cleaning their guns. State where you were about that hour in the morning, and if anybody was allowed on that road at that time.—A. My chain of sentinels extended all along that wall. There was no one allowed along that road. I was at the main gate, right there at the main gate, where I had a perfect view of everything, and I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind, because I went out in the street and stood out in the street most of the time, that no one whatever went down that road.

Q. No one at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were there all the while, were you not, in a position that enabled you to see what was going on in the rear of the barracks?—A. I saw the whole thing.

Q. On those galleries?—A. I had with me a guard there, including two sergeants, Sergeant Harley and Sergeant Carlisle, and when I stood out in the main roadway there those men asked me to please come inside and get behind the wall.

Q. Now, in the morning, about what time was it that you went outside and found the shells?—A. It was just as soon as it was light enough to see. I can not tell you the hour.

Senator WARNER. This has all been gone into.

Senator FORAKER. I know that; but I want to go into it with special reference to Mrs. Leahy.

The WITNESS. I can not really tell you the hour, Senator, but it must have been close to 5.30.

Q. What other officers were there in that vicinity?—A. The major came there just about as it grew daylight.

Q. Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was there examining the barracks, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Covering that whole period?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, from 5 until after 6 o'clock?—A. I think nearly every officer in the post was there around that main gate between 5 o'clock and 6 o'clock; probably not all there at the same time, but they all came around.

Q. Could there have been any such thing as the congregating of five or six men out on the back porch there and the cleaning by them of their guns, occupying any length of time, without some of you seeing them?—A. I am satisfied they could not, because on that morning, up to the time that the first call for reveille sounded, which was a quarter to 5 o'clock, there was no one out at all. The barracks were unusually quiet. The men had been disturbed in their sleep and they were all inside, and to the best of my knowledge there was no one out except the members of my own company.

Q. Now, it has been testified by Captain Kelly that the men of your battalion were a slouchy, slovenly, and unsoldierly looking set of men. Is that true or not?—A. No, sir; it is not.

Q. It has also been testified that Major Penrose created a bad impression on one occasion by appearing out on the walk in a dirty khaki uniform, without any collar on. State what the probabilities are as to that.—A. The statement is entirely false. Major Penrose is one of the neatest officers that I know of in the Army. He is very particular about his uniform, dressing two or three times a day. He always wears clean khaki, and at Fort Brown I think he invariably put on a clean suit of white clothes every evening; and Captain Kelly, if he makes such a statement, is mistaken.

Q. Now, Captain, were you with your company when it was going down from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown, on the railroad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember how the companies were located in the train; that is, which company was at the head, and how they came in order?—A. I think it was B, C, and D, sir.

Q. B, C, and D?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would put D at the rear end of the train?—A. Yes, sir; and next to the officers—next to the Pullman.

Q. The captain of Company D was the ranking officer—Captain Lyon was the ranking officer?—A. Yes, sir; then the next one my own, and then the next Lawrason's.

Q. Do you remember seeing the conductor who was in charge of that train after you left Sinton for the next 160 miles into Brownsville?—A. Why, I do not recall that; no, sir.

Q. Did you hear any report from him or anybody else of any bad conduct on the part of your men, in conversation or otherwise, towards him?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. He made no report; no complaint of any kind?—A. No, sir. I think I was officer of the day that day, and if there had been any I would have heard of it.

Q. Now, Captain, how long have you been a company commander?—A. Well, there are a few breaks in it, Senator—

Q. About how long?—A. I started commanding a company on the departure of Major Penrose to the United States from Porto Rico in 1898, and, with the exception of a few months, I have commanded a company almost all the time since then.

Q. Then for several years you have been a company commander?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As company commander you are responsible for the equipment of the men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Their arms and guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have inspected them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can tell a gun that has been fired from an examination of it?—A. I believe I can; yes, sir.

Q. And you can tell when a gun that has been fired has been cleaned so that it will pass inspection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have testified before about the inspection of your company the following morning, after this firing; and without going over it again, it was a rigid inspection, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; a very rigid one.

Q. Let me ask you a question that has been handed to me by another member of the committee. It is, if it be not true that the negro is a good-natured, happy-go-lucky, and forgiving sort of a character? Is that not true?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That he is of that general disposition?—A. So far as my own experience has gone, he is; yes, sir.

Q. Did you have anybody in your company who was so marked with freckles or spots of any kind on his face as to be noticeable?—A. No, sir; I did not. Nearly all the men of our battalion were pretty dark. There were a few light ones, but I don't remember any of them that had freckles.

Q. Was it possible, remembering the darkness of that night, to see freckles or spots on the face of a man any distance away from you?—

A. No, sir; I do not think so. I do not believe, in fact I am very certain, that you could not have told a white man from a colored man 10 feet away.

Q. Here are two guns, each of which, we are told, has been fired five times. One of them has been cleaned and one of them has not been cleaned. I wish you would look at these guns, take the bolts out, and see.

(The witness examined one of the rifles.)

Q. You have looked through that gun, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what number?—A. No. 245484.

Q. In what condition do you find that gun?—A. It is dirty.

Q. That is a dirty gun, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Look at the other one, now.—A. They are both dirty.

Q. Would you pass that gun on any inspection occasion?—A. No, sir; I would not.

Q. You would not allow a man to go on guard with a gun as dirty as that, would you?—A. No, sir; I would give him an extra tour of duty.

Q. Give him an extra tour of duty if he would present a gun as dirty as that gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the inspection of the guns the morning after the shooting rigid enough to reject a gun that was found in that condition?—A. Yes, sir; we had no gun as dirty as that. There were none in my company as dirty as that gun.

(At 3 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m., the committee adjourned until Wednesday, June 12, 1907, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Wednesday, June 12, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, Pettus, Taliaferro, and Overman.

Senator Logan. Mr. Chairman, we have all heard this morning, with the deepest regret, of the death of Senator Morgan, of Alabama, one of the oldest and most distinguished members of the Senate, and greatly honored and beloved by us all. This committee is the only portion of the Senate now in session, and I am sure that it will be the desire of all the members that we should mark our sense of the loss which the Senate and the country have sustained in the death of our colleague. I therefore move you, Mr. Chairman, that this committee do now adjourn as a mark of respect to the memory of Senator Morgan.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 13, 1907, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Thursday, June 13, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, Pettus, Taliaferro, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. EDGAR A. MAOKLIN, U. S. ARMY—Continued.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Captain, you were testifying about the cleaning of these guns, I believe, when we adjourned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please state what your experience has been as to cleaning guns with the thong brush; whether that has been found an efficient facility?—A. Personally I have never cleaned a gun with it, but I have asked the first sergeant and numerous other soldiers in regard to it, and they have told me that it will not do it clearly or successfully; that you must use a rag. And on the target range we have the three or four brass rods that are allowed the companies, and use those on the target range all the time to clean the rifles, and have rags and oil.

Q. Now, do you remember seeing Captain Kelly and his son when they visited the post, as the Captain has testified they did, some days before this shooting occurred?—A. Yes, sir. I had never met Captain Kelly previous to this time, but I had met his son in Porto Rico, and I was rather interested in seeing him. I saw him enter the garrison. The two of them came in and they walked up to Major Penrose's house. I was sitting on the front lawn looking up the line, and I saw them. In a moment they came out—right away—and went down to Lieutenant Grier's house, and then they came to my house in company with Lieutenant Grier, and he introduced me to both of them. I had met young Captain Kelly before, and he recalled that we had met.

Q. Do you know whether or not they met Major Penrose?—A. Major Penrose was not in sight at the time on the line. I had a view of the entire front of the line.

Senator FORAKER. That is all, I think.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. There is nothing that recalls to you whether Major Penrose was in sight; nothing especial about that, is there?—A. No, sir; except the hour. I noticed the hour of the evening, and I was satisfied that he would not meet the Major. Previous to this time he had not called on him, and, if I am not mistaken, several of us thought it was rather strange—not the Major; he did not express any opinion, but the junior officers—because he was one of the representative citizens of Brownsville.

Q. Yes; understood to be one of the representative citizens?—A. Yes, sir; and he came out, I think, the day that his son returned from Mexico.

Q. Returned to Mexico?—A. From Mexico. He had been down into lower Mexico.

Q. As to this cleaning of the guns with the thong brush, you have no experience whatever?—A. I have never done it myself.

Q. But you think it requires a rag to clean it?—A. I am satisfied of that, sir; because, as I have said, they use the ramrod.

Q. But by using the thong with oil and a rag, you would not say that that could not be done?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it, personally.

Q. You do not know anything about it. The object of the thong brush, and you get it from your noncommissioned officers, is to remove part of the powder and loosen it up, and then the idea is to use the rag with oil afterwards?—A. That thong brush is in the butt of every rifle.

Q. That is the purpose of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Captain, something has been asked about Crixell's saloon—Joe Crixell's. That was considered the leading saloon of the city, was it not?—A. Well, I can not tell you whether it is the leading saloon, Senator, but it is the one that was always patronized by the officers of the post. There were no soldiers allowed in there, and they did not cater to the soldiers' trade, and the officers, in going downtown, some of them would go in and get anything they wanted.

Q. And that was the place patronized by the officers?—A. Yes, sir. I do not believe any of us went anywhere else much. I know I was not in any other place in town during the whole time I was there.

Q. That practically was true of the other officers, as far as you know?—A. Yes, sir; as far as I know. It is not Joe Crixell's saloon; it is Teofilo Crixell's.

Q. You are not speaking of the White Elephant Saloon?—A. No, sir; this is what is known as Crixell's saloon—that is, Teofilo's; not this man's they have sent up here.

Q. It is the one opposite Tillman's?—A. I do not know where Tillman's is. I could not tell you, sir.

Q. It is the one on the main street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew Mr. Joe Crixell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was regarded as a responsible citizen there, was he not, as far as you know?—A. I knew very little about him, as to his standing in the community, or anything of that kind. He seemed to be a reputable man there.

Q. About how often were you in that saloon, Captain? I am not asking as reflecting on you at all, but each day about how often would you be in there?—A. I might answer that by saying that the days that I was not on duty, if I went into town, I would probably go in there once each time I went down.

Q. You went in there nearly every time you went downtown?—A. Yes, sir; I think nearly every time I went down there.

Q. And this day you have been asked about, when you were in there, what day was that?—A. The morning of August 13.

Q. When did you go on duty as the officer of the day?—A. It was between 10.30 and 11 o'clock. The orders at Fort Brown were fixed for guard mounting every morning, except on the days of the practice march, and on the days of the practice march guard mounting was held twenty or thirty minutes after the return of the last company; I have forgotten whether twenty or thirty minutes.

Q. But it was between 10 and 11 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; I can not fix the exact hour.

Q. Now, when you were in there you heard a conversation, did you not, between somebody—some remarks by some one?—A. As near as I can remember, there were two or three traveling men in the place at the time, and their conversation was very vulgar and obscene and bore on a trip they had had the previous night over to Matamoros, and I did not pay any attention to it; I stood aloof.

Q. Did you not hear some conversation there reflecting on the officers of the post?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not hear any remarks?—A. No, sir; not a thing.

Q. You did not hear anything of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. The number of officers you had at Fort Brown was not the usual complement, was it?—A. Oh, no, sir; we were very short.

Q. You were short of officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fact is, that when you went on duty as the officer of the day, it left your company without any commissioned officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the fact is, is it not, Captain, that if the soldiers had been so disposed to go out of the barracks along about midnight, there would be nothing especially in the way to prevent it?—A. The only thing, Senator, would be the sentry on that post, if he would see them.

Q. Yes; and he had several hundred yards to go in traveling his beat?—A. Yes, sir; he covered quite a good deal of distance.

Q. You knew of the Evans incident, did you not?—A. Yes, sir; some time that evening I heard of it.

Q. I do not care about going into the exact details of that. You knew also that the colonel of your regiment objected to the battalion being sent to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; I knew of it by hearsay.

Q. That is, it was commonly spoken of?—A. It was commonly known. I can not say that it was to Brownsville he objected, but it was to sending them to summer maneuvers at Austin, Tex. I do not know whether it was to the Texas post or to the summer maneuvers.

Q. However that may have been, that was the common understanding?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Captain, shortly after you went to your room on the night of the 13th you were awakened, were you not?—A. It was about an hour afterwards.

Q. Were you not awakened in the meantime? About five minutes of 12 did you not get up and look at the time?—A. I thought I heard a knock. That was at five minutes—at about five minutes of 1.

Q. Had you not heard one before that?—A. No, sir; I have not said so.

Q. I did not ask you whether you had said so, Captain.—A. Well, no, sir.

Q. Pardon me if I do not speak loud enough for you to hear. I asked you if you had not heard one before that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And had not ever so stated?—A. No, sir.

Q. You knew Mr. Kleiber?—A. The little man out here?

Q. Well, the district attorney.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, not very little; about as large as you or I. And you made a statement to him, did you not, as to where you were that night?—A. I have had numerous conversations with him. I do not recall now whether I did or not, Senator. The morning of August 14, at the time when I reported to Major Penrose, I reported all my movements during that evening, and have also stated them since to General Garlington and to Colonel Lovering and to Major Blocksom.

Q. I ask you about this particular conversation, if you recall it?—A. I do not recall any particular conversation; no, sir.

Q. Have you not, Captain, stated that there was a feeling of uneasiness among the officers after this shooting, about going out at night?—A. After the shooting?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, Major Penrose gave orders on the 14th that we were not allowed to go out into town. That was on the advice of the mayor.

Q. I know, but I ask you if you did not understand that there was a feeling of uneasiness among the officers as to leaving your quarters?—A. We had guards put around the post, and I never had any feeling of uneasiness.

Q. Did you increase the guards, after that night, around the place?—A. No, sir; there was one company each night.

Q. Yes; but prior to that time you did not have one company each night?—A. Not prior to the shooting. We only had on four sentries prior to the shooting.

Q. After that you increased it to an entire company?—A. Yes, sir. We had all the available men of each company. I can not recall how many posts there were, but there were a number of cossack posts extending from the rear of D Company barracks to about the end of the quartermaster's storehouse. In fact, the last post was on the porch of the quartermaster's storehouse, which had a view off to the east. These posts were some of them about 100 yards apart. I can not tell you the exact distance, but they covered the ground very well.

Q. That is, the cossack posts, and the men would march from one post to meet those of the next?—A. Not with the cossack posts. They are supposed to be stationary.

Q. And then you had the additional guard inside?—A. The additional guard inside; the interior guard of the garrison.

Q. A cossack post is so stationed as to be ready when called?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those posts continued up to the time you left there?—A. Yes, sir; we continued them up to the day we left.

Q. Company A did not get there?—A. No, sir; I believe they were stopped by Major Blockson.

Q. That company belonged to that battalion?—A. Yes, sir; the first company of the battalion.

Q. That company ranked up with the other companies, did it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean in proficiency and discipline?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Captain, without going into particulars, you were wounded, there at Reno, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By a member of Company A?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had that soldier been in the service?—A. I can not tell you, Senator, but I think he was in his first enlistment; and after he had been arrested at Reno they found that he was a deserter from the Navy, and the Navy Department wanted him, but the War Department refused to turn him over on account of his assault on me. I can not tell you what his service was. In fact, I never saw the man until he came out of the hospital.

Q. What was the occasion of the assault on you?—A. Do you want me to go into the details of it?

Q. Not the details, but do you know what the occasion of it was?—A. I do not know what the occasion was, Senator, whether attempted robbery or assassination.

Q. I believe you have stated that it was not robbery.—A. Yes, sir; I say I believe to-day it was not. I would like to know.

Q. You have been asked something about putting your foot on a cartridge.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the mouth of the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you not pick up that cartridge, Captain?—A. I do not know, Senator. It was off quite a little ways, and these people were all looking down the line, there, and I just put my foot on it. I don't know why I did it. I had no particular motive except just burying it in the sand. It was not to shield the men in any way.

Q. I did not ask you that; but it was to bury it in the sand?—
A. Yes, sir; the sand was quite deep, there.

Q. You went out looking for cartridges?—A. Yes, sir. I went out for that purpose.

Q. And pick them up, and you did pick up some. When you took these cartridges that you picked up to Major Penrose, what did Major Penrose say?—A. He said, as nearly as I can recollect, "That looks very much as if the men had done the shooting."

Q. What did you say?—A. I do not remember now whether I made any comments or not. I do not believe that I did. He said also to keep them, and I put them in my pocket.

Q. You have stated heretofore what you did with those, and I will not go into it again.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when he said, as you have stated, "It looks very much as though some of my men had done the shooting;" was that it?—A. I believe that was nearly the language, as nearly as I can recollect. It was shortly after that that Major Penrose started in his investigation in the adjutant's office, and I was not present at any time. I do not know who they were, except Captain Lyon and Major Penrose were there, and then the citizens' committee came up, and the Major directed me to have my guard formed, and to wait at the adjutant's office, which I did.

Q. What I wanted was to return to that conversation. When Major Penrose made that remark to you, I understand you do not remember any remark you made?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect it now.

Q. Did it not look to you as though some of the men had done the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed so, naturally, on account of the shells.

Q. And if you had not believed so at the time you would have said something to Major Penrose as to differing with him in his judgment, would you not?—A. Well, I do not believe I would, Senator, because Major Penrose was my commanding officer, and I was not called upon to make any remark to him, or any suggestion, or anything.

Q. But it did make the same impression on you?—A. Yes, sir; it seemed so. It looked very much so.

Q. And you continued of that opinion, did you not, Captain?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Right along?—A. Yes, sir; I could not believe anything else.

Q. Did you ever change your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that, Captain?—A. Well, it was after the time that the men had stood the strain that they were under at Fort Reno, from the time they left Brownsville until their arrival at Reno, and the duty that they did at Fort Reno; and then seeing the discharge of those men.

Q. I think, Captain, I will not pursue that further, because I think that was gone into very fully before.—A. Yes, sir; I think I have testified to that before.

Q. The night of the shooting you sent out four or five patrols, did you not?—A. Five; yes, sir; and I went out myself.

Q. And you sent out one man, an unarmed man, down to the ferry-boat?—A. That was included in that number.

Q. In the five?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you yourself went down into the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time of night was it you went down?—A. I think it was very close to 8 o'clock, sir. It was either a little after or a little before; I think it was a few minutes on either side of 8 o'clock.

Q. And the last patrol you sent out was when?—A. About 10.

Q. And, as I understand from your testimony before, Captain—I am just giving it from memory, now—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those patrols all reported to you that everything was quiet in town?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

Q. And how many men were sent out in each patrol, excepting the one that was sent to the ferry?—A. All the other patrols consisted of a corporal, or a noncommissioned officer, and two privates; but they both happened to be corporals.

Q. And you sent those patrols down into the town to go all over to see if there were any of your men out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the purpose of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to order them into the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all of them reported to you that everything was quiet in the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you had not believed that everything was quiet in the town, if there had been any indications of any trouble, you certainly would not have gone to bed, would you, Captain?—A. No, sir.

Senator WARNER. I think that is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You spoke about changing your opinion. Do you remain of the same opinion that you expressed when you were last on the stand?—A. I do, sir. I really believe more than ever that the men did not do the shooting.

Q. That is all on that point. You said in answer to one of the questions of Senator Warner that you knew of the Evans incident some time that evening. Did you know of it at the time you were in the Crixell saloon?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Can you tell us about what time in the evening you first heard of it?—A. It was between 5.30 and 6 o'clock when Major Penrose came to me and told me of the incident and directed me to send out the patrols, and also to notify the men that all passes had been recalled.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Captain, as I understand, you have no remembrance of a conversation with Mr. Kleiber, in which you stated, in substance, that you were first awakened by a call about five minutes of 12, and got up and looked at your clock or watch, and then that a second call was made upon you? You have no remembrance of that?—A. No, sir. I have stated all along from the beginning that this was five minutes to 1. It was very much impressed on my mind, because I thought it was the call for reveille. I had notified the bugler of the guard to awaken me for reveille, and I was awakened and heard no confusion, but just the rapping, and I got up and lit my light and walked around and looked at the clock, and I thought that I must have been dreaming.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. In view of some testimony that has been given, I want you to state again just where you found the shells you found and brought in.

Senator WARNER. He has stated that.

Senator FORAKER. There has been a specific statement about it since.

A. Do you wish me to point it out again?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Yes; state again just where you found those shells.—A. I came down here about the middle of the barracks of D Company.

Q. That is D barracks?—A. Yes, sir; this is D barracks. I came down this far [indicating], and walked up there, and about there is where I found them [indicating].

Q. Outside of the wall, in the mouth of the alley?—A. Yes, sir; outside of the wall. This building should be over a little farther [indicating], and there is a little outbuilding right about there [indicating].

Q. At any rate, you found them in the mouth of the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Where is the oil house?—A. The oil house is in a position about like that [indicating]. It is on the right of this little outbuilding that is out there, probably 20—15 yards apart, I suppose they are. They are both about the same distance from the wall.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. And you do not wish to change your statement as to either the place at which you found them or the fact that they were in a bunch?—A. No, sir; I do not wish to change it at all.

Q. Your statement as last given you want to stand, without modification?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Captain, did you state that you found these shells in a bunch, to Major Penrose, when you handed them to him that night?—A. No, sir; it was not until some time afterwards. I do not know just how long afterwards, but I did not tell him that, that morning, when I picked up the shells. You mean when I reported to him?

Q. Yes. What statement did you make to him when you stated you found the shells?—A. I said: "Major, I found these shells and clips right outside the wall, here," and I have forgotten where Major Penrose was. He was on the inside of the wall, but near me, and I talked to him right over the wall.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you make any search for shells inside of the wall, or as to whether any were inside of the wall?—A. Yes, sir; I had gone inside the wall, but did not see any in there at all.

Q. Very well.—A. I was up and down that space behind the barracks all the morning, you know, from before daylight until long after daylight, but I did not see any shells there at all.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Did it occur to you, when you found these shells in this small area, that there was anything suspicious about that fact?—A. No, sir; it did not at that time.

Q. When did that idea occur to you?—A. Well, I don't know. I think I told Colonel Lovering about it, and General Garlington.

Q. I am not speaking of whom you told. I want to know when the suspicion first came over your mind.—A. That was early last fall, sir; early last fall.

Q. Why at that late day?—A. It was not but a very short time afterwards. When this investigation went on so thoroughly, and no results came from it, it seemed to me rather strange that they should have been in a position of that kind. The morning of August 14 we were all in a very much excited state, and I really did not give the thing very much thought at all. How soon afterwards, I do not remember.

Q. Did you not feel that in handing these shells to Major Penrose you ought to have stated the circumstances under which you found them, just how you found them?—A. Perhaps I should have done so.

Q. What?—A. I feel now that I should have done so.

Q. You say, I understand, that you were out looking for shells and picking them up as you found them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And while at the alley—looking up the alley—you saw some people coming down towards you?—A. No, sir; I did not say that.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir. If I did, I was misunderstood. They were standing up there.

Q. They were standing up the alley?—A. They were standing up there at the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets, I think, as nearly as I can remember. There was no one nearer—I don't think there was anyone nearer than Thirteenth and Washington.

Q. You could not see them from the mouth of the alley, if they were at the corner of Thirteenth and Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. You mean at the mouth of the alley and Thirteenth street.

The WITNESS. I beg your pardon; Thirteenth and the alley, I should have said.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. At Thirteenth street and the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was practically two blocks away?—A. Yes, sir; they are very short blocks.

Q. And you say you put your foot on this shell and concealed it in the sand because you saw these people up the alley?—A. I said so; yes, sir.

Q. Why did you do that, Captain?—A. I don't know, Senator.

Q. When you were out looking for shells and saw a shell lying there before you, why should you have attempted to conceal it instead of picking it up as you had the others?—A. I felt that I had enough shells to show to Major Penrose without picking up the other. I had a whole handful at that time; that is, I had the shells and the clips, which just about filled my hands.

Q. Have you assigned as a reason for not picking up that particular shell, that you saw these people standing up the alley?—A. Yes, sir; I think I did.

Q. Well, then, the reason that you give now, that you thought you had shells enough, was not the real reason for not picking up that shell?—A. No, sir; the real reason was I did not care to have them see me pick it up.

Q. Why not, Captain? What was there to conceal about it?—A. Well, I don't know. The mayor said that the people were very much excited; and I did not care to have them know that we had gotten that evidence, because I knew it would come out sooner or later to the commanding officer and to the general public.

Q. Do you mean by that that if there were any evidence that your men had done this shooting, you did not care for the citizens to know it?—A. No, sir; I do not mean to express that at all, but you must understand that these people were in a very much inflamed condition, an excited condition, and I did not want to see any mob come up there, either for their sakes or ours.

Q. Well, I am trying to ascertain from you, Captain, if I can, for the benefit of the committee, just what your reason was for concealing a shell in the sand when you state that you were out looking for shells and picking up what you found?—A. Well, I can not give you any reason, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. You think there must have been some reason, do you not?—

A. I think there should have been; yes, sir; but I can not give you any reason now. I do not know why it was done. It was not to hide any guilty people, I can assure you of that, or to keep back anything from anybody that ought to know it, and I have endeavored to give out everything that I possibly could in every way; but I can not give you the reason why I did it.

Q. You covered that shell up thoroughly, did you; you covered it up?—A. No, sir; I think I just trod on it.

Q. And is that a sandy spot?—A. It was down near the Rio Grande River. The soil is quite sandy.

Q. When you stepped on it, did it bury the shell?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. You did not pick that shell up afterwards?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. Were you in command of Company D?—A. C.

Q. C?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about the empty shells that were brought down from Niobrara?—A. No, sir; I brought none down. I do not know anything about it.

Q. That was Company D?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. I have read so in the testimony.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Have you any suspicion what became of those shells that you had, as to how they got out of your desk?—A. They did not get out of my desk, so far as I know; I left them there in the house.

Q. What did you do with the desk?—A. It was not my own personal desk. This was a quartermaster's desk. That desk, on the abandonment of Fort Brown, was shipped away somewhere else. The morning we left Fort Brown that desk remained in my house, and Lieutenant Rich, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, took all the property that I had in there on a memorandum receipt. I had this property on a memorandum receipt from the Quartermaster's Department, as I had not yet opened my own stuff there.

Q. Did you see these shells in there afterwards?—A. They were in there the next evening, but I did not see them afterwards. I did not look for them again at all. I believe that if we could find that desk the shells would be there yet, unless the person, the keeper of the desk, has taken them out; unless Lieutenant Rich himself took them out.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Where was that desk sent?—A. I do not know, sir. I could not find out. I tried to find out when I was in San Antonio, and I could not find out.

Q. It was not sent to Fort Sam Houston, so far as you know?—A. No, sir; I think not. It was sent to one of the other posts. It was a desk with a slanting top to it, and the upper part like that [indicating]. It was not a private desk.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Just one question more. I find this in your testimony in the court-martial proceedings, at page 962, and I call your attention to it, and see if you want to make any corrections in it:

Q. Now, with reference to the time you picked up the shells, the clips, and the cartridge on the morning of August 14, can you state definitely, or even approximately, what hour of the day it was?—A. No; I can't. That was seven months ago to-day; I do not recollect the time.

Is that correct?—A. That is the answer I gave at that time; yes, sir.

Q. Do you desire to change it now?—A. Well, I can say that the hour was between 5 and 5.30; just as soon as it was daylight enough to see.

Q. What has there been in the intervening months since the court-martial that impresses your memory?—A. Nothing, except that I know it was before reveille, and reveille was at 5.30.

Q. You knew that at the time you testified before the court-martial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will read you further from this testimony:

Q. Did you show those shells to the commanding officer when you returned?—A. I did.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. What did he say when you showed them to him?—A. I don't recall that, either.

Is that correct?—A. Yes; that is the way I answered it.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. Did he say anything that would indicate to you a contention or belief on his part that the soldiers must, at least, have had a part in the shooting?—A. No; he did not.

Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir; that is my answer.

Q. You do not wish to correct that?—A. I will let my answer stand just the way it is, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Captain, had you taken any beer that day?—A. On the night of August 13?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time of the night were you drinking beer?—A. Mr. Lawrason and I had a bottle of beer just previous to 11, before I went out to check roll call.

Q. Where did you get it?—A. I had it in my house.

Q. Had it been brought to you by anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long had it been there?—A. I could not tell you, sir; I had a case of it, or a barrel of it, in there.

Q. A barrel of beer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the man that waited on you?—A. Myself—nobody.

Q. You had no colored soldier there to wait on you?—A. No, sir; my man stayed in the quarters. I had a little ice box out there, and occasionally some one would drop in. I messed right there in the house—had my meals brought over.

Q. You drank one bottle of beer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you drank any more?—A. One bottle; that is all.

Q. You had had some gin fizzes?—A. One gin fizz, early in the morning.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There is one other question that Senator Warner did not read you that I want to read you and see if that is all right, also. It immediately follows what he read:

Q. Can you recollect nothing whatever of the conversation that you and he had after you turned over those shells to him?—A. I didn't say that I turned over the shells to him.

Q. Or rather showed him the shells?—A. No; I do not. There were so many events that occurred then, and I can't recall all of them, and I did what I considered my duty in showing him the shells, and I don't recall his expressing his opinion to me.

Q. Did you express yours to him at the time?—A. I did not.

That also is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. It is correct, also, is it not, Captain, that you now say that when you showed Major Penrose the shells he said it looked very much like some of the soliders did the shooting?—A. To the best of my recollection; yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you at the court-martial undertake to keep back anything that you recalled at the time?—A. You mean my own court, sir?

Q. Yes. Did you answer truthfully, or were you trying to withhold anything?—A. Both my counsel and myself agreed in the very beginning that we did not want to withhold anything; that everything that had been done on August 13 by myself, up to the time I reported to Major Penrose, was open and above board. I had nothing whatever to hide, and I wanted it to go out to the public. I believe that I personally have suffered more than any other officer in this affair, and I had a good record—I have always had a good record, and tried to keep it clear—and I wanted it to go out to the public at large; and to that end we brought out every single thing that could possibly be brought out. I would like to add there, in addition to that, that this additional charge was brought out against me, being in Mr. Crixell's saloon, and at the instigation of the Secretary of War he ordered that charge withdrawn, and said it was never the intention of the Department to ever put it in, and that the charge could not be proved. I did not see the personal letter, but I have had that information by word of mouth.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Where were you assaulted, Captain?—A. I was shot in the left temple, here [indicating].

Q. At what place?—A. At Fort Reno.

Q. By a colored soldier?—A. Yes, sir; a man who has been convicted for it since.

Q. Was he a member of the Twenty-fifth Regiment?—A. Yes, sir; he belonged to Company A of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. You said you were in doubt as to whether robbery or assassination was the object of that assault?

Senator WARNER. I do not understand that he said he was in doubt. He said he believed it was assassination.

Senator TALIAFERRO. Yes.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Did you assert your views as expressed about the Brownsville shooting with this effort to assassinate you in your own mind?—

A. No, sir; I did not. I had, so far as I know, no particular enemies. I think I am a strict disciplinarian, and it may have been some other occurrence, but I do not believe it could have had any connection with the Brownsville affair. If it did, I am not able to state, because my whole thought on the matter would be a theory; anything I told you about it would be a theory.

Q. Do you know of any other circumstance that could have prompted this man to assault you?—A. No, sir. As I told you before, so far as I know, I had never seen the man before until the day that I saw him in the post hospital when we tried the coat on him.

Q. In all your experience as a commanding officer, do you recall any circumstance that would be likely to prompt one of the men to assault you and attempt to kill you?—A. No, sir; I have lived in the Army now for thirty-eight years, and I have never heard of such a case, and older officers tell me that they never heard of anything like that before.

Q. You had expressed yourself at that time as believing that the negroes participated in this shooting up of Brownsville, had you not?—A. Well, if the Senator recalls this, in one of the documents, I believe by Mr. Gilchrist Stewart, says that I stated I believed that the soldiers undoubtedly did the shooting. Just what document it is in I do not know, but I made that statement to him.

Q. You did make that statement to him?—A. I said that on finding the shells on the morning of the 14th I felt convinced that they had done the shooting. That statement was made at Fort Reno some time last fall; I do not know when.

Q. Who is Mr. Gilchrist Stewart?—A. I do not know, sir; I have heard of him and met him, and I understand he is a representative of the Constitutional League.

Q. What is the Constitutional League, this organization in New York?—A. I do not know, sir; I have not the faintest idea.

Q. Is this man Stewart a white man or a colored man?—A. He is a colored man.

Q. You made the statement, and of course when making the statement that you believed they were guilty, at that time you believed it?—A. At that time I did, most certainly; yes, sir.

Q. Had you expressed any changed view before this assault was made on you at Fort Reno?—A. I think I did, among my own officers; not to any outsiders that I recall. But from the time they started the discharge of the men, in November, up until the time I was assaulted, was about a month, you know, and then I had very frequent conversations in regard to the matter, and it is possible that I did say that to some of my brother officers. I do not recall that I ever did to any outsiders.

Q. You think you did not give expression to the fact that your views were undergoing a change on the subject, to the men?—A. To the soldiers themselves?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I do not have conversation with any of the soldiers in regard to anything. I do not recall that I have ever had any conversation with them with regard to the Brownsville affray, except to try to get the noncommissioned officers to work to their utmost to the end of finding out who the guilty parties were.

Q. I suppose the men were more or less disappointed that their officers had concluded that in their opinions they were connected with this shooting at Brownsville?—A. I do not recall that I ever heard any expression of opinion on that.

Q. That would be a natural feeling, would it not?—A. It would be; but it would be unnatural for me to hear it. I would not have any opportunity to hear it.

Q. And that in itself would be as strong an incentive for one of these negro soldiers to attempt to do you bodily harm as anything else you know of in your experience with them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What is the name of this soldier?—A. I can not give you his given name, Senator, but I can give you his surname.

Q. Knowles?—A. Yes, sir; Knowles.

Q. And he belonged to Company A?—A. Yes, sir; his name was E. T. Knowles.

Q. E. T. Knowles; and he did not belong to either of the companies that was stationed at Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. His company was not there and he himself was never there?—A. No, sir.

Q. He himself was never charged with complicity in the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. And he had not been discharged without honor?—A. No, sir; he was still a soldier in the service of the regiment—in the Army.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF SECOND LIEUT. GEORGE C. LAWRASON, U. S. ARMY—Recalled.

Senator SCOTT. Lieutenant, you have been sworn heretofore, and you will regard that oath as being binding upon you now?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Lieutenant, you testified before in this case. Since you testified a witness by the name of Joseph Crixell, a citizen of Brownsville, has testified that he was the keeper of a saloon at that place in August, 1906, and that on the 13th day of August, in the afternoon, not earlier in the day than 1 o'clock, and not later than 4 o'clock, you and Captain Lyon and Captain Macklin came into his saloon, and that some conversation, which he narrated, occurred there; that you were in there for the purpose of getting three gin fizzes. I will ask you first whether or not you remember being in that saloon at that time?—

A. Not at that time, sir.

Q. Were you there on that day; and if so, at what hour in the day?—A. Yes, sir; I was there in the morning of that day, in the neighborhood of 10 a. m.

Q. How are you able to fix the hour?—A. Because it was just after returning from a practice march—our weekly practice march—and we started out before 6 o'clock and returned in about four hours from that time.

Q. You had your company—Company B—out on a practice march?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that Captain Lyon was there when you were?—A. Yes, sir; Captain Lyon was there at the same time.

Q. State whether he was also out with his company, D, on a practice march that day.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Crixell testified that Albert W. Billingsley, a citizen of Brownsville, or a citizen residing near there, was also in the saloon at the time. Did you know Mr. Billingsley?—A. No, sir; I do not know him.

Q. Mr. Billingsley testified that he furnished milk and cream and butter and dairy products to the officers of the post. My recollection is that he mentioned you as one of the officers whom he supplied. Does that enable you to recall him?—A. No, sir; I never bought any eggs or butter. I took my meals in town, and did not keep house.

Q. He testified that you and Captain Macklin and Captain Lyon were in the saloon, that you were near one end of a long counter, and that he went in and went to the other end of the counter, and called Mr. Crixell to him, and had some conversation with him. Does that enable you to recall it?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect seeing him at all.

Q. Do you remember hearing anyone in the saloon, while you were there, remark that neither the soldiers nor the officers of the soldiers should be allowed to come into the town unless something was done about the Evans affair?—A. No, sir; I am sure I heard no such remark.

Q. Was there any conversation between you three officers and Mr. Crixell on that occasion about the Evans affair?—A. No, sir; I am pretty sure that there was no conversation relating to the Evans affair between us and Mr. Crixell at that time.

Q. Had you at that time heard of the Evans incident?—A. No, sir; I heard of it at lunch.

Q. You heard of it when?—A. When I went to lunch in Brownsville, about half past 12 or 1 o'clock.

Q. At what place did you take lunch?—A. At Mrs. Leahy's hotel.

Q. And you heard it there for the first time?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection.

Q. And that was after you had been in Mr. Crixell's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Crixell testified that after Mr. Billingsley made that remark, he went out of the saloon, and Mr. Crixell then turned and went to where the three officers were standing, and that Captain Macklin said as follows. I will read you this:

He says, "Joe, have you ever heard anything about a nigger being hit over the head with a six-shooter around here lately?" I said, "Yes; I heard a little about it." He said, "Have you heard the particulars about it?" I said the only thing I heard was that Mr. Tate, this customs officer, hit a nigger over the head with a six-shooter because this nigger would not give the sidewalk to some ladies.

Senator FORAKER. Speak a little louder.

A. (Continuing.) I told them that I had heard about the nigger being hit over the head with a six-shooter, and he asked me if I had heard any of the particulars, and I told him that I had heard that Mr. Tate had hit this nigger over the head with a six-shooter because the nigger had pushed his wife, or some other lady that was with him, off of the sidewalk, or something like it. Captain Macklin told me then. He says, "Yes; that is what they claim, but," he says, "Major Penrose and myself have investigated this thing thoroughly, and we have found out that these negro soldiers have been imposed on by the citizens and Federal officers of this town," he says, "and this thing has got to be stopped." He says, "Now, Joe, suppose these niggers would jump that barracks fence and shoot this damn town up any of these nights." He says, "We could not prevent it."

Did you hear any such conversation as that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Captain Macklin make that statement, or anything similar to it, on that occasion?—A. He certainly did not on that occasion, where I could hear him, because I would remember such a conversation as that.

Q. Were you present with him, near enough to him, all the time you were in that saloon on that occasion, to have heard any such remark as that, if he had made it?—A. I believe I was, sir.

Q. Did you hear any such conversation on the part of Mr. Crixell as he says he indulged in?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You simply were in there, as I understand it, to get three gin fizzes, one each, and you got them and then went out?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did you get three?—A. One apiece, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is all on that point. Now, Lieutenant, can you recall any incident that happened the night of the 13th, after the firing commenced, that would enable you to give us, by relating it, an idea of how dark it was? What difficulty did you have, if any, in recognizing men or objects?—A. I recollect it was a dark, starlight night—that is, there was no moon; the only light was starlight—there were no clouds in the sky, though—and I came quite close to several men without recognizing them. I remember I passed a man who had been sent over to my quarters to awaken me, as I went out. I ran past him, and he recognized me, I suppose; I did not recognize him, and he called after me when I had passed, and I turned back and he gave me his message.

Q. How close were you when you passed without recognition?—
A. I believe we were inside of 6 feet, sir.

Q. Six feet?—A. I believe about 4 or 5 feet away.

Q. Do you recall any other instance similar to that that would show the difficulty you had in recognizing men or objects?—A. No particular instance, sir. I recollect that I had some difficulty in recognizing some of the men when posting them around, and some of the noncommissioned officers when posting reliefs.

Q. It was so dark, in other words, if I understand you, that you had to be close to a man to recognize him?—A. Yes, sir; go by his voice and general appearance. I knew most of the men.

Q. How far away could you tell whether a man was a white man or a colored man, or as to what kind of clothing he was wearing, whether a uniform or some other kind of clothing?—A. I could tell whether he had on a uniform or civilian clothes, I believe, probably 12 or 15 feet away, and as to recognizing as to whether he was a white man or a colored man, if he was a very white man or a very dark colored man I might distinguish him, but a mulatto or a dark white man, I believe I would have to get within 5 or 6 feet to tell them apart, looking straight at them, or less than that.

Q. It has been testified since you were on the stand, by Mrs. Leahy, that the morning after the firing—that is, the morning of the 14th—between 5.30 and 6 o'clock in the morning, she passed from her house, at the corner of Elizabeth street and Fourteenth, up Fourteenth to the Cowen alley, as we have come to call it, and there turned to the right and went up to the garrison road, and there turned to the left and went on up to Jefferson street, and later returned, and that as she was passing out of the alley onto the garrison road she saw five or six men on the back porch of B barracks cleaning their guns, or doing something else with them which she took to be cleaning the guns. State, if you can, whether you were in that vicinity about that time, and whether or not, from your observations, any such incident as that could have occurred without your observing it.—A. Will you repeat the time, sir?

Q. Between 5.30 and 6 o'clock in the morning.—A. I was not there between 5.30 and 6 o'clock, I do not believe, in the rear of the barracks. I joined my company in front of the barracks in the neighborhood of 6 o'clock, but C Company was along the wall in the rear, and I was not in a position to see whether this happened or not.

Q. Reveille was sounded at what time that morning, if you recollect?—A. I do not recall now, sir. I believe that the first call for reveille went about fifteen minutes before sunrise, which would be about 5.45, I think. I do not remember, now, exactly what time, sir.

Q. You were not in that vicinity and you are not able to testify on that point?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have testified that the guns were put in the racks that night after the firing, under your supervision, and the racks locked up?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Let us not go into that.

Senator FORAKER. I do not want to go into it, except only on this one point.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Do you know whether or not the racks were opened that morning after reveille, after you joined the company? Have you any knowledge about that? I am asking for your personal knowledge about it. I do not know what you may know about that.—A. They were opened; yes, sir; for the men to get their rifles to turn out for that inspection.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to whether they had been opened in the meantime, up to that time?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. At the opening of the gun racks were you present?—A. No, sir.

Q. No. All you know about that is the fact that the men came down with their guns, and you supposed they had been in the gun racks all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all you know about that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This was a bright, starlight night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With no clouds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in that latitude the starlight is quite bright, is it not? There were more stars to be seen than in our latitude?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Is that so, that it is really brighter down there than it is here, on a starlight night, in that latitude?—A. It may be a little brighter; yes, sir. That is, it seems to me you can see more stars.

Q. The starlight is what makes it bright, is it not, in the absence of clouds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you see more stars there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not pretend to tell how far a person could see whether a man wore a uniform or not, on a night such as that was—a bright, starlight night?—A. Except that I know that you can not see it unless you are very close.

Q. But when you did not recognize this party you were in considerable of a hurry, were you not, Lieutenant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The call to arms had been sounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been in the service, Lieutenant?—A. How long have I been in the service now, sir?

Q. Had you at that time?—A. In the neighborhood of about eight years.

Q. Had you ever heard the call to arms sounded before?—A. Yes, sir; I had heard the call to arms sounded—never under such conditions though.

Q. Never under conditions that would create the same anxiety?—A. No, sir.

Q. The question as to whether you could determine whether they were white men or colored men, you say, would depend upon whether the man was what we call black or whether he was a light mulatto?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to the distance at which you could tell—this matter of distances is purely a matter of speculation with you, is it not; that is, a matter of opinion, without any actual observation?—A. No, sir; there has been some actual observation.

Q. By yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?—A. Well, when at Fort McIntosh, in April I believe it was, I was talking to Lieutenant Wiegenstein about some experiments that he conducted, and he showed me himself, by walking out across the road, how hard it was to distinguish men. I could not tell whether he was a white man or not.

Q. How far was he from you?—A. I suppose he was 7 feet.

Q. Do you want the committee to understand, Lieutenant, that on a bright, starlight night, with no clouds, if a man walked within 7 feet of you, that you could not tell whether he was a white man or a colored man?—A. Certain white men, yes, sir; a great many of them.

Q. Certain white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what you mean by that.—A. Well, I mean men like most officers, a man who has tanned a good deal.

Q. A man of my complexion?—A. Yes, sir; about your complexion.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. What sort of a complexion has Lieutenant Wiegenstein? Is he a dark man?—A. Yes, sir; he is tanned. He has black hair and he is rather dark.

Q. Dark skinned?—A. Yes, sir; I don't suppose he is much darker than I am.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Not much darker than you?—A. No, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Is he as dark as Senator Taliaferro?—A. Yes, sir; I think he is.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. So that if Senator Taliaferro and I were 7 feet from you, in a bright, starlight night, you could not tell whether we were white men or black men?—A. I am afraid I could not.

Q. You want the committee to understand that, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you give a distance of 7 feet, do you mean to be understood as expressing an accurate opinion upon that?—A. I did not quite catch that.

Q. The 7 feet distance at which you could not distinguish a white man from a black man.—A. You want me to give what?

Q. You limit it to that distance, do you, but you could tell him, if he were 6 feet away, could you?—A. I think I could in some cases, sir. For instance, I would know he was not a very dark black-colored man, but I might confuse him with a light-colored man.

Q. That is the white man at 6 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How would it be about 5 feet?—A. I think I could generally tell at 5 feet.

Q. That you place as a limit, in a bright, starlight night, without any clouds?—A. From 5 to 7 feet, I believe.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How would it be at 20 feet?—A. I am sure I could not tell at 20 feet, sir.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Where you passed this man that you did not recognize, or he you, that was on the parade ground, was it?—A. Yes, sir; it was on the parade ground.

Q. And there was nothing on the parade ground to obstruct the view?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is all open—no trees?—A. No trees. We were going in opposite directions. I was going towards the company and he was going towards my quarters, and I passed him on the parade ground, out on the grass.

Q. But you saw him?—A. I knew that a person was approaching me, or that I had run by somebody, but did not know who it was.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Why didn't you inquire who it was, Lieutenant? The call to arms had been sounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were hurrying down to your command?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And realized that you passed a man on the parade ground within 6 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did not take the trouble to inquire who he was?—A. Well, sir, he inquired first. I don't believe I would have inquired anyhow, though. I wanted to get to my company pretty badly.

Q. How did he inquire?—A. He wanted to know if that was Lieutenant Lawrason?

Q. So he recognized you, although you did not recognize him?—A. I am not sure that he recognized me, sir. He knew that he would either find me at my house or on the way to the quarters.

Q. You are sure that he called your name?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What further assurance would you desire that he had recognized you?—A. Because my eyesight is pretty good, and I know that I did not recognize him.

Q. That circumstance at least demonstrated that within that distance he could recognize you?—A. Either recognize or guess who it was.

Q. Not only distinguish a white man from a colored man, but could recognize who you were as a white man?—A. No, sir; I do not believe that is the case.

Q. What is the case? What is your theory? How do you account for his calling your name?—A. I think if I had told him my name was Brown that he would have gone on to my quarters and looked in my bed for me.

Q. That would be natural?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Then, as you understand it, he simply called to you to know whether it was you or not—he did not recognize you?—A. That is correct, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Was it not your duty to know who was going across the parade ground at a time like that, when the call to arms had been sounded and the men were hurrying to their places?—A. Well, sir, I knew that messengers and orderlies might be being sent from the commanding officer, or from the companies, to awaken officers or carry messages, and I did not concern myself particularly about those persons, because I wanted to get to my company. That was where I belonged at that moment.

Q. Evidently you did not concern yourself about this man?—

A. No, sir.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Lieutenant, did not the inquiry which he made indicate to you that he did not recognize you?—A. It seemed so to me, sir. The impression that I have is—

Q. If he inquired if that was Lieutenant Lawrason, would not that very question indicate that he did not recognize you, and that he was trying to find out who it was?—A. It seemed so to me, sir. I do not recollect his exact words, but the impression I got at the time was that he yelled to know if that was Lieutenant Lawrason. We were going so fast that he did not have time to stop until he had gone several feet beyond me.

By Senator WARNER: .

Q. What is your age, Lieutenant?—A. I am 27 and about six months, sir.

Q. You were graduated from West Point when?—A. In 1904.

Q. So when you gave your service you gave it including West Point, which is perfectly proper?—A. Yes, sir; and the Naval Academy.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. SAMUEL P. LYON, U. S. ARMY—Recalled. •

Capt. SAMUEL P. LYON, U. S. Army, a witness previously sworn, being recalled, testified as follows:

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Captain Lyon, you have been sworn before, and you regard that oath as still binding upon you this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are still under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Captain, since you have testified a Mr. Joseph Crixell, a citizen of Brownsville and a saloon keeper there, has testified in this case, saying, among other things, that on the 13th day of August (between 2 and 4 o'clock he stated in one place, and in another place I think he says not earlier than 1 o'clock in the afternoon and not later than 4 o'clock) you and Captain Macklin and Lieutenant Lawrason came into his saloon, and that a conversation occurred there between him and you three officers, the nature of which I will state to you in a moment. Do you remember being in his saloon on that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell at what hour of the day it was?—A. It was in the morning, somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 o'clock.

Q. How do you fix the time?—A. On that morning I had been on a practice march of 12 miles with my company. I left the post at 5.30 o'clock. The rate of marching is about 3 miles an hour. I made 12 miles. That consumed about four hours. I got back to the post at about half past 9. I had a certain inspection regarding the condition of the men's feet after this march, which we were required to make, and as soon as that was completed Mr. Lawrason and I went down to this Crixell's saloon to get something cold to drink. On the way down we met Captain Macklin and he went with us, so that it must have been somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 o'clock.

Q. Were you in his saloon at any other hour during that day?—

A. At about 9 o'clock in the evening I was in there for a few minutes.

Q. What were you doing in there at 9 o'clock in the evening?—

A. Mr. Lawrason and I took a walk through a certain part of the town to just see if we could see any of the men on the streets who were ordered to be in by 8 o'clock.

Q. Did you take any drinks in the saloon at that time?—A. In the evening, sir?

Q. Yes.—A. I don't remember; I probably did.

Q. At this first visit at about 10 o'clock in the morning Mr. Crixell testified that Captain Macklin and Captain Lyon and Lieutenant Lawrason came in and asked for three gin fizzes. Is that correct or not? Is that what you ordered?—A. Yes, sir; that is right—one apiece.

Q. One apiece?

Senator WARNER. I suppose the usual order was "gin fizz?"

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you order a gin fizz that night when you were there?—

A. I don't remember, sir.

Q. You have no recollection of that?—A. No, sir.

Q. At this time, he says, Captain Macklin said:

"Joe, have you ever heard anything about a nigger being hit over the head with a six-shooter around here lately?" I said, "Yes; I heard a little about it." He said, "Have you heard the particulars about it?" I said the only thing I heard was that Mr. Tate, this customs officer, hit a nigger over the head with a six-shooter because this nigger would not give the sidewalk to some ladies.

Then after repeating that, he said:

Captain Macklin told me then, he says, "Yes; that is what they claim, but," he says, "Major Penrose and myself have investigated this thing thoroughly, and we have found out that these negro soldiers have been imposed on by the citizens and Federal officers of this town," he says, "and this thing has got to be stopped." He says, "Now, Joe, suppose these niggers would jump that barracks fence and shoot this damn town up any of these nights." He says, "We could not prevent it."

Did you hear any conversation of that character?—A. No, sir.

Q. At either of those visits, either in the morning or at 9 o'clock in the evening?—A. Captain Macklin was not in there in the evening.

Q. He was not with you at night?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not in the saloon at any time that day in company with Captain Macklin except at this hour of about 10 o'clock in the morning?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Q. So that if Captain Macklin made any remark in that saloon in your presence, he must have made it about 10 o'clock in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard no such remark as I have read?—A. No, sir; nothing of the kind; nothing that could be construed—

Q. Did you hear anything at all of that nature or that kind?—A. I heard nothing that could be so construed.

Q. Now, he also testifies that a Mr. Billingsley was in there at the same time that you were in there, and that you stood near one end of the long counter and Mr. Billingsley at the other, and that Mr. Billingsley called him and asked him in a low tone of voice whether or not he had learned from you gentlemen whether anything was to be done about finding the man who was guilty of making the assault on Mrs. Evans, and that he told Mr. Billingsley that so far as he could make out nothing was doing in regard to it, and that thereupon Mr. Billingsley said: "At the rate these fellows are carrying on here I don't think that the soldiers or the officers either ought to be allowed in town if they don't do something to help assist us to stop these men from conducting themselves the way they are acting in the city." Do you know this Mr. Billingsley?—A. I think I could recognize him again. I had certain transactions with him in the way of buying fresh vegetables.

Q. He testifies that he furnished dairy products to the officers.—A. He never did furnish anything to me personally, but I bought stuff from him for my company up to the time we left—within a day or two of the time we left there.

Q. Did you see him in the saloon when you were there at 10 o'clock in the morning?—A. I do not recall his being there at all, sir.

Q. Did you see him when you were there in the evening?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, of course, if you did not see him, you do not remember hearing him make any remarks of any kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Crixell testifies that after Billingsley went out he (Mr. Crixell) returned to where you were and that as he approached you Captain Macklin looked at him and smiled, and then he turned around and looked at Captain Lyon and said something low "that I could not hear, and he looked at me again, and he says, 'These niggers will surprise this fellow yet,'" referring to Mr. Billingsley, who had just walked out. Now, did you hear any remark of that kind made by Captain Macklin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or by anybody else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did either one of you make such a remark as is attributed to Captain Macklin on that occasion, or any other occasion when you were in his saloon or at any other place?—A. I never did myself, and I never heard either of the others.

Q. Had you ever up to that time thought of such a thing as the men jumping over the fence or going out in any way into the town, to shoot it up?—A. No, sir. At the time that we were in that saloon, that is, Captain Macklin, Mr. Lawrawson, and myself, I knew nothing about the alleged assault on Mrs. Evans, and I do not think that the others did either.

Q. You had started on this practice march in the morning, how early?—A. At half past 5.

Q. And you had just returned from it. You had not read the papers then, I suppose?—A. No, sir; I did not take the Brownsville paper.

Q. But if you did take it, you would not have read it before you went on your practice march about half past 5, probably?—A. No, sir.

Q. At any rate, you are distinct in your recollection that you had not heard of it at all at that time?—A. No, sir; I knew nothing of it at that time.

Q. You were not asked anything on that subject by Mr. Crixell?—
A. No, sir.

Q. He did not tell you of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, Captain, since you were on the stand, it has been testified that while you were marching through the streets, in command of your company, on patrol duty, you gave some orders which you had to repeat before your men would obey them. Without resorting to the record to get the exact language—I am only stating the effect of it—state whether or not anything of that kind occurred, any refusal to obey orders, evincing a lack of discipline, or anything of that kind on the part of your company?—A. The only thing that might be so construed by a person who did not understand the conditions, or what they meant, was when I met Mayor Combe on my way back to the post. Mayor Combe and I were at the head of the company, the company was in column, and three or four of the men rear found a man who walked off the sidewalk into the street, who had a rifle. They surrounded him and called for me, and said, "Captain, here is a man with a gun," or words to that effect. Mayor Combe said, "That is one of my policemen." He said this to me, and I called back, "That is a policeman; turn him loose and fall in." They said, "But, Captain, he has a gun," and I ordered them again to fall in ranks, that that man was authorized to have a gun. That is the only incident that could be construed as a failure to obey promptly any orders of mine.

Q. State, as a matter of fact, whether your company was in a state of good discipline.

Senator WARNER. I think that has all been gone over.

A. In my opinion it was, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What was the record of your battalion in that respect up to the 13th of August?—A. I think that the reports of every inspector up to that time had been favorable to the battalion as a whole and the company individually.

Q. Can you tell us what has been the conduct of the men who were discharged, who went from that battalion, since the time of their discharge—do you know?—A. In all the cases of which I have any knowledge the men have gone to work and behaved themselves properly.

Q. Can you give us any illustration—can you relate any incidents that came within your personal experience that night, or under your observation, that will enable us to judge how dark it was; I mean any incident that would indicate whether you had difficulty or otherwise in distinguishing persons or objects?—A. I remember that after the company was formed Major Penrose called over to me and asked me if my company was formed. I said that it was. He came over from the direction of B Company barracks—my company—and he had to get very close to me, then, before I could see who it was. Also, in calling the roll I had to use a lantern when the men were behind that wall in order to distinguish who each man was.

Q. Can you tell us how far away, without the aid of any artificial light, you could distinguish whether men were white men or colored men?—A. I should think about 10 feet would be the maximum.

Q. At what distance could you distinguish whether they were clothed in uniforms or other kind of clothes?—A. Of course this is only my opinion—

Q. Yes.—A. I should say about the same distance.

Q. Do you think you could have told whether a man was a white man or a black man, or whether he was in uniform or citizen's clothing, at a distance of 25 or 30 feet away?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Now, did you have any man in your company who had spots on his face to such an extent that they were at all noticeable, so far as you can recall?—A. No, sir; I do not recall any such man.

Q. It has been testified by Mrs. Leahy that she looked out of her window and saw two men in the alley, one a dark colored soldier and the other a mulatto, and that the mulatto had spots on his face which she could distinguish him by, looking out from her window to the point where he stood, and that when your company returned from the patrol she was standing at her gate, and she saw this same man in the ranks and recognized him by these same spots. Did you have any man—since I have thus refreshed your recollection about it—can you recollect anybody that could have answered to any such description as that, even if it had been daytime, to say nothing about the darkness of the night?—A. Mrs. Leahy told me in San Antonio about seeing a man in my company, when I returned, whom she recognized as one of the men who did the shooting, but then she told me that this was a tall, very black man.

Q. A tall, very black man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not tell you she saw a man with spots on his face?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did she describe him in such a way that you could recognize him as a man belonging to your company?—A. No, sir; nothing but a tall black man.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Captain, why didn't you have Mrs. Leahy go to your company and pick the man out?—A. When was that, sir?

Q. When she said she could pick him out, why didn't you have her do it?—A. I had nothing to do with that investigation, sir, and I never heard this reported by Mrs. Leahy until after I had gone down to San Antonio on the court-martial duty.

Senator WARNER. The men had been discharged.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The men had been discharged and scattered. Well, Captain, has anything come to your knowledge since you were on the stand that leads you to have a suspicion that any man in your company participated in that firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you changed the opinion that you expressed when you were last here that none of the men in the battalion did do the shooting?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. You still remain of that opinion. Now, I want you, Captain, to look at these two rifles that General Crozier had here. General Crozier testified the other day, and exhibited two rifles in connection with his testimony. He told us that each of these rifles had been fired five times. They are Springfield rifles such as are now in the hands of our soldiers, as I understand it. He told us that one of those rifles he caused to be cleaned by running a thong brush through it, and that the other has not been cleaned. I wish you would examine those rifles. Perhaps you will have to remove the bolt. I wish you would look through those rifles and tell us what condition they are in.—

A. (Examining one of the rifles.) That one is dirty.

Q. This one is dirty. Now, look at the number of that and read it.—A. No. 198263.

Q. Now examine the other.—A. (After examining the other rifle.) This is also dirty, but looks as though there might have been a careless attempt to remove some of the dirt.

Q. On that one you think they may have made some careless attempt to remove the dirt?—A. They may have.

Q. Give us the number of that one.—A. The rifle is dirty. This is No. 245484.

Q. I wish you would look at them again carefully, and compare them after a second look, and tell us whether there is any difference in their apparent condition as to being clean or otherwise, and if any difference, which is the cleaner of the two rifles.—A. That looks like it was more foul than this one.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. What one is more foul?—A. No. 198263.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You think that is more foul than the other?—A. It looks to me so.

Q. Would you, Captain, as an inspecting officer, pass either one of those guns on inspection?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the condition in which you now find them?—A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Isn't it a fact that a gun may pass inspection, say an hour after cleaning, that would not pass inspection a week after?—A. I have heard that theory advanced, sir; but I have no personal knowledge of that. I never made that experiment.

Q. That is generally believed to be so, isn't it?—A. Well, I don't know about that.

Q. So contended for by army officers and men in the regiments?—
A. I don't know, sir; I have just heard the theory advanced.

Q. It has been testified here by a soldier.—A. Yes, sir. Well, it may be correct.

Q. That he could clean his gun and examine it a week after and it would not pass inspection; that he would clean it again, and sometimes clean it four times before it would pass a critical examination?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about that?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Would either of those guns have passed the inspection to which the guns of your company were subjected on the morning after this firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have been asked whether guns may not be cleaned so as to pass inspection, and then after they have stood for a while become apparently foul by reason, as the expression has been used, of the powder creeping up. I will ask you whether or not either of these guns appears to have been thoroughly cleaned since they were fired?—

A. No, sir.

Q. And I will ask you whether or not the powder will "creep up" after a gun has been thoroughly cleaned, with the use of sal soda and rag, in the way that the men generally clean their guns?—A. I have no personal knowledge of that, sir. I have heard that theory advanced, but I never cleaned one of these rifles myself and I do not know.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Captain, do I understand you to want the committee to believe that neither one of those guns would have passed inspection? It has been stated that one of them was cleaned two hours after it was fired.—A. I do not know what condition it was in two hours after it was cleaned. They are not clean now.

Q. And it has never been fired since. What you mean to say is that they would not pass inspection the way they look to you now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know whether they would have passed inspection immediately after they were cleaned or not, do you?—A. I only know, sir, that now they would not pass inspection. What any previous condition of the gun was I do not know.

Q. Of course you could not tell that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. So far as you could judge, neither one of these guns has been cleaned since it was fired?—A. They have not that appearance to me, sir.

Q. I will ask what your experience and observation have been as to the use of this thong brush for cleaning rifles that have been fired, and whether or not that is a satisfactory way of cleaning them, just by the use of the brush?—A. As I said, I have never cleaned one of these rifles myself, but there has been complaint made by the men that the thong brush wiper does not act satisfactorily in cleaning the guns.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. There has been no fire in this room. It has been very damp here. Could not these guns be filled with rust, and that have something to do with the question as to whether they would pass inspection or not?—A. Yes, sir; they may have rust in them.

Q. Could not that be the trouble with the gun that you say would not pass inspection? It has been standing here in this room for a week or two, and would not that be the trouble with the gun, rather than because it has not been cleaned?—A. The barrel, the bore, has an appearance which I do not think rust could give it, unless it had been the rust that had been permitted to accumulate—there is a fuzzy appearance in the barrel that does not come from ordinary rust.

Q. Do I understand you to say that that is not rust in there, that makes it foul?—A. No, sir; I do not say so. I say it has the appearance of being soiled by powder.

Q. Do you say that rifle No. 198263 has powder in there that makes it foul, or that it is rust?—A. I said that it looked to me a little more foul than the other. I do not say that it is either powder or rust, but that it has the appearance to me of being due to powder.

Q. Might it not be rust? Might you not be mistaken in that?—

A. It is possible; I do not think so. This is merely a matter of opinion. I do not think it is rust.

Q. You say it might be rust, as I understand you?—A. It might be. Senator BULKELEY. He said he did not think it was.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I understand he said he did not think so, but it might be rust.—

A. That is, I do not think it is.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Could it not be determined whether that was rust or powder by passing a clean white rag through the barrel?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. I wish you would do that for us, and let us see what is the matter with it.

Senator LODGE. You do not want to change the condition of the guns. They are to be used as tests, and you do not want to change their condition.

Senator BULKELEY. Did we not run a white rag through one of them here a few days ago?

Senator FORAKER. We did run a white rag through one of them.

Senator LODGE. Has a rag been run through them?

Senator FORAKER. Yes; a clean rag has been run through one.

Senator OVERMAN. We made the test before.

Senator FORAKER. I think the test was whether that gun was clean or not. If we had a clean white cloth we could pass it through here, and if it is not clean we can get it clean in time, I suppose, if we keep churning at it. You may go on with the cross-examination, and he can do that later.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Captain, you have made a careful inspection of the two guns shown you, and you have expressed an opinion that one is more foul than the other—that is, dirty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are quite clear on that, are you, Captain?—A. I am quite clear that it has the appearance to me of being more foul than the other.

Q. That is the only thing you can testify, on inspection, isn't it; that is, first, the appearance, and then afterwards, if you want to, you can test with a rag and all that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you made this inspection of these guns?—A. Of these guns, yes; these two guns.

Q. Now, in the use of a thong brush upon two guns, each of which has been fired five times, and the thong brush applied for cleaning, in from two to five hours after the discharge, would the application of the thong brush make the gun more foul, the one than the other?—

A. Would the application of the thong brush make the gun more foul by passing it through?

Q. Yes.—A. As I have stated, sir, I have never myself used this thong brush wiper.

Q. What would be your opinion on that?—A. It does not seem to me that it would make it more foul. It does not seem logical.

Q. If it should be stated to you that General Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army, had these guns cleaned in his presence and inspected, one of them within the limitation of about two to four hours after it was fired, and that it appeared clean, would that change your opinion any?—A. I don't think I quite understand that question, sir.

(The question was repeated.)—A. You want to know whether that would change my opinion as to whether these guns had been cleaned?

Q. Yes.—A. Since they had been fired?

Q. Yes; that is, one of them.—A. I should certainly accept the word of General Crozier.

Q. Well, I do not mean to put it as a matter of courtesy.—A. No; I mean that he is a man who should be able to judge of those things.

Q. There has been some evidence here of a gentleman, a soldier, who seemed to be an expert upon this question, and to have had large experience in the cleaning of rifles, or guns, that after cleaning the gun with the ramrod, with sal soda and the appliances ordinarily used, until it appeared clean, then after it had stood a few hours or a day there would be the appearance of powder in the gun. What would you say to that, Captain?—A. I have heard that theory advanced, as I stated before, but of my own personal knowledge I know nothing about it.

Q. You have no knowledge upon that question?—A. I never have cleaned one of those rifles or experimented in any such way as you have described.

Q. So you say you have no knowledge upon that question?—A. Nothing but an opinion, sir.

Q. Is your opinion to the contrary of that?—A. No, sir; I have no ground upon which to base a contrary opinion.

Q. I assume that. Now, the night of the 13th of August was a bright, starlight night, with no moon, and without clouds, I believe, was it not?—A. There were no clouds. The stars were shining, but it was not a bright night.

Q. Were not the stars shining brightly?—A. No, sir; they were not brilliant.

Q. What was the matter with the stars?—A. I don't know, sir. I suppose it was due to the atmosphere.

Q. Well, there were no clouds?—A. I do not recall any clouds; no, sir.

Q. And the stars were shining?—A. You could see them; yes, sir.

Q. You give it as your opinion that you could not distinguish the difference between a white man and a black man at the distance of 10 feet?—A. Of not over 10 feet. I think I said 10 feet as about the maximum.

Q. Did you ever make the experiment?—A. No, sir; I never have made any such experiment at all.

Q. If a truthful person, under oath, should state that he saw soldiers, recognized them by their color, whether they were white soldiers or colored soldiers, and by their uniforms as to whether they were citizens or soldiers, would that change your opinion, where it was done at from 25 to 35 feet?—A. Without any artificial light?

Q. Yes, without artificial light, if you please.—A. I would think that they were mistaken, sir.

Q. Although you never have made any test under like conditions?—

A. Not any tests, but I had a certain amount of experience that night. I know what kind of a night it was.

Q. You have stated all the experience you had that night, haven't you?—A. I don't think I have stated it all. I just mentioned a couple of incidents.

Q. Was there any other incident you want to mention, Captain?—A. No, sir; I don't recall any other just now.

Q. Then those are all the incidents you base your opinion upon—what you have narrated?—A. I have had a great deal of experience, especially in the Philippines, in moving men and handling men at night.

Q. I am asking you about that night, if you please, and then you can go on and make your explanation, or you can make it now, if you wish.

Senator FORAKER. Let him just finish the answer.

Senator WARNER. I have no objection at all.

The WITNESS. I know how much more difficult it is than it would seem to a person who has not had that experience to recognize, for instance, either their color or their clothing, or anything about them at night, without any artificial light and without moonlight.

Q. On a bright, moonlight night, at what distance could you distinguish the difference between a colored man and a white man without artificial light?—A. Well, I don't know as I can specify any distance. Of course you could distinguish them under those conditions at a much greater distance, especially if the colored man was of a dark type.

Q. Are you not just as competent to give an opinion on the question of distinguishing them by moonlight as you were to give an opinion as to distinguishing them or the distance at which you could distinguish them by starlight?—A. Well, it would seem like I ought to be, but on a moonlight night you do not have the trouble in handling your men and moving them about where you want them, and consequently your experiences under those conditions are not so apt to impress you as they are on a dark night. Just as a matter of opinion, I should say that on a moonlight night you could probably do it at 100 feet. I don't believe you could do it at over that, unless there was some very bright distinguishing mark, or something of that kind.

Q. And the uniform, how would that be?—A. The khaki uniform, even in the moonlight, is hardly distinguishable at 100 feet. A man is blotted out unless he has some special background.

Q. But 10 feet you place as the limit on a night such as this was?—A. In my opinion.

Q. At 7 feet you would have no trouble, would you?—A. I don't know, sir; I should think it could be done—

Q. I know, but we are getting opinions now, Captain?—A. Yes, sir; I should think it could be done at 7 feet.

Q. On the question of the repeating of orders, the only instance you have referred to, and I think that has been gone over. I will not go over it again. That was where your men fell out, on seeing this man having a gun, and when you gave them the order to fall into ranks.—A. That is the only instance that I recall, sir, at all.

Q. I think you went into that fully in your examination on the stand before.—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Would it not show a lack of discipline for men to step out of the ranks and arrest a man when the captain was present?—A. This was at the rear of the column, and I was at the head of the column.

Q. I understand.—A. No, sir; I do not think it could justly be called lack of discipline.

Q. You think when a man is in command of a company and the rear rank should step out and arrest a man without any orders at all from the commander that it would show no lack of discipline?—

A. The company had been halted from marching at the route step. They were not required to keep silence. They could stand at ease and they could converse. Under those circumstances I think the men acted in a manner that was perfectly proper.

Q. Suppose you were marching your company up Pennsylvania avenue, and I was going along, and the rear rank should step out and arrest me without any orders from you, would that show any lack of discipline?—A. The cases do not seem to me to be parallel.

Q. Would that show a lack of discipline, whether the case is parallel or not?—A. It certainly would.

Q. Everything was quiet at Brownsville when you passed along down the streets?—A. When we passed through the streets; yes, sir.

Q. What is the difference?—A. If there had been some unknown persons shooting up the capital, and I was sent out with my company to patrol the town, or this vicinity, and while my company was halted somewhere, or resting, and I was at the head, a man appeared at the rear with a gun, it would be perfectly proper for the men next to him—

Q. A policeman—a man in policeman's clothes—put it that way.—A. No; I am speaking of my own men.

Q. Was not this man who was arrested in policeman's clothes?—A. I don't know whether he was; I presume he was; had on a khaki uniform, I think.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. I should like to have you, Captain, go on and explain under what circumstances a soldier in the ranks is justified in leaving the ranks without an order from his commanding officer who is present.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what I am trying to get at.

A. Only in some certain special case, such as I am speaking of.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Is he in any case authorized to leave his company?—A. Under those conditions, sir. I think they acted perfectly properly.

Q. And you had to repeat the order a second time, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that show a lack of discipline—having to repeat the order a second time?—A. Not to my mind. It merely indicated a desire on their part that I should thoroughly understand that they had a man there with a rifle.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. What was the object of sending a patrol out into the town?—A. Major Penrose, the commanding officer, directed me to take my company and go as a patrol to certain parts of the town. He wanted to see if I would run across Captain Macklin anywhere, and also to get what information I could as to who had done this shooting. I think that was about the general instruction that he gave me.

Q. If you found men armed there without any knowledge as to who they were, you would think it was proper to arrest them, wouldn't you?—A. He did not give me any orders.

Q. Under the circumstances, and what had been going on before?—A. I think it was.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You think it was your duty to arrest them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any citizen that was out there armed?—A. Unless he could explain why he was there in that vicinity with firearms.

Q. And that any man in your company would have that same right, without any orders?—A. No, sir.

Q. Those four men, or six men, or however many there were, they did not have the right to do it?—A. They knew the object of the patrol, naturally; they inferred it, and while they acted somewhat on their own initiative, still they were a part of my organization.

Q. You think that was a soldierly act then?—A. I think they did perfectly properly then, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. It was not customary for policemen to carry rifles, was it?—A. I don't think I ever saw one, sir, before that night, with a rifle.

Q. And there was no trouble about the release of this man after it was ascertained that he was a policeman?—A. None at all, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. My interest is not in that direction at all. I wanted to know—because I confess that I am interested in the subject—I wanted to know if a soldier in the ranks, under the command of an officer, on any account or under any circumstances, had the right to leave the ranks without an order from the commanding officer, or authority from the officer?—A. Theoretically he should not, but practically there are certain conditions, such as those at Brownsville, under which, in my opinion, he was perfectly justified. These men did not go away. They stepped out perhaps 4 or 5 feet just from the rear of the company and surrounded this man with the rifle.

Q. What was the distance between the head of the column and the rear?—A. Well, probably 30 or 40 feet, or something like that.

Q. Was there any trouble about the men calling out to the commanding officer, to you, that there was an armed man on the street?—A. As soon as they surrounded this man they did call out, sir; called for me and said that here was a man with a rifle.

Q. But ought not they to have called to you before they surrounded him, before they stepped out of the ranks?—A. I think they acted perfectly properly, sir. They did not know what this man was going to do, or how long he was going to stay there.

Q. And you think they were proper in not returning to the ranks when you ordered them in the first place to return, but remonstrated to you, stating that he was an armed man, and making it necessary for you to give a second order that they should return to the ranks?—A. It was not in the nature of a remonstrance. It was in the nature of an explanation, in order to be sure that I knew that the man whom I had ordered them to turn loose had a rifle, before they did so.

Q. As a matter of fact, you ordered them back to the ranks?—

A. The mayor told me—he said, “That man is one of my policemen.” He and I started then down to where the man was. I said, “You men fall in. That man is all right. Let him alone.” They said, “Captain, he has got a rifle,” and I said, “Never mind; fall in.”

Q. Making it necessary for you to give the second order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think that their failure to respect and act upon the first order was no evidence of a want of discipline?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Is it not the duty of inferior officers, and even of enlisted men in the ranks, when they are given an order, and are so situated with respect to the commanding officer that they can acquaint him with a fact that they may think is material, and that they think he is not aware of, to give him knowledge of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not that the case?—A. Yes, sir; it certainly is.

Q. And would it not have been a very unsoldierly performance on the part of those men to have seen a man there with a gun, under circumstances that indicated that he might possibly open fire on your men and kill some of them, to have omitted taking steps to prevent it? Would not that have been unsoldierly of itself on their part? In other words, was it not their duty to do what they thought might be necessary and proper to prevent the man from doing harm to your command?—A. I think that was their duty, sir.

Q. And it was upon that theory, you say, that you think they acted properly?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALLAFERRO:

Q. Was this particular case ever considered by you—were you court-martialed?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You have not been charged with shooting up the town?—A. No, sir; I have not; not directly.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. There was one question which I wanted to ask, because of an answer of yours. You were not sent up into the town to arrest any citizens?—A. The commanding officer gave me no orders on that point at all. I acted entirely on my own discretion.

Q. I am not criticising it; but you have been a soldier and I assume that you know you had no authority over the citizens of Brownsville. But we will let that pass. I do not care to go into any discussion of that. What instructions were given to you by Major Penrose?—A. To take my company and patrol a certain part of the town and get what information I could regarding this disturbance, and also to see if I could find anything about Captain Macklin.

Q. What did he tell you about Captain Macklin then?—A. I don't know, sir, that he told me anything about Captain Macklin then. I knew Captain Macklin was not present.

Q. Well, I was just asking you if he did tell you. Did he tell you that they had sent for him at his quarters twice and could not find him, and that he was afraid Captain Macklin had been killed, or anything of that kind?—A. I do not recall that he did, sir, exactly that, at the time. I knew he was worried about Captain Macklin. Whether he told me then or had told me previously, I don't know.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There is one question I forgot to ask, but which is important. Mrs. Leahy testifies that on the morning of the 14th, the morning after the firing, between the hours of 5.30 o'clock and 6 o'clock, she left her home at the corner of Fourteenth and Elizabeth streets and went up Fourteenth street to the Cowen alley, turned to the right, and went up to the garrison road, and then turned up that road and pursued it to Seventeenth street.

Senator WARNER. Turned to the left.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I mean went to Jefferson street, turned to the left, and went up to Jefferson street, and that as she came out of the alley and turned up the garrison road [referring to the map]—this indicates the route she pursued—when she turned up the garrison road here at the mouth of the alley she saw five or six men on the upper rear gallery or porch of B barracks cleaning their guns, or doing something that she thought was the cleaning of guns; and she further testified that there was an officer standing between the gate and the lower end of B barracks, somewhere in there, and that that officer must have been either Major Penrose or Captain Lyon.

Senator WARNER. Major Penrose.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. One or the other, she said it was.

Senator WARNER. Go ahead; it makes no difference. The printed evidence will show for itself.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Major Penrose or Captain Lyon, one or the other. State whether or not you were there at that time in the morning, and whether or not you were in the situation, at or about that time, to know what was going on on the rear porches of the barracks, B barracks particularly.—A. I don't think I went back where I could see the rear of B Company until after I had had the inspection of my company and inspected some men of B Company.

Q. So that if she saw an officer standing there it was not you?—A. No, sir; it was not I.

Q. And you think you were not in the rear of B barracks until after the inspection of arms, which would be later than 6 o'clock?—

A. Yes, sir; I do not think I was.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. One of those rifles which you have looked at was cleaned, and I will read you what General Crozier says in his testimony:

Of these rifles I had one cleaned in the darkness, in a room where the light was absolutely excluded, and it was cleaned by drawing the brush which is provided for the purpose, by means of the thong, five times through the barrel, and that is all that was done, and that occupied just one minute.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Was that cleaned sufficiently to pass inspection?—A. Well, it is here, sir; the rifle is here.

Q. Yes; but I am not an inspector of rifles, and you are. Could not you tell me?—A. I will state this about it: In looking through the rifle it is difficult to see whether it has been fired, but I am of the opinion, without having tried it with this particular rifle, that if we were to draw a clean rag through the rifle we would get a little mark on it. It would not come through absolutely clean; but, as far the appearance of it is concerned, I would not be able to say from looking through it that it had been fired.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Who cleaned these rifles in your presence?—A. Captain Rice, of the Ordnance Department.

Q. He cleaned them all?—A. He cleaned these last ones I am speaking of.

General Crozier testified to that effect, as I have just read you. Is it fair to assume that one of those rifles was cleaner than the other at the time he testified that one was not cleaned at all?—A. I should think so, sir. It would seem to me perfectly fair to assume that one of the rifles was cleaner than the other.

Q. I mean that one was cleaner than the other after he had drawn the brush through it.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, he stated, and Sergeant Levie, formerly of the Twenty-sixth and now of the Eighteenth Regiment, who seemed an extremely intelligent man, also testified, that a rifle which had been cleaned, even if it was cleaned, the sergeant said, with sal soda, and thoroughly, if allowed to stand for two or three days, would foul again. You say you have heard that theory, but that you have no personal knowledge of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as to these two rifles, you have looked through them and have said that in your opinion one was less foul than the other, or slightly less foul.—A. I said it seemed so.

Q. The one that seemed to you less foul than the other was the one that had never been cleaned at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the one that seemed to you the fouler was the one that had had the brush drawn through it five times. Does that seem to you to indicate that there is some truth in the statement of General Crozier and the sergeant that a gun left in that way will foul again?

Senator FORAKER. When did General Crozier say this?

Senator LODGE. He stated it to me, and I thought he so stated in his testimony. The sergeant certainly testified to that very fully. Now, I will have my question repeated.

The official reporter read the question as follows:

Q. And the one that seemed to you the fouler was the one that had had the brush drawn through it five times. Does that seem to you to indicate that there is some truth in the statement of General Crozier and the sergeant that a gun left in that way will foul again?

A. It would appear to be so—a gun that is not thoroughly clean. A gun that is thoroughly clean will keep clean.

Q. I will not go over the testimony of the sergeant that a gun had to be cleaned two or three times to keep it clean; that when cleaned it would foul again—that was his testimony.—A. That was because, although it might have looked clean, it was not clean.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. But a perfectly clean gun will rust.—A. I understood this fouling to refer to the effect of the powder in the bore.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. I will state what I understood them to mean, that with this modern smokeless powder the dirt left in the barrel is not like the dirt left by the old charcoal powder; it is more in the nature of stains caused by the gases.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that after a gun has been once cleaned, those stains will reappear unless the gun has been cleaned with extraordinary thoroughness, or is cleaned a second time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what I understood General Crozier and the sergeant to mean by the reappearance of fouling in the barrel. They did not mean rust?—A. No, sir.

Q. But the reappearance of gas stains?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Am I correct in supposing that is what you mean?—A. I should suppose that is what they mean, sir. I do not know. I never have cleaned one of these rifles. I actually do not know anything about it myself, what is difficult in cleaning them.

Q. You never have cleaned one of these rifles that was tested in that way?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The statement of General Crozier at page 2849, and as I understand not anywhere modified, as to this rifle through which he ran the thong brush five times, is as follows:

As far as the appearance of it is concerned, I would not be able to say, from looking through it, that it had been fired.

He was speaking of the condition of the gun as he presented it to this committee when he was a witness on the stand, and not as it appeared to him at the time when it was cleaned. Now, I understand your testimony to be that looking through that gun now it does have the appearance of having been fired and not cleaned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so much that appearance that you would not think of passing it on inspection?—A. No, sir; I should certainly punish a man who brought a gun in that condition and presented it to me for inspection.

Q. And you made one remark in answer to Senator Lodge that I want to see if I properly understood it. I understood you to say that if a gun be thoroughly cleaned it will not foul up. That is true, is it not?—A. That is my opinion, sir. A gun that is thoroughly cleaned, and no powder gas is left to expand on it, or any of those things they attribute to that, it could not foul again of its own volition.

Q. That is to say, there will be nothing left in the gun to "creep up," to use the expression, if it be thoroughly cleaned?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. It might be cleaned with sal soda, in your opinion, so as to pass inspection, and after that become foul?—A. That is the theory that is advanced, sir. I know nothing about that myself.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. But you do know that when a gun is thoroughly cleaned, it will retain all the appearance of being clean, do you not?—A. Unless it is permitted to rust, or something of that kind.

Q. I mean so far as powder stains are concerned.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sergeant Levie testified that it would stay clean or bright for six months.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Suppose the rag had been drawn through one of these guns several times since they have been in the possession of the committee—I don't know which one it was, but that is the fact, that it was done here as an experiment—would not that make a difference in the condition, if it was used in the gun that was not cleaned; might it not possibly leave it in better condition than the other?

Senator WARNER. It was drawn through the one that was supposed to have been cleaned.

Senator BULKELEY. Through the one that was cleaned?

Senator WARNER. Yes; that was the experiment.

Senator BULKELEY. I know it was drawn through one of them.

Senator OVERMAN. More than once.

Senator BULKELEY. I think they pushed it through once or twice.

Senator FORAKER. We have this clean rag here now, but as we have had one exhibition, I do not care to go through with this again.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Did your men who surrounded this policeman who had the rifle attempt to do him any violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. They called your attention to him immediately?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you ordered them to fall in, did they call your attention to the fact, or how was your attention called to it?—A. They called to me at once, sir; they said to me, "Captain, here is a man with a rifle."

Q. You have been asked some questions as to the propriety of their stepping out of the ranks on their discovering a man in khaki uniform with a gun in his hands. Now I want to ask you, you were sent to patrol the town, to see what you could find, as I understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To get any evidence in regard to the affray that had been going on? If you had discovered a bunch of men, or one or two or three, still engaged in shooting up the town, whether they were civilians or soldiers, would it not have been your duty as the commanding officer of that patrol to have interfered and arrested them?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Captain, I had hoped that you would not go into that. You do not claim that you, a military officer, had any shadow of authority to arrest a man in the city of Brownsville that night or any other night?—A. I had no authority, sir; I knew that perfectly well, but I should have done it nevertheless.

Senator WARNER. I would rather keep out of a discussion of that. That is all.

(At 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.10 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, Taliaferro, and Overman.

TESTIMONY OF SAMUEL WHEELER (COLORED)—Recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. You will understand, Corporal, that you are testifying under the oath which you took before the committee at an earlier date.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What is your full name?—A. Samuel Wheeler, sir.

Q. You have testified before before this committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You belonged to Company D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, did you, Corporal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go with your company from Fort Niobrara to Brownsville, Tex., when it went there, the latter part of July, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember seeing the conductor of the train on which your company was carried to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A Mr. Lunkenheimer has testified here that he was the conductor of that train from a place called Sinton for a distance of, I think, 162 miles, into Brownsville. That is the man I refer to. Do you remember him?—A. Well, I did not know his name, but I remember the conductor. He did not tell me his name at the time.

Q. The man to whom I refer testified before this committee a few days ago. He testified before this committee on Friday, June 7, according to the record I have before me. That was Friday of last week. State whether or not he was pointed out to you and whether or not you identified the man to whom I refer as the man who was the conductor of that train.—A. Yes, sir; he is the one. I identified him on the outside of the room, there, sir.

Q. About what place in the train did your company occupy?—

A. My company had the whole entire of the fourth car of the section in which soldiers was and some portion of the third car.

Q. How many cars did the battalion have for the accommodation of the enlisted men of the battalion and noncommissioned officers?—

A. I think, sir, there were four cars.

Q. And you were where in the train? Where were you with respect to the officers' car?—A. Why, in the rear of our car—right in the rear of the car which I were in, sir.

Q. Was the officers' car at the rear end of the train?—A. No, sir; I think the caboose or the car that the women was in—one or the other—were on the rear end of the train. I don't just remember now, sir.

Q. What women do you refer to?—A. The soldiers' wives that were going along.

Q. Oh, yes. They had a car also, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a married man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your wife one of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was she in this car to which you refer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you did not travel in the same car?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were with your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, you think, was in front of the officers' car?—A. I know it was right in front of the officers' car.

Q. That was D Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what company was next to you, going forward?—A. There was C Company.

Q. And then B Company at the head of the train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. B, C, and D, then, was the order in which the companies were on the cars in that train, as I understand you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you see this conductor at any time during that trip after you left Sinton, the last day of your travel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state where and under what circumstances you saw him, and what occurred. Tell us in your own way.—A. Well, sometime, after we had been out a couple of hours or such a matter, going down the road, the conductor and one of his brakemen came along.

Q. That is, a couple of hours from Sinton?—A. Yes, sir; the conductor and one of his brakemen came along in the car. I was sitting about the third berth from the door which he came in.

Q. The third berth from the door?—A. Yes, sir; and he stopped there for a few moments and stood up at the end of the bench.

Q. Let me ask you before you proceed, with whom were you associated in that travel down there; who was assigned to the same berth with you, if anybody—the same section?—A. Corpl. Winter Washington.

Q. Corpl. Winter Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was of your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you and he have, together?—A. We had one whole berth there, just between us; only two of us in that one berth.

Q. State whether or not there was a whole section to every two men.—A. There was supposed to be three men to every section, two below and one up above, sir.

Q. Was that the case with you?—A. No, sir; there was only two, with us.

Q. In your section?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, state what happened when the conductor came along; what were you doing when he came along?—A. Me and Corporal Washington were sitting there talking and smoking, and the conductor stopped and spoke. "Good morning, boys." "Good morning, sir." "Where are you from?" We told him from Nebraska. "Pretty cold up in that country?" "Yes, sir." "You will find it is not so cold down here as it were up there. It is a better climate." Then about that time he sat down. That seat was vacant, nothing in it, and he sat down and he began to talk about what a nice country it was.

Q. The conductor sat down in that section with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the side of you or by the side of Washington?—A. Not in beside either of us, but facing us. The other seat was right in front of us; there was nothing in that, and he just sat down in there. I and Corporal Washington was sitting side by side.

Q. You and Corporal Washington were sitting side by side?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he sat on the other seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did he sit there and ride with you in that way?—

A. Well, just to estimate it, I suppose he sat there about an hour and a half, or such a matter.

Q. State what was the occasion of his leaving. I will ask you about the conversation later.—A. Well, his cause of leaving was, they run into some cattle, and run over a cow or a steer, one, and some of the limbs of the animals got tangled up in the oil pipe which leads from the tender to the locomotive, and broke it, and we had to stop to repair that, and also to pull the animal out from under the tender and that part of the engine; so when the train stopped so suddenly he jumped up and looked out to see what was the trouble with his train. That was what broke up our conversation and separated us, I suppose, as early as we was.

Q. Now, you can tell us what was the general nature of your conversation.—A. Well, he was speaking about the different climates, the climate of that part of Texas and the upper part, and up through Nebraska and Montana, where I had been, and over here in Pennsylvania, where he came from. He was telling us about how in his younger days he was a circus man, an acrobat, and had lost his health at the business, and gave it up and came West for his health, and got into the railroad business, and that he had been in Texas for a good many years, and that as soon as this branch road was put into Brownsville he made an application and changed down on that branch because it wasn't so far, and you got such an elegant breeze from the Gulf, up there, and it was such a great improvement to his health, was his reason for his being in there. About the town, he said it was nothing much there, mostly a Mexican town, six or seven thousand people; there wasn't much enjoyment there.

Q. I will ask you—

Senator WARNER. Let him go ahead.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Go right ahead.—A. But he says, "For a nice time, you boys can go across to Matamoros. Sometimes they go over and take on an excursion," he says, "when I am down here, and go down to the Point. There is a nice little island somewheres about the Point, and fish and fresh oysters, and so forth." We had a nice conversation, and the man seemed to have been quite a gentleman in his remarks. Once he made the expression of "a nigger," and then he says, "Well, now boys, excuse me, because I don't mean a bit of harm." He says, "I have been south so long that I have got southernized myself," and I says, "Never mind, just go right ahead, talk right ahead." I said, "I am a southern man myself, and I have gotten used to that, and it does not make any difference, a man is a man," and he said, "All right," and then he went on to tell about other things about the State, and so forth.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether anything like this occurred. I will read from this testimony. Speaking of the men with whom he was talking, he said:

They said, "Say, Cap, what kind of a town is Brownsville?" I said, "It is a right good little town, but it is nothing but a Mexican town, though."

That, substantially, was said, was it, or something like that?—

A. That was what he did say. The question was not asked. It might have been, but he didn't give us time. He just went on to give us a diagram of the nature of the country.

Q. (Reading:)

They says, "Any colored there?" I said "no, I didn't think there was a half a dozen families in the town." He says, "Christ, ain't there any saloons there?" I says, "Oh, yes; saloons galore." He says, "Any colored saloons, are there?" I says, "No; if there is I don't know it; but I have got some boys working for me that drinks there."

Was there any conversation like that?—A. Not to me, any such conversation like that.

Q. Did you hear any such conversation?—A. No, sir; I never heard any such conversation in that seat there with me and Corporal Washington.

Q. I will read further:

Q. That is, you meant colored railroad men?—A. Brakemen.

Q. Brakemen?—A. Yes, sir; brakemen. Then I believe the same party spoke again—no; it was the party next to him.

The party next to you was Corporal Washington, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

He says, "Well, we don't care whether there is any of them or not. We will drink in any of these damn bars. We will do like we did in so and so," mentioning the place they were from.

Was there any conversation of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. Do you remember the name of that place?—A. No, sir; that place, I do not. He says, "When we first went to so and so we couldn't get a damn thing in the place, but, by God, we were not there but two weeks when we showed them where to drink; gave them a couple of clips under the lip, and we could get any damn thing we wanted in town."

A. Was there any conversation of that character?—A. Why, no, sir.

Q. Nothing of that nature?—A. There could not have been, because where we were, when we went there, everything was just like we left it. We were welcome every place, if we wanted to go.

Q. What I want to know is whether you or Corporal Washington, or anybody else in your presence or in your hearing, made any remark of that nature?—A. No, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. That is the way he spoke?—A. Oh, yes. So, you know [witness indicating by grimace]. That is the way they spoke it. I went on. They stopped me and talked, and I spoke to them and then went on.

Did you stop him when he went along there, or did he stop himself?—A. He stopped himself, sir.

Q. Then he proceeds:

On going out, a big ginger-cake darkey spoke to me—got me out on the platform.

Do you know of anybody going out with him on the platform?—A. Why, no, sir; there was no one went out with him. He didn't stop, he rushed out and there was a half a dozen—the whole crowd—followed out behind him. We didn't have any conversation. I know I didn't say anything to him.

Q. You went out to see what was the matter? Something had stopped the train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You felt the jar, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, he says a big ginger-cake darkey followed him out. Then he tells us what he means by that. He says:

Between a yellow and a white, what we call a ginger-cake darkey; he came out on the platform, and he says, "Now, wasn't that nice?" He says, "Now, that is just the way with this regiment." He says, "We have got some of the nicest boys in this regiment that you can find anywhere, and then," he says, "we have got some of the toughest. Now," he says, "that is just the kind of people that does the dirt, and we all have to take the blame."

Was there any conversation of that character that you heard?—A. Not in my presence; no, sir.

Q. Did you hear of any such conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or did you hear of anybody talking to the conductor in any such way as that in the course of the trip?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Foraker, looking over this testimony, which was taken at a time when I was not in the committee room, it occurs to me to ask if there was anything that came before the committee that connected this witness with this conversation you have been reading?

Senator FORAKER. No; he only said he talked with somebody. He could not identify by name whom it was. He said he had a talk of this character, and then he said he talked in another car; but I want to show that there was no such talk as that here, although there was some other talk about the town of Brownsville. It is a matter of inference and deduction whether this was the conversation or not.

Now he says he had another conversation with somebody on the cars. I will not repeat what he said, but it was to the effect that some of the soldiers made inquiries of him as to lewd women in the town of Brownsville.

Senator WARNER. That was in another car.

Senator FORAKER. It may have been in another car than this, or it may have been this. It was in another car than that in which the first conversation was.

Senator WARNER. Yes.

Senator FORAKER. That is all. I want to find out whether this witness heard any talk of that kind.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, did you hear any talk about lewd women at all, from him?—A. There was nothing about women brought about in our conversation there at all, about any kind of women.

Q. Did you ask him anything about Mexican women or about colored women or about white women that might be found there for improper purposes?—A. No, sir; I had my wife with me, and I never make any inquiry about women nohow—nobody.

Q. Did you hear anybody make any inquiry of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear him tell anybody about lewd women in the town?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. How tall are you, Corporal Wheeler?—A. I am about 5 feet 11½, I believe, sir.

Q. You are about as dark as any of them in the company; you are about as dark colored?—A. No, sir; there are some darker and some few lighter than me.

Q. You say there were four cars that had the soldiers in them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the four cars how many soldiers were there?—A. Well, now, I don't know, sir; because all of the cars did not seat or sleep, I think, just the same number. Some of them carried a few more, and I know that the car which I was in, all of my company were not in my car. It taken four cars to carry the three companies.

Q. You do not pretend to know what conversation the conductor had in other cars or with others than yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no means of knowing?—A. No, sir; because I did not follow him up to these other cars. I only know the conversation that he personally held there with I and Corporal Washington.

Q. Yes.—A. And he went out of there. When he came through there again we were near Brownsville, and he didn't stop then. He said, "Well, boys, we are pretty near home now," and went on through.

Q. Then in your conversation you did talk about what kind of a town it was?—A. Did I ask him?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; but I might have asked him, but he went ahead and was telling me all about it.

Q. Did you ask about there being colored people there—if there were any?—A. I don't think I mentioned colored people at all. He just said it was a small town, six or seven thousand people.

Q. And nothing was said about saloons in that conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that that must have been in a conversation with other parties there in your car, or in some other car, if any such conversation occurred?—A. It could have been.

Q. And it could have been had without you and Washington knowing anything about it?—A. In some other car?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You did not see him talking with anybody else in your car, that you have any recollection of?—A. No, sir; when he left our car it was on account of this sudden stop down there, and he jumped up and looked out to see what was the matter with his train, and by that time it had stopped, and we all just piled out to see what was the matter.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF WINTER WASHINGTON (COLORED)—Recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. You will understand that you are giving evidence to this committee under the oath which you formerly took.

A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Give the stenographer your full name.—A. My name is Winter Washington.

Q. Where do you reside now?—A. In Baltimore, Md., sir.

Q. Are you employed there in any way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what kind of work are you employed there?—A. I am doing laboring work, sir.

Q. You were a corporal in Company D of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, when that company was in Brownsville, Tex., in August last, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went with your company from Fort Niobrara down to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you traveled by train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To make that trip?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember with whom you were in company—I mean who was your bunk mate, if I may use that term properly—on that trip?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it?—A. Corporal Wheeler.

Q. Corporal Wheeler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State how many men were assigned to the section that you and Corporal Wheeler occupied.—A. I can not remember just how many men were in the same section, now.

Q. In the same section with you?—A. Yes, sir; in the same section with us. I can't remember just how many men there were with us.

Q. Were not three men assigned to each section, as a rule, but only two men were in your section?—A. Yes, sir; only two men to a berth.

Q. You and Corporal Wheeler occupied that section alone, did you?—A. Yes, sir; we occupied it alone.

Q. Do you remember the conductor who was on that train during the last 160 miles of the trip into Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remember him, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether you and Corporal Wheeler and that conductor had any conversation during that part of the journey?—A. Yes, sir; I remember the conductor coming in—in our train—and myself and Corporal Wheeler were sitting in the seat together.

Q. Go on and tell in your own way what you heard. Speak out loud.—A. We were sitting in the seat together, and we were riding backwards, with our backs towards the engine, and the seat in front of us was vacant, and I remember the conductor came in—a kind of a thin featured man; he came in and sat down in the seat just opposite us, myself and Corporal Wheeler, and explained that this was a nice country we were going to, and we said, yes, and he asked us where we were from, and we told him we were from Fort Niobrara. He says: "You all are coming into Texas now," and we said, "Yes, sir;" and then he went on to explain what kind of a country it was and how the weather was down there, and so on, and him and Corporal Wheeler was doing quite a lot of talking about the country, and so on, and he went on to explain everything to us in regard to the country.

Q. State whether or not there was any unpleasant or disagreeable conversation indulged in by either party to the conversation.—A. No, sir; not anything at all.

Q. Let me read you from what he has stated as a witness before this committee. After saying that he was the conductor and he was passing through one of the cars, he says:

In going through the train I was hailed by a couple of the boys in the seats—there were four sitting facing each other—and they said, "Say, Cap, what kind of a town is Brownsville?" I said, "It is a right good little town, but it is nothing but a Mexican town, though." They says, "Any colored there?" I said no, I didn't think there was half a dozen colored families in the town. He says, "Christ, ain't there any saloons there?" I says, "Oh, yes; saloons galore." He says, "Any colored saloons, are there?" I says, "No; if there is I don't know it; but I have got some boys working for me that drinks there."

Was any such conversation as that indulged in that your presence or in your hearing?—A. No, sir. After he sat down he went on to explain to us. We didn't ask him any questions at all, hardly.

Q. Yes. How long did he sit and talk with you?—A. I don't know exactly, sir; but I judge he must have sat there three-quarters of an hour or an hour, or something like that.

Q. Yes.—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. Do you know what interrupted the conversation and caused him to leave you?—A. Yes, sir; I remember we run into something—a cow or an ox—on the road that caused the train to stop. Corporal Wheeler, he went out, and he was telling me that it interfered with the rods under the train—something that was under there—and they had to pull out legs or something before the train could start again.

Q. Did you go out of the car?—A. No, sir; I didn't go out; I looked out of the window.

Q. You didn't go out on the platform with the conductor and do any talking?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any talk with him any place except right in the seat where he sat with you?—A. No, sir; I didn't have any talk at all.

Q. Did you hear any such remark as this made by Corporal Wheeler or any other soldier: "Well, we don't care whether there is any of them or not. We will drink in any of these damn bars. We will do like we did in So-and-so," mentioning the place they were from." Did you hear any remark of that nature?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. (Reading:)

He says: "When we first went to so and so we couldn't get a damn thing in the place, but, by God, we were not there but two weeks when we showed them where to drink; gave them a couple of elps under the lip, and we could get any damn thing we wanted in town."

Was there any remark of that nature in that conversation?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. Or anything like that?—A. No, sir; he did not use any unpleasant words at all with myself and Corporal Wheeler, because he volunteered and sat down with us himself.

Q. Yes; he did not use any, but I want to know whether you used any?—A. We did not, because he was doing the talking. We didn't ask him any questions to amount to anything; he was doing the talking.

Q. You did not ask him questions to amount to anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then he says:

They stopped me and talked, and I spoke to them and then went on.

Did you stop him and ask him to sit down, or did he stop on his own motion?—A. No, sir; he volunteered to sit down himself.

Q. Now, he says:

On going out, a big ginger-cake darkey spoke to me—got me out on the platform.

Q. Do you know what a ginger-cake darkey is?—A. No, sir; I don't know what a ginger-cake darkey is.

Q. We did not know what it was, and he told us.—A. No, sir; I don't know what it is.

Q. He told us here:

Q. Ginger-cake darkey?—A. Yes, sir; between a yellow and a white; what we call a ginger-cake darkey. He came out on the platform, and he says: "Now, wasn't that nice?" He says: "Now, that is just the way with this regiment." He says: "We have got some of the nicest boys in this regiment that you can find anywhere, and then," he says, "we have got some of the toughest. Now," he says, "that is just the kind of people that does the dirt, and we all have to take the blame."

Did you hear anything like that said?—A. No, sir.

Q. By anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, he goes on here, in language which I will not repeat to say that inquiry was made by these soldiers about lewd women in Brownsville—whether there were any lewd women, or whether there were any white women or any colored women or Mexican women—some remarks on that subject. Did you hear any talk of that kind?—A. No, sir; we were not talking about any lewd women when he was sitting with us.

Q. Then, was there any talk about any women, of any kind?—A. No, sir; not while he was sitting with us.

Q. You heard nothing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not say anything of that kind to him?—A. No, sir; I did not, because myself and Corporal Wheeler was sitting with our backs to the engine, this way, and he was sitting in front of us.

Q. Yes.—A. And I could hear everything that was said, and I did not hear anything of the kind.

Q. You did not say any such thing, and you did not hear Corporal Wheeler say any such thing?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did you hear anybody around about there say any such thing?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. There were only two in your seat?—A. Yes, sir; Corporal Wheeler and myself.

Q. You are quite clear about that, you are not mistaken about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were sitting with your back to the engine?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the conversation that was had there, that you heard, and the only conversation that you heard, was when the conductor sat down in the vacant seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In front of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know what conversation the conductor had with anyone else in that car?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or what he had in any other car?—A. He didn't have any conversation like that in my car, because he came in from that way [indicating] and sat right down in our seat. I know he didn't have any such conversation in our car.

Q. What part of the car were you sitting in?—A. We occupied the car next to the officers' car, the car Corporal Wheeler and myself were in.

Q. What part of the car were you in?—A. When we marched in, if I can remember, the company was reversed and the rear end of the company marched in ahead, and that put us about the center; that would give us about the third car. I can't remember just now, but I think we had about the third car.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. You mean the third seat?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Let us see; do you mean the third car?—A. Yes, sir; about the third car.

Q. But what I am asking you is, what section or seat did you occupy in the car?—A. We occupied a section near the entrance going out into the other car—like here is the officers' car here [indicating] and there is the place there to go into the officers' car, and this is our car here [indicating].

Q. Was the officers' car ahead of or behind your car?—A. We were riding with our backs to the engine and the officers' car was ahead of us.

Q. Was ahead of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is, he means that it was ahead of them the way they were looking.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Let us see; was the officers' car between you and the engine?—A. The officers' car was between us and the engine. We were looking towards the officers' car, this way [indicating]. We had our backs to the engine and the officers' car, if I can remember, was that way [indicating].

Q. That is, the officers' car was back of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Back of you from the engine? So that I may understand, that is right, is it?—A. Yes, sir; that is about as right as I can remember it.

Q. About what time of day was this?—A. I don't know, sir, just about what time of day it was.

Q. Was it forenoon or afternoon?—A. If I can remember, it seems to me it must have been in the afternoon.

Q. Was it in the afternoon?—A. It seems to me; I am not quite sure. I am not sure of that.

Q. What time did you get on those cars?—A. We got on those cars in—you mean what time did we leave Fort Niobrara?

Q. Oh, you came through on those cars, did you, from Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir; from Niobrara.

Q. Yes; but at this point—Sinton—what time did you get there, do you know?—A. I don't just remember what time we got there; no, sir.

Q. Was it forenoon or afternoon?—A. We got to Sinton, I don't know exactly what time; I don't remember exactly what time, but I think it must have been in the afternoon. It seems to me now that it must have been in the afternoon.

Q. Well, I do not know, I am sure, Washington.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which was it?—A. I don't know exactly; I wouldn't say. I have partly forgotten about the road.

Q. Is it not a fact, Mr. Washington, that you got to Sinton early in the morning?—A. I will have to think for a minute. Sinton seemed to be a long shed on the railroad, they were just building. Yes, sir. It seemed to me that it was in the afternoon. I am not certain. I am not quite sure.

Q. Yes.—A. I can't say for certain, because I can not remember just now.

Q. And you do not know anything about what conversations the conductor had with anyone else in that car or in the other cars?—

A. No, sir.

Q. You simply say that no such conversation as this occurred when the conductor sat down in the car, or in the section in which there were only yourself and Corporal Wheeler? That is correct, is it?—

A. Yes, sir; no such conversation as that occurred in our section.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Was your section near the door of the car?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the conductor come into the car when he came in through the door?—A. Yes, sir; we were riding with our backs to the engine, and he came in this way, facing us [indicating].

Q. Did he come right to your seat?—A. No, sir; he came right along, walking slow, unconcerned.

Q. Did he stop on the way down?—A. He stopped at our seat.

Q. He did not stop until he got to your seat?—A. Yes, sir; he only stopped when he got to our seat.

Q. And at once took a seat in the vacant part of your section, did he?—A. Yes, sir; he spoke to us.

Q. Well, did he take a seat there at once?—A. No, sir; not at once; he stood for a few minutes, and then sat down.

Q. He stood for a few minutes by you, and then took a seat?—A. Yes, sir; and then took a seat.

Q. And he did not leave that section until this accident?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He sat there with you all the time?—A. He was sitting in that seat; yes, sir; all the time.

Q. From the time he entered the car, when he was under your observation, he remained either in close proximity or in that seat until he went out when the accident occurred; is that right?—A. Yes, sir; he was sitting in our seat until this accident occurred, and then he went out.

Q. So that there was no opportunity for a conversation in your car, practically, with anybody except you and your comrade? Was there any opportunity for him to converse with others in the car?—A. No, sir; he was only talking with us two there.

Senator BULKELEY. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF JACK MATTHEWS (COLORED).

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please state your name in full.—A. Jack Matthews.

Q. Do you give your name as Jack Matthews, or is it John Matthews?—A. Jack Matthews.

Q. Jack Matthews?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Washington County, Tex., is my native home.

Q. Washington County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the county seat of that county?—A. Washington County; Brenham, Tex.

Q. B-r-e-n-h-a-m?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is your home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Matthews, where were you employed during the month of August, the first part of the month of August, 1906?—A. Kingsville, Tex.

Q. What were you doing there?—A. Night watching.

Q. Night watchman for whom?—A. For the B. and M. Railroad system.

Q. State whether or not you were in Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, where this shooting affray occurred.—A. I came in there that night.

Q. State how you happened to be in Brownsville that night. Speak out loud so that we can all hear you.—A. I had gone in there on a freight train.

Q. How did you happen to be in there? Was that any part of your duty, or were you off duty?—A. I was off duty.

Q. How did you happen to be off duty?—A. I was sick.

Q. You were sick?—A. I was sick, and I had gone down there on a vacation, looking around for my health.

Q. Were you visiting anybody there?—A. I was going down to visit Grant.

Q. Whom?—A. Mr. Grant.

Q. Mr. Grant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he a resident of Brownsville?—A. He was at that time.

Q. Was he a colored man?—A. Yes, sir; a colored man.

Q. Well, now, you went down on a freight train?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What occurred after you got there? Tell us as nearly as you can, after you got there, and all about what you did.—A. I don't know exactly what time I got there, only it was dark; it must have been some time after 8 o'clock when I got in, and probably later, and I was going east, north of the fort, and I meets three white men with guns, about two blocks from the fort.

Q. Can you tell on what street you were when you met these men?—A. Well, I am not acquainted there, but I know it is about two blocks from the fort, north of the fort.

Q. Had you ever been to Brownsville before?—A. I had been there several times, but I was on duty then, and busy, and hadn't time to go out in the town.

Q. You were not familiar with the streets?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where the Miller Hotel is?—A. Yes, sir; I know where that is.

Q. Where were you when you met these men of whom you speak; with reference to the Miller Hotel, where were you?—A. I was about a block from the Miller Hotel.

Q. In what direction from the Miller Hotel?—A. Eastward; kind of east from the Miller Hotel.

Q. Well, the Miller Hotel, as we understand it, is on the corner of Thirteenth and Elizabeth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a block east would be up to Washington street. Where were you with reference to the Miller Hotel, as to being north or south of the Miller Hotel?—A. What do you say?

Q. Were you north or south of the Miller Hotel?—A. I guess I was about south of the Miller Hotel; I was south of the Miller Hotel.

Senator SCOTT. This spot here, Matthews, is supposed to be where the Miller Hotel was [indicating on map]. Now, over here is the barracks and the fort [indicating].

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. This is Elizabeth street, and that is Thirteenth street running the other way. Now, when you say east, which way do you mean from there [indicating]?—A. This way, east from where I was going at.

Q. Down towards the fort?—A. No, sir; the fort is south from where I was.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The fort is south from where you were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say you were about a square away from the Miller Hotel. I want to know whether you were a square from the fort, or away from the fort with reference to the Miller Hotel.

Senator SCOTT. Or were you down towards the river here? Which way were you from this [indicating]?

A. I was north of the fort.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There is the hotel.—A. That is the hotel.

Q. That is Thirteenth street [indicating].—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And here is Elizabeth street.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is Washington street; and we call that direction up towards Washington street east, and we call this direction, away from the fort, north.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And towards the fort is south?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I understood you to say that you were about a square away from the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to know whether you were north a square, which would be farther away from the fort, or were you south a square?—A. I was east a square, about a block, from the Miller Hotel.

Q. East of the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be, then, up towards Washington street, as I point here [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About where were you, then; on Washington street?—A. Yes, sir; on that street.

Q. Up here?—A. Yes, sir; I was in the middle of the block, just across [indicating].

Q. In the middle of the block where?—A. Just across on the next street.

Q. You mean up on Washington street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were up about there [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you met three men?—A. Yes, sir; three men.

Q. You said they were white men. How do you know they were white men? How close were you to them?—A. I brushed right by them.

Q. You brushed right by them? What did they have?—A. They had a gun—they had two guns.

Q. What?—A. They had two guns.

Q. They had two guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there one that didn't have any gun?—A. There was one that didn't have no gun.

Q. Did not have any gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do when you met them, or what did they do when they met you?—A. Didn't do anything; just passed each other.

Q. What were you doing?—A. Just walking around, looking at the town.

Q. Where did Mr. Grant live? Were you going towards his house?—A. No, sir; I was going away from his house.

Q. Had you been to his house?—A. No, sir; I hadn't been.

Q. You had not been? Were you going to his house then?—A. No, sir; not then. I was going out towards the rice mills. The rice mills is in that direction [indicating].

Q. The rice mills are in that direction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go then to Grant's house later?—A. Later on.

Q. Can you tell what time of night this was that you saw these men?—A. It must have been between 10, I guess—

Q. Between 10 and what?—A. Between 10 and 11 o'clock.

Q. Between 10 and 11 o'clock. Did you hear any firing that night?—A. Yes, sir; later on.

Q. How much later on?—A. Well, I guess it must have been about an hour or an hour and a quarter, or something like that, afterwards.

Q. Where were you when the firing commenced?—A. I had made it back around to Grant's house.

Q. What?—A. I had made it back around to Mr. Grant's house.

Q. You were at his house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you asleep or awake?—A. I was awake, sitting near the window.

Q. Talking?—A. Talking; yes, sir.

Q. Did you see where the firing was?—A. I couldn't see.

Q. Or anybody that did any firing?—A. No, sir; I couldn't see anything from where I was; only heard.

Q. Where did you stay that night?—A. I stayed in the caboose that night; I went back to the train.

Q. You stayed where?—A. In the caboose.

Q. How did you get to the caboose after this firing was over?—A. Well, when everything ceased, I went on back to the caboose with another fellow.

Q. You slept there? And then went on out of town on a train the next morning?—A. No, sir; I went into Mexico the next day.

Q. Where?—A. I went into Mexico, to Matamoros.

Q. How did you happen to go to Mexico the next day?—A. About 12 o'clock they held a meeting up in the post-office, and the committee came down, and they said they were going to run every negro out of town, and I thought that my best chance was across the river.

Q. Is that all you know about the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; that is all I know about it.

Q. You did not see anybody do any shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know who did do the shooting?—A. No, sir.

Q. All you know is that you saw three men, two of whom had guns, and one of whom did not have any gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think they were white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us how they were dressed, or did you notice that?—A. Well, I slightly looked at them, and they had on khaki pants—what I would call yellow pants, or something like that—and a dark coat.

Senator FORAKER. That is all; you can take the witness.

By Senator WARNER.

Q. Were there three or four men, you say?—A. Three men; that is all I seen—three men.

Q. And those men were dressed like soldiers?—A. They had on khaki pants and colored coats, that I saw.

Q. Colored coats?—A. Yes, sir; like this [witness indicating his own coat].

Q. Well, now—A. Like this. I suppose they were dark, you know. I say dark coats.

Q. Did they have belts on?—A. I could not see their waists. I could look at their legs.

Q. They had on leggings?—A. No, sir; they didn't have on leggings. They had on the pants, you know, and the coat.

Q. How far were they away when you first saw them?—A. How far were they away?

Q. That is what I asked.—A. Oh, I guess when I first discovered them they were about 40 feet from me, I guess; probably not so far.

Q. No. It may have been a little farther?—A. Yes, sir; it may have been.

Q. It might have been more than 40 feet or might have been less than 40 feet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which way were you going?—A. I was going eastwards.

Q. Which way were they going?—A. They were coming west.

Q. Coming right towards you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw them when they were coming?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they when you first saw them?—A. They were coming.

Q. I know they were coming, but where from?—A. Where from?

Q. Yes.—A. They were on the street, and meeting me; straight up the street.

Q. I know, but what street were they on?—A. I am not acquainted with the Brownsville streets, but they were on the same street I were on.

Q. Where did you leave that night to come to Brownsville?—A. Sir?

Q. Where were you when you started for Brownsville that night?—A. I was in Kingsville.

- Q. In Kingsville?—A. Yes, sir; I left Kingsville
- Q. Kingsville?—A. In the morning.
- Q. You left in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How far is Kingsville from Brownsville?—A. It is 118 miles.
- Q. You were sick and were on a vacation?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were you in a caboose?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Were you on a freight train?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How did you go on a freight train?—A. I rode on top and in a box car, together.
- Q. On top and in a box car?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Then you were beating your way?—A. No, sir; I was not beating my way.
- Q. Did you pay your fare?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What?—A. No, sir; I was working for the company.
- Q. I understand. Didn't they have a caboose on?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Why did you not ride in the caboose?—A. Because I wanted to be out with the men.
- Q. Therefore you rode in the box car?—A. A part of the time.
- Q. And part of the time on top of the cars?—A. Yes, sir; part of the time on top of the cars.
- Q. How much of the time in a box car?—A. Oh, I suppose long enough to run about 10 or 12 miles to a station. I would get to a station, and then I did not want to ride inside of a box car, and I would come out and ride on top.
- Q. When you would get to a station, you would go in a box car?—
- A. When I got to a station I came out and helped handle freight.
- Q. You came out and helped handle freight?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You would come off the top of the car?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who was conductor on that freight train?—A. I disremember who was conductor.
- Q. You were working for the road?—A. I disremember who was the conductor.
- Q. You were working for the road, I say?—A. I wasn't working for the road; I was working for the company. My job was night watchman at the shop.
- Q. Who was the brakeman?—A. I disremember who was the brakeman; they changes the men so—new men.
- Q. How many brakemen were there on that train?—A. Two.
- Q. Now, you left there in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What time did you get to Brownsville?—A. If we got there on time, they are due there about 7 o'clock, but they hardly ever are on time.
- Q. I know. But I don't know anything about it; what time did you get there that night?—A. Somewhere after 8 o'clock, I guess.
- Q. What makes you say it was after 8 o'clock?—A. It was after dark.
- Q. After dark?—A. Yes, sir; after dark.
- Q. Was it as late as 10 o'clock?—A. I don't know; I didn't have no watch.
- Q. Was it as late as 9 o'clock?—A. I don't know whether it was or no. I don't think it was.
- Q. Where did you go when you first got into Brownsville?—
- A. Where did I go?
- Q. That is what I said.—A. I commenced going about over town.

Q. I know, you commenced to run about over town.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But where did you go?—A. I went to a restaurant—a Mexican restaurant.

Q. Where is that Mexican restaurant?—A. It is northeast of the fort, too, I think.

Q. On what street?—A. I don't know on what street.

Q. What way from the Miller Hotel?—A. What way? It is southeast—east.

Q. How far?—A. It is about—I guess it is—five blocks away, I guess.

Q. Five blocks southeast?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the name of the man that keeps that restaurant?—A. I don't know what his name is.

Q. Had you ever been there before?—A. Yes, sir; I was there a year before that, on a Sunday.

Q. You got your supper there, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that restaurant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then which way did you go?—A. Which way did I go?

Q. That is what I asked.—A. I came back in town.

Q. I know, but how did you get back to town; what road?—A. What road?

Q. Yes; that is what I said.—A. I came back up another street, farther out.

Q. I know, but what street farther out? Farther south?—A. I don't know the names of the streets.

Q. But was it farther south or was it north or farther west?—A. It was just the street beyond.

Q. Beyond what?—A. North.

Q. Of the Mexican restaurant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then where did you go?—A. Where did I go?

Q. Yes.—A. I was down on the street where I told you, where I met these men.

Q. What time was it that you met these men?—A. I guess it was about half past 10.

Q. What direction were you going, east or west, north or south?—A. I was going east.

Q. Going east?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were already up there, away southeast, five blocks southeast, and you were still going east?—A. I had been east.

Q. You had been what?—A. I had been east, before I met these men, and then I was going back east.

Q. Going back east?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you going?—A. Going out towards the rice mill.

Q. Where is the rice mill?—A. In the eastern part of the town.

Q. What were you going to do at the rice mill, at 10 o'clock at night?—A. Walking around, looking.

Q. And just looking at the rice mill?—A. Walking around, looking.

Q. Was it dark that night?—A. Yes, sir; it was a dark night.

Q. On a dark night you were walking around looking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why should you go to look at the rice mill?—A. I was not looking at the rice mill in particular. We call it that when we go out.

looking at the rice mill, because it is out in the vicinity where the boys generally used when they went to town, where they generally gone when they would go to town.

Q. So you called that going to the rice mill?—A. I thought that while I was in town that I would go out and look at it, to see what was the values.

Q. What were the values?—A. See what was out there.

Q. You said, "See what the values were out there."—A. I wanted to see what was out there.

Q. That is where lewd women lived. was it?—A. I don't know whether they did or not.

Q. What values were you going to look at?—A. I was going out there to see what they were going out there so much for—to try to find out—but I did not try to find out.

Q. Find out who were going out there so much?—A. The other colored boys, when they would come to town.

Q. What did you find out?—A. I did not find out anything.

Q. Did you go to the rice mill?—A. No, sir; I did not get to the rice mill.

Q. How far did you go?—A. I guess I went within about nearly two blocks of it, or a block.

Q. Then you went to Grant's house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In going back to Grant's house do you know what street you went on?—A. Going north from the fort?

Q. North from the fort.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, when you were up there at the rice mill, you went north?—A. Yes, sir; I had to go north. I had to come back west.

Q. Which way was it, west or north?—A. West.

Q. You came back west?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is Grant's given name?—A. George, I think—George Grant.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what street he lived on?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He was braking.

Q. Braking on what?—A. On a freight train.

Q. Where is George now?—A. I don't know, sir; he got discharged, and I don't know where he is now.

Q. You went down to George's house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. What time did I get there?

Q. Yes; that is what I asked.—A. I guess I got there about—I don't know exactly what time I did get there, but about 10 o'clock, I guess, or something after.

Q. Do you think you got there as soon as 10?—A. I guess so; I didn't have no watch—didn't have no timepiece.

Q. Where was it you met these three men, two of them having guns and one without a gun—when you were going to the rice mill?—A. Yes, sir; going.

Q. When you were going to the rice mill you met those men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then that was pretty early in the evening?—A. Well, yes, sir; I guess it was.

Q. You must have been mi-taken if you said you met them between 10 and 11 o'clock?—A. Well, I suppose I met them about that time.

Q. What time?—A. About between 10 and 11 o'clock.

Q. Now, you think it was between 10 and 11 o'clock. Were you going to the rice mill between 10 and 11 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did it take you to get to the rice mill?—A. If I had gone down there I don't know how long it would have taken me, but I did not quite get there.

Q. You got within two blocks of it?—A. I suppose within two blocks of it.

Q. How long were you going out there?—A. Not very long.

Q. Where did you stay out there?—A. I didn't stay out there.

Q. Went out to look after values, but did not stay anywhere?—A. Stayed in the caboose.

Q. But when you were going out, you know—A. I was just walking; I kept along, walking.

Q. Just walking around?—A. Just walking around.

Q. Then you came back to Grant's house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard the shooting?—A. Yes, sir; I heard the shooting.

Q. Did you ask anybody what it was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Grant say a word to you?—A. Grant was not at home.

Q. Who was at home?—A. There was two ladies there.

Q. Who were they?—A. One was his wife and one was a visitor.

Q. Did you say anything to them about the shooting?—A. They merely said they wondered what is that, that was all.

Q. You did not say a word?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not answer them at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you stayed there until after the shooting was over?—A. Yes, sir; until after the shooting was over.

Q. Then a committee came down to Grant's house?—A. No, sir; no committee didn't come there.

Q. Where did you see that committee?—A. I said on the next day, the day after the shooting—

Q. But you went and slept in the caboose that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was the next day that the committee came after you?—A. No, sir; I said I was walking down by the post-office and the committee had been up overhead in the post-office and had held a meeting, and they came down and I reckon there was about 150 on the ground, probably more, or might not have been so many, and one white man says, "They are going to run all the niggers out of town. There shall not any stay here."

Q. Were there many negroes in Brownsville at that time?—A. I did not see anyone but me and the soldiers, and I thought it was my chance to get across the river.

Q. You thought you would get out before you were run out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went to Matamoros?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. All the balance of the day. About 12 o'clock I came across the river.

Q. Came back in the caboose that night?—A. No; I came back that night and stayed in the caboose, and left the next morning--left the next day.

Q. For Matamoros?—A. For King'sville.

Q. Did you go back in the caboose to King'sville?—A. I rode part way in the caboose, going back part of the way on the train.

Q. The same way as you came down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you live now?—A. Where do I live now?

Q. That is what I asked you.—A. I am living here now, but when I am at home I am stopping in Texas.

Q. Well, how long have you been here?—A. Well, I have been here about twenty-one or twenty-two days, I guess.

Q. Twenty-one or twenty-two days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where did you come here from?—A. Texas.

Q. Kingsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where from?—A. Brenham, Tex.

Q. How long have you been there?—A. I have been there, I guess, about a month.

Q. And what were you doing there?—A. I was there visiting my people.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Where did you come from to Brenham? When you went to Brenham where did you come from?—A. From Houston.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What kind of guns did those men have?—A. They looked to me like Winchesters.

Q. Looked like Winchesters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know if they might have been Springfields?—A. Oh, I don't know what—I am just telling you the way they looked to me, looked like Winchesters, looked to me like it was Winchesters.

Q. Could you tell whether they were Winchesters or Springfields?—A. No, sir; I could not tell that.

Q. What was there about them that looked like Winchesters to you?—A. Why, I said they looked like Winchesters; it is the customary thing for people in that country to hunt mostly with guns like that, and I thought they was Winchesters.

Q. How far were they away from you when you first saw them?—A. I guess it must have been about 40 feet, probably farther, or may not have been so far.

Q. You say they had these yellow trousers on, khaki trousers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And coats?—A. No, sir; they did not have on no yellow coats; had on coats something like——

Q. Did not have on yellow coats?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had blue shirts?—A. I did not see any blue shirts.

Q. Had they hats or caps?—A. Hats—had on hats.

Q. They did not say a word to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not say a word to them?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see anything more of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any soldiers out patrolling the town when you were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were walking around two or three hours, weren't you, up to the rice mill and around?—A. Perhaps I was; I didn't have no time with me.

Q. I know, but in your judgment you were walking around two or three——A. Yes, sir; I was walking around.

Q. Two or three hours, just seeing the town?—A. Yes, sir; looking on.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. It was all quiet in the town where you were; you did not see anybody out?—A. Yes, sir; everything was quiet where I was.

Q. Everything was very quiet about half past 10 or 11?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom did you tell this to before? Did you ever tell it before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never told it before?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are positive this is the first time you ever stated it—here to-day?—A. Oh, I was talking to a white fellow in Brenham about it.

Q. Who was he?—A. I don't know who he was.

Q. Don't know his name?—A. No, sir; merely talking about it.

Q. Did you tell anybody else about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. He is the only man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was a white man. What does he do there?—A. I don't know whether he lives there or whether he was traveling through there. I got in conversation with him that day.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say those men had hats on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of hats—stiff hats or slouch hats?—A. Looked something like what I wear, like a Lemley hat, a broadbrim. It was not a stiff hat, did not look to me like it.

Q. Soft hats; and what color?—A. Soft hats.

Q. And what color, black or brown or white?—A. Why, you know in the dark I could not see—well, I guess they were black hats.

Q. What kind of band did they have, cords and tassels, or just a common hatband?—A. I did not see any bands on them at all.

Q. How near were you to them at the nearest point?—A. I brushed right by them.

Q. How near would that be?—A. Close enough to touch one.

Q. So you could touch one?—A. So I could have touched one if I had wanted to.

Q. You did notice the color of the hats, or whether they had bands on?—A. Perhaps they might have been black or dark, or might have been brown, I could not tell.

Q. Did you say they were white men or colored men?—A. I said they were white men.

Q. By white men do you mean they were Mexicans or that they were American white men?—A. Well, you know Mexicans in that country are pretty white, but I just said they were white.

Q. I wanted your idea, whether they were Mexicans or Americans?—A. Well, I will tell you what I taken them to be—white; that is what I taken them to be, but of course they might have been Mexicans. I taken them to be white people.

(At 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m. the committee adjourned until Friday, June 14, 1907, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Friday, June 14, 1907.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Present: Senators Scott (in the chair), Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, and Taliaferro.

TESTIMONY OF BRIG. GEN. ANDREW S. BURT, U. S. ARMY, RETIRED.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Scott.)

By Senator Scott:

Q. Give the stenographer your full name, General, and your present position.—A. Andrew S. Burt; brigadier-general, U. S. Army, retired, Washington, D. C.

Q. What time did you retire?—A. In 1902; in May of that year.

Q. What regiment were you in command of when you were promoted to a brigadier-general?—A. The Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. How long had you been commander of it?—A. For about ten years, excepting the time I was brigadier-general of volunteers, during the Spanish-American war. That was a very short time, only a few months. I joined it in 1892, and was mustered out, or rather promoted to brigadier-general, retired, in 1902. It was about ten years.

Q. General, the question has come up before the committee as to the character of some of the men of the battalion which was dismissed from the service without honor last year. I will name over some of the men in that battalion, and as I name them I would like you to give me your opinion as to their reliability and their truth, whether they could be trusted, or their word taken. The first man I find here is this man Sanders—Mingo Sanders.—A. Sergt. Mingo Sanders?

Q. Yes.—A. I know him very well, sir. He served with me. There is no better first sergeant in the United States Army than Sergt. Mingo Sanders. His veracity, as he sees a thing, is beyond question.

Q. How about Sergeant McCurdy. Do you remember him?—A. McCurdy is a good man and a trustworthy man. I do not know him as well as I do Sanders.

Q. There are a number of these noncommissioned officers. I do not want to ask you about the privates. You remember James R. Reid?—A. I do not recall him distinctly, sir.

Q. Here is George Jackson, Sergt. George Jackson. Do you remember him?—A. Not definitely.

Q. General, all we want, at least all I want—I do not know what other members of the committee may want to make inquiry about—is to show the character of some of these men; as it has been testified before this committee by some very prominent gentlemen that they would not believe them on oath or otherwise. What about George W. McMurray?—A. McMurray?

Q. Yes.

Senator WARNER. I would merely suggest, Senator, that that may be a little leading, you know. I hardly think they have testified that broadly, that they would not believe them. I think the substance of it was that they would not believe them where interested, as in this case. However, go on. I will not raise any objection.

Senator TALIAFERRO. I did not understand that there was any testimony as broad as Senator Scott has put it in his question.

Senator SCOTT. Let us see what General Garlington said.

Senator WARNER. Let the question go.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Well, what is your answer, General, regarding McMurray?—

A. What were his initials and what was his rank?

Q. His name was George W. McMurray.—A. I can not place him.

Q. He was quartermaster-sergeant of Company C when he was mustered out without honor.—A. McMurray?

Q. Yes. I presume that he was not a noncommissioned officer until after you were out. I see by his record that he was not mustered in on his first term of service until 1898.—A. I do not recall him specifically, sir; but I can say in general terms that those men are all to be believed on their oath. I would believe them if I were sitting on a court-martial and they were even called in their own defense.

Q. You would say the same about Sergt. Israel Harris?—A. Well, I speak of that generally; yes, sir. Any man who was a noncommissioned officer in the Twenty-fifth Infantry not only has had that training and discipline that has been carried on for a long time, but all noncommissioned officers were carefully scrutinized and selected and under a rigid examination as to character. That was absolutely necessary in the Twenty-fifth Infantry in order to obtain the very best material as noncommissioned officers. The colored troops differ somewhat from the white troops in this, that it is necessary to have the most excellent material for noncommissioned officers. That might be said of white troops, but it is absolutely necessary with the colored troops, at least in the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and our class of noncommissioned officers there during my term were as fine as any in the United States Army, or any army in the world, I am prepared to say. They were a class of men that you could give an order to and turn your back and not have to observe them at all and you would know that that order would be carried out in the spirit and the letter. That means a great deal, whether applied to commissioned officers or noncommissioned officers—the spirit and the letter of the order.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. General, you have just now stated what I wanted to ask you. In selecting noncommissioned officers you were not only careful to get men who had good soldierly qualities, but men who were reliable as men, were you not?—A. As to character, certainly. Certainly, sir; I was.

Q. You have already given your opinion as to Mingo Sanders. Now, Walker McCurdy has testified before this committee. At the time when he was discharged without honor, he was quartermaster-sergeant of Company B. He has been in the service since July 5, 1890, continuously a member of Company B of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. He was discharged as a sergeant July 4, 1895, and then again discharged as a sergeant July 4, 1898, at the end of his second enlistment.—A. McCurdy?

Q. McCurdy.—A. Yes; now I recall. Yes, I would believe him absolutely. I recall an incident about McCurdy which occurred at Fort Missoula, that when he was charged with a grave offense, and he had come up under examination, on his own testimony he was relieved, because when I said, "sergeant McCurdy, is that true as you state to me," he said, "It is, Colonel," and he was relieved from the offense. I do not recall exactly what it was, but I remember his being before me at the time.

Q. And you had that confidence in him?—A. That confidence in him.

Q. Which your act would indicate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the result of long experience with him and observation of him as a soldier and noncommissioned officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. James R. Reid, of Company B, was a sergeant when he was discharged without honor, and he served, it seems, from May 17, 1898, when he enlisted as a private, down until November 16, 1906, when he was discharged. He was in Company B. Do you recall him?—A. I do not recall him; no, sir.

Q. George Jackson served as a sergeant, and he was the sergeant in charge of the quarters of Company B at the time of this shooting affray. Do you remember him?—A. I do not, specifically, sir.

Q. State whether or not these men took pride in the performance of their duties faithfully as soldiers.—A. You mean the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, or these special men?

Q. No; I am speaking of your noncommissioned officers, if you can recall.—A. If you will permit me to say this, so as to give weight to what I say, I have probably served with as large a number of regiments of white troops as any other officer on the active or retired list, at least a large number, during the war and on the frontier in Indian campaigns, and after that.

Q. Yes.—A. And I want to say that I have served with no troops that were better than those of the Twenty-fifth Infantry—better in anything, in truth and faithful service, marching, fighting, or anything else.

Q. Was there or not anything in their nature or in their character, as you can recall them, that would suggest to you the probability of their organizing a conspiracy to go out at midnight and shoot up a town, and murder men, women, and children indiscriminately, like a lot of assassins?—A. That is a rather broad question. I believe if they were abused and put upon, they might resent it, as any other men would; but to organize a conspiracy against the law, I do not think that they, as a rule, would do that. I want to say that it has been my observation that the colored soldier is a law-abiding man. I wonder if you can understand what I mean. I mean to say that he has a reverence for the law. The colored man as a soldier is one of the best, for the reason that he has been disciplined for generation after generation. And they take great pride in their officers. They are the only troops of modern days, or since the war, and the old soldier of the frontier, of the old days before the civil war, who still retain the custom of saying, "My officers." "My officers." That means a great deal. I mean to say they are obedient; trustworthy. Of course in all gatherings of a crowd of men there is a proportion of bad men. I do not mean to say that the Twenty-fifth Infantry were all angels with wings sprouting, but they were very near it. I mean to say they were a good class of men, as a rule.

Q. If such a thing should occur as that a number of the men in these companies in Brownsville should organize a conspiracy to go out and shoot up a town, and execute it, would you or not think that the rest of the members of the battalion would enter into a conspiracy of silence, to withhold all knowledge that they might have as to who did it, which would lead to the detection of those who were guilty?—A. From my knowledge of the colored man's character, it would be simply impossible for that not to leak out. The colored man is essentially a vain man, and if a number of those men had been in a conspiracy, some one man of that crowd, if he had been in it, would have wanted to tell, so as to aggrandize some credit to himself. They are naturally a vain race.

Q. So that you would not expect the members of the battalion who had nothing to do with the shooting to try to conceal the facts in regard to it, and prevent the detection of those who were guilty?—

A. No, sir. Sergt. Mingo Sanders of course came to see me at once, before he came to see the committee, when he arrived here, and I said to him in my office, "Now, Sanders, we are here alone; tell me all about it," and he looked up, and he said, "General, I will tell you all I know," and he said, "So far as I know, our men were not in it. I tried to find out. I tried to find out if they were in it, and I am satisfied, sir, that they were not in it. I tried all I knew how."

Q. Well, did he impress you at the time he made that statement to you as telling you the truth?—A. Oh, he was telling absolutely the truth as he saw it—as he knew it.

Q. Now, General, I would like to get an answer directly, if I can, to the question I put to you, whether or not you think if there were 10 to 15 or 20 members of this battalion engaged in a midnight raid of such a character as this was, if they did it, you would expect, from what you know of them, that the other members of the battalion—we will say 140 men—would try to withhold all knowledge that they might have that would lead to the detection of those men who did it?—A. It would be an impossibility, sir, I say, knowing as I do the colored man. That would be simply an impossibility.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Well, then, General, if 10 or 12 or 15 men of this regiment did this shooting up of the town, as I understand you, you say that the other 140 or 150 certainly knew nothing about it, or else the thing would become public?—A. It would, undoubtedly, sir. They knew nothing of it.

Q. The conspiracy would be only between 15 or 20?—A. Yes, absolutely. They could not have kept it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I want to call your attention, and see if you can recall him, to another witness who testified before us, George W. McMurray, quartermaster-sergeant of Company C at the time he was discharged. He is a man past middle life, as I recall him. He entered on his first enlistment July 18, 1898, and then he was mustered out as a corporal, and he served as a corporal during his second enlistment, and also during his third enlistment, and then he was mustered out as quartermaster-sergeant. He was a corporal while you were in command of the regiment. Do you recollect him or not?—A. I do not, sir; I do not place him.

Q. Do you remember Sergt. Jacob Frazier, of Company D?—A. Frazier? Is not Frazier the sharpshooter?

Q. He was first sergeant of Company D at the time he was discharged.

Senator SCOTT. He enlisted first August 10, 1892, and he reenlisted in 1897 and again in 1900 and again in 1903; but that would be after your service.

The WITNESS. What company?

Senator FORAKER. Company D.

The WITNESS. No; I do not recall him specifically, although I ought to know about him. I ought to, gentlemen, but I have forgotten.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. He seems to have been a duty sergeant during most of the time, or all of the time, probably.—A. Aye; I have an indistinct recollection of a sharpshooter, a great shot, by the name of Frazier; but it would be impossible for me to say positively, under oath.

Q. I will not go specifically over any of the others, but any of these men who were among the old noncommissioned officers, you would believe them under oath, even where they were interested?—A. I would believe them absolutely, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you know the sergeant-major of the regiment?—A. Sergeant-Major Morrow?

Q. Sergeant-Major Taliaferro.—A. Oh, I know Sergeant Taliaferro.

Q. You would believe him also?—A. Oh, undoubtedly. I do not know where he gets his name. He is a good breed, anyhow.

Q. It is a good name?—A. Yes, sir; a good name. May I tell an incident that occurred down at Chattanooga, at Chickamauga Park, in which Sergeant Taliaferro was associated?

Q. Yes; certainly.—A. This might bear on the law-abiding spirit of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. When the Twenty-fifth was ordered down to Chickamauga Park in 1898—and, by the way, it was the first regiment of all the troops, national or regular, ordered out—we got to Chickamauga Park, was near Chattanooga, and there was a railroad running down a short distance, carrying the men into Chattanooga. There my men ran against the jim-crow law. I suppose, Senator Taliaferro, you know what I mean by the jim-crow law.

Senator TALIAFERRO. We all understand that, General.

The WITNESS. I had always sources of information; I kept in touch with the men. I saw that there was a very strong feeling rising—I will not say a mutinous spirit—but a very disgruntled feeling, about this jim-crow law, and one day the sergeant-major came to me and said, "There is a committee of the noncommissioned officers, sir, want to speak to you," and he said, "Well, send them here," and they came to my tent and I stepped out, and up in front of them stepped Sergeant Taliaferro, a big, tall, husky-looking man, one of the finest noncommissioned officers of the regiment. He saluted, and he said, "Colonel, we are a committee sent to ask about this jim-crow law. We think it is unjust. We pay our money, we are respectable and clean and orderly, and the men feel very sore over it, being ordered off and herded like cattle, and want to know whether something can not be done about it and what you think." I paused a little, so as to give it an effect, and I said, "Sergeant Taliaferro, and you noncommissioned officers, do you recall the order I published to the regiment before we came down here, in which I said that here was an opportunity for you to prove to the country that you were as law-abiding citizens as any in the United States?" He said, "Yes, sir." "Well, I want to say that in the circumstances under which we are down here, whether that law is a just one or not, it is the law. It is the law, and I say to you, and through you to the regiment, that I expect them to obey the law." Old Taliaferro straightened himself up and said, "Colonel, we will obey the law, and see that the men obey the law." "And see that the men will obey the law." I give that as an instance of their discipline. I hope I have not trespassed, gentlemen.

Q. Oh, no; not at all. But there was a good deal of feeling in the regiment about it?—A. Oh, yes, sir; there was feeling.

Q. And, if I understood, you used the word "mutinous;" you said something about a mutinous feeling?—A. Well, no; I can not say that. Just a feeling of uneasiness; not a mutinous feeling. No; I never have seen a drop of mutiny in my regiment.

Q. I understood you to use that word, General.—A. I may have done so; but if I did, I withdraw it, sir.

Q. You say that the colored man is a vain man?—A. A what?

Q. A vain man.—A. I think he is, sir. I know he is. That is from my observations in my regiment and other places.

Q. And if he had been engaged in any matter of this kind, I think you said his vanity would induce him to boast of it?—A. Yes. He would leak, sure. Some one of those men would have leaked.

Q. Were you with the command at Fort Niobrara?—A. I was not; no, sir.

Q. At Fort Meade? That is near Sturgis?—A. At Fort Meade?

Q. Yes.—A. I never was at Fort Meade, sir.

Q. You never were there with the command?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of history, of a midnight attack by members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry on the town of Sturgis, near Fort Meade?—A. I recall something of the kind.

Q. Yes; in which it was alleged that from ten to twenty men had gone out, and where a man was murdered, from my remembrance of it. You recollect it?—A. Yes; I recollect there was something of that kind, sir. I do not know it specifically.

Q. You also recall, as a matter of history, do you not, that years afterwards, possibly in 1904, while the command was stationed at Fort Niobrara, there was a midnight raid, also?—A. I do not recall that, sir. No, sir; I do not remember. I was not there, and I do not recall it.

Q. But as connected with your regiment?—A. Yes, sir; it was. That is so, you may say.

Q. Was there any trouble the regiment had, that you know of, in Texas before their going to Brownsville?—A. Well, not trouble; but you had Captain O'Neil before you here, I believe, and he must have told you that there was a feeling against his command when it came to Laredo, and that it was afterwards amicably arranged, and at a public banquet, given there in honor of himself, one of the speakers said, "These are the best troops we ever had stationed here," and they applauded it. There was a feeling at first, but they conquered it.

Q. Do you know anything of the trouble of the command at Key West, Fla.?—A. I do not. I do not know the details of it.

Q. You heard of it?—A. I heard there was some trouble; yes, sir.

Q. Was that before or after you were in command?—A. That was in 1898; but at that time, as I recall it, I had been made brigadier-general of volunteers, and was commanding a brigade, away from the regiment.

Q. So that you were not there?—A. I do not recollect that I was, sir. I do not know of it specifically.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Do you remember any of the particulars of the trouble at Key West, Fla.?—A. I do not; no, Mr. Senator. I just recall the fact that there was some trouble with a policeman.

Q. Do you recall that one of the men was arrested by a policeman in Key West, and confined in the jail, and that a detachment of forty or fifty armed men went and released him?—A. I do not know that absolutely, but have just a recollection of it, Senator, that there was something of that kind.

Q. You recall there was something of the kind?—A. Yes, sir; something of the kind.

Senator FORAKER. Has any testimony been offered before this committee about that?

Senator TALIAFERRO. None whatever. I am bringing it out now, Senator.

Senator FORAKER. That is a new subject. If you want to go into it, I will have a report on it and go into it. I do not know about it.

Senator TALIAFERRO. I was just asking him if he knew of it. He was giving the regiment a fine reputation, and the trouble at these other places had been spoken of, and I knew of this, and I thought I would ask him about it. I am willing to withdraw the question.

Senator FORAKER. I have no objection to its being gone into. I do not know whether any of these companies had anything to do with it.

Senator TALIAFERRO. I will be frank to say that no one of these companies that I know of which were at Brownsville was connected with the matter; but those concerned were companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment.

The WITNESS. Mr. Senator, may I say to you that you could go over the history of any regiment in the United States service, from the fifties up, and find that disturbances have occurred between the people of the towns and the posts. There have been disturbances. That necessarily follows.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Were you at Fort Bliss, Tex., with your regiment, General?—A. I never served in Texas, sir.

Q. I find here among the messages of the President, in Senate Document 155, at page 352, a report signed by R. H. R. Loughborough, captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry. Do you remember him? This is addressed to the adjutant-general, department of Texas, San Antonio, Tex., and reads as follows:

FORT BLISS, TEX., February 19, 1900.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, Tex.

SIR: I have the honor to report that some time during the night of 16th to 17th instant a number of men of Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, took rifles from the arms racks and went to the city jail of El Paso, Tex., where two soldiers were held for trial by the city authorities on charge of drunk and disorderly, fired into the city jail, killing one policeman on duty there. Corpl. James W. Hull, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was killed. The non-commissioned officer in charge of barracks permitted the keys of the arms racks to get out of his possession. It is believed now that he was one of the party.

As soon as I learned of the outrage (7 o'clock the 17th), the whereabouts of every man was ascertained, the arms and all ammunition were secured and placed under lock and key, and every precaution taken to prevent any soldier leaving the limits of the post.

It is needless to say that I am doing everything in my power to find the guilty parties. Believe I have the leader.

The civil authorities, both city and county, have been very courteous and considerate, and have accepted my assurances that I will do all in my power to bring the guilty parties to justice. I will report by wire whenever necessary.

Very respectfully,

R. H. R. LOUGHBOROUGH.

Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding.

Q. Do you remember him?—A. Loughborough?

Q. A captain of the Twenty-fifth. This is in a report signed by Charles McKibben, colonel Twelfth Infantry, commanding. This was in February, 1900. You were not there with the command at that time?—A. No, sir; no. I was in the Philippines.

Q. You have noted these instances, have you not, cited in this document, No. 155, reported in this case, where the disturbances occurred of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir; casually.

Q. Would there be any difference as to the discipline of the different companies of the regiment?—A. Some companies were better than others?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, yes; that necessarily follows. That is so in all regiments.

Q. Well, Company A was a good company, was it not?—A. Who was the captain of that company? Not Loughborough. Loughborough was of Company B in my time.

Q. It does not give the name of the captain of Company A.—A. I had Companies B, G, H, and F with me, at Fort Missoula, specially, most of the time. Of course I inspected the other companies. I do not recollect about A Company especially, excepting as is ordinarily the practice with the colonel; they identify the company with the captain of it.

Q. Was there any company in that regiment that you would have picked out as an insubordinate company, and capable of going out and shooting up a town?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or as capable of committing such an offense as I have mentioned here?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you had known anything of that kind and character, you would say it was as liable to occur with one company of the regiment as with another company?—A. No, sir; there might be a difference. For instance, H Company, I recall—Captain Hodges's company—would be a special character of men, and an especially good company. The company reflects the character of its captain. There is no department of the service where an officer marks his characteristics more definitely than when he is commanding a company—captain of a company.

Q. And that is peculiarly true of a colored company, is it not?—

A. I do not know that, sir. That is a rule that would be applied to all companies.

Q. Pearl M. Shaffer seems to be given as captain.—A. S-h-a-f-f-e-r?

Q. It is S-h-a-f-f-e-r.—A. I do not recall him at all, sir. I do not know his name.

Senator LODGE. He was captain in 1900.

Senator WARNER. I see that he was appointed in April, 1904, General. That was my mistake.

The WITNESS. That was after my time.

Senator WARNER. Certainly. I did not notice that.

The WITNESS. You know that now captains are promoted into different regiments, and they are all mixed up.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The colored soldier is apt to resent an implied insult?—A. The colored soldier is apt what?

Q. To resent an implied insult to them, an imposition on them, the same as anyone else?—A. Well, yes; but I think they are the most patient people I know of on God's green footstool, to suffer and not resent it. Pardon my expression, sir. That does not answer your question.

Senator WARNER. That is all right, General. I think those are all the questions I want to ask.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. General, you have been asked about a number of shooting affrays that men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry are shown by the record to have participated in. I will ask you whether or not you are familiar with what the record discloses as to whether or not the guilty parties were, in all those cases, easily ascertained and brought to punishment? Are you familiar with that fact or not?—A. I am not familiar with it, sir; but I imagine, as the Senator read there, Loughborough discovered the men immediately. He thought he had the guilty ones.

Senator WARNER. He thought he had the leader, I believe he said.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. I did not go into that.

Senator FORAKER. No.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Before you go off the stand I want to ask you what character Major Penrose has as an officer of the Army?—A. He has an excellent character, sir, so far as I know. I never served with him.

Q. What about Captain Macklin? Did you know him?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did you know Captain Lyon?—A. Very well, and a better officer is not in the service—a more truthful man, more honorable and straightforward. He served with me in the Philippines and also at Fort Missoula. A man, every inch of him, and as fine an officer as is in the Army.

Q. Did Lieutenant Lawrason come into the Army after you left the regiment or before?—A. I do not know him, sir. Macklin I do not know.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Now, General, you were asked some questions in regard to your familiarity with the affair at Sturgis, near Fort Meade, with which this regiment was connected. Are you familiar with any of the conditions there or the report of General Terry, who commanded there?—

A. I am not, sir. I do not know one of the details.

Q. I will ask to have printed in connection with the testimony of this witness at this point the report of General Terry upon the affray at Sturgis, near Fort Meade, which is found at page 328 of part No. 1 of Senate Document 155, and also the comments of the Secretary of War, as found at page 331 of the same volume.

(The documents referred to are printed here in the record, as follows:)

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,
Fort Snelling, Minn., November 10, 1885.

Respectfully returned to the Adjutant-General of the Army, through the headquarters of the Division of the Missouri.

The inclosed letter is, in the main, a just and temperate account of the occurrences at Sturgis City and Fort Meade, of which it speaks. I should take exception to but one of the statements which Mr. Caulfield makes. He states, as an ascertained fact, that "Doctor Lynch" was assassinated by a colored soldier. Doubtless he is fully convinced of the truth of this statement; but I submit that the inclosed copy of a report from Colonel Sturgis of the testimony given before the coroner's jury impaneled to determine the cause of Doctor Lynch's death shows that while a case of grave suspicion was made out against the soldier Hallon, the evidence was by no means conclusive. Of course, since the brutal murder of Hallon by the mob of Sturgis City, it has been impracticable to determine the question of his guilt or innocence. I inclose a copy of the proceedings of a board of officers convened by order of Colonel Sturgis to inquire into the facts connected with the killing of Bell. The conclusions of the board confirm the statements of Mr. Caulfield.

It is not probable that all the persons who were concerned in the murder of Bell will be detected and punished. Four men have been arrested, and if the evidence against them be sufficient to establish their guilt they will, without doubt, be confined and tried. In their cases the machinery of the law will act speedily.

I do not recommend the removal of the colored troops from Fort Meade. It is not alleged that they, as a body, have committed any crime or have been guilty of any disorder. Certain men belonging to one of the companies are accused of a most serious crime, but there is nothing to connect with it the other men of their company or any of the men of the other companies. There is no evidence to show that the peace of Sturgis City, in the future, is threatened by any of them. I do not believe that it is seriously threatened by them.

I have had much experience with colored troops, and I have always found them as well behaved and as amenable to discipline as any white troops that we have. The characteristic submissiveness of their race is manifested in the readiness with which they yield to military control.

They are much more temperate than our white troops, and crime and disorders resulting from intoxication are comparatively rare among them.

The situation at Fort Meade is an unfortunate one. It is very undesirable that a military post and a frontier town should stand in such close proximity to each other as Sturgis City and Fort Meade do; unfortunate possibly for the town, unquestionably unfortunate for the post. But the post was established before the town was founded and I do not think that there would have been any town but for the post. Still the evils which result from this juxtaposition are not absolutely unavoidable.

The military authorities at the post will, I am sure, do their part to prevent the commission of crime, and if the civil authorities of the town will do theirs as well there will be no occasion whatever for apprehension.

I take it for granted that in the Territory of Dakota the keeping of houses of ill fame is prohibited by law, but notwithstanding the law there are in the town two brothels which would appear to have been established for the express purpose of catering to the taste and pandering to the passions of the colored troops, for they are "stocked" with colored prostitutes—negresses and mulattoes.

They are, I am assured, places of the vilest character, and it was at one of them that the affray of September 19 occurred. Had no such place existed it is most improbable that any affray would have occurred, and if the people of Sturgis City suffer such places to exist they must, I submit, expect the natural result of their existence—frequent broils, and from time to time the commission of the most serious crimes. And I submit further that until the people of the town shall have suppressed these dens, which equally debauch the troops of the post and threaten their own safety, they will not be in a position to ask the Government to change its garrison.

FORT MEADE, DAK. T., October 28, 1885.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPT. DAKOTA,
Fort Snelling, Minn.:

Doctor Lynch was killed by shooting about 11 p. m. August 22, whilst reading in his office, the assassin firing through closed office door. Supposed cause, jealousy of colored woman.

Evidence before coroner's jury circumstantial; that of Private Bluford, A Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry, the most damaging given against Corporal Hallon, was to effect that he met Hallon at 10.30 p. m. at Abe Hill's saloon, Sturgis City; Hallon asked witness to drink and went into alley and drank from bottle; met Hallon next in dance hall (Abe Hill's); took witness into alley and persuaded him to change blouses. After blouses were changed Hallon told witness to meet him at point on outskirts of town, toward Meade.

Separated in alley ten minutes thereafter to meet at point designated. Hallon stoned his dog to make him follow witness. Witness met Private Martines, A, Seventh Cavalry, on his way to place of meeting, and tried to borrow pistol from him, saying he feared trouble with Hallon, whose conduct was suspicious. After being at place fixed for meeting ten minutes, heard shot in town and walked toward town.

Met Corporal Raymond, Seventh Cavalry. Then waited a moment and heard voice calling him. Recognized Hallon's voice. This at place of meeting, about five minutes after shot was fired. Upon meeting changed blouses, Hallon putting on his own and refused to say what trouble was. Witness noticed six-shooter at this time in Hallon's pocket. Went back to town with Hallon. On way Hallon pulled out pistol and seemed to be loading it, saying he feared trouble. On reaching town found Lynch had been killed. While in jail with Hallon, latter told him what to swear to, and to stick to his story, which was not that given to jury. Private Martines, A Troop, and Corporal Raymond, C Troop, corroborated Bluford in that they had met him at place fixed for his meeting Corporal Hallon, and at time described by Bluford.

That witness was wearing a noncommissioned officer's blouse, and had conversation with Martines about pistol. Private Rann, A Company, testified to loaning of pistol identified as one carried by Hallon night of 22d; loaned it night of 21st and 22d, Hallon returning it to him on morning of 23d, after murder. All chambers loaded when loaned and empty when returned. Carried same size and weight of bullet as bullet which killed Lynch.

Corporal Hallon was arrested on 23d August, on warrant duly served, and taken from jail in Sturgis City on night of 25th August and hanged.

Jury found that Lynch came to his death at hand of Hallon. This verdict and evidence all information known to be in possession of mob which hanged Hallon.

STURGIS, Commanding.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington, December 22, 1885.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 27th of September last, commenting upon the outrages committed at the town of Sturgis, Dak. Ter., by colored soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Fort Meade, and suggesting the removal of the colored troops to some other post and the substitution of white soldiers in their place, I have the honor to invite attention to the inclosed copy of the report of Gen. A. H. Terry, commanding the Department of Dakota, to whom the matter was referred, and to say that both the Department and the Lieutenant-General of the Army concur in the views as expressed therein by General Terry.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. B. G. CAULFIELD,
Deadwood, Dak. Ter.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Are you familiar enough with the circumstances to know that there was no difficulty in securing the testimony of the comrades of the accused man of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, in that case, which was a case of murder?—A. I do not recall specifically, sir, but just indistinctly, that they investigated the case and found out all about it; but I think, if I remember rightly, that they punished some of the guilty men. I just have an indistinct recollection of it; but I do not want to testify here, under oath, positively, about anything that I do not know.

Q. I want to read to you an extract from the report of Colonel Sturgis:

Corporal Hallon was arrested on 23d August, on warrant duly served, and taken from jail in Sturgis City on night of 25th August and hanged.

Jury found that Lynch came to his death at hand of Hallon. This verdict and evidence all information known to be in possession of mob which hanged Hallon.

This was a mob of the citizens of Dakota, who took one of these colored men from jail, who was charged with a crime, and hung him. Does that refresh your recollection in regard to the transaction at all?—A. No, sir; it does not.

Senator BULKELEY. Well, no matter.

Senator FORAKER. It happened twenty-five years ago.

Senator BULKELEY. Yes. I thought possibly the fact that in the case of a man charged with a crime there was no difficulty in ascertaining on the evidence of his comrades of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who was the guilty party might be relevant. And he was turned over to the civil authorities, and was taken from the jail by a mob of white men and hanged.

Senator FORAKER. I want to put in evidence an extract from the official report of the commanding officer at Fort Bliss, Tex., on the disturbance at El Paso, Tex. This is the report of Chambers McKibben, colonel Twelfth Infantry, commanding. This is the report which Senator Warner called attention to, and I want to offer the entire report.

Senator WARNER. I simply called attention to the extract that I read.

Senator FORAKER. I would like to have the whole of Colonel McKibben's report inserted.

Senator WARNER. I did not put it in because I did not want to encumber the record.

Senator FORAKER. I want to put it in here for reference.

Senator WARNER. Put it all in.

(The report referred to is here inserted in the record in full, as follows:)

Affair at El Paso, Tex., February 16-17, 1900.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,

San Antonio, February 21, 1900.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to furnish herewith, for the information of the Department, the following report received from the commanding officer, Fort Bliss, Tex., on the recent disturbance at El Paso, Tex.

FORT BLISS, TEX., February 19, 1900.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, Tex.

SIR: I have the honor to report that some time during the night of 16th to 17th instant a number of men of Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, took rifles from the arms racks and went to the city jail of El Paso, Tex., where two soldiers were held for trial by the city authorities on charge of drunk and disorderly, fired into the city jail, killing one policeman on duty there. Corp. James W. Hull, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was killed. The noncommissioned officer in charge of barracks permitted the keys of the arms racks to get out of his possession. It is believed now that he was one of the party.

As soon as I learned of the outrage (7 o'clock the 17th) the whereabouts of every man was ascertained, the arms and all ammunition were secured and placed under lock and key, and every precaution taken to prevent any soldier leaving the limits of the post.

It is needless to say that I am doing everything in my power to find the guilty parties. Believe I have the leader.

The civil authorities, both city and county, have been very courteous and considerate, and have accepted my assurances that I will do all in my power to bring the guilty parties to justice. I will report by wire whenever necessary.

Very respectfully,

H. H. R. LOUGHBOROUGH,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding.

Very respectfully,

CHAMBERS MCKIBBEN,
Colonel Twelfth Infantry, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,

San Antonio, March 1, 1900.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I forward herewith report of the investigation of the recent troubles at El Paso, Tex., made by Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts, acting adjutant-general of the department, to which attention is respectfully invited.

There seems to have been no indications from which any disorder of the kind could have been anticipated and certainly no excuse for the assault on the jail which resulted so unfortunately, and it is also probable that the parties connected with it had no intention of adding murder to the crime of assault.

The incident, however, shows that at all posts in this department garrisoned by single companies of colored soldiers similar disturbances are liable to occur without warning, due to fancied wrongs and the effort to take matters into their own hands. In the present instance there can be no possible excuse offered, and it can not even be suggested that the arrest of Corporal Dyson was not warranted.

The incident also emphasizes the need for a full complement of officers at all one (1) company posts. One officer can not alone properly and efficiently administer the affairs at these posts and at the same time pay the attention to the instruction and discipline of their companies, consisting so largely of recruits, with noncommissioned officers of comparatively short service and insufficient experience, which is absolutely necessary.

Captain Loughborough is an officer of great experience, and one of the most conscientious and efficient officers in the Army, but the nature and scope of his duties prevent his being so closely in touch with his men as is essential to best results with this class of troops, which, unquestionably, require stricter discipline and more constant oversight than white troops. This is largely due to the fact that since the increase in size of the companies recruits have been largely drawn from sections where colored men have less independence of character and freedom from control, and less care has been taken in their selection.

There is unquestionably a very strong prejudice throughout all the old slave States against colored troops, and this is quite a separate feeling from the ordinary race prejudice, which is perhaps less at El Paso than at other border towns in this department. A colored man in uniform represents authority, and this idea suggests superiority, which is bitterly resented. It is not because the colored soldier is disorderly—for, as the rule, they behave better than white soldiers, and, even when drunk, are less troublesome to manage—but because they are soldiers.

Regiments of colored troops have been organized in accordance with acts of Congress and are part of the military establishment, and it can not be expected that the Government of the United States shall accept dictation in deciding upon the use to be made of them or their stations.

In this connection I desire to call attention to the statement in Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts's report with reference to the published article in an El Paso newspaper giving an alleged interview with Hon. Moses Dillon, United States collector of customs. This is not the only occasion which has come to my knowledge in which expressions of this kind have been indulged in by Federal officials. While it is impossible to protect colored soldiers from insults from the hoodlum class or from unjust discrimination in border towns, where the right of drunken cowboys and other white men to "shoot up the town" upon occasions is tacitly recognized, it is submitted that the Government is entitled to expect that the utterances of Federal officials should tend to allay rather than to intensify local excitement and prejudice, and especially when they are, presumably, politically in sympathy with the present Administration.

It is to be regretted that it is impossible to fix responsibility more definitely upon the participants, but it is believed that the investigation which is being conducted will eventually disclose all the guilty parties.

The precautions taken by Captain Loughborough to prevent further disturbance seem to be all that are possible.

Very respectfully,

CHAMBERS MCKIBBIN,
Colonel Twelfth Infantry, Commanding.

Senator FORAKER. I will read two extracts from these reports, at pages 353 and 356:

There is unquestionably a very strong prejudice throughout all the old slave States against colored troops, and this is quite a separate feeling from the ordinary race prejudice, which is perhaps less at El Paso than at other border towns in this department. A colored man in uniform represents authority, and this idea suggests superiority, which is bitterly resented. It is not because the colored soldier is disorderly—for, as a rule, they behave better than white soldiers, and, even when drunk, are less troublesome to manage—but because they are soldiers.

I will read also from the official report of Lieut. Col. C. S. Roberts, at page 356, as follows:

It appears proper in this report to call attention to the existence at El Paso, as well as in all border towns in the State, of a feeling of hostility, or prejudice, to say the least, against colored men in uniform. I doubt if this obtains, at least in El Paso, to the same extent as at Laredo and Rio Grande City, as a race prejudice, as negroes are largely employed as servants or laborers; but against colored men as soldiers the feeling is perhaps even stronger.

That is all.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. General, you state, I believe, that you would believe the men of the Twenty-fifth Regiment under oath in their own defense?—A. I would. I do, sir.

Q. It seems to me that that is a very broad statement.—A. I meant by that to say that that is the general character of a man of the Twenty-fifth Infantry—I would believe him—but, of course, where I knew a man to be worthless I would not believe him.

Q. You do not mean, I fancy, that if one or more men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were charged with crime, and reputable eye-witnesses should testify as to their guilt, you would take the word of the accused in preference to the testimony of disinterested people as to the occurrence?—A. I would have to know the people who were disinterested—what they were—as to their character.

Q. I said reputable people—reputable witnesses.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. People of standing and reputation for honesty and for truthfulness?—A. Well, let me tell you, Mr. Senator, I can not answer that specifically. If you would allow me to say, if they said they could distinguish between a white man and a colored man in uniform, looking out of a window into a street in a dark night, I would say they did not know what they were saying. I would believe the soldier under those circumstances preferably to the citizen.

Q. A day or two ago a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry by the name of James W. Newton was testifying before this committee, and Senator Foraker propounded the following question to him (page 2974):

Q. Now, Mr. Newton, do you know Sergeant-Major Taliaferro, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He testified before this committee. At page 1552 the following report of his testimony is found:

"Q. You heard of this striking of Newton, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you pay any attention to that?—A. No, sir; I did not.

"Q. Why not?—A. Because Newton was a man who drank to excess, and I thought he was liable to get into trouble most any place, at any time, and I merely thought that he had been downtown drinking and got into a fight down there and got beat up.

"Q. That was his reputation, was it?—A. Yes, sir; that was my opinion of it."

A. Is this what Sergeant Taliaferro testified?

Q. I read from the record. This is what Sergeant Taliaferro said.—A. Said about Newton?

Q. About Newton. Senator Foraker, going on, said:

Now, in view of that testimony, I will ask you to state, Mr. Newton, whether or not you were in the habit of drinking when you were a member of this regiment, and whether you drank to excess while you were a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes; sir; I drank, but not to an excess, sir.

Now, I want you to tell me which of those men of that regiment you would believe.—A. Oh, Sergeant Taliaferro, of course, I would believe.

Q. There is a case where you do not believe a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry in his own defense?—A. No, I would not, if the noncommissioned officers should give him a bad report, and I knew of his being under discipline and a drinking man. I do not think a drunkard is reliable in what he says. I do not think he ever knows when he tells the truth. I would believe Sergeant Taliaferro rather than Newton.

Q. So that you would not believe a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry in his own defense?—A. Simply because he was a member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?

Q. Yes.—A. Oh, no; I do not mean that.

Q. And you would not believe his statement in his own defense, against the testimony of a great many eyewitnesses to his guilt, who were reputable people?—A. Well, it would depend upon my knowledge of the man.

Q. On your knowledge of the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Of the soldier under my command, that I had had under my observation. I understand your question as leading up to cross-questioning me on my statement about believing the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. I spoke then, if I may explain it, in a general sense. There are communities which bear a respectable reputation, and members of that community you believe, that there are individuals you find that are not to be believed. That is the idea I try to convey.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You mean you would apply the same tests to these colored soldiers that you would to a white man?—A. I would what?

Q. You would apply the same tests in determining whether you would believe them that you would apply to a white man?—A. Certainly.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. And you mean that you would go no further in believing these men than you would believe white men under similar circumstances?—A. Oh, no; not if they had the same reputation.

TESTIMONY OF LIEUT. HARRY G. LECKIE, U. S. ARMY—Recalled.

Lieut. HARRY G. LECKIE, U. S. Army, a witness previously sworn, being recalled, testified as follows:

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Lieutenant, you have been sworn and still regard yourself as being under oath?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Lieutenant, when you testified before this committee, you testified about finding a bullet, or boring a bullet out, I believe, from a post in front of Crixell's saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And stated that you did not have with you at the time the lead shavings that you secured. Will you state to the committee whether you have since found them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whether you have them with you?—A. Yes, sir; I have them with me.

Q. Will you state where you found the same?—A. When the regiment was ordered to the Philippines, I packed up all my property, except my hunting chest. In that hunting chest I had a corkscrew, and such things as that, and one day I happened to want this corkscrew that I had taken down on this hunting trip at Brown, and in opening the corkscrew the lead of the bullet dropped out where I had put it in there and forgotten it.

Q. In what way did you put it up? Was it wrapped up or otherwise?—A. It was in a cigarette paper—in a paper like we use in making cigarettes.

Q. Have you got it with you now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please exhibit the same?

(Witness produced some particles of lead, contained in a paper.)

Q. I understand you bored this out of the post into which it had entered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With a brace and bit furnished you by Mr. Crixell, of Crixell's saloon?—A. With a brace and bit furnished me by T. Crixell.

Q. Joseph Crixell has testified, since you were on the stand, that you said his brother told him, as he remembered, that there were some pieces of a metal jacket also bored out with that lead. Will you state whether that is true?—A. There was no metal jacket with it, sir. Everything cut out of the post is right in that paper, excepting—

Q. Was there anything—

Senator TALIAFERRO. He did not finish his answer.

A. With the exception of the lead that dropped in the shavings. We got all the shavings and separated as much lead as we could, but there was no metal jacket in it. That was an entire lead bullet.

Q. Was there any metal jacket connected with the bullet—I mean was your boring of such a character that it would have disclosed a metal jacket, if there had been one there?—A. Yes, sir; I bored the hole about a half again larger than the bullet hole itself, clear through the post, and cut everything out.

Q. Cut everything out?—A. Cut everything out; yes, sir.

Q. And then sorted out what was clean and fresh and brought it here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was in the presence of a number of witnesses, was it?—A. That was in the presence of Mr. Matlock and Mr. T. Crixell, and I do not know the names of any other parties, but there were several others present.

Q. Did anybody at that time who was present and saw it question but that it was a lead bullet?—A. No, sir; Mr. T. Crixell acknowledged to me at the time that there was no steel jacket connected with the bullet.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Do you mean he acknowledged it or he stated it?—A. He stated to me—the way the thing came up, I was in the saloon and they were talking about the shooting of the 13th of August, and some one turned to me and he said, "I will take you out and show you one of the bullet holes and also the bullet is in there. It has never been taken out." So he took me out and showed me this place, and I told him, "Why, that is not a .30-caliber rifle. The hole is too large." So there was some argument about it, and I tried to cut it out with a pocketknife and could not do it, and then he went and got a brace and bit and we bored it out, and I showed it to him there and he stated right there and then that there was no steel jacket connected with the bullet.

Q. Is there any doubt about this being the same identical lead that you bored out of that hole in question?—A. No doubt at all, sir. It has never been in anyone's hands but my own since that time. I have had control of it.

Q. I will ask you whether you have a Springfield cartridge? I had one the other day that I had sawed the nose off—A. No, sir; I do not believe I have.

Q. It seemed to me that I showed it to you. Have you got that?—A. No, sir; I have not got it. Here is a bullet that I took out of a Springfield.

Q. I requested you, did I not, to take out the filling of a Springfield bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did that, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got it there?—A. Yes, sir [producing a specimen].

Q. Is this the lead of the Springfield bullet?—A. That is the lead, sir, and there is the jacket.

Q. Since I asked you to do that, General Crozier has testified and has given us the weight of the jacket and the weight also of the lead. I will ask you whether or not the lead that you have taken out—that is, the filling of the Springfield bullet—is the same as this lead which you got out of that post?—A. No, sir; it is a great deal harder.

Q. The Springfield lead is?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would an analysis of that by a chemist develop that fact?—A. Yes, sir; it should do it.

Senator FORAKER. I ask that the lead produced by Lieutenant Leckie, and testified by him as having been taken from that post, may be analyzed and a report made by some metallurgist upon whom we can agree. I do not know to whom to apply. Does any member of the committee suggest anyone?

Senator WARNER. Let us get through with the witness first.

Senator FORAKER. I want to know that as preliminary to something else. [To the witness.] What would be the effect of dropping that lead into acid? Are there any dissolving acids?

A. Yes, sir; if it was all lead, it would dissolve.

Q. Have you ever had any experience as a metallurgist in dissolving ores or minerals?—A. I have—lead and zinc, sir.

Q. Or separating?—A. I have in lead and zinc ores, sir.

Q. Have you had enough to be able to tell us whether or not this lead that you have thus taken out could be dissolved and separated from any other composition?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. What acid would do that?—A. I can not call the name of the acid right now, Senator.

Q. But you could get an acid, could you?—A. I have used it lots of times, sir.

Q. And treat this lead in the presence of the committee, if we do not agree upon some metallurgist to make the analysis?—A. Yes, sir;

I think it would be better, though, for you to have some expert to do that.

Q. You do not profess to be an expert?—A. No, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Have you tried any of that acid on any of this lead?—A. I have dropped a piece of that in acid—a shaving of it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Dropped what?—A. Dropped a piece of the shaving in there.

Q. What was the result?—A. I found it to be about one part tin to about twenty or twenty-two parts lead.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Was that out of the lead you extracted from the post?—A. I used three pieces—three small pieces—and some of it dropped in cutting it out, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Some question has been asked here as to what authority you had for going to Brownsville to make the investigations, about which you testified when you were last on the stand.—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. In response to that I offer the following in connection with the lieutenant's testimony, after he has identified it. [To the witness.] Look at the order I hand you and state whether or not that is the order referred to, under which you went to Brownsville? Read the letter first and then you will see.

Senator LODGE. I suggest that it ought to be read aloud.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Read the letter in full, Lieutenant.—A. (Reading:)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 7, 1907.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your telegraphic request of this afternoon for a copy of the order sending Lieut. H. G. Leckie from Fort Sam Houston to Brownsville, in March, 1907, for the purpose of investigating the affray of August 13, 1906, at Brownsville, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of Special Orders, No. 65, dated Headquarters Department of Texas, March 19, 1907.

Paragraph 1 of that order is the one to which your telegram relates.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

Q. Now read the order.—A. (Reading:)

SPECIAL ORDERS, }
No. 65. }

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, Tex., March 19, 1907.

1. The journey performed by Second Lieut. Harry G. Leckie, Twenty-sixth Infantry, from Fort Sam Houston, Tex., to Brownsville, Tex., and return, March 14 to 16, 1907, in compliance with the verbal order of the department commander, for the purpose of obtaining certain information in regard to the Brownsville incident, is approved and made of record as having been necessary in the military service.

By command of Brigadier-General McCaskey.

O. J. CRANE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Adjutant-General.

Q. That order recites that you went there pursuant to a verbal order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time was that order given to you?—A. The verbal order?

Q. Yes.—A. It was given to me about 9 or half past 9, sir, the night before I went to Brownsville.

Q. And did it require you to go early in the morning?—A. I was instructed to go out on the morning train, sir.

Q. That is the reason why there was no written order?—A. Yes, sir. It was after hours, sir; after office hours.

Q. Since you were on the stand Mr. Herbert Elkins has testified as a witness, and among other facts stated by him was this: That he saw two shots fired into the front of the Cowen house, that fronts on Fourteenth street; that is, that some soldiers, as he said they were, were standing under his window, which was in the upper story of the Leahy Hotel; he was looking out down upon them; that he saw them fire into the Cowen house. I will ask you whether or not you made a careful inspection, under your orders, of the bullet holes in the Cowen house, and whether or not there were any shots fired into the Cowen house from the Fourteenth street side?—A. I made a very careful inspection and could find no shots fired into the Cowen house from the Fourteenth street side.

Q. They were all fired from the alley?—A. All fired from the alley, sir. If such shots were fired, they did not strike the house.

Q. State what your instructions were, if you had any, on the point as to examining distances and as to examining those different points that had been testified about, by night as well as by day.—A. I was instructed, sir, to inspect the holes made by the bullets, and also the course of the bullets, and measure distances in regard to where the shots must have been fired from, and also as to what of the different barracks could be seen from the Leahy Hotel, both in the day and at night.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. From whom were these instructions?—A. They were from the department commander's aid, sir—General McCaskey's aid, Lieutenant McCaskey.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. He is the officer who delivered to you the verbal order to go to Fort Brown, is he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he told you what you were to go for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any interest whatever in this controversy, Lieutenant?—A. Why, no, sir.

Q. Have you at any time had any interest in it of any character?—A. Why, no, sir; no more than to perform my duty as ordered as an officer of the Army, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. I have been requested to ask you in what State were you born?—
A. In the State of Virginia, sir.

Q. And from what State did you go into the Army?—A. Virginia, sir.

Q. Through an examination from civil life?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. From what part of Virginia?—A. Lynchburg, sir; about 170 miles south of here.

Q. Were you educated for the Army?—A. No, sir; I was not educated at West Point, if that is what you mean, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. When you were last on the stand you testified as to the instructions given you as follows (I read commencing at the bottom of page 1894):

I was instructed to see what parts of the barracks I could see from the different windows of the Leahy Hotel and to trace the shots that went into the Cowen house, and to examine the lights and see what I could tell at night, and how far the light would throw, and how much light there was, and how far a person could be recognized at night, and to trace the shots fired into the Western Union office.

Now state whether or not you executed those instructions?—A. I did.

Senator WARNER. Has he not been all over that?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I want to know whether you executed those instructions, and then I am going to ask you with specific reference to this testimony.—
A. I did, sir.

Q. Did you go into the upper story of the Leahy Hotel and look out from the windows?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you try to ascertain, and what was the result?—A. I tried to ascertain how much of the barracks I could see, how much of the four barracks. The only barracks that I could see at all—that is, the porches or anything except just maybe the tops of the roofs—I don't remember about that—was B barracks.

Q. How much of B barracks could you see?—A. From the room, the window that Mrs. Leahy was in that night—that she told me she was in—I could see about two-thirds of the upper porch of B barracks, beginning about 10 feet from the east corner of B barracks and running within about 10 feet of the west corner.

Q. You could see the central part of B barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a tree there at that time? Senator Bulkeley wants me to ask you to point out, from this picture which I show you, which is said to be a picture of the Leahy Hotel, which window it was that you looked out from?—A. This center window, sir; I looked out from all three of them. The one I had reference to was the center one.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. The one Mrs. Leahy looked out of, which was that, the center?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I understood her to testify that she looked out from the one next to Elizabeth street.

Senator LODGE. That is what she testified to.

A. I may be wrong about it, sir. I would not be too positive.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You looked out from all of them?—A. Yes, sir; I looked out from all of them.

Q. There is a picture of the Cowen house, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is the tree, between the Cowen house and the annex—an orange tree.

Q. Did not obstruct the view?—A. That obstructed the view, sir.

Q. How could you see the upper porch of B barracks, with a tree standing there?—A. I know that out of the window next to the alley I could only see about 10 feet of B barracks, but from the center window or the window next to Elizabeth street—I will not be positive which, one or the other—I could see nearly all of the upper porch. That tree did not interfere very much, because I was up higher than the tree.

Q. You were there in March?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the leaves on the tree then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Still leaves there?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. That was an orange tree.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. This is picture No. 13, taken from the room in which Mrs. Leahy stood, showing the gallery at the back of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had to look right through the leaves of the tree, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was in the daytime, when you could see that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you try to look through there in the nighttime?—A. I did, sir, but on account of the darkness I could see nothing.

Q. How dark a night was it when you looked?—A. As well as I remember, sir, it was a kind of a little moonlight night; not much moon.

Q. Was it a rainy night or a cloudy night?—A. No, sir; it was not rainy; it was not a rainy night. It was a starry night.

Q. A starlight night when you looked out?—A. A starry night.

Q. Could you see anything whatever of the barracks from either of the windows when you looked out?—A. No, sir; the only thing I could tell was just simply a dark outline, like a big shadow cast.

Q. Did you undertake to look out of the window that Mr. Elkins occupied, which, I think, according to the testimony, was the middle one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To see what you could see at nighttime down in the alley?—A. I may be mistaken, Senator, but I think Mr. Elkins told me that he had the window next to the alley.

Q. Possibly.—A. And that Judge Parks had either the center room or the one next to Elizabeth street, and that Mrs. Leahy was in one or the other of those two.

Q. Whichever it was, did you look out of those windows?—A. I looked out of the window that Mr. Elkins told me that he occupied—the room.

Q. How far was it from his window out to this point, the center of the alley at Fourteenth street?—A. About 80 feet, sir; that is to where I judged that the men were standing that did the firing.

Q. According to his description?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And according to what you observed as to the way the bullets entered the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you or not, looking out there at nighttime, see anything?—A. I could not; no, sir; unless they had a bright light with them or something of that kind—an artificial light.

Q. I am assuming that there was no artificial light.—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any artificial light there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were instructed to make a special examination as to lights, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there are no artificial lights in the alley at all?—A. No artificial lights in the alley at all.

Q. And there were none when you looked out?—A. No, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. How wide is that alley, Lieutenant?—A. Between 20 and 24 feet, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. It is marked on the map as 20 feet in width.—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. How wide is Fourteenth street?—A. About 45 feet, sir.

Q. How far is this window from the corner of Fourteenth street and the alley?—A. I would not be positive, sir, but I think that window is about 30-some feet.

Q. From the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You examined the bullet holes in the Yturria house, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since you have testified Major Blocksom has testified in regard to that. State whether or not you examined to see whether or not, looking at the direction of the grooves and the holes made by the bullets, you could sight B barracks or either of the other barracks.—A. Well, I tried it with two bullet holes there at the Yturria house. If I may go to the map I think I can explain it better. It was right in here at the point indicated.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You testified to all this when you were on the stand before?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. And you would not change your testimony or modify it in any way now?—A. No, sir; but I should like to explain this, because I think there is some mistake about it, from the statement Major Blocksom made; and in justice to myself I should like to explain the location of the bullet.

Q. Very well, that is all right, Lieutenant. The only purpose I had in saying what I did was to answer the objection made by Senator Warner that you had gone into this once before. If you want to make any explanation, in view of what Major Blocksom has said, of course we will give you that privilege.

Senator SCOTT. He ought to have that privilege.

Senator WARNER. Nobody objects to it.

A. Right near that point [indicating] is a tank and windmill supported on timbers, 4 by 6 or 6 by 6. The bullets that struck those timbers struck the face of the timbers. For instance, here is a timber, and the bullet struck right in the face of it. Here is B Company barracks [indicating]. If either one of the bullets that I examined myself came from B Company barracks they would have had to turn 90 degrees in the air.

Q. In order to enter?—A. In order to enter the 6 by 6 or 4 by 6 in the direction they did.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You have pointed out B barracks as they are now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you say this map correctly represents the true position of the barracks?—A. I think so, Senator. B barracks may be a little too far from the wall, but not over 2 or 3 feet. Here is the walk, along here.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. Do you mean that the map properly represents B barracks? How about C?—A. Yes, sir; those barracks are correctly located, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Lieutenant, as I recollect, it has been in evidence that this barracks is not in the right place; that the center of the barracks is nearer the end of this alley. What would be your opinion about that?—A. I think the barracks is located about right, now, sir. I think it is correctly located. My remembrance of it, sir, is that I could only see a corner of the roof of B Company barracks when standing down here on Fourteenth street.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. If I understand the evidence, here is the sidewalk, along what we call the east side of Elizabeth street.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that sidewalk extended goes right across what we call the barracks road, straight across, and comes to the end of B barracks. This comes down nearly to the center, you see, of this, and therefore B barracks would be farther east. Is that your recollection about it?—A. Yes, sir. This is the Western Union office here, and the corner of B barracks projects over the Western Union office. There is a plank walk comes along here. The map of the post itself is very nearly correct, but the map of the town is not correct. This line here, the street should come down more; but for that bullet to come from B barracks, B barracks would have had to be as high as C barracks.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. The corner of B barracks projects beyond the line of the Western Union office, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. You say B barracks would have had to be as high as C barracks. What part of C barracks? How far up to take the place of C barracks—how far would B barracks have to go?—A. B barracks would have to be up as high as the west corner of it.

Q. As the west end of C barracks?—A. Would have had to be as high as the west end of C barracks, which will be about 10 feet there.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Whether that map be correct or not, you made your investigation on the ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And determined by reference to the barracks as you saw them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the house and bullet holes, as you saw them, determined that the bullet could not have entered, if it had been fired from B barracks, without making an angle in its flight in the air before it struck?—A. If it had been fired from B barracks, before striking the Yturria house, it would have had to go across more to the north. It would not have gone up the road and turned about 90° and then entered the Yturria house.

Q. You made your examination on the ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And made it under orders?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And without any interest in it whatever?—A. No more, sir, than to perform my duty.

Q. Did you find any bullet hole in the Yturria house that could have been fired from either of the barracks?—A. Well, I did not find any bullet hole that could have been fired from B Company barracks. Now, as to whether it could have been fired from any other barracks, it would be impossible for me to say.

Q. I do not want to go into that. You were the quartermaster for the post while you were stationed there, were you not, Mr. Leckie?—A. Part of the time; yes, sir; about eighteen or twenty months of the time, sir.

Q. Did you or not as quartermaster have anything to do specifically and specially with those barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. Had to keep the barracks in repair, keep them painted and the woodwork and everything repaired.

Q. State whether or not you did have them painted while you were there as quartermaster.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is their color?

Senator WARNER. That is in evidence—gray.

A. They are dark lead color, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Dark lead color? All right; I do not care for anything more about that. Did you make any effort to look down Fourteenth street from Washington street in the nighttime while you were there, to see what you could see at the point where the alley crossed Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; I also made an investigation of several of the street corners.

Q. Tell us about all of them, as nearly as you can; first, about looking down Fourteenth street from Washington street—what you could see.—A. Well, about 10 o'clock one night while I was there—it was a light, starry night—I made several examinations, and I could not see any more than to know that it was an object at Fourteenth street. When a person would come along I could tell that it was an object.

Q. Could you tell whether men were white or black?—A. I could not tell whether it was a horse or a man; simply could tell that it was a dark object.

Q. Could not tell how they were dressed?—A. I could not tell Mexicans from Americans until they stepped up to within from 8 to 10 or 12 feet of me. That was near the light, sir.

Q. You made special experiments of that kind, did you, special observations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us at what other points you made a test of that kind.—A. Well, I tried—I don't remember the name of the street, but I made a test on Elizabeth street, one block up from the post-office.

Q. At what street is the post-office?—A. The post-office is on Elizabeth and—

Q. How far is it beyond the Miller Hotel, if you recollect? The Miller Hotel is here [referring to the map].—A. It was Tenth where I was.

Q. Where the post-office is?—A. A block above the post-office.

Q. And you looked down Elizabeth street towards the fort?—A. I looked down Elizabeth street and Tenth street both—the crossing of Elizabeth.

Q. And how far could you see people and distinguish who they were, whether white or black, or how dressed?—A. You could tell the form of a person, I should judge, sir, about 20 or 30 feet that night, but you could not tell a Mexican from a white person, from an American, as I said before, over—

Q. You are speaking now of conditions where there was no artificial light?—A. No, sir; I was standing by the lamp, but they were not under the lamp.

Q. They were outside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were standing by an artificial light?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us whether or not you made an examination to determine how far away from the lamp the light of the lamp was thrown?—A. Well, the light of the lamp was thrown a very short distance. The lamp is about 11 feet from the ground. I should judge the light was thrown about 20 feet, sir.

Senator WARNER. I do not want to interpose an objection, but I think the Lieutenant himself will say that he went all over this.

Senator FORAKER. I think so. I would not have asked that question if he had not referred to it. [To the witness.] Now, did you look at the mouth of the alley there by the Miller Hotel, coming out onto Thirteenth street, at any time while you were there, by night?

A. Yes, sir; I examined it two different nights, sir.

Q. What observation did you make there?—A. Why, I could not see anything at the alley in the night that I was there, sir.

Q. State what is on the corner opposite the Miller Hotel.—A. Do you mean across Thirteenth street?

Q. Yes; right on the corner of Thirteenth and the alley.—A. Across from the Miller Hotel, across the alley?

Q. Yes.—A. On the same side?

Q. On the same side.—A. It is a store run by a man of the name of Bolack, a clothing store, I believe.

Q. And that fronts right on the alley, does it not?—A. No, sir; it fronts on Thirteenth street.

Q. It has a side front on the alley, has it not—that is, the side of it runs to the alley?—A. It may. I do not think it has an entrance to the building on the side, sir.

Q. I call your attention to the picture shown you, No. 1, the first picture in the Purdy report. Does that correctly represent the condition at the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I asked you a moment ago was whether or not this building of Bolack's, which fronts on Thirteenth street, does not run back flush with the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The side of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that looking down the alley at night you are simply looking into a space 20 feet wide, with houses on both sides?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no artificial light there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you look down there with a view to determining what you could see at night?—A. I did not look down at the Miller Hotel. I only investigated the alley at night at the Cowen house, sir.

Q. At the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir. The other examination that I made was the street at night.

Q. Did you make any other experiments to see how far you could distinguish persons at night?—A. No, sir; I can not recall any other.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Would a street lamp, in your opinion, located on the corner of Washington street—that lamp, I think, is located right across here, isn't it [referring to the map]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would a lamp located there cast any reflection into the alley—such a street lamp as they have there?—A. No, sir.

Q. So it would be impossible for any reflection of the light to be cast into that alley so that anybody could identify anyone?—A. You could only distinguish objects and persons 20 feet around the light.

Q. I think it has been testified by some one that the reflection from this lamp on the corner of Washington and Thirteenth streets cast its light into the alley.—A. I made an examination of the lights, and they only cast a light about 20 feet around the pole.

Q. There are houses between Bolack's and there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that no light could be reflected, in your opinion, from that street lamp into the alley?—A. No, sir.

Q. That would help recognition?—A. No, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You have stated today, and stated in your testimony before, that you had no interest in this matter at all. I suppose by that you meant that you were not looking up the testimony with the view of aiding one side or the other?—A. Why, no, sir. I was sent there to investigate.

Q. I mean you were not there to get testimony for one side or the other?—A. Why, no, sir. I was put on the stand as a witness for the defense.

Q. That was subsequently.—A. And then I was afterwards, in the Macklin case, put on the stand as a witness for the prosecution. I went there, Senator, to investigate it, not for one side or for the other, but to find facts.

Q. Who gave you your verbal instructions?—A. The aid to General McCaskey, sir; Lieutenant McCaskey.

Q. You spoke with nobody else with regard to what you were going to do at Brownsville?—A. Oh, I may have spoken to several others; possibly, sir.

Q. You had no talk with the judge-advocate?—A. I had no official communication with anyone else.

Q. I mean that you had no talk with the judge-advocate?—A. I would not be positive now, Senator. The trial was going on at the post. All the officers were talking, being in that club together; I may have had some talk with him, but it was not an official conversation.

Q. Did you have any talk with the counsel for the defense?—A. Yes, sir; I talked with the counsel for the defense several times.

Q. Did he suggest anything that you should do?—A. Do you mean did he suggest anything?

Q. Did he suggest points that he would like to have investigated or proved?—A. After he found out I was ordered down there he told me he would like me to be pretty positive about what I could see from Mrs. Leahy's hotel, and such things as that.

Q. You said in your testimony before, at page 1895:

Q. Did you have any instructions about a man by the name of Allison, who was supposed to be in prison down there?

A. I did, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

A. Yes, sir. I was instructed, or requested, rather, to go and see Allison, and see what the charges were against him, and why he was there.

A. I was requested, sir—Colonel Glenn requested me to go and see Allison.

Q. Colonel Glenn was the counsel for the defense?—A. Counsel for Major Penrose. He requested me to go and see Allison and investigate why he was in jail, why he was confined; and I found there was no case they could find against Allison, and, he having once been a soldier, I made a thorough investigation of it, because I felt it my duty to do so.

Q. At page 1892 you were asked:

Did you make a written report?—A. No, sir.

Q. You just reported orally?—A. Yes, sir.

To whom was the oral report made?—A. Do you mean on my return to Fort Sam Houston?

Q. The question is, in your examination:

Did you make a written report?—A. No, sir.

Q. You just reported orally?—A. Yes, sir.

To whom was that oral report made?—A. I reported to General McCaskey's aid, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. General McCaskey's aid?—A. Yes, sir. Of course I did not go to report to the general. He had not time for all those things. I reported to his aid. The military secretary was not in.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Did you report the result of your investigation or simply that you had performed your duty and returned?—A. I reported to him that I had returned to my station and had obeyed the instructions given me.

Q. I was very anxious, Lieutenant, to see your report. I was not present when you were examined before, but I asked the War Department to procure your report for me, and they sent me these telegrams, which I will put in the record:

[Telegram 1.]

WASHINGTON, May 31, 1907.

Maj. Gen. W. S. McCaskey,

Headquarters Department Dakota, St. Paul, Minn.:

Lieutenant Leckle, Twenty-sixth Infantry, testified before Senate Military Committee that he went to Brownsville to make investigation concerning affray there. Did he go by your order; and if so, was order written or oral? If not ordered, under what authority did he go and at whose request? Did he make report of his investigation to anyone? If so, to whom was report made, and was report written or oral? Telegraph answer without delay.

By order Acting Secretary War:

AINSWORTH, The Adjutant-General.

ST. PAUL, MINN., May 31, 1907.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL U. S. ARMY,

Washington, D. C.:

Referring to telegram your office this day, Lieutenant Leckle was ordered by me as department commander, at request of counsel for defense in case of Major Penrose, to proceed to Brownsville and determine matters of importance to their contention. Report of his investigation was testified to before the court. No other report was made within my recollection. My order was official and printed. He may have started before the order was printed.

MCCASKEY,

Major-General, U. S. Army.

Now, is that correct?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Q. Then you were sent there, according to General McCaskey's statement, at the request of the counsel for the defense?—A. Senator, I have no way of knowing what had been requested of General McCaskey. General McCaskey is the department commander. I was one of the officers in his department. I was ordered by him, and it would not be military respect for me to go and criticise him or question him as to why he was sending me. I do not know, sir.

Q. I was going to ask you whether you knew that it was at the request of counsel?—A. I did not know it until afterwards, sir.

Q. You mean, did not know it until after you returned from Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not know when you went to Brownsville that it was at the request of the counsel for Major Penrose?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. And you went—A. That request made by the counsel was made, I suppose, to General McCaskey privately; certainly not in my presence.

Q. You did not know that you were sent by request of counsel for Major Penrose "to determine matters of importance to their contention?"—A. I knew I was sent to determine matters of importance in regard to the Penrose trial, and I knew, naturally—knew from common, ordinary intelligence—that I was to testify for the defense, that I would be a witness for the defense.

Q. You knew you would be a witness for the defense?—A. Yes, sir; not by anyone telling me so, but simply by putting two and two together.

Q. If you did not know at whose request, might it not have been possible that you were sent there at the request of the judge-advocate?—A. It might have been possible, but my recollection of the thing was that the judge-advocate had finished his part of the evidence, sir.

Q. You were not sent until—A. Until after those questions arose, sir, by evidence before the court.

Q. You were not sent until the trial was partly over?—A. The trial was very nearly over, sir, before I was sent.

Q. Then you knew that you were sent there to appear as a witness for the defense?—A. Yes, sir; and being an army officer I naturally knew that, sir, knowing the progress of the trial—

Q. And your report was made in the way of testimony for the defense?—A. Outside of the report that I just gave you evidence of, sir, to Lieutenant McCaskey.

Q. I understand that.—A. I testified before the committee as to conditions as I found them from my investigation.

Q. When did you go there under those instructions?—A. It was in March, sir. I have forgotten the dates. The order gives the exact dates there, sir.

Q. You were sent March 19?—A. That may have been the date of performing the travel; I don't know, sir. I performed the journey before that order was issued. The order was issued a few days afterwards.

Q. And you had talked with Colonel Glenn?—A. Yes, sir; I guess every officer in the post had talked with Colonel Glenn.

Q. Did he tell you anything about what he desired to prove or have investigated down there?—A. He did not tell me what he desired to prove; no, sir. He told me that he would like to have me make a thorough investigation as to what I could see.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you have any talk with the judge-advocate, representing the Government in the Penrose case, as to what he wanted you to investigate?—A. I had several talks with the judge-advocate, sir; but I can not recall any time—I can not now recall any particular time. He did tell me that he wanted me to go to see Mr. Kleiber; that Mr. Kleiber had promised him a map of Brownsville. I had several conversations with both the judge-advocate and his assistant, Lieutenant Fitch.

Q. Mr. Allison was out of the Army—he was a citizen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What interest did Major Glenn or any other officer in the Army have in Mr. Allison as a citizen?—A. Mr. Allison was an old soldier, sir, and it had been rumored around Fort Sam Houston that there was nothing against Allison, that Allison was being held to prevent his testifying, or for the purpose of giving them all the trouble they could in getting him before the court-martial. I did not know how much there was in this, sir, and when I was down there before, on duty for the Quartermaster's Department, I was told that Allison was in Mexico by a great many people there, and when I got there there were a number of people who did not know that Allison was in jail. I found that Allison was charged with assault with attempt to murder. I went to the man that it was claimed that he assaulted.

Q. What was his name?—A. His first name was Dee. I do not know his last name. He was a brakeman on the St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railroad; and he told me, "Lieutenant, if there is anything in that, I don't know anything about it."

Q. Was his name Dee Dewalt?—A. They all called him Dee. I do not know his name. I had known the brakeman for some time, but I do not know his last name. He said, "If anything of that kind ever happened, I don't know anything about it." So then I went to the jail and saw Allison and talked with him, and he said he knew nothing about it. So then I went to Mr. Kleiber, the prosecuting attorney, and he told me, and read the charges against Allison, and said he had several witnesses, one of them, the principal witness, William Henry, an old negro there, discharged from one of the regiments long years ago—I don't know what regiment, sir; and so then I had this man Dee to go up to Mr. Kleiber's office with me and make the statement before Mr. Kleiber that he made to me, which he did.

Q. What was that statement; that he knew nothing of it?—A. That he knew nothing about it, and Mr. Kleiber said, "Well, Dee, that does not agree with what you told me before," and that was about all that conversation.

Q. Did you say that this man Dee, as you call him—I understand that his name was Dee Dewalt—was a brakeman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you visit him on the train, when he was running on the train, when he was on duty?—A. He was on the train when I went down to Brownsville, and then I afterwards saw him in Brownsville.

Q. You questioned him then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you say that it was to prevent Allison from testifying before the court-martial, or to give as much trouble as possible?—A. That is what was talked around San Antonio, sir. I never—

Q. Did you inquire of Major Glenn if it would prevent them getting Mr. Allison as a witness?—A. No, sir; they could have issued a subpoena for him, or have gotten him on habeas corpus, I suppose.

Q. You understood that?—A. Yes, sir. He did not want to go to that trouble, as I understood his conversation with me, until he found out where Allison was, and whether he knew anything about it; that was all. He requested me to question Allison and see if he knew anything about the shooting.

Q. Did not Mr. Kleiber tell you about the case?—A. Yes, sir; he read the charges against Allison.

Q. And told you what the facts were?—A. He told me what the facts were as he had them; yes, sir.

Q. And this man Dee Dewalt was present?—A. He was not present when Mr. Kleiber read the charges and when I told him what were the facts. He was present after that, sir.

Q. I do not know that it is very important, but I have had sent to me here, within a day or two, an affidavit from Mr. Dee Dewalt.—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which I will read to you.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

Before me, Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Tex., this day personally came and appeared Dee Dewalt, to me well known, and who, after being by me sworn did depose and say that he is the same Dee Dewalt whose name appears upon the indictment found against Earnest Allison, charging the said Earnest Allison with an assault with intent to commit murder upon him, the said Dewalt. I am a brakeman on the St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway. On one of my trips from Bay City to Brownsville Lieut. Harry G. Leckle was on the train. He called me and asked of me if I knew who the brakeman was that was assaulted by Earnest Allison. I informed him I was the man. He then interrogated me about this assault. I then explained to him what I remembered at that time to the best of my knowledge. He kept constantly asking me if there was not some feeling among the white people against the negroes. This question he put to me several times on the trip. I informed him that I knew of no feeling whatsoever against the colored people. He then asked me to meet him the next day, at 11 o'clock, at Weller's saloon. I did not meet him there, as I did not think it was the proper place, but on the following day we met at the office of Mr. Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Tex., and in the presence of the Hon. John I. Kleiber, whom I requested to be present when I had the conversation with Lieutenant Leckle so that he might hear what I had to say. Lieutenant Leckle asked me if I did not think that they were holding Allison in jail so as to prevent him from going to Washington to testify in behalf of the soldiers, and I answered him no. He then asked me if it was not my opinion, and I told him no. He then asked me if I did not feel myself unsafe since the trouble of August 13. My answer was that I have been living down here with these people for over three years, and before this trouble and since have had no occasion to complain. Any statements made by Lieutenant Leckle to the contrary are not true.

DEE DEWALT.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 4th day of June, A. D. 1907.

LOUIS KOWALSKI,

Clerk District Court Cameron County, Tex.

A. A part of that statement there is correct, sir. The majority of it is not correct. Mr. Kleiber is here in the city, and I believe he will go before the committee, and I think he will verify the statement that I have made to you in regard to the conversation we had with regard to this man.

Q. Wherein is this correct?

Senator FORAKER. That affidavit has been put into the testimony here. Where is this man, and why could he not have been brought here and be cross-examined instead of putting in a man's testimony by affidavit? We have not put anybody else's testimony in in that way.

Senator LODGE. This record is full of affidavits.

Senator WARNER. The first time I had this affidavit was day before yesterday, and there was not time to get the witness.

Senator FORAKER. You have read that, and there is no opportunity to cross-examine the man who made the affidavit.

Senator HEMENWAY. I have followed the reading of the affidavit very carefully. Does he deny in the affidavit his statement that he knew nothing about any assault on the part of Allison?

Senator WARNER. It is not referred to.

Senator FORAKER. I think there is a reference to it, if you will allow me to take it.

The WITNESS. In our conversation before Mr. Kleiber, this man Dee did make the statement before Mr. Kleiber that he made to me on the train. He did meet me at Weller's saloon, as I told him to do, for the purpose of going before Mr. Kleiber to see if there was any truth in his story, and he met me there, and I told him then to come up to Mr. Kleiber's office that afternoon, I think it was, and he made the statement before Mr. Kleiber that he made to me on the train. Mr. Kleiber said to him, "Dee," I think the words were, "you are not telling the truth and you know it. That is not the statement that you made to me."

Senator FORAKER. I call attention to the fact that in his affidavit this man says, referring to Lieutenant Leckie, "He then interrogated me about this assault. I then explained to him what I remembered at that time to the best of my knowledge."

Senator WARNER. There is no question about that. That is what he said.

Senator HEMENWAY. Whether there was anything in the affidavit denying the statement that Lieutenant Leckie makes, as to his statement that he (Allison) did not assault him, and that he knew nothing about it.

Senator FORAKER. There is nothing here, and the party who took the affidavit must have known, or certainly had an opportunity to know at the time he took it, that Lieutenant Leckie had testified about this matter in this same way some weeks ago.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You went and saw this man Allison yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you have gone over in your direct testimony, that interview with Allison, and I would rather not take up time on that.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But I will just ask one question that was not asked. Was it your view in going to see Mr. Allison to see whether or not he could be summoned as a witness?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Summoned as a witness by whom?—A. Summoned by the judge-advocate of the court for the defense.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. By Colonel Glenn?—A. The judge-advocate of the court is the only one who can summon a witness, sir.

Senator TALIAFERRO. He says for the defense.

A. For the defense. The defense makes a request of the judge-advocate that he wants certain witnesses summoned, and the judge-advocate does it, unless he has some good reason for not doing it.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Lieutenant, in making that examination there, you expressed an opinion, did you not, to Mrs. Leahy and others, as to whether or not this shooting was done by the colored soldiers?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you form an opinion?—A. Well, I may have formed an opinion at the time, sir.

Q. What was that opinion?—A. I don't think, Senator, that my opinion would do this committee any good, but it might do a great many people harm, and I do not think I ought to be required to offer my opinion unnecessarily. My opinion could do the committee no good. I have not kept up with the evidence. You have heard the evidence and you are in a better position to decide about this than I am. I never, at any time, made a statement to Mrs. Leahy or anyone in Mrs. Leahy's house that I can recall as to who did the shooting. A great many people spoke to me as to who they thought did the shooting; a great many have done so there and here and other places.

Senator FORAKER. My recollection is that Mrs. Leahy testified that the Lieutenant did not express any opinion, and I do not know of any witness who has testified that the Lieutenant at any time expressed any opinion.

Senator WARNER. I am not saying that he did. I asked him if he had expressed an opinion. I do not mean to assume that he ever did.

The WITNESS. I understood the Senator to say that Mrs. Leahy had said so.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You understood me to say that Mrs. Leahy had said so?—

A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I should like to hear the question read which Senator Warner asked.

The official reporter read the question, as follows:

Lieutenant, in making that examination there, you expressed an opinion, did you not, to Mrs. Leahy and others, as to whether or not this shooting was done by the colored soldiers?

A. I judged by that, sir, that Mrs. Leahy had made the statement.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I did not intend to have you understand it in that way. You made no statement there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any statement to anyone there as to where the parties must have stood who did the shooting?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know whether I made any statement there or not, but I have made the statement several times and testified as to my opinion as to where the parties stood. I was in Lynchburg, Va., on August 13, and it would be impossible for me to know who did the shooting. I know it was done with rifles, and I have my idea as to where the people were standing who did the shooting, but outside of that it would simply be a private opinion, which I do not think I have a right to express. It is not evidence, and it would not do the committee any good.

Q. Well, Lieutenant, you satisfied yourself there, as you have testified. I am not going into it fully. You satisfied yourself as to the point of entrance and the point of exit of the different bullets?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of the position in which the parties were who fired?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That part of it you could determine?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you were asked the question by Senator Foraker in your direct examination whether or not those bullets that entered the Yturria house could have been fired from barracks B?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You thought they could not?—A. I do not think they could. The reason that I say that they were not fired from B barracks is that they would have had to turn an angle of 90 degrees in the air, without anything to deflect them in any way; and I do not know of any laws of motion for a bullet doing that.

Q. From what barracks could they have been fired?—A. Well, from my investigation I determined that those bullets were fired either by a man in the road being mounted or from the wall. I do not believe that those bullets were fired from any of the barracks.

Q. A man being mounted?—A. It is possible for the bullets to have been fired that way.

Q. That is, they must have been fired by a man on horseback, you mean, or a man standing upon the wall?—A. They could have been fired from either place, sir. I determined that from my examination.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You mean the wall of the post?—A. The wall of the reservation.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The wall of the reservation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As the bullet entered at a point some 9 or 10 feet, as I remember your testimony, above the ground?—A. I think between 8 and 9 feet, somewhere along there, Senator.

Q. Now, you tried to place yourself in the position of the parties who claimed they saw the men who did the shooting down there in making your tests in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you were up in Mrs. Leahy's hotel did you have persons go along the alley?—A. No, sir.

Q. To see whether you could see them or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have parties discharge guns to see what you could see by the flash?—A. No, sir; I did not. I know that the flash of a gun is too quick for the human eye to see anything by it. It blinds the eye.

Q. I am asking you what you did there.—A. No, sir; I did not, there. I have seen it at other times and knew that it was absolutely unnecessary.

Q. You concluded that was absolutely unnecessary?—A. To try to determine whether a person could be recognized by the flash of a high-power gun; yes, sir.

Q. Did you place yourself in the position in which the lieutenant of police was when he was shot?—A. I don't know what position he was in when he was shot.

Q. He was on horseback.—A. No, sir; I did not place myself in that position.

Q. Riding down the street, and the parties were back on the street in the neighborhood of the gaslight. The evidence will show where they were.—A. I did not place myself there, sir. I know from the lamplight that you can not distinguish people there by the lamplight over 20 feet from you.

Q. When you were standing in the lamplight?—A. Yes, sir; I know that I could not. I don't know what other people did there. It is impossible for me to say.

Q. When you were standing in the lamplight you discovered that you could not identify a party more than 20 feet away?—A. Could not discover whether they were black or white, sir, 20 feet away.

Q. Could you discover whether they had a uniform on or not?—A. Well, 20 feet from the lamp you could.

Q. Could you discover 40 feet away whether they were soldiers or citizens?—A. No, sir; you could not discover, 40 feet away. Lots of times there at night, on occasions when I was sent out in the town as officer of the day to round up the men, I have advanced to within the length of this table from a Mexican policeman, thinking he was a soldier. He would have on a khaki blouse and khaki trousers, an olive drab hat with the officer's cord around it, and at that distance I could not tell the color of the officer. I could see the dim outline and that what he had on looked to me to be khaki.

Q. When you say the length of this table, about how many feet is that, Lieutenant?—A. About 15 or 18 feet, sir.

Q. You could see that he had the khaki uniform and you could see the color of his trousers?—A. I could not see—

Q. And you could see that he had a hat on, but the Mexican was dark himself, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dark complexioned?—A. Yes, sir. That does not affect it, though. He might have been white.

Q. And he had a cord around his hat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could see that at that distance?—A. I could not see the cord. I could see the outline, sir, and that he had on khaki.

Q. What was the position of yourself and the policeman at that time?—A. I would be walking down the street and he would be in front of me. Do not understand me to say, Senator, that at that distance I could see the hat cord on a man's hat.

Q. You have said you could not.—A. I said—I was describing the policeman—I meant that after you got up close to him, it is pretty hard to tell when you got right to him, because they have on the cord, they have the campaign hat, they have the blouse, and the campaign breeches—trousers, rather—and, as a rule, Government shoes.

The CHAIRMAN. The following has been received from the War Department and will be printed in the record:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, June 8, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN SENATE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.
(Through the Honorable the Secretary of War.)

SIR: In response to inquiries, I have the honor to inform you as follows in reference to ammunition for the United States magazine rifle, model of 1903:

The weight of the jacket of the service bullet is  $51\frac{1}{2}$  grains, and the composition of the core is 30 parts lead and 1 part tin. The composition of the bullet for the guard cartridge is 90 parts lead,  $8\frac{1}{2}$  parts tin, and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  parts antimony.

Very respectfully,

A. H. RUSSELL,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army,
Acting Chief of Ordnance.

(At 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m. the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.15 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, and Taliaferro.

TESTIMONY OF LIEUT. HARRY G. LECKIE, U. S. ARMY—Continued.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Without going into the details, you were at Brownsville three times after the 13th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The examination that you made was the last time you were there, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The other times you were there on other business?—A. I was there the first time in October, sir, on a hunting trip, and the second time I was there doing quartermaster duty.

Q. Yes. That you have already testified to in your direct examination.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In which of those trips, if at all, did you go over to Matamoros?—A. I was over to Matamoros, sir, the last trip.

Q. What was your business there, Lieutenant?—A. I went over there to see if I could investigate the Mexican rifles—to examine them, I should have said.

Q. Did you investigate?—A. No, sir; the commanding officer and most of the officers stationed at Matamoros, Mexico, had been changed during my absence, and I did not know any of them then, except one or two low-ranking officers, who did not have the authority to show me those guns or their ammunition. They are very strict about those things, and for that reason I did not see the rifle. I did not have the time to go to see the commanding officer.

Q. Why did you want to see the rifles with which the Mexican soldiers were armed?—A. Well, I was sent down there to make as thorough an investigation of this matter as I could, sir, and I wanted to see the Mexican rifles and the ammunition in connection with my investigation.

Q. Did you not find out with what kind of guns the Mexican army was armed?—A. Not on that trip, sir. I knew what kind of guns they were armed with.

Q. Was this visit to Matamoros at your own suggestion or at the suggestion of some one else?—A. The visit there was at my own suggestion—my own idea.

Q. Did you think that Springfield ammunition could be fired out of the Mexican Mauser?—A. I knew that; no, sir. The Mauser is .28, and the Springfield is .30; but I had heard a good many times, after our new rifle came out, the Springfield, that the Mexican Government had been having some experiments with this rifle at the arsenal in Mexico City, and I was also told by several people that had been down in Mexico, civilian engineers and miners, different ones, that the troops were then armed with guns that carried the same ammunition as our Springfield gun. For that reason I went over to see if it was a fact.

Q. You found out subsequently that that was not correct, did you not?—A. Well, not positive, sir. I know when I was there, when I was stationed there from 1903 to 1906, that the troops across the river from Brownsville were armed with a Mauser, and I saw, on my last trip down there, a sentinel in front of their cuartel, one of their barracks, that had the Mauser. But whether they had the other rifles or not I do not know, sir.

Q. Did you do any hunting the times you were down?—A. The last time?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you either time?—A. I went down on a hunting trip the first time; yes, sir.

Q. Yes; that is what I understood. But the second time you did no hunting?—A. Yes, sir; the second time I was down on quartermaster duty.

Q. The third time, I should have said, Lieutenant; pardon me.—A. The third time? No, sir.

Q. You did not wear your uniform, either, did you?—A. I never wear my uniform except on duty with the troops, sir.

Q. Did you have your hunting suit with you the third time you were there?—A. No, sir; nor did I have any firearms.

Senator FORAKER. That is the third time he was there.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And this bullet that you extracted in small pieces, or shavings, you do not know that you got that all out?—A. I do know that I got it all out, sir.

Q. But you do not know that you got all the pieces out?—A. I know that I got all the pieces, sir, and secured them. At the time I took that bullet out I was not thinking of any investigation, or of using it in evidence in any way at all. I bored the bullet out. As well as I remember, I think, to state the whole thing, the drinks were bet on it. After I said it was not a Government bullet that had made this hole, I think myself and some other member of the party, I do not remember who, bet the drinks for the crowd, he betting that it was a Government bullet with a steel jacket around it, and I think I bet that it was not a Government bullet, on account of the size of the hole. The hole it had made I could put my thumb in, and I cut the entire bullet out, and caught the shavings in my hand, and this lead you see here was put in a large cigarette paper like you get in Mexico, a shuck paper—not actually cornshuck, but made up from the pulp of the cornshuck—and I do not doubt but what I threw some of it down in the shavings; but I know there was no steel jacket to it. The bullet had too much penetrating power after it struck the 2 by 4 to have been torn loose from a steel jacket, because if what it struck had power enough to stop the steel jacket, it would naturally have stopped the lead.

Q. From page 1126 of the Penrose court-martial, speaking of taking out part of the bullet, taking the bullet out of the post, I read you as follows:

Q. But you didn't weigh these filings?—A. No, sir.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading?)

Q. You do not know whether you got all of them out or not?—A. No, sir.

That is correct, is it?—A. That is not correct, sir. I do not think that my testimony stated that.

Q. What is that?—A. If they asked me that question, I know I stated I got them all out, because I did, and I could not have stated otherwise. There may have been some misunderstanding in taking my testimony down, or I may not have expressed myself clearly.

Q. I will read you further:

Q. Are you prepared to state here that the point of the auger did not merely take out the lead from the inside of the steel-jacketed bullet?—A. Yes, sir; we cut the hole out entirely, so if there had been any steel jacket there we would have found it.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the preceding answer you say you did not give?—A. Understand me, Senator. The way that is expressed there is to leave the impression that I did not cut all the bullet out. I say that is not correct. If I made that statement before the court in those words, I did not intend to leave that impression at all, because I did cut all the bullet out. I cut the entire bullet out, bored through the post, and the auger came out on the other side; and if there had been any steel jacket there it would have pushed it through and it would have dropped out on the other side. And then afterwards I put my finger in the hole and ran it around, and there was no steel jacket in there.

Q. Now, as to the amount of lead in a .30 caliber guard cartridge, such as is now used in the Army, and the amount of lead contained in a .44 caliber revolver bullet, is it the same?—A. I will tell you, Senator, some .44 calibers have 220 grains—I mean .45 caliber; that is, the .45 Colt, known as the military model. There are other .45 calibers that I think have as low as one hundred and sixty something—168—I will not be positive about that part of it. As to the guard cartridge, at the time of that testimony before that court-martial I was under the impression that the guard cartridge bullet had 220 grains of lead in it. I have since then examined and weighed a guard cartridge bullet and find it has 186 grains in it.

Q. Your testimony before the court-martial was that it was the same.—A. No, sir; the judge-advocate made a statement to me in his question. As well as I remember his question, he said, "You state you think it is a .44 or .45. Why do you think so?" I said, "From the size of the hole that the bullet made," and I think he said, "Is it a fact that the guard cartridge and the .45 have the same amount of lead?" He said that the guard cartridge had 220 grains and my statement was that the .45 caliber also had 220 grains.

Q. I will read again from this, Lieutenant. To get this connection I will read two or three questions and answers, beginning on page 1125 of the court-martial proceedings:

Q. So this lead you extracted, you extracted in small pieces, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

I assume that is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. It bore no resemblance to a bullet when you took it out—it was mostly filings and cuttings?—Yes, sir; that is right.

That is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. Did you weigh these?—A. No, sir.

That is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Q. Are you prepared to state that this bullet, or pieces of lead, that you extracted from this hole could not have come equally as well from a .30-caliber Springfield cartridge, such as used for guard purposes in the United States Army, and was, then, equally as easy as it could have been a lead bullet from a .44 or .45 caliber revolver?—A. It could have been. I would like to give my reasons for stating why I thought it was a .44 or .45, though.

That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

Assistant judge-advocate:

"We have no objections, except that this witness has not qualified as an expert in the matter of bullets. He merely, as I understand him, with a brace and bit extracted a large number of small lead filings and cuttings, and I do not see how anyone, even though he is an expert, can give an opinion as to what kind of gun the bullet was fired from unless he has something to go by besides a small, or large, number of very small filings."

Counsel for the accused:

"I would like to call the court's attention to the fact that that is argument. The question is, the witness has asked to explain his answer. The court has ruled many times that he has a right to do so."

A. I do not want to give an opinion; just my reasons for believing it was a .44 or .45.

The president:

"The witness can explain his answer."

A. The reason I think it was either a .44 or .45 was on account of the size of the hole where it entered the post.

What you said there is all correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet it was your opinion then, and I assume is your opinion now, that it could not have been fired out of a .30-caliber Springfield—that is, a .30-caliber Springfield cartridge?—A. Yes, sir; that is my opinion. It is possible. But you can determine that, Senator, by taking the lead that is in front of me here now—that was cut out of the post—and the lead out of a guard cartridge and having an assay made of them.

Q. Pardon me a moment, Lieutenant. I want to ask you a fair question, and let us get the answer, that is all.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This question from the court-martial reads:

Are you prepared to state that this bullet, or pieces of lead, that you extracted from this hole could not have come equally as well—

A. I do not think it could have been equally as well, sir.

Q. Your answer to that question before the court-martial was that it could have been.—A. I meant by answering in that way that it could have been from—

Q. With the modifications you have made, of course.—A. That it could have been from the guard cartridge, sir.

Q. That is your opinion now?—A. My opinion now, sir, is that it is not from the guard cartridge, if the ordnance manual is correct, which I suppose it is. If it is correct, as I naturally think it would be, my opinion is that it is not from the guard cartridge, sir.

Q. Why?—A. Because this bullet is 1 part tin and either 20 or 22 parts lead.

Q. When did you make that test?—A. A short while ago, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Here in the city.

Q. When?—A. Three or four days ago, sir.

Q. At what place?—A. At the Ebbitt House.

Q. Who assisted you?—A. No one.

Q. How did you make the test?—A. By weighing the lead; by taking as near as I could. Of course I do not say that test is absolutely correct, but I say it is very near correct. I believe it to be very near correct. I got that by taking the weight of the lead and then putting it in an acid and taking it out and weighing it, and then taking the difference.

Q. What kind of an acid?—A. Senator, I can not call the names of the acids now, sir.

Q. What kind of scales or appliance had you for weighing it with the accuracy you describe?—A. Down in the drug store.

Q. Down in the drug store. Apothecary's scales?—A. Not the scales that they use out on the counter, but small scales that they use in the back part for mixing up medicines.

Q. What portion of the filings of this bullet did you take to make that experiment with?—A. I used three pieces of it, sir.

Q. Did you not know that you were going to produce those pieces in evidence?—A. Did I know I was going to produce the bullet in evidence?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, this test was on your own initiative?—A. It was in my own room; it was done by me.

Q. By your own suggestion?—A. Yes, sir; by my own suggestion.

Q. You did not have these pieces of bullets—the filings—before the court-martial?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you did not have them when you testified here before?—A. I had them, but did not have them on my person. They were in my quarters at the time, as I have stated to the committee this morning.

Q. You did not have your hunting coat in Brownsville, on the third visit you made to Brownsville?—A. I did have it on the visit when I took the cuttings out, but not on the third visit.

Q. What visit was it when you took the cuttings out?—A. The hunting trip, in October.

Q. And you wrapped them up in a piece of cigarette paper?—A. Yes, sir; I wrapped them up in a piece of cigarette paper, and I had in my hunting box a corkscrew that would fold up, and you would fold the screw over into the handle.

Q. I know; a very necessary thing.—A. Yes, sir; and I dropped those cuttings down in there, and then when I got to Fort Brown, when this case came up, I forgot where I had put them, and I looked about everywhere except the right place, and did not find them until last month.

Q. Did you not tell them in the court-martial that you placed those cuttings in a pocket of your hunting coat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that?—A. I had placed them in there, but had forgotten placing them in this corkscrew, and the way I found them in the corkscrew was this: That I had packed up everything, and I went to open a bottle of beer one morning and I remembered the corkscrew in my hunting box, and the hunting box was not locked and I went and got the corkscrew, and when I opened it the shavings fell out on the table, and I naturally remembered where they came from.

Q. Are you a chemist?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever study chemistry?—A. Not in any school, sir.

Q. How did you know the kind of acid to use in making this test?—A. I had been doing a good deal of experimenting lately, sir, with iron and zinc ore, and also with a lead and zinc and silver ore, and of course you can run the lead and silver out of the ore, and the lead will carry the silver off, by heating the lead to about 280° or 300°; and making different experiments with the ore was the way I became familiar with the different acids and the use of them, and the effect on lead.

Q. Had this bullet you extracted from the post gone through any other substance?—A. Sir?

Q. Had this bullet which you extracted from this post or timber, this upright, passed through any other substance before it struck the post?—A. I could not say, Senator. I do not know whether it had or not.

Q. You could not say whether it had or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know how much force would be required to strip the steel jacket from a bullet, or under what circumstances the steel jacket will be removed from a bullet?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever make any experiments as to that?—A. About a year and a half ago, or two years ago, I guess, while fixing the range about 9 miles out from Fort Brown, I tore down the old butts, and I noticed in there a great many bullets that had lodged against the woodwork to the parapet, and some of them had had the jackets stripped from them.

Q. What did they pass through before lodging in that parapet?—

A. They had gone through this earthen back in some places, and lumber running from 1 by 4 to 2 by 4, and some of them had gone through bags filled with sand, both stretchers and headers. I do not know that they had gone straight through. I did not pay much attention to it.

Q. But you would not undertake to say just what resistance would remove the jacket from a bullet?—A. No, sir; I would not.

Q. You do not pretend to be an expert on that matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Firing these bullets, even into water, will sometimes strip these jackets off?—A. I do not think so; I do not know, but I do not think it would. I do not understand how it would.

Q. You are quite clear about that?—A. I do not know about it, sir.

Q. No; I do not mean that you are quite clear, but that is your opinion, because you do not pretend to be an expert?—A. No, sir; I am not an expert.

Q. You examined the Cowen house; and how many shots did you find in that house?—A. I do not remember just the number of shots, Senator.

Q. I have a memorandum here—I do not know whether it is correct or not—saying that you thought there were twenty separate shots in the house?—A. There are a good many shot holes there, sir.

Q. What is that?—A. There are a good many shot holes there. I think it is somewhere near twenty shots, sir. I testified, I think, before the court-martial as to the number. It was fresh in my mind at the time.

Q. I will read to you from page 1898 of the hearings before this committee:

Q. There were about how many shots you found that had been fired into that house?—A. There were about twenty.

Q. About twenty shots. Twenty holes or twenty separate bullets?—A. Twenty separate bullets went in there.

That would be your remembrance now, would it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those twenty separate bullets went through practically all the rooms in that house, did they not—one or more of them?—A. Not all of them, sir. Some of them went through into two rooms.

Q. I say one or more of the bullets went through.—A. Yes, sir. There was only one bullet that went clear through the house and came out on the other side, sir. The others went through 6 or 7 inches, I should judge, of lumber.

Q. That house seemed to have been fired into more than any other house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were down there investigating the facts relating to the shooting up of the town, were you not?—A. I went down there to investigate, to try to determine the direction these shots came from.

Q. Did you make any inquiry there as to why it was that the firing was done into the Cowen house, if done by the colored troops?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody tell you anything about it?—A. A great many people told me, sir, that the colored troops shot into the Cowen house.

Q. Why?—A. That is the only thing they were talking about, and the only thing they could talk about at the time. I do not know why. It was a natural thing, I suppose, if a thing of that kind had happened in a small town, that the people would be talking about it.

Q. And why was it, did anyone tell you, that they thought the Cowen house was shot into more than any other house?—A. I do not remember why they said the Cowen house was shot into more than any other house.

Q. Or why it had been shot into at all?—A. I do not remember that, sir.

Q. You found public opinion there all one way, on this shooting, as to whether it was done by colored troops or not?—A. Well, as I remember, yes, sir. If anybody else had any other opinion I guess they were afraid to express it, the majority of them.

Q. You volunteer that statement. Did you have any evidence of anybody being afraid to express an opinion?—A. Nobody told me that they were afraid to, sir. But naturally, when people are wrought up over a thing, when it is none of your business, you would not antagonize them in any such way; and I guess if any of them had had that opinion they would have been pretty apt to keep it to themselves.

Q. Are you as clear about that as about other parts of your testimony, Lieutenant?—A. Sir?

Q. Are you as clear about that as you are about the other parts of your testimony?—A. You asked me the question, Senator, as to what people said, and you wanted to know why those people did not express themselves that way, and that is my reason why.

Q. And you think you are a disinterested witness?—A. Why, Senator, I was sent down there to perform a duty

Q. I am asking you now.—A. Yes, sir; and I am going to answer the question. I believe I have got manhood enough not to allow my judgment and opinion to come into these things. If I did not think so, I would request to be relieved of my duty. And even if I did have an opinion, I think I could give a correct and true report.

Q. There was something said about the orange tree that has been talked of, next to the Leahy house, the Leahy Hotel. You remember that tree there, do you not, Lieutenant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that obstruct the view of the fort?—A. Yes, sir; it obstructed the view to a certain extent. You could not see through the tree.

Q. But with the tree there, with any obstruction that there was from the tree, you could see?—A. Sir?

Q. With whatever obstruction there may have been from the tree, you could see?—A. If you were up in the upstairs window of Mts. Leahy's house, there are certain parts of the porch, and up a certain tree. Now, if you were down on the ground below the top of the tree—the tree had very thick foliage on it, and I could not see through the tree.

Q. Yes. I failed to make myself understood in my question. What I meant to have asked you, only you answered too quickly for me, was, when you were up in the second story of the Leahy Hotel—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. The tree, then, did not obstruct your view?—A. It did not obstruct the view except of the lower parts of the building, the lower porch and such as that. The upper part of the porch, sir; the upper porch was higher than the tree, except just where the top runs up [indicating].

Q. That is what we call the upper gallery and porch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is the main floor and then the gallery above it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The tree did not obstruct the view, whatever part of it would be in view from the window?—A. No, sir; the houses obstructed it.

Q. Yes; except the part of it which you have stated heretofore, and I do not care to go into that again.—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is all I want to ask.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You were asked about this man Allison, who was confined in jail when you were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether he has been released since you were there, from jail?—A. I do not know whether he has been released or not, sir. I at the time asked them if there was not anything against Allison, could he be released, and Mr. Kleiber said that the grand jury had indicted him, and of course he could be given bail, and he would give him $500 bail, and that he would be glad to do it, but that he could not release him before the next term of court; that he would have to be tried. He may be out on bail or he may be released. I do not know, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I understood you to state that while you had been detailed to go there at the request of Colonel Glenn, yet you had nothing to do with his making that request for your detail?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you did not know that you were going to be ordered to go there?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you got your orders to go at 9 or 10 o'clock at night?—A. I got the order at 9 or 10 at night, and that was the first I knew of it. I was out of the post the early part of the night and I did not know it until about between 9 and 10 o'clock.

Q. We had here an affidavit, which was read, of this man Dewalt. You heard the affidavit read, Lieutenant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I did not observe anything, did you, that contradicted his statement to you about his not having been assaulted, if that is a correct way to put it, by Allison?—A. No, sir; I did not see anything to contradict that statement. He went on and said further that anything else further than what he said was not true.

Q. Did you talk with him about any other subject than that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you say that the Mauser rifle that the Mexican soldiers carried was about .28 caliber?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the 7-millimeter gun, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. While our gun is .30 caliber?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Our bullets, I suppose, could not be fired out of a 7-millimeter or .28-caliber gun?—A. I do not think they could, Senator; it would be too tight.

Q. It would be dangerous?—A. It would be apt to explode the breech of the gun.

Q. Something was said here the other day when General Crozier was on the stand, about enlarging the bore of the Krag rifles so that they would accommodate the larger cartridge of the Springfield rifle. Do you know whether or not the bore of the rifle could be enlarged without injury to it?—A. I know that the box-magazine Winchester that fired that Krag ammunition is now on the market under the same model, and everything, that fires the Springfield; and the Krag, it seems to me, could be very easily reamed out, with a hand reamer, to take the Springfield ammunition, because the large part of the Springfield is one-fortieth of an inch larger, and the smaller part is only one-hundredth of an inch larger—I mean the Springfield ammunition—than the Krag.

Q. The bore would have to be lengthened, would it not, to accommodate the Springfield ammunition?—A. Well, you would have to bore down also for the bullets. You would have to make the bullet seat larger and longer to take the bullet. Of course the bullets of the two are of the same type.

Q. Now, if the Springfield bore is only one-hundredth of an inch greater in diameter than the Krag bore, the reaming out would have to be on each side of the circumference only one two-hundredth of an inch, would it not?—A. That is all, sir.

Q. How do we get these dimensions that you refer to, if you can tell us? They are not given in the official regulations for the use of the magazine rifle.—A. I do not know whether they are given in the publications of the Ordnance Department or not. I got them by measuring them.

Q. By what?—A. By making a measurement.

Q. You got them by measuring them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to look at page 66 of the official publication I will hand you, entitled, "Description and Rules for the Management of the United States Magazine Rifle, Model of 1898, and Magazine Carbine, Model of 1899, Caliber .30." Dimensions of the bore of the gun are given there in detail.—A. Yes, sir; here is "Diameter of bore, exterior diameter at muzzle, exterior diameter at breech, length of bore."

Q. I call your attention to this, beginning "Diameter of chamber."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would just read what that says about the dimensions of the chamber of the rifle. I will read it and you look on and see if I read it correctly:

Length of travel of bullet in bore.....	28. 239
Diameter of chamber, rear end.....	0. 462
Diameter of chamber, front end.....	0. 419
Diameter of neck of chamber, rear end.....	0. 338
Diameter of neck of chamber, front end.....	0. 334
Length of body of chamber.....	1. 62
Length of shoulder of chamber.....	0. 164
Length of neck of chamber.....	0. 486
Length of chamber, including throat.....	2. 33

I have read that correctly, have I?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to what appears at page 49 of the instructions issued by the War Department, 1904, for the use of the Springfield rifle now in use by the Army, and I read, as follows, the corresponding measurements:

Length of travel of bullet in bore.....	21. 402
Diameter of chamber, rear end.....	0. 4716
Diameter of chamber, front end.....	0. 442
Diameter of neck of chamber, rear end.....	0. 3425
Diameter of neck of chamber, front end.....	0. 3405
Length of body of chamber.....	1. 793
Length of shoulder of chamber.....	0. 16
Length of neck of chamber.....	0. 46
Length of chamber, including throat.....	2. 488

Now, by deducting the smaller dimensions, as given, of the Krag, from the larger figures, as given, of the measurements of the chamber in the Springfield rifle, we would get the exact difference, would we not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understand you to say you have ascertained by actual measurement that that difference would be less than one-hundredth of an inch as to the diameter of the bore at one point, and less than one-fortieth of an inch at another point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that in determining the amounts of boring or reaming that would have to be done you would divide those dimensions, so that you would ream out less than one two-hundredths of an inch at one place and less than one-eightieth of an inch in another?—A. That reaming would be even around the barrel.

Q. It would be even on the diameter, but if you wanted to ream out on the diameter one-hundredth of an inch, you would ream out, at any one point, only one two-hundredths of an inch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because that would be doubled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I asked you to do that, did I not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as to the use of an acid on this lead filling which you had, you spoke to me about that, and I approved it and asked you then to go ahead and do it, did I not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was your own suggestion, but you did it with my approval?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you think that this reaming out that you speak of could be done without much trouble, and with a hand ream?—A. I think, sir, it can be done very easily with a hand ream. I have never reamed one, but I should think it could be done very easily, sir.

Q. Look at the rear end of the bore of this Krag rifle and see whether or not the barrel is thick enough to admit of that much reaming without, in your opinion, jeopardizing its strength [handing rifle to witness]?—A. Of course, any reaming would affect it, but I do not think it would affect it to such an extent that it would be dangerous to fire it.

Q. What is that?—A. Any reaming would affect it that way, but I do not think that that much reaming would make it dangerous to fire the gun. I would not hesitate a second to fire one.

Q. If you are reported as saying, in answer to a question put to you, when you testified before the Penrose court-martial, that you did not know whether or not you got out all of that bullet that you bored out of the post in front of Crixell's saloon, that, I understand you to say, is a mistake?—A. Yes, sir; I did not intend my statement to be that. If I made that statement, it was an error.

Q. Either you misunderstood the question, or it was a mistake in the answer?—A. Either I did not express myself clearly, or there was a mistake in taking it down, or afterwards in printing it.

Q. I understood you to say that Captain Hay, and Lieutenant Fitch, also represented the prosecution in the Penrose case, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both asked you to get information, or asked you about the points as to which you had gotten information?—A. No, sir; the only thing Captain Hay asked me, as I remember, was, would I see Mr. Kleiber and ask him to please send him that map of Brownsville.

Q. Captain Hay knew that you were then going to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He asked you that before you went?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was no secret before you went?—A. No, sir; it was a department order, furnished to everyone.

Q. Nobody objected to your going, or objected to your testifying after you came back, did they?—A. No, sir; they objected to my testifying as an expert, because I was not an expert and I did not claim to be one.

Q. You did not claim to be an expert, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You give it as your opinion, as I understand you, that anyone who knows how to handle a hand ream could bore out one of these Krag barrels so that the Springfield cartridge might be fitted into it?—A. Yes, sir; I think any man in the West that is used to carrying firearms could do it very readily and easily. They are posted on those things, most of them, the rangers and ranchmen.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Did you ever ream out a barrel of one of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see anyone do it?—A. One of these guns?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about the required strength of a barrel in order to resist the pressure in one of these high-power guns? Do you know the required strength of the barrel—of the steel?—A. No, sir; I know it has to be a great deal stronger for high power, and I know there is a formula used—for so many grains, a certain strength of barrel—but I can not recall that formula.

Q. Do you know what the strength of barrel would have to be to resist the pressure in one of these high-power guns?—A. No, sir; I do not know the thickness required. I think the weight of the two guns is about the same. The Springfield may be a little heavier on account of having so much woodwork on it.

Q. I am asking you now purely with reference to the barrel; about reaming it out.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know whether reaming it out would render it unsafe to be fired or not?—A. Why, no, sir; I do not see how it would render it unsafe. It is 5 grains difference, and the difference of 5 grains is a great deal in white powder, but if that rifle is perfectly safe to be fired in action the number of rounds—200 rounds—that a man is supposed to carry on his person when he goes into battle, then it would certainly be safe to fire in hunting, a few shots at a time.

Q. After reaming out?—A. Yes, sir; after reaming out.

Q. Then if it was perfectly safe after reaming it out once, could you ream it out again, and would it still be perfectly safe?—A. Make it still larger?

Q. Ream it out a second time.—A. Of course every time you ream it out it reduces its strength.

Q. You do not know how much?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever work in a machine shop?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever handle a reamer?—A. Yes, sir; I have handled a reamer.

Q. Doing what?—A. Reaming out different pieces of iron and metal. I have fooled with guns a great deal.

Q. But you say you never attempted to ream out the barrel of a gun?—A. I never attempted to ream out the barrel of a gun, sir. I know it is a very simple thing, and I can do it. Anybody can take a reamer and put it in a brace and put it in a gun barrel and ream the barrel out.

Q. But you never saw it done?—A. No, sir.

Q. And never tried it yourself?—A. Never tried it myself; no, sir; but I would not hesitate to fire a gun which had been reamed out.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What is that answer?—A. If I had a box-magazine Winchester and wanted to ream it out and use this ammunition in it, I would ream it out and use it.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Can not you use the Springfield ammunition in the Winchester rifle?—A. The Winchester, 1898 model, has a chamber—there are two different kinds, but the same model, the same length of barrel, the same number of turns in the barrel; and every other way they are the same, with the exception that the sighting may be a little higher, and the chamber is made to take the Springfield ammunition, while the other chamber is made to take the Krag ammunition. I did own a Winchester box-magazine rifle, and if I owned that gun now and wanted to use the Springfield ammunition, I would simply go down to the machine shop and take a hand reamer and ream it out and go ahead and use the ammunition.

Q. But when it was fired out of the Winchester it would have the same number of lands as if fired out of a Springfield?—A. How is that?

Q. A bullet fired out of a Winchester rifle would have the same number of lands as if fired out of a Springfield?—A. I do not know, sir. The Springfield has got four lands. I do not know whether the Winchester has four or five.

Q. Have you not made any inquiries since you testified before?—A. No, sir; I intended to.

Q. My remembrance is that you did not know, at that time.—A. I intended two or three times to get a rifle and look, but never have done it.

Q. You never have done it?—A. No, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Lieutenant Leckie, I understood you to say that a gun could be reamed out with a hand reamer with the tools they usually have on a ranch?—A. Sir?

Q. Did I understand you correctly, that a gun could be reamed out to change the caliber, with a hand reamer and such tools as they ordinarily have at a ranch?—A. No, sir; not to change the caliber, Senator, but to change the seat.

Q. I was not quite certain whether I understood you.—A. No, sir. What I said was that the rangers and most ranchmen were familiar with firearms, and in the early days—

Q. That is what you said about the ranch?—A. That is what I said about a ranch.

Q. I understood you to say that it could be done with the tools that they had on a ranch?—A. No, sir; I did not say anything about tools on a ranch.

Q. It could be done at a ranch?—A. Yes, sir; it could be done at a ranch, if a man had a hand reamer and the tools.

Q. If you were going to do that, you would take the barrel apart from the wood, would you not?—A. I think it would be better to disconnect it. May I look at this rifle again?

Q. Yes; I just wanted to get at what would be done, the modus operandi.—A. (After examination of rifle.) Why, you can take the bolt out, sir, and then you could ream it.

Q. Then you would fasten the gun in a vise, would you?—A. Yes, sir; it would be better to fasten it in a vise.

Q. You would hold the gun in position in a vise, would you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you bore in from the breach and work your bit or reamer?—A. You would remove your bolt and work it in this way [indicating]. I have not tried it, Senator, but I would remove the bolt, and if the reamer was long enough I would have no trouble at all. In case the reamer was not long enough, then the gun would have to be dismantled.

Q. How long would the reamer have to be not to dismantle the gun?—A. The reamer would have to be the length of the bolt there, plus the length of the shell.

Q. Do you think there would be room enough to turn the brace here [indicating]?—A. You would have to put the reamer in here and bring the handle around here [indicating].

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That is, you would bring the handle around to the side of the gun, if you were going to do it?—A. Yes, sir; I would ream out the length of the shell first.

Q. You would ream out how great a length of barrel?—A. The length of the shell.

Q. The length of the shell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be all, would it?—A. Yes, sir; you would have to take a reamer that was of the same caliber.

Q. The same caliber as the shell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it would have to be the length from the bolt here plus the length of the shell down to that point here [indicating], and then you would have to take another, a .30-caliber reamer, and ream out as far as the bullet would go, because the bullet would go farther in than in the Krag. You would have to ream out with one reamer a certain number of inches, 2 or 3, more or less, and then insert another one and ream an inch or less.—A. Well, the difference between this and the Krag ammunition.

Q. And then from there to the end of the barrel it would not require anything?—A. No, sir; the caliber is the same.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you say in answer to Senator Warner that you would have to bore out and make this chamber larger for a distance of 3 or 4 inches?—A. No, sir; I said the distance of the difference in the length of the ammunition.

Q. You would only have to enlarge it the length that the Springfield shell is greater than the Krag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is only about three-eighths of an inch?—A. I think that is only about three-eighths of an inch.

Q. But, whatever it may be, the dimensions I gave a minute ago, and which are in the record, will tell exactly what it would be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, are these Winchester rifles, which are changed to take this Springfield ammunition, reamed out after they are manufactured, or are they manufactured at the arsenal in the first place that way, if you know?—A. I don't know, sir. I do not think that the Winchester people would put in an entire outfit of machinery for making the same barrel which they already had—machinery which is very costly—for that difference, when they could simply ream it out.

Q. When they could ream it out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you do not know about that?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. Very well; that is all.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Lieutenant, your investigations and what you discovered and your friendship for the officers and everything in connection with your trips to Brownsville would in no way influence your testimony other than to give your very best judgment as to what you discovered?—A. That is all, sir. I am under oath, sir, and just actual facts are all I can testify to.

Senator SCOTT. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF JOHN I. KLEIBER.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Please give your name in full to the stenographer.—A. John I. Kleiber.

Q. What is your age, Mr. Kleiber?—A. I am 41 years of age.

Q. You are a lawyer by profession?—A. I am; yes, sir.

Q. What official position do you occupy in Brownsville, or in Cameron County?—A. I am district attorney of the twenty-eighth judicial district.

Q. That has several counties in it?—A. Five counties.

Q. District attorney is what we call in some places prosecuting attorney? You attend to all the business of the county?—A. Yes, sir; I represent the State in the district court—the circuit court, as they call it in some States.

Q. Were you in Brownsville the night of this shooting, the 13th of August?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was in Dallas, Tex.

Q. How soon after this did you return to Brownsville?—A. I returned to Brownsville, reaching there on the 18th of August; Saturday, I think; Saturday night.

Q. Brownsville is your home city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Thirty-two years.

Q. Practically all your life?—A. Practically all my life; yes, sir; except while I was off at college; that has been my home.

Q. When did you return to Brownsville?—A. On Saturday night, August 18.

Q. And this shooting up of the town was Monday evening?—A. On the night of Monday, the 13th, and the morning of Tuesday, the 14th, so I am told.

Q. When you returned, did you see Major Penrose?—A. I first met Major Penrose on Monday, the 20th.

Q. You took up the investigation of this matter when you came back?—A. I did. The citizens' committee, when I reached Brownsville, stopped any further investigation, and I took up an official investigation as district attorney.

Q. Yes.—A. And I will state that the district judge came down. I wired him, and he came down on Tuesday, and we proceeded to investigate it together.

Q. That was Judge Welch?—A. Judge Welch, who has since been assassinated; yes, sir.

Q. You are quite well acquainted in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you continued the investigation of this matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You continued it and conducted it before the grand jury, did you?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Now, from the investigation that you made as an official, as district attorney, was there any evidence that came to you—I can not ask what came before the grand jury, because that would not be proper, but that came to your knowledge—tending to show that anyone excepting the colored troops did the shooting up of the town of Brownsville that night?—A. You say, did any evidence—

Q. Any evidence.—A. (Continuing.) Come before me tending to show that anyone excepting the colored troops did it?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; nothing at all; nor any intimation of a fact.

Q. What was the feeling of the people of Brownsville?

Senator FORAKER. Senator Warner, I would not go into that, it seems to me.

Senator WARNER. That is correct, Senator Foraker, that is correct; and I want to say to the committee that the only reason I did not put on Mr. Kleiber before you commenced was that he had gone over to New York. I am perfectly willing to stop right here.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I would like to ask you a question or two. Are you the prosecuting attorney, as we say up here?—A. Yes, sir; we use the expression.

Q. What are you, district attorney, Mr. Kleiber? Is that your title?—A. Yes, sir; I am district attorney of the twenty-eighth judicial district. We call it prosecuting attorney.

Q. As district attorney, or prosecuting attorney, it is your business to call witnesses and present them to the grand jury, is it not?—

A. Yes, sir; all that I knew of, or that I had any reason to believe knew anything about it.

Q. Yes; so that you know all the testimony there is that was brought before the grand jury, do you not?—A. Yes, sir; I know all the testimony that was brought before them.

Q. This was a very important case, was it?—A. It was, sir.

Q. You gave particular attention to it, did you not?—A. I did; and I will state, if you will pardon me, right there, that as soon as I reached home, late Saturday night, on Sunday I proceeded to post myself as to what had passed, and on Monday it was such a serious matter that I wired the district judge, whose home was at Corpus Christi, to come down, and he came down and we worked together in the investigation.

Q. And you did everything that you could to get evidence that would enable you to indict somebody?—A. Well, we were not after indicting anybody, but we did everything we could to ascertain who the parties were who were guilty, and if we had sufficient evidence to make a prima facie against any individual or individuals we would indict them; but we were not seeking an indictment.

Q. And no one was indicted?—A. No, sir; the evidence was not sufficient.

Q. And you recommended, did you not, in your report to the grand jury that nobody be indicted?—A. I will not say that, sir; no. The grand jury, as a matter of fact, did not indict. Of course my duty ceases when I present the facts to them. Of course they pass on the question whether an indictment is to be found or not; and they did not find an indictment.

Q. Yes; and notwithstanding the fact that 12 men had been arrested civilly before that time.—A. Twelve men had been arrested, but never had been taken into custody, for reasons known to the committee. I need not go into that.

Q. They were left with the military authorities?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were, at the time the grand jury was in session, under arrest at Fort Sam Houston?—A. So I understand. I know they were under military control.

Q. Now, you had before the grand jury all the testimony, I suppose?—A. Available.

Q. That was had by you at the time they were arrested?—A. Oh, yes, and perhaps more. I can not go into the evidence before the grand jury.

Q. Now, let me ask you about how you took this testimony before the grand jury—what your practice is. Is it reduced to writing?—A. It is.

Q. Taken in affidavit form?—A. In affidavit form. In narrative form, as a rule, and sometimes we have question and answer; but as a rule it is taken in affidavit form.

Q. It is my recollection that Senator Culberson, in a speech that he made to the Senate, embodied in his speech some affidavits that were taken before the grand jury?—A. I know nothing of that of my own knowledge. I heard he did.

Q. I want to predicate on that some questions. Has this testimony that was taken before the grand jury in this narrative form—the affidavits—been made public in any way?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir; not through me. I understand that Senator Culberson had copies of some of these affidavits, but he did not get them from me, nor did I know anything about it at all at the time. I have heard since that he had them.

Q. Is there any objection to the committee being furnished with copies of all that testimony?—A. We have no right to do that; as far as I am concerned I have no right; and I could not do it, because under the law of Texas all evidence taken before a grand jury is secret, with one exception. The language of the statute, if I remember it, is "except in the case of a judicial proceeding wherein the truth or falsity of anything testified to before the said body shall be in issue," or "shall be under investigation."

Q. Now, if it is contrary to the statute of Texas to make public in any way the testimony taken before the grand jury, how did it come that Senator Culberson got possession of that?

Senator TALIAFERRO. I submit that Senator Culberson is the proper person to tell us that.

The WITNESS. I do not know, sir, of my own knowledge.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Have you any assistants?—A. No, sir.

Q. We take anything here, whether it is upon personal knowledge or upon hearsay. About how many witnesses were examined before the grand jury on this matter?—A. On this matter, to the best of my recollection, from twenty to thirty; perhaps from twenty-five to thirty, more or less.

Q. We do not want anything we are not entitled to have, but we would like to have these affidavits.—A. I will state to the committee if you will pardon me, that it would be a very great pleasure to me to furnish this committee with those affidavits. I know where they are. I can put my hand on them at any time. But under the law of Texas I am prohibited from so doing. If Senator Culberson got them, he got them without my knowledge, and he would not have gotten them from me.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, you superintended the collection of these bullets that have been collected and sent here as exhibits, did you—no; that was Mr. Creager.—A. Mr. Creager did that; yes, sir. The only bullet that I ever saw, I think, was a part of a bullet that young Garza picked out of the sideboard in his house.

Q. Now, in the investigation before the grand jury you proceeded upon the assumption that some of the negro soldiers had done the shooting, didn't you?—A. No, sir; I did not proceed upon any assumption.

Q. Was not that the general opinion in Brownsville?—A. I had no opinion about it, except such as I have formed from evidence. I want to say to the committee that my course throughout this whole matter has been that of an official trying to do his duty, not only to the people who we felt had been injured, but to the parties accused of having committed that injury, and although we were satisfied from the evidence, and the grand jury reported to the court, that this shooting had been done by men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, yet that the evidence did not point with sufficient certainty to any individual or individuals to justify or warrant them in bringing in an indictment and presenting these parties.

Q. Now, one other thing. This man Allison who was indicted, he was an ex-soldier and he was indicted, was he?—A. Yes, sir; he was indicted for an assault with an intent to commit murder.

Q. How long has he now been in jail?—A. I don't know whether he is in jail now or not. He was in jail in March. I have not been home more than a day or two since March.

Q. You say you don't know whether he is in jail now?—A. No; he may have given bond, Senator.

Q. You have not heard that he has been released within the last few days?—A. No, sir; I have no intimation. He may be on bond or he may be in jail.

Q. Did you see any bullets except those that were sent to us?—A. Well, I have seen a number of bullets, Senator. I have seen some of the bullets of the Cowen house, but of course I could not identify them again, because I am no expert at all. I am not familiar with bullets; but I have seen a number of bullets; yes, sir.

Q. We have had nine sent to us. What I wanted to know was whether any others had been brought to your knowledge except those that have been sent to us—brought to your knowledge as district attorney?—A. Those that came to you came through Mr. Purdy; through the executive department. They were in the possession of the grand jury and of the sheriff. We had those before us, and, in fact, it was through me that Mr. Purdy obtained those bullets and those empty shells and clips and the bandoleer from the sheriff, who was the custodian

Q. You turned them all over to him?—A. That is, the sheriff turned them over in my presence to Mr. Purdy.

Q. And all that you had?—A. Yes, sir; all that we had.

Q. And all the shells?—A. Yes, sir; all the shells that we had, to my knowledge.

By Senator Scott:

Q. We had a lady here from Brownsville—Mrs. Leahy.—A. Mrs. Kate Leahy.

Q. In response to a question I asked her she said she saw one of the men that did the shooting, and she said that she saw him afterwards in Captain Lyon's company, and that she could pick him out of—I don't know how many men—but that she could pick him out. Now, did you have any such knowledge that she had that information, and why didn't you have her before your grand jury and pick the man out?—A. Simply because we had no knowledge of it, sir. I never heard of it until, I think, Mrs. Leahy testified before the Penrose trial—did she not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. Yes, sir. I then ascertained it for the first time. I did not know it. In other words, it is a fact that Mrs. Leahy did not disclose; and I could tell you why, I think, she did not. I think she was afraid to.

Q. I do not know that it would be pertinent for me to say to the committee, but she told me the reason why that you did not serve her with any summons.—A. Mrs. Leahy was never summoned before the grand jury because no one ever had any intimation that she knew anything about the matter at all.

Q. You knew that she testified that she was not afraid?—A. That was at the Penrose court.

Q. But here she testified that she was not afraid of anything.—A. I saw it in the Post; yes, sir. I smiled, a minute ago, to myself.

Q. You say she was afraid?—A. No; I do not say she was afraid. I said I presumed she was.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. As a matter of fact, was she examined before the grand jury?—

A. She was not, because no one ever had any intimation—I certainly did not, nor did any member of the grand jury—that Mrs. Leahy knew anything about this matter, one way or the other.

By Senator Scott:

Q. Would it not be natural to presume that she did know more than anybody else, when she was right there, almost the nearest house to the barracks?—A. I did not know that she did. Lots of people lived around those barracks that never came out. I did not know where Mrs. Leahy was.

Q. You did not know that she protected Mr. Cowen's family that night?—A. All I knew about that at that time was that after the shooting, so I understood, in fact Mrs. Cowen told me, that after the shooting she had gone with her children over to Mrs. Leahy's, and that Mrs. Leahy had taken them in.

Q. Would it not be rather natural that you would have such a person summoned before the grand jury?—A. You mean everybody in the neighborhood?

Q. No; I mean the lady of this house that had been shot into?—
A. Mrs. Leahy's house was not shot into.

Q. We will say that it was not shot into, but she testified here that she saw them within 35 feet.—A. It first came to my knowledge—the first intimation that I had that Mrs. Leahy knew these things—at the Penrose court. I did not know it before, or when the grand jury was in session.

Q. Do you, as prosecutor, consider that the grand jury did everything in their power to find out who did this shooting?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What was the remark you made as to Mrs. Leahy, as a reason why you did not call her?—A. The reason why we did not call her was because we did not know—we had no intimation that she knew anything of this.

Senator FORAKER. I should like to hear the testimony read, what the witness said about her being afraid.

The official reporter read as follows:

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. We had a lady here from Brownsville—Mrs. Leahy.—A. Mrs. Kate Leahy.

Q. In response to a question I asked her she said she saw one of the men that did the shooting, and she said that she saw him afterwards in Captain Lyon's company, and that she could pick him out of I don't know how many men, but that she could pick him out. Now, did you have any such knowledge, that she had that information, and why didn't you have her before your grand jury and pick the man out?—A. Simply because we had no knowledge of it, sir. I never heard of it until, I think, Mrs. Leahy testified before the Penrose trial—did she not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. Yes, sir. I then ascertained it for the first time. I did not know it. In other words, it is a fact that Mrs. Leahy did not disclose, and I could tell you why I think she did not. I think she was afraid to.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. In that connection, there was a great deal of excitement there at the time at Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If Mrs. Leahy had been alarmed, it would have been no discredit to her?—A. Not at all.

Q. The town, I fancy, was full of people who were restless and alarmed?—A. I was very alarmed and restless myself, sir, until the troops left, and things quieted down.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Mrs. Leahy is a woman who talks rather freely, is she not?—
A. Well, no; I will not say that.

Q. You would not say that?—A. No; I would not say that.

Q. I supposed, from our observation of her, that she was a woman who would be apt to tell any important fact that she might know of such an event?—A. She might.

Q. You made an effort, did you not, to get everybody before the grand jury?—A. I did; everybody who could possibly know anything or probably know anything.

Q. Did you have Mr. Cowen there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mrs. Cowen?—A. No, sir; Mrs. Cowen was ill. We did not have her, but I talked with her.

Q. Did you have the two policemen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The two policemen who were in the custody of Mrs. Leahy that night?—A. I do not know who those policemen were. I thought you meant the policemen that were on the street. I never heard about the policemen being at Mrs. Leahy's house until the Penrose court. She never has to my knowledge disclosed the names of those policemen, so I can not tell you whether we had those policemen before us or not.

Q. You did not have Mrs. Leahy before the grand jury?—A. No, sir; for the reason I have given.

Q. That is, because you did not know at that time?—A. Did not know and had no reason to believe that she knew.

Q. About how long after this shooting did the grand jury meet?—A. About three weeks.

Q. The subject was talked about every day and every hour in the day, was it not?—A. Yes, sir. When the grand jury met things were very much excited, and, in fact, we had people before the grand jury who said they were afraid to say anything before, and that they would only testify in the secrecy of the grand-jury room.

Q. We do not want the testimony given before the grand jury, unless you are willing to give it.—A. You asked me about the condition of affairs.

Q. Please pay attention to the question, whether this subject was not talked about every day there?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. In that community?—A. Certainly.

Q. In the three weeks intervening after the shooting down to the time when you took up this grand-jury investigation?—A. Certainly, sir.

Q. And you were trying all the while to get all the testimony you could as to the identity of these men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during all that time you did not hear that Mrs. Leahy had any such knowledge as she testified to before the Penrose court-martial and before this committee?—A. I never knew of it, sir, until that time. Pardon me, I should like to correct that. Did not Mrs. Leahy give Mr. Purdy an affidavit along those lines?

Q. Yes; I believe so.—A. Now, I will correct that.

Q. You did not know it until that time?—A. Not until she gave that affidavit to Mr. Purdy, which was last December or January.

Q. Do you know how Mr. Purdy happened to examine her, upon whose suggestion? How did Mr. Purdy ascertain about it?—A. He was living at her house, and I think she told him then for the first time. I knew he boarded at her house.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Is it permissible under the laws of Texas to reveal the names of your witnesses before the grand jury?—A. Oh, yes; it is permissible.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. This man Allison was indicted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he indicted for any other reason than that a prima facie case was made that he had committed the offense charged?—A. He was indicted because at least nine men of the twelve concluded that a prima facie case had been made against him for the offense charged.

Q. You knew Lieutenant Leckie?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he was at Brownsville, did he have an interview with you in the presence of Dee Dewalt?—A. Yes, sir; the party alleged to have been assaulted by Allison.

Q. What was that interview? Just state.—A. Mr. Leckie came down to Brownsville during the latter part of the Penrose court and wanted to see Allison, who was in jail, and I understood he was looking for me. I called up the jail, and Mr. Leckie was already up there, and I told the sheriff to allow Mr. Leckie access to the prisoner, to allow him to speak to him in private. Meantime I had a talk with him over the 'phone. He said he wanted to talk to Allison, and also he said he wanted a copy of the indictment. I told him that I would instruct the clerk to prepare him a certified copy of the indictment. That afternoon Mr. Leckie came down to the clerk's office while I was there and said that he had been talking with Allison. He also spoke about Dewalt, and I understood him to say that Dewalt wanted to claim that he had not been assaulted. I sent for Dewalt. He came to the clerk's office, and he and Mr. Leckie and I went out into the back room—the warehouse. Dewalt was under the influence of liquor pretty fully, and I said to him, "Dewalt, I understand from Mr. Leckie that you deny that you were assaulted at any time by this man Allison." I said, "Didn't you state so and so to me in regard to it?" He hesitated and started to stutter, and he was pretty full. Finally he admitted that he had made this statement to me and that it was true.

Q. What statement?—A. That Allison had made this assault upon him. I also said to him, "Don't you know that William Henry was there, and that Steve Taylor was there, and that William Henry and Taylor, or one of them, disarmed Allison, took the pistol away from him?" They were all colored men. Dewalt said, "Yes, it was so," that he had told me so, that he did not remember seeing Allison with the pistol, but did remember that Allison did come in, and used the language that he was going to do him up, and that Allison went to the back room and came back, and that those other darkies disarmed him. Finally, he excused himself. He said, "I am pretty full, Mr. Kleiber." I said, "Yes, you are pretty full, but I wanted to speak to you in Mr. Leckie's presence, as I understand you are denying this, and I want to refresh your memory." He said he understood it, and he walked off.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Right there, did he deny that he had told Lieutenant Leckie what Lieutenant Leckie had reported to you?—A. I don't know that he either denied it or affirmed it. Of course, when Lieutenant Leckie reported to me that the fellow denied it I believed Lieutenant Leckie. I had no reason to doubt Lieutenant Leckie, but I wanted myself placed right with Lieutenant Leckie. That is why I sent for him. I have no doubt that Mr. Leckie told the truth and that Dewalt may have told him this, but I wanted to face Leckie with Dewalt and have the truth from him. I wanted Mr. Leckie to get the truth. I did not want Mr. Leckie to go away with the impression that this man Allison had been indicted without good reason.

Q. I understand Mr. Leckie to state that Mr. Dewalt told him that Allison had not assaulted him, and that he reported it to you and that you sent for Dewalt, and I understand Mr. Leckie to say that Mr. Dewalt admitted that he had told Leckie that, but admitted to you that he had told the other thing?—A. That is right; and, furthermore, he admitted to me in the presence of Mr. Leckie that what he had told me was true.

Q. And he admitted in your presence and Mr. Leckie's presence that he had told Mr. Leckie the other thing?—A. Well, he did not say it in so many words, but you would conclude that from the general conversation.

Q. He did not deny that he had told Mr. Leckie that?—A. No, sir; and I myself believed that he had told Mr. Leckie that, else I would not have sent for him.

Q. In other words, there is no contradiction between you and Mr. Leckie about it?—A. Not necessarily, for Mr. Leckie admits the conversation with Dewalt. That is what he testifies to.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Did you send for Dewalt?—A. Yes, sir. As soon as Mr. Leckie told me this, I went right in to the clerk. In fact, Mr. Leckie told me that in the clerk's office, and I went right into the clerk and asked him to send a striker out to get Dewalt.

Q. I understood from Lieutenant Leckie's testimony that he made an appointment with Dewalt to meet him at your office?—A. No; I sent for Dewalt. He may have met Dewalt himself afterwards and made the appointment. That is possible; but I sent for him. He and Mr. Leckie may have met on the street.

Q. Yes; he said they met at the saloon.—A. Perhaps so.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, Mr. Dewalt has made an affidavit before Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Tex., in which he says:

On the following day we met at the office of Mr. Louis Kowalski, clerk of the district court of Cameron County, Tex., and in the presence of the Hon. John I. Kleiber, whom I requested to be present when I had the conversation with Lieutenant Leckie, so that he might hear what I had to say, Lieutenant Leckie asked me—

And so forth. That is to say, according to Mr. Dewalt, you were present because he made the request.—A. I think, gentlemen, that is immaterial. As a matter of fact, I sent for him. Mr. Leckie says, according to Senator Taliaferro, that he made the interview.

Q. He may have sent for you, but you sent for him?—A. I am very clear about that. The minute Mr. Leckie told me this I went to the clerk and asked him to send for Dewalt, as I wanted the matter cleared up at once, before Mr. Leckie left town.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. JOHN H. RICE, U. S. ARMY.

Capt. JOHN H. RICE, U. S. Army, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Give your full name.—A. John H. Rice.

Q. You are a captain in the Regular Army?—A. Yes, sir; a captain in the Ordnance Department of the Army.

Q. Stationed here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Captain Rice, did you take part in those tests which General

Crozier made and testified to, in regard to the cleaning of guns?—
A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Were you a witness to all the tests that were made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you inspect the guns after the cleaning?—A. I did.

Q. Were the guns clean enough to have passed an inspection directed to telling whether the gun had been recently fired?—A. All those that were cleaned would have passed an inspection.

Q. Did you clean any of them yourself?—A. Yes, sir; I cleaned one of those that was cleaned in the dark, and I cleaned some of the others. I don't remember the exact number. There were quite a number altogether cleaned, and one other man and myself did the work. Sometimes he did it, and sometimes I did it.

Q. Mr. Palmer was the name of the other man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those guns that you and Mr. Palmer cleaned you examined carefully after the cleaning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in your judgment they would have passed an inspection directed to determining whether they had been recently fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been here in the Ordnance Department?—A. In Washington, do you mean?

Q. In Washington.—A. Since a year ago last April.

Q. How long have you been in the Ordnance Department?—A. Since December, 1898.

Q. Before that you were where?—A. I was in the cavalry.

Q. And did you there inspect rifles at regular inspections?—A. I inspected carbines; yes, sir.

Q. They were the Krag carbine, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you inspected those when inspections occurred?—A. Yes, sir; not always, but frequently.

Q. So that you are familiar with the work of inspecting a rifle, from having done it a great deal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You cleaned the gun that was cleaned in the dark?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the condition of that barrel when you examined it afterwards?—A. As far as you could tell by the eye, it was perfectly clean. There was no examination made with a cloth at the time, but it was carefully examined by sighting through it and using a reflector to throw the light into the barrel.

Q. Do you mean something white?—A. Yes, sir; a white piece of paper.

Q. And at that time it appeared clean, without subjecting it to the test of a rag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose that a gun cleaned in that rapid way were allowed to stand, would it, in your opinion, foul the gun?—A. It would.

Q. In the course of two or three days?—A. Certainly in the course of two or three days it would. In that connection I would state that I have not made that experiment myself, but that is a matter of general knowledge with anyone who has had experience with these guns.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. When was this inspection made?—A. On June 5, at about one o'clock.

Q. June 5 of this year?—A. Yes, sir. I presume you refer to the one that we were just talking of?

Q. Yes; the one when you cleaned a gun in a minute, in the dark.—

A. Yes, sir; that was June 5.

Q. That was by the use of the thong brush?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many times did you draw the thong brush through?—
A. Five times.

Q. And you were in the dark, and you could draw the thong brush through, and you say you drew it through five times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us on what date it was that General Crozier testified?—A. June 6.

Q. He testified the day following this experiment; did he not?—
A. He did.

Q. Within twenty-four hours after this cleaning and inspection took place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time in the day was it when you inspected this gun after cleaning it?—A. About 1 o'clock.

Q. About 1 o'clock in the day, and he testified the next morning. I wish you would look at the gun now that you cleaned, and tell us whether it is in the same condition it was when you cleaned it. I wish you would look at that gun and tell us whether that is the gun.—A. I don't know the gun, sir.

Q. But you can tell by looking at it as to whether it is clean or not. I wish you would inspect it and see.—A. (Inspecting one of the rifles.) That one is not.

Q. That one is not clean. Now look at the gun I hand you.—
A. (After inspecting the rifle.) That is not, either.

Q. That is not clean either, is it? How does it compare with the other gun?—A. There seems to be very little difference between them.

Q. Very little difference. One is just about as dirty as the other?—
A. Yes, sir; they seem to be about the same.

Q. Just about the same. If you did not know anything about the gun you would not know they had ever been cleaned, would you, Captain?—A. No, sir.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Has not one of those had a rag run through it since it has been in this room?

Senator FORAKER. Yes; the second gun examined by the witness was the gun that was cleaned, or said to have been cleaned, and since this gun which the witness cleaned in that way was presented here by General Crozier it has had a rag run through it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Witness, I want to ask you for information. When I used to go hunting and had a gun standing about, I had to clean it every few days or dust got into the barrel. What is done with guns in the companies in that regard when once cleaned? How long before they are expected to have to be cleaned again without firing?—A. Well, I am not familiar with that at the present time. In the time when I was in the cavalry they usually oiled them after they were cleaned, and then before an inspection they would wipe the oil out with a rag, which would remove the dust.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. When a gun is thoroughly cleaned it does not foul up, does it?—
A. It depends upon what you mean, sir, by "thoroughly cleaned."

Q. I mean all the powder, all the stains of the powder gases, removed—when a gun is perfectly clean, if that is the better expression.—A. When a gun is perfectly clean it will not clog up again if it is oiled.

Q. It will remain bright?—A. If it is oiled.

Q. Indefinitely?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. If it is oiled?—A. Yes, sir; if it is oiled.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Is not that a part of the cleaning of guns under the regulations obtaining in the Army?—A. That also depends. If a man were going to inspection, he would probably not oil his gun. If he were going to put it away for keeping, he would oil it.

Q. Well, the testimony before this committee is that in the Twenty-fifth Infantry they were not only required to clean the guns in the way they have described, but to oil them after they cleaned them. Now, when so cleaned, you think they would remain bright, don't you?—A. If they had been thoroughly cleaned, which could not be done in one time.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. "Which could not be done in one time." You mean, could not be done in one cleaning?—A. Yes, sir; no matter how much you cleaned it at one time it would again become dirty within twenty-four hours.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Do you mean to tell us that you could not at one time thoroughly clean a gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you serving in the cavalry?—A. Five years and a half.

Q. What years were they?—A. 1893 to 1898.

Q. And during all that time the cavalry was armed with the Krag carbine, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. So I understood. What time was it so armed?—A. The Krag carbines were issued, I think, in 1894.

Q. In 1894?—A. In 1894. I am not absolutely sure of the date. When I first joined from West Point they had the old Springfield .45.

Q. A different kind of a gun?—A. Entirely different.

Q. And they used black powder, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't they use black powder in the Krag carbine all the time you served in the cavalry?—A. They did not.

Q. What time did they commence to use smokeless powder?—
A. My recollection is that it has always been used—

Q. Always since the beginning of the use of the carbine by the Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. The Krag carbine.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I mean the Krag carbine; and the same as to the Krag rifle?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that when our troops went down to Cuba at the beginning of the Spanish-American war they were all armed with the Krag rifles, and they all used smokeless powder?—A. That is my understanding—all the regular troops.

Senator LODGE. That is correct.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. All the regulars?—A. Yes, sir. Some volunteers had the old .45 Springfield and the black powder.

Q. But all the regulars had the metallic cartridge, with smokeless powder, at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, were you a company commander during this time that you served in the cavalry?—A. I was a second lieutenant, and therefore not ordinarily company commander. I have, however, done a good deal of service in command of troops.

Q. You served in the Philippines?—A. As an ordnance officer; yes, sir.

Q. And you served there as an ordnance officer during what years?—A. 1901 to 1903.

Q. Now, tell us how this gun that you have just examined compares with the condition it was in after you got through cleaning it.—
A. There is no comparison at all. It was perfectly bright after I cleaned it.

Q. Could that gun have been as dirty the following day as it is now?—A. That I can not answer. I should say not.

Q. Well, a good many of us looked at it the day it was brought in here, and some of us would like to testify about it, I think. At any rate, General Crozier testified here the day afterwards that it had been cleaned by you. You recognize, Captain, that it is not now a clean gun?—A. Certainly.

Q. You made a report, which was a part of Mr. Purdy's report, did you not?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. I notice, without going into it in detail, because it is all before us, that you speak of 438 Winchester rifles being specially chambered for the Springfield cartridge.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by that—that they were chambered after they had been manufactured at the arsenal?—A. They were manufactured by the Winchester people. My understanding is that they are chambered at the time of manufacture.

Q. Well, was that your understanding when you made this report?—A. It was my understanding. I do not know that it appeared in any way in the report.

Q. This appears, and I want to ask you about it:

Q. Do you know of any rifle in which this ammunition I have shown you can be used, other than in the Springfield rifle?—A. It will fit the Winchester rifle, model of 1895, when specially chambered.

Then you add:

Only 438 have been thus changed.

Now, when you used that expression, didn't you mean that those Winchester rifles had been reamed out so as to accommodate this cartridge after they had left the arsenal where they were manufactured?—A. No, sir; I never had that idea at all.

Q. Do you know whether a rifle can be reamed out—that is, the bore enlarged? Take a Krag rifle, for instance. Can it be reamed out sufficiently to accommodate a Springfield cartridge?—A. Yes, sir; it could be.

Q. That would not be a difficult matter, would it?—A. It would depend upon circumstances again. It would be a difficult matter unless you were prepared for it; supplied with the tools. Otherwise it would be comparatively simple.

Q. What kind of tools would you require—anything except a reamer?—A. Well, you should have a set of reamers. They generally use more than one; and you should have the power with which to do it.

Q. Do you think it could not be done with a hand reamer?—A. I think it might be done that way.

Q. In the books of instruction for the use of the magazine rifle are given the dimensions of the chamber of the Krag rifle and also of the Springfield rifle, are they not?—A. I don't remember whether they are in there or not, sir.

Q. I call your attention to some tables. This book which I show you is the Krag book, is it not, Captain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I call your attention to a table at page 66, and ask you if that does not give the dimensions of the chamber?—A. Yes, sir; it does.

Q. That is, for the Krag. Now, are not the same items given for the Springfield at page 49 of the Springfield book of instructions?—A. Those seem to be the same dimensions.

Q. By taking the dimensions of the Springfield, which is chambered to accommodate the larger cartridge, and deducting the dimensions given for the Krag, you would get exactly the amount of enlargement that it would be necessary to make if you were going to ream it out so as to accommodate the larger cartridge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have made a little calculation on that, which I want to put in evidence myself, if you will look at it. I call your attention to the Springfield, diameter of chamber at the rear end 0.4716. That is correct, is it not—0.4716 of an inch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the diameter of the Krag at the rear end is 0.462, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By deducting the one from the other, you would have left the difference, which is 0.0096, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that would be less than one-hundredth of an inch, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is four ten-thousandths less than a hundred.

Q. It would be less than a hundredth of an inch that you would have to enlarge it in diameter?—A. At the rear end; yes, sir.

Q. Now, to bore it out, one-half of that would be borne by each side of the circumference, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you would have to bore it only to the extent of one two-hundredths of an inch?

Senator WARNER. There can not possibly be any dispute about that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I only want to get it of record.—A. One two-hundredth of an inch—that is, on the radius. Of course you have to cut out all the metal.

Q. But I mean you enlarge the radius one two-hundredth of an inch and you enlarge the diameter one one-hundredth, or less than one-hundredth of an inch?—A. Yes, sir; you enlarge the radius about one-half of a hundredth.

Q. Is it one-half of a hundredth, or one two-hundredth?—A. That is the same thing.

Q. Well, you enlarge the diameter 0.0096, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is less than one one-hundredth of an inch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you would enlarge the radius one-half of that, wouldn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which would be less than one two-hundredths?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Senator Foraker, are you entirely correct about your premise there?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I am trying to find out by asking the witness, who is an expert. Now, Captain, you will observe by looking at the paper I hand you that I have made that same kind of a calculation as to each item entering into the dimensions of the chamber, have I not?—A. It appears that way. I should have to compare it, of course, in order to know.

Q. Whether or not it is correct will appear by calculation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So we need not stop to go over it in detail?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I should like to put this table in the record, in connection with Captain Rice's testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the Senator please state what it is.

Senator FORAKER. It is a statement of the results of a calculation made as to the extent to which the dimensions of the chamber of the Krag rifle would have to be enlarged in order to accommodate a Springfield cartridge.

The CHAIRMAN. A calculation made on the authority of some one else, or on your authority?

Senator FORAKER. On the authority of these books.

The CHAIRMAN. You present it as a summing up from these books?

Senator FORAKER. Yes; it is a calculation which I have made.

The table is as follows:

Springfield, diameter of chamber at the rear end .....	0.4716
Krag, diameter of chamber at the rear end.....	.4620

.0096

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. If you find that I have made any mistake in these figures, will you please point it out when you examine the printed copy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Captain Rice, we have had some testimony here from General Crozier and others about the drift of a bullet. Can you tell us what the drift of a bullet is when it is fired out of this modern Springfield rifle?—A. Do you mean whether it is to the right or to the left?

Q. Yes; or both, and to what extent?—A. I have no personal experience with it, but my understanding is that it is at first to the left and then to the right.

Q. That is given in this book, also, is it not?—A. I think it is; yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell how much it is to the left?—A. Not offhand; no, sir.

Q. Nor how much it is to the right?—A. No, sir; I have not the figures in mind.

Q. You would not carry those, I suppose, in your mind; but I want to call your attention to a table which shows it. I call your attention to page 43 of the Springfield rifle instructions, issued by the War Department, No. 1923, and ask you if that is not based on practical experiments by experts to determine it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is not the table I have in mind. There is another one here somewhere. I do not find it. I wish you would look for that table.

Senator WARNER. Didn't you put it in the testimony when General Crozier was on the stand?

Senator FORAKER. I think I did.

Senator WARNER. You have got it in the evidence.

Senator FORAKER. Well, we will supply it, if we can.

Senator WARNER. That can be supplied at any time.

Senator FORAKER. We will pass that, on the theory that it is already in.

Senator WARNER. If it is not, it can be supplied at any time.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I will ask you whether the drift is the same out of the Krag rifle that it is out of the Springfield?—A. I do not know.

Q. You do not remember about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. I call your attention to a table at page 56 of the Krag book of instructions issued by the War Department, and ask you to note that it gives the drift to the left, at 100 yards from the muzzle of the gun, as 2.5 inches, and that increases until at the distance of 600 yards it is 8.5 inches to the left; then it commences to turn towards the right and crosses the line after it passes 1,100 yards, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At 1,100 yards it is 0.3 of an inch to the left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then it goes to the right from that on up to 2,000 yards, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much is to the right at that time?—A. Fifty-two and one-tenth inches.

Q. Now, I note the statement that with the carbine the drift is always to the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us why that is?—A. Nobody knows, as far as I know.

Q. Does it not depend upon the length of the bore through which the bullet travels?

Senator WARNER. They are both of the same length now.

A. This refers to the old one. If anybody knows just why it is, I have never heard it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Have you ever studied that at all?—A. Not specially; no.

Q. Captain, is it not true that the drift of the bullet out of the Krag carbine is all the while to the right and that the carbine is much shorter than the rifle?—A. It is true; yes, sir.

Q. In the Krag rifle the length of travel of the bullet in the bore is given as 28.239 inches, and only 20.239 inches for the carbine?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what is the travel of the bullet in the bore of the Springfield?—A. You are more familiar with this book, possibly, than I am. I have not studied it recently.

Q. What is the length of travel of the bullet in the bore?—A. It is 21.402 inches.

Q. Now, the Springfield is the shortest of all these guns, is it not?—A. No, Senator; it is not shorter than the carbine.

Q. No; the carbine is the shortest of all the guns.—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Senator Foraker, are not the Springfield carbine and the Springfield rifle the same length?

Senator FORAKER. They are the same; yes. We have just three lengths—the Krag rifle, the Krag carbine, and now you have before you the length of the travel of the bullet in the bore of the Springfield.

A. Yes, sir; 21.402.

Q. But for the Krag carbine it is only 20.239?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So the Krag is the shortest of all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the shortest one of all drifts the bullet all the time to the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Never to the left?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, the length of travel of the bullet in the bore of the Krag rifle is longer than it is in the bore of the Springfield, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir; it is.

Q. And in this longest gun of all there is a drift to the left of over 8 inches, is there not, before it turns to the right, as we saw a moment ago—8.5 inches at 600 yards, drift to the left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then it turns and goes to the right, reaching 52.1 inches at 2,000 yards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the longest bore gives the greatest drift to the left, and the greatest drift to the right, also, does it not?—A. I will have to look at the figures to answer. It gives the greatest drift to the left of any of those that I have seen.

Q. Now, does not that teach us that the length of the bore that is traveled by the bullet determines the drift of the bullet?—A. That I could not answer.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Ordnance Department?—A. Since 1898.

Q. And you have never had occasion to study that subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. When a bullet is drifting to the right at such a degree of drift that it will go 52 inches out of a straight line in less than a thousand yards, if it should meet with some obstruction it would not go point on from the muzzle of the gun, would it, but would probably be deflected, would it not, by that obstruction?—A. I don't think I quite understand the question—if it should drift 52 inches in 1,000 yards, did you say?

Q. Let me make a diagram here. Here stands a man with a gun, and he fires it straight ahead, but there is a drift of 8 inches out of a straight line to the left up to 600 yards, and then it turns to the right, and crosses the line at a distance—A. At 1,100 yards.

Q. It crosses the line after it passes 1,100 yards.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between 1,100 and 1,200?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then at 900 yards farther it is 52 inches to the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it goes very rapidly to the right, does it not? Now, when that bullet strikes something it is liable to be deflected, is it not?—A. I do not think that angular amount of drift in that distance would have any effect in deflecting it when it struck.

Q. Do you think that a man looking through the hole it would make, if it went right straight through, and sighting through that hole, could see the man who fired the gun?—A. At 2,000 yards?

Q. Yes; suppose at 2,000 yards, when it is 51 inches and some tenths of an inch out of line, or more than 4 feet out of line, you look through the hole it makes, if it goes straight through, would you think that would carry your sight back to the point from which the bullet was fired?—A. If the thickness of the material through which the hole passed was slight, I think you could; if it was great, you could not.

Q. If you should look through the hole, which you think would go straight through in the line that the bullet was then traveling, which was a deflection to the right from a straight line to the extent of 4 feet in 900 yards, you think by looking through you could see the point from which the bullet was fired?

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean 900 yards? You said 2,000 yards a while ago.

Senator FORAKER. The testimony of the witness is based on the table that appears in the book—that after the bullet crosses the line in its drift to the right in going 900 yards it deflects 51.8 inches. That is correct, is it not?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. In the next 900 yards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, suppose this is the 2,000-yard point, and it strikes a piece of wood and goes through it, and you were to plant yourself on the opposite side and look through that hole, you think it would go straight through, and do you think you could see the point from which the bullet was fired?—A. In my opinion, you could, if the hole was through a thin material. Otherwise, possibly not. The amount of deflection of a little over 4 feet in that distance I do not think would be appreciable.

The CHAIRMAN. A distance of what?

Senator FORAKER. A distance of 2,000 yards.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I want to get at.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You think if that bullet made a straight hole when drifting at the rate of 4 feet in 900 yards, if you should stand on the opposite side, you could look back and see the point from which it was fired?

Senator WARNER. He says it depends upon the thickness of the piece of timber.

Senator FORAKER. Let him make it as thin as he pleases. He said it would be a straight hole in his opinion, that there would be no deflection.

The WITNESS. I did not say quite that, Senator.

Q. What did you say?—A. I said I did not think the angle would be material.

Q. I am speaking now, first, as to deflection. Didn't you say there would be no deflection?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would there be a deflection?—A. I understand the deflection to be 52 inches at the 2,000-yard point.

Q. Now, what I mean is, when the bullet strikes an obstruction—
A. Would it be deflected farther? Is that what you mean?

Q. Would it not, striking an obstruction, going at that rate of drift, be deflected from a straight line?—A. You mean, would there be a farther deflection?

Q. Yes.—A. No; I do not believe there would.

Q. You think there would not be any farther deflection? You think it would go right straight through if the obstruction was thin?—A. I think it would; yes, sir.

Q. How thin?

The CHAIRMAN. He said that in looking back through he could see the firing point.

Senator FORAKER. If it was thin.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, I want to know how thin?—A. It is impossible to state that without figuring it out; but I think it would be impossible to tell by the eye the difference in the direction of the hole made by a bullet thus deflected, if it went straight through.

Q. Suppose the bullet went through a thickness of 2 inches?—

A. I should think, probably, you could see the firing point.

Q. You think you could?—A. I could not say positively, without calculating.

Q. Is there a way to calculate that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How big a hole would one of these .20-caliber bullets make?—

A. In ordinary pine it would make a hole of practically .30 caliber.

Q. If it went point on—straight through?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it did not tumble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it were in soft wood, the wood would fur up and probably close up the hole altogether?—A. Such a thing might happen. It depends upon the condition of the wood.

Q. Suppose you could not look through, but you could run a pencil through. It would make a hole big enough for that, wouldn't it?—A. It ought to be about that; yes, sir.

Q. And we will assume that the point of entrance and the point of exit were of about the same size.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what would happen in a normal case. Now, you put a pencil through. Do you think that would point to the place from where the gun was fired?—A. It ought not to, if the hole was in a direct line with the bullet as it was flying.

Q. As it was flying at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, if it should strike at 2,000 yards, when it was going at that kind of a drift, the hole that it would make, if it went straight through, would not point back to the place of firing at all, would it?—

A. The axis of the hole would not; no, sir.

Q. The axis of it. That is what I am talking about; and if you were to undertake to look through the hole to discover where it was fired from, you would not know how much deflection or drift to make allowance for unless you knew exactly where the bullet was fired from, would you?—A. No; you could not tell exactly.

Q. Could not tell at all, could you?—A. You could come pretty close to it, sir, I think.

Q. It would be simply guesswork?—A. No, sir; you would have the mathematical limitations of the variation that you could get, and the possible variation caused by that small amount of drift, compared with the range, would not give you a very wide area of variation for your guess.

Q. If you put a pencil through it, it would not point to the spot from which the bullet was fired?—A. Not absolutely.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. As I understand your statement, it is that the deflection of the pencil in the hole through the piece of wood would be as 48 inches to 2,000 yards?—A. To 2,000 yards; yes, sir.

Q. Which would be 6,000 feet, or more than a mile?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Would it not be 900 yards, according to the table I have given you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is not the whole of this drift after you pass 1,100 yards?—

A. Yes, sir; but the drift is 52 inches in 2,000 yards.

Q. The drift to the right is that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the drift to the right commences at 600 yards from the firing point, does it not?—A. I believe it does.

Q. It is 8 inches to the left, is it not, at that point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then from 600 yards down to 2,000 yards, a distance of 1,400 yards, the drift is how many inches?—A. Let me get the figures again.

Q. Eight inches and 52 inches would make 60 inches, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To say nothing about fractions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Therefore it is a drift of 60 inches, or 5 feet, in 1,400 yards?—A. Yes, sir; that is right.

(Witness excused.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair lays before the committee a record of the proceedings of a court-martial convened to try Capt. Edgar A. Macklin, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry. Unless there is objection, an order for printing the same will be given, and the clerk of the committee will be authorized to index the printed record, and to order two bound copies for each member of this committee. Furthermore, unless there is objection, the clerk will be authorized to index the hearings printed since May 14, the date of our reconvening, and to order them reprinted, with various corrections, and bound as volume 3 of our hearings, two copies to be lettered with the name of each member of the committee—all this indexing and binding to conform in style to that of the court-martial proceedings and hearings now before us.

There being no objection, the clerk was so ordered.

(At 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m. the committee adjourned until Monday, November 18, 1907, at 11 o'clock a. m., at the room of the Committee on Military Affairs.)

(June 18, 1907.—Letter received from War Department by the chairman.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 17, 1907.

SIR: Referring to the request made by you to the Chief of Ordnance to ascertain and report whether the Mexican Government was rearming any portion of its troops, and especially those at Matamoros, with rifles other than the 7-millimeter Mauser, now the adopted weapon of that power, and if so, of what caliber, I have the honor to state that the military attaché to the American embassy at the City of Mexico reports in response to the Department's inquiry that—

“Seven-millimeter Mauser rifles exclusively issued; not chambered for our ammunition.”

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, November 18, 1907.

The Committee met at 11 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment on June 14, 1907, for the purpose of further considering the "Brownsville affray."

The following members were present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, and Frazier.

The chairman called the meeting to order, whereupon Mr. Warner offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Military Affairs have heard with deep sorrow of the death of their honored associate, Senator Pettus, of Alabama.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of their distinguished associate, the committee do now adjourn.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously, and the committee adjourned, to meet the following day, Tuesday, November 19, 1907, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, November 19, 1907.

The committee met at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, Taliaferro, and Frazier.

TESTIMONY OF J. M. SHERIDAN.

The witness was sworn by the chairman.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You understand the Spanish language?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And can translate it into English?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are you employed at this time?—A. As a clerk and translator in the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department.

Q. How long have you been so employed?—A. I have been employed in Washington in that capacity for about three years.

Q. I will ask you to look at the paper I now hand you, and state what it is, so that we may have the name and everything concerning it in the record.—A. In what way do you wish me to say what it is?

Q. What it is—the name of the paper?—A. El Porvenir is the name of the paper. It is published in Brownsville, Tex.

Q. In what language?—A. The Spanish language.

Q. Does it state by whom it is published there, so far as you see?—A. (After examination of the paper.) It does not state by whom it is published, so far as I can see.

Q. I will call your attention to the first article, on the first page of the paper, the first column. Do you see what I call your attention to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether or not you have translated that article?—A. I have translated this article.

Q. What is that article about?—A. It relates to the attack of colored troops on Brownsville on the night of August 13 and 14, 1906.

Q. And by whom does it purport to have been written?—A. Apparently by the editor of the paper.

Q. Does it give his name, there, in the course of the article?—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have the translation there. Do you propose to have it read?

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. State whether the paper I now hand you is the translation which you have made.—A. (After examination.) It is, sir.

Q. That is an accurate translation, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. There are one or two points in this that I want to ask about, just to make more clear what it contains.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not think that it had better be read?

Senator FORAKER. I think you are right about that; it had better be read first.

The clerk of the committee here read the translation referred to, as follows:

Translation of an article written in the Spanish language and published in El Porvenir, issue of August 16, 1906, a newspaper published in Brownsville, Tex.

(Translation.)

UNHEARD OF AND UNQUALIFIABLE ASSAULT MADE BY COLORED TROOPS ON SEVERAL HOUSES IN THIS CITY THE NIGHT OF THE 13TH AND 14TH OF AUGUST, 1906. ONE DEAD. WOUNDED.

About 11.30 p. m. last Monday several shots were heard in this city in the direction of the barracks (cuartel).

Some saloons (cantinas) on Elizabeth street closed their doors and the shots continued to increase, creating a sensational alarm.

The audaciousness of the troops was unheard of, savage, criminal.

The number of soldiers who fired into buildings and homes is not known, although it is affirmed that there were 65.

They scattered through the center of the city and kept up a steady fire.

Señor Ignacio Domínguez, lieutenant of police, in the performance of his duty repaired to the point where the firing commenced and received two shots in the right hand and had to have his arm amputated.

He also lost the horse he was riding.

Señor Macedonio Ramírez Prieto, employed in attending to the city lights, had his hat shot off.

The editor (director) of El Porvenir in company with Messrs. Nicolás Sánchez Alanís and Antonio Torres, had just arrived at Señor Thillman's saloon (cantina) when the shooting commenced. The proprietor of the saloon immediately came out into the street, and a young man employed in the establishment, named Frank Natós, proceeded to close the doors opening on the street (calle).

Immediately afterwards he started to close the side-street entrance (zaguan del callejón), but he hadn't taken more than five steps when a volley of six or seven shots was fired through the entrance (zaguan), one of which piercing his heart, caused him to fall, whereupon he cried out "Oh, God," and died instantly, his body lying close to the curbstone of the well (brocal del aljibe).

The writer was slightly grazed by a bullet on the left hand, and another commenced by destroying some receipts in his breast pocket, broke a pair of eye-glasses, and penetrated his coat and vest, but did not wound him in the chest or elsewhere.

The three gentlemen sought cover in different parts of the house, and, after observing profound silence for a few minutes, Preciado sought his companions.

Señor Torres being the first to respond. The former said he was wounded, as he was bleeding, and an examination was made to see if he had received any other wounds. No other injury having been discovered, he went to close the side entrance (zaguan), whereupon Sánchez Alanís warned him not to expose himself. However, as no confusion or noise was heard in the side street, Sánchez Alanís (éste) assisted him in closing the door.

The three then assembled in the saloon (cantina), commenting upon the case and awaiting the proprietor, but as he was slow in coming, Preclado opened one of the street doors (una puerta de la calle) and called to a group of people standing in front of the saloon (cantina) known as "La Internacional," telling an employee to make known what had happened to the young man, Frank Natus.

The people composing the group came over to look at the corpse, which was left lying on the ground until a justice of the peace could be sent for.

Employees of the city and of the county, and private persons gathered, and about 2 o'clock in the morning we [the writer] started to our house, people being everywhere on the lookout.

The American element is indignant over the conduct of the colored troops, for those troops of the United States, paid and maintained by the nation, and armed to serve as a guaranty and inspire respect, have committed an offense which must be rigidly curbed, as it was a criminal act.

The majesty of the law, the dignity of our citizens, and the peace of our families demand that steps be taken without loss of time to punish this outrage and later ask that the troops be relieved to the end that we have in Brownsville the guaranties that are now wanting.

Through an act of Providence we [the writer] are still alive, and we avail ourselves of this occasion to thank all who so kindly inquired after our health, for the first report was to the effect that our wound was serious.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I have a rough translation of that article which differs as to some of these words. The translation before me instead of saying "side street," says "the alley." Is or is not the Spanish word that you find there susceptible of that English translation?—A. Yes, I think it is. The word "callejon," in some Spanish communities where I have been, has been translated both as "alley" and "side street."

By Senator LODGE:

Q. It means literally "little street?" It is the diminutive of calle, is it not?—A. Narrow street.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Then I have also translated in that sentence: Then he started to close the alley entrance but could not have made five steps before there was a volley of five or six shots through this entrance, and the bullet that pierced his heart laid him low, shouting, "Oh, God!" That is accurate, the way you have it, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the Spanish word which indicates that the shots came through, and how do you understand that? Came from where?

Senator WARNER. Just a moment, Senator. You ask him how he understands it. I understand that he has given a translation just as he understands it.

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Is there any other way in which that might be understood, there?—A. I will say, sir, regarding "zaguan"—the word which I translated "side entrance"—that in some communities of South American countries, and in the Philippines, it has a slightly different meaning from what it appears to have in some other Spanish communities. In some it is interpreted as what we understand to be the entresuelo, or the ground floor, in which people do not live; in others it is the passageway through which you go from an outer door to an inner door at the end of a hallway. It will differ in meaning, and I felt that "entrance" was the broadest and most correct translation I could give it, not being familiar with the premises in this case.

Q. Now, that is perfectly clear to me. I only want others of the committee to understand.—A. The entrance that is referred to is the entrance from the alley or side street.

Q. The shots came through that, as you understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Over toward the close, just before the words "as it was a criminal act," you have translated it, "have committed an offense which ought to be rigidly curbed." In this rough translation which I have it says "that needed to be energetically dealt with." Is the Spanish language susceptible of that interpretation? There is no difference there, really, I think.—A. The word "reprimirse" in its exact interpretation means "to be curbed, restrained;" but is also used in some communities to mean "to be punished, chastised."

Q. Please give us, in that connection, the date of that paper from which you made that translation.—A. This paper is dated Thursday, August 16, 1906.

Q. Brownsville?—A. Brownsville; yes, sir.

Q. One other thing. I handed you some other issues of that same paper. Have you had time to look at them?—A. Yes, sir; I have some other issues of the same paper, but I have not had time to look at all of them. Those that I have looked at have a few comments on the incident, but do not go into any detailed description of it.

Q. You do not find any other detailed account of the occurrences of that night?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I will let the witness look at these papers further and see if he can find anything in any of them before I put them in.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is anything that you want him to interpret you are willing to leave it to his judgment?

Senator FORAKER. Yes; I will just leave it to him, if he finds anything there bearing on the occurrences of that night. If you find nothing, Mr. Sheridan, bearing on the occurrences then bring me the papers, so that we may have them before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Report it to the committee as soon as you have done that. If there is anything worth while, translate it and report it to the committee.

Senator WARNER. Let him come back with the papers. We may want to ask him some questions.

Senator FORAKER. I will state to the committee that I have had these papers looked over, and do not find anything in them. I only wanted to prove by him that there was nothing further.

(At this point the witness was excused, and the committee went into executive session, at the conclusion of which, at 4 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until Tuesday, November 26, 1907, at 2 o'clock p. m.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
 UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, November 26, 1907.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Warner, Fulton, Overman, and Frazier.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE CONNER.

The witness was sworn by the chairman.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are the chief of police of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you held that office?—A. Two years and nine months.

Q. You were chief of police, then, on the night of August 13, 1906, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the night, as we understand it, when the shooting affray occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had been for some time previous to that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you lived in Brownsville?—A. All of my lifetime.

Q. Were you a native of Brownsville?—A. No, sir; I was born at Point Ysobel, about 22 miles on the coast, east of Brownsville.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In Texas?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are a native-born American, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men were on your police force on the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Day and night?

Q. Yes, the entire force. What was the entire force?—A. We always have been 12, altogether, but I am not sure; I discharged a man, I don't know whether it was afterwards or before this thing happened.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Does that include the lieutenant of police?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How many were on duty that night?—A. I do not remember exactly.

Q. I will ask you this question, which may bring out what I want to get at. Were there any extra policemen on duty that night?—A. No, sir; none at all.

Q. None at all?—A. Not that I know of; not to my knowledge. The lieutenant of police is the one that takes charge of the police force at night, and he is the one that puts on, sometimes, a supernumerary. When the regular police misses to go there at night, he puts on a supernumerary. We have two supernumeraries.

Q. Had you any intimation that there might be trouble that night in Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. You knew nothing about the trouble until it occurred?—A. No, sir; I knew nothing at all about it.

- Q. Where were you that night?—A. I was right there.
- Q. Had you heard the story about Mrs. Evans being assaulted?—
- A. I was told; yes, sir; that evening, by the mayor.
- Q. By whom?—A. Mayor Combe.
- Q. By Mayor Combe?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What did he tell you to do in respect to keeping order that night?—A. He told me that Mrs. Evans was assaulted; that the husband of Mrs. Evans had told him that Mrs. Evans was assaulted by a soldier—that is the word he used—and to investigate the matter. It was in the evening of the 13th.
- Q. What is that?—A. I think it was on the evening of the 13th.
- Q. About what time in the evening was that?—A. I don't remember exactly the time, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether it was later than 5 o'clock?—A. I do not think so; no, sir.
- Q. Was it after dark or before dark?—A. Before dark.
- Q. Did he say anything about having been up to the fort to see Major Penrose?—A. No, sir; I don't think anything about that.
- Q. He did not tell you anything about that?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Mr. Evans was not with him at that time?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Yes. Well, did he tell you anything about having fear and apprehension of trouble that night if any of the soldiers were downtown?—A. No, sir; I do not remember about anything of that kind—his telling me anything of that sort.
- Q. He did not tell you anything of that kind?—A. I don't remember hearing anything; no, sir.
- Q. And you do not remember hearing any suggestion from anybody that there was likely to be trouble that night if any of the soldiers were downtown?—A. Mr. Evans was the one that told me that his wife was assaulted, after Doctor Combe had told me.
- Q. That was later that same evening?—A. That same evening; yes, sir.
- Q. About how much later?—A. I don't know. A pretty good while. Not very long, but some while afterwards.
- Q. Was it dark yet?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What further did he tell you—anything?—A. No; that is all.
- Q. He simply told you that his wife had been assaulted?—A. That is all he told me.
- Q. And you had already heard it from the mayor?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And not a word was said to you about the mayor having been up to see Major Penrose, and about his having made an arrangement with Major Penrose that none of his men should be in town that night?—A. I didn't know anything about that; no, sir.
- Q. You did not hear of that that night?—A. No, sir; not anything.
- Q. Have you ever testified before in this case?—A. No, sir; except before Mr. Purdy, in Brownsville.
- Q. You gave a statement to Mr. Purdy?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. We have that before us.—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. But with that exception you never testified before?—A. No, sir; never.
- Q. Where were you this night?—A. I was at my house.
- Q. You were where?—A. What time do you mean?
- Q. When the firing occurred.—A. I was at home, at the house.

Q. Where is your residence?—A. On Madison and Fourteenth streets; the corner of Madison and Fourteenth streets.

Q. There is a map at your left hand. That shows Elizabeth street and then Washington street and then Adams street. What is the next street going east, after Adams?—A. I think it is Jefferson, and then comes Madison.

Q. Jefferson, and then Madison?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you were two squares farther east than Adams street, as shown on that map?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were at the corner of that street and Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; at the corner of Madison and Fourteenth streets.

Q. At the corner of Madison and Fourteenth, yes. Those squares are 260 feet, are they not, in length, from corner to corner?—A. From corner to corner, no; 300 feet. There are six lots of 50 feet front each.

Q. What?—A. There are six lots on each square, each 50 feet front.

Q. So that you were 600 feet east of this point, which is the corner of Adams and Fourteenth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, 300 feet would be Jefferson street, and 300 feet more would be Madison street?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. And the width of the roads?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is, approximately?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were about opposite the eastern boundary line of the reservation as shown on this map?

The CHAIRMAN. That would take him beyond that.

Senator FORAKER. I am not getting it with absolute accuracy.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. If you were to come out Madison street to the reservation, you would strike it?—A. You would strike the fence.

Q. About these commissary sergeant's quarters, would you not [indicating on map]?—A. I don't know, exactly, but there are some quarters there.

Q. Or would you come out somewhere in the neighborhood of this road that I am pointing to? About where does Madison street strike the reservation? That is what I want to know. Is it at a point about opposite these commissary sergeant's quarters, numbered 41?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Your street comes out just about there, does it not [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir; about there, because this is Adams street, and then there is Jefferson street, and then Madison street.

Q. You were how many feet from that reservation line over to your corner where you lived?—A. From the corner where I lived to the next corner is 300 feet.

Q. And then you cross Fifteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is 300 feet.—A. Yes, sir. And then you go on and cross a street about 40 feet wide—the cross streets are 40 feet wide—and then the next block; but the next block is not complete.

Q. About how long is that? That is the one next to the wall. I suppose—to the line?—A. Yes, sir; the wall—the garrison fence. That is a wire fence there, you know.

Q. Yes.—A. That is about five lots next to that, I think. I am not positively sure.

Q. So that there would be two blocks and about 200 feet on another block?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would make 800 feet. Now, you were there at your house when the firing commenced. About what time, according to your recollection, did that firing commence?—A. I am not positive about that, because I heard 11 o'clock on the street, and some time after that I came home and laid down.

Q. I did not understand what you said about 11 o'clock.—A. I heard 11 o'clock on the street.

Q. You heard the clock?—A. Yes, sir; I heard the clock strike 11 o'clock.

Q. That is, the town clock?—A. Yes, sir; and a while after that I came home and laid down, and I can't say how many minutes after that—

Q. Where were you when the town clock struck 11?—A. I don't remember what street.

Q. I wish you would think a minute, now, and give us your best recollection as to just where you were when the town clock struck 11; that is, if you can do so?—A. I don't remember exactly. I am almost sure that I was on Fifteenth street.

Q. You were on Fifteenth street?—A. Yes, sir. I am not positive about it, but I think I was there on Fifteenth street.

Q. Fifteenth street is down along the garrison wall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what we call in this investigation the garrison road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is where you were when it struck 11?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to your recollection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At about what point on Fifteenth street were you when the clock struck 11?—A. I was between Madison and Jefferson streets.

Q. Between Madison and Jefferson streets?—A. Yes, sir. I am not very positive about that, but I think I was there.

Q. Jefferson street would be 300 feet from this point [indicating on map], which is the mouth of Adams street. You would be up there, 300 feet [indicating].—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you mean to tell us that you were near that point in this garrison road?—A. Is that Fifteenth street [indicating]?

Q. This is Fifteenth street here, the garrison road; what we call Fifteenth street. Here is Fourteenth street [indicating].—A. Yes, sir; but this street cuts inside, this way [indicating].

Q. Which street cuts inside?—A. That is called Fifteenth street, but it leaves a piece of street. It runs up here, and there is a bend [indicating].

Q. Is there another street in here that you call Fifteenth street?—A. We call it Fifteenth street. We call it all Fifteenth street, because the street comes along.

Q. This is Fifteenth street, as we call it.

The CHAIRMAN. It runs directly parallel with Fourteenth street, does it?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; it runs parallel with Fourteenth street.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Then it runs somewhere north of Adams street, if this map is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And runs parallel with Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were where?—A. At the corner of the alley, between Madison and Jefferson streets.

Q. You were at the corner of the alley between Madison and Jefferson streets, up there [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were about opposite the reservation wall?—A. The wall.

Q. And the road up there, were you not [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be almost exactly opposite, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is right.

Senator LODGE. That is called the county road, is it not?

Senator FORAKER. No; the county road is still farther up. There is another road 200 or 300 yards farther up, beyond that, which runs parallel with that reservation road.

The WITNESS. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Do you know where a negro by the name of Allison was keeping a saloon at that time?—A. I heard about it, but never went there at that time.

Q. You knew of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you not ever learned since where it was?—A. I learned—I was told—that he had a saloon right in front of the corner of the garrison.

Q. Right about here, was it not [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a road there, or was he over on this road—Fifteenth street?—A. Over by the garrison. Not on Fifteenth street, but on this side.

Q. That is, after this street turns to run parallel with Fourteenth street, does it continue along the wall?—A. Yes, sir; it continues along the wall.

Q. And he was right opposite the reservation?—A. He was right by the wall.

Q. He was right by the wall, near where you were?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was this Allison's saloon within the corporation limits of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about how far was it, proceeding eastwardly along the wall, from Adams street?—A. From Adams street? I think, if I am not mistaken, it is Monroe street.

Q. Monroe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that next after Madison street?—A. Next after Madison. I am not positive, but I think it is Monroe street.

Q. Then from the mouth of Adams street it would be 300 feet to Jefferson street, and 300 feet more to Madison street, and 300 feet to Monroe street, making 900 feet in all?—A. Yes, sir; right there the garrison wall turns to the right [indicating].

Q. That is the wire fence there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is where the country road turns off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was right where the country road comes around the garrison; is that right?—A. Yes, sir; there is a piece of a street there, too; another piece of a street.

Q. You were at the corner of the alley and Fifteenth street, between Madison and Jefferson streets, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that saloon was over at the corner where the country road comes in?—A. Where it turns by the garrison wall.

Q. Right there [indicating]. You knew that he was keeping a saloon there, did you not?—A. I was told so.

Q. You had heard it repeatedly, had you not, during the last three or four days prior to the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the date when he opened that saloon; do you remember?—A. I do not know; I do not remember.

Q. Do you remember when the pay day was?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know about that, either?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, who was with you at the corner of the alley and Fifteenth street when the clock struck 11?—A. If I am not mistaken, one of the policemen was there with me, Valdez Calderon.

Q. What were you and he doing there?—A. Just talking about this thing—this Evans matter.

Q. You were talking about the Evans matter?—A. I was telling him that the mayor had told me about it. I told him that the mayor had told me that the lady was assaulted the night previous, and to take good care.

Q. To take good care?—A. To take good care and watch.

Q. That there was no trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No disorder of any kind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the only officer to whom you gave any special instructions?—A. I do not remember any other. I do not know, but I think that is the only one that I did talk to.

Q. Where had you been during the earlier part of that evening, before 11 o'clock, and how long had you been at this corner?—A. I was there a pretty long while.

Q. About how long?—A. Before 11, and after.

Q. What was there at that particular corner that interested you, or caused you to stop there?—A. I met the policeman there.

Q. You just met him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on your way home then?—A. I was just walking around, and met him and told him.

Q. Had you been on Washington street that night?—A. I don't remember, sir.

Q. Try to recollect. Do you remember coming down Washington street that night from beyond, from north of Twelfth street, going toward the fort, in the neighborhood of 11 o'clock, or later?—A. I do not remember, sir.

Q. You do not remember. You will not say you did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you alone as you went about the city that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not in company with anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any strangers in town that night?—A. I did not see any; no, sir.

Q. You did not see anybody with any guns?—A. I did not see anybody; no, sir.

Q. When you gave your testimony before Mr. Purdy I notice that you did not testify as to where you were the night of the shooting, or what you did when the shooting occurred. Can you tell me how it happened that you, the chief of police, were silent as to that?—A. Because he did not ask me anything about it.

Q. He did not ask you about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you did not appear before the Citizens' Committee?—A. They never called me; no, sir.

Q. That was the morning after the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that the committee was appointed and that it was taking testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when you heard the shooting, what did you do?—A. I sat down. I was laying down already.

Q. That is, you had gone to bed. Had you retired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you taken off your clothing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I sat down on the bed and heard the firing.

Q. You mean that you sat up in the bed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You sat up and took notice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, how long did you listen to the firing, sitting there?—A. Well, a good while. Then I got up and dressed myself, and then went out in the street.

Q. Where did you go when you went out on the street?—A. I went toward the city hall, but before I got to the city hall I saw people running from toward Elizabeth street, on Twelfth street. Then I went that way, too.

Q. By what street did you go to Twelfth street?—A. Madison street.

Q. You went right down Madison street to Twelfth street?—A. Yes, sir; and then turned on Twelfth street toward Elizabeth.

Q. Had the firing stopped when you reached Twelfth street?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. It was all over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About where were you when the firing ceased; still in your house, or had you left your house?—A. I was just leaving the house, going out the back way—the side way.

Q. Where was the last firing you heard apparently located?—A. I heard it toward Elizabeth street, about west, or a little southwest, from my house.

Q. What steps did you take that night, if any, to ascertain what had happened?—A. I just got there and asked what had happened, and the policeman told me. Victorio Fernandes said, "There is a man dead inside here, in the Ruby saloon, in the yard." I went in there and saw the man lying dead there, and I came out and I says, "Where is the rest of the police?" They told me where the lieutenant was—somewheres around there—I don't remember what the words were. Then I asked somebody else there to tell me where the lieutenant was. I wanted to know the facts. Somebody said, "Ho is up at the drug store." I turned back and went to the drug store and I found the lieutenant there.

Q. You did not see any of the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did not see anybody doing any firing?—A. No, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Did anybody tell you who did the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they tell you?—A. The people there—the crowd—said that the soldiers done the firing.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. And you believed that, of course?—A. Well, I can't say.

Q. You do not know, yourself, who did do it?—A. No, sir; I do not. I did not see it.

Q. Now, you were not on Washington street that night at all, in company with anybody else at all, as I understand you?—A. I do not remember whether I did or not, sir.

Q. Do you remember being in a carriage that night?—A. No, sir; I do not remember.

Q. Or a small wagon or four-wheeled vehicle of some kind?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You do not remember that at all?—A. No, sir; I do not remember it.

Q. Is this the first time a question of that kind has been asked you?—A. Yes, sir. I never heard it before.

Q. You never heard of that before?—A. I never was asked about it; no, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You had a lieutenant of police?—A. Yes sir.

Q. The others were all of the same grade, were they? You were the chief, and you had a lieutenant, and the others were all of the same grade?—A. Yes, sir; all policemen.

Q. Did you and the lieutenant have different hours in which you were in charge, or were you in charge all the time?—A. No, sir; he used to take charge at night. At 6 o'clock he used to take charge of the police force; between 6 and 7 o'clock.

Q. That is, between 6 and 7 at night; and he remained in charge until what hour in the morning?—A. Until the next morning about the same hour.

Q. And you were in charge through the day?—A. Yes sir.

Q. So that the division was made in that way, and you were in charge in the daytime, and the lieutenant was probably sleeping then, and he was in charge at night?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Allison, the saloon keeper, was arrested, was he not, and in prison there?—A. What saloon keeper is that?

Q. Allison, that negro soldier who was keeping a saloon.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I say that he was arrested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where he is now?—A. Of course, not of my own knowledge, but the sheriff told me that he was in jail.

Q. How long ago?—A. I do not remember exactly the date, sir.

Q. He was indicted, was he not?—A. The sheriff told me that he was indicted; yes, sir.

Q. Has he ever been tried?—A. Not that I know of; no, sir.

Q. Do you not know whether he is in jail or not?—A. I do not know. I have been told that he is in jail. The sheriff told me that he was in jail.

Q. What is the name of the sheriff?—A. Celedonio Garza.

Q. Do you know of any reason why Allison has not been tried?—A. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. That is all for the present.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I understand you to say, Mr. Conner, that the people, when you got down in the town after the shooting, said it was the negroes that had done the shooting up of the town?—A. I thought I said the soldiers.

Q. The soldiers; that is what I say.—A. That is the word I used; yes, sir; "the soldiers."

Q. That was the general expression, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; the general expression. They were all talking about it.

Q. Immediately following the shooting?—A. As soon as I got there I heard that expression.

Q. You heard that shooting, did you?—A. I heard it; yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of that shooting?—A. It seemed to me like high-power guns; high-power; high-pressure.

Q. That was your judgment from hearing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the shooting when you first heard it, as near as you can say? It was some distance away, and I do not presume that you could tell exactly.—A. If I am not mistaken, I heard it in a westerly direction from me—south. A little southwest from my house, and in the direction of Elizabeth street.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. This is Elizabeth street, and your house is up there [indicating on map]?—A. Yes, sir; this is Elizabeth street, and this is my street. I heard it this way [indicating].

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Down this way, west, from yourself; and the barracks were also west from your house?

Senator FORAKER. The witness pointed there [indicating], and he pointed down the other way as the direction of the firing.

Senator LODGE. That is, on Thirteenth street between Washington and Elizabeth streets.

The WITNESS. The garrison is east of my house—the garrison wall, the garrison.

Senator WARNER. Yes; but I am speaking of the barracks that the soldiers were in.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. They were west of your house?—A. I think it is more south.

The CHAIRMAN. There is some question about that map. I see that by the dart there the streets do not lie north and south and east and west. Now, north would be in a diagonal direction across there.

Senator WARNER. We have been pleased, I think, to speak of Elizabeth street, for instance, as running north and south.

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

Senator WARNER. And up toward the Allison saloon, from the barracks, we have called east, and down toward the river we have called west.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes, sir.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Here is the gate of the barracks [indicating].—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in what direction did you hear the firing?—A. That would be west, then.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. This is west [indicating]. At about what point was it; on Elizabeth street, do you say?—A. In that direction; yes, sir.

Q. Now, among the people there after this shooting there was a general feeling of terror and fear among the women and all, was there not?—A. Yes, sir; I heard a good many express that.

Senator WARNER. I will now ask to have inserted at this point the telegram found on page 26 of Part I of Senate Document 155, dated at Brownsville, Tex., August 18, 1906, and addressed to Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, Washington, D. C. It says:

We cannot convince our women and children that another outbreak may not occur at any time. Their condition is deplorable. They will scarcely venture out of their homes and feel secure, thereby our maintaining heavy guard and patrol of armed citizens every night.

This correctly represented the condition, did it not, Mr. Conner? I find that signed by you and others at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That represented the feeling of terror among the women and children of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is signed by Mr. John Bartlett, county judge?—A. County judge; yes, sir.

Q. I find that is also signed by yourself as chief of police?—A. Yes, sir.

The telegram referred to is here printed in the record in full, as follows:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 18, 1906.

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

We appeal to you again in our great necessity. Our position is misunderstood. We can not convince our women and children that another outbreak may not occur at any time. Their condition is deplorable; they will scarcely venture out of their homes and feel secure, thereby our maintaining heavy guard and patrol of armed citizens every night. We know that the accidental discharge of a firearm, any overt act of an excited citizen—and our citizens are fearfully excited—would precipitate upon the whole negro force at Brownsville.

We do not believe that their officers could restrain or control them. There are only five officers present, and the consequences would be fearful loss of life and probable destruction of city. Many of our citizens have removed and are removing their families elsewhere. A Texas town should not be left unaided in this condition. We demand the immediate removal of these negroes from our city, and we ask you to so order. Please answer.

Senator WARNER. I will also in this connection ask to have inserted a communication addressed to Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, dated Brownsville, Tex., August 15-16, 1906, found on page 20, of Part I, of Senate Document 155. I do not think I have any further questions to ask of this witness.

The telegram referred to is here printed in the record in full, as follows:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 15-16, 1906.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT,

President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned, a committee of citizens appointed at and by a mass meeting of the people of Brownsville, held in the Federal courthouse in this city, on Tuesday, the 14th instant, to investigate the attack made on this city by negro troops now stationed at Fort Brown, adjoining the city, after an almost continuous session of two days finds as follows:

That at a few moments before midnight on Monday, the 13th, a body of United States soldiers of Twenty-fifth United States Infantry (colored), numbering between 20 and 30 men, emerged from the garrison inclosure, carrying their rifles and abundant supply of ammunition, and also began firing in town and directly into dwellings, offices, stores, and at police and citizens. During this firing one citizen, Frank Natus, was killed in his yard, and the lieutenant of police, who rode toward the firing, had his horse killed under him and was shot through the right arm, which has since been amputated at the elbow. After firing about 200 shots the soldiers retired to their quarters. After the most diligent inquiry we find that no shots were fired from the town into or toward the garrison, nor any provocation given for the attack. We find that negro soldiers who have been stationed here only a few weeks have taken exception to the fact that they have been refused liquor in the saloons at the same bars or counters as the white citizens, and that a few days ago a negro soldier was knocked down for rudely jostling a white woman, the wife of a Federal officer, off the sidewalk.

We solemnly assert that no other provocation in any shape or manner has been given to these soldiers since their arrival here. We find that threats have been made by them that they will repeat this outrage. We do not believe their officers can restrain them, there being but five commissioned officers. Our condition, Mr. President, is this: Our women and children are terrorized and our men are practically under constant alarm and watchfulness. No community can stand this strain for more than a few days. We look to you for relief; we ask you to have the troops at once removed from Fort Brown and replaced by white soldiers. We appeal to you as Commander in Chief and as President of our whole people.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I see in this last exhibit, which has been put in, that you have signed there also, and one of the statements is that there were about 200 shots fired. That is about your idea, is it, of the number of shots that were fired?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. What investigation did you ever make to ascertain the whereabouts of those of your police force who were on duty that night?—A. I went around, as I said before, and they told me where the lieutenant of police was, and I went there and saw him at the drug store, and from there I came back and asked for the rest. There were Macedonio Ramirez and Coronado and Briseño missing yet, and they said, "We don't know; they might be killed. We don't know." Then I walked toward the garrison, and when I got to the corner of Thirteenth and Elizabeth streets I met Judge Parks, who is now dead, and he says, "I have got two of your men at Mrs. Leahy's house." "Who are they," I asked him. He says, "Coronado and Briseño." He says, "I put them in there for safekeeping." I says, "I want to see them." He says, "Don't you go. You stay here, and I will bring them." I stayed there, and he went on and brought them there. That was the next corner toward the garrison.

Q. Who was this who took care of your policemen and put them away for safekeeping?—A. Judge Parks.

Q. And then when you were hunting them up he told you to just wait there and he would go and get them and bring them back to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they still members of your police force?—A. One of them. The other one—no, sir. Briseño is not.

Q. Why do you keep this man on your force, who, in a time of trouble like this, had to be put away for safekeeping?—A. Well, sir, it depends upon the committee on police.

Q. I did not understand you.—A. The committee on police is the one that generally regulates all them things; the committee on police.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You mean the committee of the city government?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. Who appoints this board of police commissioners?—A. The council.

Q. And they still retain this officer, who was put away for safekeeping that night, on the force?—A. He is there yet; yes, sir.

Q. How did the other man get off the force?—A. He found a better job up the river and he left.

Q. He resigned on his own account? He was not discharged from the force?—A. He resigned on his own account; yes, sir.

Q. Why did you not recommend the removal of these two officers who failed to perform their duty and had to hide that night when this trouble was on?—A. I am just governed by the committee on police, you know; whatever they tell me to do.

Q. Do you not recommend removals and appointments?—A. Sometimes, yes, sir; but it depends on them, you know; if they don't want to put him out—

Q. Did you recommend the removal of these two officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you not?—A. I did not think anything about it at the time.

Q. You did not think about it? Here were these two officers on your force. The people were in great terror and great distress, afraid of their lives, with no protection; and you wrote a letter to the President of the United States suggesting that you ought to be protected, and yet retained officers who hid when there was trouble on. Why did you not promptly say "These officers do not perform their duty," and recommend their removal, and ask for officers that would perform their duty?—A. It is a fact that could be done, but the committee does the whole thing, you know. I am just doing what the committee tells me to do.

Q. Then you are not chief of police; you only carry out the instructions of the committee. Is that it?—A. Pretty near the same thing. That is what I do; whatever they tell me to do, you know.

Q. Were these men fair samples of your police force; that is, were they equally efficient as other men on the force?—A. I do not think so; no, sir. I think there were some other better men than they there.

Senator HEMENWAY. I hope so.

Senator WARNER. We all hope so.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How many of them were better?—A. Sir?

Q. You say some of them were better men. How many of your other policemen were better than these two?—A. Well, men that I can judge, they are good officers; old officers that have been there long before I have been there. All of them was there before I was there.

Q. Did I understand you to say that Judge Parks told you that he had placed these men in hiding?—A. That he himself pulled them inside and kept them and would not let them go out.

Q. Did you ever hear that a Mrs. Leahy did that?—A. No, sir. I didn't hear anything. Judge Parks was the only one that told me.

Q. Did you have a talk with Mrs. Leahy about this?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear that she claimed the honor of taking care of these two policemen that night?—A. I never heard it; no, sir.

Q. You never heard it?—A. No, sir; except what Judge Parks told me.

Q. Did you not hear that she had testified to that effect before this committee?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Did Judge Parks tell you why he hid these men?—A. He told me for safe-keeping.

Q. Did he tell you that there was a bunch of soldiers shooting there with high-power rifles—fifteen or twenty of them? What did he say to you about that?—A. No, sir; he just told me those words.

Q. That is all he said?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator HEMENWAY:

Q. The judge was willing to chance his life, but wanted to save the police force, was that it?—A. I suppose so, sir. I don't know. When I got there, everything was done, you know.

By Senator FULTON:

Q. There is one question that I would like to ask. You testified on your direct examination that at the time you heard the hour of 11 o'clock struck you were talking to a policeman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said something about either that you were telling him to exercise care and prevent any trouble, or that the mayor had instructed you. Which was it?—A. That the mayor had told me.

That that lady living right there where we were was assaulted by a soldier and to take a good care around there that nothing happened.

Q. That the mayor had told you?—A. Yes, sir; because the mayor told me about it in the evening.

Q. Did the mayor say that he was looking forward to, or contemplated, the possibility of—the probability of—some disorder that night?—A. Not to me. I didn't know anything about it.

Senator FULTON. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You said the lady that lived there where you were. Did Mrs. Evans live right there at the corner where you were?—A. Yes, sir; in that same yard, you know. The house was right in the middle of the yard, between the alley and the street.

Q. She lived on Fifteenth street, between Madison and Jefferson, at the corner of the alley?—A. No, sir; it is between the alley and the street—Jefferson street—and next to the alley between Jefferson and Madison. That is the lot there [indicating], the yard, and in the middle of that yard is the house—pretty near the middle. It is between the alley and the corner of the street.

Q. So that you were at the mouth of the alley?—A. I was at the mouth of the alley; yes, sir.

Q. You were therefore a little bit east of her house. Her house was in the middle of the plot of ground extending from the alley down to Jefferson street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were talking with this officer about the assault?—A. About what the mayor had told me.

Q. Which way does the Evans house face, toward the barracks?—A. It faces toward Fifteenth street.

Q. It faces on Fifteenth street, toward the barracks?—A. No, sir; toward the town.

Q. Toward the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the rear of the house is toward the barracks?—A. The rear of the house is toward the barracks; yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk with Mrs. Evans about that matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you still say that the mayor did not give you any instructions to be specially careful that night to prevent trouble?—A. About the trouble; no. He just told me to investigate the matter.

Q. And you did not apprehend any trouble?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you took no precautions to protect the town against trouble?—A. I didn't see any trouble at all. I saw everything very quiet. The night was very quiet. Everything was very quiet.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. In going about over the town that night before you went home did you see any unusual disturbance—any people congregating in one place, or people with guns, or any other indications of trouble?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see or hear anything of that kind?—A. No, sir.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Mr. Connor, were the citizens of Brownsville well pleased with the location of the three colored companies there?—A. I didn't hear any demonstrations against it at all; no, sir.

Q. They had no objection to them being sent there at all?—A. Not to my knowledge; no, sir.

Q. You did not hear anything said by any of the citizens wanting them sent away?—A. I didn't hear any; no, sir.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS A. JAGOU.

The witness was sworn by the chairman.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are a citizen of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. I was born in Brownsville.

Q. You have lived there all your life?—A. No, sir; I was going to explain. I was born in Brownsville and left Brownsville in 1878 and went to France, and came back in November, 1889, and since that time I have resided in Brownsville.

Q. What is your age?—A. I was 38 years old last March.

Q. Thirty-eight years?—A. Last March.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. Just now, at the present time?

Q. Yes.—A. Or what I have been in formerly?

Q. Well, just now.—A. I reside on my plantation.

Q. You reside on your plantation, near Brownsville?—A. Near Brownsville, four and a half miles out.

Q. In what direction?—A. About east.

Q. How do you reach your plantation from, say, the gate leading from the garrison out to Elizabeth street. If you were at that point, by what streets would you travel to go out of Brownsville on your way to your plantation?—A. I understand your question. I go out along what we term down there the garrison wall until it forms an angle shooting to the river, and then along what we call the river road.

Q. Now, can you tell us where it does form that angle, shooting toward the river?—A. I couldn't name you the streets. I never have paid any attention to the numbers or the names of the streets.

Q. There is a map to the left of you. I will ask you to look at that and say whether or not you can tell us, after looking at that map, about where the garrison road divides?—A. I always take Washington street, and pass over, and keep up [indicating].

Q. There is a country road out there [indicating]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That turns to the right and goes around the eastern side of the garrison?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that leads on down to the river, does it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is what you call the river road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does the garrison road divide, one part going around the reservation, as you have just now described, and the other branching off so as to run parallel to Fourteenth street? Does it divide between Adams and Jefferson streets, or between Jefferson and Madison streets?—A. I never paid any attention. I always keep this straight road.

Q. You keep right along?—A. Always. It is the short road for me, for I reside, or at least I rent a house, on Washington street, about here [indicating].

Q. You are pointing to the east side of Washington street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About 100 feet from the garrison road?—A. Yes, sir; about. I reside now about here [indicating].

Q. You have a house there?—A. I have a house and reside there.

Q. Your plantation is 4 miles out in the country?—A. Four miles out in the country. I have a home here, so that whenever I want to come to town I have this place. I have rented a house there.

Q. Were you engaged in business in town before you acquired this plantation?—A. We have had that plantation for a number of years, but formerly—yes, sir; I was in business.

Q. What kind of business?—A. Wholesale and retail liquor dealer, and at the same time wholesale and retail dealer in ammunition.

Q. And you had firearms of all kinds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And ammunition?—A. Yes, sir; and ammunition.

Q. Where was your place of business located?—A. On Elizabeth street.

Q. Which you are now speaking about?—A. Yes, sir; on Elizabeth street.

Q. At what point?—A. Block 63. This is the Miller Hotel block here [indicating on map]. It is about here, sir.

Q. What is the point that you are directing attention to now?—A. Where our house was.

Q. That is the eastern side of Elizabeth street, right near the blocks marked "8" and "3"?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. And between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a business house did you have?—A. I told you it was wholesale and retail liquors.

Q. But what sort of a house was it, a brick house?—A. A brick house; one story at the front and two stories at the back.

Q. It runs clear back to the alley, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you could enter from the alley as well as from the front?—A. Yes, sir; just as well from the alley as from the front.

Q. What kind of guns—firearms—did you keep there for sale?—A. I kept Winchester guns and shotguns; none of what are termed nowadays high power. I left the business in 1894.

Q. Oh, you quit the business in 1894?—A. Oh, yes; I quit that business in 1894.

Q. In 1894?—A. No, sir; I meant to say in 1904.

Q. In 1904?—A. Yes, sir; in 1904.

Q. Were you not carrying on that business at that place in 1906, at the time of the shooting affray?—A. No, sir; there is a saloon in the place where we used to keep our house.

Q. Was anybody at that time carrying on that business of selling firearms and ammunition at that point?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whose name was Jagou?—A. In 1906?

Q. In 1906, at the time of this shooting affray?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. As I remember, Mr. Louis A. Cowen—do you remember him?—A. Louis R. Cowen?

Q. Well, Louis R. Cowen. Do you know him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has testified before this committee in this investigation, and my recollection of his statement is that he said that on the day before this shooting he bought some ammunition from you, as I understood it?—A. No, sir; but I know what you are referring to now. I read that at the time in the papers. He pretends to have bought some ammunition from my brother. I have two brothers, and he said he bought some ammunition from one of them, and he termed him by the name of "Mike," and he says—Louis told me many a time that he had bought some cartridges from him.

Q. Who?—A. Louis Cowen.

Q. Told you?—A. Told me. My brother had in charge the stock of ammunition that we could not dispose of when we closed our business. He had that in his care. But he did not reside where you are mentioning on Elizabeth street.

Q. Where did he reside?—A. He resided on Washington street.

Q. On Washington street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me see what he says. Mr. Cowen testified that on the afternoon of the day when the shooting occurred, that is, on the afternoon of the 13th of August—I think that is the date he fixes—he bought some ammunition.

Senator WARNER. Had we not better get the testimony?

Senator FORAKER. I will read from his testimony.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. At page 2811 of our record this is found, Louis R. Cowen was on the stand testifying:

Q. Did you make any preparation then?—A. Not at the time. The day of the shooting it occurred to me then that it was past pay day, and I bought some cartridges.

Q. You did what?—A. I bought some cartridges.

Q. Where did you get those cartridges?—A. I bought them from a man by the name of Jagou, who had been in business, and he had all the stuff closed away in his warehouse.

Q. What kind of business had Jagou been in?—A. Arms and ammunition, wholesale and retail groceries, and wines and liquors.

Q. Wines and liquors. Where was his place of business?—A. His place of business was where the Ruby saloon is now.

You are not the Jagou from whom he made that purchase?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of the matter, then?—A. No, sir; none at all.

Q. You do not know what kind of ammunition was sold?—A. No, sir; nothing at all about it.

Q. You do not know anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you the night of this firing?—A. In Fort Brown, sir.

Q. You were in Fort Brown? Where were you in Fort Brown, and how did you happen to be in Fort Brown? Just explain that. Where were you in Fort Brown?—A. I was at the house of the matron—the hospital matron.

Q. What as her name?—A. Josephine Johnson.

Q. The house of the matron is over back of the guardhouse, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The guardhouse is marked on this map, and the matron's house is marked here [indicating]?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I notice here that the house between "38" and "37" is marked as the matron's house.—A. That is it, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Have you seen this map before?—A. Never, but I am familiar with the plan of Fort Brown.

Q. And you know that is the matron's house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, which is the front of that house?—A. This is the front, facing the post hospital.

Q. That would be in a southerly direction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It faces in a southerly direction, toward the hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time that night did you go to that house?—A. Well, I had walked with Mr. Matlock to his quarters, which were in the last house in the officers' quarters row [indicating].

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Next to the river?—A. Close to the river.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Mr. Matlock was a quartermaster's clerk?—A. Yes, sir. I had walked to his house and from there walked back to get my wife at the matron's quarters.

Q. Were you in company with Mr. Matlock when you went there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time was it in the evening when you went there?—A. The second time, I do not know exactly, but about a quarter after 11; between a quarter after 11 and 12.

Q. Where were you when the firing commenced?—A. At the matron's house.

Q. You were there. You were not in bed, but you were up?—A. No, no, no. We went in there until we were ready to go back to town. It was the habit of the people of Brownsville to go right straight through the post, and, of course, if you were halted you would answer the call and go back.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was inside of the house.

Q. Inside of the house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a porch fronting out toward the hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or a gallery, as you call it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the front of the house has a gallery?—A. A gallery, a porch, facing the post hospital.

Q. Were you on that gallery, or inside of the house?—A. Inside of the house.

Q. You were there when the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us, when the firing commenced, where you were?—A. Standing on the porch of the matron's house. I heard the firing as I stepped to the front, facing this way [indicating]. I heard the firing to the rear of my right-hand side.

Q. Just indicate as near as you can about where that was, as near as you can locate it?—A. It was in this direction, down here. Where it was I could not tell you [indicating].

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It was somewhere in the direction of Washington and Elizabeth streets, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; somewhere in that direction.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Then you were standing in front of the matron's house. When the firing commenced, you jumped up and went out on the porch?—

A. Yes, sir; I jumped up and went out on the porch.

Q. And as you stood there you heard the firing over to the rear of you?—A. Down in this direction, here [indicating]. Where it was I couldn't say.

Q. You could not see?—A. No, sir; I could not see.

Senator WARNER. When the witness says, "This direction, here," where does he mean?

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Just take this stick and point it out on the map.—A. Here [indicating].

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. What street do you think it was on?—A. I couldn't tell, exactly.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I would like to have you answer my question.—A. I will, sir. I could hear the shooting to the back and to the right [indicating on map].

Q. Point out on the map about where it seemed to you.—A. I could not decide, exactly. It would have been around in this neighborhood, comprising two or three blocks [indicating].

Q. Toward Washington and Elizabeth streets and back of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is where you point?—A. I point in this whole direction, here [indicating].

Q. That is where it seemed to be?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. You could not tell whether it was outside or inside of the grounds?—A. No, sir; it was impossible to tell where it was.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What did you do when you heard the firing?—A. As I said a little while ago, I stepped to the front porch.

Q. After that, I mean. How long did you stand there?—A. Only a few minutes, probably two or three minutes, and the sentry from the guardhouse came running around and told us, "You white people better get in, if you don't want to be hurt."

Q. A sentry from the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who he was?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. How far was the guardhouse from where you were?—A. I don't know. I couldn't tell, sir.

Q. Well, give us some idea?—A. About 20 yards, probably.

Q. Twenty yards?—A. Yes, sir. That would be about 60 feet.

Q. This map is on a scale of 1 inch to 30 feet.—A. That I could not tell.

Senator FULTON. That would be about right, would it not? Here is the guardhouse, and here is where he was.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you undertake to get down to the guardhouse?—A. No, sir; I just went outside to look what was going on, to see about it.

Q. About how long after the firing was it that he gave you that notice?—A. Well, at the first chance——

Q. You did not make any effort to go out of the reservation that night?—A. No, sir; it was impossible to go.

Q. Did Mr. Matlock make any effort to go out?—A. No, sir. He tried his best to get out from the matron's quarters to his house again; and during the night, I don't know what hour it was, probably 2 o'clock in the morning, he got out.

Q. He was stopped by the guard, was he not?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so; but he made himself known and had a chance to go back to his quarters.

Q. The guard was thrown out all around there, was it not?—A. I don't know.

Q. You do not know about that?—A. I know, of course, what I saw the next morning, but the night of the shooting I did not know anything.

Q. What kind of a night was that? Was it a dark night, or not?—A. No, it was not such a dark night.

Q. Could you see distinctly?—A. Not at a very big distance. The moon had not risen yet. The moon rose at 1 o'clock, I think.

Q. There was a moon that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But there was no moon at that time?—A. No, sir; not at that time. But it was not so dark that I could not see at a certain distance. It was a very clear night; no clouds.

Q. Do you know how the guards were stationed before the firing commenced, about that guardhouse?—A. No, sir; we never could move from there that night. We were kept in there like prisoners almost. We could not move from there.

Senator WARNER. In this connection, so that we may have it together with this testimony, I would like to have inserted in the record the testimony given by this witness before Mr. Purdy and Maj. A. P. Blocksom, found at page 134 of Part II of Senate Document 155. I do not think there are any questions that I want to ask this witness.

The testimony referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:

LOUIS A. JAGOU was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. What is your business, Mr. Jagou?—A. None whatever, just now; I have a farm which I attend to, but I do not call myself a farmer; I look after the interests of my farm, though.

Q. You live in the city of Brownsville?—A. At times; not always.

Q. Where is your home?—A. On the ranch, about 44 miles from town.

Q. Where were you on the night of the 13th of August of this year?—A. Part of the night I was in town and the balance of the night I was in the post.

Q. Where were you in town on the night of the 13th of August, before 11 o'clock?—A. I was at my mother-in-law's house, Mrs. Wallace, next to the garrison fence.

Q. That is where Herman Schrieber lives?—A. No, sir; I was in the next house to that.

Q. About 11 o'clock that night you had occasion to go into the garrison?—A. Yes, sir; a little before 11.

Q. With whom did you go?—A. Miss Josephine Johnson.

Q. Where was your wife?—A. In the post.

Q. At what building?—A. In the matron's building, back of the guardhouse.

Q. That building is located over across the parade ground?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, will you state in your own words just what you saw and what took place, so far as you know, within the garrison that night?—A. I heard, first, consecutive shooting, about eight or ten shots; that aroused our attention.

Q. Could you tell where they were located, or the general direction?—A. They appeared to be, at that moment, in the direction of the town, beyond the barracks. After I heard those first shots I heard a repetition of about fifteen. I could count them plainly enough—they were five in succession.

Q. Were they in the same locality?—A. Yes, sir; the same place; I think so; I could not tell whether they had changed or not; they were very near to that same locality; and that was a big volley and I could not count them; they were in quick succession.

Q. Did you hear any firing afterwards?—A. It stopped for a little while and then started again, and that sounded still further up toward town—further away from me.

Q. Where were you during this firing?—A. I was on the porch facing the hospital and away from the soldiers' barracks; on the other side of the hospital from the barracks. The firing was at the rear of the building where I was located.

Q. Did you go up toward the barracks that night?—A. I tried to get out.

Q. What prevented you?—A. Some guard with khaki pants and blue shirt; he came with his gun in his hands and said, "Keep back if you don't want to be hurt."

Q. About how long was that after you first heard firing up toward the barracks?—A. That was after the second number of shots that I could distinctly hear—before the general volley.

Q. So you and your wife and your friends kept in the matron's house?—A. Yes, sir; except Matlock—

Q. Well, you remained there all night?—A. Yes, sir; my wife and I.

Q. You state that a man by the name of Matlock attempted to get out; why could he not do so?—A. He was stopped by the guard and turned back.

Q. And you all remained there that night?—A. Yes, sir; all but him.

Q. Who was Matlock?—A. He was the quartermaster's clerk, and he afterwards went to his quarters in the barracks.

Q. About what time did you come into the city the next morning?—A. About 6 o'clock.

Q. Did you find any empty cartridges that morning?—A. I did; at about half past 7 o'clock.

Q. Where?—A. On the corner of this alley [indicating], at the rear of Mrs. Leahy's hotel.

Q. How many did you find?—A. About three—one loaded and two empty.

Q. To whom did you give those cartridges?—A. To a policeman; he told me that he wanted them for evidence.

Q. Now, Mr. Jagou, are you familiar with the reports of firearms generally?—A. Yes, I am; I have been in that business for a long number of years of my life.

Q. Are you familiar with the report of the guns with which the United States soldiers were armed that were in the garrison on the night of August 13, 1906?—A. Yes, sir; I am, very.

Q. Will you state the nature of the reports of the shots which you heard fired on that night?—A. The report was quick, sharp, and had a whizzing sound.

Q. Were those reports the same or different from the reports of the ordinary gun or revolver used by the people generally?—A. Entirely different.

Q. Mr. Jagou, do you know whether or not any of the buildings inside of the garrison wall were shot into on the night of August 13?—A. Afterwards, for the sake of my own curiosity, I looked at the different buildings, and I did not find any evidence of any shots.

Q. Did you ever, after the night of the 13th of August, while the troops were here or since they were removed, hear from the soldiers or the officers, or from anyone else, any claim made that any of the buildings inside of the garrison wall had been shot into on that evening?—A. No, sir.

Q. And so far as you know, none of them were shot into?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Jagou, you have been in the business of handling firearms, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What experience have you had in the use of different kinds of firearms?—

A. I have had experience with them from 1889 to 1904; during that time I dealt in firearms here in Brownsville.

Q. Are you familiar in a general way with the various kinds of guns owned and used by the people in this locality?—A. Yes, sir; with nine-tenths of them.

Q. Now, I will show you these empty shells and ball cartridges here, which were offered in evidence by Mayor Combe yesterday afternoon, and ask you whether or not it was possible to have fired these cartridges in the guns which you state are owned and used by the citizens here in Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would it be possible to use them in the ordinary rifles, or in any other rifle that you know of other than the army gun?—A. No, sir; I do not think it would. None that I have ever seen or know of would fire them, and I have never heard of anybody else using what we term "Government ammunition."

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Jagou, if you know of anybody in town who has a Krag-Jørgensen gun?—A. The only one I know of belongs to Mayor Combe.

Q. Do you know whether or not a Krag-Jørgensen gun will fire one of these cartridges?—A. No; I don't think so.

Q. It is your best judgment that it will not?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say when you left the piazza to look around you were stopped by the guard?—A. I do not understand your question.

Q. You were stopped by some one, you say. Were you stopped by the soldier on guard?—A. Yes, sir; he was a sentry, I suppose. I did not make any effort to go outside of the building—outside of the porch. I went to look, to try and see what it was.

Q. Where was this sentry—outside of the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir; he was running around from the guardhouse; running around the building, around there.

Q. Did he make any explanation as to why he ordered you back?—

A. Yes; he told me, as I stated a while ago, to get back. He said, "You get in." There were several parties out on the porch—Mr. Matlock and my wife and myself and Mrs. Johnson—and he told us, "You white folks better get in if you do not want to be hurt," or something to that effect.

Q. Did he give any reason? Did he say who was doing the hurting, or who was being hurt?—A. No, sir. So we walked in and kept out of his way.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you ever testify before to that remark made by the guard?—A. If I am not mistaken, I believe I told Major Blocksom and Mr. Purdy at the time. I am not quite sure, but I believe I made that statement.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. On page 135 of Senate Document No. 155 he says he was told, "Keep back, if you don't want to get hurt." He says, "Some guard with khaki pants and blue shirt; he came with his gun in his hands and said, 'Keep back, if you don't want to be hurt.'"

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is the remark he made, is it?—A. Something to that effect.

Q. Now you have put in, "You white folks." Did he use those words?—A. I can not recall exactly. It is a year and a half ago.

Q. You do not pretend to be accurate about that?—A. No, sir. He just meant for us to get inside of the building.

Q. Yes; and you remained then inside of the building?—A. I remained inside of the building until about 5 o'clock the next morning.

Q. Did you hear them posting guards around there?—A. Oh, yes; we heard a great deal of excitement all through the post that night.

Q. Did you hear the call to arms sounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That sounded at the guardhouse, did it not?—A. Yes, sir; in the first of it.

Q. And immediately after the firing commenced, or shortly afterwards?—A. Well, the call to arms, as far as I can recollect, was sounded between the first shots and the several volleys that were fired afterwards.

Q. When the call to arms was sounded the whole garrison turned out, did it not?—A. I suppose so; but, as I say, we could not tell anything from where we were. At least I could not, because I could not see anything.

Q. It was too dark for you to see?—A. Yes, sir; and the houses on our back were standing back of us and we could not see anything.

By Senator FULTON:

Q. Are you familiar with firearms?—A. Yes, sir; I am.

Q. Have you had much experience in shooting?—A. Yes, sir; I used to shoot a great deal.

Q. What character of powder did you have experience with in shooting?—A. The black powder, mostly—the Winchester and Remington.

Q. Have you heard other guns fired—high-power guns?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I have.

Q. When you heard this firing begin were you impressed at the time as to the character of the gun that was being fired?—A. Yes, sir; I could tell right away that it was a gun that did not use the black powder. The sound of the bullets—the noise of the reports of the guns—is entirely different.

Q. What did you think it was?—A. Well, I surely did think it was a high-power rifle.

Q. You did not think so?—A. I did think so; yes, sir.

Q. You did think so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it occur to you that it was a revolver or a rifle?—A. Oh, no; it sounded to me more like a rifle than anything else.

Senator FULTON. That is all.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you hear any revolver reports at all that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard only high-power guns?—A. If it had been anything else with the high-power guns, it would have been too far from where we were standing to detect it.

Q. It would have been too far away for you to detect it?—A. Yes, sir; especially if they had been high-power revolvers, using high-power powder, the caliber would have been quite small and hard to detect. You could possibly hear the reports of the revolver using .45 caliber, the old-style Colt, but the United States Army did not use that.

Q. Did you hear any shots of that character that night?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. One of the policemen has testified that he fired his revolver on Washington street.—A. Well, I did not hear that. You see, it is quite a distance.

Q. That is quite a distance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you could not hear that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Others have testified that they fired revolver shots.—A. Probably they were closer to the scene of action than I was.

Q. You would not say that there were none?—A. No, sir; I would not say that.

(Witness excused.)

Senator HEMENWAY. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to have the evidence presented before the grand jury. We could not get that before because Senator Culberson was not in town. We ought to be able to get it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall I make a request on Senator Culberson for it?

Senator LODGE. Yes.

Senator FORAKER. And in that same connection I think it would be well, also, that we should request that he furnish us with the affidavits taken and sent to him and put in his possession in response to a telegram sent to Brownsville by Major Blocksom when he was on his way here, under the President's order, in December, I think it was.

Senator LODGE. You mean a lot of affidavits that Senator Culberson had, himself?

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Those which he used in his speech?

Senator FORAKER. Yes; he used some of them in his speech.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether he had any more than those that he used?

Senator FORAKER. I think he had more. One thing more I would like to put in the record. I called the attention of the committee a few days ago to the fact that it had come to my knowledge that Paulino Preciado had filed a claim at the State Department against the Government of the United States to recover $10,000 for injuries to him from the wound he claims to have received on the night of the shooting, on the ground that he was wounded by United States soldiers. I stated to the committee that I had asked the State Department to furnish me with definite information in regard to it. Mr. Root, the Secretary of State, said the papers were of such a character that he preferred not to send them here to be put in the record, but that I could look them over, and if there was anything I wanted to put in I should confer with him about it. I looked them over, and all that I care to put in is that Preciado made the affidavit on which his claim is based, September 25, 1906. I notified Mr. Root to that effect, and he sent me this telegram:

There is no objection whatever to your putting on record the fact that Preciado made his affidavit on which his claim against the United States is based September 25, 1906, and that the claim has been pending ever since that time.

ELIHU ROOT.

That has on it the note:

Phoned from residence, 3.15 p. m., November 26, 1907.

Senator WARNER. It was my understanding the other day that he had made a claim.

Senator FRAZIER. He said that in his testimony, I think.

Senator WARNER. I do not think it was in his testimony, but I had heard of it.

Senator FORAKER. I had never heard of it, or if I had it had not made any impression on my mind. I want the record also to show, as the result of my examination of the papers, that the claim has been pending ever since; that is, it was filed shortly after that affidavit was written and is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Foraker desires to have several of the bullets analyzed. I will ask Senator Warner to examine them, together with Senator Foraker, so that we may have preserved a record of any marks that may be on them, or any peculiarities there may be about them.

Thereupon, at 4.15 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until Friday, November 29, 1907, at 2 o'clock p. m.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Friday, November 29, 1907.

The chairman called the meeting to order at 2 o'clock p. m.

There were present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Warner, Fulton, Foster, Overman, and Frazier.

The chairman laid before the committee the following communications:

1. Copy of telegram to Senator Taliaferro, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 28, 1907.

Senator TALIAFERRO, Jacksonville, Fla.:

Committee meet to-morrow, Friday, 2 p. m. Probably again Saturday. Report matters may be presented and talked of, but nothing settled in your absence. Kindly wire answer, if detained.

F. E. WARREN.

2. Telegram, in reply, from Senator Taliaferro, as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., November 28, 1907.

Senator WARREN, Washington, D. C.:

Telegram received. I leave for Washington to-morrow morning and should arrive Saturday morning.

JAMES P. TALIAFERRO.

3. Copy of letter to Director of the Geological Survey, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 26, 1907.

THE DIRECTOR OF THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: This committee desires to have made a careful and exact analysis of the lead from certain rifle balls, and respectfully requests that you designate some competent metallurgist in your department and permit him to make the analyses and report the results to the committee, if possible, by next Friday afternoon, November 29, at 2 o'clock.

I transmit herewith the following:

1. Exhibit No. 1. An envelope containing a rifle ball (marked "M" for identification) extracted from top of old well in F. Yturria's yard. This ball passed through kitchen. (See affidavit of Teofilo Martinez of date January 8, 1907).

2. Exhibit No. 9. Steel-jacketed bullet received in evidence in connection with affidavit of Maj. A. P. Blocksom.

3. Cuttings taken from post in front of Crixell's saloon, by Lieutenant Leckle.

We do not desire any analysis of the metal jackets encasing the lead of the two bullets, but merely the lead itself. Please request your metallurgist to use as little of the lead as possible—that is, no greater quantity than it is necessary to use in making a careful and thorough analysis. These articles are exhibits on file in our "Brownsville affray" investigation, and we are desirous of keeping them as nearly intact as possible. Also please have the portions left, in each case, preserved carefully in their proper envelopes. We desire a separate report upon each of the three exhibits. The expense of these analyses will be covered.

Yours, very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

4. Letter in reply from H. C. Rizer, Acting Director, United States Geological Survey, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., November 27, 1907.

HON. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
*Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
U. S. Senate, Washington, D. C.*

SIR: In reply to your letter of November 26:

This Bureau will cheerfully make the tests called for, in so far as the limited amount of material submitted with your letter will permit, but the time limit allowed is entirely inadequate. The analysis of alloys of the kind in question is a difficult operation, and in a matter of such importance no chemist of repute would be willing to submit analyses, except in duplicate obtained, if possible, by different methods. Then, too, unless the qualitative composition of the material submitted is imparted to the chemist he must spend time and material in ascertaining this before proceeding to the more elaborate quantitative tests. This is essential, because the methods to be adopted in quantitative analyses depend not only on what elements are present, but also on their relative amounts. For an exact analysis the amount of material submitted is utterly insufficient. It is altogether probable that all of the material would have to be sacrificed, and more would be desirable. There is also doubt as to the degree of detail required in the analysis, as, for instance: Is the general quantitative composition of the more important constituents only of the alloys to be determined, or are minute amounts of supposedly unessential ingredients to be likewise determined? While what is called a commercial analysis might be made in a much shorter time, an analysis of the character seemingly called for, under the circumstances, to meet the demands of a legal inquiry, might require as much as a month.

Very respectfully,

H. C. RIZER, Acting Director.

After some discussion of the contents of this letter the metallurgist assigned to do the work was communicated with by telephone (during the session), and was authorized to proceed with a commercial analysis, submitting as full a report as possible in the time allowed, and stating what the analysis in each case disclosed.

5. Copy of letter to Senator Culberson, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 26, 1907.

HON. CHARLES A. CULBERSON,
The Connecticut, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You will recall our telegraphic communication about the proceedings before the grand jury in the matter of the Brownsville affray and my subsequent letter, dated June 12, in which I advised you that we would get along without them for the present but would perhaps ask you for the papers this fall.

We now desire to have these proceedings for consideration in the afternoon of Friday, November 29, at 2 o'clock.

Please note the inclosed copy of telegram. We were advised that the affidavits of these persons mentioned by Major Blocksom were taken, and were finally turned over to you. If that is the case, may we have them also, and any other papers you may have at hand which you are willing to have us use.

Please advise me in the premises, and oblige,

Yours very sincerely,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

(Inclosed copy of Major Blocksom's telegram, printed in S. Doc. 155, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, part 1, pages 202-203.)

6. Letter in reply from Senator Culberson, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., November 27, 1907.

HON. F. E. WARREN,

Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, U. S. Senate,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your note of yesterday, with reference to proceedings before the grand jury at Brownsville in the matter of the attack upon that city by negro troops, is received.

A copy of what purported to be testimony taken before the grand jury was sent to me from Brownsville, and I used all that I thought was particularly pertinent in my speech on the subject in the Senate, a copy of which is herewith inclosed. In doing this my recollection is that I used the sheets sent me from Brownsville, and consequently they were left with the Public Printer and perhaps have been destroyed. You will note from my speech that I stated what is the fact, that where I used any testimony by a witness I used all the testimony of that witness. There was some testimony sent me which was immaterial and which I did not use, but I am not certain that I can find it, though if I can I will transmit it to you at the earliest opportunity.

Very truly, yours,

C. A. CULBERSON.

(Inclosure, copy of speech.)

It was ascertained that the original copy sent to the Public Printer had been destroyed. The chairman was instructed to urge Senator Culberson to locate, if possible, the affidavits desired, which, according to Major Blocksom's testimony, had been turned over by him to Senator Culberson. The portion of the grand jury proceedings contained in Senator Culberson's speech, and one additional affidavit, were ordered printed in the record, together with any further affidavits which might come later from Senator Culberson. The matter is as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF WILBUR F. DENNETT.

The State of Texas, County of Cameron:

Wilbur F. Dennett came before me personally, and, being by me first duly sworn, on his oath deposes and says that on the night of August 13, 1906, I was awakened by firing of guns, and I remarked to my wife that the soldiers were firing on the town from the upstairs gallery of the barracks. I live on the corner of Fourteenth and Adams streets, one block from the garrison. As soon as I got up I looked at my watch, and by my time it was 11.50 p. m. The firing was almost continuous, and was from twelve to fifteen minutes in duration. There were three bugle calls during the firing, but am not familiar with them and do not know which calls they were. The first bugle call was close, after the firing had begun, then in a few minutes another one, then still another one some minutes later. There was firing for at least a minute or two after the last bugle call. I did not go out after the firing ceased. The next morning, August 14, a mass meeting of the people of Brownsville was held in the United States court-house; a committee was appointed to investigate the outrage. After the meeting, we, the committee, immediately with our mayor, Dr. F. J. Combe, and Capt. William Kelly, our chairman, proceeded to the Administration building, in Fort Brown; and met the commanding officer, Major Penrose, and two of his officers. Major Penrose stated that he had believed the firing had been from the town on the garrison when the mayor, Doctor Combe, had first interviewed him last night after the firing, but that this morning Doctor Combe had visited him again, and in the face of the evidence he (Doctor Combe) had shown him—shells, unexploded cartridges, clips, etc., which had been picked up in the streets and alleys of Brownsville and turned over to the mayor as evidence—he (Major Penrose) was convinced his negro soldiers had attacked Brownsville the night before. Our chairman, Mr. Kelly, asked him the question, "if he had made any personal examination of the barracks to see if there were any bullet holes in them from the town side?" He said "he had, and had found no evidence at all of shots having been fired at the barracks from the town side." "There was," he said "only one broken pane of glass, and that looked as if it was broken by a piece of brick." After other questions had been asked Mr. Penrose, I asked him "if he made a personal examination of the barracks and arms, etc., immediately after the firing last night." He replied, "No; I could not be everywhere." I then asked him "if personal examinations of the troops, arms, and barracks had been made last night by any of his commissioned officers." He referred the question to the two officers present, and they each replied that "they had not personally made such examination." I then asked him if his knowledge of what had transpired last night had not been entirely obtained from what was told him by noncommissioned officers and privates of his command. He replied, "Yes," and then again told us of how much he deplored the occurrence, and that he would have sooner have lost his right arm than have had it happen, and promised us that he would use his best efforts to discover who the guilty men were. Afterwards I was present at most of the meetings of the committee and at the examination of most of the witnesses, and the examiner was always careful to ask the question if the witnesses had seen any shots fired toward the garrison, and the reply was always the witness had seen no shots fired toward the garrison. The night was obscure; the moon did not rise till toward morning; the town is poorly lighted with coal-oil lamps, but the alley between Elizabeth and Washington streets, up which the soldiers marched until they arrived at the Miller Hotel—two blocks—is not lighted at all, and nobody was very anxious to look out and find out the color of the men behind the guns, except a few who observed from places of security; but the guns used were the Springfield 1006 pattern, as proved by the empty shells, cartridges unexploded, bullets taken from bullet holes, and other evidence picked up by the police and others in the streets and alleys of Brownsville and turned over to the proper authorities as evidence. I will state that there was no prejudice, so far as I know, against the negro soldier by the people of Brownsville; that during my forty years' residence in this city negro soldiers had often been stationed here before, and from conversation with business people here they were preferred as more beneficial to the general trade of the town than the white soldiers; but from the time this battallion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry came here it was generally remarked by our town people how sullen, poorly dressed, slouchy, and generally showing very poor discipline. The men came out in town dirty, in their shirt sleeves, without blouses, and were generally the furthest removed from my conception of a soldier that I had ever seen, either in the Volunteer or Regular Army. I will state I have been, in politics, a lifelong Republican, and it was certainly a new experience for me to have to help defend our town from United States soldiers for more than a week until aid came from elsewhere, and that I slept at night, until the negro troops were gone, with loaded rifle and other arms at hand.

WILBUR F. DENNETT.

AFFIDAVITS TAKEN BY THE GRAND JURY.

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 17, 1906.

William Henry, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live in Brownsville, Tex. I am working for Mr. McDevitt. On Saturday night before the shooting I was at saloon near the garrison fence, talking with several colored soldiers, who were there. I paid for my own beer; one of the soldiers treated me once. I heard the soldiers talking about getting even with a saloon uptown, and some man who had knocked a soldier down. I could not hear all they said, but I knew there was something wrong at the barroom. One of the men was Sergt. George Jackson, of Company B. He is the man who jumped the wire fence that evening while I was there and came to the barroom. If I am not mistaken, Corporal Madison was behind the bar, but I am not quite sure. Allison was behind the bar every time I went there. When they opened the barroom it was the day the soldiers had been paid off, and there was a big crowd both inside and outside the bar. Jackson is a great big black nigger; he is so black I call myself a white man alongside of him. He was one of the men who were cussing in the barroom. I could not make out right what they were saying, but I knew they were up to something. The man who told me to get out, they did not want any spy around there, was Allison, who is now in jail. This was after the shooting.

José Martinez, being duly sworn, says:

My name is José Martinez. I live in a cottage of Mr. Randall's at corner of alley back of F. Yturria's, in front of garrison wall. I was at home on night of August 18, 1906, the night of shooting. I was awake when shooting began, reading in front of door on garrison side. I first heard about 5 or 6 shots at once inside of garrison, between wall and quarters, right opposite my door. Then in about two or three minutes I heard men jumping wall into the street. They gathered in front of my door, and most of them, about 20, came up alley; the others may have gone toward Elizabeth street. I next saw the men in alley, opposite gate of my yard, next door to Cowen's. They had rifles in their hands. They started up alley shooting right along. I fell on the floor and did not go out. I heard them talking English. I know they were negro soldiers. I saw them and their uniforms. I could not hear what they said. There were about 20 in party going toward town, up by Cowen's. I do not know where the balance of party who jumped wall went. I think about 30 jumped wall.

G. W. Rendall, being duly sworn, says:

My name is G. W. Rendall. I live over the Western Union Telegraph office in block 61, city of Brownsville, on the right hand coming out of garrison gate. House is about 34 feet from garrison gate. I was at home on night of August 18, 1906. I was awakened by the shooting. There were two shots fired before I got up and looked out of window. I judge they were pistol shots. The men I saw moving were inside of garrison wall, and the only shots that I saw as they left the weapons were pointed nearly up. It led me to believe that it was an alarm of fire. Firing continued, and I looked from one window and then another, looking for light from fire; seeing no light, I went to front window looking over garrison gate, and I saw the men moving and heard some low talking, but could not distinguish what was said until one man spoke in a louder voice than they had been using, saying, "Now we go," or "Here we go," and they came over the fence, passed over the wall, about abreast of the place between my place and Yturria's. Then the shooting was up that alley toward Louis Cowen's house. After the reports got up the street pretty well there were two shots right in front of my house. Those were rifle shots. One of them came from Elizabeth street side near corner of my house, went about 2 feet over my head and through the ceiling and on out through the house. From the direction in which shot came and the course it took indicate that it was fired from the upper gallery at lower or river end of quarters nearest river. The reason I think so is because the ball took an almost direct course. My home is a two-story one, and the bullet entered it about 28 feet from ground and came out about 6 inches above where it entered after passing through a room 20 feet wide. The first men I saw were inside garrison between wall and middle quarters and going up toward alley between Yturria and my house. I think there were 15 or 20 shots before the first bugle call. There were no men in sight. Everything was over before the assembly call was made and the officer came. As soon as the assembly call was made the men came right downstairs. I could hear the noise of their boots.

M. Y. Dominguez, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live in Brownsville, Tex. I am lieutenant of police. On Monday, the 13th of August, at about eight minutes before midnight, I was at the market, when I heard shots in the direction of the lower end of Washington street. I rode down Washington street, when I got to the corner of Dona Rosa Pecina I heard the shots in the alley near Louis Cowen's house. A moment later the soldiers approached the crossing of the alley of Fourteenth street. Then I returned back up Washington street, a few yards from the corner of Pecina. I dismounted and tightened the girth of my horse; mounted again and went to the lamp-post at Bolack's corner. From there I rode up on Thirteenth street to the crossing of the alley back of Miller's Hotel. When I got near Miller's Hotel I saw two files of soldiers coming in the alley, one on the hotel side and one on Bolack's side, and one of them said: "Give 'm hell!" Then I cried out: "People, wake up, here are the negro soldiers." Then they fired a volley. I did not get hurt that time and kept on at a trot toward Elizabeth street. Then they came out of the alley and turned. One filed along the wall of Miller's Hotel and the other along the walk of Wells's office, and kept firing in the direction I was going. When I tried to turn up Elizabeth street I received a shot in my right arm and my horse staggered down. The horse fell on top of my left leg and then another volley came. The soldiers at this time were about 10 yards from the corner of the alley of Miller's Hotel. I got out from under the horse and saw the soldiers turn back to the alley. It was so dark that I could not recognize any of the soldiers, but I know that they were negro soldiers, both by their clothing and their voices. When I got out from under my horse, I made my way, the best I could, to Putegnat's drug store. The shot splintered my right arm so that it had to be amputated. I saw plainly that they were soldiers when I was at the Pecina corner. While on my way to the drug store, when I was in front of Crixell's, I heard the shots in the alley back of the "Ruby Saloon."

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 12, 1906.

Herbert Elkins, being sworn, says:

My name is Herbert Elkins. On the night of August 13, 1906, I was in my room, but awoke when the shooting began. My room is room nearest alley, in second story Leahy Hotel, and immediately opposite Louis Cowen's house, on side street, I think Fourteenth. First shooting seemed to come from the garrison wall, just inside or outside, at Cowen alley. There were about thirty or forty shots, more or less rapidly fired. It stopped for a few seconds and then began again. There were more shots fired before they came up the alley. They came up the alley, and I saw them in alley just before they got to the corner of Fourteenth street and alley. They were running when they got to corner; two were in lead, about 25 feet ahead of main body; these two men gave the orders. When the two men got to corner one was a little ahead of the other, and he ran into a mudhole—muddy hole was about junction of alley and street. Shots were fired down alley before they got to corner. He jumped to corner back of Cowen's and got at door, and called to the other not to go there, it was muddy, and to come over on that side. These two fired about three shots each toward the Cowen house. They both reloaded and fired toward Cowen's, again reloaded, started across Fourteenth and got nearly across on up alley, then stopped as if they didn't know what to do, and fired three or four more shots into Cowen's house. These two men then ran on up alley, and the others, about fifteen in number, not less than twelve, not more than twenty, followed them up alley toward Miller Hotel. They only fired about four or five shots after they left Cowen's and before they got to Miller's. After they got up the alley about Miller's and farther they fired a good many more shots. I saw eight or ten soldiers run on back the way they came—i. e., down alley toward the wall. This was a few minutes, not over four or five, but time enough for Mrs. Leahy to go on over and bring the Cowen family. I saw no firing by men on their way back. I heard the bugle calls just after the firing began, and before they came up alley. The first two calls were alike. A few seconds after I heard a different call, blown once: I heard roll call and voices. This was about twenty minutes after the shooting. Men that I saw had gotten back about ten minutes before the men had gone down from the barracks to the roll call. The men had on khaki pants, leggings, and blue shirts (light blue summer shirts). The two in front had on hats; the others were in a run, and I didn't notice if they had caps or hats. They were niggers. The two men in front were about 5 feet 6 inches in height, one a little heavier than the other. I saw the patrol come by, and on its way down, about one hour or one hour and one-half after the shooting. I saw no white men with them, but Dr. F. Combe was behind. They stopped in front of Leahy's and talked. Doctor C. talked to Mrs. Leahy. The patrol stood there. As they came down by Knoklaski's office the rear part of the company made out to come on sidewalk, but followed head of column around the tree. Then they did come on sidewalk—i. e., part of them. One of the company, whom I took to be one of the two leaders in shooting at Cowen's house, the one who was warned not to get into the mud, said: "We'll kill the rest of the white sons-of-bitches to-morrow." Some were laughing and talking. They seemed not to pay much attention to the officers. Mrs. Leahy heard this. I think Doctor Combe had just left, going toward the post up toward the front of the company. Just a little after the first as the shooting began, and before the second shooting and before men left wall, I saw about two lights inside of quarters, second from river, and heard one or two men on downstairs porch toward town running. I saw one or two shots fired from upper story of second barracks from river, toward town generally.

Genaro Padron, being duly sworn, says:

I am city policeman. On the night of August 13, 1906, when the shooting began, I was on the corner of Merchants' National Bank, with Florenso Briseño, Mike Jagou, and M. Alonzo, jr. I went down Elizabeth street and got pistol from Tillman, and went to Miller's Hotel on Thirteenth street, and on to Washington, and turned right down to Pecini's, corner of Washington and Fourteenth, and stood there. They were shooting then in alley at Cowen's. I saw them cross Fourteenth street from Cowen's to Leahy's. I saw the lieutenant of police coming down Washington on horseback. I met him and told him to get down, as he was a mark. He got down and tightened girth of horse. He remounted and we started up Washington, I ahead. On reaching Thirteenth, met Macedonio Ramirez. We turned toward Elizabeth on Thirteenth. I told Dominguez not to try and cross alley, as soldiers were coming up alley shooting. Again I told him and grabbed his saddle. He paid no attention, but went ahead. I got in the dark near Putegnats and got in doorway, and then jumped into street when I saw three soldiers in alley throw down on Dominguez. They fired, then

I fired a shot and then fired another, and then I ran to corner. When I ran they cried, "Here the two more." I looked out and saw five or six, not less, come in my direction. I then went up Washington in direction of Finks, hiding myself in shade of trees. When I got to the last tree they turned corner and fired in my direction. Again, when they saw me, they fired. I ran to corner of Sahuallo, and again they shot at me. This was the the time they fired on Starck's home. There were not less than five or six, and they kept advancing and shooting. I ran to Eleventh street.

Among those soldiers there was one who had on a white shirt. The shirt was outside of his trousers. He had no hat on. I saw his bare head. Right behind the three who first come out alley at Miller Hotel corner there were several others, and he was one of them. He was a man of stout build, medium height; a little taller than I, more or less.

My name is C. H. Thorn. I live in block 62, street 9, city of Brownsville. I was at home and awake when the shooting began on the night of August 13, 1906. My bedroom is downstairs at rear of house, about 30 or 40 feet from alley. I was in bed, but not asleep, heard firing, and it kept getting nearer; it came from direction of garrison, evidently coming up alley. I started to put on my slippers and heard reports in alley opposite my house, right outside of window. Heard them talking and breathing heavily. I distinguished very readily by their voices that they were negroes, and one thing I remember, but not in exact words, it was either, "There he goes," or "There they go;" then another said twice, "Give 'em hell! Give 'em hell! God damn 'em!" in a lower voice and he fired. The others were already firing. All this time they were going on up alley. They went on by. The firing continued for about ten minutes up toward Twelfth street. I would think everything was over when I could hear more shots. These were also scattered shots, but I couldn't locate them. I found next morning that a bullet had gone through my privy and into the kitchen. It went through weatherboarding flat.

F. E. Starck, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live in Brownsville, on Washington street. On the night of Monday, the 13th of August, about 12.30 I was awakened by a volley being fired into my house. The bullets went into my bedroom, in my children's bedroom. I jumped up out of bed and grabbed some of the children and took them to the back end of the house. I then came back, got my Winchester, and went to the front windows. I saw a man running behind the big ash trees in front of Mr. Turk's residence, opposite my home. When I got a bead on him I saw his police badge and recognized him as Policeman Genaro Padron. Almost at the same moment I heard a shot fired in the direction of Mr. Porter's residence (Carson), and I presume this is the shot which hit Mr. Turk's house. I did not see any soldiers. The shooting still continued near Miller's Hotel, and I heard a volley fired in the alley back of Turk's residence. Next morning Mayor Combe and myself found some empty cartridge shells in front of my house. They belonged to new Springfield rifle which the Army now uses. We picked up about ten or twelve shells scattered in a space of about 10 feet.

Mr. Starck states that Post Blacksmith W. H. This conversation took place at the quartermaster's corral.

W. H. Sharpe, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live at Fort Brown. I am the post blacksmith. On the 14th of August, the day after the riot, I received verbal orders from the post quartermaster, Lieutenant Grier, through Q. M. Sergt. Roland Allsby, to repair four gun racks, which were brought to my shop. These racks belonged to Company C, as I heard, but I do not know so from my own personal knowledge. The staples which held the lock had been pulled out, and I replaced them. The piece of iron on which the staples are riveted is 2 inches wide and one-fourth of an inch in thickness; it would require considerable force to break the staples out of the iron. The upper part of the racks, which hold the pistols, showed marks (gashees) as if made with an ax, but the locks had not been disturbed.

F. J. Combe, being duly sworn, says:

My name is F. J. Combe. I am a practicing physician; also mayor of the city of Brownsville, Tex. About 12 o'clock on the night of August 13, 1906, I was awakened by what I thought were four or five pistol shots, immediately followed by several rifle shots, which my military experience made me think were fired by high-power rifles. I was sleeping on my cot on the back gallery of my home downstairs, on corner of Elizabeth and Ninth streets. I hardly had time to get out of cot when I heard another volley of shots fired. I got into my trousers, picked up my pistol, called to my brother, Doctor Joe, saying, "I'm going down to stop that firing," or words to that effect. I had hardly gotten out of my side door when I was joined by my brother, and we ran down Elizabeth street. When we arrived opposite Putegnat's pharmacy, I gave the signal for a policeman, and Genaro Padron, police officer, came running around the corner from Twelfth street, Merchants' National Bank. He was breathless and said to me, "Mr. Mayor, don't go down there, you will be shot;" and I told him, "Come on." But before we got to the corner I found blood stains on the sidewalk, and I said to Doctor Joe, "Follow these stains and find out who has been hurt." I went on down the street, as far as Crixell's saloon, in the middle of next block. By that time Doctor Joe returned and said, "Joe Dominguez is shot in the right arm." The chief of police then came up and told me that two policemen were missing. We went on down the street to look for them. It was then that Doctor Joe and I found Joe Dominguez's dead horse, opposite Mr. Wreford's office, corner Elizabeth and Thirteenth streets. I then started to go into the post, but was requested by my brother and the police officers not to do so. I said to Doctor Joe, "Go to 'central' and call up Major Penrose at Fort Brown and tell him I want to speak to him." He started off, but returned in a few minutes with Captain Lyon and about sixty negro soldiers of his battalion. Doctor Joe had halted them on Twelfth street between Elizabeth and alley. Some of Captain Lyon's men in the rear, seeing one or two of my officers with rifles, started to break and go toward them, saying, "Captain, these men have guns." I ran back, calling out "Let those men alone; they are officers." Captain Lyon ordered them back into the ranks. The men did so in a surly manner. Doctor Joe and I then went into the post with Captain Lyon. I met Major Penrose at the gate, and said to him, "Major, your men have fired on the town, killed one citizen, seriously wounded a peace officer, killed his horse, and generally shot up the town." He said, "Doctor Combe, I hardly believe that. I am told, on the contrary, that the citizens have been shooting on the garrison." We talked for probably fifteen or twenty minutes, when Captain Macklin, officer of the day, walked up, saluted the commanding officer, and said, "I report, sir,"—that was about 1 o'clock a. m. Major Penrose said in reply, "Where have you been, Captain Macklin? We have been looking everywhere for you." "Sir, I was in my quarters asleep," replied Macklin. Major Penrose said, "I have sent two men to your quarters, and they reported that you were not there." Captain Macklin replied, "Yes, sir; I was in my quarters asleep." Major Penrose then ordered Captain Macklin to take charge of his company. (I neglected to state that when I met Captain Lyon in town, he asked me, "Doctor, have you seen Captain Macklin? I am looking for him, and we feel that he has been gotten away with in town." I answered, "I don't think so; if so, we would have known it by this time.") I then said to Major Penrose, "I am going back into town, and I warn you not to allow any officer or man of your command to go into the city, as I will not be responsible for their lives." On arriving at Mr. Wells's office, Elizabeth and Thirteenth, I was met by some one who said, "There's a dead man in the Ruby saloon." I went to the saloon, and a short while afterwards Mr. Garito, the justice of the peace, came and requested me to examine the body. I did so, and found that the dead man was Frank Duboisne, and that he was shot through the body by a high-power rifle, from which wound he died almost instantly. The body was lying in the courtyard of the Ruby saloon, near a cistern. I then went to corner of Miller Hotel alley, at the place where Lieutenant of Police Dominguez had told me he was fired upon, and while walking around there I stepped on some empty brass cartridge shells, which I picked up. Amongst them were the clip with two ball cartridges. These are in possession of the sheriff, for which I have his descriptive receipt. I first saw a soldier's cap in Wells's office a day or so afterwards. I understand Mr. Charlie Starck found it.

I was on the street nearly all night. At daybreak next morning I went to the scene of firing, and a bandoleer, such as comes in the ammunition boxes, with an arsenal and issue number and date on it, was handed to me with some more empty shells by, I think, Mr. Houghton. I then went around on Washington street with Mr. Starck, who told me that his home had been fired on, and found quite a number of empty brass cartridge shells strewn along the street in front of his home. These shells were the regulation shells used by the Springfield rifle, now in use by the United States Army.

The first call, in my opinion, was sounded from three to five minutes after first shooting. I think it was "Call to arms."

JUDGE WELCH'S CHARGE TO THE GRAND JURY.

And now, gentlemen of the grand jury, amongst the other responsible duties of your position is that of making a full, thorough, and complete investigation of the unprovoked, murderous midnight assault committed by the negro soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry upon the citizens and homes of Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August. An inoffensive citizen was shot down and killed by them while closing his gate. An unwarranted and cowardly assault was made on the lieutenant of police of Brownsville and his arm shattered by their bullets, requiring its amputation. Fendish malice and hate, showing hearts blacker than their skins, was evidenced by their firing of volley after volley from deadly rifles into and through the doors and windows of family residences, clearly with the brutish hope on their part of killing women and children, and thus make memorable their hatred of the white race. Hard words, these, but strictly true and warranted by uncontested facts.

It was my province to come amongst your patient people even while their terrible fears and horror of another outbreak were upon them, and God spare me in my life the sorrow of ever again witnessing the faces of agonized women and fear-stricken children, tensioned with days and nights of suffering and waiting for relief, with none coming from either nation or State to give them assurance that greater and unspeakable outrages were not to follow.

Tardy relief did come. At the eleventh hour the fiends who disgraced the uniforms they were permitted to wear and shamed a nation were removed. That all of the three companies were blamable must be conceded, for they knew who were guilty, and they shielded and sheltered them and failed to give them up. Hence it is that it has been left to the civil authorities of the State, and especially to this district court, to apprehend if possible those directly guilty of murder, assault on murder, and the ruffianly conspiracies to that end, as the authorities of the United States in charge have declared their inability to discover who were the unformed thugs and murderers that committed the outrages.

You are the most important auxiliary of the court, its very right hand, and to you this matter must be relegated. I wish to say that the individuals against whom even the slightest evidence existed are under arrest and subject to such action as you, with due regard to your oaths and responsibility, shall take. All the process and powers of this court, coextensive with the bounds of our State, are at your service to bring witnesses or other evidence before you, and you are to determine when a prima facie case of guilt is made and indict accordingly.

I know, gentlemen of the jury, that it takes a long time for blood to cool when it is raised to fever heat by such terrible outrages as your people have had to endure, but in this second test of their high moral courage you, as their special representatives, must be calm, wise, and just, and for the sake of the good name of your community you can not and must not indulge in a single thought of vengeance. You must present for trial before the courts of our State only those against whom evidence is adduced sufficiently pertinent and strong to warrant conviction by a trial jury, and going beyond mere suspicion or even strong probability.

The lengthy investigation of a committee of your leading citizens, made while these outrages were fresh, is at your service. I also present to you three affidavits made before me by W. J. McDonald, captain of Company B of the ranger force of Texas, against twelve of the negro soldiers and one civilian, a negro ex-soldier. All these parties are under arrest, and within the jurisdiction of the civil authorities of this State, and to await the action of our courts. Hence it is that if it has ever been known by committee, sheriff, State ranger, or other officer or individual who, if any, of these men are guilty, that knowledge should come to you, as the grand inquisitorial body that represents not only the county of Cameron, but the State of Texas. I have no hesitation in saying that I share in the universal belief that among those under arrest are many of the murderers, but something more than mere belief and opinion are required to vindicate the law. Evidence must be had upon which to predicate an indictment and warrant a trial. If you indict on mere suspicion or opinion and without evidence, you leave our people and community open to the charge of injustice, and the proceedings will resolve themselves into mere delay, for in the end an indictment unsustained by evidence must be dismissed.

I am glad to state that our small criminal docket will give you opportunity to have with you in your investigation the counsel and experience of the district attorney. He has good red blood in his veins, and plenty of it, and will bring to your aid in serving the best interests of our people an integrity of purpose that can not be successfully impeached by any man. He is your legal adviser, but you are the keepers of your own consciences.

Remember that in the grave responsibility that comes to you, collectively and individually, your acts will be photographed to the nation, that through its press it has approved your high moral courage and patience and condemns the outrages on your people.

Do nothing to forfeit their righteous verdict of your worth.

7. Copy of letter to the Secretary of War, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 20, 1907.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In our investigation of the "Brownsville affray" we have heard much conflicting testimony about dimensions, distances, location of buildings, etc., in Fort Brown, and some witnesses have testified that these matters were not accurately indicated by the scale on the large map which we have been using.

Therefore, in order that we may have a more correct understanding of these figures, will you please furnish us with a new map giving the exact location of barracks, officers' quarters, school, administration building, guardhouse, non-commissioned officers' quarters, commissary storehouse, hospital, and corral; also the small buildings between the barracks and the wall separating the reservation from garrison road.

In addition to having the map drawn to a scale, we would be pleased if you would have indicated upon it the following measurements and descriptions:

Distance across parade ground from barracks to officers' quarters.

Distance from the other points (aside from barracks) to, say, the center of Company C's barracks.

Distance between barracks and wall along garrison road.

Distance between barracks D, B, and C.

Distance from barracks C and the line of the road entering at the main gate from Elizabeth street.

Distance from barracks D to the line of said road.

Dimensions of each barracks—that is, length, width, and height; also the height of the upper porches from the ground.

Position of the light or lights, if any (on August 13-14, 1906), on the main gate entrance, and description of same.

Location of the small entrance near the gate, which is not shown on the large map heretofore furnished us.

Height, length, and thickness of wall separating reservation from garrison road.

Indicate point at which wall terminates, and character of the fence, if any, running on thence northeast.

Distance from country road, northeast boundary of reservation, to barracks C.

Width of garrison road.

Distance between barracks D and Rio Grande River.

Character and location of buildings in alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets, town of Brownsville.

The committee desires to have such revised map for use on the afternoon of November 26, on which date further witnesses from Brownsville will report for examination.

Yours, very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman,

P. S.—Please acknowledge by 'phone to Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and advise whether request is understood and dimensions desired are immediately available.

F. E. W.

8. Letter in reply from the Acting Secretary of War transmitting report of the Quartermaster-General of the Army, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, November 22, 1907.

The map herein referred to was enlarged in this office from the tracing of the map of Fort Brown, Tex. The tracing is made on a scale of 1 inch to 250 feet.

The enlarged map therefore exaggerates all errors that exist on the tracing. It is thought that the tracing is reasonably correct. It has been compiled from the best obtainable data given by surveys made since 1840. To resurvey the reservation and check up all measurements would require approximately three weeks. This, of course, refers only to the boundary and to the structures on the reservation and not to water mains, sewers, contours, etc.

This office has been unofficially informed that Senator Warren does not desire a new map made on account of the time that it would require. The following distances are taken from the tracing in this office:

First. Distance across parade ground from barracks to officers' quarters, measured from building to building, 490 feet.

Distance from the center of the front of barracks 33 (D) to the center of front of officers' quarters "A," 750 feet; to the center of front of hospital, 1,275 feet; to center of front of guardhouse, 1,000 feet; to center of front of building 48, 1,000 feet; to center of front of administration building, 260 feet.

Distance between barracks and wall along garrison road, 85 feet. This measurement depends upon thickness of wall not shown on original tracing.

Distance between barracks 33 (D) and 34 (B), 65 feet; between barracks 34 (B) and 35 (B), 65 feet; between barracks 35 (B) and 36, 60 feet.

Distance between barracks 33 (D) and the line of the road entering main gate from Elizabeth street, 25 feet; distance from barracks 34 (B) from same road, 15 feet.

Dimensions of barracks 33 (D); Length, 164 feet; width, 24 feet; height not shown on records. Buildings constructed according to post plans in 1869.

Photographs, however, indicate the height from grade line to eaves, 22 feet, and from grade line to comb of roof, 30 feet; height from porch of first floor to porch of second floor, 10 feet; height of the upper porch floor from the ground, 11 feet 6 inches.

Position of the lights on gate of main entrance not known in this office. Post lighted by mineral oil. If any lights were supplied, they were mineral-oil lamps.

Location of small entrance through wall near the gate is between the road and barracks 34 (B); photograph shows the distance about half-way, or about 7 feet from roadway; it also shows this small entrance to be about 4 feet wide and lighted by mineral oil, inclosed street lamp suspended on a yoke.

Wall separating reservation from garrison road, height not uniform, varying from 3 to 4 feet; length, 1,010 feet, measured from the river end; thickness not shown. Wall constructed of brick. Wall terminates at the point indicated above; fence running from that point to the northeast corner of the reservation, barbed wire, 875 feet.

Distance of northeast corner of reservation to center of front of barracks 34 (B), 1410 feet.

Country roads not shown on reservation map.

Width of garrison road, 30 feet.

Distance between barracks "D" and Rio Grande River, 150 feet.

Character and location of buildings in alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets and town of Brownsville, no record.

J. B. ALESHIRE.

Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT, November 26, 1907.

Respectfully returned to Hon. Francis F. Warren, United States Senate, inviting attention to the foregoing report of the Quartermaster-General of the Army.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,

Acting Secretary of War.

9. Copy of letter to Dr. Frederick J. Combe, mayor of Brownsville, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C. November 20, 1907.

Dr. FREDERICK J. COMBE,

Mayor of the City of Brownsville, Tex.

MY DEAR DOCTOR COMBE: It has been mentioned in committee that we have never had any returns from the letter addressed to Matias Tamayo setting forth certain dimensions desired by the committee, which he was to ascertain by his own measurements and ask you to verify. I inclose a copy of that correspondence, and if it is not too much trouble please indicate on the inclosed map of Fort Brown the figures desired. If this is an inconvenience, just address a reply to me to that effect, and we will get the information (or as much of it as we can) from the War Department.

I am inclosing, also, a map of your city. We wish to know the width of the following streets: Elizabeth, Washington, Adams, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth. Also the width of the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets.

If the measurements in feet are accurate, as indicated on the map, a statement to that effect will suffice.

Please check carefully the street lights as indicated by red stars, and tell us if they are in exactly the right locations. If not, make corrections as necessary—that is, so we may know where all lights were on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

Please indicate on the map the location of what is known as the "Allison saloon." We have never been able to locate that with any accuracy.

If you can give us a prompt reply (we would like to have the information on November 26), I will be exceedingly indebted to you.

With kind regards, I am, very sincerely, yours,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

(The maps inclosed were taken from Senate Document 155, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, part 2.)

[Inclosures.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 19, 1907.

Mr. MATIAS G. TAMAYO,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The request of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, made while you were on the stand yesterday, was that you would measure and report to the committee the following distances, namely:

1. From the wall of the fort to the barracks.
2. From the wall of the fort to the line next to the wall of the sinks, oil houses and wood sheds.
3. The dimensions of these buildings.
4. The width of the road running between the wall and the barracks.
5. The length, breadth, and height of the barracks.
6. The height of the upper porches from the ground.

You were requested to make these measurements and have them verified by Mayor Combe, if convenient to the mayor, and I hope it may be.

Trusting you may be able to attend to this in accordance with the request of the committee, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 19, 1907.

Dr. FREDERICK J. COMBE,
Mayor of Brownsville, Tex.

MY DEAR SIR: Herewith I send you copy of a letter which a member of this committee, Senator Foraker, desired Mr. Tamayo should have in the line of ascertaining some facts as to measurements for the use of the committee. If convenient to you, the committee would be obliged if you would verify with Mr. Tamayo the measurements indicated in my letter to him.

Yours, very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

10. Telegram in reply from Doctor Combe, as follows:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., November 27, 1907.

Senator F. E. WARREN, Chairman,
Washington, D. C.:

From wall of fort to barracks, 98 feet; wall to sinks, 4 feet; wall to oil houses and wood sheds, 14 feet. Sink, 24 by 14 feet; oil house, woodhouses, 17 by 9 feet. Width of road, 18 feet. Length of barracks, 168 feet; width, 39 feet; height, 30 feet; height upper porches from ground, 12 feet. Width of Elizabeth, Washington, and Adams streets, property line to property line, 60 feet; curb to curb, 40. Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth streets, property line, 40 feet. Alley, 20 feet. Further information by mail.

F. J. COMBE, Mayor.

Upon motion of Senator Overman, it was agreed that the chairman should address a letter to the Secretary of War asking for a list of the names of all enlisted men discharged without honor on account of the Brownsville affray who have applied for reinstatement, if any there may be, and a statement showing what disposition was made of each application.

At 3 o'clock p. m. the committee adjourned to meet again the following Monday, December 2, 1907, at 2 o'clock p. m., or upon adjournment of the Senate should it not adjourn until after 2 o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
 UNITED STATES SENATE,
 Monday, December 2, 1907.

The chairman called the meeting to order at 2.20 o'clock p. m. The following members were present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Warner, Fulton, Taliaferro, Foster, Overman, and Frazier.

The chairman laid before the committee certain papers transmitted to Senator Foraker by the attorney for Mingo Sanders, which were ordered printed in the record, and are as follows:

1836 NINTH STREET, NW.,
 Washington, D. C., January 25, 1907.

Hon. Wm. H. Taft, Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: As the attorney of Mingo Sanders, formerly first sergeant of Company B, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and several others of the soldiers of the dismissed battalion of said regiment, I desire to ask you a few questions relative to the status of any soldier of the aforesaid dismissed battalion who might be reenlisted in the Army under the provisions and conditions prescribed by the President in his message to Congress in December last on the subject of the Brownsville "raid."

First. (Under Par. 152, A. R., 1895) To wit: "A dishonorable discharge from the service is a complete expulsion from the Army and covers all unexpired enlistment." Does a discharge without honor have the same effect?

Second. Can a discharged noncommissioned officer be reenlisted, eo instante, into the Army with the rank which he held prior to his discharge therefrom?

Third. Assuming that a discharge without honor terminates a soldier's connection with the Army and works a complete forfeiture to the benefits accruing by law from his past service therein, is it within the power of the President to revoke said discharge without honor and at the same time remove the disabilities consequent upon said discharge?

Fourth. Can a soldier reenlist in the Army after his connection therewith has been completely severed, and on his second, or any subsequent enlistment, be given credit for the time served in any prior enlistment or enlistments?

Fifth. Under the conditions supposed in the preceding inquiry, is it within the power of the President to tack onto a reenlistment the time served in any prior enlistment or enlistments?

Sixth. Does a restoration to the Army of a dismissed private soldier of Companies B, C, or D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, entitle such soldier to the pay which has accrued since the date of his discharge?

Seventh. Does a restoration to the Army of a dismissed noncommissioned officer of the aforesaid companies of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry entitle such noncommissioned officer to the pay of the rank which he held prior to his discharge accruing since the date of his discharge?

Eighth. Section 1023 of the Military Laws of the United States provides "That the period within which soldiers may reenlist with the benefits conferred by sections 1282 and 1284 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, extended to three months," etc. How does the President construe this clause with respect to the discharged soldiers of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who may be permitted to reenlist?

(a) Will the order of discharge of any such soldier be revoked in toto and said soldier be remanded to his statu quo condition, or,

(b) Will any such soldier be compelled to reenlist within three months from the date of his discharge in order to receive the benefits conferred by sections 1282 and 1284, as aforesaid?

As attorney for Sergt. Mingo Sanders, I hereby give notice that the said Sergeant Sanders is ready and willing to reenlist in the Army of the United States with the understanding that he be in all respects indemnified for the damages he has sustained by reason of his discharge from the Army, and that he be deprived of none of the benefits accruing from his past service, and that he receive back pay to the date of his discharge.

I am, with much respect, very truly, yours,

N. B. MARSHALL,
 Attorney for Sergt. Mingo Sanders.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, January 31, 1907.

N. B. MARSHALL, Esq.,

Attorney for Mingo Sanders, late Sergeant Twenty-fifth Infantry, 609 F street, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Secretary of War desires me to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 25th instant, and to say in reply that a soldier who has been discharged without honor is, in the operation of such discharge, separated from the military service. Having been separated therefrom in a lawful manner, it is beyond the power of the Department to revoke or modify the instrument by means of which his separation from the military service was effected. Such a discharge as has been issued involves none of the consequences attached to a dishonorable discharge, which can only be imposed in the operation of a court-martial sentence.

He also desires me to say that it is within the authority of the Secretary of War, on the presentation of proper and sufficient evidence as to the character of service rendered in the last preceding enlistment, to determine whether a soldier may be reenlisted in the military service. If such reenlistment is authorized and is executed within the period required by law, the soldier becomes entitled to the pay and allowances which accrue from length of service or otherwise. Sanders has already been advised that he may submit testimony, in the shape of affidavits, for consideration and connection with his application for reenlistment.

The Secretary of War wishes me to say that, if Sanders is willing to undergo the examination indicated in his instructions of the 21st instant, as to the character of the service rendered by him during his last enlistment, including his conduct before, during, and subsequent to the occurrences in August last, and if, upon full consideration of all the facts, taken in connection with the result of his own examination under oath, it can be established that no culpability attaches to him in that regard, the President is willing to so modify the action taken in the case as to authorize the reentry of Sanders into the military service. In that event pay and allowances will begin to accrue from the date of reenlistment.

If, in view of what has been said, Sanders desires an opportunity to be examined, such an opportunity will be afforded him at my office at 9.30 a. m. to-morrow. Please advise me by the bearer of this whether he desires to take advantage of the opportunity now afforded.

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General.

609 F STREET, NW.,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1907.

Hon. GEORGE B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General, War Department.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 29th instant, relative to the examination of former Sergt. Mingo Sanders, under section 1370 of Military Laws, I regret to say in reply that I received your letter too late to comply with the time appointed for said examination. In the meantime Sergeant Sanders has been subpoenaed by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and as he has reported to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate he is now under the jurisdiction of the aforesaid committee. In view of this fact the sergeant will first testify before the committee which subpoenaed him. If after that time your Department is willing to examine Sanders as a requisite to his reenlistment, and further if the Secretary of War is ready and able to guarantee to him that his rights, accrued benefits, and record on reenlistment shall be in no wise prejudiced by his discharge without honor from the Army, the sergeant will then be happy to do all in his power to satisfy the statutory conditions by which he may reenlist. I regret that you did not fully and specifically answer the questions in my letter of January 25, to the Secretary of War, and I desire for this reason to assure you that these questions were not formulated and submitted as technical and dilatory pleas; but the information which they sought to elicit was seriously conceived to be vital and justly due to the soldiers who may be permitted to reenlist in the Army.

I am, very truly, yours,

N. B. MARSHALL.

AFFRAY AT BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, February 2, 1907.

N. B. MARSHALL, Esq.,
Attorney for Mingo Sanders,
609 F street NW., Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 1st instant, advising me that former Sergt. Mingo Sanders declines, for the reasons therein stated, to appear for examination as to the character of the service rendered by him during the term of enlistment which was terminated by his recent discharge from the military service, at Fort Reno, Okla.

You will recall the statement already made, that I am unable, under the instructions of the Secretary of War, to afford him a later opportunity to undergo the examination than that which was afforded him in my letter of the 30th ultimo.

And I remain, very respectfully,

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General.

609 F STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1907.

GEO. B. DAVIS, Esq.,
Judge-Advocate General, War Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Yours of the 2d instant, saying "that former Sergt. Mingo Sanders declines, for reasons therein stated, to appear for examination as to the character of the service rendered by him during the term of enlistment which was terminated by his recent discharge from the military service at Fort Reno, Okla."

I have the honor to say in reply that former Sergt. Mingo Sanders has never "declined" to appear for examination, as you allege in your communication of February 2 instant. On the contrary, he has always been and is now ready and willing to submit himself for examination upon his application for reenlistment in the Army. He is advised that under section 1023 of the Military Laws of the United States he has three months from the date of his discharge within which to reenlist in order to save to himself certain accrued benefits from his prior enlistment.

As former Sergeant Sanders was discharged on or about November 22, 1906, the law allows him until February 22 to satisfy the conditions which are imposed as precedent to his reenlistment. Former Sergeant Sanders has now testified before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, as his subpoena required him to do, and he is now free to take whatever examination you may see fit to give him. He, of course, does not wish to reenlist as a private soldier, and therefore requests that the President or Secretary of War guarantee to him that none of his rights, former status, or accrued benefits be in any wise prejudiced by his recent discharge without honor from the Army. Again insisting that former Sergeant Sanders is ready and willing to reenlist in the Army of the United States, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

N. B. MARSHALL,
Attorney for Sergt. Mingo Sanders.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, February 15, 1907.

N. B. MARSHALL, Esq.,
609 F street NW., Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 11th instant advising me that Mingo Sanders, late first sergeant Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry, U. S. Army, is willing to submit himself for examination with a view to his reenlistment in the military service.

I beg to say in reply that the duty with which I was charged in the instructions communicated to me by The Military Secretary on January 23, 1907, have been fully performed, and I am now without power to entertain a proposition looking to the examination of Sanders with a view to his reentry into the military service. As you have already been fully advised as to the power of the Department in the matter, it would seem unnecessary for me to discuss the conditions which you seek to impose in behalf of your client.

The rights of a former soldier in respect to reenlistment are fixed and established by statute, and their enforcement can not be made the subject of guaranty by the President or by any subordinate officer of the Executive branch of the Government.

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General.

1836 NINTH STREET, NW.,
Washington, D. C., February 29, 1907.

GEO. B. DAVIS, Esq.,
Judge-Advocate-General, War Department.

SIR: Yours of the 15th instant, waiving at this time all questions which I have hitherto asked regarding the status of former Sergt. Mingo Sanders, I now desire to ask you the simple question, to wit: Is Mingo Sanders, formerly first sergeant Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, U. S. Army, now eligible for reenlistment in the Army of the United States?

Very respectfully,

N. B. MARSHALL.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, February 28, 1907.

N. B. MARSHALL, Esq.,
1836 Ninth Street, NW., Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your favor of the 23d instant, I beg to say that your client can only reenlist in the military service provided that, within three months from the date of his separation therefrom, there has been a favorable exercise of the discretion which is vested in the Secretary of War by section 2 of the act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 216).

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General.

The chairman presented a copy of his letter to the Secretary of War written upon request of Senator Overman, and letter in reply from the Acting Secretary of War giving the information desired, which were ordered printed in the record. The correspondence is as follows:

NOVEMBER 29, 1907.

The SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.

SIR: By direction of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs I have the honor to request that you furnish the committee, if convenient, before noon next Monday, December 2, for its consideration at an afternoon meeting on that date, a list of names of all former enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, discharged without honor under the provisions of Special Order No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, who have applied for reinstatement (if any have so applied), and a statement of the disposition made of each application.

Yours, very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 2, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 29th ultimo, asking that your committee be furnished a list of names of all former enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who were discharged without honor under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 266, dated War Department, November 9, 1906, and who have applied for reenlistment, also a statement of the disposition made of each application, I have the honor to transmit herewith a memorandum, prepared in the office of the Adjutant-General, showing the names of the men who were discharged without honor under the order cited in your letter and who have made application for reenlistment.

The Secretary of War has taken no final action on any of these applications, and it is presumed he has delayed taking such action pending the announcement of the result of the investigation by your committee of the Brownsville affray.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

[Inclosure.]

MEMORANDUM.

List of former enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry discharged without honor under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, who have applied to be again enlisted:

Company B.—First Sergt. Mingo Sanders, Corpl. Edward L. Daniels, Private James Bailey, Private Elmer Brown, Private Ernest English, Private Alfred N. Williams.

Company C.—Sergt. Samuel W. Harley, Sergt. George Thomas, Corpl. Charles H. Madison, Musician Walter Banks, Private Henry W. Arvin, Private Mark Garmon, Private Thomas Jefferson, Private John Kirkpatrick, Private William McGuire, jr., Private George Smith, Private Lewis Williams.

Company D.—Sergt. Jacob Frazier, Musician Hoytt Robinson, Musician Joseph Jones, Cook Charles Dade, Private Ellas Gant, Private John Green, Private George W. Hall, Private Charles Jones, Private Wesley Mapp, Private James Newton, Private Robert L. Rogan.

Company A.—Private James A. Simmons (formerly of Company C).

Company G.—Private James Duncan (formerly of Company D).

Unassigned.—Private Perry Cisco (formerly of Company C).

The discharge without honor of Privates John Cook and Shepherd Glenn, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was ordered by Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, but they were honorably discharged, by expiration of service, before that order was issued. Their applications to enlist again were denied.

Sergt. Walter Adams, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was honorably discharged by expiration of service, October 27, 1906, before the issuance of Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, 1906. He was stationed at Fort Brown, Tex., at the time of the Brownsville trouble, and his application to re-enter the Army was disapproved November 8, 1906.

The chairman laid before the committee also two letters from Doctor Combe, mayor of Brownsville, giving further information regarding measurements desired, which letters were ordered printed in the record and are as follows:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., November 27, 1907.

Senator F. E. WARREN,

*Chairman, Senate Committee on Military Affairs,
Washington, D. C.*

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th of November, 1907, inclosing a copy of a letter from you to Matias Tamayo, bearing date of March 19, 1907, in which you requested certain information regarding measurements of the barracks, etc., at Fort Brown, Tex. These dimensions were taken by me to-day, and are as follows:

From the wall of the fort to the barracks, 98 feet.

From the wall of the fort to the line next to the wall of the sinks, 4 feet.

From the wall to the line next to the wall of the oil houses and wood sheds, 14 feet.

The dimensions of the sinks with lattice inclosure, 24 feet by 14 feet.

The dimensions of the oil houses and wood sheds, 17 by 9 feet.

The dimensions of bathrooms, 14 by 8 feet, and their distances from fort wall, 56 feet.

The width of the road running between the wall of the fort and the barracks, 18 feet.

Length of barracks, 108 feet; width, 30 feet; height, 30 feet.

The height of porch from ground to floor of same, 12 feet.

Height from ground to floor of porch (as stated above), 12 feet; from floor of porch to eaves of barracks, 10 feet; from eaves to crest or top of barracks, 8 feet; total height of barracks, 30 feet.

If I can be of any further service to you or your committee, please command me.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

FREDEBICK J. COMBE, Mayor.

P. S.—The locations of the street lights as marked on the map which you sent me, and which I return you accompanying this, are correct, with the exception of the two, one each on the corners of Twelfth and Washington and Thirteenth and Washington streets. The correction has been made by a blue pencil mark on said map. That is where the lights were in August, 1906.

F. J. C.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., November 27, 1907.

Senator F. E. WARREN,

Chairman Senate Committee on Military Affairs,

Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reading over your letter to me of November 20, 1907, I find that I omitted to give you the width of Elizabeth, Washington, and Adams streets. They are 40 feet wide from curb to curb and 60 feet from property line to property line. The width of Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth streets is 28 feet from curb to curb and 40 feet to property lines.

I have made to-day, from actual observation and measurements, a pencil annex to the map which you sent me, showing you the location of the "Allison saloon" and Leahy cottage, where Mrs. Evans was assaulted.

Assuring you of our appreciation of your efforts to punish the guilty and exonerate the innocent in the "cause celebre," and with expressions of regard, believe me,

Very respectfully,

FREDERICK J. COMBE, Mayor.

The maps returned by Mayor Combe are preserved in the committee's files.

After a short general and informal discussion of the question of making a report to the Senate regarding the committee's investigation, and at 3.30 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned, leaving the time for its next special meeting to be decided at the regular meeting of the committee to be held on the following Thursday, December 5, 1907, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, December 10, 1907.

Meeting was called to order by the chairman at 10.40 o'clock a. m. Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hem-enway, Bulkeley, Warner, Fulton, Taliaferro, Foster, Overman, and Frazier.

The chairman laid before the committee a letter, addressed by W. F. Hillebrand, a chemist employed in the United States Geological Survey, to Hon. George Otis Smith, Director of the Survey, and transmitted from the Director to the chairman by Dr. Hillebrand in person. The letter, being in further response to the chairman's communication of November 26 (see p. 3288-3289), and reporting analyses of Exhibits Nos. 1 and 9 and cuttings taken from post in front of Crixell's saloon by Lieutenant Leckie, was ordered printed in the record, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1907.

HON. GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
Director United States Geological Survey.

SIR: In response to a request of the Hon. Francis E. Warren, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, that analyses be made of certain rifle bullets, submitted with his letter, I have the honor to report as follows:

1. Exhibit No. 1. The composition of this bullet was found to be as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	95.79
Antimony -----	1.07
Tin -----	2.02
Total -----	99.78

Minor constituents, such as bismuth, copper, etc., not taken into account.

2. Exhibit No. 9.—The composition of this bullet was found to be as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	95.59
Antimony -----	1.08
Tin -----	2.11
Total -----	99.68

Minor constituents such as bismuth, copper, etc., not taken into account.

3. Cuttings taken from posts in front of Crixell's saloon by Lieutenant Leckie. The composition of this bullet was found to be as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	96.36
Antimony -----	1.29
Tin -----	2.05
Total -----	99.70

Minor constituents such as bismuth, copper, etc., not taken into account.

Regarding the method of taking samples, the following is to be said: The entire bullets of Exhibits Nos. 1 and 9 were cut in half and the core extracted from the pointed end of each bullet, and cores were then shaved into fine pieces. These were then mixed and from the samples so prepared the amounts required for analysis were taken. It may further be said that the analyses above reported, in most cases, are the mean of two and sometimes three separate determinations. The exception is the tin of No. 1, which was determined but once, the other determinations having suffered mishaps. As to the probable accuracy of the separate determinations, it is believed that for lead the error was not more than one-tenth of 1 per cent either way. For antimony the error is thought to be not over five-hundredths of 1 per cent either way. For tin it is impossible to set a definite limit of error, the determination being fraught with extreme difficulty, but the results are undoubtedly quite near the truth. The differences between the summations and 100 per cent are probably fully made up by the small amounts of minor constituents that were undetermined.

In view of the need for haste in rendering this report, and the statement by telephone from the committee on Friday the 20th of November that something in the nature of a commercial analysis would suffice, no attempt has been made to look for other minor and perhaps unusual constituents than those reported above. It is therefore possible that the figures given for antimony, for instance, might include small amounts of arsenic.

In this examination I have been ably assisted by Dr. E. C. Sullivan of the chemical division. His aid was necessary in order that the work might be completed at the earliest moment.

The unused portions of the exhibits submitted are herewith inclosed.

Respectfully submitted.

W. F. HILLEBRAND, Chemist.

[NOTE.—Inclosures are preserved in the Committee files.]

Senator Foraker laid before the committee a letter addressed to him by William Crozier, brigadier-general, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, giving a history of jacketed bullets for .30 caliber small arms manufactured by the War Department, which was also ordered printed in the record, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 6, 1907.

HON. JOS. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate.

SIR: 1. You are informed that the history of jacketed bullets for .30 caliber small arms manufactured by this Department is as follows:

Various experimental compositions were tried, including some in which the core was composed of 97 parts lead and 3 parts antimony, but these were never issued to the service.

The first ammunition with jacketed bullets, issued to the service in 1894, had the core of the bullet composed of 7 parts lead and 1 part tin, and the jacket of German silver. In the same year bullets were also issued with a cupro nickeled steel jacket, and the same core composition as above.

In May, 1898, cupro nickel jackets were also used.

In the fall of 1900 cupro nickeled steel jackets were abandoned, and cupro nickel alone has since been used.

On December 10, 1902, the composition of the core of the bullet was changed to 27 parts lead to 1 of tin.

On March 11, 1903, it was changed to 20 parts lead to 1 part tin.

On October 24, 1904, it was changed to 16 parts lead to 1 of tin, and on March 18, 1905, it was changed to 36 parts lead to 1 of tin. The last mentioned has continued to be the composition to the present time.

These changes were made to keep the weight of the bullet constant, and were coincident with changes in the thickness of the jacket. It is, of course, possible that slight variations from prescribed proportions may have been obtained in manufacture.

The cupro nickel jacket is composed of 85 per cent copper and 15 per cent nickel.

The history of the bullet given above is for the Krag rifle ammunition up to March 11, 1903, since which date it applies to the bullets for both the Krag and the model of 1903 rifles, the same bullet being used in both.

2. The composition given for the guard cartridge in the handbook for the United States magazine rifle, model of 1903, caliber .30, page 46, is in error in giving the composition of the bullet, which should be 90 parts lead, 8.5 parts tin, and 1.5 parts antimony.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The chairman presented the two following letters from the office of the Chief of Ordnance of the Army:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 5, 1907.

HON. F. E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

SIR: 1. By direction of General Crozier, and in his temporary absence, I am sending you herewith five ball cartridges, caliber .30, model of 1903.

2. The date of manufacture as marked on the case is May, 1903. It is believed that what you desire is ammunition of this model manufactured in December, 1905, or January, 1906 but the only samples on hand in this office were manufactured at the same time as those sent you.

3. The approximate composition of the core of the bullet used in 1903 ammunition has been changed at various times, as follows: December 10, 1902, there were 27 parts of lead to 1 of tin. On March 11, 1903, this was changed to 20 parts of lead to 1 of tin. On October 24, 1904, it was changed to 16 parts of lead to 1 of tin, and on March 18, 1905, it was changed to 36 parts of lead to 1 of tin, and on March 18, 1905, it was changed to 36 parts of lead to 1 of tin. The last mentioned is the present composition. The jacket has been continuously cupro nickel during this time.

4. From the above it will be noted that the composition of the core of the bullets sent you is differently proportioned from that of the ammunition manufactured at the end of 1905 and the beginning of 1906. A telegram has been sent to the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal directing him to send samples of the ammunition manufactured as near as possible to the date desired, and these will be furnished you immediately upon their receipt.

Very respectfully,

JNO. T. THOMPSON,
Major, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army,
Acting Chief of Ordnance.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 6, 1907.

Hon. F. E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

SIR: 1. Referring to paragraph 4 of letter sent you from this office on December 5, 1907, I am inclosing herewith five ball cartridges, caliber .30, model of 1903, this date received from the Frankford Arsenal in response to telegraphic instructions. The date marked on the cases of these cartridges is March, 1906, and the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal reports that no samples are on hand of date nearer to January, 1906.

2. So far as the composition of the bullets is concerned, these samples are the same as those of the earlier date mentioned above.

3. The prescribed composition for the cupro-nickel jackets is 85 per cent copper and 15 per cent nickel.

4. It should be noted that the compositions given in letter of December 5 for the core of the bullet are subject to slight variations in manufacture.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The chairman presented, also, copy of letter addressed by him to the Director of the Geological Survey on December 5, 1907, and letter received in reply thereto, the correspondence ordered printed being as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 5, 1907.

TO the DIRECTOR U. S. GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: A few days since we sent you a package containing two bullets and some cuttings from a third, asking for such analyses as you might be able to make and report upon at an early date. We are to-day informed by phone that the analyses have been made.

We are now sending herewith a package containing five ball cartridges, from which we desire to have one bullet taken, exclusive of the case and jacket, and analyzed in a manner similar to the analyses already made.

We shall be under many obligations if this may be furnished us by next Monday evening or Tuesday morning before 10 o'clock.

If you desire to use more than one of the bullets do so and return the unused ones, if any.

Of course your operator will understand that these are loaded cartridges, and that care will be necessary in extracting the bullets from the cartridge cases.

The expense of the analysis will be duly covered on presentation of bill.

Will you kindly inform the committee by phone or messenger whether you will be able to have the analysis made as early as desired?

Very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1907.

HON. GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
Director U. S. Geological Survey.

SIR: In response to a request, dated December 5, of the Hon. Francis E. Warren, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, that an analysis be made of certain rifle bullets submitted with his letter, this analysis to be similar to those already made and reported on under date of December 5, I have the honor to report as follows:

The cartridge from which the sample was taken bore the impress F. A. 5 03. The projecting end of one of the bullets was sawed off, the jacket removed, the core cut into shavings, and a portion taken from these shavings for analysis. The results of analysis are as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	95.05
Tin -----	4.61
Antimony -----	None.
Total -----	99.66

Minor constituents, such as bismuth, copper, etc., not taken into account. Analysis was made essentially as in the previous work carried out for the Committee on Military Affairs.

The unused portions of the exhibit submitted are herewith inclosed.
Respectfully submitted.

W. F. HILLEBRAND, Chemist.

Approved:

GEORGE OTIS SMITH, Director.

[NOTE.—Inclosure preserved in the committee files.]

The chairman presented, also, for the consideration of the committee, a letter addressed to him by the Acting Secretary of War, inclosing a memorandum by the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, which was ordered printed in the record, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 9, 1907.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, dated 9th instant, in regard to the Brownsville affray, for the information of your committee.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 9, 1907.

MEMORANDUM FOR ACTING SECRETARY OF WAR.

BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY.

Composition of bullets.—A chemical analysis made at the Geological Survey has disclosed the presence of antimony in the bullets extracted from structures in Brownsville. The Ordnance Department has given the information that these bullets were furnished by it to the service, but the official specifications do not call for antimony in the Government bullet.

In endeavoring to account for the presence of the antimony three possibilities appear:

1. Antimony may have been put in the bullets at the Frankford Arsenal, notwithstanding that it is not called for by the specifications.

2. Antimony may have been in the commercial lead used in casting the bullets at the Frankford Arsenal.

3. The bullets extracted from the Brownsville structures may have been procured by the Ordnance Department from the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, and issued to the service, and antimony may have been used by that company in making the bullets, although it is not called for by the specifications of their contract.

These possibilities are being investigated.

Of the three samples analyzed at the Geological Survey one was from fragments extracted by Lieutenant Leckle, which is understood to have contained no jacket metal. These fragments may, therefore, have been from the bullet of a guard cartridge, the official composition of which is 90 parts lead, 8.5 parts tin, and 1.5 parts antimony.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.

After consideration and discussion of the reports upon analyses and of the information obtained from the War Department, upon motion of Senator Scott, duly carried, it was ordered that analyses be made of bullets bearing dates identical with the dates upon the cartridge shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville.

Upon motion of Senator Lodge, duly carried, it was ordered that the remaining exhibits (bullets taken from buildings and elsewhere in Brownsville) not already analyzed should be analyzed.

In accordance with these orders the exhibits enumerated below were laid aside to be sent for analysis at the close of the meeting, and the chairman was requested to transmit them to the proper Department with an appropriate letter of instruction.

1. A Frankford Arsenal ball cartridge of January, 1906. (One of the six ball cartridges received in evidence by Mr. Purdy and Major Blocksom in connection with testimony of Mayor Combe.)

2. A Union Metallic Cartridge Company ball cartridge of December, 1905. (One of the six ball cartridges received in evidence by Mr. Purdy and Major Blocksom in connection with testimony of Mayor Combe.)

3. Exhibits Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

At 11.40 o'clock a. m. the committee adjourned, to meet again upon the call of the chairman or at such time as might be decided upon at the committee's next regular meeting, to be held on Thursday, December 12, 1907, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

---

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Thursday, January 9, 1908.

On this, the regular weekly meeting day of the committee, after consideration of regular business, the committee took up various matters relating to the Brownsville affray.

The following members were present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Bulkeley, Warner, Foster, Overman, Frazier, and McCreary.

The following letters and affidavits, received from the Acting Secretary of War during the summer recess, were ordered printed in the record:

BELMAB, N. J., July 18, 1907.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, U. S. ARMY.

SIR: I have the honor to state that when I was testifying before the Military Committee of the Senate the latter part of May last Mr. Foraker made the positive statement twice that Mr. Leckle, in his testimony before the Penrose court-martial, had controverted my testimony concerning a groove (made by a bullet) in the lintel of porch of Yturria house, in Brownsville. Mr. Leckie, the next day, in a conversation with me, denied that he had done so.

As it seems improbable the committee will visit Brownsville, and as I consider the chain of evidence incomplete with regard to these bullet holes, unless they are actually seen by the committee, I submit herewith the affidavits of Christ Miller and J. B. Fugitt, caretakers, Fort Brown Military Reservation, and Civil Engineer Elbert B. Gore, and correspondence between myself and Mr. Fitch, for consideration of Mr. Warner, of the Military Committee. I wrote to Mr. Kowalski about two weeks ago to procure affidavits on this point, and advised him especially that no leading questions were to be asked. I suggested the two caretakers.

Very respectfully,

A. P. BLOCKSOM,
Major, I. G.

[Second Indorsement]

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 30, 1907.

Respectfully referred to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, inviting attention to report of Maj. A. P. Blocksom, as contained herein, and to accompanying papers.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General, Acting Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHWESTERN DIVISION,
INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
St. Louis, Mo., June 19, 1907.

MY DEAR FITCH: While at Sam Houston I think I heard you say you sighted through the hole in lintel (this does not refer to groove on lower side of lintel) of porch of Yturria house which fronts toward Fort Brown. Will you please tell me exactly what you did and whether you noted to what place the hole pointed, etc. I think you said something about shoving a ramrod through the hole.

Please tell me also whether you sighted through the groove above mentioned, and if so, where the groove pointed.

At the time you made this examination I believe you were in Brownsville on other business. I shall be obliged if you will make an early reply by indorsement (or simple continuation on this paper). Hope you like your new duties.

Sincerely, yours,

A. P. BLOCKSOM, Major, I. G.

Lieut. R. S. FITCH.
First U. S. Cavalry.

[First Indorsement.]

FORT LEAVENWORTH, KANS., June 21, 1907.

Respectfully returned to Maj. A. P. Blocksom, Inspector-general, Southwestern Division, St. Louis, Mo.

While at San Antonio, Tex., about the last of January, this year, I requested the department commander to order me to Brownsville, Tex. I made this request because I wished to look over the ground, interrogate witnesses, and familiarize myself generally with conditions at Brownsville, in so far as they concerned the case of Captain Macklin, of whose court I was judge-advocate. I went to Brownsville about January 30, but remained there only two nights and one day, during which time I interviewed a large number of witnesses, took some photographs relating to the case, and visited practically all the bullet-marked houses. I examined various bullet holes in the walls of the Yturria kitchen and dining room, but did not inspect any groove or hole in the lintel or roof of the porch; in fact, I do not think my attention was called to them at all, for I have no clear recollection of having seen them. I borrowed a steel wiping rod for .22 caliber rifle from Señora Yturria and stuck it through the bullet holes made by two different bullets in the south wall of the Yturria kitchen. This wall was double, the outer and inner sections being of wood, I think, and about 6 or 8 inches apart, and hence one could get a fair alignment by using the ramrod as described. In neither case could I sight directly along the rod, for it filled up too much of the bullet hole, but by leaving the rod in position and then standing underneath the rod and outside the wall I could determine the direction (laterally) from which each bullet must have been coming at the time it struck the wall.

In one case the ramrod was in alignment, as I recollect it, with about the center of B Company barracks; in the other case with the eastern half of the said barracks. By standing in the southern doorway of the kitchen (only 2 or 3 feet from the bullet holes) I could get an idea of the direction (in a vertical plane) in which each bullet must have been coming at the time it entered the wall. To the best of my recollection the ramrod in one case pointed toward and possibly somewhat above the upper gallery of B Company barracks; in the other case, my recollection is, that the rod pointed considerably above the gallery and so high that it seemed that the bullet that made the hole must have come through or close to the lower edge of the porch roof. I have no clear recollection, however, of seeing any bullet hole or groove in the porch roof or in the lintel thereof. It seems quite probable that the bullet that made the last-described hole in the kitchen wall first passed through or along the edge of the porch lintel and was thereby directed even more downward than its original direction would have taken it. It is possible, even if not probable, that the other bullet also first passed through the lintel.

I regret that my recollection on these points is not sufficiently clear to enable me to speak with more definiteness, but my examination of the bullet holes was necessarily rather hastily made, as my time was limited, and I had a good many other things to attend to.

ROGER S. FITCH,
First Lieutenant, First Cavalry, A. D. C.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Elbert B. Gore, who, after being by me duly sworn, on his oath deposes and says:

My name is Elbert B. Gore; I am 40 years of age; I am a civil engineer and have followed said profession since the year 1891. I made, for the first time, an examination of the shots into the Yturria residence, at corner of Washington and Fifteenth streets, in the city of Brownsville, Tex. There were three—that I saw—all of them came from direction of barracks B (or second barracks from the river), Fort Brown; the splintered sides all being on the opposite side from the barracks. The alignment of two of the shots indicate that they came from a point on the upper gallery of said barracks between the second and third windows from the east end of barracks. I could not state entirely as to third shot, because after entering the house it passed through a partition at an acute angle, and there might have been considerable deflection; but I do state, that it is physically impossible that these bullets could have come from any other direction, and, at least two of them from any other place than barracks B (or second barracks from river), Fort Brown.

E. B. GORE.

I, Elbert B. Gore, do solemnly swear that the facts contained in the above and foregoing affidavit are true, so help me God.

E. B. GORE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Elbert B. Gore, this 12th day of July, A. D. 1907.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Cameron:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Christ Miller, who, after being by me duly sworn, on his oath deposes and says:

My name is Christ Miller; I am 51 years of age; I am the caretaker of the military reservation at Fort Brown, Tex.; I served twenty-five years and four months in the Army of the United States, and retired from said service on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1906; I was at the date of my retirement first sergeant Company B, Twentieth U. S. Infantry. On this morning I made a careful examination of the south side of the residence of Mr. F. Yturria, situated on the corner of Washington and Fifteenth streets in the city of Brownsville, Tex. I found three marks on said south side (or side toward Fort Brown) of said house.

Counting from the river, the first bullet mark, in my opinion, was made by a shot fired from the upper porch of second barracks from the river, between second and third upper windows from east end of said barracks, or out of either of said windows. This shot cut a groove in the lintel of the Yturria porch and passed on into the south wall of the kitchen, 2 inches lower than where it struck the lintel, and lodged in the north wall of kitchen. The second bullet struck and went through lintel of same porch and entered south wall of kitchen 1 inch higher than where it went in lintel, passed through south wall of kitchen and on through north wall, entering north wall of kitchen 1 foot and 2 inches higher than it did south wall. Distance from porch lintel to north wall of kitchen is 20 feet. In my opinion this shot was fired from lower porch of second barracks from river, just below the point on upper porch from which first shot was fired. The third shot struck south wall of kitchen at an angle, passed into dining room (which immediately adjoins kitchen on the east), through wall between dining room and kitchen, going through a picture on dining-room wall, and lodged in door on north side of dining room. This shot, in my opinion, was fired from upper porch of second barracks from river, about 10 feet nearer river than first shot described above. This examination was made by Sergt. J. B. Fugitt (who is assistant caretaker at Fort Brown) and myself. We together took the measurements and sighted along the course of the bullets and took the alignment of same. All this was done by us without the aid or suggestion of any outsider, and the opinion here expressed by me is formed from the facts as found by myself, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

CHRIST MILLER.

I, Christ Miller, do solemnly swear that the facts contained in the above and foregoing affidavit are true; so help me God.

LOUIS KOWALSKI,

Clerk District Court, Cameron County, Tex.

The chairman presented the following communications, which were ordered printed in the record:

(1) Copy of letter to the Director of the Geological Survey:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1907.

SIR: I am sending herewith two more bullets, the lead from which the committee desires to have analyzed in the same manner and by the same method employed in the analyses of the two groups of exhibits heretofore transmitted.

We appreciate very much your indulgence and prompt action in these matters, and thank you sincerely.

Yours, very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

The DIRECTOR OF THE
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C.

(2) Letter in reply written by W. F. Hillebrand, chemist, to the Director of the Geological Survey and by him transmitted to the chairman:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1907.

SIR: In response to a request, dated December 9, of the Hon. Francis E. Warren, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, that an analysis be made of certain rifle bullets sent with his letter, this analysis to be similar to those already made and reported on under date of December 5, I have the honor to report as follows:

(1) Loaded cartridge, bearing impress "F. A. 2 06." The results of the analysis of the lead core of the bullet is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	96.47
Tin -----	3.40
Antimony -----	None.
Total -----	99.87

(2) Loaded cartridge bearing impress "F. A. 3 06." The result of the analysis of the lead core of the bullet is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	96.53
Tin -----	3.27
Antimony -----	None.
Total -----	99.80

It is to be said that the above analyses were not made in duplicate, but there is no reason to think that the results are not substantially correct. The minor constituents such as bismuth, copper, etc., were not taken into account.

The unused portions of the exhibit are herewith inclosed.

Respectfully submitted.

W. F. HILLEBRAND, Chemist.

HON. GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
Director United States Geological Survey.

[NOTE.—Inclosures are preserved in the committee files.]

(3) Copy of letter to the Secretary of the Interior:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 10, 1907.

SIR: I am inclosing herewith some material which the Senate Committee on Military Affairs desires to have analyzed by chemists of your Department, and reported upon in the same manner as in the case of former exhibits sent for analysis to the Director of the Geological Survey.

The inclosures are as follows:

Envelope No. 1-Z: Ball cartridge (not fired).
 Envelope No. 2-Y: Ball cartridge (not fired).
 Envelope No. 3: Rifle ball "XX" (Exhibit No. 2).
 Envelope No. 4: Rifle ball "XT" (Exhibit No. 3).
 Envelope No. 5: Rifle ball "oO" (Exhibit No. 6).
 Envelope No. 6: Rifle ball "III" (Exhibit No. 7).
 Envelope No. 7: Rifle ball "C" (Exhibit No. 8).
 Envelope No. 8: Cupro-nickel jacket of rifle ball, with portion of core adhering thereto "LC" (Exhibit No. 5). (If the quantity of lead adhering to this metal jacket is not sufficient to permit of analysis, please return exhibit in same form as transmitted.)

The committee desires analysis only of the lead, or core, of each of these bullets, without regard to the metal jacket incasing the core of each.

We beg to request that the portion of each exhibit not required for analysis, may be returned to its proper envelope.

We would be pleased if the work might be finished as soon as practicable and convenient, and would like to have a separate report upon each exhibit returned to the committee when the work is completed.

Thanking you for the courtesy extended in thus favoring us,

Very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

The result of the analysis of the lead core of this bullet is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead.....	95.60
Tin.....	1.88
Antimony.....	1.97
Total.....	99.45

It is to be said regarding the above analyses that the amounts of bismuth, copper, etc., contained in all of them, and which were not determined, will hardly exceed in any case 0.2 per cent. Therefore those analyses whose summations did not reach approximately 99.8 per cent are presumably affected with larger errors than the others in respect to one or all of lead, tin, or antimony. These errors are to be attributed to the haste with which the analyses were necessarily made and to the fact that in the time allowed it was impossible to make duplicate determinations.

For convenient comparison a tabulation follows of all the analyses made by me, so arranged as best to show similarities and dissimilarities between the several exhibits.

(5) Copy of letter to The Secretary of War:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 10, 1907.

SIR: The Committee on Military Affairs is making some investigation concerning material used in bullets made for or by the United States for Springfield rifles et al.

Will you kindly inform us:

First, have you made from time to time heretofore analyses of bullets after delivery to the Government from the manufactories?

Second, have your ordnance officers or others analyzed the materials, such as lead, tin, etc., before casting into bullets?

Third, Can you inform us whether the Union Metallic Cartridge Company preserves a record of the analyses of the materials used for bullets before mixture, or of bullets after they are cast?

Fourth, have you any information regarding the ingredients and percentages of the different materials used in the manufacture of bullets made for others than the Government, or for guns other than the Springfield, by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company or other manufacturers, and if so, what is shown by such analysis?

We shall be glad to have copies of analyses and such information as you have concerning the above inquiries at your early convenience.

Very respectfully,

F. EL. WARREN,
Chairman.

The SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

(6) Letters in reply from The Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army, received through The Acting Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 11, 1907.

SIR: 1. Referring to my memorandum of December 9, 1907, (O. O., 30803-141) in reference to the presence of antimony in bullets extracted from structures in Brownsville, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter dated December 7, 1907, (O. O., 30803-135), written by me to the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal, and his indorsement thereon. In that indorsement he refers to a personal letter to me and to a file of this Office (30024 B-505). The latter is on the subject of a comparison between ammunition manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal and that manufactured under contract for this Department, so far as concerns the "stripping test," which consists of firing bullets into water to determine whether the jackets will be torn off. A part of the ammunition referred to was manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company on the same contract as that which was marked "December, 1905." The first indorsement on O. O., 30024 B-505 is dated February 7, 1906, and the sixth paragraph is as follows:

"6. Bullets from these companies have recently been cut open and examined at this arsenal. Those of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company and the Winchester Repeating Arms Company have a heavier jacket than ours, and have from 1½ to 3 per cent of antimony. This makes the core slightly harder than ours and possibly supports the jacket better. The advantage, if any, of using an antimony alloy as a core will be determined by test at an early date and if desirable a recommendation to that effect made.

"FRANK HEATH,
"Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding."

2. Copies of the personal letter referred to above and of a letter dated December 9, 1907 (O. O., 30803-146), from this office to the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal and his first indorsement thereon are inclosed.

3. The inclosures herewith and the above information answer the first and second questions in the letter of the chairman of the Military Committee of the Senate to you of the 10th instant. This Department has not the information necessary for answering the third and fourth questions in that letter, but will endeavor to obtain it by correspondence.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The ACTING SECRETARY OF WAR.

[Indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 11, 1907.

Respectfully referred to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, in response to his call of 10th instant on the within subject.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 7, 1907.

SIR: 1. Chemical analysis of a portion of the bullets extracted from structures at Brownsville, in connection with the affray at that place, shows them to contain antimony, which is not prescribed as an ingredient of the bullets furnished by this Department. The Department has informed the investigating committee that the bullets extracted as above were of the kind furnished by it for either the Krag-Jürgensen rifle or the model of 1903, and had been fired from one of those rifles. If this information was correct, it should be reconciled with the finding of antimony in the bullets extracted; if it was not correct, it should be withdrawn as soon as possible.

2. You are informed that the cartridge cases picked up in the streets of Brownsville were marked "U. M. C., December 1905," and "F. A., January 1906." Samples of Frankford Arsenal manufacture marked "March 1906," have been received. It is now desired, if any ammunition of Union Metallic Cartridge Company's manufacture is on hand, that the bullets of date of manufacture nearest to December, 1905, be analyzed and a report of the result forwarded to this Office at the earliest practicable date. In case a quantitative analysis will require considerable time, and a qualitative analysis can be submitted more promptly, report of the latter should be forwarded as soon as it can be obtained, and the report of the former should follow.

3. It is desired that report be made as to whether antimony entered into the composition of the bullets, even though it is not prescribed on the drawings, either intentionally or otherwise, of Frankford Arsenal manufacture.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The COMMANDING OFFICER, Frankford Arsenal.

[First indorsement.]

FRANKFORD ARSENAL, PA., December 10, 1907.

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.

2. There are no Union Metallic Cartridge Company bullets on hand which can be identified as belonging to any cartridges furnished by that company. The Union Metallic Cartridge Company did, however, use antimony in some of the bullets assembled in their model of 1903 cartridges, furnished on their contract of 1905. This fact was reported in first indorsement, O. O. 30024 B-505, February 7, 1906, and the chemist's analysis which formed the basis of this statement is inclosed herewith. It will be noted that the date of this test is January 26, 1906. It is understood that this matter was called to the attention of the Inspector (probably Major Hoffer), and the composition was made thereafter in accordance with the specifications. Major Hoffer and the correspondence files of the Ordnance Office can probably verify this.

3. The analysis of the composition of the bullet slug of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company's bullet which was reported in personal letter of yesterday is, we are quite positive, that of the bullet which they furnished in their cartridges used in the national match of this year. In this contract the company was not restricted to the Frankford Arsenal formula.

4. The bullets of Union Metallic Cartridge Company manufacture, referred to in the last paragraph of personal letter of yesterday (Dec. 9), will give no light on this matter, as it is believed that they do not belong to any lot furnished on a Government contract. We find that in the autumn of 1905 we were breaking up a large number of model of 1898 cartridges and using a portion of the alloy melted from the bullets in current manufacture. It is possible that a trace of antimony, even in our own bullets of this period, might be found, the antimony coming from some of the contract ammunition furnished in the Spanish war. Analysis of the cores of some of our bullets of December, 1905, will be made to determine this point and report made on Thursday or Friday of this week.

The COMMANDING OFFICER, Frankford Arsenal.

(Through Capt. S. Hof, Ordnance Department.)

FRANKFORD ARSENAL,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 9, 1907.

MY DEAR CROZIER: No antimony whatever is used at this arsenal as an ingredient of the core of our bullet. Commercial lead as well as tin, however, always contains a trace of antimony, and a qualitative analysis made to-day of our tin shows this trace. The quantitative analysis will not be completed before Wednesday. I shall be surprised if it shows anything more than a trace of antimony.

There are no U. M. C. cartridges on hand. I have, however, a record of an analysis of the core of their bullet made last May. I believe this core was taken from a lot of components of their cartridges sent here by Peirce to be made up into cartridges for test. This I can not verify, as Hof, under whose direction the work was done, is unfortunately away to-day on his usual inspection trips and I am deprived of his assistance. This analysis shows:

	Per cent.
Lead .....	91.08
Antimony .....	8.38
Tin .....	.67

This shows that in these bullets antimony was the ingredient and tin the trace, instead of the reverse as with us. I have examined the subinspectors who were present when the U. M. C. cartridges were manufactured. They say they only inspected the completed bullet and do not know what ingredients were used, but they do know that the U. M. C. Company had both tin and antimony on hand—much more of the latter than of the former.

The U. M. C. cartridges were sent direct from the works to the Watervliet Arsenal. Perhaps it would be well to order Watervliet to send some to this arsenal for analysis, if on hand.

I hope to mail the report on this matter by Wednesday, but it may be Thursday if there are unforeseen obstacles in obtaining the data.

I have just found in Hof's desk a number of bullets of U. M. C. make, but I can not place their dates, etc., until his return. I shall be glad, indeed, when I can more frequently use Hof in connection with cartridge work.

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK HEATH.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 9, 1907.

SIR: 1. The records of this office show that Mr. Alexander Cassels, at present an employee of the Frankford Arsenal, was an acting assistant to inspector of ordnance at the works of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company at the time caliber 0.30 ammunition, model of 1903, marked December, 1905, was fabricated by that company.

2. It is desired that information be obtained from Mr. Cassels as to whether, to his knowledge, any antimony was used in the composition of the bullets delivered on the contract to which the ammunition referred to above pertained.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The COMMANDING OFFICER,

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.
2. Mr. Alexander Cassels states that he was on duty at the works of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company throughout the manufacture of the cartridges on this contract, and that he paid no attention to the composition of the bullets.

3. His work of inspection began when the finished bullets were turned over to him for inspection. He has, therefore, no knowledge as to whether antimony was used or not.

4. Attention is invited to the first indorsement of this date on Ordnance Office file 30803-135, in which it is shown from chemical analysis made at this arsenal that about January 1, 1906, antimony was used in bullets made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company.

SIR: 1. Referring to letter of the chairman of the Military Committee of the Senate to the Acting Secretary of War, dated December 10, requesting certain information in reference to the composition of bullets manufactured for and by this Department, I have the honor to inclose herewith 10 ball cartridges, caliber 0.30, model of 1903, which may be of use in reference to the questions propounded.

2. The markings on the cartridges show that 5 were manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company under date of December, 1905, and that 5 were manufactured by the Frankford Arsenal under date of January, 1906.

3. This ammunition was furnished from store at the Rock Island Arsenal on telegraphic instructions from this Office.

SIR: 1. Referring to first indorsement, O. O. 30803-135, December 10, 1907, on the subject of antimony in bullet cores, I have the honor to report that the quantitative analysis referred to in the last paragraph of that indorsement has been completed.

2. The composition of slugs taken from ball cartridges, model 1903, manufactured at Frankford Arsenal, March 24, 1906, is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	96.85
Tin -----	2.89
Antimony -----	.20

3. The composition of slugs taken from ball cartridges, model 1903, manufactured at Frankford Arsenal December 26, 1905, is as follows:

	Per cent.
Lead -----	96.90
Tin -----	2.82
Antimony -----	.28

4. The proportions prescribed are 30 parts lead to 1 part tin, or lead 96.77 per cent and tin 3.23 per cent. Antimony is nearly always found in commercial lead and tin.

O. 30803-158, letter dated December 13, 1907, to the commanding officer, Frankford Arsenal, and his indorsement thereon with one inclosure.

2. The first letter mentioned above, viz, O. O. 30803-153, is an exact copy of letters sent on the same date to the United States Cartridge Company and the Winchester Repeating Arms Company. O. O. 30803-168 is the answer of the United States Cartridge Company to this letter.

3. A letter exactly the same as O. O. 30803-153 was also sent to the Peters Cartridge Company, except as this company had never had any contracts with the Ordnance Department, question (f) was omitted.

4. When answers shall have been received from the Winchester Repeating Arms Company and the Peters Cartridge Company copies of their letters will be sent you.

5. The first and second questions of your letter of December 10, have been answered by inclosures sent to the Honorable The Acting Secretary of War in my letter of December 11, 1907, O. O. 30803-151; the correspondence referred to above constitutes a partial answer to the third and fourth questions.

GENTLEMEN: 1. If not inconsistent with the policy of your company, and if obtainable without too much difficulty, answers to the following questions would be greatly appreciated:

(a) What is the analysis of the nonjacketed bullets used by your company for commercial ammunition?

(b) What are the compositions of the core and jacket of jacketed bullets used for your commercial nonmilitary ammunition?

(c) Have the compositions referred to in (a) and (b) been changed since January 1, 1904, and if so what were the compositions prior to the adoption of those now used?

(d) What compositions of core and jacket have been used by your company for jacketed bullets manufactured for the Krag-Jürgensen rifle and for the Government rifle, model of 1903, and intended for the trade—what were the dates for the various compositions?

(e) Are the compositions given above taken from the proportions of ingredients before casting the bullets or from analyses of the bullets after casting?

(f) What were the compositions of the bullets used for the ammunition delivered to the Government on your contracts for model of 1898 ammunition, dated June 21, 1899, August 29, 1900, and May 23, 1907, and contracts for model of 1903 ammunition, dated June 29, 1905, and August 29, 1906?

2. This information is not desired for purposes of manufacture. Thanking you in advance for any courtesies you may be able to extend in this matter, I am

New York, December 18, 1907.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I inclose two samples each of the bullets referred to that were made on contract of June 29, 1905, the two with crushed point representing those made strictly according to Government specifications as to composition of core and strength of jacket, the other two showing either those with the harder core or the stronger jacket, I am not entirely sure which.

The letter to the other party I will forward to-night or to-morrow and will send you copy of it.

Yours, very truly,

Gen. WM. CROZIER,
Care of Ordnance Department,
Washington, D. C.

NEW YORK, December 18, 1907.

DEAR SIR: We beg to refer to letter of December 10 addressed to you by our superintendent, and to your subsequent communications on the subject of composition of .30 caliber, model 1903, bullets manufactured by us for the United States Government.

Our letter of the 10th instant had reference to the last contract taken by us from the Government, same being dated August 29, 1906, and calling for 3,000,000 rounds of ball cartridges caliber .30, model of 1903. This ammunition was made by us with bullets having 36 parts lead and 1 part tin—about.

In view of further information desired by you on the subject, as well as a letter received by us from the Chief of Ordnance asking various questions pertaining to the composition of our bullets, we have made a long and careful investigation of our records pertaining to other contracts than that referred to in our letter of the 10th instant. We find that the only other contract for ammunition of the model of 1903 was for 3,216,000 rounds, dated June 29, 1905. The composition of the bullets of these, as shown by our records, was as follows:

2,000,000 (about) cupro-nickel jackets, core, 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony.

1,216,000 (about) heavy cupro-nickel jackets, core, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin.

This variation in composition of the core or weight of the jacket, of which the Bureau was aware, was to prevent crushing of the point of bullet when subjected to the test of firing into wood and into water, the first 2,000,000 being made with the harder core and the remaining 1,216,000 having the heavier jacket. These minor changes in composition of core and strength of jacket were made at increased cost of manufacture to us, but resulted in the ammunition being of the highest quality attainable.

Should you desire any further information on this subject we shall be very glad to supply it.

Yours, respectfully,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
 _____, President.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
 United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
 New York, Dec 18, 1907.

DEAR SIR: We duly received your letter dated December 12, No. 30,803-153, asking certain questions in regard to the composition of our bullets, which we answer in detail as follows:

Question (a): What is the analysis of the nonjacketed bullets used by your company for commercial ammunition?

Answer: This we understand refers to bullets of approximately 0.30 caliber. We therefore give the composition of a number of standard sizes made by us for commercial purposes, viz, 0.30 caliber United States Government short range, 100 grains pure lead. 0.30 caliber United States Government guard, 156 grains, 9 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.30-30 caliber short range, 117 grains pure lead. 0.303 caliber Savage, short range, 103 grains, 10 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.303 caliber Savage, target, 185 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.32-20 caliber, 100 grains pure lead. 0.32 caliber Remington, 150 grains, 30 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.32-40 caliber Marlin, 165 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Question (b): What are the compositions of the core and jacket of jacketed bullets used for your commercial, nonmilitary ammunition?

Answer: This we understand refers to bullets made by us for commercial purposes, similar in caliber and weight to 0.30 caliber Government, viz, 0.32-40 caliber Government, cupro-nickel jacket, 220 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. 0.30-40 caliber Government, mid range, cupro-nickel jacket, 180 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. 0.30-30 caliber Marlin, copper jacket tinned, 160 grains, 6 parts lead, 1 part tin. 7.65 millimeter caliber Mauser, cupro-nickel jacket, 210 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. 0.303 caliber British, cupro-nickel jacket, 215 grains, 40 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.303 caliber Savage, cupro-nickel jacket, 182 grains, 8 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.32-40 caliber Marlin, copper jacket tinned, 165 grains pure lead. 0.32 caliber Remington autoloading, copper jacket tinned, 165 grains pure lead. 0.33 caliber Winchester, copper jacket tinned, 200 grains pure lead. 0.35 caliber Winchester, copper jacket tinned, 250 grains pure lead. 0.35 caliber Remington autoloading, copper jacket tinned, 200 grains pure lead.

Question (c): Have the compositions referred to in (a) and (b) been changed since January 1, 1904, and, if so, what were the compositions prior to the adoption of those now used?

Answer: No.

Question (d): What compositions of core and jacket have been used by your company for jacketed bullets manufactured for Krag-Jørgensen rifles and for the Government rifle, model of 1903, and intended for the trade—what were the dates for the various compositions?

Answer: Composition of 0.30 caliber, model 1898, cupro-nickel jackets, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. The above was our standard composition for bullets used in both models of ammunition, 1898 and 1903. During short periods, however, subsequent to the completion of Government contracts, we utilized for commercial purposes such limited quantities of bullets of the following compositions as may have been made in excess of the quantity stipulated for on said contracts, as follows: 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony; heavy cupro-nickel jackets, 30 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Question (e): Are the compositions given above taken from the proportions of the ingredients before the casting of bullets or from the analysis of bullets after casting?

Answer: Before casting the bullets.

Question (f): What were the compositions of bullets used for the ammunition delivered to the Government on your contracts for model of 1898 ammunition, dated June 21, 1899, August 29, 1906, May 23, 1907, and contracts for model of 1903 ammunition, dated June 29, 1905, and August 29, 1906?

Answer: We have no reliable data showing composition of the bullets in the ammunition supplied by us on contract for 0.30 caliber model 1898, dated June 21, 1899.

On contract for 0.30 caliber ammunition model 1903, dated June 20, 1905, composition of bullets and reason therefor was as follows: 2,000,000 (about) cupro-nickel jackets, lead 48 parts, tin 1 part, antimony 1 part. 1,216,000 (about) heavy cupro-nickel jackets, lead 30 parts, tin 1 part.

The variation in composition of above bullets, as will be recalled by the Bureau, was to retain their original perfect form required by the inspector of ordnance when subjected to the tests of firing into wood and into water, the first 2,000,000 having a harder core to attain this result, while the remaining 1,216,000 were made with a heavier jacket than demanded by the original requirements of the Bureau, but for the same object.

The bullets on contract for 0.30 caliber ammunition, models of 1898 and 1903, dated August 29, 1906, were made with the heavier cupro-nickel jackets, composition of core 30 parts lead, 1 part tin.

The bullets on contract for 0.30 caliber ammunition, model 1898, dated May 23, 1907, for use in practice and competition for the national match, were made with cupro-nickel jackets, composition of core 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony.

If we can render any further service to the Bureau in the giving of information on these subjects please command us.

Yours respectfully,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
WM. J. BRUFF, President.

CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,

UNITED STATES CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
Lowell, Mass., December 16, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of December 12:

(a) In the rim fire and center-fire cartridges which are loaded with black powder we use a lead bullet made from the lead just as we buy it.

(b) The composition of the core of bullet varies from 17 to 30 per cent lead and 1 per cent tin. The jacket is copper or, as we term it, gilding metal, tinned over.

(c) No change.

(d) Composition of core, 30 per cent lead, 1 per cent tin for the Krag, and 19 per cent lead, 1 per cent tin for the model 1903. The jackets for each, cupro-nickel, same as used by the Government, 85 per cent copper, 15 per cent nickel.

(e) Compositions are given from proportions as we mix the ingredients.

(f) The same as already given.

We trust the above answers will fill your requirements. If not, kindly let us know and we will reply more in detail if necessary.

Yours, very truly,

UNITED STATES CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
O. E. HOXIE, Agent.

SIR: 1. You are informed that four cartridges, caliber .30, model of 1903, two of which are marked "Frankford Arsenal, January, 1906," and two "Union Metallic Cartridge Company, December, 1905," have this day been sent you by express. It is desired that a quantitative analysis be made of the core of at least one bullet of each manufacture and that report be rendered to this Office at the earliest practicable date. The report should describe the bullets by referring to the markings on the cartridge cases.

2. In making the analysis those elements of which there is found only a trace may be neglected.

DEAR SIR: We have your favor of the 12th instant. We hardly feel that we would care to furnish the information desired.

Regretting that we can not see our way clear to meet your request in this matter, we beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

THE PETERS CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
W. E. KEPLINGER, Vice-President.

CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS COMPANY,
New Haven, Conn., December 23, 1907.

SIR: In pursuance with your request for information under date of December 12, we are pleased to advise you in response to your several inquiries, as follows:

(a) We have no analyses of the composition used in the unjacketed bullets of our commercial ammunition. The composition of these bullets is determined by the proportion of the ingredients before casting.

(b) The compositions of the cores of jacketed bullets for our commercial nonmilitary ammunition are variable, and the compositions to be adopted as standards for the various cartridges are determined by the results obtained from experiment. They are best classified under three compositions:

Core:

- Those containing lead and tin.
- Those containing lead and antimony.
- Those containing lead, tin, and antimony.

Jackets:

- Those containing iron, copper, and nickel.
- Those containing copper and nickel.
- Those containing copper and zinc.

We have no analyses of the cores mentioned above, the composition being determined by the proportion of the ingredients before casting.

The analyses of the jacket metal can not be given in the instance of the first-mentioned alloy—that which contained copper, nickel and iron. This was known to the trade, however, as "nickel steel" or "cupro-nickel steel."

The analyses of the other metals mentioned are as follows:

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Copper .....	85	Nickel .....	15
Copper .....	95	Zinc .....	5
Copper .....	80	Nickel .....	20

(c) There have been some changes in the composition of the unjacketed bullets and the core of the jacketed bullets referred to in (a) and (b) since January 1, 1904, but we have no record of what these compositions were prior to this date.

With respect to the jacketed metal, cupro-nickel steel was last used by us in 1898. Since that time the jackets have been of the composition specified in (b). The 20 per cent cupro nickel was used about 1899. The 15 per cent cupro nickel was used during 1899 and has been in use since then up to the present time.

(d) The compositions of the core and jacket for jacketed bullets intended for the Krag-Jørgensen rifle, and for the Government rifle, model '03, manufactured by us for the trade, are as follows:

Core (model of 1898 and model 1903):

Those containing lead and tin.

Those containing lead and antimony.

Jacket:

Model 1898—

Those containing iron, copper, and nickel.

Those containing copper (85 per cent) and nickel (15 per cent).

Those containing copper (95 per cent) and zinc (5 per cent).

Those containing copper (80 per cent) and nickel (20 per cent).

Model 1903—

Those containing copper (85 per cent) and nickel (15 per cent).

Those containing copper (95 per cent) and zinc (5 per cent).

The last cupro-nickel steel was used about 1898. The first cupro nickel was used about 1899. Aside from this we are unable to give dates for the various compositions, except that 20 per cent cupro nickel was not used after 1899.

(e) All the records of compositions of nonjacketed bullets and the cores of jacketed bullets result from the proportions of ingredients before casting the bullets, not from actual analyses after casting. The compositions given of jacket metals are the result of analyses. We make no analysis of unjacketed bullets or the cores of jacketed bullets.

(f) The compositions of bullets used by us in fulfilling contracts with the United States Government are as follows:

Model 1898 ammunition.

Contract of June 21, 1899:

Core, 27 parts lead to 1 part tin.

Jacket, 85 parts copper to 15 parts nickel, and 80 parts copper to 20 parts nickel.

Contract of March 28, 1907:

Core, 36 parts lead to 1 part tin (about).

Jacket, 85 parts copper to 15 parts nickel.

Model 1903 ammunition.

Contract of June 29, 1905:

Core, 36 parts lead to 1 part tin (about).

Jacket, 85 parts copper to 15 parts nickel.

The contract of June 21, 1899, specified on the blueprint that the jacket metal should be of cupro nickel or cupro-nickel steel. There is no record on file that shows further specification. On reviewing our records we find that beginning with January 20, 1899, we prepared a large quantity of cupro nickel of a mixture of 80 per cent copper and 20 per cent nickel. On July 10, 1899, we started the manufacture of a large quantity of bullet covers, using a mixture of 85 parts copper and 15 parts nickel. The delivery of this metal from the mill to our manufacturing department was completed in November, 1899.

From these records we are inclined to believe that the jacket metal used on contract of June 21, 1899, was of both compositions, and that the change from the one to the other was due to verbal instructions from the chief inspector—written instructions not being considered necessary owing to the latitude allowed in the specifications. It was just about this time that the general change took place from the use of cupro-nickel steel to cupro nickel; hence we are inclined to feel that it was altogether likely that during this contract the change occurred.

Very respectfully,

WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS COMPANY,
WINCHESTER BENNETT,
Second Vice-President.

The CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

(7) Copy of letter to the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6, 1908.

MY DEAR GENERAL: AS you have learned through previous correspondence, this committee has been conducting a series of examinations and analyses in order to more closely fix the identity of bullets found in Brownsville, Tex., after the affray of August 13-14, 1906. In that connection we would be pleased if you would ascertain and advise us what manufactories made the cartridges which were forwarded for the use of the First Battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry while stationed at Fort Niobrara in 1906, after that battalion was supplied with the new model rifles.

As I recall the testimony, it was shown that the new rifles, model of 1903, were furnished to this battalion while it was stationed at Niobrara; that a quantity of service ammunition was forwarded also; that regular target practice or contests were conducted at that point and many cartridges were exploded; that a quantity of cartridge cases, together with unexploded cartridges, loose in a box or boxes, was taken to Fort Brown when the troops moved to that post, and that a certain amount of ammunition in clips was also taken.

We would like to know whether more than one shipment of the new ammunition was sent by the Government to Niobrara for the use of this battalion, and whether the ammunition sent was from more than one manufactory or arsenal, and what one or ones. We would also like to know the dates of manufacture of such cartridges as were sent for this battalion to use with the new-model rifles; also, whether any service ammunition or guard cartridges were sent to the battalion after it reached Fort Brown, and if so from what manufactory and of what date; and whether any of these troops were engaged in target practice at Point Isabel, and if so what ammunition was used there.

And in view of the fact that the testimony shows that quantities of cartridge cases were found strewn about the barracks and grounds of Fort Brown when the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry arrived there, apparently left by the three companies of the Twenty-sixth which had been stationed there previously, may we be informed as to the ammunition, if any, furnished those companies of the Twenty-sixth for use in the new-model rifles—who manufactured it and what dates did it bear?

Will you please tell us, also, what word you have received, if any, from the Union Metallic Cartridge Company concerning antimony found in the bullets which they have manufactured for the Government, as shown by analyses made some months ago under direction of Colonel Heath, and what explanation the officers of the company make of their telephone message to Senator Foraker to the effect that no antimony was used by them in the manufacture of bullets for the Government, in view of the analyses made under Colonel Heath's direction, and letters said to have been received from that company stating that large quantities of the bullets which they have made for the Government have contained some 2 per cent of antimony.

Yours, very sincerely,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

(8) Letter in reply from the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army, received through the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 7, 1908.

Sir: Referring to your letter of January 6, 1908, O. O. 30803-183, you are informed as follows:

1. The records of this Office show that the only issues of model of 1903 ammunition to Fort Niobrara prior to the departure of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry for Fort Brown were made from Rock Island Arsenal, and were 188,400 rounds, receipted for at Fort Niobrara April 10, 1906, and 15,600 rounds receipted for at Fort Niobrara June 10, 1906.

2. The records of this Office show that the only model of 1903 ammunition on hand at the Rock Island Arsenal from which the above issues could have been made was manufactured by the Frankford Arsenal (dates of manufacture not shown in the records, but shipped to Rock Island Arsenal in March, 1906) and by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company under this contract dated June 20, 1905. In connection with the above copies of the following correspondence are inclosed herewith: O. O. 30024-B-611, dated January 12, 1907, telegram from this Office to Lieut. F. W. Bugbee, Twenty-fifth Infantry; O. O. 30024-B-613, dated January 13, 1907, telegram from Lieut. F. W. Bugbee to the Chief of Ordnance; O. O. 30803-24, dated January 22, 1907, letter from this Office to The Military Secretary, and indorsements thereon; O. O. 30803-53, dated March 1, 1907, letter from the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal inclosing copies of letter from the Hon. Joseph B. Foraker and the answer of the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal thereto.

3. The records of this Office show that Lieutenant Bugbee, then ordnance officer at Fort Niobrara, issued model of 1903 ball cartridges to Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, as follows:

Company.	Number of rounds.	Receipted for.
B.....	26,400	Apr. 11, 1906
O.....	26,400	Apr. 10, 1906
C.....	2,700	June 23, 1906
D.....	26,400	Apr. 10, 1906

4. The exact dates marked on the cartridge cases of the ammunition issued to Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, at Fort Niobrara can not be given, as no record thereof is kept. It is, however, probable that the ammunition furnished from the Frankford Arsenal was manufactured within a few months of the date of shipment given above. That manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company and sent to the Rock Island Arsenal must have been marked with dates either in the latter part of 1905 or the early part of 1906, since the first lot sent to that arsenal was completed December 23, 1905, and the last lot sent was completed February 27, 1906. The dates marked on the cartridge cases would not of necessity correspond exactly with the dates of loading, since the cases are first made up and marked and are then used as needed.

5. The records of this Office show that model of 1903 rifles were receipted for by the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Fort Niobrara as follows: Company B, March 30, 1906; Company C, March 28, 1906; Company D, March 28, 1906.

6. No service ammunition or guard cartridges were sent to the Twenty-fifth Infantry prior to August 13, 1906, and after it reached Fort Brown.

7. No information is on hand in this Office as to whether the Twenty-fifth Infantry engaged in target practice at Point Isabelle.

8. The records show that the Twenty-sixth Infantry at Fort Brown was supplied with models of 1903 ammunition from the San Antonio Arsenal, where three different makes were on hand, viz, Frankford Arsenal, United States Cartridge Company, and Union Metallic Cartridge Company. The records do not show which one of the manufacturers mentioned above fabricated the ammunition sent to the Twenty-sixth Infantry.

9. In reference to the correspondence with the Union Metallic Cartridge Company concerning antimony found in bullets, your attention is invited to letter from this Office dated December 19, 1907 (O. O. 30803-173), with inclosed copies of letters. No additional information is on hand.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,

Lieut. F. W. BUGBEE,
Twenty-fifth Infantry,
Care Depot Quartermaster, U. S. Army, New York, N. Y.

Of the ammunition issued by you last spring as ordnance officer at Fort Niobrara to companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, can you tell what make of ammunition was issued to each of companies B, C, and D—whether it was Frankford Arsenal ammunition, some of which of date January, 1906, is supposed to have been sent you—or Union Metallic ammunition of date December, 1905. Give full information as practicable, stating whether you furnished both makes of ammunition to any one company or not.

CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C.

Reference your telegram 12th, records do not show kinds of ammunition issued to Companies B, C, D, Twenty-fifth. Remember issuing both Frankford and Union Metallic to some of the 8 companies stationed at Niobrara, but don't know what companies. Majority ammunition issued was Union Metallic. Ordnance-Sergeant Smigosky, who was at Niobrara at that time, may remember. Company commanders probably know.

BUGBEE, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 22, 1907.

SIR: 1. I have the honor to inform you that the officer rendering returns which showed issue to Companies B, C and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, at Fort Niobrara of ball cartridges for Springfield magazine rifle, is unable to state what companies of the 8 supplied received both Frankford and Union Metallic ammunition. He states that some received both, but that the majority issued was Union Metallic.

2. He suggests, however, that Ord. Sergt. W. S. Smigosky, now at Fort William Henry Harrison, might remember, as he was then serving at Fort Niobrara; and it is suggested that this sergeant be directed to report what he knows of the distribution of the two kinds of ammunition to the three companies referred to.

SIR: I inclose herewith copy of letter received from United States Senator J. B. Foraker, and copy of my reply thereto.

Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding.

The CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, U. S. ARMY, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
February 25, 1907.

DEAR SIR: The records of the Ordnance Department show that you are credited with 188,400 ball cartridges, 0.30 caliber New Springfield rifle, model 1903, issued to Fort Niobrara, Nebr., March 30, 1906.

I desire to learn for use in the Senate investigation, now in progress, of the Brownsville shooting affray, what manufacture these cartridges were, I mean whether they were U. M. C., Frankford, or United States cartridges, and what lots and cases made up the issue. I understand that the shipments are made from the factories in lots, each lot having a number and consisting of a number of cases, each of which cases bears the number of the lot to which it belongs, and each of which cases contains 1,200 cartridges.

If from your records you can give me the information indicated I will be greatly obliged, and will be therefore saved from the necessity of putting you to the trouble of appearing as a witness.

Regretting that I am compelled to trouble you to this extent, I remain, very truly yours, etc.,

J. B. FORAKER,

Lieut. Col. S. E. BLUNT,
Commandant, etc., Rock Island Arsenal,
Rock Island, Ill.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL, ILL.,
February 28, 1907.

SIR: Referring to your letter of February 25, 1907, regarding the issue of 188,400 ball cartridges to Fort Niobrara, March 30, 1906, I have the honor to inform you that I have had a careful search made of the records here with the following results: March 30, 1906, there were issued to the post ordnance officer, Fort Niobrara, Nebr., 157 boxes rifle-ball cartridges, caliber 0.30, model of 1903, each box containing 1,200 rounds, making a total of 188,400 rounds. We had in store at that time only ammunition manufactured by Frankford Arsenal and by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company. While in invoicing this ammunition no distinction is made between that manufactured by the Government and that by private manufacturers. My orders at that time were to issue half of each, and a memorandum to that effect appears upon the packing lists of this shipment. Undoubtedly therefore about 79 boxes of Frankford Arsenal and 78 boxes of U. M. C. ammunition were sent. Although the regulations of the Ordnance Department require that contract ammunition be marked as to lot, it has not heretofore been so invoiced to this arsenal, nor has any record of lot number been kept. It is therefore impossible to state what lot or lots of U. M. C. ammunition were issued to this command. The ammunition of Government manufacture was not given lot numbers.

Respectfully,

S. E. BLUNT,
Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding.

Senator J. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Senator Foraker offered in evidence the following correspondence, which was ordered printed in the record:

(1) Copy of letter dated June 12, 1907, written by Senator Foraker to Jerome Orcutt, esq., superintendent and manager The Union Metallic Cartridge Company, Bridgeport, Conn.:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1907.

DEAR SIR: In the Brownsville investigation a question has arisen as to the so-called lead filling of the Springfield, model 1903, bullet. Will you kindly write me on receipt of this whether it is pure lead or a composition of tin and lead or lead and antimony, or whatever it may be, and give me the respective proportions of the composition.

If you will kindly do the same as to the unjacketed guard cartridge (15-grain powder) I will be greatly obliged.

If not too much trouble I would be glad to have the same information as to the Krag ammunition, regular ball-cartridge bullet.

Very truly, yours, etc.,

J. B. FORAKER.

JEROME ORCUTT, Esq.,

*Superintendent and Manager Union Metallic Cartridge Company,
Bridgeport, Conn.*

(2) Letter in reply, dated June 13, 1907:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., June 13, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 12th instant, making inquiry concerning the composition of the bullets furnished with the different cartridges, as enumerated, wish to advise as follows:

Springfield, model 1903 bullet—36 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Unjacketed guard cartridge bullet—9 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Krag metal-cased bullet—20 parts lead, 1 part antimony.

Trusting this information will be of service to you, we are,

Yours, truly,

(3) Letter dated December 6, 1907, received by Senator Foraker from Jerome Orcutt, manager, etc.:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., Dec. 6, 1907.

DEAR SIR: With reference to our telephone conversation of this morning, it is my understanding that you desire to ascertain what particular bullets are represented by the mixtures given, which were as follows:

	Lead.	Tin.	Antimony.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
No. 1.....	95.70	2.02	1.97
No. 2.....	95.50	2.11	1.98
No. 3.....	96.36	2.05	1.29

While these mixtures do not represent any bullet which we manufacture, they come the nearest to a 0.30 Government, model 1808, bullet.

We trust that this information may be of service to you, and remain,

(4) Letter dated December 10, 1907, received by Senator Foraker from Jerome Orcutt, manager, etc.:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., December 10, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your telephone communication of the 7th instant, with reference to the composition of the Springfield bullets, 1903 model, wish to advise that they were made in accordance with the specifications furnished by the Government.

We refer to blueprint B-582, last date of revision being March 27, 1905, describing "Ball cartridges, U. S. magazine rifle, model 1903," as follows:
 "Bullet: Weight, 220 grains; core, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin (about)."
 Yours, truly,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
 By J. ORCUTT, Manager and Superintendent.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

(5) Letter dated December 18, 1907, received by Senator Foraker from William J. Bruff, president The Union Metallic Cartridge Company, New York City:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
New York, December 18, 1907.

DEAR SIR: We beg to refer to letter of December 10 addressed to you by our superintendent, and to your subsequent communications on the subject of composition of 0.30 caliber, model 1903, bullets manufactured by us for the United States Government.

Our letter of the 10th instant had reference to the last contract taken by us from the Government, same being dated August 29, 1900, and calling for 3,000,000 rounds of ball cartridges caliber 0.30, model of 1903. This ammunition was made by us with bullets having 36 parts lead and 1 part tin—about. In view of further information desired by you on the subject, as well as a letter received by us from the Chief of Ordnance asking various questions pertaining to the composition of our bullets, we have made a long and careful investigation of our records pertaining to other contracts than that referred to in our letter of the 10th instant. We find that the only other contract for ammunition of the model of 1903 was for 3,216,000 rounds, dated June 29, 1905. The composition of the bullets of these, as shown by our records, was as follows:

2,000,000 (about), cupro-nickel jackets, core 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony.

1,216,000 (about), heavy cupro-nickel jackets, core 36 parts lead, 1 part tin.

This variation in composition of the core or weight of the jacket, of which the Bureau was aware, was to prevent crushing of the point of bullet when subjected to the test of firing into wood and into water, the first 2,000,000 being made with the harder core and the remaining 1,216,000 having the heavier jacket. These minor changes in composition of core and strength of jacket were made at increased cost of manufacture to us, but resulted in the ammunition being of the highest quality attainable.

Should you desire any further information on this subject, we shall be very glad to supply it.

Yours, respectfully,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
 WM. J. BRUFF, President.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Senator Foraker requested that subpoenas be issued directing William J. Bruff, president, and Jerome Orcutt, manager and superintendent of The Union Metallic Cartridge Company, to appear before the committee at its next special meeting, and to bring with them all instructions which they have received from the War Department and all their records necessary to show the composition of all steel-jacketed ammunition made by them for the Government for both Krag-Jørgensen rifle, model of 1898, and Springfield rifle, model of 1903, including the blueprint "B-582," referred to by Mr. Orcutt in his letter to Senator Foraker dated December 10, 1907, and all other blueprints referring to the subject, and including also the contract dated June 29, 1905, for ammunition of the model of 1903, referred to by Mr. Bruff in his letter to Senator Foraker, dated December 18, 1907; also to bring all records showing composition of bullets manufactured by their company during the same period for the Mauser 7-millimeter and 7.65-millimeter rifles, and such data as would be necessary to enable them to testify as to the composition of the lead core of ammunition made during the same period for sporting rifles, caliber 0.30, 7 millimeter and 7.65 milimeter.

Senator Foraker further requested that General Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army, be subpoenaed to appear on the same date and that he be requested to bring from his office such records and data as he might need in testifying about the composition of bullets manufactured for the use of the Army.

Upon motion it was agreed that the foregoing proceedings of this day's business be considered as confidential printing until after the examination of the officers of The Union Metallic Cartridge Company and General Crozier.

Upon motion it was agreed that the next meeting of the committee for consideration of the Brownsville affray should be held on Wednesday, January 15, 1908, at 2 o'clock p. m.

At 12.15 o'clock p. m. the committee adjourned.

---

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Wednesday, January 15, 1908.

The committee met at 2 o'clock, p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Bulkeley, Warner, du Pont, Taliaferro, Foster, Overman, Frazier, and McCreary.

TESTIMONY OF JEROME ORCUTT.

The witness was sworn by the chairman.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Please state your name in full.—A. Jerome Orcutt.

Q. What relation, if any, in a business way, do you sustain to the Union Metallic Cartridge Company of Bridgeport, Conn.?—A. I am superintendent and manager.

Q. How long have you held that position?—A. I have been superintendent ever since 1892. I have been manager for the past two years.

Q. You have a printed copy of the testimony before you which we have been taking. I wish you would turn to page 3335. You will find there at the bottom of that page a copy of a letter written by me dated June 12, 1907, and I will ask you to look at it, in order that your mind may be refreshed as to your answer to it, about which I want to ask you some questions. [After a pause.] Have you read it, now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Immediately following that letter, on the next page, is your answer. Have you read that also?—A. I have not read it just now.

Senator FORAKER. In order that we may have in the record these letters so that the questions I ask and the answers thereto may appear in an intelligent way, I will ask the stenographer to insert here the letters referred to, and I will read them. They are as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1907.

DEAR SIR: In the Brownsville investigation a question has arisen as to the so-called lead filling of the Springfield, model 1903, bullet. Will you kindly write me on receipt of this whether it is pure lead or a composition of tin and lead or lead and antimony, or whatever it may be, and give me the respective proportions of the composition?

If you will kindly do the same as to the unjacketed guard cartridge (15-grain powder) I will be greatly obliged.

If not too much trouble I would be glad to have the same information as to the Krag ammunition, regular ball-cartridge bullet.

Very truly, yours, etc.,

J. B. FORAKER.

JEROME ORCUTT, Esq.,
Superintendent and Manager Union Metallic Cartridge Company,
Bridgeport, Conn.

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., June 13, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 12th instant, making inquiry concerning the composition of the bullets furnished with the different cartridges, as enumerated, wish to advise as follows:

Springfield, model 1903 bullet—36 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Unjacketed guard cartridge bullet—9 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Krag metal-cased bullet—20 parts lead, 1 part antimony.

Trusting this information will be of service to you, we are,

Yours, truly,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
By J. ORCUTT, Manager and Superintendent.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Mr. Orcutt, your company, the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, has been manufacturing bullets from time to time, or cartridges, rather, for the Government under contract, as I understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you commence manufacturing cartridges for the Government?—A. Do you mean first, or this particular cartridge?

Q. No, first. I want to see to what extent you have manufactured cartridges for the Government.—A. I can not tell, offhand. We have been at it for thirty years.

Q. Thirty years. That is to say, you have had contracts from time to time to manufacture cartridges?—A. Yes.

Q. Various kinds of cartridges?—A. Yes.

Q. Such as the Government was using, however, of course, all the while?—A. Yes.

Q. These steel-jacketed bullets are rather modern, are they not?—A. They are.

Q. When were the first manufactured?—A. May I interrupt; we call them nickel-jacketed bullets.

Q. Well, nickel-jacketed. It is the same. We have been speaking of them here as steel-jacketed bullets.—A. Yes.

Q. They are a composition, I believe?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you manufacture the first of these nickel-jacketed bullets?—A. I can not answer that question, offhand. I would have to look it up.

Q. Did you manufacture any bullets during the Spanish-American war?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the character of those bullets?—A. They were .45 caliber bullets. Those were lead.

Q. Those were not nickel-jacketed bullets, were they?—A. No, the .45 was not a nickel-jacketed bullet.

Q. They are without any jackets?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, had you ever made any steel or nickel-jacketed bullets before the Spanish-American war?—A. We had made a few.

Q. Made for the Army?—A. I can not tell you, offhand, how many we made or when we commenced to make them.

Q. Well, you did not commence to manufacture any until the Army commenced to use them?—A. No.

Q. Can you or not say when the Army commenced to use nickel-jacketed bullets; before the Spanish-American war?—A. I do not think they did, very much.

Q. No. Since then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You manufacture sporting ammunition also, do you not?—A. Yes.

Q. And do you manufacture ammunition for any other kind of an army rifle except the United States Army rifle?—A. Yes, we manufacture for every kind of a rifle, almost, that is used.

Q. You manufacture only cartridges?—A. Cartridges, that is all.

Q. And you can manufacture cartridges, and do manufacture cartridges, according to specifications?—A. Yes.

Q. As may be required?—A. Yes.

Q. And you manufacture Krag ammunition, as you call it in your letter?—A. Yes.

Q. And referring to Krag ammunition in that letter, do you refer to nickel-jacketed bullets?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you manufacture cartridges for the Mauser rifle?—A. Yes.

Q. For the 7-millimeter rifle?—A. Yes.

Q. For the 7.62 millimeter rifle?—A. Yes.

Q. For the 7.65 millimeter rifle?—A. Yes.

Q. For all those?—A. Yes.

Q. And for other kinds of guns as well?—A. Almost every kind of a gun.

Q. Almost every kind of a gun?—A. Yes.

Q. Recurring now to your letter on page 3336 of the record, you say that the composition of the Springfield model 1903 bullet is 36 parts lead, and 1 part tin. Have you manufactured bullets of that description?—A. Yes; we have manufactured them.

Q. To what extent have you manufactured bullets of that description?

Senator WARNER. Of the model of 1903?

Senator FORAKER. Of the model of 1903.

The WITNESS. I can not give you a correct answer to that, because I do not know how many we have made without looking it up. Mr. Thomas can tell you more of that than I can.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Yes. I asked that he be requested to furnish you all the data necessary to enable you to answer.—A. Yes, sir; we have those data here.

Q. You will have someone else to answer that?—A. Yes.

Q. Then I will pass that.—A. Yee, we have those data.

Q. In that description you have given you refer to the regular United States magazine rifle cartridge, do you not, as you are making it to-day, 36 parts lead and 1 part tin?—A. Yes, sir; that is the cartridge we refer to in this letter.

Q. The next bullet you mention is the unjacketed guard cartridge, 9 parts lead and 1 part tin.—A. That is a smaller bullet, a shorter bullet.

Q. That is to say, that is used only for guard duty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That has 15 grains of powder?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is manufactured by you only for the Army?—A. Yes.

Q. You do not manufacture that for sporting purposes?—A. I do not think we make any for sporting purposes.

Q. You refer to the Krag metal-cased bullet, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. You have not the data from which you took those proportions?—A. We have that here.

Q. You have it with you?—A. No, sir; I have not it, myself

Q. That will be shown by some other witness?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You consulted your records before you answered this letter?—A. We had those records looked up.

Q. And you wrote this letter after the records had been examined?—A. They had been examined, but I do not think they had been examined thoroughly. We had not got onto everything then.

Q. This letter was written June 13?—A. Yes.

Senator WARNER. The records are here now?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If I have noticed the dates correctly, the date of the other letter is June 12.

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The date of his letter from Bridgeport is June 13.

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is to say, you got my letter in the morning, probably, and you answered it that same day?—A. It seems so from the dates here, but I thought there was a longer time. I think I was away at the time. That seems to be the case from this. I could not say offhand.

Q. We will turn to the correspondence later. But you did not answer this merely from memory?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. You consulted the records before you wrote this letter?—A. Yes.

Q. And you were manufacturing bullets at that time of exactly these proportions?—A. Yes.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You say you did not thoroughly examine the record?—A. Later on we examined. We got onto something we had not got hold of before.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You made all the examination you thought at the time was necessary to enable you to make the answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. It seems to me if the records are here, we will save a good deal of time by consulting them.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I want to know whether there is anything to be changed in your letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. The letter is accurate as it stands?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us the composition of the Mauser bullets made for the 7 millimeter, the 7.62 millimeter and the 7.65 millimeter?—A. I can not tell you that offhand. I do not carry that in my head.

Q. I will call your attention to the next letter on that same page, a letter from you to me, dated December 6, 1907. I will read it aloud, so as to refresh your recollection. It is as follows:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., Dec. 6, 1907.

DEAR SIR: With reference to our telephone conversation of this morning, it is my understanding that you desire to ascertain what particular bullets are represented by the mixtures given, which were as follows:

	Lead.	Tin.	Antimony.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
No. 1.....	95.70	2.02	1.97
No. 2.....	95.59	2.11	1.98
No. 3.....	96.36	2.05	1.29

While these mixtures do not represent any bullet which we manufacture, they come the nearest to a 0.30 Government, model 1898, bullet.

We trust that this information may be of service to you, and remain,

Yours, truly,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
By JEROME ORCUTT,
Manager and Superintendent.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Are the statements made in that letter accurate?—A. Yes, sir; they are supposed to be accurate.

Q. That was written, as it purports on its face, in response to an inquiry made of you by telephone?—A. We took the telephone message down and that was the answer that we thought answered that, and correctly.

Q. And I gave you the result of the analyses that had been made in three cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As set forth here?—A. Yes.

Q. You took them down from me by telephone?—A. Yes; I remember that very well.

Q. And I called your attention, did I not, to the fact that these analyses showed antimony in these bullets?—A. Yes.

Q. And I asked you whether or not there was any antimony in the bullets you manufactured for the Army, and you said you would make an examination and write me the result. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. And thereupon you did make an examination, and wrote me this letter?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, I call your attention to the following language in that letter:

While these mixtures do not represent any bullets which we manufacture, they come the nearest to a 0.30 Government, model 1898, bullet.

That is a .30 caliber?—A. That is what it means.

Q. That is what you meant, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me the composition of the bullet to which you refer as the one which these analyses most nearly approach in your opinion?—A. I can not tell you offhand. Without the records I could not tell you right off.

Q. But you wrote this after you had examined the records, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. At the foot of that page is still another letter from you, dated December 10, 1907, Bridgeport, Conn., and addressed to me. That reads as follows:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., December 10, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your telephone communication of the 7th instant, with reference to the composition of the Springfield bullets, 1903 model, wish to advise that they were made in accordance with the specifications furnished by the Government.

We refer to blueprint B-582, last date of revision being March 27, 1905, describing "Ball cartridges, U. S. magazine rifle, model 1903," as follows:

"Bullet: Weight, 220 grains; core, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin (about)."

Yours, truly,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
By J. ORCUTT, Manager and Superintendent.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

That letter is correct, is it, as it stands there?—A. Yes; that letter is correct. We found out afterwards that we did have some antimony in some of those bullets. This letter is correct.

Q. That is, I mean that it is copied here correctly?—A. Yes.

Q. I am going to lead up to the other you speak about.—A. Yes.

Q. That letter of December 10, which I have just read, was in response to a telephonic communication from me of December 7, as the letter states?—A. Yes.

Q. That is correct, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, just that we may have it in the record, I called up, did I not, to say to you over the telephone that I had received your letter of the 6th, and to ask you whether or not you meant to tell me that there was no antimony whatever in these Government bullets, calling your attention particularly to the antimony?

The CHAIRMAN. Have either of you any copy of the telephone record?

Senator FORAKER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have one?

The WITNESS. No; I have not a copy of that. We took that down, but I have not it.

Senator FORAKER. No; I would be glad if we had. I only want to do this to refresh the recollection of the witness.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What is your answer?—A. I have lost the question, really.

Q. In this telephonic communication I told you that I had just received your letter of the 6th, did I not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I told you that I wanted to ask you a question or two, that I might distinctly understand the aspect of it, and that the controversy was over the presence of antimony in these bullets, and I wanted to know whether or not there was any antimony in any of the bullets that you had manufactured, and that I would like for you to make a careful search of your records to see whether or not you had made any bullets with antimony in them; do you remember that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took three days, until the 10th, before you answered.—

A. I was away at the time.

Q. Oh, yes.—A. That is why that letter was not answered sooner.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you at the phone at the other end when the message went?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got the message?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Directly from the lips of the Senator?—A. Or his clerk; I do not remember which.

Q. Then you were away after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. He got it from me.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. This was on the 7th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you answered me on the 10th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the letter as printed is correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. That is, the letter as it is printed is as you wrote it?

The WITNESS. Yes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is, the letter is correctly copied?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you were away. Where were you at that time?—A. I was in New York.

Q. On account of this matter?—A. No; we had a factory meeting there. We held a factory meeting there.

Q. How much of these three days were you away in New York?—

A. I do not think I was away over one day. I think I was away one day.

Q. Did you or not give instructions as soon as you received my telephonic message to make this examination of the records?—A. Certainly; we got right at it the minute we got the message.

Q. That is so; you told me you would, and you answered as soon as you could?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you or not instruct whoever made that examination to make a search with special reference to discovering whether you used antimony in your bullets?—A. Yes, sir. We went at that, and we found out that we had used some antimony in some of the bullets afterwards.

Q. You found out that you had, before this letter?—A. No; that was after this letter was written.

Q. I want up to the time of the letter.—A. No; we did not know it at that time.

Q. So that at the time you wrote this letter you did not know that you had used any antimony?—A. We did not discover it. We knew that it had been done, but we did not discover it.

Q. You did not have it in mind then?—A. No, sir.

Q. And my asking you and interrogating you about it, and telling you that that was the particular point about which we wanted an examination made, did not bring it to your mind?—A. No, sir.

Q. And the examination was made for the purpose of searching as to that point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without discovering what you afterwards discovered. Now, you can not give us the number of contracts you have had with the Government for the manufacture of army ammunition, as I understand it?—A. No, sir; not offhand.

Q. You can not tell us how many contracts?—A. No, sir.

Q. You can not tell us the date of any of those contracts?—A. I can not tell you that.

Q. You do not make the composition for the bullets? That does not fall within the line of your duty, I suppose?—A. No, sir; not personally.

Q. You have a man who looks after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you do know what the contracts are?—A. We know them at the time, but I do not know them now.

Q. Yes; I understand. When you enter into a contract with the Government?—A. Certainly, we know exactly what we are doing.

Q. That is your business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that when you wanted to find out what the composition was of these Government bullets, you looked up the contract?—A. We looked up the contract first thing.

Q. It would be prescribed in the contract, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you undertake to make according to the contract?—A. That is our intention every time.

Q. You speak of "blueprint B 582." I understand you to say that that is here?—A. Yes; our Mr. Thomas has that.

Q. You are familiar with that when you have it before you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Thomas is in the room, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like to have him give that to us.—A. Our Mr. Bruff, the president of the company, can tell you more about the contracts than I can.

Q. Yes, I know. I have a letter from him, and I will ask him a few questions directly. Please take this blueprint B 582 and unfold it, and explain it to me so that I will understand it, if I can.—A. I do not think I can explain it near as well as Mr. Thomas can. [Opening blueprint.]

Q. I have got to trouble you, because you wrote me about it.—A. Mr. Thomas can turn right to what you want, immediately.

Q. Well, I will leave that until he comes on the stand, then. Now, Mr. Orcutt, I will abbreviate your examination, since I see it is necessary to call Mr. Thomas in regard to that blueprint. You do not make the composition for these bullets?—A. Not personally; no, sir.

Q. That is not a part of your duty?—A. No, sir.

Q. And what you do as general manager and superintendent is to superintend the conduct of the business and manage it and look after contracts and see in a general way that they are carried out, and the details of it are left to others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you can not state from recollection just what the composition of any particular bullet is?—A. No, sir.

Q. You would have to refer to the records?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the records are here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can not tell us without referring to the records just what contracts you have had with the Government?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you can tell us in a general way that you do manufacture these nickel-jacketed bullets for various kinds of arms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You manufacture other kinds of bullets, too, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For revolvers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the .45 Colt revolver?—A. For every revolver and gun that is made, practically.

Q. For every sort of gun and every kind of firearm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you one other question. The cartridge, when it is completed, consists of a case filled with powder and a bullet and a primer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The primer is in the head of the case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is a date stamped on the head of the cartridge?—A. For the Government cartridges, there is.

Q. I am speaking now of army cartridges.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The date is put on army cartridges, but only on army cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You make cartridges of exactly the same general character, but without a date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On those that are not made for the Army you put only "U. M. C. .30 6"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Giving the caliber; that is if it be a .30 caliber, you put that on in that way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whatever other caliber it might be would be put on, if it should be a different caliber?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You speak of making Krag cartridges. You make a Krag cartridge for sporting purposes, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you make a Springfield cartridge for sporting purposes?—A. That they use for that purpose some.

Q. And you have those on hand constantly now for sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For sporting purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the Krag cartridges you use the old-fashioned Krag case without any cannellure?—A. That is what we call the rim head.

Q. And on the Springfield cartridge, whether made for the Army or for sporting, you have the cannellure?—A. We have that same cartridge.

Q. What is true as to the Mauser cartridges? Do you make cases in the same way for sporting purposes and for the Army?—A. They use them for that; yes, sir.

Q. Whether a Mauser cartridge is made for the Army or made for sporting purposes, it is made precisely the same?—A. If it is for the Mauser gun.

Q. Yes, if it is for the Mauser gun; if it is a 7.62 or 7.65 caliber?—A. It is for that particular gun.

Q. It is practically the same caliber as our number .30?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I believe that is all that I will ask this witness.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You state that after writing this letter of December 10, 1907, which has been read by Senator Foraker, you found that you were mistaken in the statement as to the composition of bullets, as to there being no antimony in them?—A. Yes, sir; some of them that we made.

Q. And you rectified that mistake soon thereafter, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that as soon as you discovered that fact, you notified Senator Foraker through your president?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. I would like, so that it may appear in the evidence in this connection, to have the letter of December 18, 1907, on page 3337, inserted in the record at this point.

(The letter referred to is here inserted in the record, as follows:)

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,

New York, December 18, 1907.

DEAR SIR: We beg to refer to letter of December 10 addressed to you by our superintendent, and to your subsequent communications on the subject of composition of 0.30 caliber, model 1903, bullets manufactured by us for the United States Government.

Our letter of the 10th instant had reference to the last contract taken by us from the Government, same being dated August 20, 1906, and calling for 3,000,000 rounds of ball cartridges caliber 0.30, model of 1903. This ammunition was made by us with bullets having 36 parts lead and 1 part tin—about. In view of further information desired by you on the subject, as well as a letter received by us from the Chief of Ordnance asking various questions pertaining to the composition of our bullets, we have made a long and careful investigation of our records pertaining to other contracts than that referred to in our letter of the 10th instant. We find that the only other contract for ammunition of the model of 1903 was for 3,216,000 rounds, dated June 29, 1905. The composition of the bullets of these, as shown by our records, was as follows:

2,000,000 (about), cupro-nickel jackets, core, 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony.

1,216,000 (about), heavy cupro-nickel jackets, core, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin. This variation in composition of the core or weight of the jacket, of which the Bureau was aware, was to prevent crushing of the point of bullet when subjected to the test of firing into wood and into water, the first 2,000,000 being made with the harder core and the remaining 1,216,000 having the heavier jacket. These minor changes in composition of core and strength of jacket were made at increased cost of manufacture to us, but resulted in the ammunition being of the highest quality attainable.

Should you desire any further information on this subject we shall be very glad to supply it.

Yours, respectfully,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
WM. J. BRUFF, President.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You speak of Mr. Thomas being here. He is the manufacturer of the cartridges?—A. He is what we call our ballistic engineer, and he is familiar with all the parts of the cartridge.

Q. And of course he would have more definite knowledge in regard to all these matters than you?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. At present I do not think I will ask this witness anything more.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You will remember that I had a further telephone talk with you when you were in New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the date?—A. I can not remember it now.

Q. I called you at Bridgeport?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they told me you were out of the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And later you called me and said the factory at home had told you that I wanted to talk with you, and you called me up from your New York office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told me in that conversation that Mr. Bruff was in Washington, did you not?—A. I think I did.

Q. And I told you in that conversation that I had learned that antimony had been discovered in one of your Union Metallic cartridges, did I not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you remember what answer you made?—A. I do not now.

Q. I will ask you if you did not tell me that you had used antimony in some sporting cartridges?—A. Yes, sir; that I thought we had.

Q. You told me that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And beyond that you had no personal knowledge on the subject?—A. I remember that.

Q. Yes; and that Mr. Bruff was here in Washington and would no doubt give me full information?—A. Yes.

Senator FORAKER. It was the following morning that I got the information in the letter. I got this letter the following morning, and in that way I know that it was on the 18th, as Mr. Bruff must have written his letter the day we were talking over the telephone. That is all.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You did not put any date on the Mauser cartridge at all, did you?—A. If it was a Government contract we might put a date on it. There is no date on it otherwise. If we make anything for the Government and they ask it, we put it on.

Q. What Government; the United States Government?—A. Yes; we do not put any on the Mauser cartridge otherwise.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you manufacture Mauser cartridges for the United States Government?—A. I could not say whether we did or not exactly. We do not call it by that name, by the way, when we make it for the Government.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. A cartridge such as I exhibit to you consists of three or four parts [indicating cartridge]?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The ball, the case, the primer, and the powder, and so on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All these parts have to be assembled to complete the cartridge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are not necessarily manufactured at the same time?—A. Oh, no; they are not made at the same date.

Q. The bullet that is used in any particular cartridge may be manufactured at an earlier date?—A. Or a later date.

Q. Or a later date than the case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you get ready you put the powder in the case, in some case, and then you take a bullet that belongs, no matter when it has been manufactured if it be of the kind you think belongs with that case, and you put it in that case and finish up the cartridge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that there may be a difference in the dates of manufacture of the respective parts?—A. Yes.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator TALIAFERRO:

Q. Did you put the date of manufacture on any of these cartridges except those sold to the United States Government?—A. I do not think we dated any except those.

Senator TALIAFERRO. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no other questions by any other members of the committee, Mr. Orcutt may be excused.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM J. BRUFF.

The witness was sworn by the Chairman.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You are the president of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your full name is William J. Bruff?—A. Yes, sir; William J. Bruff.

Q. You reside in Bridgeport?—A. I reside in New York.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Union Metallic Cartridge Company?—A. About thirty-five years, directly and indirectly, through the M. Hartley Company.

Q. How long have you been president of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company?—A. I have been president for six years, and I was vice-president probably twelve or fifteen years prior to that.

Q. Twelve or fifteen years. You have been connected with the company, then, ever since prior to 1894?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was about that time, was it not, when you commenced using the nickel-jacketed bullet, or was it later?—A. I think prior to that. Not for the United States Government. It was prior to 1894 that they were first made, if I remember.

Q. For what kind of gun did you first make them?—A. When smokeless powder was first used. It must be prior to 1890.

Q. What did you say?—A. It was when smokeless powder was first used, which must be prior to 1890. It was in the eighties.

Q. So that back as far as the eighties you commenced making nickel-jacketed bullets?—A. I think cupro-nickel was used possibly later than that. We first made them of steel, and then of copper. We make them now of copper, and also of cupro-nickel.

Q. We will disregard that, and speak of them as nickel.—A. Jacketed bullets, we call them.

Q. You did, then, make nickel jacketed bullets?—A. Nickel jacketed bullets.

Q. Prior to 1890?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what kind of gun did you make those?—A. They were made for sporting guns at that time, because our Government did not use them.

Q. That is what I thought. You did not make any steel or nickel jacketed bullets for the Government until along after 1890, did you?—A. I think during the Spanish war was the first time, in 1898.

Q. During the Spanish war, in 1898?—A. I think that was the first that we made for the Government; yes sir.

Q. And do you know what the composition of the bullets made by you during the Spanish war was?—A. I could not answer that. Our ballistic engineer could probably tell you.

Q. What?—A. Our ballistic engineer, Mr. Thomas, could remember that, probably.

Q. But you do not remember?—A. No; I do not remember.

Q. Do you know for what kind of an arm those nickel jacketed bullets were made, whether for the Krag or the Springfield, or what?—A. It was the Krag.

Q. The Krag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Army was equipped with the Krag for the Spanish-American war?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Pardon me; that is, they were first made for the Krag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And afterwards for the Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. At that time whatever you were making you were making for the Krag?—A. Making for the Krag, and there were also sporting gun adapted to the same ammunition.

Q. I mean for the Government.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not make any sporting ammunition for the Government?—A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of sporting ammunition did you make at that time?—A. For all kinds of sporting rifles.

Q. Did you make a cartridge of the same caliber as that which you were supplying for the Government, for sporting purposes?—A. The Krag cartridge was originated by the Government, and the gun adapted to it, and immediately there would be sporting guns made adapted to the same ammunition.

Q. To use the same ammunition?—A. Yes sir; to use the same ammunition.

Q. So that you have, all the while that you have been manufacturing cartridges for the Government, at the same time been manufacturing the same kind of a cartridge for sporting purposes?—A. Continuously.

Q. And the only distinguishing mark would be the date on the Government cartridge, which would not be put on the other cartridge?—A. It would not intentionally be put on the other. There might be a surplus of shells left over from a Government contract, and they would not be thrown away. There might be a few go out in that way, but it would not be the intention to do it.

Q. You have known of instances where the case manufactured for the Government, with the date on it, has been used for sporting purposes?—A. I know there has been such an instance.

Senator WARNER. Wait just a moment. I merely want to make the suggestion that you suggested to the witness that there might be instances of that kind.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There might have been instances?—A. Yes sir; I recall instances.

Senator WARNER. Now he says he recalls instances.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You recall cases?—A. Yes sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. To what extent; many of them?—A. I should say, on the last contract my recollection would be, that we had left over about 50,000.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Which were used in that way?—A. That may have gone to some State, or they may have gone for any purpose.

Q. You filled those cases that had the dates stamped on them, and disposed of them commercially?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To individuals?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. What was the date of this contract?—A. The date of the last contract was August, 1907.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How many on the previous contract you had were left over?—A. That I do not recollect.

Q. Were there some left over on that previous contract?—A. Of necessity there would be some.

Q. Of necessity there would be some?—A. Yes, sir; you can not run to an exact quantity in articles of that kind.

Q. Now, on the 18th day of December you wrote me a letter from New York which you will find at page 3337 of our record. I want to call your attention to it. I had not had any communication with you up to that date, had I?—A. No.

Q. All my communications had been with Mr. Orcutt?—A. You had no communication with the company up to that date—your communications had been with Mr. Orcutt, by telephone, I think.

Q. I had written to Mr. Orcutt as general manager, and had spoken to him over the telephone, and he had written me some letters in answer, but down to December 18 you and I had no correspondence of any kind.—A. No, sir.

Q. And the first of our correspondence was this letter from you, and this was the last of it, too, was it not?—A. This was the one and only letter, yes sir.

Q. I was afraid somebody might infer from that that I answered. I did not make any answer. In this letter you said:

We beg to refer to letter of December 10 addressed to you by our superintendent, and to your subsequent communications on the subject of composition of .30 caliber, model 1903, bullets manufactured by us for the United States Government.

Our letter of the 10th instant had reference to the last contract taken by us from the Government, same being dated August 20, 1906, and calling for 3,000,000 rounds of ball cartridges caliber 0.30, model of 1903.

I will stop there for a moment. Do you recall that that is a correct copy of what you said?—A. I do, sir.

Q. It is correct?—A. It is correct.

Q. And the letter of the 10th instant that you refer to is the one immediately preceding this in this record, signed "The Union Metallic Cartridge Company, by J. Orcutt, manager and superintendent?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the reference in that letter was to the contract of August 20, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there is a mistake in that letter, is there not?—A. I think not.

Q. I call your attention to what is immediately at the top of page 3337, in the letter of December 10, 1907, from Orcutt:

We refer to blueprint B-582, last date of revision being March 27, 1905, describing "ball cartridges, United States magazine rifle, model 1903."

Do you see that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is not the contract that you say you refer to, is it?—A. That is the same blueprint; it applies to both contracts.

Q. The same blueprint does apply to both?—A. As far as I know, without examining them now. My understanding is it is the same blueprint; it applies to both contracts.

Q. The blueprint in front of you is B-582, is it not?—A. B-582; yes sir.

Q. And that is the same blueprint that Mr. Orcutt refers to?—A. It is B-582.

Q. That is the blueprint referred to as B-582?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the date of that?—A. The last date of revision is March 27, 1905.

Q. 1905. Now, that is what Mr. Orcutt referred to, is it not?—A. He referred to that, undoubtedly.

Q. Then did he refer to the last contract, made in 1906, or did he refer to that contract?—A. The same blueprint applies to both contracts.

Q. You say you think so?—A. Yes sir; we have the other contract here, and I will verify it.

Q. I wish you would produce the blueprint for the other contract. Is this it [handing blueprint to witness]?

Senator WARNER. That is the one for the contract of August 29, 1906?

Senator FORAKER. Yes.

The WITNESS. Yes.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. What is the date of the blueprint?—A. It is the same, B-582.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That has the same number?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that an exact copy of the other?—A. It must be an exact copy.

Q. What is the last date on this?—A. The last date of revision is November 23, 1905, apparently.

Q. November 23, 1905. What is this figure on here [indicating]?—A. What that is I could not tell you. I could not tell you what that change is. March 27; that is the same as this, down to this point [indicating], and then there are three other changes or revisions here.

Q. Is it not true that the distinguishing differences between those two blueprints, both of which are marked "B-582" are the dates?—A. It would appear to be the distinction; yes sir.

Q. On the first blueprint, B-582, the date is given that Mr. Orcutt gives here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on this last one it is not?—A. It is given there, and also the later revision.

Q. And also the later date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now which one, in view of his letter, did he have before him, do you think, when he wrote this letter?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Are you not satisfied that he had the one now before you, on which appears the date he gave?—A. It would appear so by his giving the date.

Q. If he did have that before him, and did give that date, he was not referring to the last contract?—A. Unless he skipped the fact that on the second column this other revision appears.

Q. He skipped that?—A. The first column is the date that he gave.

Q. At any rate, the date that he gave me in his letter of December 10 is found on the first blueprint, of March 27, 1905?—A. March 27, 1905.

Q. And no other date is on that blueprint?—A. There are other dates, but that is the last date of revision.

Q. There is no other date on the front of the blueprint?—A. There are several prior dates.

Q. That is the latest date?—A. That is the latest date appearing on the front.

Q. What are the prior dates?—A. April 2, 1903; November 10, 1903; January 8, 1904, and so on.

Q. Give all of them. I want them all in the record.—A. October 24, 1904; January 25, 1904; March 18, 1905, and March 27, 1905.

Q. Yes; so that he gave the last date that appears on that blueprint?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now we will turn to the next blueprint and see what dates are given on that.—A. The same dates up to and including March 27, 1905; and in addition to that there appear September 18, 1905, October 16, 1905, and November 23, 1905.

Q. He would give, would he not, in trying to identify the blueprint according to which he was working, the date of the last revision?—A. He would if he saw those figures on the second column, I think. I may have been mistaken as to whether he had this blueprint before him, or the other.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Would it make any difference?—A. It would make a difference in his statement.

Q. Except as to the dates, would it make any difference in any other respect?—A. It would make a difference in his statement, and that the cartridges were made according to the Government specifications called for by the blueprint of this number, according to the last revision.

Q. But I understand you to testify that the only difference between those blueprints is as to the dates.

Senator FORAKER. No; I only asked him what distinguishing points there were by which he could differentiate the one from the other, except the dates.

Senator WARNER. Would not the difference in the specifications be a differentiation?

Senator FORAKER. It might be.

Senator WARNER. I want to know, without looking into this last matter more closely, what these last three revisions refer to.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any papers here by which you could determine that?

The WITNESS. The blueprints are here, or perhaps General Crozier could give us that.

Senator FORAKER. I am going to ask him some more questions along this line. I have not finished.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Your only reason for thinking that he may have had that later blueprint instead of the earlier one is that he may have overlooked those latest dates?—A. He may, and then I concluded that he had referred to blueprints that he mentioned, from the fact that the 1905 contract provided as to the composition of the core, and I assumed, naturally, that he referred to the last blueprint of August, 1906.

Q. Did you confer with him before you wrote this letter?—A. No.

Q. You were in Washington before you wrote this letter?—A. I was in Washington the day before I wrote that letter.

Q. You had been to the War Department and consulted the records of the Ordnance Department, had you not?—A. Yes; I received a letter asking for all the information that referred to this contract, and a great deal more, and not knowing just what was required, I thought it best to come here and find out, and then I immediately went home and wrote you and wrote the Chief of Ordnance.

Q. When did you first discover, and where were you when you discovered, that that contract in 1905 had been in part filled with bullets having antimony in them?—A. I think we discovered it here in Washington; not from the records here, at all.

Q. You say you think you did. Is there any doubt about that?—A. Mr. Thomas was here with me at the time, and the memorandum we had of these cores, and the composition of the bullets, we discovered was incorrect.

Q. The memorandum that you had at your Bridgeport factory?—A. The memorandum we had made, which was a similar memorandum to the one Mr. Orcutt must have taken his memorandum from.

Q. You did not know that until you came to Washington?—A. It did not occur to us until we came here.

Q. No; you had examined your records, had you not?—A. Yes; but you know we have a great many records, and it is pretty hard to get at these fine points dating back one, two and three years.

Q. You knew before you came to Washington of the letter Mr. Orcutt had written me on December 10?—A. Yes, sir; I supposed then it referred to both contracts.

Q. Yes; you say both contracts. How many times did you have the manufacture of bullets for the Government?—A. We had two contracts for 1903 ammunition.

Q. When was the first one entered into?—A. The first one was in June, 1905, and the second was in August, 1906.

Q. The first was for how many cartridges?—A. 3,216,000.

Q. And the second was for how many?—A. For 3,000,000.

Q. 3,000,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of that was Springfield ammunition?—A. That was all model of 1903, Springfield ammunition.

Q. For the Springfield gun, I mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any contract with the Government to manufacture any other kind of ammunition at that same period?—A. We did at a later period, but not in June, 1905.

Q. What kind of ammunition did you manufacture for the Government during that period?—A. The contract I refer to for 3,000,000 rounds of the 1903 ammunition, and 2,000,000 rounds of the 1898, or Krag ammunition.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Was that the contract of August 29?—A. August 29, 1906.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, that Krag ammunition was made with the Krag cases, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; with the Krag cases.

Q. Without any cannellure?—A. Without the cannellure, as you call it.

Q. And the Springfield ammunition was made with the cannellure, of course?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you manufacture during this period from 1905, when you took the first contract, down to 1906, any sporting ammunition of that same character?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What ammunition did you manufacture; for what kind of guns, I mean?—A. For Remington guns or Winchester guns, or possibly some other guns.

Q. Did you make any for Krag guns, of that sporting ammunition?—A. It might be used in Krags.

Q. Used in the Krag rifles or in the Krag carbines?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. At the very same time you were manufacturing———A. It has been a regularly listed cartridge with us, and we have sold it ever since the Government adopted it.

Q. A Krag bullet and a Springfield bullet were always the same, were they not, in size and in weight and in composition?—A. Yes, the same.

Q. And in composition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were making Krag bullets for sporting purposes during all of this period?—A. But the sporting bullet was of a slightly different composition from the composition of the bullet we made for the Government.

Q. What was the difference in composition?—A. The sporting bullet is 20 parts lead and 1 part antimony.

Q. Antimony. Was that the same as the Krag bullet?—A. Krag or Springfield.

Q. And the same as the Springfield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same as to the Mauser bullet?—A. Yes; the same as to the Mauser 7.65; that is the same composition.

Q. The Mauser 7.65 is the same bullet?—A. The same composition; not the same bullet. The same composition bullet as our sporting commercial cartridges for the Krag or the Springfield.

Q. What is the difference in weight and size of the Mauser 7.65?—A. The 7.65 millimeter is close to .30 caliber.

Q. It is practically the same?—A. Very near, not quite.

Q. You could not distinguish the bullets apart by the naked eye?—A. Yes; they are a different weight bullet.

Q. What was your answer?—A. They are of a different weight. (After examining table) They are very nearly the same. The Government bullet is 220 grains and the other is 219 grains. The difference would not be appreciable.

Q. What I said was that with the naked eye you would not distinguish the difference readily, would you?—A. The difference would not be appreciable in the weight.

Q. No; it would not be appreciable to the eye, either, would it, in appearance?—A. I think it is a little different shaped bullet, Senator. I do not say that positively, but I think it is a different shape.

Q. Are they not practically made in the same mold, Mr. Bruff?—A. Now, if you will put that question to our Mr. Thomas he can answer accurately, and I do not like to.

Q. I have had a little experience in looking at the noses of these bullets, and there is little if any difference.—A. It is my impression they are of a little different shape.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Before you leave that; you said that the sporting ammunition was 20 parts lead and 1 part antimony. You did not mention the tin.—A. No tin.

Q. No tin in the composition of the sporting ammunition?—A. Not of those three bullets.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Do you put tin in any of your bullets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what bullets do you use tin?—A. I have a memorandum of that. We have used tin in the 0.303 Savage.

Q. That means what?—A. That is made of 6 parts lead and one part tin. It is a very hard bullet. Also the 0.30-30 Marlin.

Q. What is this above here [indicating]?—A. That is the Government mid range.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no antimony in that Marlin bullet?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Senator FORAKER. The witness has a list of bullets here which we will look at.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. At the top of page 2 of the memorandum the first is "30-40 cal. Government mid range, cupro nickel jacket, 180 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony."—A. That we call mid range.

Q. That has 20 parts of lead and 1 part of antimony?—A. That is our regular Government mixture.

Q. And the Marlin has 6 parts of lead and 1 part of tin?—A. I was speaking of the 0.303 Savage.

Q. You gave us another Marlin, 20 parts lead, 1 part tin. Then you have here the Mauser, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony, the British, 40 parts lead, 1 part tin, and the Savage, 8 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Senator WARNER. No antimony?

Senator FORAKER. No antimony. Then here is a Marlin, 165 grains pure lead. The Remington has 165 grains pure lead, and the Winchester 250 grains of pure lead.

The WITNESS. I just selected those that are nearest to the .30 caliber.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You can give us that memorandum, so that we may have it put in the record entire?—A. This was my answer to General Crozier.

Q. I call your attention to the .32-caliber Remington, 30 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Senator WARNER. No antimony?

The WITNESS. No antimony.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Is that a steel-jacketed bullet?—A. That is probably copper.

Q. But it has a jacket?—Yes; It has a jacket.

Q. Then here is the Marlin, 20 parts lead and 1 part tin.—A. That has a copper jacket.

Q. The Savage for target has 20 parts lead and 1 part tin, and the Savage short range has 16 parts lead and 1 part tin. Then we have United States Government guard ammunition, 9 parts lead and 1 part tin.—A. If you will permit me, these are not jacketed bullets. These are under the head of nonjacketed bullets.

Q. Yes; that is so. The .32-caliber Remington, 30 parts lead and 1 part tin, is nonjacketed?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. You use tin in Government bullets, do you not?—A. We do. The specifications call for 1 part tin.

Q. I thought you said at first you had some bullets in which you used tin, but you did not mention the Government.—A. In our commercial bullets of that kind we do not use tin.

Q. Not in your commercial bullets?—A. Not in our commercial bullets. The Government specifications call for 1 part tin to 36 parts of lead, but we do not use any tin in our commercial bullets which we put out for sporting purposes.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, recurring, you discovered that you had been making some bullets with antimony under one of these Government contracts, notwithstanding the specifications, while you were here in Washington?—A. It was first discussed, it was first spoken of, by Mr. Thomas and myself.

Q. Where?—A. The day we were here.

Q. The day you were here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you never think of it until you arrived here?—A. No.

Q. You had talked about it repeatedly, had you not?—A. No; I do not think we had. It was not a matter to make any particular impression on us.

Q. You knew that we were interrogating on that particular point?—A. We did not know. Mr. Orcutt knew. Your communication was with him, not with the officers of the company.

Q. Very well. What does that specification call for as to the core of the bullet—the Government specification that you have before you?

Senator WARNER. Of what date?

Q. (Continuing.) I will say the first specification of March 27, 1905.—A. Thirty-six parts lead and 1 part tin.

Q. "About?" Is that word "about" there in brackets?—A. (After examination.) This is the contract of August, 1906.

Q. What does that say?—A. That calls for bullets of 36 parts lead and 1 part tin, about.

Q. Now look at the other.—A. That calls for the same.

Q. That reads "weight, 220 grains, core," and then in brackets, "36 parts lead, 1 part tin, about."—A. The word "about" is outside of the brackets.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. While we are on that, what is the significance of these terms here? You say these are revised specifications. Does that mean that these quantities have been changed at this date [indicating]?—A. Not necessarily that, but there has been some change here.

Q. You can not tell what it is?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does that affect the composition of the bullets or the form of them, or what?—A. In these two blueprints bullets of the same composition are called for. There was no change in that. If the composition had been changed to some other, it would have been noted in that.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I will call attention to the composition of the bullets to show that there is no change in them, because we are not concerned about anything else.—A. There is some other change here. I think it is in the clip, appearing on the same blueprint.

Q. There were changes from the first?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But I will not ask you about that. We have had no analysis made of them.—A. There were changes.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. The specifications of these bullets are the same in all these contracts?—A. Those two contracts.

Q. I want to know what is the significance of the word "about" there.—A. It means this. You can mix lead and tin together in certain proportions, and take a piece of the mixture and analyze it, and you will not get exactly those proportions. There will be a fractional variation; a little particle of the mixture does not analyze exactly according to the whole.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. But no substantial variation is permitted under the contract?—A. Should not be. There is no occasion for it.

Q. That would be only intended to include such variation as must necessarily arise from the mixture?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there anything on either of those blueprints to indicate that you were authorized to make these bullets, the lead part of them, with any other kind of composition than 36 parts of lead and 1 of tin?—A. There is nothing on the blueprints.

Q. Nothing there at all?—A. Nothing on the blueprints.

Q. Where is there anything of record to indicate that?—A. The inspecting officer has a certain latitude.

Q. He has a certain latitude?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has he got any record?—A. We have a record of his instructions to his subinspectors.

Q. Where is that record?—A. Mr. Thomas, have you that record of the instructions of the inspector? You must know, Senator, that cartridges finished, put into a gun and fired, must meet certain results. Those results are the highest attainable.

Q. Yes.—A. Now, if you have got to make a slight change to do that, it is the result that you want.

Q. Yes.—A. And inspectors have latitude to get results. That is what they want.

Q. Well, I assumed so. That would sound like common sense, at any rate; but what I want to know is whether there is any record, so that I may see it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you will excuse me, Senator Foraker, I would like to ask this question. As I understand your testimony, Mr. Bruff, and see if I am correct, the specifications that are given to you by the Army are supposed to be such as will produce the best results. That is, the composition is given as what probably will bring out a first class bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your trials, and under your inspectors, they are submitted to certain tests?—A. Submitted in lots of 48,000.

Q. If they fail to meet those tests, what happens then?—A. They are rejected, or they are retested. There is a provision for a retest of a larger number, and if they fail again, they are rejected.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Has the inspector authority to change the composition so as to reach the results you are seeking?—A. Yes sir, I think so.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I show you here what you referred to a moment ago, and what you doubtless refer to now in answering Senator Frazier. What is this paper which I hand you?—A. This is a copy of the instructions to the subinspector or inspectors, issued by the Ordnance Department inspector, who was then Captain Hoffer.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is the date?—A. Under date of September 26, 1905.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. September 26, 1905. Now read what you had in mind when you answered as you did a moment ago.—A. The third clause of his instructions reads:

Nothing in this programme is to be construed to change in any way the provisions of the contract or specifications. This programme is merely explanatory thereto, and it is to be understood that the inspector is at liberty to modify it if, as the work progresses, the results of the inspection appear to demand it.

Q. That is all is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did or did not the inspector modify, under the authority given him by that clause, the specifications for the core of these bullets?—A. Mr. Thomas, the ballistic engineer, was present with the inspector during all that time, and I was not.

Q. You have no personal knowledge?—A. I was in New York during all the time this contract was being filled, and Mr. Thomas and the inspectors there made this ammunition to suit the inspection and to pass the inspection in the highest possible manner.

Q. That is what I understand, and it is doubtless a good bullet and a good cartridge. I am not finding any fault with you, but still I want you to answer me this. Is there anything in writing anywhere to show that the inspector did modify, and if so in what way, the specifications for the core of these bullets?—A. I think not. I think there is nothing in writing. There might be other variations in ammunition. Different lots of powder may vary. You perhaps get no two lots the same. You must do what is necessary, according to the ballistic results obtained from the powder. The Government specifications call for a certain number of feet velocity.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. If it was necessary to get the number of feet velocity to charge the powder, you would do that?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You stated to me in this letter of December 18th:

We have made a long and careful investigation of our records pertaining to other contracts than that referred to in our letter of the 10th instant. We find that the only other contract for ammunition of the model of 1903 was for 3,216,000, dated June 29, 1905. The composition of the bullets of these, as shown by our records, was as follows: 2,000,000 (about), cupro-nickel jackets, core, 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony.

Now, where are the records that show that?—A. Our ballistic engineer has the records that show that. I think it runs a little more than that. Two million two hundred thousand is more accurate than 2,000,000, or approximately 2,000,000.

Q. But the composition is shown?—A. The composition is shown; yes sir.

Q. Now, you have a record showing that you made 2,000,000 with this composition, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony, and 48 parts lead?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you anything from anybody, from the Chief of Ordnance down, directing you to adopt that composition as a substitute?—

A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing at all; nothing of record?—A. Nothing of record.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. You were justified, though, in putting antimony in those bullets, from the inspector's report as read—were you justified in putting in antimony?—A. The inspectors would not accept them according to the specifications, and wanted us to cure this crushing of the nose, and you could only do that by the thickening of the cupro-nickel jacket, or by hardening the core, you must do one or the other. Now, as a matter of fact, we had made something like 2,000,000 or more of these jackets according to the specifications. We could not thicken the points of those jackets, so that the only means to adopt was to harden the core.

Q. In what way?—A. By putting in antimony.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is the expense of antimony as compared with lead? What are their relative prices?—A. Antimony is cheaper than tin, but there is 1 part tin to 48 parts of lead, and 1 part of antimony. The relative cost is practically the same thing for the materials.

Q. I mean separately.—A. Antimony is cheaper than tin, as lead is cheaper than antimony. I was explaining about the cupro-nickel jackets. We had made something over 2,000,000, and we used those by using a little antimony and hardening the core. Then we made new tools to change the specifications on the jacket, to make it thicker at the point, and when we did that, we used the 1 part of tin to the 36 parts of lead, on the 1905 contract.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. That is what you mean by saying that on the remaining 1,216,000 you had the heavier jacket?—A. Yes.

Q. You changed the jacket?—A. It was heavier at the point.

Q. And that enabled you to dispense with the antimony in the core?—A. Then we came back to the strict proportions of 36 parts lead to 1 part of tin.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You first made the jackets in the manufacture of these 2,000,000 that had antimony in them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made the jackets according to the specifications?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you found out when the first ones were tested that the cartridge was unsatisfactory, that the nose bent in when it was fired?—A. When it was fired in a test, not for that purpose, but for the stripping of the jacket.

Q. The stripping of the jacket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The jacket did not strip, but the nose would crush?—A. The inspector was not satisfied with the test. He wanted us to avoid that, if we could.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. What is the test for the stripping of the jacket?—A. Firing into wood and water.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. Whether or not the inspector had authority to change these specifications, and whether or not you received instructions from him; as a matter of fact, these 2,200,000 bullets were made in accordance with the specifications that you have indicated in this letter?—A. Yes, sir; they were made in accordance with the specifications.

Q. They were made with antimony?—A. The 2,000,000 were, yes, sir; and then we strengthened the nose of the jacket, which made the use of antimony unnecessary, and the last contract was filled in the same manner, with the nose of the jacket increased in thickness about eight or nine thousandths.

Q. That is the contract of 1905?—A. The contract of 1905 and that of 1908, both.

Senator WARNER. August 29, 1906.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Now, when you started in to fill this contract, I understand you started to manufacture strictly in accordance with the specifications, both the jacket and the bullet?—A. Yes, sir; I think Mr. Thomas has those bullets here.

Q. Just follow me a minute. You started to make them in accordance with the specifications, but the inspector was not satisfied when the bullets were tested, and to overcome that dissatisfaction he allowed you to put in antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at the time when that occurred you had already made these 2,000,000 shells or cases?—A. We had made 2,000,000 jackets according to the Government specifications.

Q. Which were too thin for the bullet with 36 parts of lead and 1 part of tin?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. They crushed in at the point.

Senator FORAKER. I understand.

By Senator FORAKER.

Q. So that you changed the filling in the way you have described, by putting in antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you report that to the War Department?—A. It is not customary. The custom was to have an inspector to oversee our work.

Q. I understand; but for some reason the War Department directed a change in the bullet?—A. Directed a change?

Q. Yes; directed that a change be made in the jacket?—A. I think not.

Q. I understood you to say that the jacket was changed, and for that reason when it was changed you went back to the 36 parts of lead and 1 of tin?—A. We changed it with the approval of the inspector.

Q. Oh; you changed it with the approval of the inspector?—A. We had no instructions to do it; those matters are not generally done that way.

Q. The inspector instructed you to do that?—A. We showed him how it could be done to obviate the trouble and he was much pleased with it apparently.

Q. Did you have any correspondence with the Ordnance Department in regard to it?—A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. General Crozier wrote me under date of December 6, 1907, as follows, among other things:

The first ammunition with jacketed bullets, issued to the service in 1804, had the core of the bullet composed of 7 parts lead and 1 part tin, and the jacket of German silver. In the same year bullets were also issued with a cupro-nickel steel jacket, and the same core composition as above.

In May, 1898, cupro-nickel jackets were also used.

In the fall of 1900 cupro-nickel steel jackets were abandoned, and cupro-nickel alone has since been used.

On December 16, 1902, the composition of the core of the bullet was changed to 27 parts lead to 1 of tin.

On March 11, 1903, it was changed to 20 parts lead to 1 part tin.

On October 24, 1904, it was changed to 16 parts lead to 1 of tin, and on March 18, 1905, it was changed to 30 parts lead to 1 of tin. The last mentioned has continued to be the composition to the present time.

These changes were made to keep the weight of the bullet constant, and were coincident with changes in the thickness of the jacket. It is, of course, possible that slight variations from prescribed proportions may have been obtained in manufacture.

The cupro-nickel jacket is composed of 85 per cent copper and 15 per cent nickel.

That is the way you are making it now?—A. I could not answer for the composition of them; whatever is called for by the Government specifications.

Q. What is it?—A. Whatever the specifications call for.

Q. By reference to B-582 you can tell what the composition should be, can you not? I want to know whether there has been any change ordered by the War Department, or approved by the War Department, in the composition of this shell.—A. I do not know where to look for that.

Q. If you are not familiar with it, I will pass that, and Mr. Thomas can give me that information?—A. Yes.

Q. I want to go back now and get, if I can, just when it was that you first discovered that you had been using the antimony in these 2,000,000 shells?—A. I think we discovered it, Mr. Thomas and myself, on the day that we were here.

Q. You discovered it talking to each other?—A. Talking to each other; yes, sir.

Q. Then you reported that to Ordnance Department I suppose right away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did the Ordnance Department look the matter up?—A. I am not aware of that.

Q. You do not know whether they found anything of record concerning it or not?—A. No; except that we were told that they had analyzed some bullets and found antimony.

Q. Did the War Department analyze these bullets, or refer to the analyses that had been made here for this committee?—A. I could not say.

Q. You reported to General Crozier that you and Mr. Thomas had recalled the fact, in conversation, that you had used antimony?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the day that you were in Washington?—A. That was the 17th of December. I wrote you on the 18th.

Q. And you went home that same day or the next day?—A. That same day.

Q. The afternoon of the 17th?—A. Yes; and I wrote you the letter the following day.

Q. Did you write me that letter the following day from New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you consulted your records at that time?—A. No.

Q. You had not consulted them?—A. No more than Mr. Thomas had some of his records with him.

Q. He had some with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he have records with him showing the composition of these bullets that had antimony in them?—A. I don't know whether he had it down in black and white. He knew the fact.

Q. He knew the fact?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you summoned him to appear here in Washington with you for conference with you?—A. I asked him to come on here, because he was familiar with this, and I was not. Many of these questions I was asked by the Ordnance Department I did not feel able to answer.

Q. You referred to the letter of General Crozier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is in the record. Mr. Thomas then gave you the composition as you gave it to me in your letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not consult the records yourself, but got it from him?—
A. Yes; he has those records with him now.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You have given a full account of just how you discovered that the antimony had been used in these bullets at the time, have you not?—A. Given a full account? As far as I know, yes, sir.

Q. And you so expressed that briefly in the contents of your letter of December 18 to Senator Foraker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you expressed that as soon as you had discovered that there was a mistake made in the letter of your manager of the 10th?—
A. Yes; I saw that that might be open to the wrong construction.

Q. Yes.—A. That while he thought it was perfectly correct it really did refer to the last contract and to parts of the first contract.

Q. As I understand, this ammunition that you make for sporting guns has no tin in it?—A. No tin.

Q. Is that true of all the ammunition made for sporting guns?—
A. Not of all, no, sir. Some types of bullets have tin. Some are pure lead, some have antimony and no tin, and some have tin and lead and no antimony.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. But none of them have tin, lead, and antimony, as I understand it?—A. I do not recall. It is possible we may make some. Mr. Thomas has our book of record which will show the composition of every bullet.

Senator WARNER. He has that?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Just look at the Remington bullet there, and see if the composition is not given as being of lead, tin, and antimony?—A. The Remington .32 caliber has 80 parts of lead and 1 part of tin. I do not see any here which has lead, tin, and antimony.

Q. The Remington has, has it not?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. But as I understand you, Mr. Thomas has all the records?—A. It is possible that there may be some bullet made with the three metals, but I gave there the sizes that came nearer to the .30 caliber than any others.

Q. You say Mr. Thomas, who is here, has the composition of all of these different classes of bullets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is familiar with them?—A. He is as familiar as any man we have.

Q. He is the operating man?—A. No, sir; he is the ballistic engineer, or our chief inspector. He is supposed to recommend the best composition and the best way of doing things to get the best results.

Q. And he would be familiar with the composition of the bullet and its manufacture all through?—A. He would be very familiar without his records, but with his records he knows it all, absolutely.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I call your attention to this statement in the paper you have put in evidence. After giving the different kinds of ammunition you manufacture, you say:

The above was our standard composition for bullets used in both models of ammunition, 1898 and 1903; during short periods, however, subsequent to the completion of Government contracts, we utilized for commercial purposes such limited quantities of bullets of the following compositions as may have been made in excess of the quantity stipulated for on said contracts as follows: 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony, heavy cupro-nickel jackets, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin.

What does that statement have reference to, what contract?—A. That would have reference to the first contract, of 1905.

Q. Of 1905?—A. That was the one where they used that composition in the core.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Let all that matter which was referred to go into the record. Let the official reporter put in into the record.—A. I did not so submit it. This is my private memorandum.

Q. Have you any objection to it going into the record?—A. None whatever. There are a number of documents here.

Senator FORAKER. I want that part as to the composition of the different bullets which you manufacture. The paper which the witness has been testifying from is a copy of a letter written by him to General Crozier, dated New York, December 18, 1907, the same date on which he wrote me the letter which is already in evidence. I ask that this letter go in evidence. It is a long letter and it need not be read here.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full in the record, as follows):

NEW YORK, December 18, 1907.

CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, U. S. Army,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We duly received your letter dated December 12, No. 30, 803-153, asking certain questions in regard to the composition of our bullets, which we answer in detail as follows:

Question (a): What is the analysis of the nonjacketed bullets used by your company for commercial ammunition?

Answer: This we understand refers to bullets of approximately 0.30 caliber. We therefore give the composition of a number of standard sizes made by us for commercial purposes, viz: 0.30 caliber United States Government short range, 100 grains pure lead. 0.30 caliber United States Government guard, 156 grains, 9 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.30-30 caliber short range, 117 grains pure lead. 0.303 caliber Savage, short range, 103 grains, 16 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.303 caliber Savage, target, 185 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.32-20 caliber 100 grains pure lead. 0.32-in caliber Remington, 150 grains, 30 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.32-40 caliber Marlin, 165 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Question (b): What are the compositions of the core and jacket or jacketed bullets used for your commercial nonmilitary ammunition?

Answer: This, we understand, refers to bullets made by us for commercial purposes, similar in caliber and weight to 0.30 caliber Government, viz: 0.32-40 caliber Government, cupro-nickel jacket, 220 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. 0.30-40 caliber Government, mid range, cupro-nickel jacket, 180 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. 0.30-30 caliber Marlin, copper jacket tinned, 160 grains, 6 parts lead, 1 part tin. 7.65 millimeter caliber Mauser, cupro-nickel jacket, 210 grains, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. 0.303 caliber British, cupro-nickel jacket, 215 grains, 40 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.303 caliber Savage, cupro-nickel jacket, 182 grains, 8 parts lead, 1 part tin. 0.32-40 caliber Marlin, copper jacket tinned, 165 grains pure lead. 0.32 caliber Remington autoloading, copper jacket tinned, 165 grains pure lead. 0.33 caliber Winchester, copper jacket tinned, 200 grains pure lead. 0.35 caliber Winchester, copper jacket tinned, 250 grains pure lead. 0.35 caliber Remington autoloading, copper jacket tinned, 200 grains pure lead.

Question (c): Have the compositions referred to in (a) and (b) been changed since January 1, 1904, and, if so, what were the compositions prior to the adoption of those now used?

Answer: No.

Question (d): What compositions of core and jacket have been used by your company for jacketed bullets manufactured for the Krug-Jürgensen rifles and for the Government rifle, model of 1903, and intended for the trade—what were the dates for the various compositions?

Answer: Composition of 0.30 caliber, Model 1898, cupro-nickel jackets, 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony. The above was our standard composition for bullets used in both models of ammunition, 1898 and 1903. During short periods, however, subsequent to the completion of Government contracts, we utilized for commercial purposes such limited quantities of bullets of the following compositions as may have been made in excess of the quantity stipulated for on said contracts, as follows: 48 parts lead, 1 part tin, 1 part antimony, heavy cupro-nickel jackets, 36 parts lead, 1 part tin.

Question (e): Are the compositions given above taken from the proportions of the ingredients before the casting of bullets, or from the analysis of bullets after casting?

Answer: Before casting the bullets.

Question (f): What were the compositions of bullets used for the ammunition delivered to the Government on your contracts for model of 1898 ammunition, dated June 21, 1899, August 29, 1906, May 23, 1907, and contracts for model of 1903 ammunition dated June 29, 1905, and August 20, 1906?

Answer. We have no reliable data showing composition of the bullets in the ammunition supplied by us on contract for 0.30 caliber model 1898, dated June 21, 1899.

On contract for 0.30 caliber ammunition model 1903, dated June 29, 1905, composition of bullets and reason therefor were as follows: 2,000,000 (about) cupro-nickel jackets, lead 48 parts, tin 1 part, antimony 1 part, 1,216,000 (about) heavy cupro-nickel jackets, lead 36 parts, tin 1 part.

The variation in composition of above bullets, as will be recalled by the Bureau, was to retain their original perfect form, required by the Inspector of Ordnance, when subjected to the tests of firing into wood and into water, the first 2,000,000 having a harder core to attain this result, while the remaining 1,216,000 were made with a heavier jacket than demanded by the original requirements of the Bureau, but for the same object.

The bullets on contract for 0.30 caliber ammunition, models of 1898 and 1903, dated August 29, 1900, were made with the heavier cupro-nickel jackets, composition of core 36 parts lead, 1 part tin. The bullets on contract for 0.30 caliber ammunition model 1898, dated May 23, 1907, for use in practice and competition for the national match, were made with cupro-nickel jackets, composition of core 20 parts lead, 1 part antimony.

If we can be of any further service to the Bureau in the giving of information on these subjects, please command us.

Yours respectfully,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
WM. J. BRUFF, President.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You make a great many bullets of different caliber from these?—A. Yes; a great many.

Q. You make bullets for all kinds of arms?—A. All kinds of arms: yes, sir.

Q. For revolvers, and rifles, and carbines?—A. Yes, sir; we make probably 500 different varieties.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. These are the ones nearest to the caliber 0.30?—A. The nearest to caliber 0.30; yes, sir.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. When you were in Washington on the 17th of December, before you wrote this letter which you have put in evidence, did you see General Crozier and tell him of the fact that Mr. Thomas had notified you that you were putting antimony in these bullets, or did you communicate with him first by means of that letter?—A. No; I think the knowledge came to us here.

Q. And you told him about it?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection.

Q. And then you wrote this letter?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you get that knowledge from the War Department?—A. No, sir.

Q. I mean from the Ordnance Department?—A. No, sir.

Q. You got it from Mr. Thomas, as explained a while ago?—A. From Mr. Thomas; he recalled the fact, and his records show it.

Q. I call your attention to what purports to be a copy of a letter from General Crozier, dated June 7, 1905, in which he speaks about proposals for 15,000,000 cartridges.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got part of that award?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was the contract in pursuance of that proposal that these cartridges were made under?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. I believe that is all.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. At the close of that letter you make this suggestion:

These minor changes of composition and core and strength of jacket were made at increased cost of manufacture to us, but resulted in the ammunition being of the highest quality attainable.

Which one of the two lots was of this highest quality?—A. Both of them, either with the heavier pointed jacket or with the harder core and the light pointed jacket. Either one of them.

Q. You say:

This variation in composition of the core or weight of the jacket, of which the Bureau was aware, was to prevent crushing of the point of the bullet when subjected to the test of firing into wood and into water.

Did either one of those stand the test?—A. They both withstood the test; they were all right, either with the harder core or with the heavier point. All that we delivered stood the test. Part we made one way and part we made the other way.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. But they did not stand the test until you made the change?—

A. There is no provision that they shall stand that test. That test is made to test the bullet for stripping.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. What occasion was there for changing the bullets if they stood the test with the 36 parts of lead and 1 of tin, with the heavy jacket?—

A. I suppose that possibly with some other inspector the question would not have been raised, because it is not in the specifications.

Q. But those stood the test, you say?—A. They stood all the tests that the specifications called for without the change.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. But the point did crush?—A. Yes; but the specifications do not say that it shall not.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Which one withstood the test?—A. Thirty-six parts of lead and 1 part of tin and the lighter jacket.

Q. Was the 36 parts of lead and 1 part of tin and the light jacket according to the specifications?—A. Yes.

Q. The specifications did not call for the heavy jackets?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You do not make the powder for the cartridges?—A. No, sir.

Q. You buy that?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Let me ask you again, so that it may be understood. So as to remedy this defect you placed the antimony in the bullet when it went in the light jacket?—A. We put the antimony in to make the bullet that much better in appearance after being subjected to a test for another purpose.

Q. And after you made a heavier jacket you did not require the antimony in those bullets?—A. No; but it took time to produce the tools to make that heavier jacket.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM M. THOMAS.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How long have you been connected with the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, Mr. Thomas?—A. Thirty-eight years.

Q. What position have you there now?—A. I am called the ballistic engineer.

Q. How long have you held that position?—A. Under that name I have held it about three years.

Q. What position were you in before that?—A. General inspector.

Q. How long had you been the general inspector?—A. Probably thirty.

Q. Thirty years, you mean?—A. About 30; yes, sir.

Q. Your duty as general inspector and your duty as ballistic engineer, require you, I suppose, to know what the composition of cartridges or bullets may be?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the records of your manufacture before you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What periods do they cover?—The records of the bullets and of the shells, the cartridges; yes sir.

Q. What period do those records cover?—A. They go back 30 years, or more, possibly.

Q. They go back to 1894, do they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please tell us first what contracts, if you can without going into any tedious detail about it, your company has had with the Government for the manufacture of cartridges since 1894?—A. There was a contract during the Spanish war; one or more, I could not tell you how many. We made a good many for them, of different calibers, and the next one was this contract of 1905.

Q. Before you come to 1905 let us take the Spanish war. You say you had contracts for making different calibers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of arms did the Army have at that time?—A. We made .45 calibers for the Springfield rifle, we made .30 calibers for the Krag rifle, and .45 calibers for revolvers.

Q. Were the .45-caliber Springfields jacketed cartridges?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were unjacketed cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The .45-caliber revolver cartridges were unjacketed also, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Krag cartridges you manufactured for the Spanish war were jacketed?—A. Were jacketed; yes, sir, and cannellured, what they called at that time a cannellured, jacketed bullet.

Q. That is to say there was a crease around the head of the cartridge for the ejector to catch hold of?—A. No; it was a flange, not a crease.

Q. Is not that a flange [indicating bullet]?—A. That is a crease.

Q. No; but I am speaking of the case.—A. That is what we call a headless cartridge [indicating cartridge].

Q. That is?—A. Headless, or creased.

Q. Is not that the kind of a head the Springfield cartridge now has?—A. That the Springfield has; yes, sir.

Q. And that is called a cannellured case, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; a cannellured case.

Q. And this cartridge here is what you call a headless cartridge [indicating]?—A. No; a headed, what we call a headed or flanged cartridge.

Q. That was the Krag cartridge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Krag cartridge had a flange and the Springfield cartridge has a cannellure?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the same time that you were making the cartridges for the Army you were making cartridges for sporting purposes, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were making the Krag cartridges for sporting purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Springfield cartridges for sporting purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were doing that during the Spanish-American war and you have been doing that ever since?—A. During the Spanish-American war? The Springfield 1903 model was not in existence at that time.

Q. I know it was not, but at the time you were making Springfield cartridges during the Spanish-American war you were making that same cartridge for sporting purposes?—A. That is right; yes, sir.

Q. That was the meaning of my question.—A. Yes.

Q. And when the 1903 model was adopted and you commenced making this cannellured cartridge for the Army you made the same kind of a cartridge for sporting purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went on making the Krag cartridge also for sporting purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made some cartridges after 1903 for the Krag gun under the Government contract, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of a contract you had in 1905. What was the date of that?—A. I do not remember the date. It was during the Spanish war.

Q. No; I am speaking of subsequent to the Spanish-American war. Since the Spanish-American war you have had only two contracts?—A. Since then.

Q. One in 1905 and one in 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the contract of 1905, which was dated June 29, 1905, you made how many cartridges?—A. 3,216,000, I believe it was.

Q. And under the next contract of August, 1906, you made how many?—A. 3,000,000 of the 1903 model and 2,000,000 of the 1898 model.

Q. 5,000,000 cartridges altogether?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The 1898 model were what they called the Krag?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You refer to the Krag cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made under that contract 2,000,000 Krag cartridges and 3,000,000 Springfield cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Krag was with the flange and the Springfield was cannellured?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the time you were making these 5,000,000 cartridges, and prior to that while you were making the 3,000,000 under the contract of 1905, you were also making sporting cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Making them for the Krag gun and making them for the Springfield gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for the Krag carbine?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were making cartridges for revolvers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for all kinds of guns?—A. All kinds of arms; yes, sir.

Q. This Government contract is a mere incident to your general business?—A. That is right; yes, sir.

Q. And in your general business you make cartridges of this same .30 caliber, as well as other calibers, and you make them for all kinds of guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for all kinds of revolvers and carbines?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You tell us that 2,000,000 out of the 3,216,000 made under the contract of 1905 were made with antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have the record before you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would turn to it and show us what it discloses as to these 2,000,000?—A. We made about 2,270,000 with antimony in the bullets and 1,350,000 with no antimony in the bullets.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. That was under the contract of 1905?—A. Under the contract of 1905; yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. When you read from your record what do you read from?—A. This is taken from our record, sir.

Q. What you just read?—A. Yes, sir; it was taken from the record of production.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. What you read was taken from a memorandum made up from the record?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now turn to the record and show us where you got the items.—A. The record is a card system, and I did not bring that with me.

Q. What have you got here?—A. I have a record of the bullets that we make and the record of delivery of the lots of the contract of 1905.

Q. What is the record of the alloy of this lot of bullets?—A. This is all commercial here and we have not got it.

Q. That is all commercial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything private about it?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. If there is we would not put it in the record, anyway.—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUFF. That book contains the record of the composition of all the bullets we make for commercial work, of sporting sizes, and we would hardly care to have that published to the world.

Senator FORAKER. I expect not. I would like to look it over before I examine the witness about it, if I had a chance. I would not put into the record anything that you would object to.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Where is the record from which you made up this memorandum?—A. It is a card system, in our factory.

Q. Then you have nothing here which shows when you commenced putting antimony in these bullets; I mean as to the date?—A. Yes, sir; that is the original sample [indicating]; it is right there.

Q. What is this you show me?—A. This is a sample of the bullets made with the jackets according to the Government specifications and containing 96 parts of lead, 2 parts of tin and 2 parts of antimony. That passed the test.

Q. What are those letters on this little envelope?—A. That means "lead" [indicating].

Q. What are those letters?—A. I am not very well up on that. These are the chemist's marks.

Q. "L" means lead, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. October 6, 1905.

Q. Was that when you commenced making that bullet in that way?—A. It was when we were making our preliminary samples for the contract of 1905.

Q. The date there is October, 1905. As I now understand you, that date indicates that on that date you commenced making bullets with 2 parts of tin and 2 parts of antimony and 96 parts of lead?—A. Yes, sir; that is the day we tested the sample.

Q. You tested the sample?—A. At that date.

Q. And the inspector was not satisfied?—A. With this sample he was.

Q. Oh, yes. When was it you tested the sample with which he was not satisfied?—A. Prior to this.

Q. How long prior?—A. A few days prior.

Q. A few days?—A. We were working at it at the time.

Q. You got your contract in June?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not get a satisfactory bullet that would stand muster with the inspecting officer until October, 1905. June, July, August, September; four months. Had you delivered anything under this contract up to that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had made no deliveries. And how many cartridges had you made under the contract?—A. None, sir.

Q. You did not make any for delivery until you got something that was acceptable?—A. That is right.

Q. That is the idea. And you did not get anything acceptable until that date?—A. That is right.

Q. What is there on there showing that that cartridge is acceptable?—A. This is the analysis of it. That is our chemist's analysis.

Q. Is there anything on that which indicates that that has been accepted for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is there anything to show that that is acceptable?—A. There is nothing, sir.

Q. Nothing at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then that was accepted orally, I suppose, by the inspector?—A. The inspectors understood that we had made a change to make the bullet stand the test they wanted.

Q. I understand, and they told you that was all right?—A. They took it. I can not repeat the words they said, or anything of that kind, only they knew we did it.

Q. Did you inform them of the change you made?—A. I could not say that we told them what exact change we made.

Q. Who was the inspector?—A. Captain Hoffer was the inspecting officer.

Q. Where is he now?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. He is still in the Army, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. He is not still there as inspector with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you commenced delivering bullets of this composition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you begin making deliveries?—A. November 21, the first lot.

Q. How many did you deliver?—A. The lot consisted of 48,000.

Q. Forty-eight thousand. Those were the first delivered, in November?—A. The first delivery.

Q. Did you have any trouble after that with the core of the bullet or with the jacket of the bullet?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went right ahead delivering them according to this?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that that is the first delivery, and they are all of this composition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next delivery was when? Before you turn over, what is that [indicating on book]?—A. This is the record; 48,000 November 21. The next is November 24.

Q. How many?—A. The same number. A lot consisted of 48,000.

Q. The same number?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was the next?—A. November 27.

Q. How many?—A. The same number; that is, unless we delivered two lots a day.

Q. I only wanted to get the record as it runs.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. This was 48,000 also?—A. Yes, sir

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Did you make 48,000 a day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does it run regularly?—A. Each page here represents 48,000.

Q. On December 6 the delivery was 48,000, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is 48?—A. It says "Lot No. 5," and that means 48,000, according to the contract.

Q. What are those figures [indicating]?—A. That is the velocity.

Q. It does not say anything about 48,000; it merely says a lot?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. "Lot" means 48,000?—A. Yes, sir; "lot" means 48,000.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. On December 8 there was another lot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Lot No. 7?—A. December 11.

Q. Lot No. 8 was December 13?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Lot No. 9 was December 16?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there was nothing further delivered until when?—A. Until December 16, and that lot was rejected.

Q. What does it say there?—A. It exceeded the pressure.

Q. It says: "Due to the pressure exceeding 48,000 pounds in lot No. 9, Captain Hoffer instructed his inspectors to retest this lot for pressure, and also hand weighed charges of the same lot."—A. Yes; here is the powder, and so on [indicating].

Q. Lot No. 9 was rejected?—A. Yes, sir; lot No. 10 was next. That was December 21.

Q. That was presented for inspection?—A. That is what we say for all of them.

Q. Presented for inspection, December 21?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they accepted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the next lot was accepted December 26?—A. That is lot 11; yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other lot rejected?—A. I can tell you in a lump, here, how many were rejected. Four lots were rejected for velocity, 1 for misfires.

Q. That is 1 for misfiring?—A. That is 1 lot; and we lost 1 for accuracy, and 2 for the bullets stripping. We lost 8 lots in the contract.

Q. Eight lots altogether?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of those?—A. We pulled them down and saved the shells and the powder.

Q. That is, you pulled the bullets out?—A. We pulled the bullets out and threw them away.

Q. But you saved the shells and the powder?—A. We saved the shells and the powder; yes, sir.

Q. The shell would have the date stamped on it, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, out of this contract what number of shells did you have left over that were used for commercial purposes?—A. I could not tell exactly. I really could not tell. Maybe 25,000, or so.

Q. Mr. Bruff says 50,000.—A. I could not tell exactly.

Senator WARNER. I thought he said that was on the contract of August, 1906, the 50,000.

The WITNESS. There were some of these. There are always some left over.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Your impression was there were 25,000 to 50,000 of this lot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all of those would be left over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you could not take the date off after you put it on?—A. No, sir; but we got permission from time to time to pull those down so as to use the shells over again.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Did you use those over in the 1906 contract? Would you use those again?—A. I think there were a few.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Those shells that would be dated in 1905 would be used some time subsequently?—A. Of course in the 1905 contract running to date of 1906.

Q. It might be a month later, or two, or even three or four months later?—A. Even three or four months later; yes, sir.

Q. In other words, the date on the head of the shell does not necessarily indicate the time when the bullet was made, for instance?—A. No, sir.

Q. The bullet is made separate and apart from the shell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the different parts are assembled when you get ready for it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. If a case was dated in 1905, that would mean that it was made under that contract, would it not?—A. It would be the indication.

Q. Would it not be the purpose?—A. Of course if there were any left over we might have used them. We might have gotten permission to.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You may have used them under a subsequent contract?—A. Under the next contract; yes, sir.

Q. How many cartridges were there in the 8 lots that were rejected? They would be 8 times 48,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. We can figure that up, then.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Would those shells be used in your commercial business at all?—A. Yes, sir; we have used them in commercial business. Of course the shells are good, and we can not throw them away.

Q. You were not particular whether you used them in commercial business or in some future Government contract?—A. We are not particular whether we would use them in commercial business, but we could not use the commercial in Government contracts.

Q. Yes; but I mean that you might use these shells with the date on them in commercial business or in a Government contract?

Mr. BRUFF. They would be used in the same contract; though, because many of those shells are of high velocity.

Senator FORAKER. I will call you again, Mr. Bruff, if I want you to answer anything further.

By Senator FORAKER:

You have called my attention to the fact that this record shows that 8 lots, 384,000 cartridges, were rejected and condemned for various reasons. Now, all those shells, or practically all, I suppose, were used subsequently in commercial business or in the filling of contracts, and necessarily of a later date than the date stamped on them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. I understood you to say that you thought there were about 25,000 or 50,000 shells, roughly speaking, left over. Now, were these 384,000 cartridges used up in this contract? That is much more than 25,000 or 50,000 left over.—A. Yes; but many times we would get permission to pull them down and use the shells over again, provided the rejection did not affect the shell, and in this case it did not.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Have you any record of the permission being given to you to use a second time these cases?—A. Not here; no sir.

Q. Have you any at the factory?—A. We have asked that permission at times and it has been granted.

Q. But whether made in this contract or not, they were used subsequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were used with bullets that were manufactured at a different date from the date stamped on the shells?—A. That is likely; yes sir.

Q. And you do not undertake to say that the whole 384,000 were used in that contract?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is it not true—I got that impression from your statement—that it is your opinion that they were not all used in that contract?—A. I could not say that they were all used in the contract. Some of them may have been left over and some of them may be left over to-day.

Q. It is your opinion that a great many were not used in the contract, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; it is very likely.

Q. Were the 25,000 you spoke of, as probably being left over, in addition to these 384,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were used for commercial purposes?—A. That is if they are used. We may have them in stock to-day.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. I do not understand you to mean that there were 384,000 of these cartridges left over in addition to 25,000 that had not been used?—A. The 384,000 were rejected in the course of the contract.

Q. Yes.—A. And the 25,000, or whatever the number may be, were left over after the contract was completed.

The CHAIRMAN. These that were rejected were used again.

Senator WARNER. Yes; certainly.

Senator FORAKER. I think this is all I care to ask the witness.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If I have understood you correctly, the number of shells that you finally had left that were not turned in to the Government would be 25,000?—A. 25,000, and possibly some of the others; I could not answer that.

Q. If you used those for commercial purposes, for what arm would they be used; with what composition would they be filled?—A. If they were loaded cartridges, the composition would be the same as in those supplied to the Government. You are speaking of the bullets?

Q. No; if you used the shells, I understood you to say that you might have used them for commercial purposes, to make cartridges for commercial arms.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what arm would they be used?—A. There is only one that I know of beside the Government arm, which is made by the Winchester Arms Company. That is the only rifle that I know of that takes the 1903 size cartridge, aside from the Government arm.

Q. What is that?—A. If we had the cartridges left over, we would have sold them just as we sold them to the Government.

By Senator TALIÁFERRO:

Q. I understood that you sometimes made more shells than were worked up for the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understood that these 25,000 were left over in this instance?—A. Cartridges. They would be more likely to be cartridges that would be left, when we get to the end of it.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I understood you to say that you could use these for commercial purposes or in the next contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Either one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in either event they would be used for a cartridge that was assembled, as to its parts, subsequent to the date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It might have been a month or three or four months after?—A. That is right, because the stamp would be on the head.

Senator FORAKER. That is all.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Do I understand that you meant it was the cartridge, the shell, as we call it, that was used in subsequent contracts with the Government, or the bullets that had been rejected that were used in subsequent contracts?—A. No; the bullets would be rejected. The bullets were thrown away. We pulled them down to save the shells and the powder.

Q. The bullets would be thrown away?—A. Provided the rejection was not for defect in the shell.

Q. The bullets would not be used again for a Government contract or for commercial purposes, either?—A. No, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. There were 2 lots, I think, rejected for misfires?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that case the primers would have to be changed?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. When these shells that had been rejected, these cartridges from which you had extracted the bullets and thrown them away, were used again and you put bullets in those shells for commercial purposes, what would be the composition of that bullet?—A. Twenty parts of lead and 1 part of antimony.

Q. That would be the composition?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. No tin?—A. No, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Would there be any tin in them?—A. No, sir.

Q. No tin in there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Twenty parts of lead and 1 part of antimony, and no tin?—A. No tin. That is what we call our own bullet.

Q. That is the bullet which you manufacture for sporting purposes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any bullet which you manufacture for sporting purposes which contains antimony?—A. There are several of them; yes, sir.

Q. Just tell us what they are.—A. Here is the 7.65.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is the 7.65 millimeter?—A. The 7.65 millimeter; yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Is that jacketed?—A. Jacketed; yes, sir.

Q. Can that be used in the Springfield model rifle?—A. I have never known it to be used, but the diameter is pretty nearly the same. I do not know but what it could be used.

Q. You have known it to be used?—A. It was never intended to be used.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. What is the composition of that bullet?—A. Twenty parts of lead and 1 part of antimony.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Is there any tin in it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I said antimony in my former question as to sporting ammunition when I meant tin. Do any of these sporting bullets have tin and antimony in them, or are they all of lead and antimony?—A. You mean the jacketed bullets?

Q. Sporting bullets.—A. With the jacket or without?

Q. With the jacket.—A. With the jacket?

Q. Yes.—A. Here is one we made some years ago—a 0.30 Remington.

Q. When was that?—A. That was 75 parts of lead and 1 part tin.

Q. How many years ago was it you made that?—A. I should say that was fifteen years ago.

Q. Fifteen years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you made any since of that composition?—A. I do not believe we have made any of them in years.

Senator FRAZIER. That did not have any antimony in it?

By Senator WARNER:

Q. That had lead and tin, but no antimony?—A. No antimony. I do not believe there have been any made in the last ten or twelve years.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. As I understand you, none of those bullets made for commercial or sporting purposes have lead, tin, and antimony in them?—A. No, sir.

Q. They have either lead and tin or lead and antimony, but not all 3?—A. No, sir; we would not make a bullet with all three, unless we had to, as in this Government case.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. If I could have your attention for a moment I would like to.—A. I beg your pardon, sir.

Q. Now, I was asking about the sporting guns, the rifles you make ammunition for, and I understand you to say that none of those bullets were made with the composition in them of lead, tin, and antimony, all 3?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct. We have no record where the 3 metals were used together.

Q. Now, what gun is it, excepting the Springfield and the Krag, for which you make bullets that do contain antimony and lead?—

A. The only one that I can recall was made for the model of 1903, under the contract of 1905.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. Are the 7.65 millimeter Mauser bullet and the Springfield bullet run in the same mold?—A. They do not weigh the same. The dimensions are not quite the same.

Q. Are they run in the same mold?—A. Oh, no, no; no sir; a different form.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. I may have misunderstood you when you answered Senator Warner's question, but did I understand you correctly to say that the only bullet you have made for the Government or for sporting purposes which had the 3 metals, lead, tin, and antimony, was made under these contracts of 1905 and 1906?—A. Under the contract of 1905.

Q. Under the contract of 1905?—A. Yes sir.

Q. That is the only bullet that you have made for anybody?—A. For anybody.

Q. That had those three metals in it?—A. That is the only one that I can recall for anybody.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Have you any record here that will show where you delivered these cartridges?—A. I have not; no sir.

Q. Do the records of the company show that?—A. The records of the company show where the shipments were made.

Q. That is, by consulting your records at the factory, at the place of manufacture, you can tell what you did with these when you made delivery?—A. By the records of the company you can tell where all the cartridges were sent to from the factory.

Q. You sent them from the factory to some arsenal?—A. Yes; as a rule they go to some arsenal and we get orders from the inspectors where and how to ship them.

Q. You ship some to the States for use of the National Guard?—A. We only had one contract. No; we have not. That was delivered to the Government, too. The Government has done that, as I understand it.

Q. They were all delivered to the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all at some arsenal?—A. I could not tell you where they went.

Q. What I want to get at is, do you make delivery at your factory or at some arsenal?—A. We deliver them sometimes to one place and sometimes to another.

Q. You deliver them wherever the Ordnance Department directs you?—A. Yes sir; wherever they direct us to.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You deliver them to the railroad, do you not, for whatever point they direct?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. That is, you ship them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your record would show where you shipped these cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If that is not already in the record, I would like them to furnish us that information. You can furnish us that without much trouble can you not?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. Have you the record with you?—A. No; Mr. Bruff can get that easier than anybody else.

Senator FORAKER. I would like to have that supplied.

Mr. BRUFF. You have a part of that already in Mr. Orcutt's testimony.

Senator FORAKER. I would like to have it complete.

(The information referred to is here inserted in the record as follows:)

The following memorandum shows in detail the different lots and dates that they were presented for inspection, together with disposition by The Union Metallic Cartridge Company of the 3,216,000 rounds of ball cartridges, caliber

0.80, model 1903, supplied by them to the United States Government under contract No. 38,905, dated June 29, 1905:

Lot No.—	Date presented for inspection.	Date shipped.	Quantity.	Destination.
3.....	Nov. 27, 1905	Dec. 27, 1905	99,000	Springfield.
4.....	Dec. 4, 1905	Jan. 17, 1906	44,400	San Antonio.
5.....	Dec. 6, 1905
6.....	Dec. 8, 1905

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
By Wm. J. BRUFF, President.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. Will you look at the specifications of June 29, 1905?—A. The blueprint?

Q. Yes; the specifications from which the contract of 1905 was filled.—A. Here is 1905.

Q. Is that June 29?—A. June 29, 1905.

Q. And that is the revision of March 27, 1905, describing the bullet, under which the first contract was filled?—A. This is the first contract we had.

Q. Is the specification there for the jacket of the bullet?—A. It is here; yes, sir.

Q. What is the description there in regard to the jacket?—A. It calls for a bullet which shall weigh 220 grains, the core to be 36 parts lead and 1 part tin, about.

Q. Yes; but does that specification describe the jacket?—A. Yes, sir; it gives the profile.

Q. What is it?—A. It is in figures.

Q. Is that what you call the heavy jacket?—A. No, sir; this is what we call light, compared with what we have testified about as heavy ones. This is the thinnest one.

Q. That is light as compared with what you furnished?—A. Yes, sir; the jacket we put the antimony in was made exactly like this.

Q. But you filled 2,000,000 of those light jackets with a core with the antimony in it; those jackets were like that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the other one?—A. In the other we thickened the jacket at the point to make it heavier and stronger.

Q. Was that under the specifications of the War Department?—A. No, sir.

Q. I notice in the letter of General Crozier that he states that on March 18, 1905, the composition of the bullet was changed to 36 parts lead and one of tin, and he says that the last-mentioned has continued to be the composition to the present time. He says that these changes were made to keep the weight constant and that they were coincident with changes in the thickness of the jacket. That is, the change to 36 parts of lead and 1 part of tin was coincident with the change in the thickness of the jacket; is that correct, under those specifications?—A. That is something we know nothing about. The jacket we made from this blueprint would not stand the test with this bullet of 36 parts lead to 1 of tin.

Q. But those you made with antimony did stand the test?—A. And we used the antimony to make them stand the test.

Q. Yes; and you described one which contained antimony, in this letter of Mr. Bruff, as furnishing the highest quality of ammunition attainable. What I want to know is, if the Government specifications of 36 parts of lead and 1 of tin agree with this, if the changes in thickness were made by the Government at the same time? Was that change ordered by the Government?—A. Not the one we refer to. The one we refer to was where we thickened it still.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. As I understand you, when this contract was made and you started to fill it and the test was made in the presence of the inspector the bullet of the cartridge you made, when fired into water or wood, turned up at the end?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in order to cure that, with the consent and approval of the inspector, you put this antimony in?—A. We put the antimony in there with their knowledge; I will not say approval.

Q. With their knowledge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And thereafter it did stand a test?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was used in 2,270,000 cartridges?—A. 2,270,000, about.

Q. And thereafter, and for the balance of the way under the contract of 1905, instead of putting antimony in you thickened the jacket at the point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that change stood the test?—A. It stood the test with the Government inspector.

Q. And thereafter you ceased to put antimony in?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FRAZIER. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

TESTIMONY OF BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM CROZIER, CHIEF OF ORD-NANCE, U. S. ARMY.

The witness was sworn by the chairman.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. General Crozier, at page 3309 of our record is a letter from you to me. Have you the letter before you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wrote that at my request made by telephone, did you not?—A. In order to answer accurately, I suppose I had better look over it, as a matter of form. (After examination of letter.) I remember writing you such a letter. I recognize it, by hastily glancing at it, as the letter I wrote to you in answer to your telephonic inquiry of the date.

Q. I only asked you if it was in response to a telephone request, to explain why there was no letter from me put into the record. There was no letter from me to put into the record. I called your attention over the telephone to the composition of these bullets, in reference to whether they had antimony in them?—A. I think not, sir. You asked me about the composition of the bullet, but the subject of the antimony was not mentioned, and I did not know what was in your mind when you made the inquiry, except that you wished to know, in general, the composition of the bullet.

Q. Did I not call your attention to the fact that you had testified before the committee before that there was antimony in the bullet, and that when I had asked you to furnish a statement of the composition of the bullet you caused one of the ordnance officers to send me a statement which stated that there was no antimony?—A. Yes, sir; you did that. I misunderstood your question.

Q. Yes; and did I not say that we had an analysis that disclosed that there was antimony, and we wanted to know whether there was or not?—A. No, sir; that last you did not say.

Q. I thought I did. I called your attention to the fact that in your former testimony you had testified that there was none, and I had asked you to send in a statement to be incorporated in your testimony, and that you had stated you had, and I reminded you that that had been sent by some other officer, and that showed there was no antimony in the ball-cartridge bullet?—A. I recall that.

Q. You recall that?—A. Yes, sir; I recall that.

Q. But you do not recall—A. I think it was Colonel Russell who sent that statement, if I remember correctly.

Q. I think probably it was. But you do not recollect that I said that the analysis had been made disclosing antimony?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not remember that?—A. No, sir; my first knowledge of that came to me later.

Q. Well, you may be correct; I am not sure. It was my recollection that I had called your attention to it. But you do remember that I called your attention to this discrepancy in that regard between you and Colonel Russell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that I wanted to know exactly what the composition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told me over the telephone that it had been, at different times, changed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That it had been something one year and something else another?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That there had been changes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I asked you if you could go back over the record and advise me fully about it, so that I might know from the record what was the composition of the lead core—we will call it a lead core—of that bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All that is all right?—A. Yes, sir; and as a result I looked over the prescribed composition, and wrote you this letter, and gave you what purported to be a full history of the composition of the bullet from the date this letter first speaks of.

Q. And your letter is correct, so far as it discloses what the records show in your office?—A. It is correct, as far as it discloses the prescription of the composition, but in so far as it discloses what I subsequently found out the records of the office showed, there is an error in it.

Q. I will come to that in a minute. When you wrote this letter you supposed this was accurate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wrote this after you made an examination of the records?—A. The examination which I made of the records was simply to go over the different specifications of compositions that had been made at various times. I did not make such a search of the records as would show whether those specifications had been at any time departed from, because I did not at that time suspect that they had been departed from. I had no recollection at the time I wrote this letter that they had been departed from.

Q. You told me in that conversation, did you not, that you could tell me with accuracy what the specifications were and had been from time to time?—A. Yes, sir; and I did so.

Q. You spoke in that conversation over the telephone of the ease with which you could do it, because it was all indorsed on the drawings?—A. Yes, sir; I gave you every reason to suppose that this letter which I would send you would be an accurate statement of what the composition had been.

Q. You knew that I intended it to be accurate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that I was inquiring particularly as to the composition of the bullet and whether there was antimony in it?—A. Yes sir; but you did not call my attention to that particular point at that time.

Q. I thought I had done so. But I did call your attention to the particular point of antimony did I not?—A. With reference to my previous statement, in which I stated that it had been put into these bullets. I knew that it had been at some time in the past done, but did not know that it had been put into these particular bullets under specification.

Q. You immediately had these specifications examined, and everything that you supposed was necessary to enable you to inform me accurately on the subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you wrote me that letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the letter as we have it in the record is correct?—A. It is a correct copy.

Q. I mean it is a correct copy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You subsequently learned that antimony had been used in some of these bullets?—A. Yes sir; I might add for your information that I learned it by having my attention called by another officer to it, not here in Washington.

Q. Who was that?—A. It was the commandant of the ammunition factory at Frankford Arsenal.

Q. Who was it?—A. Colonel Heath.

Q. Col. Frank Heath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He told you that antimony had been used?—A. He called my attention to the fact that the record in my office showed that antimony had been used in some of the bullets that had been furnished to us by contractors.

Q. Have you that communication from Colonel Heath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say that the antimony had been used at the Frankford Arsenal?—A. Not in these bullets under discussion. He had used it in experimental bullets, but those had not been issued to the service. I can begin at the beginning of this record and show you how this subject came up.

Q. That is not in our printed record, is it?—A. I think I sent you a copy of it. I do not know whether I sent it to you or to the committee.

Q. If it is in our record you can read it anyway.—A. This letter is dated February 2, 1906, and is from me to the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal. It reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, February 2, 1906.

The Commanding Officer, Frankford Arsenal.

SIR: 1. Referring to the report made by you in paragraph 5 of the first indorsement on O.O 30024-B-488, dated December 7, 1905, that the caliber 0.30 bullet made at the Frankford Arsenal will not uniformly stand the striping test prescribed in paragraph (c) section 18, of instructions to bidders and specifications governing the manufacture and inspection of ball cartridges, models of 1898 and 1903, and to the report of the Inspector of Ordnance, U. S. Army, at the works of the United States Cartridge Company, the Winchester Repeating Arms Company and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, contained in paragraph 4 of the fourth indorsement on the above-mentioned O.O file, that the bullets submitted by all 3 companies had to that date uniformly stood the test in question, you are requested to inform this office of the success so far attained in the efforts made by you to produce bullets that comply with the specifications.

2. This office desires to be informed of the percentage of bullets falling in the stripping test, and whether any lots of ammunition, the bullets of which have failed in the test, have been accepted.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

That came back to me with the following indorsement:

[First indorsement.]

FRANKFORD ARSENAL, PA., February 7, 1906.

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.
2. The percentage of bullets stripping when fired into water from a model of 1903 rifle, under the conditions of paragraph (e), section 18, form 472, is twenty-six seventy-seconds of 1 per cent. Of these, however, but three seventy-seconds of 1 per cent stripped in the rifle, as shown by firing through cardboard into the water tank.
3. The number of cartridges fired into water is about double that required in paragraph (e) above quoted, as all the cartridges fired for test of primers are utilized for this purpose.
4. All these cartridges have been accepted. The defects shown are considered due more to the condition of the rifle than to defects of metal or manufacture that could be discovered.
5. It is understood that the excellent results obtained by the contractors for this ammunition is largely due to the method of test. From an inquiry of the inspector of ordnance at their works it is understood that these companies have arranged their tanks to permit of firing normally into the water. In our tests the bullets enter the water at an angle of about 20° with the surface. This tends to flatten the sides of the bullet, and it is believed results in a much greater strain on the metal than would obtain from normal impact.

The following clause is the important one referring to this subject on which you have interrogated me:

6. Bullets from these companies have recently been cut open and examined at this arsenal.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Bullets from these companies?—A. Yes, sir; referring to the Union Metallic Cartridge Company and the Winchester Repeating Arms Company. The indorsement continues:

Those of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company and the Winchester Repeating Arms Company have a heavier jacket than ours, and have from 1½ to 3 per cent of antimony. This makes the core slightly harder than ours, and possibly supports the jacket better. The advantage, if any, of using an antimony alloy, as a core, will be determined by test at an early date, and if desirable a recommendation to that effect made.

FRANK HEATH,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding.

There are two more indorsements on this paper, one by myself, over my own signature, returning it to the commanding officer at the Frankford Arsenal, and another returning it by him to me, which do not concern this particular subject, but which show that this knowledge was in my office and in my possession at this time, the time of the dates of these indorsements, and which, as it had made no impression on me, and as it was something in regard to which I had no objection to make, I had forgotten was in my records at the time I wrote you my letter.

Q. You did not recall it at the time you wrote me?—A. No, sir.

Q. When was it that Colonel Heath called your attention to that information being in your possession?—A. I think I can tell you that from a record which I have here.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I take it that this search came up as a consequence of further inquiries by this committee on this subject.—A. Yes, sir, if Senator Foraker would like, I think I can trace it through in an orderly manner, beginning with the inquiry from this committee.

Senator FORAKER. All that I want is the main facts.

A. (Continuing.) I can answer your question directly, though, sir. Upon receipt of an inquiry from this committee, I think, I wrote to the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, December 7, 1907.

SIR: 1. Chemical analysis of a portion of the bullets extracted from structures at Brownsville, in connection with the affray at that place, shows them to contain antimony, which is not prescribed as an ingredient of the bullets furnished by this Department. The Department has informed the investigating committee that the bullets extracted as above were of the kind furnished by it for either the Krag-Jørgensen rifle or the model of 1903, and had been fired from one of those rifles. If this information was correct, it should be reconciled with the finding of antimony in the bullets extracted; if it was not correct, it should be withdrawn as soon as possible.

2. You are informed that the cartridge cases picked up in the streets of Brownsville were marked "U. M. C., December 1905," and "F. A., January 1906." Samples of Frankford Arsenal manufacture marked "March 1906," have been received. It is now desired, if an ammunition of Union Metallic Cartridge Company's manufacture is on hand, that the bullets of date of manufacture nearest to December, 1905, be analyzed and a report of the result forwarded to this Office at the earliest practicable date. In case a quantitative analysis will require considerable time, and a qualitative analysis can be submitted more promptly, report of the latter should be forwarded as soon as it can be obtained, and the report of the former should follow.

3. It is desired that report be made as to whether antimony entered into the composition of the bullets, even though it is not prescribed on the drawings, either intentionally or otherwise, of Frankford Arsenal manufacture.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CAGZIEB,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The COMMANDING OFFICER, Frankford Arsenal.

That was received back from the Frankford Arsenal with an indorsement, dated December 10, 1907, which reads as follows:

[First indorsement.]

FRANKFORD ARSENAL, PA., December 10, 1907.

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.
2. There are no Union Metallic Cartridge Company bullets on hand which can be identified as belonging to any cartridges furnished by that company. The Union Metallic Cartridge Company did, however, use antimony in some of the bullets assembled in their model of 1903 cartridges, furnished on their contract of 1905. This fact was reported in first indorsement, O. O. 30024 B-505, February 7, 1906, and the chemist's analysis which formed the basis of this statement is inclosed herewith. It will be noted that the date of this test is January 20, 1906. It is understood that this matter was called to the attention of the Inspector (probably Major Hoffer), and the composition was made thereafter in accordance with the specifications. Major Hoffer and the correspondence files of the Ordnance Office can probably verify this.

FRANK HEATH,
Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding.

Now, in consequence of having received that communication from the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal, I looked up the record and found this letter which I have just read and handed you for the record.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. At page 3321 is a certificate of an analysis made by W. J. Williams, F. I. C., chemist, of a bullet submitted by Capt. S. Hof, of the Ordnance Department. That seems to be a Union Metallic Company cartridge. Do you know anything about how that analysis came to be made?—A. That is apparently the analysis that was referred to in this indorsement of Colonel Heath.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter from Colonel Heath is right above it.

The WITNESS. The letter and the indorsement part of which I have just read are right above that analysis on pages 3320 and 3321.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. This analysis was made January 26, 1906.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that showed 3.29 per cent of antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 1.68 per cent of tin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is widely different, is it not, from 2 per cent of antimony and 2 per cent of tin to 96 parts of lead?—A. I should not say it was very widely different, although it does not bear out the statement in the indorsement, which is to the effect that they contained from 2 to 3 per cent of antimony.

Q. Now look on the next page, 3322, at another analysis set forth by Colonel Heath in his letter to you of December 9, 1907. That was also of a bullet of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, was it not?—A. You will notice that that analysis refers to bullets that were sent to the arsenal in May, 1907.

Q. Yes.—A. A date long after the one we have been speaking of up to the present time.

Q. I understand, but there is nothing in this to show the date of manufacture of that cartridge?—A. No, sir; except this fact, which I do not think has appeared in evidence before, that about this time we made another contract with this company, and with the other two, to furnish special lots of ammunition that were used in the national match which was held last summer at Camp Perry, in Ohio, and in which the manufacturers were allowed all the latitude that they wished, consistent with making the ammunition what we would call a service ammunition, in producing such ammunition as they would consider the best possible to be produced. Therefore we did not restrict them in that contract in any way as to the composition of the bullet.

Q. Will you furnish the date when that contract was entered into?—A. I have not the record here to do it, unless possibly Captain Hawkins has it.

Q. I would like to have the exact date when that contract was entered into.—A. All that I can say about it is that it was in the spring of 1907.

Q. Was it prior to May or subsequent to May, 1907?—A. It would appear from this that it was prior to May, 1907.

Q. There is nothing in here to show that this was target ammunition?—A. Nothing in this communication. That is my memory.

Q. All that this says is that it was a Union Metallic cartridge, and that it was made some time before May, 1907?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody knows how long before. It was sent for analysis in the month of May.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter says it was "made last May."

Senator FORAKER. I thought it said "sent last May." It had antimony to the extent of 8.3 per cent.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I notice in the same letter he states: "Commerical lead as well as tin, however, always contains a trace of antimony." What can you say as to that, as to what quantities may appear in commercial lead and tin?—A. Such traces, I think, would be confined to quantities less than 1 per cent.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. In one of these analyses 10 per cent is shown, and in another 0.26 per cent, and in another 0.28 per cent. Those you would call traces?—A. Yes, sir; a chemist would call that more than a trace. I believe. That is what is found in the lead produced commercially.

Q. So that you would account for that as simply a trace in the commercial lead?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would not think of that having been put in under any specifications?—A. I would not suspect it of being put in intentionally.

Q. At page 3328 is another analysis made by W. J. Williams, F. I. C., chemist, I suppose at the request of Major S. Hof, of the Ordnance Department. That is under date of December 17, 1907. He says:

I have the honor to make the following report on the cores of the two bullets received from the ordnance office, caliber 0.30, model of 1903.

One of these cartridge cases was marked "F. A. I., '06."

A. That should be "F. A., 1, '06."

Q. In other words, one of these cartridges was marked Frankford Arsenal, January, 1906, and the other Union Metallic Cartridge Company, December, 1905. It appears from this analysis that in the bullet made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company there was 1.16 per cent of antimony, and in that made at the Frankford Arsenal there was 0.19 per cent of antimony. That would be the trace of antimony which you would account for as being in the commercial lead?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That bullet contained 96.58 per cent of lead, 3.26 per cent of tin, and 0.19 per cent of antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that is still another proportion from any we have had?—A. Yes, sir. I can say, for your information, unless the record shows it to your satisfaction, that those bullets are two of this date of manufacture that I found at the Rock Island Arsenal. I sent those two to Frankford Arsenal and secured this analysis, and I sent two others to another laboratory at Sandy Hook Proving Ground, which I do not think I have sent to you.

Q. Will you favor us with that?—A. I think I have it here.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it go into the record at this point.
(The analysis referred to is here inserted in the record as follows:)

SANDY HOOK PROVING GROUND,
P. O. Fort Hancock, N. J., December 20, 1907.

REPORT FROM THE CHEMICAL LABORATORY.

(Examination of lead cores of caliber 0.30 ball cartridges, model 1903. Laboratory Nos. 4672 and 4673.)

Two caliber 0.30 ball cartridges, model of 1903, made by Frankford Arsenal and two made by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company were received from the Chief of Ordnance. As directed, quantitative analyses were made to determine the major constituents of the lead cores. These were found to be as follows:

	F. A. cartridge.	U. M. C. cartridge.
Lead.....	Per cent. 96.21	Per cent. 96.60
Antimony.....	None.	1.95
Tin.....	3.10	1.45

The effect of the addition of tin to lead is to increase the toughness of the metal; the effect of the addition of antimony is to make the lead brittle. The differences in the composition of the lead cores of these bullets correspond to what are said to be the differences in the shop practice at Frankford Arsenal and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company's works by casting, for which process the presence of antimony is unobjectionable. The usual traces of copper and bismuth are present in both cases.

OSWIN W. WILLCOX,
Assistant Chemist.

T. C. DICKSON,
Major, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. They were Union Metallic and Frankford Arsenal cartridges, as I understand you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. One of each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the dates?—A. The Frankford Arsenal cartridges were dated January, 1906, and the Union Metallic cartridges were dated December, 1905. These bullets were sent by me on the same date to the Sandy Hook proving ground because I wanted to have two analyses made.

Q. Do you know what kind of ammunition the Twenty-sixth Infantry was furnished with in the spring of 1906?—A. They were furnished with ammunition of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, and I think also of the Frankford Arsenal manufacture, and of the Winchester Repeating Arms manufacture. I am not certain of that, but I think I have that in this group of letters here.

Q. Can you tell the date stamped on the case of that cartridge?—A. No, sir; that I can not tell. I can only tell the date at which the ammunition was shipped to, I think, the San Antonio ordnance depot, from which they were furnished.

Q. The San Antonio ordnance depot?—A. Yes, sir; but that record I would have to get from my office.

Q. They were furnished with the Springfield rifle about the same date that the Twenty-fifth Infantry were furnished with it, were they not?—A. Yes; approximately the same date.

Q. That is, about the last of March or the 1st of April?—A. Yes, sir; along there.

Q. 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at the same time they were furnished with ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same kind of ammunition, Union Metallic ammunition and Frankford Arsenal, and you think, also, Winchester Repeating Arms ammunition?—A. I think the ammunition furnished to those troops included all those manufactures, but I can be more certain of it in a few minutes, after finding the letter which I think I have here. I will add, also, the rifle which you call the Springfield rifle is officially designated as the United States model of 1903; but as you are in the habit of speaking of it as the Springfield, I will refer to it so in my testimony hereafter.

Q. We speak of it in that way to distinguish it from the Krag.—A. Yes, sir.

Senator DU PONT. On page 3332 there is a letter from General Crozier which gives the kind of ammunition furnished to the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Senator FORAKER. I had some correspondence with the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal, Colonel Blunt, and that correspondence is in the record. It was reported by Colonel Blunt to the War Department, and it is embodied in this record at page 3335, where you will find one of my letters and his answer thereto. I think there are other letters, and at page 3332 you will find all the information that is obtainable, I think, as to the ammunition furnished to the Twenty-fifth Infantry. I tried to run it down.

The WITNESS. The letter at page 3332 is probably what I had in mind.

(The correspondence on pages referred to is as follows:)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 7, 1908.

SIR: Referring to your letter of January 6, 1908, O. O. 30803-183, you are informed as follows:

1. The records of this Office show that the only issues of model of 1903 ammunition to Fort Niobrara prior to the departure of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry for Fort Brown were made from Rock Island Arsenal, and were 158,400 rounds, receipted for at Fort Niobrara April 10, 1906, and 15,600 rounds receipted for at Fort Niobrara June 19, 1906.

2. The records of this Office show that the only model of 1903 ammunition on hand at the Rock Island Arsenal from which the above issues could have been made was manufactured by the Frankford Arsenal (dates of manufacture not shown in the records, but shipped to Rock Island Arsenal in March, 1906) and by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company under this contract dated June 29, 1906. In connection with the above copies of the following correspondence are inclosed herewith: O. O. 30024-B-611, dated January 12, 1907, telegram from this Office to Lieut. F. W. Bugbee, Twenty-fifth Infantry; O. O. 30024-B-613, dated January 13, 1907, telegram from Lieut. F. W. Bugbee to the Chief of Ordnance; O. O. 30803-24, dated January 22, 1907, letter from this Office to The Military Secretary, and indorsements thereon; O. O. 30803-58, dated March 1, 1907, letter from the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal inclosing copies of letter from the Hon. Joseph B. Foraker and the answer of the commanding officer of the Rock Island Arsenal thereto.

3. The records of this Office show that Lieutenant Bugbee, then ordnance officer at Fort Niobrara, issued model of 1903 ball cartridges to Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, as follows:

Company.	Number of rounds.	Received for.
B.....	26,400	Apr. 11, 1906
C.....	26,400	Apr. 10, 1906
C.....	2,700	June 23, 1906
D.....	26,400	Apr. 10, 1906

4. The exact dates marked on the cartridge cases of the ammunition issued to Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, at Fort Niobrara can not be given, as no record thereof is kept. It is, however, probable that the ammunition furnished from the Frankford Arsenal was manufactured within a few months of the date of shipment given above. That manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company and sent to the Rock Island Arsenal must have been marked with dates either in the later part of 1905 or the early part of 1906, since the first lot sent to that arsenal was completed December 23, 1905, and the last lot sent was completed February 27, 1906. The dates marked on the cartridge cases would not of necessity correspond exactly with the dates of loading, since the cases are first made up and marked and are then used as needed.

5. The records of this Office show that model of 1903 rifles were received for by the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Fort Niobrara as follows: Company B, March 30, 1906; Company C, March 26, 1906; Company D, March 28, 1906.

6. No service ammunition or guard cartridges were sent to the Twenty-fifth Infantry prior to August 13, 1906, and after it reached Fort Brown.

7. No information is on hand in this Office as to whether the Twenty-fifth Infantry engaged in target practice at Point Isabelle.

8. The records show that the Twenty-sixth Infantry at Fort Brown was supplied with models of 1903 ammunition from the San Antonio Arsenal, where three different makes were on hand, viz, Frankford Arsenal, United States Cartridge Company, and Union Metallic Cartridge Company. The records do not show which one of the manufacturers mentioned above fabricated the ammunition sent to the Twenty-sixth Infantry.

9. In reference to the correspondence with the Union Metallic Cartridge Company concerning antimony found in bullets, your attention is invited to letter from this Office dated December 19, 1907 (O. O. 30803-173), with inclosed copies of letters. No additional information is on hand.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

(Through the Honorable The Secretary of War.)

[Indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 8, 1908.

Respectfully transmitted to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

[War Department telegram.—Official business.]

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1907.

Lieut. F. W. BUDGE,
Twenty-fifth Infantry,
Care Depot Quartermaster, U. S. Army, New York, N. Y.

Of the ammunition issued by you last spring as ordnance officer at Fort Niobrara to companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, can you tell what make of ammunition was issued to each of Companies B, C, and D—whether it was Frankford Arsenal ammunition, some of which of date January, 1906, is supposed to have been sent you—or Union Metallic ammunition of date December, 1905. Give full information as practicable, stating whether you furnished both makes of ammunition to any one company or not.

CROZIER, Chief of Ordnance.

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, January 13, 1907.

CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, Washington, D. C.

Reference your telegram 12th, records do not show kinds of ammunition issued to Companies B, C, D, Twenty-fifth. Remember issuing both Frankford and Union Metallic to some of the 8 companies stationed at Niobrara, but don't know what companies. Majority ammunition issued was Union Metallic. Ordnance-Sergeant Smigosky, who was at Niobrara at that time, may remember. Company commanders probably know.

BUGBEE, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 22, 1907.

SR: 1. I have the honor to inform you that the officer rendering returns which showed issue to Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, at Fort Niobrara of ball cartridges for Springfield magazine rifle, is unable to state what companies of the 8 supplied received both Frankford and Union Metallic ammunition. He states that some received both, but that the majority issued was Union Metallic.

2. He suggests, however, that Ord. Sergt. W. S. Smigosky, now at Fort William Henry Harrison, might remember, as he was then serving at Fort Niobrara; and it is suggested that this sergeant be directed to report what he knows of the distribution of the two kinds of ammunition to the three companies referred to.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY U. S. ARMY:

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 23, 1907.

Respectfully referred, through headquarters, Department of Dakota, to the commanding officer, Fort William Henry Harrison, Mont., for reference to Ord. Sergt. W. S. Smigosky, United States Army, for report as suggested herein.

By order of the Secretary of War:

HENRY P. MCCAIN,
Military Secretary.

[Second indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,
St. Paul, Minn., January 26, 1907.

Respectfully transmitted to the commanding officer, Fort William Henry Harrison, Mont.

By command of Major-General Greely.

ALBERT TODD,
Major and Military Secretary.

[Third indorsement.]

FORT. W. H. HARRISON, MONT.,
January 31, 1907.

Respectfully referred to Ord. Sergt. W. S. Smigosky, Fort Harrison, Mont., for compliance with first indorsement hereon.

By order of Major Steedman.

WM. K. JONES,
Captain and Adjutant Sixth Infantry, Adjutant.

[Fourth indorsement.]

FORT WM. H. HARRISON, MONT.,
January 31, 1907.

Respectfully returned to the adjutant, Fort Wm. H. Harrison, Mont.
Both make of ammunition was on hand at Fort Niobrara, but I am unable to state what make of ammunition was issued to any particular organization.

WILLIAM S. SMIGOSKY,
Ordnance Sergeant, U. S. Army.

[Fifth indorsement.]

FORT W. H. HARRISON, MONT.,

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Ordnance, Washington, D. C., inviting attention to fourth indorsement hereon.

R. R. STEEDMAN,
Major, Sixth Infantry, Commanding.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL,
Rock Island, Ill., March 1, 1907.

SIR: I inclose herewith copy of letter received from United States Senator J. B. Foraker, and copy of my reply thereto.

Respectfully,

S. E. BLUNT,

Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding.

The CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, U. S. ARMY, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
February 25, 1907.

DEAR SIR: The records of the Ordnance Department show that you are credited with 188,400 ball cartridges, 0.30 caliber new Springfield rifle, model 1903, issued to Fort Niobrara, Nebr., March 30, 1906.

I desire to learn for use in the Senate investigation, now in progress, of the Brownsville shooting affray, what manufacture these cartridges were, I mean whether they were U. M. J., Frankford, or United States cartridges, and what lots and cases made up the issue. I understand that the shipments are made from the factories in lots, each lot having a number and consisting of a number of cases, each of which cases bears the number of the lot to which it belongs, and each of which cases contains 1,200 cartridges.

If from your records you can give me the information indicated I will be greatly obliged, and will be therefore saved from the necessity of putting you to the trouble of appearing as a witness.

Regretting that I am compelled to trouble you to this extent, I remain, very truly yours, etc.,

J. B. FORAKER.

Lieut. Col. S. E. BLUNT,
Commandant, etc., Rock Island Arsenal,
Rock Island, Ill.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL, ILL.,
February 28, 1907.

SIR: Referring to your letter of February 25, 1907, regarding the issue of 188,400 ball cartridges to Fort Niobrara, March 30, 1906, I have the honor to inform you that I have had a careful search made of the records here with the following results: March 30, 1906, there were issued to the post ordnance officer, Fort Niobrara, Nebr., 157 boxes rifle-ball cartridges, caliber 0.30, model of 1903, each box containing 1,200 rounds, making a total of 188,400 rounds. We had in store at that time only ammunition manufactured by Frankford Arsenal and by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company. While in invoicing this ammunition no distinction is made between that manufactured by the Government and that by private manufacturers. My orders at that time were to issue half of each, and a memorandum to that effect appears upon the packing lists of this shipment. Undoubtedly therefore about 79 boxes of Frankford Arsenal and 78 boxes of U. M. C. ammunition were sent. Although the regulations of the Ordnance Department require that contract ammunition be marked as to lot, it has not heretofore been so invoiced to this arsenal, nor has any record of lot number been kept. It is therefore impossible to state what lot or lots of U. M. C. ammunition were issued to this command. The ammunition of Government manufacture was not given lot numbers.

Respectfully,

S. E. BLUNT,
Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, Commanding.

Senator J. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood that we did not have a full report as to the Twenty-fifth Infantry; that this was a partial report, and that we expected something further.

Senator FORAKER. If there is anything further I would like to have it.

Senator LODGE. A paragraph in that letter, at the bottom of page 3332, says that the Twenty-sixth Infantry at Fort Brown was supplied with model of 1903 ammunition from the San Antonio Arsenal, where three different makes were on hand, being the Frankford Arsenal, United States Cartridge Company, and the Union Metallic Cartridge Company.

The WITNESS. Yes; that was the United States Cartridge Company instead of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, then.

Senator FORAKER. I think that is all I want to ask the General. If he can give us anything further about the ammunition furnished to the Twenty-fifth Infantry, I would be glad to have it.

The WITNESS. This letter gives all that I have been able to determine.

Senator WARNER. Unless there is something else here, General, I do not care about asking you any questions.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. Where is Captain Hof now?—A. On duty in my office.

Q. And the inspector was Major Hoffer?—A. Our inspector was Major Hoffer, at the Union Metallic Cartridge Company works.

Q. Yes, I so understood you; but where is Major Hof, at the arsenal in Philadelphia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Major Hoffer is in the ordnance department here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then we could get his testimony without trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether he remembers anything about making this change of modification whereby antimony was substituted in the bullets? I mean, have you talked with him on the subject? I do not want you to tell me what his recollection is, but simply whether he has a recollection on the subject.—A. The subject was spoken of when we first got your letter, and I think he knew of my answer to you, and he did not know of this circumstance of the introduction of the antimony. Whether his memory has been refreshed since, so that the matter has come back to him, I can not say.

By Senator McCREARY:

Q. The composition of the core of the bullet used in 1903 ammunition has been changed at various times, so that on December 16, 1903, there were 27 parts of lead to 1 part of tin, and in 1905 it was changed to 36 parts of lead to 1 part of tin. Why was that? What was the necessity for it?—A. I can tell you in general the reason for making these changes, and probably that general reason would cover this particular case. I would have to look into it specifically to be certain of that. It is oftentimes the case that we have changed the thickness of the jacket. Now, you can see that if we make the jacket thicker, the jacket being of cupro nickel, and we keep the outside dimensions of the bullet the same, we necessarily would make the lead core smaller. As the specific gravity of the cupro nickel and of the lead are different and we wish to make our bullet of the uniform weight of 220 grains, we would make a change in the composition of the lead core so as to correspondingly change its specific gravity and keep the total weight of the bullet the same, when we made these changes without changing the outside form.

Q. The changes were made very rapidly from 1903 to 1905; there were about four changes made in that time.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was antimony first used in making bullets?—A. It has been used for years.

Q. For years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have already stated that commercial lead as well as tin contains a trace of antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you able to state what kind of ammunition was issued to the Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. I can only say, sir, that ammunition of the Frankford arsenal manufacture and the Union Metallic Company manufacture was sent to the post from which they were supplied.

Q. And they were supplied with that kind of ammunition in August, 1906?—A. The ammunition they had at that date had been received from this post where they had both of these kinds mentioned on hand.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. The officers of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company have testified that they manufactured a little over 2,000,000 cartridges with antimony in them. Are you able to state to what commands any of this ammunition was issued?

Senator FRAZIER. That was under the contract of June, 1905.

The WITNESS. I can not state that accurately, because under that contract they also furnished ammunition manufactured subsequently to that you speak of in which the bullets did not contain antimony, and we keep no record of the dates of manufacture of the ammunition which we issue to troops, when we issue it.

By Senator FOSTER:

Q. Were any of these cartridges issued to the Twenty-fifth Infantry or the Twenty-sixth Infantry during their stay either at Fort Niobrara or at Fort Brown, or to those posts?—A. There were issued to the post at Fort Niobrara where the Twenty-fifth Infantry was supplied ammunition of both the Frankford arsenal manufacture and the Union Metallic Company manufacture.

By Senator DU PONT:

Q. Under the contract of 1905?—A. Under the contract with the Union Metallic Cartridge Company of June, 1905.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. That is all set out on page 3332.—A. Yes, sir; and there was ammunition issued to the Twenty-sixth Infantry at Brownville, from the San Antonio Arsenal, to which had been sent the three manufactures, the Frankford Arsenal, Union Metallic Company manufacture under this contract of June, 1905, and that of the United States Cartridge Company, under a contract of about the same time.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. The last contract of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company under which in the manufacture of the bullets no antimony was used, is dated August 29, 1906, so that bullets furnished under that contract could not have been in the possession of the Twenty-fifth Infantry on the 13th of August.—A. That would have been impossible, would it not?

Q. Impossible. So that the ammunition from the Union Metallic Cartridge Company which was in the possession of the battalion must have been manufactured under the contract of 1905?—A. There is no doubt of that.

Q. There is no doubt of that proposition?—A. No, sir.

Senator FRAZIER. All right.

By Senator BULKELEY.

Q. Are the specifications of those blueprints of the same character as the ammunition that is now used by the Army, both as to the composition of the bullets and the cartridge?—A. Practically the same; yes, sir. You will notice that this blueprint has a place on it for revisions of these drawings, and any time any change whatever is made in the drawings the date at which that change is made is put down on the drawing itself and also is contained in a communication which is sent to the people who have this drawing, describing the changes.

Q. As I understand it, there is no difference in the two contracts as to the composition of the bullet, 36 parts of lead and 1 of tin?—A. There is none; no, sir. One moment, Senator; let me answer that more accurately. Here is something that has not been given in testimony before. I think it is insignificant, but I must answer your question accurately. You will notice that on this blueprint the composition of the bullet is proscribed as "36 parts lead and 1 part tin, about."

Q. Yes; we have already had our attention called to that.—A. On January 10, 1906, I think, about that date, at the Frankford Arsenal, and without instructions from me, and in order to keep the weight of the bullet just right, they changed the composition to 30 parts of lead and 1 of tin, under the latitude that would be allowed by the word "about."

Q. I am speaking of the two specifications that were furnished by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, which you have before you. Has from your office any actual change been made in the composition of the bullets?—A. Only this one, which I have mentioned, which was not made at my office, but was made at the Frankford Arsenal, under the latitude of the word "about", which was not reported to my office and not recorded on the drawings, so that the specifications in my office have, as the composition of the bullet, 36 parts of lead and 1 part of tin.

Q. And do to-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as your contracts are concerned, that is the composition of the bullet, 36 parts of lead and 1 part of tin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, has the weight of the jacket changed from the contract of 1905. Was it changed in the next contract or has it been up to this time?—A. No, sir; there is no record of a change in the weight of the jacket; no recent record, that is.

Q. So that the contract of 1905 would describe practically a bullet, a cartridge, of the kind now used in the Army, with the same jacket; that is a heavy jacket as I understand it, and the same composition of the bullet?—A. The drawings furnished the company with their contract of 1905, of which the last revision is March 27, 1905, shows, itself, the same jacket that the latest drawing shows.

Q. And that is the heavy jacket, is it?—A. It is the heavy jacket; yes, sir.

Q. So that what is referred to under this contract of 1905 is not any change from your specifications where they talk about the heavy jacket; is it?—A. This drawing which accompanies this contract of 1905 is not different from the latest drawing of the jacket.

Q. So that these million bullets that were furnished with the 36 parts of lead and 1 of tin in the core were in accordance with the specifications?—A. The heavy jacket as shown on this drawing, with the core of 36 parts of lead and 1 part tin, is in accordance with these specifications.

Q. That is what is supposed to be in these as they were manufactured?—A. That is supposed to be the manufacture at the present time. Now, if before using that jacket they had been using a lighter one, that was not in accordance with the specifications upon which they were manufacturing—

By Senator LODGE:

Q. The lighter jacket, where they put the antimony in, was not in accordance with your specifications?—A. It may not have been. There is another point about which you have not asked me. I do not like to volunteer information unless by doing so I can clear matters up. There is a point on which there has been no question asked because, I suppose, none of you gentlemen would have the information that would lead you to ask the question that would help to clear up matters. In the specifications under which this contract was entered into, there is one requirement which was not insisted upon. That requirement is that the manufacture of the articles contracted, and of all material therefor, shall be open to inspection by the officers and employees of the Ordnance Department assigned to duty for that purpose; and further on, in regard to that same point, there is a specification "that the contractor shall furnish this inspecting officer with a copy of the results of all chemical analyses and chemical tests made which are connected in any way with the material to be furnished," and under that same point still there is a further specification that "the officers and employees referred to in article 1 shall have free access at all times to all parts of the contractor's works in which any material furnished under these specifications is being worked upon." As I have said, those requirements were not insisted upon in this contract. One of the companies—the United States Cartridge Company of Lowell,

Mass.—stated that they did not care to expose their methods to that complete inspection. They claimed to have certain processes of manufacture that would produce a better ammunition than even that which the Government made itself. They had no objection to the Government following their methods, but they considered if the Government inspectors were allowed to know everything about their methods that afterwards, when they went to other establishments for the purpose of inspecting ammunition manufactured for the Government, it would be altogether likely that they would, perhaps inadvertently, or not knowing or not appreciating that they ought not to do so, inform rival manufacturers of their methods. Therefore I consented, before entering into the contract, to inspect this ammunition for results only. I prescribed what the ammunition should do, but did not insist upon this minute inspection, and the agreement was embodied in the terms of the contract. I do not know whether I have a copy of it. Yes; here is a copy of it. Here is this proviso in the contract:

Provided, That section 1, part 2, of the above-mentioned specifications, concerning the manufacture and inspection of ball cartridges, models of 1893 and 1903, shall be interpreted that the inspection by the officers and employees of the Ordnance Department assigned to duty for that purpose shall be confined to material as component parts at any and all stages during the progress of the work.

That would mean that my officers could inspect the balls and the cartridges and the primers and any of the component parts after their completion, but we did not inspect the methods of manufacture.

Senator OVERMAN. Did your inspector have authority to allow the Union Metallic Cartridge Company to use antimony under that contract, when they found that the bullets did not give results?—A. He had never been specifically given that authority, but he was an expert in the manufacture of ammunition, having been stationed at the Frankford Arsenal, which is a Government manufactory, and he knew that at this time the use of this ammunition for this model of 1903 rifle was new, and that owing to the greater velocity and heavier pressure used with that rifle, there were difficulties in the manufacture of the ammunition. He knew that the composition prescribed was qualified by the term "about," and he knew that we were calling for results only, and we were all to a greater or a less degree feeling our way to a good result.

The CHAIRMAN. That word "about" is in the contract?—A. It is on the drawing that forms a part of the specifications. It is in the contract; yes sir. Therefore, in allowing them to use this antimony in this way, he followed the discretion I was willing for him to exercise, as is evidenced by the fact that when the knowledge came to me in the communication I have read from the commanding officer of the Frankford Arsenal, I made no objection to the use of that metal.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. What I wanted to get at was this. The words "cupro nickel" and "heavy cupro-nickel jacket" are used. Which do you use in the Army to-day?—A. We use the heavy one; that is, its thickness has been increased since first adopted.

Q. That is the one described here?—A. Yes; that is shown on these drawings.

Q. Then Mr. Thomas was wrong when he said that these specifications specified the thin jacket?—A. They do not specify any thinner jacket than the one we have been using ever since.

Senator FRAZIER. It was thickened at the point.

By Senator BULKELEY:

Q. As I understand, there were 2,000,000 of these bullets made with antimony in them. Did those bullets crush at the point?—A. They did not; no sir.

Q. Then they changed practically the specifications, as furnished them, with the heavy nickel jacket and the core made with 36 parts of lead and 1 part tin?—A. Yes, sir; evidently at that time thickening up the jacket.

Q. Then the first ones did not comply with the specifications?—A. Apparently not, as I find them here.

Q. That is it. They furnished 2,000,000 cartridges with bullets in which the character of the jacket and the character of the core were entirely different from the specifications, did they not?—A. Apparently somewhat different, yes sir; although the record of the thickness of the jacket they used is not here.

Q. Do you know whether or not the change was ordered after they had made the 2,000,000, by your inspector there, to conform to the specifications?—A. That I do not know; no sir.

Q. Your inspector was this officer, Major Hoffer, who is now in your Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he could tell us whether he ordered that change made to conform to the specifications?—A. Yes sir; unless his memory is at fault.

Q. I say he might possibly recall why the change was made from something that was absolutely different both in the thickness of the jacket and in the composition of the bullet, to what the specifications called for, and which is described in the letter of Mr. Bruff as resulting in the ammunition being of the highest quality obtainable?—A. Yes sir; since you ask me to confirm your question, I should not, perhaps, have used the words "absolutely different." It was different in a very small matter, which we were perfectly willing to allow as we were all striving to get the best ammunition obtainable.

Q. Yes, but in your letter you say that "on March 18, 1905, the composition of the bullet was changed to 36 parts of lead and 1 part tin, and the last mentioned has continued to be the composition to the present time. These changes were made to keep the weight of the bullet constant and were coincident with changes in the thickness of the jacket."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the fact that you specified 36 parts of lead and 1 part of tin with a thick jacket, in 1905, as confirmed by what the manufacturers say, that it makes the highest quality of ammunition obtainable, would rather confirm you, would it not, in your impression of what was a good ammunition—the best ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And something with a thinner jacket and a different composition of the bullet would not be of as good quality, would it?—A. No, sir; you understand that the use of antimony was something that we had not specifically objected to, although that was not our way of obtaining a sufficiently resisting bullet.

Q. You say in your letter of December 6, 1907:

You are informed that the history of jacketed bullets for 0.30 caliber small arms manufactured by this Department, is as follows:

Various experimental compositions were tried, including some in which the core was composed of 97 parts lead and 3 parts antimony, but these were never issued to the service.

And then you appear, according to this letter, to have abandoned absolutely the use of antimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was away back in 1894?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the use of antimony, after thirteen years of disuse, was rather out of line with the experiments of the Department, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; but not violently so. Both lead and tin have the effect of hardening the bullet. Now, the tin will make the lead a little tougher as well as harder. The antimony makes it harder and in some respects has advantages. It makes the bullet cast more easily, and gives a more accurately-shaped casting, but it does not toughen the bullet as the tin does. It is more a matter of taste than anything else, as you can see.

Q. What I was getting at is, did your experiments convince the Department that a bullet of lead and tin with a heavy jacket was better than the other composition with a thin jacket?—A. That is what we were led to prefer.

Q. And that is what those specifications, of 1905 and 1906 both, called for?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator BULKELEY. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF MR. WILLIAM M. THOMAS—Recalled.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. You testified about a record showing different lots that were manufactured and shipped under this contract of 1905. I have the record before me, and it shows, as I understand it, that lots from 1 up to 13 were all shipped prior to January 1, 1906; they were all presented for inspection.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when a lot is presented for inspection is that lot in the bandoliers at that time?—A. In the bandoliers and in the wooden cases.

Q. That is to say, the cartridges have been completed, and they have been put in bandoliers and the bandoliers have been put in cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that this record indicates that everything that was manufactured by you prior to January 1, 1906, was stamped of a date prior to that time, and in bandoliers that were stamped of a date prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Were the bandoliers stamped with the date upon them?—A. Yes, sir; the date of the packing was on the bandolier, the date of the cartridge being packed in the wooden boxes, and almost always that is the same date we present the ammunition.

Q. And those cartridges in the bandoliers are then put in a box and sealed?—A. It is ready to solder up.

Q. And they are soldered up?—A. If they are accepted.

Q. Then they are sent to what place?—A. To a warehouse.

Q. Wherever the Government directs them to be sent to a warehouse and from the warehouse to any point where the Government directs?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator FORAKER. But the point is that any packed under this contract on which would be found the date of December, 1905, were embraced in one of the first 14 lots?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator WARNER. Do you mean the shell—the case?—A. The stamp on the head of the cartridge itself.

Q. If some of these were made up and run over into 1906 what would become of them? Before you made this contract of August, 1906, and while you were still going on under your contract of 1905, all your shipments under that contract were not made in 1905, were they?—A. No, sir.

Q. There were other shipments under that same contract?—A. The contract of 1905 was shipped, most of it, in 1906. I do not know but all of them were shipped in 1906.

Q. Shipped in 1906?—A. Yes; because we only commenced presenting them in November, 1905.

Senator DU PONT. The great bulk of them must have been shipped in 1906.

The CHAIRMAN. And the date, as I understand you, on the cartridge shell was December, 1905, of that lot?—A. Up to that date; yes sir.

Senator FORAKER. A few of them November, 1905?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I say that would cover that contract of 3,000,000 rounds, would it?—A. Not quite, sir; because it is only 12 lots.

Q. What would the next date be, then?—A. Possibly December, 1905, until those were all used up.

Q. Would any of that lot be marked 1906 on the cartridge shell?—A. Not if put up in December, 1905, they would not be.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. I know, but were there any shipped in January?—A. In January, 1906. A good many of the heads were stamped 1905, "12, '05."

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Would any of them be stamped January, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those shipped in February would be stamped 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you speaking now of the cartridge shells?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. If any were shipped in March they would be stamped 1906?—A. I could not tell you about the shipping.

Q. If they were packed, they would be stamped 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so on?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How many did you make a day?—A. I could not answer that question exactly.

Q. You presented a lot about every two days?—A. Yes, sir; when we began.

Q. And did you not pack them up in bandoliers as rapidly as you made them?—A. Yes, sir; and we presented a lot as soon as it was completed.

Q. So that if you turned out 40,000 cartridges to-day, to-day or to-morrow they would be in bandoliers or in cases and presented for acceptance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if accepted, they would be sealed up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the probability would be that at the end of December you would have presented for acceptance all that you had manufactured up to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all you manufactured subsequent to that time would be of a subsequent date?—A. All that we had left; yes, sir.

Q. There would not be very many left?—A. I could not tell about that. The stamping is done in the early processes of manufacture.

Q. In the early processes?—A. Yes sir; and there is some little time between that and the filling or loading.

Q. Yes; but you practically put up and sealed in cases all that you had manufactured during the month of December?—A. All we had loaded up to that time.

Q. Yes; all that you had loaded up to that time, and during the month of January following you might have some left to load that month, which would bear the prior date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But in all probability you would have, early in January, all you had loaded in December packed and put in cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was your practice to keep up?—A. To keep up as close as we could.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. We have talked about the probabilities, and what your intentions were. Were there any of these cartridges presented for inspection in January, 1906?—A. January, 1906?

Q. Yes.—A. Any stamped—

Q. Yes; you had not completed your contract yet?—A. No, sir.

Q. Look in January, 1906.—A. [After examining book] Yes, sir; several lots were presented.

Q. Look and find what they were? Give them to us so as to have this plain.—A. (After further examination.) There were 17 lots presented.

Q. In January?—A. Presented in January.

Q. In February, 1906, how many lots were presented?—A. (After examination.) Twenty.

Q. In March, 1906, how many lots?—A. (After examination.) Twenty-one.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. And each one of those shipments was 48,000?—A. Each lot contained 48,000.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. The cartridges that were presented for inspection in March, 1906, would bear what date?—A. They should bear the date of March, unless there were some shells left over from February.

Q. From February. And those that were presented for inspection in February would have the inspection date of February unless some of the shells were left over from January?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those that were presented for inspection in January, 1906, would bear the date of January, 1906, unless some of the shells were left over from December, 1905?—A. Yes, sir; that is it.

Q. And so it would be with the month of April, or May, or June, if any of those lots were presented for inspection? That is true?—A. The same way.

Q. And it went all through those months?—A. Went all through; yes, sir.

By Senator FORAKER:

Q. How many lots were rejected up to the first of January, 1906?—

A. Rejected up to the first of January?

Q. Up to the first of January, 1906, and what were the numbers of them?—A. Lots 1, 2, and 11.

Q. Lots 1, 2, and 11, I understand you, were rejected?—A. Three lots were rejected up to the first of January, lots Nos. 1, 2, and 11. One was presented for acceptance and rejected November 21, the second one November 24th, and both those lots were rejected.

Q. Then lot 11 was rejected on what date?—A. December 26.

Q. December 26?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was lot 11?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what was the last lot presented for acceptance in December?—A. Lot No. 13.

Q. Lot No. 13?—A. That was on the 29th of December.

Q. So that prior to January 1, only 10 lots had been manufactured and presented for acceptance?—A. Yes, sir; accepted.

Q. Presented for acceptance and accepted, I mean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Three others had been presented for acceptance and rejected?—A. Rejected; yes, sir.

Q. You had a regular force to put the cartridges in the bandoliers and in the cases, did you?—A. That is according to the contract; yes, sir; they must be presented packed.

Q. They had to be, under your contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you kept that up as nearly as you could?—A. We always kept that up; yes, sir.

(The witness was excused, and at 6.10 o'clock p. m., the committee went into executive session.)

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, February 25, 1908.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Present: Senators Warren (chairman), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, du Pont, Taliaferro, Foster, Overman, Frazier, and McCreary.

The chairman presented the following communications, which were ordered printed in the record.

(1) Copy of letter to the Secretary of the Interior:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1908.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am sending with this letter a ball cartridge with imprint W. R. A. Co. 30 U. S. G. thereon, and beg to respectfully request that an analysis be made of the lead core of the bullet—the portion incased by the metal jacket.

This analysis is desired by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and should be made in a manner similar to that in which former analyses have been made by W. F. Hillebrand, a chemist of the Geological Survey.

Thanking you in advance for the attention which will be given this request, I am,

Yours, very respectfully,

F. E. WARREN, Chairman.

(2) Letter and inclosure in reply from the Acting Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 22, 1908.

HON. FRANCIS E. WARREN,

Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, U. S. Senate.

SIR: In reply to your letter of January 18, regarding the composition of a rifle bullet accompanying same:

I have the honor to submit herewith a report by Dr. W. F. Hillebrand of the Geological Survey. Doctor Hillebrand will personally deliver his report, together with the unused portion of the exhibit.

Very respectfully,

FRANK PIERCE,
*Acting Secretary.*DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1908.

HON. GEORGE OTIS SMITH,

Director U. S. Geological Survey.

SIR: In response to a request of the Hon. Francis E. Warren, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, I submit the following analysis of the lead core of a bullet contained in a cartridge bearing imprint W. R. A. Co. 30 U. S. G.

	Per cent.
Lead .....	96.91
Tin .....	2.70
Antimony .....	None.
Total.....	99.61

Bismuth makes up the greater portion of the balance, this element being apparently present in larger amount than in any of the bullets previously analyzed by me.

Very respectfully,

W. F. HILLEBRAND, Chemist.

Approved, January 23, 1908.

GEO. OTIS SMITH, Director.

[NOTE.—Inclosure preserved in the committee files.]

(2) Letter from Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 17, 1908.

HON. F. E. WARREN,

*Chairman Senate Committee on Military Affairs,
Washington, D. C.*

(Through the honorable the Secretary of War.)

SIR: Complying with your verbal request of the 15th instant relative to furnishing the history of the shipments of model of 1903 ball ammunition to the Rock Island Arsenal and to the San Antonio Arsenal prior to August 13, 1906, I have the honor to submit the following extracts from the records of this office:

5. The records of this office further show that the ordnance officer at Fort Brown, Tex., received the following shipments of model of 1903 ball cartridges prior to the departure of the Twenty-sixth Infantry from Fort Brown: 74,400 rounds received at Fort Brown March 27, 1906; 8,400 rounds received at Fort Brown April 30, 1906.

6. The records of this office also show the following issues by the ordnance officer at Fort Brown to Companies K, L, and M of the Twenty-sixth Infantry: Company K received 26,400 rounds May 31, 1906; Company L received 25,200 rounds May 12, 1906; Company L received 1,200 rounds May 20, 1906; Company M received 2,400 rounds April 13, 1906.

7. The records of this office also show the following receipts of model of 1903 ball ammunition at San Antonio Arsenal, Tex.: January 6, 1906, 218,400 rounds of U. S. Cartridge Company's make; February 7, 1906, 218,400 rounds of U. M. C. Company's make; February 26, 1906, 312,000 rounds of Frankford Arsenal make; April 12, 1906, 310,900 rounds of Frankford Arsenal make.

8. The records of this office do not show what makes of ammunition were included in the two shipments mentioned in paragraph 5, and it is doubtful if this information is of record at the San Antonio Arsenal.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

Senator Foraker laid before the committee the following communications, which were ordered printed in the record:

(1) Copy of letter to William J. Bruff, president the Union Metallic Cartridge Company:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1908.

MR. WILLIAM J. BRUFF,

President the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, 315 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your letter of January 20, will you kindly inform me whether the records of your company show the dates stamped on the respective lots of cartridges mentioned in your communication? And if so, please give us the dates stamped on the respective lots.

For convenience, I inclose the list as printed in the committee's record.

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) J. B. FORAKER.

(2) Letter, in reply, from Mr. Bruff:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
New York, February 7, 1908.

HON. J. B. FORAKER,

United States Senate, Washington D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, inquiring whether the records of our company show the dates stamped on the respective lots of cartridges mentioned in my letter to you of January 20. In reply would say that the dates stamped on the heads of these cartridges do not in many instances correspond with the dates on which the respective lots were presented for inspection, and no record was kept by us showing dates stamped on the heads of the respective lots.

We would inform you, however, that the date upon which each lot was presented for inspection, as set forth in my letter to you of January 20, represents the date stamped on the bandoleers of such lot.

Yours, respectfully,

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
W. J. BRUFF, President.

(3) Letter from Jerome Orcutt, manager and superintendent the Union Metallic Cartridge Company:

THE UNION METALLIC CARTRIDGE CO.,
Bridgeport, Conn., U. S. A. February 27, 1907.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,

U. S. Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: In reply to your favor of the 25th instant.

According to our records the 48,000 cartridges comprising lot 27, shipped to Rock Island Arsenal February 1, 1906, bore the date of manufacture stamped on the heads, thus: "U M C 12-05," meaning the twelfth month of 1905.

We again assure you of our entire willingness to give you every assistance in our power in connection with this matter.

Yours, truly,

THE U. M. C. COMPANY,
JEROME ORCUTT,
Manager and Superintendent.

(4) Letter, with inclosures, from the Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, February 21, 1908.

HON. JOSEPH B. FORAKER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your memorandum in reference to issues of ammunition to Companies I, K, L, and M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, is returned herewith, together with a copy of an exact statement taken from the property records of this office, which agrees with your memorandum except in one or two minor particulars.

I can find no record of having previously furnished you this information.
Sincerely, yours,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.

Statement of issues and ammunition to Companies I, K, L, and M, Twenty-sixth Infantry.

March 27, 1906, the post ordnance officer at Fort Brown received from the San Antonio Arsenal 74,400 ball cartridges; April 30 he received from the same arsenal 8,400 ball cartridges, making a total of 82,800.

From the above the following issues were made by the post ordnance officer at Fort Brown:

April 13, 1906, to Company L, Twenty-sixth Infantry.....	24,000
May 12, 1906, to Company L, Twenty-sixth Infantry.....	25,200
May 20, 1906, to Company L, Twenty-sixth Infantry.....	1,200
May 31, 1906, to Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry.....	20,400
June 17, 1906, to Company I, Twenty-sixth Infantry.....	2,400
Total .....	70,200

Leaving a balance of 3,600 rounds of the total receipts.

November 2, 1906, the post ordnance officer at Fort Brown returned to the San Antonio Arsenal 3,600 ball cartridges.

Rifles were issued to Companies I, K, L, and M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, from the Springfield Armory as follows: Company I, April 23, 1906 (received at Fort Ringgold); Company K, April 16, 1906; Company L, April 16, 1906; Company M, April 16, 1906.

Receipts of ammunition at San Antonio Arsenal.

January 6, 1906, from the inspector of ordnance, United States Cartridge Company, Lowell, Mass.....	218,400
February 7, 1906, from the inspector of ordnance, Union Metallic Cartridge Company, Bridgeport, Conn.....	218,400
February 26, 1906, from Frankford Arsenal.....	312,000
April 12, 1906, from Frankford Arsenal.....	310,800
May 26, 1906, from the inspector of ordnance, Union Metallic Cartridge Company, Bridgeport, Conn.....	310,800
Total .....	1,370,400

There were also received at the San Antonio Arsenal 1,502,500 rounds of ball cartridges, having a velocity of 2,300 feet-seconds. None of this ammunition was issued.

No ammunition whatever was received at the San Antonio Arsenal from the Rock Island Arsenal.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, February 21, 1908.

After a brief informal discussion of the Brownsville affray and the committee's investigation thereof, the following resolution was offered by Senator Lodge.

That in the opinion of this committee the shooting in the affray at Brownsville on the night of August 13-14, 1906, was done by some of the soldiers belonging to the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, then stationed at Fort Brown, Tex.

Whereupon Senator Foraker offered the following resolution as a substitute:

The testimony wholly fails to identify the particular individuals, or any of them, who participated in the shooting affray that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

This amendment, offered as a substitute, was defeated by a vote of 8 to 5.

Then Senator Foraker offered the following as a substitute in place of Senator Lodge's amendment:

The testimony wholly fails to show that the discharged soldiers of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, or any of them, entered into any agreement or so-called "conspiracy of silence," or that they had among themselves any understanding of any nature to withhold any information of which they or any of them might be possessed concerning the shooting affray that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

This was defeated by a vote of 8 to 5.

The following substitute was then offered by Senator Foraker:

The testimony is so contradictory and much of it so unreliable that it is not sufficient to sustain the charge that soldiers of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, or any of them, participated in the shooting affray that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906, which was defeated by a vote of 9 to 4.

Then Senator Foraker offered the following as a substitute:

The weight of the testimony shows that none of the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry participated in the shooting affray that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

This was defeated by a vote of 11 to 2.

The following resolutions were finally offered by Senator Foraker as a substitute for the resolution presented by Senator Lodge:

Whereas the testimony shows that the discharged men had a good record as soldiers and that many of them had by their long and faithful service acquired valuable rights of which they are deprived by a discharge without honor; and

Whereas the testimony shows beyond a reasonable doubt that whatever may be the fact as to who did the shooting, many of the men so discharged were innocent of any offense in connection therewith:

Therefore it is in our opinion the duty of Congress to provide by appropriate legislation for the correction of their record and for their reenlistment and reinstatement in the Army, and for the restoration to them of all the rights of which they have been deprived; and we so recommend.

This was defeated by a vote of 8 to 5.

Senator du Pont then offered the following resolution as a substitute for Senator Lodge's resolution:

That the testimony shows that some of the shots fired during the shooting affray which occurred at Brownsville, Tex., during the night of August 13-14, 1906, were discharged from Springfield rifles which had been issued to the commanding officer of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and which were in the hands of or accessible to the enlisted men of said company.

This was defeated by a vote of 11 to 2.

Then Senator Scott offered the following as a substitute for Senator Lodge's resolution:

That the evidence before this committee is not sufficient in the judgment of the committee to justify the finding that any particular person or persons did the shooting, and the parties who did the shooting are to the committee unknown.

This was defeated by a vote of 9 to 4.

There being no further substitutes offered, the original resolution as offered by Senator Lodge was voted upon, the vote resulting in 8 yeas and 4 nays (1 not voting).

Senator Warner then offered the following resolution:

That the testimony fails to identify the particular soldier or soldiers who participated in the shooting affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

This resolution was agreed to by a vote of 8 yeas (5 not voting).

At 4.45 p. m. the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman, the understanding being that, owing to work with other committees and anticipated absence from the city of some of the members of the Military Committee, it would probably be eight or ten days before another meeting could be held to consider the Brownsville affray.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Tuesday, March 10, 1908.

At 2 o'clock p. m. the committee met in executive session.

There were present: Senators Warren (in the chair), Scott, Foraker, Lodge, Hemenway, Bulkeley, Warner, du Pont, Taliaferro, Foster, Overman, Frazier, and McCreary.

Majority and minority reports were presented, read, and discussed, and it was agreed that they should be presented to the Senate on the following morning, or soon thereafter.

Senator Foraker presented the following resolution (Senator Scott in the chair):

Resolved, That the thanks of this committee are due and are hereby tendered to the Honorable Francis E. Warren, chairman, for the ability, courtesy, and impartiality with which he has presided during the long and tedious proceedings of the committee in the conduct of this investigation.

The resolution was considered, agreed to unanimously, and ordered printed in the record.

At 5 o'clock p. m. the committee adjourned.

NAMES OF ENLISTED MEN DISCHARGED ON ACCOUNT OF BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY, WITH APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

LETTER

FROM

THE ACTING SECRETARY OF WAR,

TRANSMITTING,

PURSUANT TO A SENATE RESOLUTION OF APRIL 6, 1908, THE NAMES OF THE ENLISTED MEN OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY DISCHARGED WITHOUT HONOR ON ACCOUNT OF THE BROWNSVILLE, TEX., SHOOTING AFFRAY, WHO HAVE APPLIED FOR REENLISTMENT UNDER THE ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR, AND THE STATEMENTS SUBMITTED BY THEM.

---

APRIL 9, 1908.—Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

---

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 8, 1908.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of April 6, 1908, calling for the names of enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, discharged without honor on account of the Brownsville, Tex., shooting affray on the night of August 13, 1906, who have applied for reenlistment under the order of the Secretary of War, dated December 12, 1906; also for a report as to the testimony or statements submitted by said applicants, and the action taken upon the applications, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

Following is a list of names of former enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, discharged without honor under the provisions of Special Orders No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, who have applied to be enlisted again and whose applications, together with all papers submitted pertaining thereto, are herewith:

Company B:

First Sergt. Mingo Sanders,
Corporal Edward L. Daniels,
Private Ernest Allison,
Private Elmer Brown,
Private Ernest English,
Private Thomas Taylor,
Private Alfred N. Williams.

Company C:

Sergt. Samuel W. Harley,
Corporal Charles E. Madison,
Musician Walter Banks,
Private Mark Garmon,
Private Thomas Jefferson,
Private William McGuire,
Private James A. Simmons,
Private George Smith.

Company D:

Sergt. Jacob Frazier,
Musician Hoytt Robinson,
Musician Joseph Jones,
Cook Charles Dade,
Cook James Duncan,
Private Elias Gant,
Private George W. Hall,
Private Benjamin F. Johnson,
Private Charles Jones,
Private James Newton,
Private Robert L. Rogan,
Private William Van Hook.

The discharge without honor of Privates John Cook and Shepherd Glenn (applications herewith), Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was directed in Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, but they were honorably discharged, by expiration of service, before that order was issued. Their applications to enlist again were denied.

Sergt. Walter Adams, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was honorably discharged, by expiration of service, October 27, 1906, before the issuance of Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, 1906. He was stationed at Fort Brown, Tex., at the time of the Brownsville trouble, and his application (papers herewith) to reenter the Army was disapproved November 8, 1906.

Following is a list of names of former enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, discharged without honor under the provisions of Special Orders No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, who have applied to be enlisted again, but whose applications are not now on file in the War Department, the application papers having been returned to the applicants for completion and not having been received back in the Department:

Company B:

Private James Balley,
Private William Harden.

Company C:

Sergt. George Thomas,
Private Henry W. Arvin,
Private Perry Olso,
Private John Kirkpatrick,
Private Lewis Williams.

Company D:

Private John Green,
Private Wesley Mapp.

No action has been taken by the Department on any of these applications.

Herewith are transmitted all application and other papers that have been found on file in the Department and that appear to have any bearing upon the Senate resolution to which this communication is a response.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Affidavit of Maj. Charles W. Penrose.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

CHARLES W. PENROSE, major, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, says: Sergeant Sanders was most reliable and trustworthy in every particular. I am satisfied that if he had known who the men were that did the Brownsville shooting, or had known who were implicated, if not actually engaged, he would have reported the matter to me promptly.

I am satisfied also that he made every effort in his power to find out if possible something about the identity of the guilty men; but, being first sergeant, he was less likely to hear what they wanted to conceal, for the very reason that they knew he would disclose it.

He is an exceptionally good man. In all the time I have known of him I never knew of his doing anything but his duty.

Affidavit of Second Lieut. George O. Lawrason.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

GEORGE O. LAWRASON, second lieutenant, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, says:

I have known Sergeant Sanders since September, 1904. He always impressed me as a noncommissioned officer of unusual firmness. He was a fine drillmaster, and tactful in his handling of the men. He is married and has lived out of company barracks since I joined the company, and seemed to associate but little with the men while off duty. He was occupying with his wife a set of noncommissioned officer's quarters on the night of August 13, 1906. I reached the company before he did and as I got there I saw him about 50 yards away, coming with a lantern and no rifle. The firing ceased about as I left my quarters. After this trouble I tried to impress him with the necessity of getting at the truth of the matter. He is a man of a good deal of force of character and I believe he exerted himself and did what he could. I don't believe he has feared to incur the ill will of the guilty men. I spoke to him once or twice at Fort Brown as to the methods by which he was to get at the matter. He said he had questioned many of the men, had talked with the old soldiers of the battalion; but had been able to learn nothing. I believe he has faithfully tried everything he knew. He is a strict disciplinarian and always maintained good order and discipline in the company. I don't believe he ever overlooked the delinquencies of the men and I think his reputation in this respect would tend to make the guilty men very careful indeed about permitting any inking of the truth to reach him. His training and his experience all would negative the idea that he would conceal this affair. He has less than two years to serve before retirement.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

SAMUEL P. LYON, captain, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, says:

I knew him for twelve years. He was an excellent soldier and noncommissioned officer, absolutely honest and reliable. I believe him an excellent disciplinarian, from what I have observed in the various stations of the regiment as to the administration of matters in his company as knowledge of it came to me through general gossip, the proceedings of courts-martial and summary courts. I am certain in my own mind that he neither participated in the Brownsville shooting nor learned anything as to the identity of the guilty ones, and that he would promptly have reported anything he did learn.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Reno, ss:

JAMES A. HIGGINS, first lieutenant, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, states:

I arrived at Fort Brown August 20, 1906, and took command of Company B; commanded it for about three months. The company was in excellent condition when I took it—particularly as to the control exercised by Sergt. Mingo Sanders over the men. I considered him equal in ability to any first sergeant I had ever seen. He never hesitated to reprimand any man at drill for inattention and appeared to me to be impartial always. If any breach of discipline came to his knowledge he brought the man to me immediately. I found this to hold good in cases where I had prior knowledge of the matter, and whenever I heard of a disturbance in the company from other sources I was always certain to learn of it later from Sanders. He didn't appear to mingle much in a social way with the men but seemed to have the respect of the entire organization. I regard him as good as any drill sergeant I ever saw. He has assured me on several different occasions that he was making every endeavor to find out something about the Brownsville shooting and I believe, from the general character of the man, that he was, and that if he had learned anything he would certainly have disclosed it.

CITY OF SAN ANTONIO, TEX., ss:

GEORGE C. LAWRASON, being duly sworn, says he is second lieutenant of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and was in command of that company on August 13, 1906.

That he knows said Daniels, and in deponent's opinion he is not the sort of man who would be likely to be a member of the party that did the shooting at Brownsville, Texas. That he was not popular at all with the men and that the men would not be apt to include him in a party bent on such an enterprise. That Daniels was a corporal but appeared to antagonize the men a little in his official relations with them. Deponent don't believe that Daniels could find out from any of the men any facts about the shooting after it was over. He was a good soldier, his weakness being to get drunk occasionally. That deponent heard him answer to his name at the roll call made at the barracks when the company was first formed.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Reno, ss:

JAMES A. HIGGINS, first lieutenant Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, states:

I knew Corporal Daniels during the three months I was commanding his company. He is not the sort of man I would pick out as likely to take part in such an affair. The participants would hardly include him in the organization of the raiding party, for he was not popular at all among the men. He seemed to antagonize the men a little in his official dealings with them. I don't think he could find out from the men anything in regard to such an affair after it was over. He was a good soldier, his weakness being to get on an occasional drunk.

I remember one occasion when he brought a private to me with a complaint that he had acted in an insubordinate manner toward him and wanted charges preferred against the private. He did not seem to know how to manage the men very well.

Affidavit of Maj. Charles W. Penrose.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

CHARLES W. PENROSE, being duly sworn, says he is major, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and has known Private Elmer Brown for quite two years, during all which time he was deponent's mounted orderly, and as such took care of his horses; that Brown's orders had always been that when an alarm of any kind sounded in the post he was to go at once to deponent's horses and remain with them until instructions reached him from deponent; that deponent did not see him on the night of August 13-14, 1906, but is informed that Brown has proof of a direct and positive character that he was with the horses from the time the alarm was given; that said Brown is absolutely reliable in every way, and deponent feels positive he had nothing to do with the shooting at Brownsville that night or with anything connected with it. Deponent knows Brown did all he could to ascertain the perpetrators, for he came to deponent with several little matters that he thought might be pertinent, but none of which amounted to anything; that he was also constantly talking among the men in the effort to learn who the guilty men were, and reported to deponent daily, stating whom he had seen and with whom he had talked; that he is a popular man, bright and intelligent, and a "good mixer." But he was working for deponent, and that fact, known to the men, must have handicapped him to some extent.

Affidavit of Second Lieut. George O. Lawrason.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

GEORGE O. LAWBRASON, being duly sworn, says he is second lieutenant Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and was in command of said company on August 13, 1906; that Private Brown was missing from the roll-call that night, and deponent sent Corporal Wade Harris to look up Brown and Alfred N. Williams, a private, who was regularly detailed to duty as a teamster and slept at the corral. Private Williams soon came running up, before the company took its position along the reservation wall, and Corporal Harris returned in ten or fifteen minutes. Both Harris and Williams reported Brown as at the corral with Major Penrose's horses. Deponent always thought well of Private Brown, and does not believe he was engaged in the shooting affair that night. Deponent thinks Brown would have been extremely likely to report anything he learned about the matter, because he was at Major Penrose's house daily with the horses, and in constant communication with the major. He did not lay around the company barracks much.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

SAMUEL P. LYON, being duly sworn, says he is captain Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and has known Private Elmer Brown, of Company B, for twelve years. He is an excellent soldier and perfectly honest. He was for some time striker for deponent. Deponent knows him pretty well and does not believe he was mixed up in any way with the shooting affair on August 13, 1906, or that he would suppress anything he learned about it. He is honest, wants to remain in the service, and I believe would willingly report any clue he found.

*Affidavit of Capt. Edgar A. Macklin.*DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

EDGAR A. MACKLIN, being duly sworn, says he is captain Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and has known Private Elmer Brown for three years, principally through his connection with Major Penrose's horses. Deponent was particularly attracted to him during the major's absence, on account of the careful way he looked after the house and the horses. Since coming to Fort Reno deponent has noticed the care with which Brown seemed to watch the major's house while he and his wife were out in the evenings. That deponent believes he would have told the major if he learned anything at all about the shooting of August 13, 1906.

ERNEST ENGLISH.

*Affidavit of Ernest English.*TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA, City of El Reno, ss:

ERNEST ENGLISH, being duly sworn, says he is now employed in said city, and was formerly a soldier in said company. That he went from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown with the company in July, 1906, and was quartered in the barracks with the first squad of the first section. All of the men slept in one large squad room in the second story. I went out into the town every day or two and bought things in the drug store and the dry-goods stores. Did not enter any saloon at any time in that town, and had no trouble of any kind with anybody. The only liquor I had while there was about two days after we arrived. About 15 of us had a "keg party"—chipped in and bought two cases of bottled beer from a local salesman, who took the order at the main gate of the fort and delivered the beer there. We drank it right there. That was the only drinking I did at that town. I remember hearing about Private Newton of O Company getting hit over the head with a revolver in the hands of a citizen. But Newton didn't have much of a reputation, and nobody in my company was roused up over the affair. I didn't hear that the men of the command in general sympathized with Newton. He was one of the kind of men who don't seem able to keep out of trouble. I knew who he was, but he had not been very long in the regiment and was not one of my friends. He would get drunk frequently, and when he did he always seemed to want to take charge of somebody else's place and run it. I knew Reed of O Company about eighteen months; he was simply an acquaintance. I heard about his trouble the next morning after he was pushed into the water, but didn't hear anybody say anything about that matter except that the major had an investigation over it. That incident appeared to stir up the Company O men, and they talked a good deal about how he was shoved overboard, but the other companies didn't seem to take it up, and very little was said about it in my company. I didn't hear anything that made me think there was any chance of trouble between the white people of the town and the soldiers. I haven't heard any of the men since August 13, 1906, say that they had any idea that there was likely to be trouble. I inquired around a good deal while we were doing the heavy guard duty at Fort Brown and also here at Fort Reno, among the men, and they all tell me they anticipated no trouble at all.

I went to bed some time after tattoo, about 9.15 p. m., August 13, 1906. I went on the practice march in the morning, 12 miles long, and was assigned as room orderly when we returned to barracks. I put out the lights at 9 o'clock. Several of the men were sitting on the lower porch smoking and some were on the upper porch. Sergeant Jackson was in charge of quarters. I got to sleep about 10 o'clock. There was no excitement whatever in quarters and no indication that there would be any. The commanding officer had sent a patrol out in town to see that the men were all in at 8 o'clock on account of the report that a soldier had insulted a white woman. We were told that everyone must be in at 8 and that all passes would expire at that hour.

I was awakened by the men running through quarters hollering "Wake up." Some yelled "Fire." I got up. No light was lit up stairs, but I started to light the lamp down stairs. It hangs in the barber shop and shines out through the door into the hall to light the stairs, but the door was locked and I lit a lantern which was hanging near the ax racks in the stairway. I heard the bugle blowing, but thought it was "fire call" as the men had been shouting "Wake up! Fire!" I heard the shots too, but supposed they were fired by the sentries to spread the alarm. Lieutenant Lawrason came over to the company and said to the men "Go back and get your arms! That was the call to arms." About half the men of B Company were out on the lower porch without arms. The major came up about that time and the lieutenant told him that First Sergeant Sanders hadn't come. The major told him to send after him and the lieutenant said "Somebody go down and wake up Sergeant Sanders." Corporal Daniels sent me for him. I started and got about 200 yards from the company barracks when I met him on the way and we returned together. By that time most of the men had their guns and some were down stairs falling in ranks and the rest were getting their arms. On the way Sanders asked me what was the matter and I told him I didn't know. He ran into the orderly room for his gun and I went on up stairs after mine. The company was then formed and the roll called. The firing had ceased. The first sergeant, in reporting the result of the roll call, said three men were absent—Brown, the baker; Elmer Brown, who took care of the major's horses, and Alfred Williams, teamster at the corral. The company commander went over to report to Major Penrose, who was out on the parade, and when he came back he sent Corporal Wade Harris to the corral and bakery to get the three absent men. Our company was then marched down and posted like a skirmish line along behind the reservation wall and stayed there about an hour. I saw D Company march out through the gate to patrol the town, about the time we got to the wall. C Company was still out in front of their barracks, not yet formed, when we marched away from barracks. After we got to the wall, some five or ten minutes later, Lieutenant Grier marched C Company to our right and posted it along the wall beyond us. The men of my company who were near me were wondering who had done the shooting. I didn't see a soul anywhere in the vicinity except the companies—not a civilian in sight and I was not able to see one all the time I was there at the wall. I was 50 or 60 yards from the telegraph office, but didn't see anybody near it. I was placed opposite the end of an alley which runs at the rear of the houses facing on the street running from the main gate of the fort. There was a street lamp lit about 100 yards down that alley, but I saw no one whatever pass within the circle of its light. After we had been from forty-five minutes to an hour at the wall the lieutenant had us move back a few feet on to B Company's back porch and sit down there. I laid down on a pile of old tents on the porch and nearly went to sleep. D Company came back into the post while we were there on the porch. Some time later we were sent up to put away our arms and went back to bed.

We were kept closely in the post after that night. The talk among the men on guard next day—I was one of the sentries—was to the effect that the Texas Rangers had fired on the post. Some of those that talked about the affair seemed to believe that was true. About 11 a. m., when I went to dinner at the company, I heard two of the men say that the mayor, whom we knew as post surgeon at the time, was claiming that soldiers had done the shooting. Nobody seemed to believe that was true. I took it for granted the gully parties would be caught very soon and didn't bother myself much about it. Very little was said among the men about the matter that I heard. I was around talking with all the men, but nobody had any news of the guilty men and during our stay at Fort Brown I could hear no suspicion nor gossip nor rumors against any of the soldiers. I was in the hospital at Fort Reno when General Garlington came and Major Penrose came to the hospital and told us what he had said to the command about discharging us. The men of long service and the good men seemed very much cast down at the prospect of discharge without honor, but some of the younger ones didn't appear to care. The old men said it was tough to lose so many good years put in in the service of the Government when they hadn't done anything, just because of a lot of scoundrels who had made all the trouble. I am sure there were plenty of us who would have told in a minute if they had even suspected any soldier of doing the shooting. Even at Fort

Reno I could hear of neither gossip, rumor, nor suspicion directed against any man, and nothing could be found out.

I respectfully request permission to reenlist, and I repeat in the most solemn manner that I neither took part in the affray except as I have stated above, nor have I at any time concealed any fact, clew, or information on the subject from my officers. I am conscious of no wrong on my part, and desire to be reinstated in the service of the Government.

Affidavit of Samuel W. Harley.

CITY OF HARRISBURG, COUNTY OF DAUPHIN, State of Pennsylvania, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, one Samuel W. Harley, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says, that he was at Fort Brown, near Brownsville, Texas, on and between the 27th day of July, 1906, and the 13th day of August, 1906, as sergeant and acting first sergeant of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

That at no time between those dates or prior thereto did he have any knowledge of any proposed attack upon the citizens of Brownsville, Texas, and that the first knowledge he had of any such proposed or actual attack was when roused from sleep in his company quarters by the sounds of discharging firearms on the night of August 13th, 1906; that he did not then know the cause of said discharge of firearms nor who the participants concerned therein were; that immediately thereafter, acting in the line of his duty as acting first sergeant of his company, he caused his company to fall in and called the roll.

That said roll call was faithfully made in the presence of Second Lieut. Harry S. Grier, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and Major Charles W. Penrose, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and showed every man of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, present or legitimately accounted for.

That since August 13, 1906, and up to the date of his discharge without honor, November 24, 1906, every effort was made by him as a noncommissioned officer of his company to discover if possible who were the participants in the said attack, but that, although due search and diligent inquiry have been made by him, he has been unable to discover any evidence which would lead to the detection of the person or persons guilty of the said attack.

That at all times prior to and since the date of the Brownsville raid he has always tried to perform his duty as a soldier and a noncommissioned officer in a faithful manner and with the honor of the service always the uppermost in his thoughts and acts.

That if he possessed the slightest knowledge that could or might be of advantage in securing the punishment of the guilty party or parties he would freely and gladly impart that knowledge to the proper authorities.

Deposent further says that if at any time in the future he should come possessed of any information which would be of use in detecting and punishing the guilty participants in the aforesaid raid he would consider it his duty as a man and citizen to notify the proper authorities and render all aid possible to them.

Further deposent saith not.

Certificate of Maj. C. W. Penrose.

FORT RENO, OKLA., December 30, 1907.

This is to certify that on the night of the 13th-14th of August, 1906, at Fort Brown, Tex. I saw Samuel W. Harley, then sergeant and acting first sergeant of Company C, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, in front of the Company C, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, while the company was falling in, and while firing was still going on in the city of Brownsville, Tex.

I do not believe Sergeant Harley was in any way implicated in the raid on Brownsville, and I am of the opinion if he knew or could have gained any information leading to the detection of any man or men connected with the raid he would have reported the matter to me.

Certificate of Second Lieut. H. S. Grier.

FORT RENO, OKLA., January 24, 1907.

I certify that on the night of the 13th-14th of August, 1906, at Fort Brown, Tex. I met Samuel W. Harley, acting first sergeant Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, on the parade ground in front of Captain Lyon's quarters while firing was still going on: that I halted him and asked him what the trouble was over at the barracks: that said Harley told me that some one was shooting up the barracks: that I asked him if such was the case, what was he doing over near the officers' line: that he said he was going to get Captain Macklin, his company commander.

That later said Harley formed Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and called the roll under my supervision: that I do not believe Sergeant Harley could have in any way been implicated in the raid at Brownsville, and I am of the opinion that he would have reported any fact known to him that would lead to the detection of the perpetrators.

I believe Sergeant Harley a very reliable and trustworthy man. He was an excellent soldier. If he had known anything about the shooting of August 13 I believe he would have told the major or me. I don't know much about his relations with the men; that is, how sociable he was with them or whether he mixed much with them. I must have had twenty talks with him about the affair, in which I urged him to do his utmost to learn the facts. I believe he was honest and truthful in the earnest replies he made to the effect that he had tried faithfully and that it seemed impossible for him to find out anything. I think his desire to continue in service was very strong, and powerful enough to overcome any temptation or inclination toward concealment and any fear of the wrath of the guilty men. He was fully impressed with the necessity of doing something to ascertain the guilty, and I am convinced he did all he could.

Washington, December 12, 1906.

To all recruiting officers:

Applications to reenlist from former members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who were discharged under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, must be made in writing and be accompanied by such evidence, also in writing, as the applicant may desire to submit to show that he was neither implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Texas, on the night of August 13, 1906, nor withheld any evidence that might lead to the discovery of the perpetrators thereof. Recruiting officers to whom such former soldiers may apply for reenlistment will advise them of these requirements and will forward the applications, when properly prepared, to The Military Secretary of the Army for the consideration and investigation of the War Department.

Application for permission to reenlist.

PITTSBURG, PA., December 19, 1906.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to your published letter of instructions, in reference to applications of former soldiers of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to reenlist, I respectfully submit herewith my application for reenlistment, together with statement of my service and record in the United States Army, which is as follows:

Three years in Company A, Twenty-fourth Infantry; discharged December 14, 1897, with character "good."

Three years in Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry; corporal June 8, 1899, to September 19, 1900, resigned; discharged December 31, 1900, with character "very good."

Three years in Companies L and K, Twenty-fourth Infantry; corporal, sergeant, and first sergeant in L and lance corporal in K; discharged from latter January 27, 1904, with character "excellent."

Two years eight months and eighteen days in Company O, Twenty-fifth Infantry, corporal; discharged under the provisions of paragraph 1, Special Orders, No. 266, current series, War Department, "without honor," November 22, 1906, making in all eleven years eight months and eighteen days continuous service.

I had service in the Spanish-American war in Cuba, 1898; was in battle of El Caney July 1; before Santiago July 2, 8, 10, and 11, 1898.

I offer herewith testimony to show that I had no connection with, nor withheld any information from the authorities relative to, the occurrence which took place at Brownsville, Texas, on the night of August 13, 1906.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES H. MADISON,
Late Corporal, Company O, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Affidavit of Charles H. Madison.

CITY OF PITTSBURG, State of Pennsylvania, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, one Charles H. Madison, who, being sworn according to law, deposes and says:

That he is a soldier by profession and was a member of Company O, Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Brownsville, Tex., on and before, and after, the date August 13, 1906, from which company and regiment he was discharged "without honor" under the provisions of paragraph 1, Special Orders, 266, War Department, Military Secretary's Office, November 9, 1906, at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., on the 22d day of November, 1906; that on the night of August 13, 1906, he was asleep in his bed in O Company barracks and was awakened by the explosion of firearms, and the call "to arms" of the bugles; that Major Penrose, the commanding officer, came toward the quarters as he (Madison) came down the outside steps and directed Lieut. H. S. Grier to take command of the company; that Lieutenant Grier called and sent him (Madison) to the quarters of Captain Macklin, the officer of the day, to see if he was there; that he (Madison) did not find the captain, so returned and reported accordingly to the adjutant; that the company (Company O) had fallen in before he (Madison) left, and upon his return had been moved to the rear of the quarters; that the company was formed in line of skirmishers, he (Madison) being assigned to command of the right squad in line; that the adjutant called him (Madison) to report to the commanding officer with two men; that he reported and was directed to patrol around the hospital, commissary, corral, and noncommissioned officers' staff quarters to see if anyone was hurt, or if any shots had struck in this neighborhood, and learned from the first-class sergeant, Hospital Corps, that a couple of bullets had been heard passing over his quarters; that he (Madison) returned and reported back to the commanding officer what he (Madison) had seen and heard, whereupon the commanding officer ordered him back to the company (Company O); that upon reporting back to the company, Captain Macklin was in command; that the company was then placed on outpost duty, where it remained until 8.30 a. m. next day; that he at no time heard any talk among the soldiers to commit violence upon the citizens of the town before the occurrence of this night, and none after it occurred; that he has not now, nor did he ever have, knowledge of the names or actions on the part of any United States soldier or soldiers, present or otherwise, at the time this took place, and that he is unable to give any information at this date, either of his own knowledge or hearsay, which might lead to the arrest and conviction of those presumed to have been guilty. And further deponent saith not.

CHARLES H. MADISON,
Late Corporal, Company O, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, a summary court officer of the U. S. Army, at Pittsburg, Pa., this 19th day of December, 1906.

J. C. ORD,
Major, U. S. Army, Retired, Recruiting Officer, Summary Court Officer.

PITTSBURG, PA., January 5, 1907.

The deponent of the above deposition having been reminded that he was already sworn in this matter, saith further: That at about 5.30 o'clock p. m., at retreat roll call, he heard an order read commanding all soldiers of the garrison to be at their proper quarters at 8 o'clock that evening (August 13, 1906), and to remain therein; that he obeyed this order faithfully; and further, to use the language of the letter of The Military Secretary of the Army, dated December 12, 1906, he was neither implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, nor withheld any evidence that might lead to the perpetrators thereof.

Affidavit of Second Lieut. Donald D. Hay.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Reno, ss:

DONALD D. HAY, being duly sworn, says: That he is second lieutenant of Company O, Twenty-fifth Infantry. Corporal Madison was a very excellent soldier, reliable and attentive to duty. I do not think he was the kind of man to engage in such an affair as the Brownsville shooting of August 13, 1906, or to sympathize with the participants. From my knowledge of his character, I do not believe he would have been afraid to disclose to his captain or to the major anything he might have learned about the guilty parties.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

CHARLES W. PENROSE, major Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, says he was in command of the post of Fort Brown, Texas, on August 13, 1906, and knows Corporal Madison: that deponent sent him for the officer of the day about five minutes after the first shots were fired that night. I found him out in front of the company barracks, and when I decided to send out to find the officer of the day Madison was the first man I could put my hands on for that purpose. I have always considered him a pretty good man. I believe he would have told me anything he might have known, and am of the opinion he would have told it to me at once.

EDGAR A. MACKLIN, captain Twenty-fifth Infantry, states:

Corporal Madison is a very excellent soldier. I believe he would have told me anything he learned. I always found him very reliable and attentive to duty. I don't think he would have been afraid to tell what he might have learned. He was confined so soon after the Brownsville affair that he had no opportunity to mingle with the other men of his company and battalion except those confined at the same time. He was acting quartermaster sergeant of the company on two occasions, and showed himself very painstaking and careful of the property put in his charge.

Affidavit of Capt. Edgar A. Macklin.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

Edgar A. Macklin, being duly sworn, says he is captain Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and has known Musician Banks for the past two and one-half years. That so far as deponent's observation went, Banks was a very good soldier and very temperate in his habits. Deponent does not believe he is the kind of man who would take part in such a shooting affray as occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on August 13, 1906. Deponent believes Banks would do his best to find out who did participate, and that he would not have sympathy with them or fear of them. Deponent thinks Banks is a well-meaning man who had had no trouble in Brownsville, and had no reason whatever for wishing to punish anybody there, and would report anything he learned about the matter.

Request for permission to reenlist.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., January 10, 1907.

To the RECRUITING OFFICER of U. S. A.,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

SIR: I have the honor to request permission to re-enlist in the U. S. Army. I was discharged under the provisions of Special Orders No. 268, War Department, dated November 9th, 1906.

My service in the Army is as follows: One year nine months and thirteen days in Company C, Forty-eighth Infantry, U. S. Volunteers. Service honest and faithful. Three years in Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry; discharged September 2, 1904; service honest and faithful; from September 8, 1906, to date of discharge November 24, 1906, in Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

My service has always been satisfactory. I was neither implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, nor withheld any evidence that might lead to the discovery of the perpetrators thereof, and I therefore request permission to re-enlist. I solemnly aver that on the night of the raid on Brownsville, Tex., I was asleep in my quarters at the post and knew nothing about it until I was awakened by hearing the noise and I was in my proper place, and answered to my name when the roll was called during the time the sound of shooting of guns was heard outside of the wall of the post.

From my own knowledge of him and from his reputation, I think it impossible he could have taken part in the Brownsville shooting affray of August 13, 1906. I also think it highly improbable that he would have concealed or Private Jefferson is a very good man. He was on duty as room orderly a good deal of the time. He was about 45 years of age, of very quiet habits, and accustomed to retire early. I don't think I signed more than one pass in two years for him. He kept very much to himself. I don't believe it possible that he took any part in the Brownsville shooting of August 13, 1906. I did not consider him a talebearer, but I remember he reported to me once a case that he considered one of favoritism against himself on the part of a noncommissioned officer, or two. He was not a very popular man among the men, and I don't believe it was possible for him to find out anything concerning the shooting. But if he had learned anything I think he would have told me.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the written application of William McGuire, late private, Company C, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, for enlistment; also his affidavit, duly sworn to.

I would respectfully state that this statement was made to me to-day in my office, and corresponds exactly to the statement he made several days ago when he first asked for enlistment; that this affidavit is the result of a close questioning, step by step; that I have examined and recross-examined him, striving to see if he was telling the truth, or not, but he has never wavered in his statements, and no amount of questioning could shake him.

The affidavit was carefully read to him in my office, then read and carefully explained to him by me in the presence of the notary, and he stated he thoroughly understood it and desired no changes. All this before signature. His physical condition is good, and he appears above the average of his race in intelligence.

Very respectfully,

Affidavit of William McGuire.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
County of Allegheny:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the State and county aforesaid, William McGuire, who, being duly sworn according to law deposes and says that he enlisted at Pittsburg, Pa., on or about August 11, 1905, and was assigned to Company C, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry; that he was stationed at Fort Brown, Brownsville, Tex., at the time of the trouble there on or about the night of August 13, 1906; that his company occupied the third barrack, counting from the river end; that his bunk was on the second floor of said barrack; that some of the windows if not all were open for air; that he thinks the doors of the squad room were closed; that he went to bed and to sleep about 9 p. m.; that he was aroused by the trumpet sounding "to arms," which was sounded by the trumpeter at the guardhouse, a short distance away, perhaps 50 yards; that the call "to arms" first woke him up and he then heard one shot fired as he believes by "number two" sentry, whose "beat" was directly behind the barracks; that this one shot was the only one he heard all night; that he had not heard any talk whatever among the men of either his own or any other company of "shooting up the town," or cleaning out the citizens or any part of them, nor did he ever hear any threats or hear of any threats by the citizens of Brownsville of cleaning out or shooting up the soldiers; that on being aroused by the call to arms he fell in ranks with his company in front of the barracks; that the roll was called by First Sergeant Turner and affiant answered to his name; that all the men in his company answered to their names; that he did not know then and does not know now that any man answered to any other man's name and never heard it since that it was done; that in about ten minutes after roll call the first sergeant dismissed the company and Captain Macklin ordered the men up stairs to bring down all the rifles in the arm racks and put them in the storeroom on the first floor; that in about an hour the men, the affiant being one, were ordered to take their rifles and fall in ranks; that during the time affiant was in ranks, while he was carrying down the guns, and during the time that elapsed between bringing down the guns and falling in ranks, probably one hour in all, he heard no firing at all; that everything was still; that he was not called up and questioned by any officer at Fort Brown, but while at Fort Reno, Okla., he was brought up and questioned by General Garlington, he thinks it was; that a clerk took down the questions and answers, but he (the deponent) was not called upon to sign his statement.

Deponent further positively swears that he had no previous knowledge of the trouble at Brownsville, took no part whatever in it, did not hear it discussed much among the men afterward; that they were badly scared and afraid to talk, and has not the slightest idea who did the shooting, and if he did know would tell all he knew.

Request for permission to enlist.

FORT RENO, OKLA., January 28, 1907.

RECRUITING OFFICER, Fort Reno, Okla.

SIR: I have the honor to request that I be granted permission to enlist in the U. S. Army. I was discharged under provisions of paragraph 1, Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, 1906. I have the honor to truthfully state that I was not implicated in the riots at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, nor neither have I withheld any information which would have led to the detection of the guilty parties. My service in the Army is as follows:

Company H, Forty-ninth U. S. Volunteer Infantry, from October 13, 1899, to May 23, 1901. Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, from May 24, 1901, to May 23, 1904. Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, from May 24, 1904, to March 27, 1906. Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, from March 27, 1906, to October 4, 1906. Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, from October 4, 1906, to November 26, 1906, the date on which I was discharged under provisions of paragraph 1, Special Orders 266, War Department, 1906.

Hoping that this application will be favorably considered,

I remain, very respectfully,

JAMES A. SIMMONS,

Affidavit of James A. Simmons.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Reno, Okla., ss:

James A. Simmons, being duly sworn; says he was discharged without honor November 26, 1906, from said company pursuant to paragraph 1, Special Orders No. 266, War Department, dated November 9, 1906, and now desires to reenlist in the Army.

That deponent was transferred to Company O from Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, at Fort Niohrara on March 27, 1906, because Company A was ordered to Fort Washakie, Wyo., and deponent desired to remain with the troops to which Major Penrose was attached. That deponent had for nearly a year worked for Major Penrose at his house when not on duty, and was engaged to be married to the Major's cook, who is now deponent's wife.

That deponent went with Company O to Fort Brown, Tex., where his wife had preceded him and where she had rented a house about two blocks from the fort in a northeasterly direction and back of the post exchange. That Major Penrose gave deponent permission to be absent from the usual nightly 11 p. m. inspection, and to sleep at the said house in the town every night. That there were no married men's quarters which could be assigned to deponent within the post. That deponent was but very little acquainted with the members of Company O, to which he had been but recently transferred, and because he did not sleep in barracks and got his meals in Major Penrose's house, deponent becoming the Major's cook after his (deponent's) marriage, and his wife, while at Brownsville, keeping house in the house above referred to. Deponent for these reasons saw the members of Company O only while on duty and had had no chance to make close acquaintances among them or, in fact, among the portion of the regiment at Fort Brown. That up to August 13, 1906, deponent had never heard of the fact that a member of his company had been pushed into the water by a citizen, and that he did not hear of the striking of another member of his company on the head with a revolver by a citizen until two days after the incident occurred. That deponent heard no comment whatever on the part of the soldiers upon these two affairs, and had no suspicion and had heard no hint or suggestion to the effect that hard feelings had resulted and that the soldiers were angry or resentful or were likely to retaliate or to try to get even.

That about 7.30 or 8 o'clock on the evening of August 13, 1906, deponent finished his work at Major Penrose's house and went to his wife's home aforementioned, having no knowledge whatever that any trouble was imminent or that anybody suspected that there might be trouble between the soldiers and the citizens at that time or at any other time.

That soon after I got home Private Elmer Brown, of B Company, who cared for Major Penrose's horses, called at the house and remained a few minutes. That no one else called during the evening, and deponent and his wife retired shortly after 9 o'clock. That about midnight his wife woke him up and said that she had heard shots, and other shots were fired immediately after deponent got up. That at 12.20 a. m. the firing had ceased and deponent and his wife went back to bed. Deponent did not open his door and did not leave his house. He did not hear any talking on the streets, did not see any person in the vicinity when he looked out of the window, and did not know where the firing was or what it meant. He remembers a number of dogs barking loudly and heard the bugle blown in the fort, but could not recognize the call as the call to arms. He therefore remained in his house and did not go to the barracks, because he had no idea that the call could be for the purpose of an alarm.

That during the rest of the time the troops remained at Fort Brown deponent was required to sleep in barracks. That he heard the men talk upon the subject of the shooting, most of them refusing to believe that soldiers could have been guilty of it; others who thought that perhaps soldiers had done it spoke of how successful the participants seemed to be in concealing their movements and escaping detection. I heard many of the men say that they would report in a minute anything they learned that would help catch the guilty men. Deponent did not hear any gossip or rumors as to any man having been in the crowd that did the shooting and never learned that any clue had been discovered that in any way indicated who had done the firing. That when some of the soldiers were left at San Antonio on the journey to Fort Reno to be confined at Fort Sam Houston, some of the men said they didn't expect that they would ever see those men again; but that is the only remark deponent heard made about those men.

That on October 4, 1906, after reaching Fort Reno, deponent was transferred back to Company A, and from that time on saw very little of the men of Company C. As soon as Fort Reno was reached deponent was assigned to a house in the yard of the commanding officer's quarters and neither messed nor slept in the company barracks. He mingled with the members of the battalion very little except when on duty, at which times there was very little talking, and the fact that deponent was working for the major may have been another reason why the men of the battalion did not talk very much to deponent about the Brownsville shooting. That deponent never got any information of any kind, in any way, regarding the men who made up the party that did the shooting on August 13, 1906, and he states with the utmost solemnity and positiveness that if he had obtained any such information or even a hint or suggestion or suspicion as to who did it, he would have gone to Major Penrose and reported it at once.

FORT RENO, Oklahoma, ss:

Personally appeared before me the undersigned authority, one Mrs. Charlotte Simmons, who being duly sworn according to law deposes and says, that on the night of August 13, 1906, my husband, Private James A. Simmons (who on that date belonged to Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry), was at home asleep in bed with me in the house which we then occupied about two blocks northeast of the post of Fort Brown, Tex. When I was awakened about 12.10 o'clock a. m. by the sound of firing, he got up and looked out and said that the shooting was so rapid that he was afraid to leave the house. He did not leave the house until about 6.30 a. m. August 14, 1906.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Reno, ss:

Donald D. Hay, being duly sworn, says that he is second lieutenant of Company C, Twenty-Fifth Infantry. I was not very well acquainted with Private Simmons, who was transferred to the Company (C) from Company A, in March, 1906. He worked for Major Penrose. I saw him around the company more or less and regarded him as a very good soldier, obedient, respectful and reliable. I never knew or heard of the slightest misconduct on his part. He was married, and his reputation, as I heard him referred to by the officers, was that of a very useful man who seemed satisfied with the service and desirous of remaining in it. From his reputation I should not think it possible that he could have been a member of the party that did the shooting in Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906.

I would certainly believe him under oath in a case in which he was himself interested. I do not believe he had anything to do with the shooting at Brownsville on August 13, 1906; that he knew the perpetrators, or knew of anybody who did have knowledge of the affair, even though not participants in it. I believe he would have reported it to me if he had been able to gain any knowledge of the shooting or as to any man even remotely connected with it.

Edgar A. Macklin, being duly sworn, says he is captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry; I knew Simmons a little over two years. Last spring he transferred to my company from Company A. I found him always an excellent soldier, who performed all his duties in a soldierly manner. I believe he is honest and reliable. He is married and his wife has worked for officers' families a good deal, as has Simmons himself, and both strongly desire to stay in the Army. His wife worked a good deal for Major Penrose and so has Simmons. I don't think it possible that he could have been implicated in the shooting August 13, 1906, and he was such a very good soldier in every way and made himself so useful and was so desirous of remaining a soldier that I can not believe he would refuse to report or would withhold any information he could get about the Brownsville foray, because I think he perfectly understood the situation and the necessity that the guilty parties should be ferreted out.

He has always been a good man, reliable and trustworthy, and while I did not see him on the night of August 13, 1903, from my knowledge of him, I do not believe he was implicated in any way with the raid on Brownsville, or had any information of the affair, either before or afterwards, of the men guilty of the crime.

Affidavit of Capt. Samuel P. Lyon.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

Samuel P. Lyon, captain Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, states:

I knew Sergeant Frazier for seven years; the last four he was under my immediate command as sergeant and first sergeant of my company. He was always absolutely reliable, truthful, and conscientious in performance of his duties. I got to the company barracks just before Frazier did. The firing was still going on. I think the citizens uptown were doing what was then being done. I saw Frazier coming from the direction of his house in the post; he was assigned to the married men's quarters. He had no rifle. He got his gun and completed the formation of the company. In my own mind I am absolutely sure he could not have been involved in the affair, and that he would not directly or indirectly engage in the shooting, and that he knew nothing about it before the time I saw him that night.

I knew he was anxious to continue in the service. He had served about fourteen years and received a full and honorable discharge on expiration of his enlistment September 20, 1906, reenlisting next day. I am very confident he would report anything he might learn at any time. I instructed my old men and the noncommissioned officers to keep quiet, to keep their eyes and ears open and learn all they could. I must have talked with Frazier about the affair at least three times a week up to his discharge on November 26, 1906. Each time he claimed he was doing everything he could, and I believe him. I never knew him to overlook a dereliction on the part of any man. He was always prompt to report shortcomings and breaches of discipline. He was 6 feet 4 inches tall and fearless in the presence of danger.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 20, 1907.

MILITARY SECRETARY, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to request that I can receive some information on what decisions the men of ex-Companies B, C, D, Twenty-fifth Infantry. I would like to secure reenlistment papers from this office to reenlist in Company G, Twenty-fifth Infantry, as musketeer. I have served over five years and I have been waiting to hear of the reinstatement of all or some of them. Sir, I can get Capt. S. P. Lyon to sign the paper. I have my discharges, one of the Twenty-fourth Infantry and the other from the Twenty-fifth Infantry; the Twenty-fourth, character very good, and the other Paragraph 1, Special Orders, War Department, 226.

Letter of Hoytt Robinson.

SHARPSBURG, KY., February 26, 1908.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to ask of the War Department what considerations are had on behalf of the men or to my own case. I would like to know, please, just what is doing after I have spent five years in the Army of the United States. I would like to have a place to work in the United States Quartermaster's Department. I am a man and I have a letter of recommendation, but I would like to have a good discharge. It is very hard to suffer for something that some one did and you do not know anything about it. I can prove that I did not shoot, and I don't know of any one that did. I would be pleased if I was thought of enough to get a place as watchman at some custom-house. I do not feel right to be out of the service of the United States, and I do beg the honor of the Department to notice this letter. If I could or can be recommended to the civil service as a laborer in any Department, I would feel glad to take a job as night watchman in the custom-house in Cincinnati, Ohio, to work. Please inform me of what can be done for me. I would like to have a job at any recruiting office, United States Army, or anything that could be decided for me.

I am waiting a reply.
Yours, respectfully,

Samuel P. Lyon, being duly sworn, says he is captain, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and knew Musician Robinson, who was a member of his company for two and one-half years. That he was a man of first-rate habits and an excellent soldier, whom deponent always found to be honest and perfectly reliable. That he was musician of the guard on the night of August 13, 1900, and sounded the call to arms on orders from Major Penrose personally, and alarmed the garrison. That deponent thinks it impossible that Robinson could have participated in the shooting, and does not believe he knew anything as to the guilty parties. Deponent does believe that had Robinson known who they were he would have reported to deponent as soon as he learned it. That Robinson had had no trouble with the citizens of Brownsville, and so far as deponent had observed him, was not a man to harbor morbid or resentful feelings.

FORT RENO, OKLA., December 19, 1906.

The RECRUITING OFFICER, Fort Reno, Okla.

SIR: I have the honor to request that I be enlisted in the service of the United States, under the provisions of the instructions for recruiting officers, dated Military Secretary's Office, December 12, 1906.

I was discharged November 20, 1906, per Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, series 1906.

My service is as follows: From January 14, 1885, to January 13, 1890, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; character excellent, faithful, and reliable. From January 22, 1890, to January 21, 1895, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; character excellent. From January 22, 1895, to January 21, 1898, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and Hospital Corps; character excellent. From January 22, 1898, to January 21, 1901, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; character excellent. From January 22, 1901, to January 21, 1904, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; character excellent. From January 22, 1904, to November 20, 1906, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; character without honor.

My personal affidavit and letters from Capt. S. P. Lyon, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who was in command of my company August 13, 1906, and Major Penrose, Twenty-fifth Infantry, post commander at that date, are inclosed herewith.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

To all RECRUITING OFFICERS:

Applications to reenlist from former members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who were discharged under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, must be made in writing and be accompanied by such evidence, also in writing, as the applicant may desire to submit to show that he was neither implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, nor withheld any evidence that might lead to the discovery of the perpetrators thereof. Recruiting officers to whom such former soldiers may apply for reenlistment will advise them of these requirements and will forward the applications, when properly prepared, to The Military Secretary of the Army for the consideration and investigation of the War Department.

[1100224, M. S. O.]

By order of the Secretary of War:

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Military Secretary.

Affidavit of Charles Dade.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
Post of Fort Reno, ss:

Charles Dade, being duly sworn, deposes and says he is the man who was discharged as cook of said company on November 26, 1906, pursuant to paragraph 1, Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906.

That he is at present employed as cook in the family of Lieut. H. S. Grier, Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Fort Reno, Okla., and that his wife, Emma Dade, resides with him at Fort Reno.

That deponent has applied for reenlistment in the Army, and desires that his application may be granted.

That deponent accompanied that portion of the first battalion, Twenty-fifth Infantry, that was moved from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown, Tex., in July, 1906, he being then cook in Company D. That about a week after arriving in Brownsville deponent rented from Mr. Jim Brown a small house in the town just outside the wall of the military reservation and about 20 yards from the barracks occupied by D Company, and received proper permission from the post authorities to take up his quarters therein with his wife, who came to Brownsville with him, and also his wife's daughter, Bessie, who is the wife of First Sergt. C. H. Barbour, of Company A of the regiment, Company A being at Fort Washakie, Wyo., and expecting soon to join the rest of the first battalion at Fort Brown. Deponent, his wife, and stepdaughter were living in said house on August 13, 1906.

Deponent heard about the trouble which occurred between some people of the town and the soldiers from C Company, one of whom was said to have been pushed into the water and the other to have been struck on the head with a revolver. These matters were considered by the soldiers to have been cases of unjust treatment on the part of the townspeople, but deponent did not observe that they gave rise to any particular excitement or angry feeling on the part of the soldiers. Deponent did not go into the squad rooms or into the men's quarters except occasionally, and did not sleep in the barracks at all during the period between our arrival in Fort Brown and the night of August 13, 1906. That up to the said night deponent never received any hint or intimation that there was likely to be trouble between the citizens and the soldiers, and he went to bed in his house at 9 o'clock that night without any suspicion whatever that any such trouble would ever arise. That deponent's wife and Mrs. Barbour were with him in the house during the entire evening and retired about the same time. That about midnight deponent was awakened by his wife, who said that he had better get up; that shooting was going on. Deponent heard shots; pulled on his shoes without the socks, put on his khaki trousers, and went out. The shots sounded as though fired near the telegraph office, near the fort gate. Deponent got over the reservation wall, about 4 feet high, and went directly to the company kitchen, where he found the second cook, James Duncan, of the company, who slept in the cook's room, adjoining the kitchen. Duncan was partly dressed, but there was no light lit. The call to arms sounded as deponent reached the porch of the kitchen. Duncan at once joined the company and deponent took charge of the kitchen, remaining there the rest of the night, watching at the door to see what he could see or hear. Deponent saw Corporal Powell, the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters, moving around; he also noticed the sentinel who was at the post extending between the line of barracks and the wall. That he saw no other persons in the quarters or the vicinity until the company came back.

That the next morning deponent heard that the citizens were claiming that soldiers had done the firing. The soldiers, in their talk among themselves, as deponent heard it, seemed to refuse to believe that any firing at all had been done by soldiers. A very few days after the shooting I was sent for to come to the orderly room—the company office in the barracks—and my affidavit was taken down by Lieutenant West, who had returned from leave after the 13th of August, and I afterward swore to it before Captain Lyon. From the talk I had with the men I am positive that, while we were at Fort Brown, the men of Company D did not believe for a moment that soldiers had done the shooting, and that all were very certain no member of our company had participated in it. Even while we were restricted to the post and prevented by orders from going outside, such sentiment as I heard expressed by the men was positively against the idea that it was possible that our men could be guilty. That deponent never, while at Fort Brown, heard any suggestion or hint that could have helped to discover those who did the shooting.

That after coming to Fort Reno it was impressed upon us that we must exert ourselves to find out the guilty parties, and that we would be discharged without honor if they were not discovered. The men then seemed to refuse to be convinced that such an outcome of the matter would actually result, and seemed to think that it would be finally determined not to discharge, without honor, the old soldiers of long service who knew they hadn't done anything wrong. We were confined to the post here also, but the guilty men never, as far as deponent heard, said or did anything to direct suspicion toward them. That there was no gossip or rumor going around as to who the guilty men were. That deponent never heard a thing on that subject. That there was talk and gossip about the orders for discharge, and about what was going to be done with the men and what they were going to do, but absolutely nothing on the subject of the guilt of any soldiers or their innocence. That the old soldiers spoke frequently as to the bitterness of being compelled to suffer because some one else had committed this wrong, and deponent is very sure that the universal feeling among the men of long service in Company D was that the slightest clew obtained by any of them as to the actual perpetrators would have been reported to the captain at once. That deponent has several times heard Private William R. Jones, of D Company, say before the discharge that he would like to know who the scoundrels were that had done the shooting, and that if he knew he would surely turn them up. That deponent never heard the men suggest that an informer would get into trouble or be maltreated by the guilty parties, and as far as deponent could learn there was no fear on any one's part that there would be any danger in reporting whatever a man might learn.

Emma Dade, being duly sworn, deposes and says that she is the wife of Charles Dade, who was discharged from Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, on November 26, 1906, and has been his wife for about nine years. That deponent has a daughter, Bessie, who is the wife of First Sergeant Charles H. Harbour, of Company A, of the same regiment.

44 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR BEENLISTMENT.

That deponent and Mrs. Barbour went with Company D to Fort Brown, Tex., in July, 1906, and lived with said Dade in the house, rented from Mr. Brown, just back of the barracks of D Company. That on the evening of August 13, 1906, deponent's husband came from his duties to the house between 8 and 9 o'clock and went right to bed; but deponent and her daughter sat up for a little while after he retired, watching the little children who were having a party in a house near by. We went to bed at about 9 o'clock, and were all asleep very soon.

That about midnight deponent was wakened by the sound of firing close at hand. Dade was fast asleep in bed. I woke him up, and he got up and went to the company barracks.

Samuel P. Lyon, captain, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, states:
I have known Cook Dade seven years. The past four years he was head cook of my company. He is absolutely honest and a trustworthy man. I am certain he took no part in the shooting of August 13, 1906, and that he had no knowledge, either before or after the fact, of the connection of any man with it.

The roll of my company was called at the wall where we were posted as soon as formed, and I heard Dade answer to his name from the back porch of the company barracks near the kitchen door. I know his voice well and recognized it at that time. He is married and has over twenty years service to his credit. I know of the hopes he entertained of being able to serve out his thirty years to entitle him to retirement. I am certain that no racial prejudice or desire to shield guilty men, or any fear of consequences to himself to follow the disclosure of what he might learn would have deterred him from reporting anything he might have learned. And I believe he has done everything that has been in his power to find out what he could to help discover the guilty.

Affidavit of Capt. Edgar A. Macklin.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

Edgar A. Macklin, captain, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, states:

As day was beginning to break on August 14, 1906, I was at the main gate of Fort Brown, where Cook Dade's wife and stepdaughter came to me in their night clothing and light wrappers. They said they had been in Company D's kitchen or dining-room since early in the disturbance and wanted to get to their home, which was outside the reservation and just across the road, before the men saw them. I think this shows that Dade and his family knew nothing beforehand about the affair or they would have been up and fully dressed.

Just after his discharge Mrs. Macklin spoke to him about cooking for us. He said he would do anything to be allowed to remain around the post and the soldiers; that he couldn't bear to leave; that wages was no object and that he should not abandon hope of being permitted to reenlist. He cooked for us about a month. The house was not locked up, day or night; much money was kept in it, the funds of my company, the post exchange, etc., and he knew that fact. He and his wife did most of the cooking for the post exchange and baked pies and cake for it. Their account was always found correct and honest. On one occasion we left him for two hours or more alone in the house in charge of our little boy of 6 years. We always found him honest and trustworthy.

Affidavit of Second Lieut. Harry S. Grier.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

Harry S. Grier, second lieutenant Twenty-fifth Infantry, states:

I never came much in contact with Dade until after his last discharge. Since about January 1, 1907, he has been cook in my family and I have learned the excellent reputation he bears. We have found him wholly trustworthy, honest, sober, and industrious. Several times we have left him alone in the house, sometimes with the baby, while we were out for the evening. We think him absolutely straightforward and all right. I think he would be the very last man in the battalion to participate in the Brownsville affair. If he learned anything about it I think he would disclose it immediately. I think he is without fear of any bad element there may be among the men and would not be deterred from doing everything he could to bring to justice the men guilty of the outrage. During the move from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown I was in charge of the train kitchen and saw something of Dade, whom I made chief cook for the trip. I noticed the way he enforced the orders against men entering the cooking car. He was efficient and was able to and did enforce discipline on that car.

I have known Cook Dade since about June, 1906, and I concur in Captain Lyon's statement regarding him, made to Major Goodier at Fort Reno, as to the absolutely honest and trustworthy character of Dade, and as to his longing to remain in service until his retirement. I have not had the same opportunities for observation as Captain Lyon, but it is my opinion also that no racial prejudice or desire to shield the guilty or fear of personal consequences following his disclosure of his knowledge would have deterred him from reporting whatever he might learn.

RECRUITING STATION, U. S. ARMY,
El Paso, Tex., January 13, 1907

THE MILITARY SECRETARY, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: AS provided by circular letter from The Military Secretary's Office, dated December 12, 1906, I have the honor to forward herewith application of James Duncan to reenlist in the U. S. Army, together with six inclosures, as noted below.

Very respectfully,

E. S. WRIGHT,
Captain, First Cavalry, Recruiting Officer.

Application for permission to reenlist.

FORT BLISS,
El Paso, Tex., January 12, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I respectfully apply for permission to reenlist for Company E, Twenty-fifth Infantry, the company commander of that organization having signified his willingness to have me in his company.

The facts are mainly stated in the papers which are attached hereto. On August 13, 1906, I was cook of Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, with station at Brownsville, Tex., and was there at the time of the riot. I have read the statements of fact in the accompanying papers, and those statements are true.

I was neither implicated in the affray, nor have I any knowledge of who were the guilty parties.

I was discharged ten days after the riot, by reason of expiration of service, having then completed six years in D Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and was discharged both times with character excellent. Except for that ten days I had little time in which I could become familiar with the actual facts of the situation at Brownsville, because the men were not free in talking about the same to each other, although it is the general impression that there was a great deal of talk about the shooting up of the town among the soldiers.

On the 28th of September, 1906, I reenlisted in G Company of the Twenty-fifth Infantry and was sent to Fort Bliss, and was there discharged under provisions of War Department order dated November 9, 1906.

I am still at El Paso and am willing to reenlist in E Company of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, now stationed here, and I have no objections to going to the Philippines.

Very respectfully,

JAMES DUNCAN.

Affidavit of James Duncan.

FORT BLISS, EL PASO, State of Texas, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, one James Duncan, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he has carefully read the statements of fact in the papers accompanying this application, and the facts therein stated which affect in any way the Brownsville affray are true according to his actual knowledge and information and belief.

The deponent further says that he was not implicated in the Brownsville riot, nor has he any knowledge which would lead to the detection of the guilty parties. And further deponent saith not.

Statement of Capt. Charles F. Bates.

FORT BLISS, TEX., January 11, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following statement in regard to the services and character of James Duncan, who until the order of the War Department, dated November 9, 1906, was a soldier in the Twenty-fifth Infantry. He was a cook in Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and was stationed at Brownsville, Tex., on August 13, 1906. He has two discharges covering six years' service from Capt. Samuel P. Lyon, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and both discharges bear the character "excellent." Duncan was in Company D when I had command of the organization for about a year and a half in 1901 and 1902. I made him a noncommissioned officer and subsequently a company cook, which is a very trying position. He was efficient, faithful, and satisfactory. During long and trying tropical service I never knew him to need a reprimand.

Duncan is a quiet and trustworthy soldier, whose word can always be relied on. He does not herd at all or associate with in any way men who would be likely to do or know anything about an assassin's work or plans. I have never known him to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor. He fully realizes that a soldier can not under any circumstances be permitted to exchange murder for insult.

I attach true copy of a letter given by Major Torrey to me while Duncan was a member of the company. This letter is evidential of the state and discipline of the company while Duncan was a member of the organization. Shortly after the Twenty-fifth Infantry returned from the Philippines, D Company competed in an eight-company drill competition at Fort Niobrara and was the successful competitor in two out of three company drills. This is likewise mentioned to show that the company in which Duncan made his fine reputation was an extremely efficient organization.

I realize fully that at present practically no direct or new evidence can be given in support of this application for permission to reenlist. The men who could give evidence are now widely scattered and their addresses are unknown. It is possible that testimony which has been gathered on behalf of other men and is now on file in Washington may be also available in behalf of Duncan. The men of D Company had had little if any trouble with any of the citizens of Brownsville. The motive therefore was lacking for any secret call to arms or midnight raid.

Capt. Samuel P. Lyon, commanding D Company, reports that he and his first sergeant went down the line of D Company and saw that every man was present with the exception of two men who were on pass, neither of whom was the applicant. This careful check was made within about five minutes after the call to arms had been sounded, according to Captain Lyon's sworn testimony, a partial copy of which is appended.

The Army and Navy Register of December 20, 1906, has a report of the examination of the Brownsville inspectors by the General Staff and the check roll call of Captain Lyon is referred to as the most accurate of the roll calls.

Duncan was discharged ten days after the Brownsville affray and therefore did not have a long period in which it would have been possible to hear conversation or get at the facts surrounding the Brownsville riot. My experience leads me to think that where there has been a homicide among the colored troops, there would be little or no interchange of conversation on the subject.

On the 23rd day of September, 1906, Duncan reenlisted and was sent to Fort Bliss, Tex., where he was assigned to G Company of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, from which organization he was discharged pursuant to the War Department order dated November 9, 1906.

There are but two other soldiers of D Company, namely, Sergeants Israel Harris and Jacob Frazier, of whom I could speak as highly as I have of James Duncan.

He is a strong and able-bodied man, 6 feet and one-half inch tall and perfectly able to make excellent wages in civil life. He feels keenly the disgrace of his position and is genuinely attached to the service.

The applicant regrets that he can not present direct and positive evidence that he was not concerned in the Brownsville riot and that he has no knowledge as to who the guilty parties are. He hopes that his honorable and excellent service in the U. S. Army can be considered and that he can be restored to duty with the regiment.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES F. BATES,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

A true extract copy of the sworn testimony of Capt. Samuel P. Lyon, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, taken from Senate Document No. 155 for the year 1906:

Q. Where were you on August 13, 1906, when shooting commenced at Brownsville?—A. I was asleep in my quarters at Brownsville, Tex.

Q. When and where did you first see any of the enlisted men of the command?—A. In front of my quarters. In front of D Company's barracks. The men were falling in when I got over there.

Q. What enlisted men did you see before the firing ceased?—A. I saw practically my whole company. The first man I spoke to was my quartermaster-sergeant, Green.

Q. Can you name any others you saw before the firing ceased?—A. I saw my artificer, Newton, and my noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters, Corporal Powell. Those are the only three that I can name, as I did not speak to any other men.

Q. You saw these three men before the firing ceased?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was the roll called first?—A. The company was formed and the men counted off. The commanding officer directed me to put my men along the wall dividing the post from Brownsville at once. I did that and then the roll was called. The first sergeant with a lantern, and myself, went down the line and saw that every man was present; that is, that a man answered the name of every man. I should say that was within five minutes after the call to arms.

Q. How long after the last shot had been fired?—A. I couldn't say, because after the main shooting was over there were scattering shots from the town; that is, as the mayor explained to me, the people were frightened, and that they were shooting out of their windows, so that those shots were occasionally heard quite a little while after the main shooting.

50 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

Q. Were there any absentees at this time?—A. There were two men of my company who were on pass. Their guns were in the racks. I had the guns verified as soon as roll was called.

Q. Were the rest of the men all present?—A. The other men were all present except these two that were on pass.

Q. Who were they?—A. Private Walter Johnson and Corporal Charles H. Hawkins.

A true extract copy from the report of the hearing of Inspector-General Garlington, U. S. Army, and Major Blocksom, Inspector-General's Department, before the first division of the General Staff on the affray at Brownsville, Tex., which hearing was conducted by the order of the President and led to the recommendation of the acting chief of staff for the trial by court-martial of Maj. C. W. Penrose and Capt. E. A. Macklin, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

The report of this hearing is taken from the Army and Navy Register of December 20, 1906.

Inspector-General Garlington said on his hearing: "Of course it was very dark and the testimony shows that they didn't want to light any lanterns because they thought that the people in the town would shoot wherever the lights were; and the only authenticated roll call was made after the men were formed along the wall, and that was in Captain Lyon's company, in which he testified that an answer was made to every name called."

52 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

This recruit has been reexamined before leaving the station and found to be satisfactory.

JANUARY, 1907.

Captain, First Cavalry, Recruiting Officer.

Letter of James Duncan.

FORT BLISS, TEXAS, January 30, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C.
(Through recruiting officer.)

SIR: In response to first indorsement War Department, dated January 21, 1907, in re application of James Duncan, I have the honor to say that I was discharged ten days after the Brownsville riot occurred. During that ten days the enlisted men of the Brownsville battalion were under the impression that it was not settled as to whether the citizens had done any firing on the post. The men knew that their officers believed that there was an attack on the post that night and every one was much worked up. My being an enlisted man in the battalion for only ten days after the Brownsville affray prevented my having a chance, after the excitement died down, to find out the actual facts, for the reason that the men did not want to talk about the matter. There was a feeling that if a man were accused on suspicion and should be turned over to the Texas courts the man arrested would very likely be lynched or found guilty in the Texas courts even if he were innocent. Therefore the men very generally during the stay of the battalion in Texas were not willing to discuss the matter.

Of course my being an enlisted man in the battalion for such a short time gave me no opportunity to come before Inspector-General Garlington. I never saw him and did not hear his proclamation or order to the troops.

I am perfectly willing to be sworn and examined on the Brownsville affray by the Judge-Advocate-General or any other official of the Government.

I did not think so at the time, but I believe now that a limited number of soldiers were out that night and did part of the shooting. The civilians may have done some of the shooting through their own houses. Captain Lyon in his sworn testimony says that the mayor of Brownsville told him that the people were frightened and were firing out of their windows. A part of the bullet holes in the houses may have been made by their own shots. One of the chief reasons why I think some few of the soldiers were responsible is that the Cowen house, where the children's party was going on, was shot up. This house is right next to Mr. Tate's house. Mr. Tate struck a soldier of C Company with a revolver, so that the soldier's face was bloody and he had to be treated temporarily at the hospital. There was probably a mistake in getting the right house. I believe, however, that it is an error to think that many soldiers were out that night, for the citizens' testimony was much exaggerated on account of prejudice. I believe it was confined to a very small number of soldiers who may have had personal grievances.

Of one thing I am sure, that after the affair took place it was very difficult to get any one to talk. I think the innocent men were in a state of suspense for fear they should be accused on suspicion.

I have always lived in the South myself, and the discrimination about white and colored bars never occurred to me as a grievance. That was what I had always seen.

I can make an affidavit to the following facts if they are of any value: When I was aroused on the night of the 13th of August about midnight, I went to the door of D Company barracks and I saw behind a clump of trees in the garrison road flashes from several firearms, perhaps 10 or 12. These flashes resembled fireflies and seemed to be elevated. The firing was on the garrison road opposite the interval between B and C Company barracks. Some of these shots seemed to be Government rifles; that is, either the old Krags or the modern Springfield. A part of the shots seemed to come from other firearms, which make a much louder report than modern Government arms. At the moment I thought it was some trouble between citizens and soldiers.

I noticed a man standing in the door of the telegraph office who seemed to be watching the shooting. This man was about 100 or 75 feet from where I stood.

I could see him by reason of the lamps at the post garrison gate. I have since been informed that this was the telegraph operator.

I am quite anxious to go to Kansas City. I understand that there are a number of discharged men of the Brownsville battalion there. I believe that, now that they are outside of Texas, those few men who really have any knowledge as to the guilty parties would be willing to help in running down the facts, so that the men really guilty can be punished and the innocent men can then be freed from the charge of having shielded those actually responsible.

I hope that a decision can be reached in my case prior to February 14, otherwise I shall lose the benefit of my six years' continuous service.

I can at the present time submit no further evidence than that already forwarded.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES DUNCAN,

Affidavit of James Duncan.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, City of El Paso, ss:

JAMES DUNCAN, being duly sworn, says he was given a full and honorable discharge as a soldier of said company upon the expiration of his enlistment on August 23, 1906. That he accompanied the troops to Fort Reno, starting from Brownsville on August 25, 1906. That he went to Knoxville, Tenn., four or five days later, and afterwards re-enlisted for Company G, Twenty-fifth Infantry, from which he was discharged without honor on November 14, 1906. That deponent went with Company D from Fort Niobrara to Fort Brown in July, 1906. He was then a cook, Charles Dade being head cook. That Dade lived just outside the reservation wall with his wife and stepdaughter, and deponent occupied the cook's room adjoining the company kitchen at the barracks, down stairs. Deponent is not married. That every other morning deponent got up at 3 o'clock, other days arising at about 5. That he had gone out into the town of Brownsville but twice during the stay of the company at Fort Brown; once with Private W. E. Jones, to take a walk, going as far as the railroad depot, and on the other occasion going with said Jones to a drug store to buy some powders. We went into a Mexican's beer saloon and had one drink of beer apiece on the first visit to town. Deponent never entered any other saloon on any other occasion in Brownsville, and had had no difficulty whatever with any of the people living in Brownsville. James Newton, of C Company, was raised with me in Greenville, S. C., and I knew him as a boy at home. I met him as a soldier at Fort Niobrara. He was not a chum of deponent's and did not go with deponent's friends. That deponent had been in his company but once while they served at the same posts. That said Newton had the reputation of being a drinking man, and when under the influence of liquor of being meddlesome and inclined to interfere in the business of other people. I heard of his having been hit on the head with a revolver by a citizen some time on the morning of the day after the affair. The general talk on the subject was that Newton was the victim of prejudice and had been hurt without sufficient reason or justification. The men of deponent's company did not appear to be much stirred up by the matter and there was no particular excitement over it. Deponent knew, by sight only, Private Reid, of C Company, who was pushed off into the water, and heard about that affair the same night it occurred. Reid and Private Gill had been across the river and returned in a Mexican's boat, as deponent heard from Gill, and when the landing was reached a customs officer at the landing shoved Reid, without any apparent reason, into the water just as he stepped from the boat. I heard nothing else about the case from anybody but Gill, and did not know that the men of the three companies were worked up over the matter to any extent. Deponent had heard the general talk from time to time about the soldiers being debarred from the saloons where white folks were served. No such thing had happened at Fort Niobrara and the general sentiment among the drinking men, particularly those who had not been brought up in the South, was that the refusal to serve them with drinks was wrong and unjust.

On the evening of August 13, 1906, an order was issued that all men must be in garrison at 8 o'clock, and patrols were sent out to bring in everybody whether on pass or not. I was thinking of going out myself, and was notified by the sentry on that beat near the gate about half past 6 that evening that nobody was allowed to go out. Deponent did not learn the reason, but his own opinion was that it was desired to keep the men out of possible danger because of the reported assault of a white woman by a soldier not long before. Private Ash of D Company came in late for supper that evening and told deponent that he had been sent on patrol down to the ferry to stop all soldiers going over to Mexico and to send in to the post all men returning on the ferry. He said he thought he had been in a dangerous predicament, out in the town alone on that errand; and deponent presumed that there was some excitement in the town on account of the rumored assault case. But no other talk was heard by deponent from any others of the company, and everything appeared to be just the same as usual around the company barracks and among the men. Deponent went to bed a little after 9 o'clock in the cook's room. Private Robert Williams slept in the same room. He was on duty as dining room man and had his bunk in the same room with deponent. Both retired at about the same time.

That deponent was awakened by shots about midnight and took it for granted there was a fire. That he roused Private Williams and then looked out the window and the door but could see no light of a fire. Deponent saw the flashes from fire arms outside the wall near the alley that runs parallel with the street that starts at the main fort gate and runs at right angles with the reservation wall, and concluded that there was no fire, but that there might be trouble between the soldiers and police. The bugles had been blowing also and deponent then recognized that the call was "to arms." Cook Charles Dade then came into the kitchen closely followed by his wife and his stepdaughter, Mrs. Barbour, the women having nothing on but some wraps thrown around them. They went right into our sleeping room before I had dressed myself. They were very much alarmed. That deponent pulled on his trousers and his shoes without socks, wearing no shirt or coat but his white undershirt. Deponent then went out through the dining room and on to the company parade, Dade remaining in charge of the kitchen. Williams went out with deponent. Captain Lyon and First Sergeant Frazier were there, and the men were falling into ranks with their rifles. I spoke to Sergeant Frazier and he told me to get my rifle and get into line at once. On the way up stairs deponent met Corporal Powell coming down and asked if the arm racks were unlocked. He answered "Yes," and on reaching the squad room the rack of the first squad, in which deponent's rifle was kept, was empty, but there were several in the second squad's rack, and deponent took one of those. There were still other men in the squad room, moving around getting dressed and taking their arms. There was no light, and not much could be seen on account of the darkness. Deponent then fell into the ranks of the company. There was much confusion and disorder, which the captain tried to quiet by speaking to the men and getting them to make an orderly formation. The captain walked down the line seeing that each man had ammunition, and asking us all if we had the 20 rounds of ammunition each was supposed to have. The deponent heard quite a number say they had none, and they were given some by men standing near who had enough to divide. I had no belt on myself and several other men were in the same condition; but my cartridges were lying on a shelf where I put them when I took them out of my belt preparatory to the practice march that morning. We were not allowed to carry them on the marches. I took them off the shelf and put them in my pocket as soon as I put on my trousers.

About this time Major Penrose came across the parade and called to Captain Lyon, to march his company to the wall and take position along it. The company was strung out by the sergeants at intervals behind the wall and remained there about six or eight minutes. Deponent was stationed down about 50 feet from the river, about at D Company's sink. It was perfectly dark there and deponent could see nobody at all in the town and saw nobody but the men of Company D. When deponent first went to the kitchen door, when roused by the shots, he saw a man standing in the door of the telegraph office near the main gate of the fort. Two lamps on the main gate posts gave some light and deponent thinks there was a street light in the vicinity also. This man was from 75 to 100 feet from deponent at the time. He did nothing as far as deponent saw. After the company had been stationed a little time at the wall, the company was assembled and deponent heard the Major order Captain Lyon to patrol the town and arrest any soldier he saw there and any character he thought was suspicious. The company was out on this duty about forty-five minutes, but found no soldiers, and made no arrests.

The general talk among the men, following this night, was that the post had been fired on by the citizens because of the ill-feeling arising out of the refusal to let the men drink in the saloons with the white men. I heard that the citizens were claiming that Government cartridges and empty shells and clips had been picked up in the streets and that they were claiming to Major Penrose that soldiers had done the shooting. The men were very careful and reticent, and did surprisingly little talking about the affair. I was myself afraid to say much or to ask many questions or to be seen talking with others, fearing that I might be suspected of having taken part in the shooting or of knowing something about it. That deponent never heard any gossip or rumor in any way connecting any soldier with the shooting, and never got any hint or suggestion from anyone that any soldier was suspected of knowing anything at all about it. That there was no talk about the confinement of the 12 soldiers and the one discharged soldier who were put in the guard house and afterwards taken to Fort Sam Houston, except to the effect that it appeared they were suspected. There was no opinion expressed, as far as deponent heard, among the men to the effect that they were guilty or otherwise. That up to the time deponent left the command at Fort Reno, as stated above, the great mass of the soldiers refused to believe that soldiers were guilty, and the evidence of the finding of the empty shells and parts of ammunition was considered no evidence at all by them at that time. That the noncommissioned officers did not make any efforts that deponent saw or heard to get among the men and find out who the guilty ones were. And that as the men were kept closely to the post, both at Fort Brown and Fort Reno, up to the time deponent left, the guilty men, if soldiers, were constantly on the alert and were given no opportunity to relax their vigilance and watchfulness of themselves.

That deponent has made application for reenlistment, and requests that favorable consideration may be given thereto. That he solemnly swears he did not take part in the shooting aforesaid, in any way, and that he had no knowledge either before or after the affair as to the actual participants, and that he has never had and has not now any knowledge of the matter or any information that would tend or assist in the ascertaining of the truth. That he has no motive or desire to conceal the truth, and would willingly and gladly disclose anything he might learn regarding it.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

SAMUEL P. LYON, being duly sworn, says he is captain Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and knows said Duncan, who was given a full and honorable discharge upon the expiration of his enlistment as a cook of Company D soon after the Brownsville shooting affray of August 13, 1906, and afterwards reenlisted in Company G and was discharged therefrom without honor pursuant to Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, Series 1906.

That said Duncan was second cook in deponent's company about four years and was a superior kind of a man. That deponent knows his voice well and heard him answer at the roll call at the company barracks on the night of August 13, 1906. That he was a man of excellent habits, a good soldier in every way, truthful and an absolutely honest man. That deponent is sure said Duncan had nothing to do with the shooting that night. That he liked the service and was anxious to stay in it, and would have been pretty sure to report any information he obtained that would help to uncover the facts in the case.

Affidavit of Capt. Charles F. Bates.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, City of El Paso, ss:

CHARLES F. BATES, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a captain in the United States Army and that he has known James Duncan, one of the discharged soldiers of the First Battalion, Twenty-fifth Infantry, for about six years. He was a private soldier in D Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry, when I was in command of that organization, for about a year and a half. I came to have great confidence in his character as a man and his faithful performance of all duty as a soldier. I made him a corporal and subsequently a company cook, which is a trying position especially requiring honesty and steadiness to the exacting work. I never knew Duncan to miss a call, or be under the influence of intoxicating liquor, or to even need a reprimand. He does not and never did, so far as my knowledge goes, associate with the lawless and unruly element. He always was a quiet, peaceable soldier, rarely leaving the barracks or vicinity of post except on official business. This soldier's service is limited, being only a little over six years. He has, however, two excellent discharges from Capt. Samuel P. Lyon. From my knowledge of his fine character as a soldier, I am willing to endorse him to the same extent as I would First Sergt. Jacob Frazier of D Company and Sergt. Israel Harris also of D Company. These three men, Frazier, Harris, and Duncan are all men of the same high grade and are incapable of doing or furthering an assassin's work. I am confident that James Duncan would not shield under any circumstances a band of criminals. I am sure if he had any clew whatever the same would be put immediately at the disposal of the Government.

Duncan's being discharged ten days after the Brownsville affray on August 13, 1906, gave him only a very limited time in which to hear any talk about the circumstances, or gather any clues. He did not reenlist in the First Battalion, but reenlisted for the Twenty-fifth Infantry and was sent to Fort Bliss, where he was discharged, under the order dated November 9, 1906.

From my knowledge of both colored and white soldiers, I regard it as a most improbable thing a homicide having occurred; that there would have been any exchange of conversation on the subject except perhaps among the few who may have been criminally responsible. Those men who might have had a hand in the affray would be extremely close-mouthed. They would be especially fearful of being turned over to the uncertain course of justice in the Texas courts.

If the normal order of garrison life had been restored after August 13, and the garrison stationed at a Northern town, there would undoubtedly be men who would get to drinking and betray those criminally responsible.

But with all passes cut off and the men under suspicion for several months, the chances for leaks became very small.

I regard the Brownsville affray as limited to a very small number of men. In the testimony collected by Mr. Purdy (Senate Document 155, part 2), taking all the affidavits together, the total number of bullet holes claimed in houses is about 45. Cartridge shells found by citizens were about 30 in number. This would tend to indicate a very small number of aimed shots at the Brownsville houses. It also indicates that a very small number of men could have participated in the affray, and therefore the chances for a large number of men knowing about the men actually concerned, are not good. When Captain Lyon made his midnight patrol, a large number of citizens in khaki uniform armed with either revolvers or rifles were seen. The citizens looking out of the windows may have seen some of their own citizens and policemen and mistaken them for colored soldiers. Captain Lyon's affidavit says that the mayor of Brownsville told him that the citizens were frightened and were shooting out of their own windows. Some of the bullet holes in their houses may have been made by their own shooting. If there had been so many soldiers charging through the streets, some of them would have been certainly hit by the citizens' gun fire. All these facts tend strongly to the conclusion that a small number of men were actually in the affray.

The steadiness and high discipline of the First Battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry for four years is evidenced by the following extract from a letter of Mr. C. H. Cornell, of Valentine, Nebr., where the Brownsville soldiers were four years prior to going to Brownsville:

Letter of C. H. Cornell, Chairman Republican Congressional committee, dated Valentine, Nebr., November 30, 1906.

"History of First Battalion at post prior to its station in Brownsville.

"Two battalions (eight companies) of that regiment came to Fort Niobrara for station directly from the Philippines in 1902. They remained at that post continually until its abandonment, in July last, when in leaving they were assigned to stations in Texas. Valentine, 4½ miles distant, is the railway station where all the post's business was transacted, and having a population of about 1,200, it sustained very much the same relation to Fort Niobrara as Brownsville does to Fort Brown, Tex. Consequently they were in and out of town constantly, singly or in numbers, trading, loading, or attending errands, and it is said by our citizens rightly that they were well behaved, and no citizen not looking for it had the least excuse for getting into trouble with any one of them."

The foregoing is an extract from the letter of a very unfriendly critic, who yet has to make the foregoing admission of the good character of the men toward peaceable, law-abiding citizens.

Mr. Cornell refers particularly to a homicide of a disreputable woman, who was mortally wounded in a low resort 4 miles from the town of Valentine. I understand cowboys used to go to this resort and it is not beyond the range of possibility that they may have been concerned in this shooting.

These circumstances are mentioned to show the orderly character and reputation of the First Battalion, of which James Duncan was a highly respected member.

I believe he would be, if reenlisted, a valuable and faithful soldier in the United States Army.

Letter of James Newton.

8540 CALUMET AVENUE,
Chicago, Ill., March 23, 1908.

TO THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I, James Newton, formerly a member of Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, U. S. Army, discharged by Special Orders, No. 266, November 9, 1906, beg to state that I was not implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, nor do I hold any evidence that might lead to the discovery of the perpetrators thereof. I do hereby make application for reenlistment in said regiment.

I am, your obedient servant,

JAMES NEWTON,
3540 Calumet Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Certificate of Samuel P. Lyon.

FORT RENO, OKLA., January 31, 1907.

To whom it may concern:

James Newton has been known to me for more than one year, during which time he has been a private in my company, D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

I know him to be a man of first-rate habits and an excellent soldier.

I believe him to be absolutely honest and reliable.

I am certain in my own mind that he was in no way implicated in the shooting at Brownsville, Tex., August 13 and 14, 1906, and I am convinced that he has no knowledge as to the persons who were so implicated.

I recommend his reenlistment in the service of the United States, and would be glad to have him again in my company.

SAMUEL P. LYON,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding Company D.

Affidavit of Capt. Samuel P. Lyon.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

SAMUEL P. LYON, being duly sworn, says he is captain Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and knew said Newton about a year as a member of said company. That he was a man of first-class habits, an excellent soldier, and deponent has every reason to believe him thoroughly honest and perfectly reliable. That in the absence of Lieutenant West of said company, which included August 13, 1906, Private Newton was authorized to occupy the Lieutenant's quarters and care for the property therein. That deponent knows that Lieutenant West was thoroughly convinced of his honesty and reliability. Private Newton did not drink intoxicating liquor at all, as deponent believes, and never had the slightest difficulty with citizens of Brownsville. That deponent is sure, in his own mind, that Newton was not mixed up in the affair of August 13, 1906, and that he would have reported to deponent if he had obtained any information or had learned anything about it. That he was captain of the company baseball team, thoroughly satisfied with the service, and anxious to stay right where he was. He was a popular man among his comrades, and in deponent's opinion the chances were very good that Newton would learn of whatever the other men knew. That deponent believes Newton seriously appreciated the necessity and desirability of getting at the truth of the matter.

Letter transmitting application for permission to reenlist.

UNITED STATES RECRUITING OFFICE,
330½ DEADERICK STREET,
Nashville, Tenn., December 29, 1906.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith application for reenlistment, as a married man, to complete enlistment of Robert L. Rogan, discharged as a private, without honor, November 25, 1906, from Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Two inclosures for the consideration of the War Department.

He meets requirements.

Very respectfully,

H. S. KILBOURNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel U. S. Army, Recruiting Officer.

[First Indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 3, 1907.

Respectfully returned, by direction of The Military Secretary of the Army, to Robert L. Rogan, late Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry (through the recruiting officer, 330½ Deaderick street, Nashville, Tenn.), for information whether the inclosed affidavit is all the evidence he desires to submit in his case for the consideration of the Department.

BENJ. ALVORD,
Military Secretary.

[Second Indorsement.]

U. S. ARMY RECRUITING STATION,
Nashville, Tenn., January 7, 1907.

Respectfully returned. This paper having been referred to Robert L. Rogan, he stated that he had no further knowledge of and nothing to add to the affidavit and statement herewith.

Application for permission to reenlist.

717 TENTH AVENUE, SOUTH,
Nashville, Tenn., December 29, 1906.

The Recruiting Officer,
Nashville, Tenn.

SIR: I have the honor to request that I be allowed to complete my enlistment in Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, in order that I may obtain an honorable discharge from the service. I know nothing about the trouble that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, further than that about 12 o'clock midnight I was awakened by members of my company moving about the quarters, and about five minutes later a call to arms was sounded when the company turned out and all answered their names at roll call; after that we were marched through the town and back to the post again, and then I was detailed on guard, and that is all I know about the matter.

I have been married since being discharged.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT L. ROGAN,
Late Private Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Affidavit of Robert L. Rogan.

Personally appeared before me, W. H. Allen, a notary public, in and for the County of Davidson, Tennessee, Robert L. Rogan, who being duly sworn, deposes and says: That while serving as a private in Company D, Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, at Brownsville, Texas, he, this deponent, was neither implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Texas, on the night of August 13, 1906, nor withheld any evidence that might lead to the discovery of the perpetrators thereof. And further deponent sayeth not.

ROBERT L. ROGAN.

Statement of Robert L. Rogan.

NEW DECATUR, ALA., May 25, 1907.

DEAR SIR: Sir, I have the honor of asking you to do me a favor in regard of getting back in the Twenty-fifth Infantry, as I was put out for something that I knew nothing of. The company I was in was Company D, the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and I will swear that I know nothing of that trouble that happened in Fort Brown, and as I would like to continue in the service. On the night of the 13th there at Fort Brown, about 12 o'clock that night, I was awakened by the soldiers running around in the quarters, and about twenty minutes after that I heard the sound for arms go, and then we all fell out in line and roll was called, and after roll was called we started out to patrol the town, and then back to the post. My captain's name was Capt. S. P. Lyon, in command of Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

I would like to get a job there in Leavenworth, Ark.

I will close in telling you good-by.

I remain your friend,

ROBERT LEE ROGAN,

Affidavit of Capt. Samuel P. Lyon.

STATE OF TEXAS, City of San Antonio, ss:

SAMUEL P. LYON, being duly sworn says he is captain, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

That he knew Private Rogan for about two years. He had been in his company for about six months. That he was a man of excellent habits, a first-class soldier, and there is every reason for deponent to believe him perfectly honest and reliable. He was temperate in his habits, and so far as deponent knows, never had any cause to complain of his treatment by the citizens of Brownsville. That deponent is convinced that Rogan was not in any way concerned in the shooting at Brownsville on August 13, 1900, and had no knowledge either before or after the event as to who the participants were. That deponent is confident that if Rogan had known any facts regarding or connected with the matter he would have reported them to deponent.

WILLIAM VAN HOOK.

Application for permission to reenlist.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, March 18, 1908.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY.

SIR: I, William Van Hook, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who was discharged on account of the Brownsville affair, ask permission if I could take on again or be reinstated. I don't know who it was that done the shooting; if so, I would turn up the guilty party. I was not implicated in shooting up the town, and I don't know anyone who was. If so, I would tell and not shield the guilty.

Yours,

WILLIAM VAN HOOK,
Palace Hotel, Corner Sixth and Vinc.

The reason I write this letter is for information, as I never understood what was going on.

MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS.

JOHN COOK.

{Company B.}

{Telegram.}

PITTSBURG, PA., January 29, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C.:

John Cook, discharged, B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, November 2, desires acceptance for reenlistment for same regiment. Satisfactory examination. Instructions requested.

ORD, Major. Recruiting Officer.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 29, 1907.

Respectfully referred to the Inspector-General of the Army, who will cause John Cook to be examined by an officer of his department as in the cases of the other former members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry referred to in the letter to him from this office dated January 26, 1907.

By order of the Secretary of War:

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Military Secretary.

---

Letter of Inspector-General J. G. Galbraith.

PITTSBURG, PA., January 31, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to invite immediate attention to the case of John Cook, which differs from the others that are being examined by me.

This man was honorably discharged on November 2, 1906, at the expiration of three years' service, and his military record would appear to warrant reenlistment.

His case does not come under the circular letter of December 12, 1906, from The Military Secretary's Office to recruiting officers.

There was no prohibitory order barring his reenlistment if he had presented himself to the recruiting officer as an applicant for foot service, colored.

But because he applied for service in a particular regiment the recruiting officer telegraphed to The Military Secretary, as is customary.

It is believed that the case is not on the same basis as the others, and that to authorize his enlistment would be simply in accordance with established custom.

Such action would not imply that he is exonerated from complicity in the Brownsville disturbance.

In the absence of proof of such complicity, his military record presents no ground for rejection.

On the other hand, his enlistment will not render him any the less liable, if guilty.

His testimony of this date is herewith inclosed.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. G. GALBRAITH,
Major, Inspector-General.

*Testimony of John Cook.*PITTSBURG, PA., January 31, 1907.

JOHN COOK, being sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-general, testified as follows:

Q. What is your name?—A. John Cook.

Q. And former company and regiment?—A. Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When were you discharged from that company?—A. November 2, 1900.

Q. For what reason were you discharged?—A. Expiration of term of service.

Q. There was no reference on your discharge to the affair known as the Brownsville affray?—A. No, sir; not at all; my discharges are down here if you would like to see them.

Q. You have an honorable discharge, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wish to be reenlisted for the same regiment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you told your story of the Brownsville affair before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom?—A. I told it to Lieutenant Lawrason, and Captain Lyon, Lieutenant-Colonel Lovering, and to General Garlington.

Q. Will you tell your story about it in your own language?—A. Yes, sir; I told just exactly what I knew about it.

Q. I say, will you now tell your story in your own language?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, go ahead.—A. On the night of the 13th I was in Fort Brown, Tex., when the disturbance occurred. I was in my quarters, in bed asleep. The shooting and call to arms woke me up, and the men running through quarters. I got up, put on my trousers, went to the gun rack to get my gun and it was not open; went back to bed, set down, put on my shoes and top shirt. By that time the rack was open; I got my gun, went down the steps—the front way instead of coming down back. When I got on the company parade, Major Penrose was there and wanted to know what the men were doing, that they were not there. I told him that they were upstairs getting their clothes on. He says, "Go up there and tell them to come down here right away." The first sergeant was not there. The major said, "Some noncommissioned officer call the roll;" there wasn't any of the noncommissioned officers had a list, but Corporal Coltrain fell the company in and had them to count off. Major Penrose asked him were they all present. He said he didn't know. By that time the first sergeant came, called the roll, and reported the company present. He sent one man to Lieutenant Lawrason's quarters to tell them to come over to the company.

Q. Where did this firing come from?—A. It seemed it was on the street just next to the wall, or on the next street.

Q. Did you ever find out whether that shooting was done by soldiers or outsiders?—A. I never heard; the whole time I was around the company, never heard any of them say anything about implicating the soldiers or citizens. I never did hear anything. If I had I would have made my statement to General Garlington.

Q. What did you think the trouble was when you first heard the racket?—A. I thought it was probably the citizens firing, or soldiers, that is what I thought it was.

Q. You knew there was bad feeling between them?—A. I had heard it. One or two fellows went down to the town; one got thrown in the river, and one got hit across the head.

Q. Did you think probably they might have been concerned?—A. I thought they might have been concerned, or knew something about it, or else it was the citizens.

Q. You slept in the second story of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir; on the front side of the barracks.

Q. Most of the men slept in the second story?—A. Yes, sir. There was two cooks slept downstairs, I think, sir, and the quartermaster-sergeant.

Q. The arms were all kept upstairs?—A. Yes, sir; all that was issued out were kept upstairs.

Q. Do you know who made the check roll call at 11 o'clock that night?—A. Sergeant Jackson. He was in charge of the quarters.

Q. Did you see him?—A. Not when they were making the roll call; no, sir.

Q. If any men were out of that room after check, would you have heard them or seen them?—A. No, sir; they could have went out without my hearing or seeing them. There was two doors went down the back way of the quarters and one went down the front way—two in rear and one in front. So they could have went down the front steps without my seeing them, or they could have went down the steps back way, farthest door from me, without my seeing them, even if I had been awake. Just one room, no partition in it, excepting where the noncommissioned officers slept. The noncommissioned officers had a small room to themselves. I slept up in the end of the quarters where the orderly room is, in the same end of the building, only upstairs. Anyone could go out from the lower end of the building, or go out the front steps, and I would not know it.

Q. Could they have gotten back into ranks without your knowing that they had been away before the roll was called?—A. No, sir; they could not have come in on the head of the company; they could have come in on the rear of the company.

Q. Did you use your rifle that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't have it out of the rack?—A. I think we had drill that morning, I am not sure. No, sir; I did not have it out of the rack. There was a practice march that morning. I did not go on the march.

Q. How did you come to stay back from the march?—A. I did not fall in with the company that morning. I had been drinking the night before and I was sleeping when it went out; no one woke me up.

Q. Were you there when the company came back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them put their arms away into the racks?—A. I saw some of them put their arms away.

Q. Were you around the quarters most all day?—A. Yes, sir. I was on fatigue in the afternoon; was around the quarters all the morning, not in the afternoon.

Q. While the men were out on this practice march were the racks open?—A. No, sir; the racks were locked.

Q. How do you know that?—A. The man in charge of quarters always kept them locked.

Q. But you did not see them yourself?—A. No, sir; I did not; but that is the way they did; they always kept the rack locked, even if the company was only out for drill. It was the company commander's orders for them to be kept that way all the time.

Q. Did you ever find out who made that disturbance?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you have any curiosity about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never asked anybody about it?—A. I asked several times, but everybody told me they didn't know anything about it.

Q. Did you go down town any after that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know whom the soldiers had a grudge against?—A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't know that some of them had a grudge against Mr. Tate?—A. No, sir; I didn't know they had a grudge against any one at all; never heard anything of the sort.

Q. Do you know anything about this case that you have not told?—A. I have told all that I know about it, sir.

Q. Is there anything more that you wish to say about it?—A. No, sir.

GEORGE O. LAWASON, being duly sworn, says he is second lieutenant Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry. That he knew said Private Glenn for more than two years and knows him to have been always faithful as a soldier, and an honest soldier. That he was company clerk a large part of that time. That he is not a man deponent would suspect of taking part in such a raid as was made in Brownsville. That he always seemed to be a cheerful, satisfied soldier, glad to be in the regiment and in the company, and good natured. Deponent does not think he had any feelings of resentment against anybody in Brownsville,

SIR: I have the honor to inclose the recommendation of my former captain and company commander, Capt. Samuel P. Lyon, Twenty-fifth Infantry, with the request that I may be allowed to use same in "lieu" of the affidavit required by existing orders from your headquarters for the purpose of reenlisting again in my same organization and company. It is useless for me to say I am one of the innocent men who have been debarred from enlisting again in the service, on account of the shooting affair at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, for that part is settled by the inclosed paper from my captain, who knows me better than any other man or officer in the service. I was discharged from Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, per expiration of term of enlistment, October 27, 1906, with character "excellent," and went home to visit my people, and when I went to reenlist I was informed that I was debarred from ever again enlisting in the Army, on account of the trouble mentioned above. Hoping that my case may be given favorable consideration, and that I may be allowed to enlist again before my old regiment leaves for the Philippine Islands, as I would like so much to go with it, and that I may hear from you on this subject at the earliest possible date, I am, sir,

Affidavit of Capt. Samuel P. Lyon.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort Sam Houston, ss:

SAMUEL P. LYON, captain Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, states:

Sergeant Adams was given a full and honorable discharge with character "excellent," upon the expiration of his enlistment subsequent to August 13, 1906, and prior to the issue of the special order directing the discharges without honor. I knew him for more than four years. He was a sergeant of my company three years and ten months. An excellent soldier, and absolutely honest and conscientious man. I am convinced he was not in the shooting affray. I distinctly remember seeing him in his position as a sergeant when I went down the line distributing extra ammunition to all the men of the company after roll-call in front of the barracks. He was one of the old noncommissioned officers with whom I frequently talked about the matter and upon whom I tried to impress the necessity of learning the truth. I am satisfied he did all he could, and did not conceal or fail to report anything he learned.

GEORGE C. LAWBASON, second lieutenant Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, states:

I came in contact with Sergeant Adams several times as sergeant of the guard. I regarded him as zealous and trustworthy in the performance of his duty. I think it altogether unlikely that he participated in the shooting or that he would have withheld any information he might have acquired regarding it.

EDGAR A. MACKLIN, captain Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, being duly sworn, states:

As sergeant of the guard Adams impressed me as a faithful conscientious soldier. I only knew him on guard duty. I think he was satisfied with the service and wanted to stay in it, and that he was honestly anxious to find out the truth and report it.

Affidavit of Walter Adams.

DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS, Post of Fort McIntosh, ss:

WALTER ADAMS, being duly sworn, says he was discharged with character "excellent" upon the expiration of his last enlistment in the Army on October 27, 1906, as sergeant in said company, after nineteen years' service. That he was serving as sergeant in said company at Fort Brown, Tex., on August 13, 1906, and went to bed in the company barracks about 7.30 o'clock. All passes had been shortened to expire at 8 o'clock, and word was sent around about 3.30 that evening that everybody must be in by 8. We were all wondering what that could mean. We thought the captain was a little uneasy, and we were all thinking something was going to happen, but we didn't know what it could be. I went to sleep and woke up to go to the closet. After I had fixed up my mosquito bar to go to sleep again I laid down and staid awake for about fifteen minutes before the first shot was fired. I heard the scavenger's cart coming while I was going back to my cot from the closet. I heard no noises of any kind from that until the shooting. Nobody was stirring around in our quarters. Everybody was quartered in that big room except the first sergeant. Everything was as quiet as it could be. I thought everybody was asleep. Then a shot was fired. I could not tell where it was fired from or what kind of a gun it was. I heard no words spoken at the same time. Sergeant Harris was sleeping in his cot just across the room from mine. I heard him stir. I spoke softly to him and said, "What are we going to do, Sergeant Harris?" He said, "Keep still and keep down, and don't light any lights, and wait for orders." I was wearing a white undershirt and put on a blue flannel shirt to cover it up so I couldn't be seen and shot at. More shots were being fired and the men were waking up and putting on parts of their clothing. Sergeant Harris and I spoke to the men and said, "You all be easy now until you get some orders." There was no confusion. Some of the men did not even begin to dress. I heard the major's voice and I heard the bugle sound the general call. Then the captain called, "Fall the men out and bring your rifles; but don't load." We all went down and formed the company. Some had hardly any clothing on. Some were barefooted and some bareheaded. I think every man had some cartridges in his belt. The first sergeant reported that everybody was in the ranks but Corporal Hawkins. The major sent us in a sort of skirmish formation, to take our stand behind the reservation wall, and pretty soon he had us go out into the town to patrol and find out whether there were any soldiers there. We didn't find any soldiers. I saw a dead gray horse and a Mexican policeman, but I saw nobody else. We were gone from a half an hour to an hour. Then went back to quarters and the gun racks were put in the first sergeant's room and the rifles were put in the racks, and the racks and the room locked up.

The men didn't say anything about the affair except to wonder what the matter had been. No one said that he thought the town people had been shooting at us. They mostly wondered who had been doing the shooting around there.

I never knew the least little thing about who did that shooting. I would tell in a minute if I did know. The soldiers were kept close to the post both at Fort Brown and at Fort Reno after the shooting, and I did not hear much said about who did it, except that everybody was wondering who it could have been. I have heard Sergeant Frazier and Sergeant Harris talk to the younger men about it and try to learn something about it. I have tried myself many times, but we could not find out anything at all. I can't say only what I know, and if I knew, why I'd tell it. I left Fort Reno, on my honorable discharge, about November 1, 1906, and since that have only occasionally met a man out of the First Battalion. I have had no chance to learn anything about the shooting since that time, as I came down here to Fort McIntosh after spending a few days in San Antonio, during which I applied to the recruiting officer for reenlistment, but was refused on receipt of a telegram from Washington.

I swear positively that I did not have any information, before the shooting at Brownsville, that any trouble was going to occur or was likely to occur except when the passes were cut off on August 13, 1906, and I never had any reason to suspect that any such thing could happen. I had not been in the town at all except to go to the post-office for stamps. I had had no trouble with any of the townspeople. I had heard of the man who was hit with a revolver, and of another man being shoved into the water, but I did not know either of them. I understood the man shoved into the water got no more than was coming to him. That he was drunk and there was trouble over his fare, and that some of his friends pulled him out and paid his fare on the boat he was being ferried across the river on. There was no excitement among the men that I could see over these two affairs. I never knew of any soldier saying that he thought the barracks would be shot up. And during the time I remained with the company I never learned anything at all about this shooting affair or the men who really did it. I know that such men as Sergeant Frazier and Sergeant Harris and Sergeant Mingo Sanders and Cook Dade and Jim Duncan were not afraid of any men in the battalion, and I know they would tell anything they knew to have the men that did that shooting rounded up so the rest of us wouldn't have to suffer. Some of the younger men used to stop talking and walk off when they saw us older ones coming and would not talk with us about it. I can remember Charles Jones of our company doing this, but recall no one else. I know the old noncommissioned officers did all they could to find out the truth, and that I did so myself.

I want very much to be allowed to reenlist. I know I have done nothing wrong and can not see why I should be refused the right because some one else has done wrong. I have had my home in the Army for many years. I have not been home to Knoxville, Tenn., where I was born and lived until I enlisted in eighteen years. And if I can reenlist, I promise that my service will continue to be as honest and as faithful as I think my record shows it has been up to this time.

WALTER ADAMS.

REPORT OF MAJ. L. E. GOODIER AS TO EXAMINATIONS OF APPLICANTS AND OFFICERS OF COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY OF THE ARMY.

Sir: I respectfully report that in compliance with instructions contained in two letters from your office which bear date of January 26, 1907, the first indorsement of The Military Secretary dated January 25, 1907, on memoranda of the Secretary of War, dated January 21, 1907, and certain directions communicated to me personally by the Secretary of War, I left Washington on January 26 and reached Fort Reno, Okla., on January 30.

I found Maj. Charles W. Penrose, Twenty-fifth Infantry, about to start for Fort Sam Houston for trial by general court-martial. In response to the inquiry contained in the next to the last sentence of the Secretary's memorandum of January 21, which I read to him, Major Penrose at once stated in the most positive manner that he did give the order to break the gun racks of Company C at Fort Brown on August 13, 1906. That when he reached the barracks he found the men of that company coming from their quarters without their arms. That he said to them that the call "to arms" was sounding and they ought to have their rifles. That they replied that the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters refused to open the arm racks because he had had no orders. That he, Major Penrose, then ordered them to break them open if necessary to get their arms at once and without further delay. Major Penrose further stated that this fact was well known to officers and men of the garrison, and that it would be testified to on his trial at Fort Sam Houston.

Deponent then interrogated Major Penrose and the following officers of the regiment, viz: Captains Lyon and Macklin, Lieutenants Higgins, Hay, Grier, and Lawrason (no other officer of Companies B, C, and D being then at Fort Reno), regarding the enlisted men whose names were furnished me by your office as having applied for reenlistment, and regarding also James A. Simmons, late private of Companies A and C, who sought me out in Fort Reno and notified me that he had that day applied to the post recruiting officer, or was about to file his application with him. The memoranda I then took were subsequently written out by me and signed and sworn to by the officers. Each officer was asked by me as to his knowledge of each of such applicants for reenlistment, and the affidavit of each officer is inclosed in the matter of the application of each man, except where the officer assured me that he had not sufficient knowledge of or acquaintance with the man to warrant him in making any statement in his case.

I also examined at Fort Reno and took the affidavits of Charles Dade, late cook, Company D, his wife, Emma Dade, and the latter's daughter, Mrs. O. H. Barbour, all in the matter of said Dade's application for reenlistment. I examined and took the affidavit of James A. Simmons, hereinbefore mentioned, late private, Company C, who was transferred to Company A and discharged without honor from the latter company. He showed me an affidavit made by his wife, which accompanied his application to the post recruiting officer. I did not examine her further.

On February 1 I went to El Reno, Okla., where I was advised by the officers at Fort Reno that I would find Jacob Frazier, late first sergeant, Company D, and several other men who were supposed to desire to reenlist. I visited the residence of Frazier and was informed by his wife that he had gone to Washington the day before in response to a summons from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. I saw there Walker McCurdy, late quartermaster sergeant, Company D; Luther T. Thornton, late sergeant, Company B; Samuel Wheeler, late corporal, Company D, and James H. Ballard, late corporal, Company D. All these men informed me that they had not filed applications for reenlistment, and that they had no desire to apply at that time. I took the affidavit of Hattie Frazier, wife of said Jacob Frazier, in re the latter's application. I also found in El Reno Ernest English, late private, Company B, who told me he desired to reenlist. I examined him and took his affidavit, instructing him to file a formal application with the recruiting officer at Fort Reno.

I then proceeded on February 2 to Oklahoma City and called at the recruiting office, where I was informed that no applications for reenlistment of ex-soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry had been received at that office. That some men had come to the office a month previously, but had gone away again without leaving their addresses or making formal requests for permission to reenter the service.

On February 3 I reached San Antonio, Tex., and on the 4th and 5th took the affidavits of Major Penrose, Capts. S. P. Lyon and E. A. Macklin, and Second Lieuts. H. S. Grier and G. C. Lawrason, who were there in attendance as witnesses before the general court-martial trying Major Penrose. The affidavits of First Lieut. J. A. Higgins and Second Lieut. D. D. Hay were drawn off by me and mailed to those officers at Fort Reno for verification, and afterwards returned to me by mail.

The recruiting officer at San Antonio advised me that Walter Adams, late sergeant, Company D, who had applied to him for reenlistment, was not in the city but could be found at Fort McIntosh, Laredo, Tex. I proceeded thither on the 6th of February, examined Adams, and took his affidavit. The authorities at Fort McIntosh consider him unfitted for service on account of his mental condition. The surgeon states that in his opinion he is a paranoiac. I was shown some correspondence between the post and department headquarters on the subject of Adams's mental condition, and the papers bore at least one indorsement by the War Department. I myself did not observe any indications of unsoundness in Adams's mental condition.

I then returned to San Antonio and went on to El Paso, Tex., where on February 9 I found and examined James Duncan, late cook, Company D, and private, Company G, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who had applied for reenlistment at the recruiting office in that city. His affidavit is inclosed. This man said that David Powell, late corporal of Company D, who was noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters on August 13, 1906, and had been confined in the guardhouse at Fort Brown and at Fort Sam Houston after that date, with 12 other men accused by Brownsville officials in connection with the affair of August 13, is now working at the Armour packing house in Kansas City. That he, Duncan, thinks that if he could see Powell, who has been a close friend of his, he might be able to learn something from him which he had found out from the others during his long confinement with them. Capt. Charles F. Bates, Twenty-fifth Infantry, in whose employ Duncan now is, called upon me in El Paso and submitted an affidavit as to Duncan's character and qualities, and he also is of the opinion that Duncan might learn something if sent to Kansas City for the purpose. I was favorably impressed by Duncan's appearance and manner, and if his reenlistment be approved, I respectfully recommend that he be given an opportunity to see Powell.

Inclosed are affidavits in re the applications of the following men, to wit:

Company A.—James A. Simmons, late private.

Company B.—Mingo Sanders, late first sergeant; Edward L. Daniels, late corporal; Elmer Brown, late private; Ernest English, late private; Shepherd Glen, late private.

Memo.—Private Wille Lemons, of Company B, was dishonorably discharged by sentence of general court-martial, at Fort Reno.

Company C.—Samuel W. Harley, late sergeant; Charles H. Madison, late corporal; Walter Banks, late musician; Thomas Jefferson, late private; George Smith, late private.

Company D.—Jacob Frazier, late sergeant; Walter Adams, late sergeant; Charles Dade, late cook; Hoytt Robinson, late musician; George W. Hall, late private; Charles Jones, late private; James Newton, late private; Robert L. Rogan, late private.

Company G.—James Duncan, late private (honorably discharged August 23, 1906, from Company D as cook, reenlisted September 28).

I further report that no officer or discharged soldier whom I asked for a statement in this matter made any objection to any question put to him, and all of them professed to be willing to make as full answers as they were able.

Captain Macklin suggested to me, before making his statements regarding the men, that he was to be tried by general court-martial upon charges of neglect of duty growing out of this same occurrence of August 13, 1906, and wished his rights protected. I answered that the general rule was that he might object to any question, the answer to which might tend to convict him of crime or to degrade him, but that the business of the War Department must proceed and ought not to be impeded by his declining to furnish such information as he was able to give, unless he claimed the privilege of declining to answer particular questions on the ground stated. He did not refer to the matter again, and answered all my questions with apparent frankness.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

RECORDS OF EXAMINATIONS OF 14 EX-MEMBERS OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY, APPLICANTS FOR REENLISTMENT TO THE ARMY.

[Transmitted by Maj. Jacob G. Galbraith.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL,
Washington, February 11, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY OF THE ARMY.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the records of my examinations of 14 ex-members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, applicants for reenlistment in the Army.

The following-named discharged soldiers were interrogated under oath:

At Harrisburg, Pa.—Samuel W. Harley, late sergeant, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

At Pittsburg, Pa.—John Cook, late private, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

At Chicago, Ill.—Shepherd Glenn, late private, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Charles Jones, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; James Newton, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Walter Banks, late musician, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry; George W. Hall, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Elias Gant, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; John Green, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Joseph Jones, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Perry Cisco, late private, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry; John Kirkpatrick, late private, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

At Lexington, Ky.—Hoytt Robinson, late musician, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

At Nashville, Tenn.—Robert L. Rogan, late private, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

At Pittsburg, Pa., I saw Charles H. Madison, late corporal, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, but he declined to be sworn or to make any statement. He informed me that he expected to testify before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

At Pittsburg, January 31, I examined John Cook, late private, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and I at once forwarded the record of his examination to The Military Secretary, making it the subject of a separate special report, because of the fact that the three months in his case would expire on February 2, 1907, after which date he would forfeit continuous service pay.

The case of Shepherd Glenn, examined February 1 at Chicago, was entirely similar to that of John Cook, and I so reported by telegraph to The Military Secretary.

Both of these men have honorable discharges dated November 2, 1906, and have not since been in service.

Renewed attention is respectfully invited to my special reports in those cases, that of Cook by letter and of Glenn by telegraph. Surely the claim to eligibility for reenlistment on the part of an ex-soldier presenting an honorable discharge must be much stronger than that of a former soldier whose last discharge was without honor. It seems to me that the burden of proof is shifted by the presentation of that documentary evidence of honest and faithful service.

If the burden of proof is on the party who would fail if no proof were offered, does not the possession of an honorable discharge give the holder an advantage? Has not the converse been asserted, viz, that discharge without honor placed on the applicant the burden of proof?

Is not the honorable discharge prima facie evidence of honest and faithful service?

If so, is it not up to the Government to prove in the case of these two men that they were not worthy of honorable discharge?

In this connection it is thought proper to mention that these two honorably discharged soldiers do not seek reenlistment in the Twenty-fifth Infantry, but want to go to the Ninth Cavalry and the Signal Corps. And this suggests the question whether it is not better to exclude from the Twenty-fifth Infantry any of these men who may be reenlisted.

A special report [copy herewith] was made in the case of John Kirkpatrick, late private Company C, who asserts that he was prevented by confinement in the hospital from participating in, or being in any way to blame for, the disturbance or from having any guilty knowledge thereof.

Incidentally he casts discredit on the story about the galloping of men mounted being heard from the hospital porch, and the dodging of bullets.

Sergt. Samuel W. Harley, late Company C, was sleeping in the orderly room downstairs, while the members of the company generally slept in the second story of the barracks. He testifies that it would have been practicable for some of these men to have left their quarters after the 11 p. m. check without the acting first sergeant knowing anything about it. He also states that the acting first sergeant would be about the last man in whom the men would confide if they were up to any "devilment," and that it is certain that any of those having guilty knowledge would carefully conceal it from him.

Private James Newton, late Company D, says that he was sleeping in officers' quarters and came out of the door with an officer.

Private Hoytt Robinson, late musician Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, states that he was asleep in the guardhouse, and was awakened and ordered to sound the call to arms. In reply to further questioning, he mentions that patrols of the guard were sent into the town that evening, and discloses the possibility that a patrol of the guard could have raided the town without his knowledge.

Private Robert L. Rogan's testimony, so far as concerns himself, is merely a disclaimer of participation or knowledge. Interrogated on the subject of the inspection of arms he says that the company (D) fell in ranks the next morning at the usual drill hour (7 a. m.) and were inspected; that they wore their web belts, without cartridges, and that the McKeever cartridge boxes, containing their cartridges, were left in quarters.

None of the testimony which I have heard or read precludes the possibility of a small patrol of the guard having taken an active part in the affray, and it is conceivable that they might have been joined by a few others, and that the raid could have taken place without the knowledge of the men generally.

There would be no difficulty about the arms and ammunition for the small patrol, and the few others may have had pistols or shotguns.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. G. GALBRAITH,
Major, Inspector-General.

Testimony of Samuel W. Harley.

HAMMERSBURG, PA., January 30, 1907.

SAMUEL W. HARLEY, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

Q. What is your name?—A. Samuel W. Harley.

Q. What was your last service in the Army?—A. You mean the number of years?

Q. No; last company and regiment.—A. Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When were you discharged?—A. Discharged on the 24th of November, 1906.

Q. You have applied for reenlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have forwarded affidavits to support your application?—A. I have forwarded application; yes, sir.

Q. Accompanied by affidavits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at the time of this Brownsville disturbance the acting first sergeant of C Company?—A. Yes, sir; of C Company.

Q. Who was your company commander?—A. Captain Macklin.

Q. What Lieutenant was on duty with the company?—A. There wasn't any Lieutenant on duty with the company at the time, sir.

Q. When the company was turned out under arms, to whom did you report the company?—A. I reported the company to Lieutenant Grier.

Q. Did you report all present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you know that all were present?—A. Well, I called the roll, sir, and my re<sup>l</sup> showed that all were present or accounted for; the men were not all present, but all were present or accounted for. There was two men absent on pass.

Q. Did you call every man's name?—A. Yes, sir; I finally called the roll down, yes, sir. It took me a little time; I didn't have a lantern; it was dark. The gas light smoked a little and taken a few minutes to finish the roll.

Q. Was Lieutenant Grier satisfied with this roll call?—A. Yes, sir; I think he was. He was right there, right behind me, two paces.

Q. In the roll call, was the presence of the men verified by counting them?—A. I reported to Lieutenant Grier and he reported to the commanding officer, and he says: Lieutenant, count your men and march them around in rear of the quarters along the wall. After I reported I taken my place in line; there wasn't anything more for me to do than reporting.

Q. Had you tried before this to find your captain?—A. Before which, sir?

Q. Before making this roll call?—A. Yes, sir. When I run out I looked for him which I know there should some officer be present, but I didn't see him, and I saw Lieutenant Grier standing on the parade ground, and I run out and reported to him.

Q. Was it possible for any man to have answered to the name of another without your discovering him?—A. Well, I don't know, sir; I know pretty much all the voices of the men; was pretty familiar with them, and I could not say, but it would hardly happen, because I know the voices of the men pretty well.

Q. Do you know whether any of your men took part in that disturbance?—
A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Could they have done so without your knowing it?—A. I hardly think they could; no, sir; of course, they could probably slipped out the quarters; you see I didn't sleep with the company men upstairs. I slept down in the orderly room of the barracks, first sergeant's.

Q. Could some of them have gotten out of quarters after check?—A. Why, the men could went out, yes, sir; they could went out after check.

Q. Without your knowing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who made the check?—A. Sergeant Brauner.

Q. What was your idea of how that thing happened—that disturbance?—
A. Well, I don't know. When they fell out there, I, like the officers and everybody else, I guess, thought it was an attack made from some outsiders.

Q. Did you change your mind about that when you learned more about it the next day, or afterwards?—A. No, sir; I didn't know what to think of it. It was a mystery. All the men of my company had pretty much the same opinion that I had.

Q. They had that opinion at this time—at midnight?—A. Yes, sir; and the next day and afterwards, if I understood your question.

Q. When the inspectors and the commanding officer were trying to find out the facts about this matter did you help them?—A. Yes, sir; I did everything I could, everything in every way to try to find out, in order to save my honor and long service.

Q. How long did you remain at Fort Brown after the 13th of August?—A. I think, sir, if I am not mistaken, we left on the 25th of the same month.

Q. And you didn't find out anything about it in all that time?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you make any inquiries?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you know what caused the trouble?—A. No, sir; I don't know what caused the trouble at that time, although my captain that evening, he said a soldier ketched a woman by her hair and pulled her down to her knees, and the people of the town were very angry; but I don't know whether that was the cause of the trouble or not. I think I said it was the same evening this happened, but it was the evening before that, but the captain told me that evening of the 13th.

Q. What do you know about the breaking open of one of the racks?—A. Well, when I reported to Lieutenant Grier, the commanding officer, he came down to the company about the same time; the men was falling downstairs without their arms, and he said to the men, why ain't you falling down with your arms? The men replied that the noncommissioned officer in charge of the quarters would not let them have their arms. He told them to go back and get their arms and fall in if they had to break the rack.

Q. Now, about this time, had you started out to go to Captain Macklin's quarters?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you met Lieutenant Grier, didn't you tell him that you was going to look for the captain?—A. I told h'm that I didn't know where my company commander was and asked him would he take charge of the company.

Q. You remember being questioned by Colonel Lovering?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Remember what you told him about calling the roll, whether you had finished it or not, or was prevented from finishing it by the bad light?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Try to state exactly now how it was carried on?—A. I will explain what I meant by that. I generally have two rolls; the roll that I used that day I had the men checked that was on pass, on guard, and other places that had authority to be absent. That night when the disturbance commenced there was no light; didn't have time to make a light in the quarters, and I picked up the roll that was not checked; when I called the roll down the men that was absent I checked them—the men that were absent on pass, and on guard, and different places—I checked them that didn't answer to their names. There was some men that didn't answer, and my remembrance, I couldn't just think where they were, and I reported the company present. The second roll call was made in the presence of Captain Macklin, and I then got my day roll and compared it with the one that I called the first roll, and I found that the men that I had checked was on guard, and two men absent on pass, a couple of men in confinement, and one man in hospital.

Q. You went back to your orderly room and got this roll, did you, before making the second roll call?—A. Yes, sir; got the two rolls.

Q. In all this confusion and use of two different rolls, and the counting by yourself and the lieutenant, considerable time was unavoidably used up, was it not?—A. Why, yes, sir; the first time there was only one list used; the time that I used the other list to compare the first list is the time that Captain Macklin had the second roll call; and I found that every man that I checked was present or accounted for.

Q. What were the circumstances about the second roll call you speak of?—A. Why, the second roll call was made under the direction of Captain Macklin, and all men was present or accounted for, and the men that I had checked from the first roll call was present or accounted for.

Q. When did this second roll call take place?—A. About an hour, or a little more, probably a little more, after the first one.

Q. You could not be sure about the result of the first roll call, with the poor light and wrong list, and all, could you?—A. Well, yes, sir; I could be pretty sure. There may at times one man get away, but not any more than that.

Q. If some of the men of your company had slipped out after the 11 o'clock check, they could have managed to get back into ranks without much trouble, couldn't they?—A. Well, it was about 12 o'clock when this disturbance commenced, probably a little after. No, sir; they could not have got back very handy, not in ranks.

Q. The men had to leave the ranks and go back upstairs and get their arms, didn't they?—A. When they came down they hadn't: fell in ranks, sir, when they came down without their arms. The gun racks was still locked.

Q. Now men could easily have run from that wall to where the company was forming during all this time, couldn't they?—A. Well, sir, the firing was going on before the gun racks of my quarters was unlocked; they was ordered opened by the commanding officer; he was there himself.

Q. But, if some of the men were out of quarters at the time of the alarm, they had plenty of time to get into ranks, had they not?—A. If they were out of quarters?

Q. Yes, if they had slipped out after 11 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; they had time to get in ranks.

Q. They could do this while the other men were getting up, putting on their clothes, going down stairs without arms, going back and getting them out of the racks, and then going back and falling in, could they not?—A. Well, they could not very well without being detected; they could not very well do it without some noncommissioned officer detecting them. The gun racks were supposed to be locked—were locked in the quarters when the firing was going on; the commanding officer came down and ordered them opened.

Q. But suppose a half dozen of the men had taken their guns out of the racks after 11 o'clock check, and then the racks had been locked up?—A. They could not have done it if the noncommissioned officer had done his duty, and which I think he is a man that would do his duty; seemed to be a very reliable man.

Q. Could not there be a false key to the rack?—A. Well, that, sir, I don't know; but it is hard to get a false key for those racks.

Q. Or extra key, or spare key?—A. Well, probably something like that could happen; but they could not have taken the arms out of quarters without some one knowing something about it.

Q. But it could have been done without your knowing about it?—A. Yes, sir; because I slept downstairs.

Q. You continued to act as first sergeant after this disturbance?—A. Yes, sir; till we arrived at Fort Reno.

Q. In what way did you try to find out who had done this thing; what did you do about it?—A. Well, I questioned the men in an offhand way, and I set around the quarters and listened at different conversations in that way.

Q. Did you make any reports to your company commander?—A. No, sir; I didn't, on account that he had called me in the orderly room pretty frequently and asked me about it when he used to meet me in there.

Q. And you have not made up your own mind yet whether that shooting was done by soldiers or outsiders?—A. Well, sir, I hardly can tell; it is a kind of a mystery to me; but I have not made up my mind, sir.

Q. Now, is there anything further that you desire to state in this matter?—A. No, sir; not but what I have already explained. There is not anything now that I can think of. At the time of the disturbance I was seen by the officers which accounts for my whereabouts, and I have nothing to add to the papers that I have already sent forward. It is a general thing in a company that the noncommissioned officers are the last men that the privates will talk anything to concerning any devilment which they have done, or are about to do, because as a general thing they would be brought before the authorities, or be reported. As for myself as acting first sergeant, it would be harder for me to learn anything concerning anything of that kind than it would for some privates on account that they would know that I would make a report of it.

Testimony of Sheperd Glenn.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

SHEPHERD GLENN, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, inspector-general, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. Sheperd Glenn.

Q. Former company and regiment?—A. Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When were you last discharged?—A. November 2, 1906.

Q. That is your last discharge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you told your story of the Brownsville affair?—A. Yes, sir; I told it to Captain Lyon.

Q. And to an inspector?—A. The affidavits were made out in the company and sworn to by Captain Lyon.

Q. Were you not sworn by Colonel Lovering?—A. Yes, sir; sworn by Colonel Lovering, too.

Q. Were you questioned by Major Blocksom?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or General Garlington?—A. No, sir; General Garlington never questioned me. I was sick in the hospital at the time and was sent to join my company; command was formed and General Garlington stood in the midst and told the men what he had to tell them.

Q. That was at Fort Reno?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything you want to say as to this matter?—A. Nothing I have to say, sir. I told previously all I knew.

Q. Have you told all that you know about it?—A. Yes, sir; I have told all I know about it.

Q. What is your idea about who did the shooting?—A. Well, sir, I have no idea.

Q. How is it possible that you should not know something about it?—A. Well, sir, Major, if you are laying in your bed asleep and something happened out there in State street, would it be possible for you to know anything about it, sir?

Q. Didn't you have any curiosity about it since that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you satisfied with that statement as it stands, or do you want to add anything further?—A. No, sir; I have nothing more to add.

I would like to have it show in this paper that I had applied since for enlistment and been rejected by the War Department.

Testimony of Charles Jones.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

CHARLES JONES, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. Charles Jones.

Q. And what was the last company you served in?—A. D Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When were you discharged?—A. I was discharged in November, 1906.

Q. Did you receive a discharge without honor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you want to get back in the Army?—A. I would like to; I would like to have a better discharge than I have got.

Q. Have you told your story of this disturbance?—A. Yes, sir; what I know of it.

Q. To whom?—A. Told it to Captain Lyon, and I told it—I forget the major's name that came there to Reno. I forget his name.

Q. An inspector?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, who did this shooting?—A. I don't know.

Q. Have any idea?—A. No, sir; I have no idea.

Q. Didn't you ever try to find out?—A. I have tried to find out; could find out no information at all. My belief about it is that it was done by the citizens of Brownsville; that is my belief about it.

Q. What makes you think so?—A. Because when the roll call was going on there was still firing going on.

Q. You think the citizens of Brownsville shot their lieutenant of police?—A. They might; yes, sir.

Q. Did the soldiers have anything against Mr. Tate?—A. Don't know if they had anything against him or not; he knocked down one with a six-shooter.

Q. Didn't that make the rest of you mad?—A. No, it didn't make me mad at all.

Q. Was there any grumbling about it among the men?—A. No, sir; not in my company or no other company.

Q. Did you think the citizens tried to kill any of the soldiers?—A. It seems so; knocked a man over the head with a six-shooter. They must have been trying to the way they were firing. I don't believe the soldiers had anything to do with the firing at all, because we were ordered in at 8 o'clock—sent out patrol.

Q. Were you a noncommissioned officer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was in the quarters in my bunk, sir.

Q. You were not out after check?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any man going out after check?—A. No, sir.

Q. They could go out, couldn't they, without your knowing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You slept in the second story?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Men could have gone out without your knowing it?—A. Yes, sir; after I was asleep.

Q. How far was it from there down to the wall?—A. About as far—from the quarters, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. About 20 steps, I guess.

Q. If a couple of those men had gone out after 11 o'clock and fired some shots, could they have gotten back in the ranks to answer to their names?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. Because it would have been impossible for them to have gotten back and gotten in line at the time firing was going on and put away their arms and answer to their names.

Q. But the call to arms was sounded, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then they would not have to put away their arms, would they?—A. Their arms were all locked up; the noncommissioned officer in charge of the quarters had the key. The racks were not opened until orders were given to unlock the racks.

Q. While you were getting out your arms and falling in, could these men come up from the street and have gotten in ranks without going upstairs?—A. Captain Lyon was standing at the door; could not anyone go in there.

Q. If ranks were formed on the parade they would not need to go upstairs for their rifles, would they?—A. No, sir; not if they had their rifles out.

Q. Have you anything further that you wish to say?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Testimony of James Newton.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

JAMES NEWTON, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. James Newton.

Q. From what company were you last discharged?—A. D Company, sir.

Q. Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you take part in the shooting at Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who did that shooting?—A. I can't say, sir. I don't know of anyone who had anything to do with it at all.

Q. Is there any way you can prove you didn't take part in it?—A. Yes, sir; I think I can prove—I have pretty good evidence that I didn't have anything to do with it. The night of the struggle I was sleeping at the lieutenant of the company's quarters—Lieutenant West—I was sleeping in his quarters. At the time of this shooting I came out the door and my captain came out behind me. I went across the parade. He says, Who is that? I told him who I was, that this is Newton. I went over to the company and the men was all upstairs, seemed to be confused, excited, and everything; I went upstairs. The lights were all out and everybody was up, excited, and by that time the captain called everybody "outside."

Q. But how does it happen that you don't know anything about who did the shooting?—A. Don't know anything about it is all I can say. Didn't hear of anyone speaking before it happened.

Q. Nor since?—A. Nor since. I heard the shooting, that is all I can. As far as knowing anyone that took part in it, I can't say as I do.

Q. Is that all you wish to say?—A. Yes, sir; that is all I wish to say. If I had known who it was, I would not have suffered for lack of telling. I had a pretty nice record—no blemish on my record at all since I was in the service.

Q. Anything more that you want to say?—A. No, sir; that is all I want to say.

Testimony of Walter Banks.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

WALTER BANKS, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, inspector-general, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. Walter Banks.

Q. What company and regiment did you last serve in?—A. Twenty-fifth Infantry, Company C, musician.

Q. And what was the date of your discharge?—A. The date of my discharge was the 24th of November.

Q. Where were you on the night of the 13th of August last.—A. I were in my bed on the night of the 13th.

Q. When the firing took place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the firing all over before you got up?—A. No, sir; it was not exactly all over; it was all over before I got my clothes on. I got out of bed all right, and when I got out in line they were "hollering" outside for everybody at the roll call.

Q. Did you find out what was the matter?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. How does that come?—A. Because I only heard the shooting; I didn't know what it was, didn't know who was doing it or where it was coming from. The shooting woke me up and in the slumber, getting up, you know, got my clothes about half on and they made us go down stairs for the roll call; and after the roll call those that didn't have their arms they sent them back up stairs.

Q. That was after they were counted?—A. Yes, sir; after the roll was called and they were reported. The lieutenant inspected the company and found a lot of men that didn't have their arms, didn't have nothing, in their underclothes without shoes and hats.

Q. Then you have told everything that you know about this?—A. Yes, sir; I have made two statements, sworn to.

Q. To whom?—A. To the inspector-general of the Army one, and to an officer of the regiment one.

Q. Captain Lyon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you want to get back into the Army?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. You know any reason why you should be enlisted again?—A. Only for this reason, I think they should enlist me on this account, because I was not responsible for what happened at Brownsville, for I knew nothing about it. I was just as helpless of that as a baby would have been.

Q. Well if you did not find out, you would not tell, would you?—A. Why certainly, rather than be punished like this. I would not be punished for what somebody else does. I would have thought it was a very poor man anyway that would take his gun and go out and shoot in the town among a lot of people. A man like that should be punished.

Q. Well, how could they do that without the other soldiers finding out something about it?—A. That is a mystery to me, sir; as long as I have been in the Army I have never seen nothing that happened among soldiers that it was not found out, if any of them did it; that was the first thing that I seen happened. They claim the soldiers did it and they could not find evidence against anybody at all; had to discharge us all for what they thought two or three men done—didn't know they had done.

- Q. It could not do itself, could it?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Somebody did it?—A. Somebody did it.
 Q. Is there anything more that you want to say?—A. No, sir.

Testimony of George W. Hall.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

GEORGE W. HALL, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, inspector-general, testified as follows:

- Q. State your name.—A. George W. Hall.
 Q. And where did you last serve?—A. In the Twenty-fifth Infantry.
 Q. What company?—A. D Company.
 Q. Where were you on the night of the disturbance—the 13th of August?—A. I was in bed, sir.
 Q. In town?—A. No, sir; in bed.
 Q. In Fort Brown?—A. Yes, sir; I was in the bunk.
 Q. In the barracks of your company?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Have you told all that you know about this disturbance?—A. I told no one; I don't know anything.
 Q. Do you know that there was any firing that night?—A. Yes, sir; I remember there was firing; the firing woke me up. It seemed to me it was coming from Brownsville, from the town.
 Q. And you never found out anything about it since?—A. No, sir; nothing about it since at all.
 Q. Didn't you have any curiosity about it? Didn't ask anybody about it?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Can you give any reason why you ought to be allowed to enlist again?—A. Yes, sir; I think I ought to be enlisted again, and I haven't done anything at all to get the discharge I have; I have not done anything, and I don't know anything about that Brownsville affair at all. I was in bed. The shooting woke me up. I have no idea who did it. I am innocent of that; have no idea who did it.
 Q. And that is all you can say about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Testimony of Elias Gant.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

ELIAS GANT being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, inspector-general, testified as follows:

- Q. State your name.—A. Elias Gant.
 Q. And what was your former company?—A. Company D, sir.
 Q. And regiment?—A. Twenty-fifth Infantry.
 Q. You have been discharged without honor?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. You want to get back in the Army?—A. Yes, sir; I did.
 Q. You did?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Can you give any reason why you think they ought to take you back?—A. No, sir; not exactly.
 Q. Have you anything to say?—A. No, sir; there's nothing I can say; don't know anything to say.
 Q. What do you know about the shooting that took place that night?—A. Don't know anything at all, sir.
 Q. Didn't you hear any of it?—A. I was in my bed at the time the shooting took place.
 Q. In the company barracks?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. You never found out who did it?—A. No, sir.
 Q. What is your idea about it?—A. Well, sir, I have no ideas at all.
 Q. Have you been questioned before about it?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. By whom?—A. Captain Lyon and another officer, I just can't think of his name now.
 Q. And by Mr. Gilchrist Stewart?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did you tell everything that you knew about it?—Yes, sir.
 Q. You didn't take any part in that shooting yourself?—A. No, sir.

- Q. And you don't know who did?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Don't know whether it was soldiers or citizens?—A. No, sir; don't know whether it was soldiers or citizens.
 Q. Did you know there was any bad feeling between the soldiers and citizens?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Testimony of John Green.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

JOHN GREEN, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

- Q. State your name.—A. John Green.
 Q. In what company did you last serve?—A. Company D.
 Q. Twenty-fifth Infantry?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. When were you discharged?—A. Discharged, well, I can't say what day of the month, but I have got my discharge with me; you can see for yourself. It was the first Monday before Thanksgiving.
 Q. Were you discharged without honor?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Why?—A. Don't know why; on account of the Brownsville trouble, I suppose.
 Q. Didn't you ever hear why it was?—A. Sure I heard why it was.
 Q. What did you understand was the reason?—A. Just understood we was to be discharged; don't know why or for what cause.
 Q. Well, didn't you understand if you told what you knew you would not be discharged?—A. Don't know nothing to be discharged for.
 Q. Didn't you understand, if you told what you knew, you would not be discharged?—A. I understood that by General Garlington; yes, sir.
 Q. Why wouldn't you tell who these men were that made this disturbance?—A. Don't know nothing to tell.
 Q. How could a thing like that occur in a garrison without you knowing it?—A. Don't know; I don't know nothing about it.
 Q. If you heard shooting in the street down here, wouldn't you inquire something about it?—A. I wouldn't have no business inquiring about it.
 Q. You would not care anything about it?—A. I would care something about it.
 Q. You would not care to find out what it was about?—A. I might do that, too.
 Q. But you never tried to find out about the Brownsville business?—A. I didn't undertake to try to find out.
 Q. You know the soldiers were accused of shooting up the town?—A. Afterwards I knew.
 Q. Didn't you know that night?—A. No, sir; didn't know nothing about it that night.

Testimony of Joseph Jones.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

JOSEPH JONES, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

- Q. State your name.—A. Joseph Jones.
 Q. What company and regiment did you last serve in?—A. Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
 Q. When were you last discharged?—A. I was last discharged November 20, 1906.
 Q. You were discharged without honor then?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. You want to get back in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Is there anything you can say, or want to say, that will help me to understand why you ought not to be rejected?—A. Yes, sir; this, Major, I was at Brownsville at the time, but, however, I was in my bed asleep. I was orderly trumpeter during that day. I got off about 8 o'clock. I went to bed pretty early. Was in my bed asleep at the time I was awakened by the men in quarters getting up, and afterwards they got up and woke me up at the time and all went downstairs and fell in line. Roll was called at first by the first sergeant. The captain came over and afterwards D Company was marched out around the town and came in and was put on post at the quarters inside of the gate. That is all I know about it, sir.

Q. How far away from you was this shooting?—A. Well, the first shot I heard, why it sounded like it was right near the quarters, near that stone fence. I didn't hear but one shot after I woke up.

Q. Did you fall in with the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you one of the first to fall in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The shooting was all over before you got into ranks?—A. Yes, sir; it was all over before I got into ranks, sir.

Q. And you never heard but one shot?—A. No, sir; but one shot, and that was just about the time I woke up.

Q. Is there anything further that you want to say?—A. Yes; I would like to say: I would like the best in the world to be reenlisted, sir. Of course I hated it pretty bad getting that discharge, because I have not done anything, and don't know anything about it more than I have stated already, sir; but would like very much to get back if I can.

Q. Have you any idea who did this shooting?—A. No, sir; I have no idea at all, sir; whether citizens or soldiers I could not say, because I don't know a thing about it.

Q. Did you go to town any after the shooting?—A. No, sir; I was not allowed out after the shooting at all.

Q. Did you hear any of the men planning to shoot up the town?—A. No, sir; didn't hear any of the men planning at all, sir.

Q. Did you have any idea there was going to be trouble that night?—A. No, sir; no idea at all, sir.

Q. That is all you wish to state?—A. Yes, sir.

---

Testimony of Perry Cisco.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

PERRY CISCO, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. My name is Perry Cisco.

Q. And your last service was in what organization?—A. Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When were you discharged?—A. I was discharged November 24.

Q. Have you told your story about this to any representative of the Government, inspector, or other officer?—A. No, sir; I did not give my statement to anyone till after I was discharged, to a lawyer from New York, Gilchrist Stewart.

Q. Then have you seen your statement to him in print?—A. No, sir; I have not seen my statement to him in print; but it was taken down on the typewriter.

Q. And you swore to it?—A. Well, I told him, but I didn't take no oath, just what I knew about it; told him all I knew in regard to the matter. I can give an account of where I was from that morning until that night, until I had orders to be in at 8 o'clock, and I went to bed about 9 o'clock after the lights went out and never woke until call to arms sounded. I heard shooting on the outside and heard the sentry call for the guard.

Q. You said you didn't know where the bullets were coming from?—A. No, sir; it was dark that night, and they didn't light any lights in the quarters, because they was hollering outside, and the gun racks were locked, and after we got our rifles we all fell in; the company was present or accounted for, except there was a couple of men on pass.

Q. How could this shooting go on without your knowing about it?—A. Really, I didn't know because I was ordered in the post at 8 o'clock that night, and of course I was in at 8 o'clock; when the lights went out, I went to bed, and I never woke up any more until call to arms went, and everybody was trying to get their rifles to fall in for roll call.

Q. Do you know whether the guard was mixed up in this affray?—A. No, sir; I don't. I don't even know the men that was on post.

Q. Did you ever find out anything about it the next day or afterwards?—A. No, sir; I found out later that it was a man of D Company that was on that post out there. They sent for him to go to Washington.

Q. But whom do you suppose did this shooting, citizens or colored men (soldiers)?—A. I really don't know, sir; I could not say. I don't know anything at all about that.

Q. Were you not interested in it?—A. Yes, sir; I was interested in it, so far as my duty was concerned to do what I was told. I was on guard all that night till the next morning—till I was relieved. The whole company done guard that night from 12 o'clock until the next morning, and was relieved by another company.

Q. How many men were on the main guard?—A. Why, the main guard, there was about 12 men.

Q. Mounted guard every day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Twelve men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Privates besides the noncommissioned officers?—A. Yes, sir; they had four posts there, 12 privates. I really don't think there was a man that was in my company that was outside after 8 o'clock that night, because they were all present for check, and when the roll call was held, we was all out there, except those two men that were on pass.

Q. Could the guard have taken part in this racket without your knowing anything about it?—A. The guard at the guardhouse?

Q. Yes.—A. Where the guardhouse is stationed is over on the other side of the parade ground, and the shooting sounded like it was out toward town in the rear of our quarters; the town is right behind the rear of the quarters, and the shooting sounded like it was coming from the town; the shooting didn't seem like it was on the parade ground.

Q. But suppose the patrol of the guard had gone out the main gate into that alleyway? You wouldn't have known anything about it?—A. I suppose that they could go along, but I don't know anything about that.

Q. But something of the sort could happen without your knowing it then?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose it could. I know I was in my quarters at 8 o'clock.

Q. But is it not queer that you didn't find out anything about it since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you try?—A. No, sir; I didn't try. I have been around amongst all the boys up to the time they separated at Fort Reno; never heard any of them say anything about it, whether they done any shooting; never heard any of them say so.

Q. Were any bullets coming into the fort?—A. The next morning there was some of the boys shoved some holes in D Company quarters where there was some shots come from the town side. I was on guard down at the gate next morning, and they were showing it on the parade where it come out from the back part—from the town side.

Q. Have you anything more that you want to say?—A. Nothing more than only I am perfectly innocent of the shooting myself, and I would like to have a clear record, as much so as I could. I have never done anything wrong that I know of and I can almost tell where I was at from that morning; that is, around the garrison; and after I was ordered to be in at 8 o'clock I came in and set up till the lights went out, then I went to bed. I have never heard anything about the shooting at all.

Q. What is your idea of how it occurred?—A. Sir?

Q. What is your idea of who did the shooting?—A. Well, I can't go by anything any more than what was told to me and what I have read, that it was a misunderstanding between the people of the town and the soldiers. All the boys of the company believe that the people in town fired into the post. That is all that I can go by.

Q. Do you believe that?—A. Well, the shots was coming from the town and there was no soldiers out, and I am compelled to believe that there was some one shooting in town in the post, because there was no soldiers out of my company at the time I was in line attending roll call. Of course I hate to get a bad discharge for nothing and have not done anything, don't you know, on my own part. I would like to go out with a fair record if I could. Was only in the service twenty-nine days on the last enlistment.

Q. That is all that you have to say, is it, Cisco?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you told everything that you know about it?—A. Told everything that I really know about it; yes, sir.

Q. You don't know of anybody else that I could get information from?—A. Well, I don't know, sir. There's a good many more of the boys out there that is waiting; don't know what they are going to say or have to say.

Letter of Maj. J. G. Galbraith.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 2, 1907.

The INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the testimony of John Kirkpatrick, late private Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who is an applicant for reenlistment.

I would invite attention to his statement that he was in the hospital and physically unable to have participated in the disturbance.

I also interrogated him concerning the statement of James Harden, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, another patient, who has made affidavit that the firing was done by a mounted body of men; that six or seven bullets whizzed about the hospital, and that the patients and others hid behind pillars.

This was news to Kirkpatrick, who was on the porch with Harden.

Kirkpatrick had never heard of these things until I read to him the statement of Harden; then Kirkpatrick sought to break the force of the contradiction by saying that Harden got out on the porch sooner than he did.

To any disinterested person listening to the testimony of Kirkpatrick, it was manifest that the events described by Harden could not have been observed by Harden without the knowledge of Kirkpatrick.

In fairness to the latter, however, it must be said that it would appear not only possible, but probable, that he has no guilty knowledge of the affray.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. G. GALBRAITH,
Major, Inspector-General.

Testimony of John Kirkpatrick.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 1, 1907.

JOHN KIRKPATRICK, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. John Kirkpatrick.

Q. What company and regiment did you last serve in?—A. Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When were you last discharged?—A. November 23, sir.

Q. You want to get back in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell me anything that you think might convince me that you ought not to be rejected?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go ahead.—A. I was in the hospital night of the 13th, in the hospital in the morning at 7 o'clock of the 13th. I was marked hospital by the mayor of the town, Dr. Frederick Combe, for an operation. And I remained in the hospital one week after the 13th.

Q. Anything more?—A. No, sir; only the men that was in there with me, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. Who were they?—A. Private James Harden, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and Jim Bailey, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. What about these men?—A. Yes, sir; First Sergeant Otem was there; William C. Nolan, First-class private, Hospital Corps, was there.

Q. What is it that these men know about you?—A. That I was in the hospital.

Q. Unable to get out?—A. Yes, sir; unable to get out.

Q. During the time of this disturbance?—A. Yes, sir. I don't know anything about it, sir.

Q. Did you go out on the porch?—A. Yes, sir; I went out on the porch.

Q. In your night clothes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you see out there?—A. Didn't see anything at all, sir.

Q. Who was with you on the porch?—A. First Sergeant Otem, William C. Nolan, James Harden, and Jim Bulley, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. When you went out on the porch, did you hear any shooting, or was it all over?—A. All over when I got out. I was awakened by the shooting.

Q. Any shots fired after you got out on the porch?—A. No, sir; no shots fired.

Q. Did you hear any bullets whizzing at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was you scared?—A. No, sir.

92 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

Q. Were the others frightened?—A. I don't know, sir. They didn't seem to be frightened. I didn't pay any attention to them. I could not hear anything after I was out on the porch.

Q. What direction was this firing from?—A. It was from the back of the quarters—from the town side.

Q. Was there a wire fence near there?—A. Near the quarters?

Q. Near the hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it join the wall near there?—A. Let me see; yes, sir, the wire fence; not near the hospital though; but it joins near the last quarters of the soldiers' quarters.

Q. Did you see any of the men with you get behind the brick pillars?—A. No, sir.

Q. Behind the columns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they dodging any bullets?—A. No, sir; didn't seem to dodge any.

Q. Did you see any men on horseback?—A. No, sir.

Q. Hear any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't hear anybody galloping along the fence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor firing pistols?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know where the wire fence joins the wall?—A. Yes, sir; I did guard there.

Q. Was there any firing from there when you were out on the porch?—A. No, sir; no firing at all after I came out on the porch in my night clothes; it was all over.

Q. Was there any talk on the part of the other patients about this shooting?—A. No, sir; 'deed I didn't hear it.

Q. Didn't they talk about it afterwards?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't Harden ever say anything about it?—A. No, sir; not to me he didn't.

Q. I will read you Harden's statement: "I was in the post hospital at Fort Brown, Tex., asleep on my bunk, on the night of August 13, 1906, when the shooting took place at the post. The shooting woke me up. I got up and came out on the front porch toward town, with the hospital steward and the other patients. When I got out on the hospital porch, I heard a bunch of mounted people gallop along the wire fence from east to west, along the north boundary of the post. They were coming from the northeast corner of the wire fence. They opened up a fire near where the wire fence joins the wall, in rear of the first set of barracks. They fired a few shots here, I don't know exactly how many, and then rode on along the wall to where most of the firing took place—in rear of B and O Company barracks. Firing ceased soon after call to arms sounded. Some six or seven bullets came over the hospital. We got behind those big brick pillars. The bullets were lead bullets, because they had a coarse hum and did not seem like a steel bullet. It was too dark to see any persons. I knew nothing about any trouble." (See p. 163, S. Doc. 155, 59th Cong. 2d sess.)

Q. Is that a true statement of Harden's?—A. Yes, sir; I guess it is true, because he came out on the porch before I did. I was about the last one to come out.

Q. But this is the first time you heard anything of the sort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not until I read it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is all new to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you think it is queer that you heard nothing about it at the time?

A. I don't know, sir; because if he had said anything about it I would have heard it; I was right there. I could not walk fast; he could walk fast.

Q. Are those answers the way you want them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the night of the 13th of August, were you physically able to have taken part in this affair?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you can prove that by these others you have named?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But if you knew who did the firing, you would not tell on them, would you?—A. Why, if I knew who did the firing, before I would suffer to be punished and put out of the service, of course I would tell who it was.

Q. But you didn't think they meant to put you out?—A. I didn't think any more about it at all.

Q. If you had it to do over again you would tell first?—A. I could not tell no story if I didn't know anything about it. Don't know who did it, therefore I could not say, sir.

Q. Have you anything further to add to your statement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Told everything you want to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you go, please give your address.—A. New England Restaurant, kept by Mrs. Johnson, State street, between Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth, Chicago, Ill.

Testimony of Hoytt Robinson.

LEXINGTON, KY., February 5, 1907.

HOYTT ROBINSON, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, inspector-general, testified as follows:

- Q. State your name.—A. Hoytt Robinson.
- Q. What was your former company?—A. Company D.
- Q. And regiment?—A. Twenty-fifth Infantry.
- Q. What was the date of your discharge?—A. November 26, 1906.
- Q. You were discharged without honor?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you want to get back in the Army?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Now, is there anything you can say that might help to prove to the Secretary of War that you ought to be reenlisted?—A. I can say that the night this occurrence happened at Brownsville I was musician of the guard, and I sounded the alarm call that night, and after sounding the call I returned to the guardhouse and remained there until I was relieved from guard. The guard report will show that I was on guard.
- Q. Now, can you prove by anybody else that you were not away from the guardhouse after 11 o'clock?—A. I can prove it by the sergeant of the guard or one member of the guard.
- Q. Give their names.—A. Sergeant Reid, Company B; Private Samuel Battle, Company D.
- Q. What do you expect to prove by them?—A. To prove that I did not leave the guardhouse.
- Q. After 11 o'clock?—A. After 11 o'clock.
- Q. You understand this—11 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. By whose order did you sound the alarm?—A. By the sergeant of the guard.
- Q. At what time?—A. At 12 o'clock.
- Q. You are sure?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Didn't you state to Colonel Lovering that it was 12.15?—A. No, sir; 12 o'clock.
- Q. Don't you remember making a statement to Colonel Lovering?—A. Colonel Lovering?
- Q. An inspector who came down from Oklahoma City?—A. No, sir; not 12.15; 12 o'clock.
- Q. Be sure, now, about that?—A. If they got it 12.15 they made a mistake; I didn't say that; 12 o'clock.
- Q. Were you seen by any officer about midnight?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You slept in the second story of the guardhouse?—A. I slept in the entrance to the guardhouse.
- Q. Did you have any gun?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Were the guns in the guardhouse, rifles?—A. I didn't have any rifle at all.
- Q. Did the others have?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where did they keep them?—A. Inside the guardhouse.
- Q. Loose or locked up?—A. Loose.
- Q. How many of them were there?—A. I don't know the number.
- Q. Did the men all pass by you when they went in and out of the guardhouse?—A. I don't remember whether they passed back and forth by me. I saw Corporal Wheeler, Private Sam Battle, and Private Benjamin F. Johnson.
- Q. What were they doing when you saw them?—A. Private Johnson he was number one, and Private Battle was in line to go out on patrol or something.
- Q. How many of them were there in line?—A. I don't know, sir.
- Q. Twelve, or two, or six?—A. Well, I'll say there was more than two, not over twelve.
- Q. What time was that?—A. That was about a minute past 12.
- Q. After you sounded the alarm?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Now, are you certain there were more than two?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You are not certain there were more than six?—A. No, sir. I never paid any attention to that.
- Q. Who was doing the shooting?—A. I don't know, sir; I can't say.

94 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

Q. At this time—when the guard fell in—was the shooting going on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did it last?—A. About fifteen or twenty minutes, as near as I can say.

Q. After you sounded the alarm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did it last after you sounded the alarm?—A. Why, about fifteen minutes. I blew the call about five minutes.

Q. What call?—A. Call to arms.

Q. How near were you to the main gate?—A. About 100 or 150 yards.

Q. Was that where the shooting came from?—A. That's where it appeared to me to be.

Q. You saw the flashes?—A. No, sir; I didn't see the flashes.

Q. Hear any bullets whiz?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is your idea of who did the shooting—soldiers or outsiders?—

A. Well, I don't know who it was.

Q. Well, if you heard some shooting out here on the street, would you not try to find out who was doing it?—A. Yes, sir; I would try.

Q. Did you try to find out who did the shooting that night?—A. Yes, sir; I asked several members of the company.

Q. What did they say?—A. Said they didn't know anything about it.

Q. Well, didn't the soldiers have any idea about it?—A. If they did they kept it to themselves; didn't let me know anything about it.

Q. How long had you been in the service?—A. I was in the service five years and nine months and some days. I enlisted on the 7th day of January, 1901; served up till the 26th day of November, 1906.

Q. What is the reason you didn't find out something about this shooting?—A. Sir, it was a very impossible matter for me to find out by asking or staying around the quarters. I could hear no one say anything about it, and none talked on that subject or about it. They seemed to think it was citizens.

Q. Who said it was the citizens?—A. Different soldiers I asked.

Q. What were their names?—A. I guess I talked to everyone in the company.

Q. And that was the general opinion?—A. Yes, sir; as near as I can say.

Q. What made you think that?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Well, but the talk about it—they gave some reason for thinking so?—

A. How it occurred?

Q. Yes; for thinking it was the citizens.—A. All the men's opinion seemed to think they were not wanted in Brownsville because they were colored.

Q. This shooting was going on only about 150 yards from where you were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many shots were fired?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. A great many?—A. Great many; yes, sir.

Q. How many men did you think were firing?—A. I will say that there was about 10 or 12.

Q. Rifles or pistols?—A. Sounded most too loud for pistols; it must have been some kind of large-sized guns.

Q. All sound alike?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any shots come into the barracks or post or buildings?—A. I saw a window broken—D Company's quarters; it didn't look like to me where a bullet went through; looked like a rock went through.

Q. Some of them thought it was a bullet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did this occur?—A. It happened that night.

Q. You saw it the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any galloping of horses?—A. No, sir.

Q. Ever see anybody else that heard horses galloping that night?—A. I can't think of one that heard the horses, but heard some one speak about it—hearing some horses.

Q. Now, is there anything further that you think of, anything that you think might prove to the Secretary of War that you did not have a hand in this, or that you don't know anything about it?—A. All that I can do is to swear where I was at at the time this affair was going on; where I was afterwards.

Q. You don't know that the guard did this shooting, do you?—A. No, sir; I will say there was no firing around the guardhouse.

Q. The firing, you say, took place at the gate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know of any patrols going out from the guardhouse?—A. Yes, sir; Captain Macklin sent out two patrols. He along in the evening ordered that every man be in the garrison by 8 o'clock, and remain in the garrison. Captain Macklin said that each man would be informed that they were not in arrest, but they would remain in the garrison the rest of the night; and later on he ordered another patrol sent out, but I didn't see it go out.

Q. Why didn't you see it?—A. I were in the guardhouse.

Q. You was asleep?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you know that he sent out another one?—A. I heard him say to the sergeant that he would send it out later.

Q. What time did you hear him say that?—A. That was after "retreat"—I can't say just what hour; it was after "retreat."

Q. Well, those two patrols that you did see, what time did they go out?—A. After "retreat."

Q. That was in August?—A. This was in August.

Q. Did any patrol go out after dark?—A. Yes, sir; one went out after dark.

Q. Then you knew of another one that was to go out later?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you didn't see it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many men were in those patrols that you saw?—A. The one I saw was a corporal and two privates—three men.

Q. Did you see one patrol or two patrols?—A. I saw two patrols.

Q. Both of the same size?—A. Yes, sir; Corporal Wheeler taken one out of Company D; Corporal Franklin, of Company B, taken the other one out.

Q. And how many noncommissioned officers of the guard were there?—A. I don't know. Sergeant Reid, Company B; Corporal Wheeler, Company D; Corporal Franklin, Company B.

Q. You have furnished evidence of previous good character?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To The Military Secretary?—A. No, sir; yes, sir; I wrote a letter.

Q. Did you show what anybody else said about you—your officers?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. Have you applied for reenlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Been examined?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you apply?—A. I applied to the station at Mount Sterling and the letter came back—said the letter was not sufficient evidence. I sent the letter to Captain Lyon.

Q. And have you heard from him?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you depend on Captain Lyon to establish your previous good character? Is that the idea?—A. Yes, sir; I am depending on him.

Q. That is all that he knows about this matter so far as concerns you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what you expect from him is evidence of your previous good character?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there anything else you think of that the Secretary of War ought to know about your case?—A. Well, I will say that my record is good and I have had no convictions, and never been tried or anything, and I should have a good discharge.

Q. Now, that third patrol; you don't know what time it went out?—A. No, sir; I know it was to—

Q. It could go out without your knowing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could they shoot up the town without your knowing it?—A. No, sir.

Q. This one that you didn't see, you don't know what time it went out?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know whether it went through the gate or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. But it could have gone through the gate there and done some shooting without your knowing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you knew about it, would you tell?—A. Yes, sir. I would have told in the morning.

Q. But did you think that you really would be discharged?—A. No, sir; I didn't know it until General Garlington came there.

Q. Well, if you had believed that you would be discharged, wouldn't you have told?—A. Oh, yes; I would have told anyhow.

Q. Was there any understanding between you and the other men that you would not tell anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or that you would not talk about it?—A. No, sir; I never heard anyone say anything about it. I asked men who they thought did it, and everyone thought the citizens of Brownsville done it.

Q. Who did they think shot the police lieutenant?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Well, who was it that had a grudge against that bartender that was killed?—A. I heard of him getting killed. I don't know anything of that.

Q. Did you know of any bad feeling that the soldiers had against the citizens?—A. No, sir; I never heard of any bad feeling.

NOTE BY THE INSPECTOR. See Affidavit F, page 224, Senate Document No. 155, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, where Hoytt Robinson states that about 12.20 o'clock he was aroused by Sergeant Reid, commander of the guard, and told to sound the alarm of "call to arms." He also deposed in that Affidavit F, that after he was relieved at 2 o'clock a. m. August 14, 1906, he saw a number of citizens walking around the fort wall with guns and Winchesters.

Testimony of Robert L. Rogan.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 7, 1907.

ROBERT L. ROGAN, being duly sworn and interrogated by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General, testified as follows:

Q. State your name.—A. Robert L. Rogan.

Q. And your former company.—A. D Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry, sir.

Q. When were you discharged?—A. November 25, 1906.

Q. Were you discharged without honor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you want to get back in the Army?—A. Yes, sir; if I could. I have married since I have been away from there, sir.

Q. Well, now, say what you can for yourself as to why you ought not to be rejected?—A. On the night of the 13th of August, why I was in bed. About 12 o'clock why this here trouble taken place and I were awakened by the soldiers running around the quarters, and in the meantime the fellow right side of me, I woke up, he was under the bunk, he was under his bed; so I gets up and about fifteen minutes after that, why I seen Sergeant Harris, which is now first sergeant, was first sergeant, why he was there; he says, oh there's nothing, just some one firing in on us. I heard the call to arms go about that time. Capt. S. P. Lyon was downstairs and we fell out in line and everyone answered to roll call and everyone was there except the ones on pass, that was Corporal Hawkins and another private, and then after we fell out in line everybody answered to roll call that fell in line and marched around through town and then back to the post, and after we come back to the post why Major Penrose commanded O Company to be placed on guard immediately. So in the meantime why after they were placed on guard, why I stayed out there for about fifteen minutes after that and our captain dismisses us, and all went to bed after that. The next morning B Company was placed on guard; the next day we were placed on guard and stayed that way until we came away from there. But in the meantime I would swear, sir, that I knew nothing of it, for I was in bed. I never had any trouble while I was down there. Some fellows down there had trouble in going in saloons down there, but I never used any kind of drinks and had no cause to go in saloons at all. There is two or three privates down there that went in and opened up a saloon to keep their brother soldiers from going in these saloons that boycotted us where they were not allowed, sir.

Q. How does it come you didn't find out anything about it afterwards?—A. Well, sir, it looked strange to me, as I had been running around all the time before then; up till the 13th day we had been running out until about twenty minutes till 11 o'clock at night. That evening at "retreat" the major issues an order for everyone to be in post at 8 o'clock that night. That was something that bothered me; he must have looked for something or he would not have issued orders for us to come in that early. It never had been that way before. When 8 o'clock came everybody was present.

Q. These men who were on pass, were they in at 8 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did they come to be absent at midnight?—A. The ones that could be found after the major issued this order, why some of them could not be found; of course they had to be out.

Q. But didn't you find out before you left Brownsville what had taken place, who did this shooting? Didn't you find out the next day anything about it?—A. No, sir; I didn't find out. I used every step that I could toward finding out about that trouble to keep from being thrown out without honor, which I knew nothing of; but I tried to find out for myself how come this trouble.

Q. Now, if you should be wakened up in the night here by firing in the street, wouldn't you try to find out about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was doing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find out anything, or make any inquiries, about that shooting down there?—A. I tried every way that I could to find out, because I didn't care to be put out the way I was. I was takin' a civil-service course at the time, and I knew that would hurt me by coming out that way. I used every effort that I could to find out to keep from coming out that way. When we first gone down there we threw most of our blue clothes to those little Mexican boys; they takes the things and some of them wears them; and then after that it was so said that some of the men around there was seen with some of these blue clothes on; and I just believe that some of these taken those blue clothes and did this here work just to lay it on the soldiers.

Q. But the soldiers didn't wear blue?—A. No, sir; not down there.

Q. They didn't wear caps, did they?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, these men, would they be likely to be taken for soldiers if they did not wear khaki and campaign hats?—A. Well, sir; I don't know. Some of the boys threw away most of the things, because they only had a day or so to serve. When we came away from there we brought Cook Duncan, and he threw away most all his blue clothes.

Q. On the 14th, the day after the shooting, did you ask any questions about that shooting?—A. The captain.

Q. No, no, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I asked around amongst my soldier brothers, but nothing could I find out at all.

Q. Did you go to town after the shooting?—A. We were not allowed outside the garrison at all.

Q. Until you left?—A. Yes, sir; we were put under guard and were not allowed to go outside. They taken our guns away from us; they taken our guns downstairs and put them in the orderly room—I think it was the next day—and was not allowed to have any rifles or ammunition after that at all. When we got to Fort Reno why then they disarmed us altogether.

Q. What time were you inspected the next morning?—A. We were inspected that morning—we were inspected that night to a certain extent, sir. The captain could not tell about the guns, but he taken some of the guns and looked through them. The next morning early he inspected the guns.

Q. You turned out in ranks the next morning for inspection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time?—A. About 7 o'clock—that was drill hour.

Q. There would have been a formation for drill anyhow at 7 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; instead of drill we turned out and had inspection.

Q. What belts did you wear?—A. The web belt.

Q. Where did you have your ammunition?—A. In the McKeever boxes.

Q. So you left those in your quarters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had your belts full of ammunition also?—A. No, sir; none in our web belts at all.

Q. When you turned out at 7?—A. Yes, sir; some mornings, why we drilled with the web belt some mornings, and then with the boxes some mornings. Of course, they had ammunition in them.

Q. When you went through the town did you see any civilians?—A. Yes, sir; we seen several civilians there with Winchester rifles standing on the corner, and which some of our soldiers would have taken the guns and examined if the captain had a let them, but the captain would not let them be examined; and one soldier "hollered" to the captain, he says: "Captain, here's a man with a rifle, here, sir; it needs to be examined." And this here citizen "hollers" out "I am an officer of the law," and we passes by. We saw a crowd standing on the corner and three or four of them had Winchester rifles, and that bothered me.

Q. Well, if you had been living in a town and had been waked up in the night by firing and gone out on the street, wouldn't you have taken a gun if you had one?—A. No, sir; not unless I knew what was going on. If I knew what was going on why then I might take some kind of arms to protect myself.

Q. Have you any other proofs besides your own statement?—A. Not here, but then I have some brother soldiers corresponding with me mostly every week.

Q. Were you interviewed by Mr. Gilchrist Stewart?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make an affidavit to him?—A. Yes, sir; in which he did state that he—at least I asked him to let me be employed by his favor over in Philadelphia, and he said he would, and by my carelessness I lost his address where he told me to go, and after that why I didn't go there.

Q. He promised you employment in Philadelphia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he promise this to others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they go?—A. Yes, sir; some went to Chicago, some to Philadelphia, and some to—well, several other places. And those that was not able of going to those places and didn't have the means to get away from Fort Reno, why he said that he would see that they gotten away from there. He said that some one had appropriated that means for the soldiers to get them away from Fort Reno and give them employment until this here was settled.

Q. Have you told all you know about it?—A. Yes, sir; told everything that I know about the Fort Brown row.

Q. Is there anything further you wish to state?—A. No, sir; nothing else that I would like to say; that is about all that I know of that.

Memorandum for The Military Secretary.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington.

As you are charged under the regulations with the recruiting and reenlistment of the Army, the President directs me to order you to take the statements of each of the men of Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, who has applied for reenlistment, and with the assistance of the Inspector-General or any officers of the Inspector-General's Department detailed for the purpose, to examine at length and fully the men making application for reenlistment, to determine so far as may be the detailed facts with respect to their relation to the foray at Brownsville, and their subsequent efforts, if noncommissioned officers, to acquire information in respect to the matter and to communicate the same to the proper authorities, with a view to enable this Department to determine the truth of the statements made by them in their applications for reenlistment that they were neither concerned in the foray nor had any knowledge of clues which might lead to the discovery of the offenders.

You will also direct the examination of such other witnesses as may be brought to your attention or the Inspector-General's, whose evidence may throw light on the matter. I have already directed the examination of Post Quartermaster Osborne and Civilian Blacksmith W. H. Sharpe, for the purpose of following a clew with reference to the gun racks of Company C, which may possibly lead to more definite information as to the perpetrators of the outrage. I transmitted to Major Blocksom and Mr. Purdy the list of applicants for reenlistment, with a view to their examination of the officers of the three companies in respect to the qualities of the men applying, and such knowledge as they might have as to the probability or improbability of their having been part of the band committing the crime at Brownsville, or of having information in respect to the identity of the criminals which they did not disclose. These examinations were not continued, however, because protested against by Captain Macklin and Major Penrose as likely to prejudice their defense in the court-martial proceedings. Without admitting the prejudice of such examinations, I directed on January 5, 1907, Major Blocksom and Mr. Purdy not to take their examinations, because I hoped that the court-martial proceedings might be so near as to give us the benefit of the evidence. It now appears that Captain Macklin is applying for further postponement, and therefore these examinations must be had in the interest of the applicants for reenlistment.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington.

In making the examinations of Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, in respect to the men who have applied for reenlistment, you will explain to Major Penrose and Captain Macklin that of course neither is obliged to answer any question that is put to him, in view of the court-martial proceedings pending against him, and as requested in communications to Brigadier-General McCaskey I should further postpone the examinations but for the fact that the three months after their discharge will soon expire, within which the question which the President should decide on the application for reenlistment must be decided in justice to any whom the facts disclose to be entitled to reenlistment. The examination will be conducted in such a way as to avoid any issue with reference to the conduct of the officers, and will relate solely to the qualities of the men, the places where they were the night of the foray, the opportunities for observation, and, if non-commissioned officers, their efforts since to discover the perpetrators. If Major Fenwick does not object, I should like to know from him whether he gave the order to break the gun racks of Company C the night of the foray, as testified to by Sergeant Harley. This can be read to all the officers of the three companies to explain the necessity for the examination.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 23, 1907.

Respectfully referred to the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army.
In the cases of Mingo Saunders and other former enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who are applicants for reenlistment, and who may be in Washington, the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army will make the examinations directed by the Secretary of War, in his memoranda of January 21, 1907, copies of which are within.

Reports of the examination will be submitted to this office.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, February 9, 1907.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY.

SIR: In conformity to the instructions communicated in your indorsement of the 23d instant, I beg leave to submit the following report of the testimony of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, who have submitted applications to be allowed to reenlist in the military service:

Three former enlisted men appeared at the Department in the operation of the instructions communicated to them by The Military Secretary on January 23, 1907. Edward L. Daniels, late a corporal in Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Elmer Brown, a private in Company B, and Thomas Jefferson, a private in Company C. All were men of considerable service who had been rated as of "good," "very good," or "excellent" character upon the completion of their preceding terms of enlistment. All expressed themselves as satisfied with their condition and prospects in the military service, in which they desired to continue indefinitely. All were able to read and write, but were otherwise illiterate. In point of intelligence they were perhaps slightly above the average of enlisted men of colored regiments. Corporal Daniels was decidedly above the average. In every case the questions put were answered without apparent reservation or equivocation; it was apparent, however, that each of them had reached the conclusion that no responsibility rested upon him in the matter of vindicating the good name of his regiment in respect to the acts committed in Brownsville in August last.

CORP. EDWARD L. DANIELS, COMPANY B.

Daniels was a corporal in Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry. He is 33 years of age, is a native of Charlottesville, Va.; his parents have been in the employ of the Riggs' family for about sixteen years. Daniels has been in the service, with an interruption of eight months, since 1894. He has been a noncommissioned officer and has three discharge certificates with character "excellent." He visited the town of Brownsville frequently, as often as three times per week, but was not molested and had no complaint to make of his treatment. To his knowledge, no man in his company (B) had any trouble in town at any time. When asked whether he had heard the men discuss the treatment which they received, his reply was:

"A. The only discussion I heard, some man or other, some other man of the company was struck with a gun, and this man reported to the commanding officer—to the captain first, and then to the commanding officer. What they did with him I don't know.

"Q. Did it create feeling in your company?—A. No, sir; not among the men as I could hear. I was one of the noncommissioned officers of the company. When I came there, I came there with the reputation of being an excellent soldier and worthy noncommissioned officer. The first vacancy I was made noncommissioned officer. Only three months—six months before made a noncommissioned officer. I never was tried so as to be reduced to the ranks. I always held my rank until I left the service.

"Q. Did you hear of the Tait incident down there?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of Mr. Tait assaulting this private, and from what I can understand this private wasn't a man of a bad disposition. He was more of a coward rather than of a bad disposition. And I heard Mr. Tait struck him across the head with a gun. The man fell to the street, and when he tried to rise he made an oath at him. What he said I don't know. That is only what I heard.

"Q. Was that discussed in the company?—A. No, it wasn't discussed, except there on the porch one night. Only a few words was passed and that was all there was. Some man says, 'The men know well enough that you must not go any place where you are not wanted, and the best place is the barracks for you.' That is what some man said."

When asked to give an account of his employment during the day and night of August 13, he said that from noon until late in the afternoon, possibly about retreat, he was at work completing some topographical sketches in connection with some practice marches upon which the command had been engaged. In this he was interrupted from time to time by explanations which he was required to give to enlisted men in connection with drill matters, so that his work was not completed until supper, which immediately preceded retreat. He sat out on the porch after supper and went to bed at about 8.40 p. m.

He was aroused by the firing and the sounding of the call "to arms;" as he "was used to being under fire" he "got on the floor." As he found that no bullets were coming near him he got up and ordered his section to get up. Sergt. George Jackson, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the quarters, opened the gun racks and issued the arms to the men. In obedience to the order of an officer he started to form the company; while doing so, First Sergeant Saunders appeared and completed the formation. Four men were absent from the formation. Private Alfred N. Williams, who slept at the quartermaster's department; Private Elmer Brown, who slept at the commanding officer's stables; Private John Brown, the post baker, and Private William Smith, at Lieutenant Lawrason's quarters.

The firing continued until after the formation of the company had been completed. When asked where the firing was, he said:

"A. In town. It started as I could hear it at our barracks, and instead of coming toward the barracks, continued to go the other way.

"Q. How long did it last?—A. The firing continued, not altogether, but about a second of interval in between, and when the roll was called shots were fired then; during the time the roll was called shots were fired. When the roll was called you could hear one shot, it seemed to me, every two minutes.

* * * * *

"A. The firing ceased after we had taken up our positions—just before that we got around to take our positions. While we were going in that direction you could hear scattering shots, and they were at the other end of the town, from what I could hear of the shots.

"Q. Could you see the flashes?—A. No, sir. We were down there between the buildings. I never did see any flashes at all, because I did not go and look out that window which way the firing were. I never were instructed to go and look that way. I was always told that when there is firing, if I had any men under me to get them in a place that my superior can take and use them."

When asked in respect to the participation of members of his company in the affray of the 13th, Daniels testified:

"Q. After the 13th, was this matter the subject of discussion at all in the company?—A. No, sir; they were not exactly talking. Now and then you would hear a man saying: 'Wonder who did the shooting?'

"Q. What opinion did you reach as to it?—A. Why, I reached an opinion like this: I said, I don't think any soldier could have done the shooting, especially in my company. I didn't form any opinion until after the guns were examined. If you fire one of those guns and clean it out, with the supposition that it is fairly clean, and you put it into the rack, it sweats, and you can look through it, and the curves where the bullet comes out, those curves where it sweats, the grains of powder will be seen, and you can take a rag and go down there and by twisting it around with a rod you can bring out powder. A gun, after being fired, you can't clean it properly under a week. You can make it look bright down the barrel, but it is not clean, for by the time you set it down and let it sweat you can take a rag and get dirt out of it.

"Q. When were the guns examined?—A. Next morning.

"Q. By whom?—A. By Lieutenant Lawrason, and the men who had dark guns were stepped aside.

"Q. With dark guns?—A. Yes, sir; with dirty guns supposed to have been fired. Then Captain Lyon, who were to go up there by orders of Major Penrose and inspect these guns supposed to have been fired, he takes a white cloth and tears it into small pieces and swabs these guns out. He finds grease and rust from the guns sweating, but don't find no powder at all.

"Q. Were any of the guns fired during the night?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

"Q. On the wall, I mean?—A. No, sir; no.

"Q. What time in the morning were these guns examined?—A. After daylight.

"Q. After daylight?—A. Yes, sir; between the hours of 7 and 9.

* * * * *

"Q. Was the matter much discussed in the company during that week?—A. That week that we were in Texas?

"Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; everybody seemed to be feeling very bad over the matter. I myself thought the men were getting along fine. You know, sir, that any place you go you are going to find some men that can not get along—some men that is just of that disposition. And I thought that being down in Texas that we were getting along just fine."

When asked—

"Q. Did it ever come to your knowledge in any way that any members of the regiment or any of the companies were out in the town that night taking part in the firing?—A. Did it what?

"Q. Did it ever come to your knowledge in any way after the 13th that any men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were out in the town taking part in the firing? Did you ever know it?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you ever hear it?—A. No, sir. That was an affair that no one could hear anything about. You could not talk to the men on the subject. They would not discuss it with you.

"Q. Why not?—A. I don't know, sir. It has been a mystery to me. I have tried to look through that matter myself.

"Q. What efforts have you made?—A. I made every kind of effort that I could without allowing them to think that I was looking for information.

"Q. What did you do? Tell me what you did.—A. Sometimes I would say: 'What do you think about the affair?' They say: 'I don't know.'

"Q. Did you talk with men of other companies?—A. I went about other companies very little. B and C Companies didn't get along very well together, and always kept apart, and D Company much the same. It came through playing ball. We had the best team and we had the best athletes—consequently they never liked each other in that way.

"Q. Now, go on and tell me of the other attempts you made to find out.—A. If I saw a squad of men talking, I would get as near as I could—as near as possible without them detecting I were around.

"Q. Did you never hear any intimation?—A. No, sir; never heard; not a word could I hear.

"Q. Have you been questioned about this by any of the company officers, as to what took place?"

Daniels's testimony is inclosed herewith, marked "A."

PRIVATE ELMER BROWN, COMPANY B.

Brown is 34 years old and a native of Maryland. He has four discharge certificates—three "excellent" and one "very good;" has not been tried by court-martial since 1898. Brown was on special duty as a groom for Major Penrose and was in the habit of going to Brownsville almost every evening; was never molested and has no complaint to make of his treatment; has heard of the bar restrictions and of the Reed and Tate incidents. When Reed's case was received and he was asked as to whether it created comment in the company, his reply was:

"A. Well, I don't know, sir. This was Sunday that this man Reed got into this trouble. I know myself that he was beastly drunk, because I was out with Major Penrose's horses, exercising them on a back street, and this man fell under one of the horses I was leading. I don't know about the feeling among the men, about this man Reed being pushed in the river. But this man Reed I have known him a great deal, and he is regular little pay-day fighter. And as to the feeling in O Company, I tell you, sir, I never was in O Company's quarters all my time there.

"Q. How were you all treated at Valentine?—A. Very good.

"Q. Nothing to complain of in Valentine?—A. Nothing with the people of Valentine; no, sir.

"Q. Then, when you go to Brownsville, you are treated differently?—A. That is, men who looked for sociability.

"Q. And you resented that?—A. Well, that is, among some of the men; that was none of my part."

Brown accounted for all his movements during the day of August 13. As groom he slept in a room in Major Penrose's stable so as to be near the horses. He attended to his duties during the day; in the evening he visited some of the married men of his company and returned to his room at the stable and went to bed at 9 o'clock. He was not aroused by the firing, but was awakened by Corporal Burdett, who was sent by Major Penrose to verify the absentees. He did not form with Company B, but went back to the stable and went to bed.

When asked—

"Q. During all that time did you hear this affray discussed in the quarters or anywhere?—A. No, sir; I used to sit around and try to hear. Never could hear a word about it.

"Q. Did you ever try to look into it yourself to see what had happened—that is, try to get any information?—A. Yes, sir; time and again I was trying. As I told Major Penrose, I went around and tried to seek into this affair. The first report made of this, there was a woman that made some talk around there, among some of these soldiers, that she knew who did this shooting, but she would not tell anything about it. This was a woman that ran in the garrison that night and made some talk around.

"Q. Colored woman?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was her name?—A. Cora Jones.

"Q. Husband living there?—A. Yes, sir; her husband was artificer of B Company. Of course I used all I could to seek around, and couldn't learn anything of it. I went to the commanding officer. He sent for this woman—her and first sergeant's wife, Frazier's wife. Couldn't get any news. They kept her in the garrison, Cora Jones, until we got ready to go away from there. She said she didn't know anything about it. I heard the women talking—that is, down on the line. I told the major and he got a little from Mrs. Frazier, that this woman ran in the garrison the night of this shooting. Said she had to get out of the town, because there was shooting going on. That is the information that I learned, and I gave that to the commanding officer."

When asked whether he heard anything more, his reply was:

"A. No, sir; I was considered—I was called a hundred times a dog robber and pimp, because of sitting around trying to get information about this affair.

"Q. The feeling was against you?—A. Yes, sir; it was against me by men of the organization. If I would go in the quarters, it has happened many a time, the boys shout, 'Here comes Major Penrose's dog robber.' That is the way the thing went on about me in the quarters among the soldiers; because I have never run with a crowd of men since I have been in the Army. I went over there to Reno. I listened. I got in places where there was all kinds of men, all kinds of games—trying to hear something of this affair. I didn't want to be discharged. I couldn't get any ins and outs of it.

"Q. That was all that you heard, what you have told me?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Have you any reason to suspect that any of them had been concerned in it and were concealing it?—A. No, sir; because I never heard anything about it."

Major Penrose, upon the telegraphic request of Private Brown, submitted the following statement to The Military Secretary, under date of December 14, 1906:

"Private Elmer Brown was in charge of my horses, and was authorized by me to sleep in a room in the quartermaster's corral, next to the stalls occupied by my horses. I had given him orders over a year and a half ago that in case of an emergency of any kind, he was at once to go to my horses and remain with them until I sent him orders what to do.

"On the night in question, when the roll of Company B was called, Corporal Harris, of the same company, was sent by his company commander to the corral to see if Brown was there, and reported he had found him asleep on his bunk in the room mentioned above. This was about ten minutes after the cessation of firing.

"That Brown was in his room at the corral is further testified to by Alfred W. Williams, who was then a private in Company B, and detailed on extra duty in the quartermaster's department, and as such was authorized to sleep in the corral, and who told me the following morning, during my investigation of the affair that he saw Brown in his room almost immediately after the shooting.

"I have known Saunders and Brown for something over two years and a half, and I have the utmost confidence in both of them, and in their statements. I am firmly of the belief that neither one of them were, in any way, connected with this most deplorable affair, and I am convinced if they could have found out who the guilty men were, or anyone who might have had knowledge of the shooting, they would promptly have reported the matter to me. I further believe these two men made an honest effort to detect the criminals."

Brown's testimony is inclosed herewith marked "B."

PRIVATE THOMAS JEFFERSON, COMPANY C.

Jefferson is a native of Indiana and is 34 years old. He has been in the service nearly fourteen years and has three discharge certificates—two "good" and one "excellent." He was not confined or tried by court-martial during the enlistment, which was terminated by his discharge at Fort Reno in November last.

Jefferson was "room orderly;" he attended drills but was excused from guard and attended no roll calls except at night. He went into Brownsville upon several occasions prior to August 13, was well treated. "Nobody ever bothered me and I never had anything to say to anybody else." When asked how the men liked their treatment in Brownsville, his reply was:

"A. They didn't like it so very well.

"Q. Did they talk about it a good deal?—A. Right smart. They didn't like to be down where they wasn't liked in a saloon—barred from the saloons.

"Q. They complained about the way they were treated in the saloons?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did they complain of the way in which the white people treated them in the town?—A. No, sir; I never heard them.

"Q. Did you hear about the Tate-Newton incident?—A. Yes, sir; I heard about the matter.

"Q. Did you talk with him?—A. I never did see the man.

"Q. Who was the soldier who was struck?—A. The soldier was a fellow by the name of James Newton, C Company.

"Q. One of your own company?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did he say to you about it?—A. He never spoke to me about it; he spoke to some of the rest about it.

"Q. What was said about it in the company?—A. They just went and reported it to the commanding officer, and said it was too bad; that is all

"Q. That wasn't what they said in the company; what did the men say in the company?—A. I don't know.

"Q. You were the room orderly?—A. I know, sir; but I didn't accompany the men at all times. I wasn't paying much attention. I went up there to see about his head. I think Captain Macklin, he came up and examined it; but anything more about it I didn't hear them say.

"Q. Weren't they angry about it?—A. Didn't seem to be. I never heard any man say anything angry about it.

"Q. Do you remember the other man's case, the one that was pushed off the boat?—A. Reed? Yes, sir; Oscar W. Reed. I just heard he was pushed off the boat. When he come in the quarters I don't know whether his clothes were dried or not. I didn't get up there. It was night, or evening some time. I didn't hear it only about the next morning.

"Q. You were not kindly received by the white people; the saloon rule was sprung on you; one man got hit over the head with a pistol; another was pushed off into the water—do you mean to say that the Company was not angry about that?—A. I could not say that. I know I was not. I didn't have anything to do with it. I had my work to do.

"Q. What did the others say about it?—A. I never heard them say anything about it.

"Q. You were right there, hearing everything that went on?—A. No. I could not hear everything.

"Q. You want to tell us all about this. Here you were the room orderly; you were in a position to hear what was said, to know what the men felt, how they felt about it.—A. General, I don't know what they felt about it; I don't know no more what they said.

"Q. You heard them talking?—A. I know, I was room orderly—

"Q. They were talking about it, they resented it, didn't they? They didn't like it?—A. Well, I don't know whether they did or not; their actions might have showed it; I didn't stay there long enough to know what they was saying."

On August 13, Jefferson performed his duties as room orderly as usual; at 9 o'clock he put out the lights and went to bed and did not wake up until he was aroused by the firing. When asked what awakened him, he said:

"A. The first shots fired. I taken it to be fire alarm of the sentry in rear of the quarters. We had a sentry in rear of the quarters. I taken it to be firing, just as the sentry would do. That gets everybody up out of bed. Well, a few minutes after that I sat there on my bed, and I heard several rapid shots fired.

"Q. Where were they?—A. Downstairs, seemed like. I don't know whether they was inside the garrison or outside the fence; but it seemed to be pretty close to the garrison—that is, to the post. The wall divides the town and the post. It seems like they were on that side of the wall, or on this side, I couldn't tell which. They seemed to be very fast. Well, then I just, everybody when we heard the firing, got up quick. 'To arms' went, and everybody jumped for the gun racks. Well, the gun racks then was locked. Sergeant Brawner had the keys, and he was supposed to be there in an instant to open the racks.

"Q. What about the racks—two were broken, you said?—A. They were broken after the call went, the fire call went.

"Q. How did you know they were broken after the fire call went?—A. The men there broken open the rack after call went.

"Q. But they had been broken all along hadn't they?—A. No, sir; not all along; when I told you they were broken before I thought—"

When asked what noncommissioned officer was in charge of the quarters, he said:

"A. Sergeant Brawner.

"Q. He was there?—A. It was a long time before he came there. I don't know how long. Major Penrose came around and told the men to get them gun racks open. The men says, 'We can't find the sergeant in charge of quarters.' It was quite a little while and they couldn't find him yet. Some of the men taken axes and bust the gun racks open. They went downstairs. We had a quartermaster's sergeant named McMurray, George McMurray. He got the ammunition, and Lieutenant Grier, he taken command of the company, and we stayed out there waiting for orders.

"Q. Did you go to roll call?—A. I went there and stayed until order to stay in the quarters.

"Q. The shots continued all this time?—A. No, sir; they had ceased. Understand that D Company was out before C Company got its firearms. Two companies was out before ever we got out.

"Q. How much time was there from the time you woke up until the time the company formed?—A. I could not say. It was a terrible long time.

"Q. A long time?—A. Yes, sir; a terrible long time. I never see anything move so slow. Men moved so slow; the noncommissioned officers were slow. It was a long time before ever they got out."

Jefferson did not know when the guns of Company C were inspected, but it was not until after daylight. When asked whether he ever heard the incidents of August 13 mentioned in the company, his reply was:

"A. No, sir; I went round and tried to listen and tried to seek and find out. Every crowd I seen I tried to get in to see what I could hear. I couldn't hear nothing of the trouble at all.

"Q. Did men who were talking stop talking when you came around?—A. Well, they wasn't talking on no subject of that kind; I tried to listen.

"Q. When you tried to listen did they keep on talking?—A. They kept on talking, but they did not talk about any trouble at all."

When questioned as to whether any men of C Company came into the squad room after the firing began:

"Q. Did no C Company men come back while you were getting the arms out?—A. Not that I know of.

"Q. Were you where you could see them?—A. Right at the head of the steps. After I was ordered to come back I was with the sergeant; we seen that every man gets his rifle out of the rack.

"Q. If any man did come from the outside and come up the steps you would have seen him?—A. Yes, sir; most of them got out of bed—all of them got out of bed that I seen.

"Q. You don't know whether they were all there?—A. I don't know myself.

"Q. Did they come from around the room to where you were to get the guns?—A. They had a rack on this side—two racks on this side and two on that.

"Q. And you and the sergeant stood at the head of the steps?—A. Yes, sir; we stood at the head of the steps.

"Q. How many men came up while you were standing there?—A. Not any.

"Q. None came up?—A. No, sir.

"Q. How long did you stand there?—A. I stood there—I went down to roll call and they told me not to come down. That is when the firing commenced, when I went down; the company was falling in."

Jefferson never noticed the condition of the racks while the company was forming, or after he came back to the squad room. When asked what he subsequently heard about the incident of August 13 he said:

"A. The only thing that I did hear, the men wanted to know where the sentry was that night that was on that post; that was discussed; that I heard. Where was the sentry on that post that night? It seemed to them that he should know something about it.

"Q. Who was the sentry?—A. If I am not mistaken; I won't say true; if I don't mistake the man was named Rogers, C Company; I think he is the man; I may be mistaken.

"Q. What else was said about it in the company? There must have been something more said; you must have talked about it a good deal?—A. General, I didn't follow the men to see what they was talking about; they generally would be talking about something else. Whether they was scared of me I don't know. I was a man that didn't believe in no trouble like that, and never was into any, and I would tell if I did hear or see it myself, but I didn't.

"Q. Didn't you see them getting together, talking, here and there—three or four of them in groups?—A. Well, as you say, there might have been men getting up to one side and talking. Some men wouldn't let you hear anything. I might have been one of the men that they wouldn't let hear anything. I always attended to my own business. I went by myself and never bothered with any of them.

"Q. Weren't there some men in your company that would be likely to get into trouble like that; those who were not so quiet as you were?—A. There might be.

"Q. You know all about the men in the company, don't you?—A. No; I don't know.

"Q. You know all about the men in the company?—A. Yes, sir; I know we have got some pretty noisy men; men that gets into trouble, and gets court-martialed pretty often, and such as that.

"Q. What were those noisy fellows doing—what were they doing all this time?—A. They was there in bed.

"Q. What were they doing on the days after this thing occurred—when it was known that this thing had happened?—A. They were just jollyng and hurrahing; that is, laugh and talk, hurrah about it.

"Q. What do you mean by 'hurrahing' about it?—A. Cracking jokes and laughing, and all such as that. Other people might possibly know what they meant; those who did not know, they could not say anything or suspicion anything.

"Q. You have an idea in your mind that some of these men were out that night?—A. Well, General, I don't know about that.

"Q. You knew the company before this thing happened, and you knew by their difference in demeanor that some of these men knew something about it and were out that night—that is, by the way they behaved after the thing had gotten out. Now, remember you are under oath; you are under oath to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Now, what have you to say about them?—A. Well, sir, I have nothing to say about them. I don't believe that men of O Company were out or some men of other companies. I actually don't believe that men of O Company did this. I won't say that there ain't a man in the organization that wasn't in it—that all men are innocent. I actually believe no man of O Company did it.

"Q. O Company was no better than any other company, was it?—A. I know, sir; but it seemed as though they didn't get out there in time, didn't seem like to me, to do anything like that. Everybody else was out there but O Company. Everything, seemed like to me, was over when O Company went down. They were so slow. The noncommissioned officers were so slow. Sergeant McMurray, Sergeant Brawler don't do nothing promptly. Sergeant Brawler didn't come to the rack for fully twenty-five minutes. The men stand around in the dark. First, Sergeant McMurray wouldn't give out ammunition until he got orders from the officer—that is Lieutenant Grier. The first sergeant had to go out on the parade ground to get another to command the company; he wouldn't take the responsibility upon himself."

Jefferson's affidavit, supported by three discharge certificates, is inclosed herewith; his testimony is also inclosed and marked "C."

It will be apparent, I think, from a careful reading of the testimony that each of the applicants for reenlistment, in the interval since the incident occurred, has brought himself to believe that he was in no way accountable for the outbreak and had no part in it and was not an accessory after the fact. Each applicant has an idea, but by no means a clear one, that some duty devolved upon him to assist in clearing the good name of the command, but was satisfied, as is indicated in his testimony, with the feeblest efforts in the direction of performance. There is some corroborative testimony in support of the view that neither Brown nor Jefferson took part in the outbreak. Elmer Brown was absent from roll call after "to arms" had been sounded, but was found asleep, where he should have been, in the commanding officer's stable. Jefferson was room orderly and was among the first to arouse the men of O Company when "to arms" was sounded. Daniels was a corporal who had previously been a noncommissioned officer, and was trying, by good conduct, intelligent service, and faithful performance of duty, to commend himself for advancement. Although his testimony is not conclusive, I have no doubt that he told the truth and was not a participant in the affray.

Among those who were notified to appear for examination was Mingo Sanders, late first sergeant of Company B. On January 24 Sanders appeared accompanied by counsel, on whose advice he declined to be sworn. Subsequently, on January 29, he appeared in response to my request of the previous day, and advised me that he had submitted some inquiries to the Secretary of War, through his counsel, to which he desired replies before testifying. This request, which is dated January 25, was received by the Secretary of War on January 29, and is appended, marked "E." On January 30 Sanders's application was referred to me, with instructions to furnish the information desired. This was done in a letter dated January 30, which is herewith inclosed, marked "F." To this Sanders replied, through counsel, on February 1—appended and marked "G"—which was acknowledged by the Judge-Advocate General on the following day, appended marked "H." Sanders's application for reenlistment, accompanied by statement from Major Penrose and Lieutenant Lawrason, is inclosed herewith.

Conclusion.—Although the testimony of the applicants is entirely ex parte, I am convinced that the applicants for reenlistment have told the substantial truth, and that they had no part in the affray of August 13. There is some ground for the belief that each, within the scope of his authority and duty, put forth some efforts to learn who the active participants in the affray were, but without avail. The efforts were not serious, and were without substantial results.

Measures have been resorted to by the Executive with a view to meet the disciplinary emergency which occurred in Brownsville on August 13, 1906. The measures so taken involved the separation from the military service of the individuals composing the command. The examinations to which certain men have been subjected by me and the results of the inspections and of inquiries which have been instituted have failed to disclose the names of those who actually participated in the affray.

There are doubtless many innocent men who formed part of the companies composing the garrison who actually had and now have no knowledge of the acts committed or of the persons who committed them. But they have thus far been treated as a body which contained some, perhaps many, unworthy, uncontrollable, and dangerous men. To extend relief to a few will do injustice to the many who are too ignorant to apply for enlistment and appear for examination, or who have not heard that an opportunity to enlist has been afforded them. Either this or they have been generally communicated with and have been induced to refrain from applying for enlistment in response to the instructions to that end which have been communicated to recruiting officers throughout the United States.

In either event, while the evidence taken in the few cases in which an appearance has been made, tends, so far as it goes, to show nonparticipation, I gravely doubt the propriety of separating a few from the general body of discharged men upon such testimony as has so far been submitted.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General.

A.

Testimony of Edward L. Daniels.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, January 30, 1907.

At the above place and date at 4.10 p. m. appeared EDWARD L. DANIELS, late corporal, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who, after being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Questions by the JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL:

- Q. State your name.—A. Edward L. Daniels.
 Q. Where were you born?—A. In Charlottesville, Va.*
 Q. How old are you?—A. 33 years.
 Q. Can you read and write?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. What company of the Twenty-fifth Infantry did you belong to?—A. Company B.
 Q. What was your rank?—A. Corporal.
 Q. What had been your previous service?—A. My previous service has always been excellent—honest and faithful.
 Q. When did it begin?—A. It began in 1894.
 Q. In 1894?—A. Yes, sir. I left the service for eight months in 1904, when I came from the Philippine Islands. I went back to the service again in 1904, July 17.

* At close of examination Daniels stated that his parents live in Washington and had been employed by the Riggs family between sixteen and seventeen years.

Q. How many discharges have you?—A. I have one five years—

Q. What character?—A. Excellent. The other two, three years; all "excellent."

Q. When did you go to Brownsville? When did the command get there?—A. I forget what date; I think the 22d of August—no, 22d of July. I forget just the exact date.

Q. What was the command doing for the first few days after you got there?—A. For the first few days there? Why, we were doing guard duty.

Q. Were the barracks cleaned and all that?—A. No, sir; the barracks were cleaned when we went there.

Q. How long did that take?—A. Three or four days.

Q. When you first went there, you were engaged in that work. What was your duty?—A. To have different details, and see that the men under me would do just what I was told for those men to do.

Q. When did your drill begin?—A. The drill began from 7—

Q. What date of the month did you begin your drill?—A. I could not tell the judge-advocate that; I haven't the date down.

Q. As near as you can recall?—A. We began drill about three days after we went there.

Q. Three days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a regular schedule of drills and duties?—A. Yes, sir; regular schedule.

Q. How many drills a day?—A. Two drills a day.

Q. Did you have any squadron drills?—A. Yes, sir; squadron drills. Pitching tents, and pitching conceal wall tents, and pitching shelter tents; and we had company drill—that is, by the company commander.

Q. And that continued up to what date?—A. That continued for a considerable while. Then we had drill—we went on a hike.

Q. On a practice march?—A. On a practice march twice in the week, two companies this morning and two companies remaining in post. Then the next following days the next two companies went out and the rest of the two companies did remain in post.

Q. They did the guard duty and drill as usual?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did these marches last—how long did each one last?—A. How many hours?

Q. Yes.—A. We went out at 5 and came in at 11. Supposed to go out 12 miles; that is, 6 going and 6 coming.

Q. Did the men go out into town much?—A. No, sir; very little. The men went out very little. They had one street there that they visited.

Q. One street?—A. Yes, sir; next to the barracks.

Q. What street was that?—A. The only street I ever heard; the name was Firing Line.

Q. On what side of the barracks was this street?—A. Next to the town.

Q. It was next to the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you go out into the town?—A. Lots of times I went out into the town; yes, sir.

Q. Did you go out every day?—A. No, sir; I didn't go out every day, because my duties wouldn't let me.

Q. About how often did you go?—A. About three times a week.

Q. How were you treated?—A. No one ever molested me at all. I don't think I had a conversation with anybody the whole time I was down there. No more than now and then where I had my laundry. I would go around and speak to the Mexicans, because I could speak Spanish.

Q. Did the other men have trouble?—A. Well, I have heard of it, but I didn't see it myself.

Q. Did they discuss it in the barracks?—A. No, sir; because I didn't know about other companies; I can only speak about my company. In my company no man ever did have trouble at all, to my knowledge; because I would know if they were, because I was right in the barracks, all on the same floor, and any discussion caused by the men speaking was loud enough so that anybody can hear it, and most anybody would get into the conversation.

Q. Do I understand, then, that you never heard any man in the company complain of his treatment in the town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any discussion in the company as to the treatment that other men had received?—A. The only discussion I heard—some man or other—some other man of the company was struck with a gun, and this man reported to the commanding officer—to the captain first, and then to the commanding officer. What they did with him I don't know.

Q. Did it create feeling in your company?—A. No, sir; not among the men, as I could hear. I was one of the noncommissioned officers of the company. When I came there I came there with the reputation of being an excellent soldier and worthy noncommissioned officer. The first vacancy I was made noncommissioned officer. Only three months—six months before made a noncommissioned officer. I never was tried so as to be reduced to the ranks. I always held my rank until I left the service.

Q. Did you hear of the Tait incident down there?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of Mr. Tait assaulting this private, and from what I can understand this private wasn't a man of a bad disposition. He was more of a coward rather than of a bad disposition. And I heard Mr. Tait struck him across the head with a gun. The man fell to the street, and when he tried to rise he made an oath at him. What he said I don't know. That is only what I heard.

Q. Was that discussed in the company?—A. No, it wasn't discussed, except there on the porch one night. Only a few words was passed and that was all there was. Some man says, "The men know well enough that you must not go any place where you are not wanted, and the best place is the barracks for you." That is what some man said.

Q. Did the feeling increase any toward the 13th?—A. No, sir; because on the evening of the 13th, why orders came from the commanding officer, and we had issued passes that day, I understood, to the men to go out into town. Some went to Mexico, and later in the afternoon, before these passes were to expire, the orders came around about between the hours of 3 and 5, from the company commander, that every man must be in quarters by 8 o'clock. Company B, Second Lieutenant Lawrason, he came around and said no man of Company B would be allowed out no more until to-morrow morning. And the men that were out, he told the first sergeant to send out some noncommissioned officers and round them up and tell them to come into quarters right away. The other companies had orders that they could stay out until 8 o'clock.

Q. When was this order given?—A. That evening.

Q. Between the hours of 3 and 5?—A. As near as I can get it.

Q. Who were sent out?—A. Quartermaster-Sergeant McCurdy and Corpl. Wade Waddington.

Q. You were not sent out?—A. No, sir; I was not sent out. I was upstairs writing.

Q. How many did they succeed in finding?—A. I don't know, sir; I think only about 5 men were out. I am not positive, because I did not see them as they came in. The order was issued to be carried out by other noncommissioned officers, and I went on with my work.

Q. What was your work?—A. I was writing—writing up some drill matters. We have to go out and take sketches of the imaginary enemy. I had taken a sketch of the last march that we had made and I was trying to bring all the data of the military signs on it.

Q. Trying to put the correct topographical signs on it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you begin that work? This was on the 13th—what time of day did you begin it?—A. I could not say.

Q. To the best of your recollection?—A. In the afternoon, after dinner.

Q. One o'clock?—A. Between the hours of half past 12 and 3 o'clock.

Q. How long did you work at it?—A. I worked at it a considerable time, because I did not get the proper data on that, and I start again. That time I was interrupted by one of the men on some drill matters. Told him to explain to me, and I put the work away. After I put the work away I went downstairs and sat out on the porch.

Q. About what time was this? About what time did you get through and go down and sit on the porch?—A. It was not dark.

Q. After supper?—A. Yes, sir; no, sir; it was just about supper time. I could not tell just exactly.

Q. What time does supper come?—A. We have supper just before retreat, and retreat were about 6.15.

Q. Did you go to retreat roll call?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any absentees?—A. No, sir.

Q. After retreat what did you do?—A. I stayed in the barracks.

Q. Did you sit out on the porch after retreat?—A. For a while I did.

Q. Were there many men sitting out there?—A. No, sir; not particularly; not more than usual.

Q. About how many usually sat there?—A. Directly after supper everybody right out of the dining room came on the porch. After that some go to the exchange, some go upstairs, and others into the library. Some engage themselves in cards—and they distribute themselves in that way. As a rule a private don't hang around a noncommissioned officer but very little.

Q. You were sitting out there? Was the trouble discussed that evening?—
A. No, sir; nothing at all.

Q. Did you hear it mentioned?—A. No, sir; nobody mentioned anything about it.

Q. Did you hear anybody discuss it in your vicinity?—A. No, sir; nothing at all. In the first place, if any of the men were to mention anything like that, they would not let me hear about it. I was one man they would not let hear anything about it. If I did hear it, I would make them say it again.

Q. Then what would you do?—A. If I heard them make any such remarks, I would stop and find out why they should make such remarks. Then, if they could not make explanations, I would have them up to the company commander.

Q. Would you take them to the first sergeant?—A. To the first sergeant first, and from that to the company commander.

Q. Do I understand you to say that at no time, say, from the 1st of August until the 13th, you heard any trouble discussed in your company?—A. No, sir; I never heard any trouble at all, and I was surprised that night when I heard the shooting.

Q. What did you do the rest of the evening?—A. I always go to bed very early.

Q. What time did you go to bed that night?—A. About twenty minutes of 9 o'clock.

Q. Did you have to be up at tattoo?—A. No, sir; we did afterwards.

Q. You didn't then?—A. Not before, we didn't.

Q. You went to bed at about what time?—A. About twenty minutes of 9, or maybe about a quarter of 9.

Q. Tell me what occurred that night.—A. On the night of August 13 I were woke up by the men hollering in the quarters, by the firing in the quarters. I says, "What's the matter?" I woke up, I were under a mosquito bar, and jumped out of the mosquito bar. As I was used to being under fire, I got on the floor. I found out there were no bullets coming near me, and I get up and halloo for my section of men to get up. Some says, "Light the lights." I says, "Yes; light the lamps." After a time the call to arms went. Then I called for the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters—

Q. Who was that?—A. Sergt. George Jackson, and he says, "All right, I have only got a candle." I says, "Light the barracks lamp," and so he didn't do that but he lit his lantern. I says, "Call to arms has gone, and I want the racks opened," and he says, "I am getting them open as fast as I can." The racks all stand there at one end of the barracks. I was just about in 8 feet of my rack and I stood there until the rack were opened. Then I got my gun and told my men to get theirs and get downstairs. Then an officer says, "Is there any noncommissioned officer downstairs?" I says, "Yes, sir." He says, "Form this company." I formed the company men as fast as they got down there. I formed them together. That time when the company was nearly formed the first sergeant came around the head of the company and called the roll. Four men were absent: Private John Brown, Elmer Brown, Private William Smith, and Private Alfred N. Williams. When he reported to the commanding officer, he says, "Where are those men?" The first sergeant says, "Private Alfred N. Williams is at the quartermaster's department; he sleeps down there. Private Elmer Brown, he is at stables. Private John Brown is the post baker. Private William Smith is at Lieutenant Lawrason's quarters." He says, "Take a noncommissioned officer, Corporal Harris, and two privates as witnesses to see whether these men are in their respective places." He found Private John Brown.

Q. Where was he?—A. He was in the bakehouse baking bread. Then the major told Lieutenant Lawrason to take the company and carry it around and distribute men along the wall. The firing was then going on—that is, scattering shots.

Q. Where was this firing?—A. In town. It started, as I could hear it, at our barracks, and instead of coming toward the barracks continued to go the other way.

Q. How long did it last?—A. The firing continued, not altogether, but about a second of interval in between, and when the roll were called, shots were fired then; during the time the roll was called shots were fired. When the roll was called, you could hear one shot, it seemed to me, every two minutes.

Q. Did any of the men return?—A. No, sir.

Q. What wall did you go to, the one facing the town?—A. Yes, sir; we were distributed between Company B quarters and the end of Company C quarters, facing the town.

Q. Where did you get yours?—A. I were about 75 yards from the rear of Company C quarters.

Q. On the wall?—A. No, sir; not on the wall; just behind the wall.

Q. How high is the wall?—A. It will range from 3 feet to 7 feet.

Q. Could you look right over it?—A. Some parts of it.

Q. Where you were, could you look over it?—A. No, sir.

Q. About how high was it?—A. About—between 6 and 7 feet.

Q. When did the firing cease?—A. The firing ceased after we had taken up our positions. Just before that we got around to take our positions. While we were going in that direction you could hear scattering shots, and they were at the other end of the town, from what I could hear of the shots.

Q. Could you see the flashes?—A. No, sir. We were down there between the buildings. I never did see any flashes at all, because I did not go and look out that window which way the firing were. I never were instructed to go and look that way. I was always told that when there is firing, if I have any men under me to get them in a place that my superior can take and use them.

Q. How long after you were awakened was it before the roll call took place?—A. Well, the roll call taken place about, as near as I can guess it, in about seven or eight minutes. That is as near as I can get at it.

Q. What was done during the night?—A. The men were on guard. The garrison were put at pickets, all armed. Outpost duty were performed.

Q. After the 13th, was this matter the subject of discussion at all in the company?—A. No, sir; they were not exactly talking. Now and then you would hear a man saying, "Wonder who did the shooting?"

Q. What opinion did you reach as to it?—A. Why, I reached an opinion like this: I said, I don't think any soldier could have done the shooting, especially in my company. I didn't form any opinion until after the guns were examined. If you fire one of those guns, and clean it out, with the supposition that it is fairly clean, and you put it into the rack, it sweats, and you can look through it, and the curves, where the bullet comes out, those curves where it sweats, the grains of powder will be seen, and you can take a rag and go down there, and by twisting it around with a rod, you can bring out powder. A gun after being fired, you can't clean it properly under a week. You can make it look bright down the barrel, but it is not clean, for by the time you set it down and let it sweat you can take a rag and get dirt out of it.

Q. When were the guns examined?—A. Next morning.

Q. By whom?—A. By Lieutenant Lawrason; and the men who had dark guns were stepped aside.

Q. With dark guns?—A. Yes, sir; with dirty guns supposed to have been fired. Then Captain Lyon, who were to go up there by orders of Major Penrose and inspect these guns supposed to have been fired, he takes a white cloth and tears it into small pieces, and swabs these guns out. He finds grease and rust from the guns sweating, but don't find no powder at all.

Q. Were any of the guns fired during the night?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. On the wall, I mean.—A. No, sir; no.

Q. What time in the morning were these guns examined?—A. After daylight.

Q. After daylight?—A. Yes, sir; between the hours of 7 and 9.

Q. When were they put back in the racks?—A. That morning, and locked, after we were relieved.

Q. What time were you relieved?—A. I don't remember exactly.

Q. As near as you can recall?—A. It was daylight when we were relieved.

Q. Broad day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the guns were put back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in charge of the gun racks; is it a regular detail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who keeps the keys?—A. The noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters.

Q. Suppose a man wants to get his gun?—A. It is in orders from the company commander that a man will get his gun when going on guard, and going off guard he has so many minutes to clean his gun. I take a note of this man and look at the clock, and time him just the minutes that is required. Then he puts the gun in the rack and I lock the rack. At no time the gun racks are open only on occasions when they should be. When the gun is fired the gun racks is supposed to be opened.

Q. At gun fire?—A. Yes, sir; early in the morning—reveille.

Q. What are they opened then for?—A. If a man has to go on guard that morning, or for drill. Immediately after the noncommissioned officer locks the racks again. The guns at no time are laying around on the beds.

Q. Is it easy to get a gun out of the rack?—A. No, sir; you would have to break the gun rack to get one of those guns; that would be impossible, because they have two catches, and these catches are so close. When in charge of quarters if a gun were out of the rack I would be responsible for it. When they are turned over to you by the other noncommissioned officer they are counted; you have so many in the rack; they are counted. I am held responsible for 24 guns. Any man taking a gun out, I want to know just what he is going to do with it.

Q. Whose permission is necessary to get the gun out of the rack?—A. I will ask him what do you want with it, with the gun? He may say, "I have permission from the company commander," or "from the first sergeant." "Well, what do you want to do with it?" "Well, I want to clean it"—that is, Fridays, for Saturday inspection. Everybody has half an hour to clean the gun. After that these guns are locked up again.

Q. What day was the 13th?—A. Monday, sir; wasn't it? I am not sure, either Monday or Tuesday.

Q. Was it your habit to go around and visit the other companies?—A. I used to play pool around there. Now and then I would go around. I would always have something to employ my mind without going around much; because they confined us to our tactics, and we had to be exact and give the proper instruction without looking in the book, and we had to give just what the book said, and then execute it ourselves to show the men what to do.

Q. Were there many recruits in your company?—A. Yes, sir; quite a number of recruits. Very few old soldiers. All come from Oklahoma and Texas.

Q. Natives of Oklahoma and Texas?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The recruits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After the 13th did you go around among the other companies and talk over the excitement?—A. No, sir; I didn't go any place then, because I saw just the circumstances that we were in. I could see it, because that we were not allowed out no more.

Q. Not allowed out where?—A. Out of the post; there was a guard on. And the duties were so hard on me at that time that every time I had a chance to rest I would lie down, because I only got one in two nights out of bed.

Q. In the whole week that you remained in Texas?—A. Yes, sir; after that time.

Q. You were on every other night?—A. Yes, sir; sometimes I would have two nights, and sometimes not. Some mornings I would come off guard, and next day supposed to be with fatigue parties, and they would come and get me about 2 o'clock to go on guard that night, as noncommissioned officer of the guard.

Q. And you remained at Fort Brown about a week after the 13th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many times were you on guard?—A. I was on guard, as I aforesaid; after the morning of the 14th I went on guard every other day, or sometimes I got two nights in bed.

Q. Was the matter much discussed in the company during that week?—A. That week that we were in Texas?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; everybody seemed to be feeling very bad over the matter. I myself thought the men were getting along fine. You know, sir, that any place you go you are going to find some men that can not get along; some men that is just of that disposition. And I thought that, being down in Texas, that we were getting along just fine.

Q. You say that you have been out frequently in town?—A. No, sir; I went out twice a week. Some weeks three times.

Q. Yes.—A. I would not go in any place, only take a walk down to where we had gotten off, and come straight back to quarters again. I never had no conversation with anybody. Nobody ever bothered me, and I never said anything to anybody.

Q. Did you go in any bar?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you go in any barroom at all in Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir; I went into one Mexican bar to get a cigar.

Q. Otherwise you went into none?—A. No, sir. I went in a drug store once and into a Mexican barroom once.

Q. Did you hear what the rules of the barrooms were?—A. Before we went down there we heard the rules; yes, sir. The white soldiers had told us. I made the remark at the same time, "They won't be bothered with me at all, because I am no toper, and consequently I drink all the waters around here."

Q. Then, after the night of the 13th, you say that there was feeling among the men about it?—A. No, sir; I never said there was feeling. The men were very sorry over the matter, because they could not get—you couldn't find out anything; nobody were out that night but two men, and both belonged to O Company, and they were on passes; and they proved where they were that night.

Q. They were on pass?—A. Yes; the order had been issued, but had not reached them, by their going away from the post before this order came out, by proper authority.

Q. You have no knowledge, of your own observation, that men—we will say of other companies—may not have been out that night? You are not in a position to say that they may not have been out, are you?—A. I could not say a word about any other company but Company B.

Q. Now, just tell me again what your reason is for believing that none of the men of Company B were out.—A. Because the first sergeant he called the roll and all were present.

Q. At what time?—A. Immediately after the call to arms.

Q. Was there roll call at retreat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were all present then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was anybody on pass that day?—A. Nobody on pass.

Q. Nobody on pass that day? Didn't you say that the passes were recalled?—A. The passes were recalled, but—

Q. When did the passes begin?—A. The passes began on 12 o'clock that day. The order came out between 3 and 5.

Q. And to your knowledge no one of Company B was out on pass?—A. Yes, sir; to my knowledge; none of them were out.

Q. But you say a sergeant and a corporal were sent out to bring them back?—A. These men were not on pass, but were allowed to walk inside of a mile of the post.

Q. The men did not have to have a pass?—A. No, sir; if they just wanted to go down to the drug store and back, or walk out for half an hour, because the town was right there.

Q. When did that permission expire; when did the men have to be back?—A. At 8 o'clock, before this.

Q. Every night?—A. Everybody had to be in their beds at a quarter of 11 o'clock.

Q. At 11 o'clock?—A. Quarter of 11. At 11 o'clock check was taken.

Q. Was check taken on the night of the 13th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any absentees?—A. I have never heard. I wasn't in charge of quarters, and I could not say, because I was asleep at the time. Check was taken by the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters and then reported to the officer of the day, which were Captain Macklin.

Q. Yes. Was there a roll call at retreat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a formation under arms at retreat?—A. No, sir; just roll call.

Q. Were all present at that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that day, on which these incidents happened—was there more feeling that day than the days before?—A. No, sir.

Q. No stir of any kind in your company?—A. No, sir; no stir at all. We have got a very stern first sergeant; he won't stand for any talk that he thinks should not be talked of in quarters. He won't stand for it; and he instilled it into the noncommissioned officers under him. I was always in quarters. When I leave the quarters, I say to the next noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters, if I am asked for I am at such and such a place; if he wants me he can send a man for me.

Q. How much is the first sergeant in quarters, he is a married man, isn't he?—A. He is there all the time, until after 9 o'clock at night; then he goes home.

Q. Goes home to his meals each day?—A. Yes, sir; sometimes. You wouldn't miss him out of the quarters, he come and go so quick.

Q. He took some meals in the company kitchen?—A. No, sir; I never did see him take any.

Q. Where did he get his meals?—A. At his home.

Q. You said sometimes he went to his home to eat?—A. I know, but I say he would be away from quarters so seldom you would not know whether he ate at quarters or at home, and yet his rations and everything was at home. I never see him eat in quarters.

114 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

Q. What time did he get there in the morning?—A. About an hour before reveille; half an hour before reveille. He was only about 250 yards from the barracks.

Q. Was his house inside the fence?—A. Yes, sir. In the quarters where the married men stay, that have proper authority.

Q. Did it ever come to your knowledge, in any way, that any members of the regiment, of any of the companies, were out in the town that night taking part in the firing?—A. Did it what?

Q. Did it ever come to your knowledge, in any way, after the 18th, that any men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were out in the town taking part in the firing? Did you ever know it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear it?—A. No, sir. That was an affair that no one could hear anything about. You could not talk to the men on the subject. They would not discuss it with you.

Q. Why not?—A. I don't know, sir. It has been a mystery to me. I have tried to look through that matter myself.

Q. What efforts have you made?—A. I made every kind of effort that I could without allowing them to think that I was looking for information.

Q. What did you do—tell me what you did?—A. Sometimes I would say, "What do you think about the affair?" They say, "I don't know."

Q. Did you talk with men of other companies?—A. I went about other companies very little. B and C Companies didn't get along very well together and always kept apart; and D Company much the same. It came through playing ball. We had the best team and we had the best athletes—consequently they never liked each other in that way.

Q. Now, go on and tell me of the other attempts you made to find out?—A. If I saw a squad of men talking I would get as near as I could, as near as possible without them detecting I were around.

Q. Did you never hear any intimation?—A. No, sir; never heard; not a word could I hear.

Q. Have you been questioned about this by any of the company officers, as to what took place?—A. I were questioned by Lieutenant-Colonel Lovering. He asked my whereabouts on that night, and what I did. I told him what I told you of that night; and I was not questioned by Major Blocksou. He only had some noncommissioned officers up there; nor by General Garlington. He only wanted the oldest soldiers, and oldest noncommissioned officers of each company. I were an old soldier, but not an old noncommissioned officer of the company, because I had only been there two years in B Company. I originally came from K Company. The sergeant from K Company were discharged, and I came back as a recruit, and I had only been in the company two years and two months—two years and four months. He took so many privates that had been under that present organization the longest time, and the noncommissioned officers the longest time. That is the way that these men were picked out. Then he formed the battalion and told us what the President's orders were, if he could not find out anything. I could not tell him anything. I did not know anything to tell him, and I had to be just like the rest of the men. Knowing nothing to tell, they did not tell him, and I did not have anything to tell.

Q. You heard nothing?—A. I heard nothing at all, sir. That is why I didn't never think that they would put the men out that didn't know nothing; the men that were trying to do right. If I don't know nothing, I don't know nothing.

Q. You have told me what you would have done had you heard anything?—A. Yes, sir. I did not want to be disgraced with somebody else that do such things as that. I have always borne an excellent character among my officers. I met my old captain this morning, Mr. Jones. He is now in Washington altogether. He was captain of F Troop, Tenth Cavalry, in 1898.

Q. Were you ever in his company?—A. In his troop; yes, sir.

Q. You were in his troop?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your address? Where would a letter reach you?—A. 920 L street NW.

Testimony of Elmer Brown.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, February 2, 1907—3.15 p. m.

At the above place, and on the date and hour named, appeared ELMER BROWN, late private, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who, after being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Questions by the JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL:

- Q. What is your name?—A. Elmer Brown.
- Q. Of what company and regiment?—A. Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
- Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-four this past September.
- Q. Where were you born?—A. In Middletown, Md.
- Q. Tell me what your past service has been; how long have you been in the service?—A. My first enlistment was three years and three months, and in Troop I, Tenth Cavalry; my next three years in B Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry; my next enlistment, two years and seven months in B Company, and was transferred to I Company five months and eleven days; discharged in Manila, and reenlisted for Company B.
- Q. What discharges did you receive after these enlistments?—A. My first discharge, from Troop I, character excellent; my first discharge from B Company, very good; my second discharge, Twenty-fifth Infantry, from Company I, excellent; my next discharge, from Company B, excellent.
- Q. Where have you served during this last enlistment?—A. Fort Niobrara, Nebr.; Fort Brown, Tex.; Fort Reno, Okla.
- Q. Have you ever been tried by court-martial?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many times?—A. Twice.
- Q. In this last enlistment?—A. No; not since 1898.
- Q. So you have never been tried in this enlistment?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Ever been confined?—A. Not since 1898, sir.
- Q. When did you go to Brownsville?—A. The date I have forgotten. We went there—
- Q. About what date?—A. I think it was about the 10th or 11th of July when we got there; somewhere about that time, sir.
- Q. Were you a private on ordinary duty in the company?—A. Well, I was a private in B Company since August 1, 1905.
- Q. At Brownsville, were you on extra duty or special duty?—A. Special duty for the commanding officer.
- Q. All the time?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where did you sleep?—A. Major Penrose's private stables.
- Q. Did you get your meals in the company mess?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Didn't sleep in the barracks?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Where was your gun?—A. In the quarters—in the barracks—in the rack.
- Q. And all the time you were at Brownsville you were on special duty for Major Penrose?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Took care of his horse, or horses?—A. Two horses and wagons, and assisted around his house.
- Q. Were you about his house each day, and over in the company each day?—A. I went to the company every day to get my meals, but never stayed there but a very short time.
- Q. Why not?—A. Most of my idle time I was around the major's house. Most every afternoon I would have to go out driving for him; down to the bottoms there; he would go down and shoot wild pigeons.
- Q. Did you go down into the town much at any time?—A. Well, I never went but very seldom. In some places I would go into town, but in others very seldom.
- Q. At Brownsville, did you go downtown?—A. Well, I used to go down for a walk most every evening.
- Q. How were you treated by the white people?—A. I never was molested by anyone; it seemed that everybody was agreeable.
- Q. How did you like the Mexicans?—A. I have no difficulties with them at all.
- Q. How was their bearing toward you as compared with the white people; were they more agreeable or less?—A. Well, sir; I will state to you I treated the Mexican people just as I would other people; I treated them with respect.

Q. Yes; but how did they seem to regard you? Were they more agreeable to you than the white people, or the reverse?—A. No, sir; not more agreeable with me. I didn't put myself in a place that they could be.

Q. Did they seem to like the colored troops better than the white people?—A. Well, I noticed that the men who associated with the common class of people, their associates were Mexicans; that is the men that associated with them. I could see that.

Q. Are there a good many colored people in Brownsville?—A. Quite a few.

Q. Are some of them pretty well to do?—A. Not as I know of. I never met them. I didn't know but one family there, a retired soldier from the Ninth Cavalry in 1898.

Q. He had been living there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about the bars?—A. Well, now, that distinction I saw. People were putting partitions in the barrooms there the first night I was in Brownsville. I went downtown with Mr. Sharp and a man named Burrell (?). Mr. Sharp was post blacksmith, and this man Burrell was post wagon master; and these men were fixing their bars. They told me what they were doing. I was with Sharp and Burrell, and these men told me they were going to put up partitions in the bars, as the people of Brownsville did not want to drink in the same bar with colored people. The men seemed to be very glad to have the soldiers trade with them, but they said they would have to make a distinction, and stated they would treat all men right. It seemed as if I was represented to be more than I was actually; they wanted me to use my influence in getting trade. I never went back no more.

Q. Did the men like this distinction?—A. No, sir; not the men that patronizes bars.

Q. Did they talk about it in the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Resented it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear about the Newton incident; about his being struck?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What company was he in?—A. O Company, sir.

Q. Did you hear about the other man being pushed off the boat?—A. Private Reed, of O Company.

Q. Did that create comment in the company?—A. Well, I don't know, sir. This was Sunday that this man Reed got into this trouble. I know myself that he was beastly drunk, because I was out with Major Penrose's horses, exercising them on a back street, and this man fell under one of the horses I was leading. I don't know about the feeling among the men about this man Reed being pushed in the river. But this man Reed I have known him a great deal, and he is regular little pay-day fighter, and as to the feeling in O Company, I tell you, sir, I never was in O Company's quarters all my time there.

Q. How were you all treated at Valentine?—A. Very good.

Q. Nothing to complain of in Valentine?—A. Nothing with the people of Valentine; no, sir.

Q. Then, when you go to Brownsville, you are treated differently?—A. That is, men who looked for sociability.

Q. And you resented that?—A. Well, that is among some of the men; that was none of my part.

Q. Did you go to drill?—A. Yes, sir; every morning.

Q. Did you go on guard?—A. No, sir; I didn't do any guard duty until after the 18th; my first guard was the day of the 14th.

Q. On account of your being on special duty you were excused from guard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But not excused from drill?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many drills each day?—A. Only one.

Q. When did that occur?—A. The first call, twenty minutes past 5, and assembly at half past 5, and drill were half past 7.

Q. And the rest of the time you spent—A. At my stables, and Major Penrose's house. Most every day he wanted to go hunting.

Q. Tell me what happened after noon of the 13th; go right on.—A. From noon on?

Q. From dinner, yes.—A. What I would do, I would go—

Q. Just on that day.—A. On noon of the 13th, sir? Nothing unusual. Only I finished giving my horses their evening's bath and came over to Major Penrose's house and sat there. After a little while I saw the major and two gentlemen down the walk. They were talking, and it seemed as if there was some hard feeling between these men. One of them standing there shook his fist in some way. And then Private Williams, of B Company—he worked in the corral—he came across from the corral and says to me, "Let's go over to supper." I said, "Yes, it's about time. It looks like something doing down there." I would call him the General. I says, "It looks as if someone were giving the General hell;" just in that way. He says, "I guess not." I didn't know who those men were. They had a Mexican driving a wagon, something like a Victoria, and he was out in the road, and these two men were on the little bridge talking to the major; and instead of my going into supper I says to Williams, "I am going to see this thing out." I knew some of these people had made insulting remarks about Major Penrose round there. Then these people got on their wagon and went off, and the major went into the canteen. He came back from the canteen and went past his house, his quarters, and I was still sitting on the porch. And he went to the noncommissioned officers' quarters and called the first sergeant and told him to send a responsible noncommissioned officer out to have every man come in by 8 o'clock. "You publish that order on retreat to the company." Now, Williams and I eaten our supper before the company and gone over back to the corral. I says, "Let's sit here and hear this thing through." When the company fell in line for retreat the first sergeant published this order. I says to Williams, "Let's go up and get a bottle of beer," not knowing anything at all what was going to occur, or whether we had been threatened. We went up to this barroom. It was a man discharged from B Company had opened up this barroom right outside of the wire fence, for the soldiers' trade. We went there and got a bottle of beer. I came back from there. Williams came on to the garrison. I stopped at Sergeant Thomas's house. I asked Mrs. Thomas, "Are you going to have any ice cream to-night?" She said, "Yes." Mrs. Brawner and I went across, she lived in the garrison, I went over there and asked Mrs. Brawner whether she would go over there. We went in Mrs. Thomas's and had some ice cream; and while she was sitting there Corporal Wheeler, of D Company, and Corporal Burdett, of B Company, came to the door and told me it was time to get into the garrison. It was 8 o'clock then. Mrs. Brawner and I walked over and stayed down at Sergeant Sanders's. We stayed down to Sergeant Sanders's until tattoo, and I went on to stables at 9 o'clock. Every night before going to bed I turned the shower bath on myself. I pulled up my bed, my bunk. I had two large stalls for the horses. I put my bed right close to the horses, because there was a door on each and there was a good draft went through. I got my bed right there. I suppose that I went to sleep right quick. When I woke up Williams came up from the quartermaster's barn, right in the same yard, and called me. He says, "Ain't you going up to the garrison? They're raising hell up there." I says, "What is it?" He says, "They're playing fire call, to arms, and shooting up everything." I says, "No; I ain't going up there." He says, "I'm going up."

Q. Who woke you up?—A. Private Williams, of B Company.

Q. The noise didn't wake you?—A. No, sir; Williams woke me up and went up there himself, and then I sat up in my bed, threw the mosquito net up, to see whether the man were on post. A man walked post there always around the pump-house, woodhouse, and stables. Corporal Burdett, of B Company, was sent out by Major Penrose to verify the absentees; there were only two men absent—that was myself and Private John Brown, of B Company, in the post bakeshop.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. Never went anywhere till the next morning.

Q. Go back to bed?—A. Yes, sir. It was the commanding officer's orders for me to stay with the horses, in case of fire or anything—that was his orders; and I did so. After that, the next morning, he issued orders different.

Q. That was the 13th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were discharged in November—22d of November?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During all that time did you hear this affray discussed in the quarters or anywhere?—A. No, sir; I used to sit around and try to hear. Never could hear a word about it.

Q. Did you ever try to look into it yourself to see what had happened? That is, try to get any information?—A. Yes, sir; time and again I was trying. As I told Major Penrose, I went around and tried to seek into this affair. The first report made of this, there was a woman that made some talk around there among some of these soldiers that she knew who did this shooting, but she would not tell anything about it. This was a woman that ran in the garrison that night and made some talk around.

Q. Colored woman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was her name?—A. Cora Jones.

Q. Husband living there?—A. Yes, sir; her husband was artificer of B Company. Of course, I used all I could to seek around, and couldn't learn anything of it. I went to the commanding officer. He sent for this woman—her and the first sergeant's wife—Frazier's wife. Couldn't get any news. They kept her in the garrison—Cora Jones—until we got ready to go away from there. She said she didn't know anything about it. I heard the women talking; that is, down on the line. I told the major, and he got a little from Mrs. Frazier, that this woman ran in the garrison the night of this shooting. Said she had to get out of the town because there was shooting going on. That is the information that I learned, and I gave that to the commanding officer.

Q. Ever get any more?—A. No, sir; I was considered, I was called a hundred times a dog robber and a pimp, because of sitting around trying to get information about this affair.

Q. The feeling was against you?—A. Yes, sir; it was against me by men of the organization. If I would go in the quarters, it has happened many a time, the boys shout, "Here comes Major Penrose's dog robber." That is the way the thing went on about me in the quarters among the soldiers; because I have never run with a crowd of men since I have been in the Army. I went over there to Reno. I listened. I got in places where there was all kinds of men, all kinds of games, trying to hear something of this affair. I didn't want to be discharged. I couldn't get any ins and outs of it.

Q. That was all that you heard, what you have told me?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any reason to suspect that any of them had been concerned in it and were concealing it?—A. No, sir; because I never heard anything about it.

Q. Now, let me have your address.—A. 1601 Q street.

Testimony of Thomas Jefferson.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, February 2, 1907—2.20 o'clock p. m.

At the above place and at the date and hour mentioned appeared THOMAS JEFFERSON, late private, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who, after being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Questions by the JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL:

Q. State your name.—A. Thomas Jefferson.

Q. Of what company and regiment?—A. C Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-four years.

Q. Where were you born?—A. In the State of Indiana; Indianapolis.

Q. How long have you been in the service?—A. I have been in thirteen years and ten months.

Q. When did you first enter the service?—A. In 1892.

Q. Has it all been in the same company and regiment?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just tell me what your service has been.—A. Five years in the cavalry, and the rest in the infantry.

Q. What have been your discharges?—A. My discharges? First "good," and the second one was "excellent," and my third was "good," if I am not mistaken, and the last was this other.

Q. When did you enlist on this last enlistment?—A. I enlisted in San Francisco, January 15, on this last enlistment; 1905, I think.

Q. January 15, 1905?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is it.

Q. Where did you serve; tell me the stations?—A. In this last enlistment, Niobrara and Brownsville.

Q. Ever since you reenlisted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever been tried by court-martial?—A. No, sir; not on this enlistment.

Q. Have you been confined?—A. No, sir; not on this enlistment.

Q. When did you go to Brownsville?—A. I don't remember the month—whether it was July or August; it was latter part of July or August.

Q. What were you doing after you got there? Were the barracks all cleaned ready to go into?—A. Well, yes, sir; I think they were; I am not sure; I don't think we had to do anything to them.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. What were the duties each day?—A. Just policing up around the garrison, and such duties as that.

Q. Were you on duty in the quartermaster's department, on extra duty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not on special duty?—A. No, sir; I was room orderly, company room orderly.

Q. How long?—A. Ever since I have been in the company.

Q. Were you room orderly at Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the company use more than one room for its sleeping arrangements?—

A. No, sir; only one upstairs, a long building.

Q. And you were on that duty all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go to drill?—A. Yes, sir; once a day with the company.

Q. Go to roll calls?—A. I would not go only to roll calls at night—at 11 o'clock and 9. The day roll calls I didn't attend them on account of the duties.

Q. Did you have any duties in connection with the gun racks?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. How many gun racks were there in your company?—A. If I am not mistaken, I think 4.

Q. How many were broken?—A. There was 1; I won't say positive, but I think 2. I know 1 at least.

Q. But you think there were 2?—A. To the best of my knowledge 2, I think, damaged; one broken wide open.

Q. So that you could get at the guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did no guard duty?—A. No, sir; no guard duty at all.

Q. When you went to Brownsville, did you go into the town?—A. I went down into the town just to get little things that I wanted. It wasn't very often that I went to town at all.

Q. Did you ever enter any of the saloons?—A. No, sir; I never entered no saloons; because when I went down there I heard that we wasn't allowed in saloons, so I would not bother no saloons at all.

Q. Did you walk around the town to see what it looked like?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Several times?—A. Yes, sir. I just walked around and came right back to the post.

Q. Did anybody bother you?—A. Nobody ever bothered me, and I never had anything to say to anybody else.

Q. When did you find out that there was a rule against the use of bars by colored people?—A. Well, I have never been refused in none. I have never had no opportunity to be refused; not to my knowledge.

Q. Have you ever served near other towns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was generally the rule in that regard?—A. As a general rule the soldiers went most any place.

Q. Was that the rule in Brownsville?—A. Not that I know of. I heard the men say that it wasn't the rule.

Q. You heard the men say that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did the Mexicans treat you?—A. Well, the Mexicans, as far as I knew them—I never had much to say to any of them—they seemed to be a pretty nice lot of people.

Q. Were they more or less friendly than the white people?—A. More friendly; they would come around and pick up old garbage, and they seemed to be kind of friendly.

Q. As you met them out in the town, were they friendly?—A. Yes, sir; lots of them were friendly.

Q. Were any unfriendly?—A. Not that I know of. I have never heard anybody say anything about it.

Q. What was the attitude of the white people in the town?—A. I never had much to do with the white people. Only we had a band there, and they would come around, and it seemed like they enjoyed themselves while they had that band there.

Q. Was it the regimental band?—A. No, sir; just a battalion band.

Q. How often did it play?—A. They played about every other evening.

Q. Where?—A. Up on the top porch in our quarters.

Q. Did many people come to hear it?—A. Yes; a good many white people and Mexicans.

Q. Did you mix in the crowd?—A. We generally stayed up on the porch, except men in the town; the biggest majority went up on the porch and sat down.

Q. How did the men like it there, the men of the company?—A. Well, I heard a good many say that they didn't want to go down to Brownsville; that is, at Niohrara, where we had been stationed at. I don't know whether many liked it or not. A good many didn't like to go to it like any other town.

Q. Where were the towns that they didn't like to go in?—A. Brownsville is about the only one they didn't.

Q. What other towns have you served near; have you served near any other towns?—A. Not on this enlistment; but on other enlistments, Crawford, Nebr., and Leavenworth, and such places.

Q. How did the men like the way that they were treated down in Brownsville?—A. Well, sir, the way they was treated, I don't see how I could explain—

Q. What did the men say? You heard them in the barracks?—A. They didn't like it so very well.

Q. Did they talk about it a good deal?—A. Right smart. They didn't like to be down where they wasn't liked in a saloon—barred from the saloons.

Q. They complained about the way they were treated in the saloons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they complain of the way in which the white people treated them in the town?—A. No, sir; I never heard them.

Q. Did you hear about the Tate-Newton incident?—A. Yes, sir; I heard about the matter.

Q. Did you talk with him?—A. I never did see the man.

Q. Who was the soldier who was struck?—A. The soldier was a fellow by the name of James Newton, C Company.

Q. One of your own company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say to you about it?—A. He never spoke to me about it; he spoke to some of the rest about it.

Q. What was said about it in the company?—A. They just went and reported it to the commanding officer, and said it was too bad; that is all.

Q. That wasn't what they said in the company. What did the men say in the company?—A. I don't know.

Q. You were the room orderly?—A. I know, sir; but I didn't accompany the men at all times. I wasn't paying much attention. I went up there to see about his head. I think Captain Macklin, he came up and examined it; but anything more about it I didn't hear them say.

Q. Weren't they angry about it?—A. Didn't seem to be. I never heard any man say anything angry about it.

Q. Do you remember the other man's case—the one that was pushed off the boat?—A. Reid? Yes, sir; Oscar W. Reid. I just heard he was pushed off the boat. When he come in the quarters I don't know whether his clothes were dried or not. I didn't get up there. It was night, or evening some time. I didn't hear it only about the next morning.

Q. You were not kindly received by the white people; the saloon rule was sprung on you; one man got hit over the head with a pistol; another was pushed off into the water—do you mean to say that the company was not angry about that?—A. I could not say that. I know I was not. I didn't have anything to do with it. I had my work to do.

Q. What did the others say about it?—A. I never heard them say anything about it.

Q. You were right there, hearing everything that went on?—A. No; I could not hear everything.

Q. You want to tell us all about this. Here you were the room orderly; you were in a position to hear what was said, to know what the men felt, how they felt about it.—A. General, I don't know what they felt about it; I don't know no more what they said.

Q. You heard them talking?—A. I know; I was room orderly—

Q. They were talking about it. They resented it, didn't they—they didn't like it?—A. Well, I don't know whether they did or not; their actions might have showed it; I didn't stay there long enough to know what they was saying.

Q. Where were you on the night of August 13?—A. I was in the barracks, in bed.

Q. What did you do after dinner that day? Just tell us everything you did after dinner.—A. I filled up my lamps, and got everything perfectly clean. I gets up of a morning, then I fill my lamps, get them trimmed for night. Then I scrape around and do things until it gets dark. After it gets dark, then I goes around and light the lamps, and do everything like that, and see that things are all straight until time for lights to go out. I remain around there all the time.

Q. You stayed around all that afternoon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you light the lamps?—A. About 6 o'clock, when it gets dark; then they stay light until 9 o'clock.

Q. Did you put them out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. After the lights went out I lit the lantern and put it down aside my bed.

Q. What for?—A. For the sergeant in charge of quarters to take the light and go around to each man's bunk and see whether this man were in bed or not, and if they are out they are reported to the officer of the day that night or in the morning.

Q. Well, did you leave the lamp there?—A. I left the lamp there. I went to bed just as soon as I get the lamp lit, and I never wake up no more until that I hear shots fired.

Q. Didn't you wake up at check roll call?—A. No, sir; he is not supposed to wake you up; only to see if the men are there.

Q. Who was absent from check roll call?—A. Two men absent, I think at that time.

Q. What were their names?—A. One Sergt. George Thomas, the other William Miller.

Q. Where were they?—A. I understood in town, or around some fast woman's house.

Q. They were absent from check roll call?—A. Yes, sir; absent that night.

Q. When did they get back?—A. They got back about 2 o'clock; somewhere in the middle of the night, after 12 o'clock.

Q. Go on; what awakened you?—A. The first shots fired. I taken it to be fire alarm of the sentry in rear of the quarters. We had a sentry in rear of the quarters. I taken it to be firing, just as the sentry would do. That gets everybody up out of bed. Well, a few minutes after that I sat there on my bed, and I heard several rapid shots fired.

Q. Where were they?—A. Downstairs, seemed like. I don't know whether they was inside the garrison or outside the fence; but it seemed to be pretty close to the garrison, that is to the post. The wall divides the town and the post. It seems like they were on that side of the wall, or on this side—I couldn't tell which. They seemed to be very fast. Well, then I just—everybody when we heard the firing got up quick. "To arms" went, and everybody jumped for the gun racks. Well, the gun racks then was locked. Sergeant Brawner had the keys, and he was supposed to be there in an instant to open the racks.

Q. What about the racks—two were broken, you said?—A. They were broken after the call went, the fire call went.

Q. How did you know they were broken after the fire call went?—A. The men there broken open the rack after call went.

Q. But they had been broken all along, hadn't they?—A. No, sir; not all along. When I told you they were broken before I thought—

Q. Who was the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters?—A. Sergeant Brawner.

Q. He was there?—A. It was a long time before he came there. I don't know how long. Major Penrose came around and told the men to get them gun racks open. The men says, "We can't find the sergeant in charge of quarters." It was quite a little while and they couldn't find him yet. Some of the men taken axes and bust the gun racks open. They went downstairs. We had a quartermaster's sergeant named McMurray, George McMurray. He got the ammunition, and Lieutenant Grier, he taken command of the company, and we stayed out there waiting for orders.

Q. Did you go to roll call?—A. I went there and stayed until order to stay in the quarters.

Q. The shots continued all this time?—A. No, sir; they had ceased. Understand, that D Company was out before O Company got its firearms. Two companies was out before ever we got out.

Q. Where was the first sergeant of your company?—A. We had an acting first sergeant; our real first sergeant was up to target practice in Oklahoma some place. We had an acting first sergeant.

Q. Did the company form and wait?—A. After they got their guns; yes, sir.

122 BROWNSVILLE AFFRAY—APPLICATIONS FOR REENLISTMENT.

Q. Who were absent?—A. Them same two men, Sergeant Thomas and Corporal Miller.

Q. What other men?—A. That was all in my company, them two men.

Q. How much time was there from the time you woke up until the time the company formed?—A. I could not say. It was a terrible long time.

Q. A long time?—A. Yes, sir; a terrible long time. I never see anything move so slow. Men moved so slow; the noncommissioned officers were slow. It was a long time before ever they got out.

Q. You don't know, then, whether any men that were absent could have gotten back just as the company formed?—A. No, sir; only them two men was absent, Sergeant Thomas and Corporal Miller.

Q. What did they do then, after the company formed?—A. After the company formed they got orders to start across, round the inside of the garrison, inside the wall, rather.

Q. How long did they stay there?—A. Stayed until morning.

Q. When were the guns inspected?—A. That I couldn't say—only one company I seen.

Q. Your own company we are talking about; your own company?—A. I don't know whether they was inspected right or not. They must have been inspected when they went inside the quartermaster's room.

Q. Who did that?—A. The captain.

Q. When?—A. When he come there.

Q. When did he come there?—A. He come there way after the thing, the trouble, was on; because Lieutenant Grier he had our company; I don't know just exactly—

Q. Lieutenant Grier?—A. I think that is his name.

Q. Did he inspect the arms?—A. No; I think the captain come and relieved him.

Q. How long after the company formed?—A. The captain didn't have the company; he was supposed to have been officer of the day. He came over and ordered the guns in the quartermaster-sergeant's room.

Q. When was that?—A. That was way after Lieutenant Grier had had us.

Q. Before daylight?—A. That was before daylight. No, sir; that wasn't before daylight, either; that was after daylight.

Q. The guns were inspected after daylight?—A. After daylight.

Q. Who inspected them?—A. Captain Macklin.

Q. Had any of them been fired?—A. He reported none had been fired. I don't know myself; the report was none had been fired.

Q. What is your best recollection of it; had any been fired or not?—A. General, I don't know; I couldn't say.

Q. Did you never hear it mentioned in the company?—A. No, sir; I went round and tried to listen, and tried to seek and find out. Every crowd I seen I tried to get in to see what I could hear. I couldn't hear nothing of the trouble at all.

Q. Did men who were talking stop talking when you came around?—A. Well, they wasn't talking on no subject of that kind; I tried to listen.

Q. When you tried to listen, did they keep on talking?—A. They kept on talking, but they did not talk about any trouble at all.

Q. Were there any men on passes?—A. Well, I think there were several men on passes, if I am not mistaken.

Q. That is, on written pass? What was the permission for the men to be out—that is, until what hour every night?—A. When they write out a pass, they can be absent all night.

Q. No; leaving out written passes; on the general permission to be out?—A. We never have no passes on that; all ours are written passes.

Q. Couldn't you walk out in the town?—A. Oh, yes, sir; 11 o'clock; after 11 o'clock, when the call goes, you are supposed to be in; or a little before the call.

Q. Were the men out often up to 11 o'clock, any of them?—A. I suppose a few might have been out.

Q. On the 13th of August, when this thing occurred, were men out that evening?—A. No, sir; because the order was, from Major Penrose, that evening at 6 o'clock, for every man to be in the barracks or garrison at 8 o'clock. Those orders were received that evening at retreat; that every man in the garrison, member of the battalion, should be in barracks or quarters by 8 o'clock.

Q. How many were out after 8 o'clock?—A. That I couldn't tell you—whether they got them all in or not; except them two men of my company.

Q. Was any patrol sent out?—A. I understood there were, but I didn't see any.

Q. Did you hear whether any men were brought in by the patrol?—A. Not that I know of; I didn't hear that.

Q. Was the roll called when "To arms" was sounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who called it?—A. Our acting first sergeant, named Harley.

Q. That was some time after "To arms" was sounded?—A. When "To arms" was sounded we got our rifles, and roll was called then.

Q. You said it was a long time—how long after?—A. Yes, sir; a long time before we gotten down there.

Q. Was it ten or fifteen minutes?—A. I don't know; it seemed to me it was longer than that; to the best of my recollection I believe it was fully half an hour. It may have been over that; they were mighty slow.

Q. Had the firing continued all this time?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. How long did it last?—A. I judge it must have lasted about as fast as you can fire a rapid-firing pistol; about two or three minutes, I guess; maybe a little longer than that.

Q. Did no C Company men come back while you were getting the arms out?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Were you where you could see them?—A. Right at the head of the steps. After I was ordered to come back I was with the sergeant; we seen that every man gets his rifle out of the rack.

Q. If any man did come from the outside and come up the steps you would have seen him?—A. Yes, sir; most of them got out of bed—all of them got out of bed that I seen.

Q. You don't know whether they were all there?—A. I don't know myself.

Q. Did they come from around the room to where you were to get the guns?—A. They had a rack on this side—two racks on this side, and two on that.

Q. And you and the sergeant stood at the head of the steps?—A. Yes, sir; we stood at the head of the steps.

Q. How many men came up while you were standing there?—A. Not any.

Q. None came up?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long did you stand there?—A. I stood there—I went down to roll call and they told me not to come down. That is when the firing commenced, when I went down; the company was falling in—

Q. How many guns were in the racks when you came back upstairs?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You became responsible for them, didn't you? How many were in the racks when you came back upstairs from this roll call, after "To arms" was sounded?—A. I never noticed.

Q. Were there any?—A. I didn't look and see

Q. There was but one gun for each man; if any guns were there somebody was absent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any guns?—A. I never noticed. I had never noticed the racks after we had got the guns out. Being that these two men were out, there must have been two guns in the rack.

Q. What did you do afterwards—after you came back upstairs?—A. I stood right by the sergeant in charge of quarters.

Q. Who was the sergeant?—A. Sergeant Brawler.

Q. The next day, and the days following this affair, was it talked about in the company, or not?—A. Yes, sir; that is, kind of talked about—who had done it and such as that.

Q. And what did you hear about it?—A. The only thing that I did hear, the men wanted to know where the sentry was that night, that was on that post; that was discussed; that I heard. Where was the sentry on that post that night? It seemed to them that he should know something about it.

Q. Who was the sentry?—A. If I am not mistaken; I won't say true; if I don't mistake, the man was named Rogers, C Company; I think he is the man; I may be mistaken.

Q. What else was said about it in the company? There must have been something more said; you must have talked about it a good deal.—A. General, I didn't follow the men to see what they was talking about; they generally would be talking about something else. Whether they was scared of me, I don't know. I was a man that didn't believe in no trouble like that and never was into any, and I would tell if I did hear or see it myself, but I didn't.

Q. Have you ever been a noncommissioned officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you in this enlistment?—A. No, sir; the places have been filled up.

Q. You have been a private through this enlistment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any expectation of being appointed?—A. Yes, sir; I was a non-commissioned officer before and just went out, that is all; stayed out the length of time.

Q. Then, I understand that there were some men in the company who were talking about this matter that avoikded you?—A. Well, I don't know whether they was talking about it.

Q. What is your best knowledge about it?—A. They might. They might have been.

Q. Might have been what?—A. Might have been talking around about like that; they didn't say anything about it when I come up.

Q. Didn't you see them getting together, talking, here and there, three or four of them in groups?—A. Well, as you say, there might have been men getting up to one side and talking. Some men wouldn't let you hear anything. I might have been one of the men that they wouldn't let hear anything. I always attended to my own business. I went by myself and never bothered with any of them.

Q. Weren't there some men in your company that would be likely to get into trouble like that; those who were not so quiet as you were?—A. There might be.

Q. You know all about the men in the company, don't you?—A. No; I don't know.

Q. You know all about the men in the company?—A. Yes, sir; I know we have got some pretty noisy men; men that gets into trouble and gets court-martialed pretty often, and such as that.

Q. What were those noisy fellows doing? What were they doing all this time?—A. They was there in bed.

Q. What were they doing on the days after this thing occurred, when it was known that this thing had happened?—A. They were just jollyng and hurrahing—that is, laugh and talk hurrah about it.

Q. What do you mean by "hurrahing" about it?—A. Cracking jokes and laughing, and all such as that. Other people might possibly know what they meant; those who did not know, they could not say anything or suspicion anything.

Q. You have an idea in your mind that some of these men were out that night?—A. Well, General, I don't know about that.

Q. You knew the company before this thing happened, and you knew by their difference in demeanor that some of these men knew something about it and were out that night; that is, by the way they behaved after the thing had gotten out. Now, remember, you are under oath; you are under oath to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Now, what have you to say about them?—A. Well, sir, I have nothing to say about them. I don't believe that men of C Company were out, or some men of other companies. I actually don't believe that men of C Company did this. I won't say that there ain't a man in the organization that wasn't in it. That all men are innocent. I actually believe no man of C Company did it.

Q. C Company was no better than any other company, was it?—A. I know, sir; but it seemed as though they didn't get out there in time, didn't seem like to me, to do anything like that. Everybody else was out there but C Company. Everything, seemed like to me, was over when C Company went down. They were so slow. The noncommissioned officers were so slow. Sergeant McMurray, Sergeant Brawler, don't do nothing promptly. Sergeant Brawler didn't come to the rack for fully twenty-five minutes. The men stand around in the dark. First Sergeant McMurray wouldn't give out ammunition until he got orders from the officer—that is, Lieutenant Grier. The first sergeant had to go out on the parade ground to get another to command the company; he wouldn't take the responsibility upon himself.

Q. You remember when the inspector came down there—Major Blocksom—down to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he talked with the men about it when he was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say about that in the company? He was down there to find out about it.—A. He examined only a few men in the company; those men who didn't know nothing about it. I don't know who in the world he examined. He only examined but a very few men. I know he never did examine me. He only examined a few men in the company; and I never heard them say whether they was examined or not. I never heard any one of C Company that was examined. If any of C Company was examined, I don't know it.

Q. After Major Blocksom had been there a few days, you must have heard that it was reported that the men did it?—A. Yes, sir; I heard first that the citizens did it; afterwards I heard that the soldiers did it.

Q. What do you think of that?—A. Well, sir; I didn't know what to think of that; I didn't believe it myself. After the first report was made I didn't believe it.

Q. What reason had you for disbelieving it?—A. Just because I thought it was a false report; that maybe the citizens might have done it for revenge or something of that kind. Maybe they don't want us there. That is the reason I didn't believe the soldiers did it.

Q. What was said in the company about the charge that the soldiers did it?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You heard them talking about it?—A. I heard them say they don't believe the companies did it; they didn't believe the men of the company did it.

Q. Did anybody go and see the captain and tell him of it?—A. No, sir; it seemed like the captain should have known about it as much as the men.

Q. The captain was not there?—A. He was supposed to be there.

Q. He wasn't in the barrack room?—A. He was supposed to be officer of the day that same night; he should get out the same as anybody else; he was officer of the day.

Q. Were there a number of old men in the company, in C Company?—A. Well, yes, sir; we had several old men in C Company. Well, we had only one right old man, the quartermaster-sergeant; he didn't only have about six years, and he was about 64 years old, but the other men had maybe twenty and fifteen, eighteen and twelve years in the service.

Q. Were there many recruits?—A. Well, the youngest recruits we have just come there a little bit before we got discharged. Several men in the company had served two enlistments.

Q. Did you know the men in their first enlistment?—A. A few, but they were men who were discharged in about three to six months.

Q. Now, from the 13th of August, when were you discharged? What was the date of your discharge?—A. I was entitled to be discharged the 15th day of February, 1908; 1908 I would have been discharged.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you never had any reason to believe that any man in the company was connected with it?—A. No, sir; I don't believe that no man had any connection with it.

Q. Why do you believe that?—A. It seems to me I believe it because of my eyesight and knowledge. Every man seemed to have been there to get his gun. Every man was at retreat, except that sergeant and that corporal. That is the way I judge it. I know there was nobody come up those stairs.

Q. Do you know that you wakened up at the first shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then where did you go?—A. I stayed right in my bunk.

Q. What did you do next?—A. I put on my clothes and stayed there until the rest of the men got up and call to arms went.

Q. Could you see the head of the stairs?—A. I slept, just like them books there (indicating bookshelf a few feet away) were the stairs, here's my bunk (pointing to waste-paper basket—a little way from the bookshelf).

Q. How far away from the head of the stairs?—A. I don't think I was over 2 feet away from the head of the stairs.

Q. Did nobody come up the stairs?—A. Nobody came up the stairs.

Q. What is your address here? Where can you be found?—A. My address is 20 McCullough street NW., near the new station.
