Q. He has stated to this committee that Semple Alexander threatened one of his drivers that if he undertook to vote the republican ticket he would turn him off, and that Mr. Wiley threatened John Gill to the same effect. Do you know those parties?—A. I know both Mr. Wiley and Mr. Alexander.

Q. What do you know about them?—A. I don't know anything at all of the matter of Mr. Alexander. Mr. Wiley denies making that threat.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to this witness stating what Wiley says.

Q. Have you any such information from him?—A. I have a telegraphic dispatch from him, sir.

The chairman offered to put in evidence the dispatch referred to contradicting Richardson, it being too late to call Wiley as a witness before the adjournment of the committee.

Mr. Lawrence objected to it as not being evidence, and said he would as lief have the dispatch put on record as a statement of its purport.

Offer waived.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Who is Richardson?—A. He is a mulatto from somewhere. He was first a school-teacher and then postmaster.

Q. Do you know anything of his general reputation?—A. He was a defaulter; he has had a bad reputation.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to offer at this point a letter published in a local paper at the time retracting the charge that had been made as to three white men presenting pistols at Richardson when he was returning from that meeting, as he described here the other night.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have a large amount of testimony which I shall ask the committee to allow me to introduce, showing that a large part of the testimony produced on the other side yesterday and to-day is incorrect.

The CHAIRMAN. Including that of all the Army officers?

Mr. LAWRENCE. No. I said a large part.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. As to the conduct of the election in Chester County, and the general condition of the people there, and the general report as to good order and quiet in society, what was the fact?—A. I am a young man, sir, and I have never seen very many election canvasses, but I never saw one pass off more pleasantly.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Did you attend any republican meetings during this campaign?—A. Yes, sir; one near Rich Hill, and one at Lewis's Turn-out. About "republican meetings," I desire it to be understood that our meetings sprang up very often without regular appointment, but the meeting at Rich Hill was a regularly-appointed republican meeting, while at Lewis's Turn-out I think it was a casual meeting.

Q. At any of the republican meetings which you attended did the democrats demand a division of time for the purpose of discussion?—A. By "demand," do you mean to ask whether we demanded it forcibly?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. We requested it; we never demanded it.

Q. Was it conceded?—A. Always.

Q. Did you attend any democratic meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the republicans allowed the privilege of discussion at any democratic meeting?—A. They were, always.

Q. Did they take part in the discussions?—A. At Carmel Hill, and at a place above Carmel Hill, very near it, at McLilly's Mill, and at Rich Hill they accepted a division of time.

Q. Did you know of any democratic meeting being disturbed by any republican?—A. I cannot recall any now; I think not.

Q. Do you know any instance where any white man has been punished for injury of or outrage upon the person of any colored man in your county?—A. I cannot recall an instance now.

Q. How long have you lived in that county?—A. All my life, sir.

Q. About what was the vote of the precinct at which you voted?—A. I think it was about one hundred and sixty, or probably two hundred republican, and eighty or one hundred democratic.

Q. Were the democrats on the day of election armed with pistols or other weapons?—A. Well, sir, it is common for our people to wear pistols. There were none exhibited, but I cannot say there were none there.

Q. It is usual for the white men to wear pistols?—A. Yes, sir; not more so than colored people, however.

Q. Don't you know that there are very few colored people who have pistols?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Did you see a colored man on the day of the election have a pistol?—A. I cannot just remember one.

Q. You cannot remember one?—A. No; I do not know that I can designate them.

Q. You don't know that any colored man had a pistol on the day of election, do you?—A. No, sir; nor I don't know that they had not.

Q. Just answer my question. Did the white men generally vote in the fore part of the day before the colored men were permitted to vote?—A. For the first fifteen or twenty minutes or half an hour the whites voted. There was a reason for that, however.

Q. During that time were any colored men permitted to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Colored republicans?—A. I think so. If you will allow me to state why, I could account for it.

Q. I am just inquiring about the facts. Did not the white men interrogate the colored men separately as to their right to vote—many of them?—A. I think not; not at the election-precinct.

Q. Don't you know that it was understood among the colored men, or among many of them, that if they voted the republican ticket there would be danger that they would lose their places on the farms on which they lived?—A. Yes, sir; I think they may have had some such impression.

Q. Was not that impression general among the colored people?—A. I don't think I could safely say it was general.

Q. But it prevailed to a certain extent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that have the effect to keep a good many colored men from going to the election?—A. Not in my precinct.

Q. Through the county?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Did it not have the effect to induce some colored men to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I do not know that I can recall an instance. I think every man in my neighborhood voted. There may have been one or two instances where they did not vote.

Q. Some of the colored men did vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some voted the democratic ticket who had voted the republican ticket heretofore?—A. Not many of them; a few did. There was an increased vote of republicans for the democratic ticket.

Q. What was the increase?—A. I think at our box we had voted previously five, six, or seven votes, and I think we had, maybe, fifteen or sixteen this time.

Q. Did you have any troops in your county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they located?—A. I think the main detachment was at Chester Village, and a small detachment at Rich Hill, and one at Carmel Hill.

Q. Did you have a rifle-club in your county during the past season?—A. There was one.

Q. How long did it continue to exist?—A. I am not familiar with its organization.

Q. Did it not keep up its existence until after Chamberlain's proclamation?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was for a year or more.

Q. It was pretty numerously attended, was it not?—A. I am not familiar with them. I think it was composed of most of the young men in the village.

Q. What is the population of the village?—A. I really cannot tell you without referring. It is a small village.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

PHILLIP EPSTIN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your age and where do you reside?—Answer. I am 41; I live at Vernonsville, Spartanburgh County.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At the polling-place, Vernonsville. I was there the whole day and previous to that.

Q. State what, if anything, occurred there with reference to the election.—A. On the evening before, a colored man, Louis Hammet, came into the store and said he was going to vote for Hampton, or the democratic ticket. I told him, "All right." Next morning I stepped up to the polls with him and was going to vote him, and there was a colored man at the poll, and he said I can't vote him. Says I, "Yes; we will vote him." He refused to let him vote for a long time, and this colored fellow took his position next a ballot-box and held the democratic ticket in his hand, and kept begging them now and then. At last, after some three or four hours elapsed, they permitted him to vote it. In the evening another colored man voted the democratic ticket, and shortly after that he was assailed by a parcel of negroes.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you see them assail him?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you see the colored man?—A. Yes, sir; Alex. Smith was the one who was assaulted, and he was taken to jail.

Q. What for?—A. They run him and he defended himself, I believe, and they then took out a peace-warrant.

Q. (Mr. Lawrence.) State what you know.

The WITNESS. I saw him in the jail.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was he there for?—A. He was there because he voted the democratic ticket, and they assaulted him and threatened his life.

Q. Was he there for safe-keeping?—A. Yes, sir; he was there for safe-keeping.

Q. What was the general conduct of the colored republicans toward the colored men who wanted to vote the democratic ticket that day?—A. Very bitter. Very many more of them would have voted the democratic ticket if they had not been afraid they would be assailed and insulted.

Q. And those two attacks that you described gave them a foundation for that fear?—A. Yes, sir; and also prior threats from republican negroes.

Q. What do you know about those threats?—A. They were very bold about it. They continually kept stating that a nigger who would vote the democratic ticket ought not to live, and all that kind of thing, and that they would discard him from their houses, and all that sort of things.

Q. You were formerly a republican?—A. Yes, sir; from immediately after reconstruction until 1872.

Q. Apart from this intimidation by colored republicans or colored democrats, was there any trouble or violence at the polls there?—A. No, sir; not at the poll. We were stronger on the democratic side.

Q. Spartanburgh is a strong democratic county, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; and our precinct is the second largest in the county.

Q. Even at that precinct you say they kept this colored man from voting for several hours?—A. Yes, sir; and very many that did vote the democratic ticket they had to vote and split out as hard as they could, in order to avoid being attacked by colored men.

Q. How many colored men were gathered around the poll during the day?—A. From forty to fifty.

Q. Was it a rule for them to make an attack on any colored man who voted the democratic ticket?—A. That was their intention. They did not like at all that a colored man should vote the democratic ticket.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How long were you at the election?—A. All day.

Q. Did you see any violence inflicted upon the person of a single man that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you don't know that anybody had any intention to inflict violence on any colored man?—A. I did not see any violence used that day upon any person.

Q. Then you don't know that anybody had an intention to use violence?—A. Except what they always used to say. I saw this colored man in jail, though, from the threats.

Q. You saw him in jail, but you didn't know what he was in jail for?—A. I did not see the violence inflicted, but he was in jail.

Q. You don't know that any violence was inflicted upon him?—A. Well, he had to get out of the way to avoid it.

Q. You don't know that any was inflicted upon him?—A. I did not see it.

Q. You don't know what he was in jail for?—A. Well, the general reputation was—

Q. I ask you if you know what he was in jail for?—A. Well, I know he was in jail because he voted—

Q. No; you don't know of your own personal knowledge what he was in jail for?—A. I did not see it.

Q. Will you answer my question? Do you know of your own personal knowledge what he was in jail for?—A. I know he was in jail because he was assaulted. I did not see it done.

Q. Then you do not know?—A. Of course, if you mean that, I don't know; I was very well satisfied that he was there for that reason.

Q. Did you attend any democratic meeting this year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see any republican interfere with any democrat at any democratic meeting?—A. No, sir; I did not see any republican interfere with a democratic meeting.

Q. Did you ever see any republican inflict any personal violence upon any democrat this year?—A. No, sir; I did not see it at our place.

Q. Did you see it anywhere this year?—A. In my county, I didn't see it.

Q. Did you attend any republican meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see democrats at those meetings in large parties?—A. Yes, sir; I saw a congregation of all sorts.

Q. Were not a good many of the democrats armed with pistols?—A. I did not see it.

Q. Did not you see the democrats have pistols?—A. No, sir; I never saw them exhibited, and of course I don't know whether they had them about their persons or not.

Q. Don't you know that it is the custom of the democrats to carry pistols when they go to republican meetings?—A. I will answer for myself if I am permitted. I have attended many meetings, and I have never carried a pistol nor even a knife.

Q. Don't you know that it is usual for the democrats to carry pistols?—A. I don't know it.

Q. Don't you know that in your county there was a number of colored men under the impression that if they voted the republican ticket they would be in danger of losing their places on the land where they lived?—A. I don't know of such a fact, sir. I may have heard it rumored about.

Q. Was it not rumored about?—A. Well, sir, I am not permitted to say only what I know.

Q. Yes, you are. I am asking you now if there was not a general rumor to that effect?—A. Well, sir, at my precinct there was no such rumor.

Q. Was there not in your township?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Before the election, was there not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not the colored men, some of them, have an impression of that sort?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you hear the "preference policy" talked of?—A. Well, sir, we discussed a great many questions at our meetings, but we have never introduced any such resolution.

Q. Did not you discuss the "preference policy"?—A. We discussed the policy as a matter of course; that men that would stand by the citizens should be patronized in preference to others.

Q. That colored men who would vote with the democrats should be patronized in preference to those who voted the republican ticket?—A. There may have been such an impression.

Q. That was discussed at your meetings, was it not?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was talked over among your people?—A. Well, there have been ever so many views talked over. I could not quote any definite matter.

Q. Do you live at the court-house?—A. No, sir. My family live in Greenville.

Q. Are you frequently at Greenville?—A. Yes, sir; occasionally.

Q. Do you know of any instance where a white man has been punished in the courts there for personal violence or outrage inflicted on a colored man?—A. O, yes; certainly.

Q. Do you know of any case where a white man has been punished?—A. I must answer that I have not attended court so closely as to notice any of those things.

Q. Well, do you know of any such case?—A. I know this, that a white man would be punished as quick as a colored man.

Q. I am not asking you that. Do you know of any such case?—A. I don't know it personally. I have not seen it.

Q. You do not know of any instance where a white man has been punished?—A. Well, I don't; on the other side either. I have never seen it.

Q. Have you ever seen a white man in jail?—A. Often.

Q. Where?—A. In any of the counties you can see them.

Q. When did you see a white man in jail?—A. I saw one the other day in Greenville or Spartanburgh.

Q. Were you in the jail?—A. No, sir; I could see him from the outside.

Q. Did you see white men from the outside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. O, I did not stop to count. I saw plenty of white faces presenting themselves, and some of them even hallowed out.

Q. Were there any soldiers in that county?—A. Yes.

Q. How many?—A. I could not tell. I have not the remotest idea. I never counted them.

THOMPSON H. COOKE sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where is your residence?—Answer. Greenville, South Carolina.

Q. What office do you hold?—A. I am the circuit judge of the eighth circuit of this State. I was elected first in 1873 and re-elected last winter.

Q. Were you a republican up to the recent election?—A. At my first election I was elected upon a strict republican party vote, and I have co-operated with the republicans, until a few months back, for the last eight years.

Q. How long previous to the election did you conclude to support the democratic ticket, or General Hampton?—A. I think on the 15th of September I determined, in my own mind, that it would not be to my own interest or to the interest of the people of the State to support the republican nomination for the State ticket, but I still determined to support the national republican ticket and adhered to my determination.

Q. Up to that time were you in full communion and good standing with the republican party?—A. I never heard my fealty questioned for the last eight years.

Q. And you were in communication with the leaders of the republican party in this State?—A. I have so thought.

Q. Were you present at any time during the canvass in Greenville?—A. I was, sir; and not only there, but in about twelve or thirteen other countie in the State.

Q. What was the character of the canvass as to peacefulness?—A. I must say that there was a great deal of enthusiasm among the people. The people were enthusiastic, and seemed to be determined, by means that I considered fair, to carry the election, to wit, using arguments of a persuasive character, which would go to convince the colored people that they ought to vote for the people that they were born and raised among; that it was natural that they should be their best friends; and I know that the speakers invariably cautioned the people to keep the peace. It was General Hampton's programme, it was mine, and it was everybody's that I heard speak, to endeavor to enforce good order throughout the country.

Q. Did you see any attempt to intimidate or to use violence toward the colored republicans in any part of the canvass that you were engaged in?—A. I never witnessed anything of the kind.

Q. Were you present at any republican meetings where they divided time with the democrats?—A. I was present at one or two; one at Abbeville, that I remember now, and one in Greenville, where we requested them to attend and have a joint discussion with the democratic party. At the other the democrats attended their meeting and requested them to divide time. At that meeting the governor of the State was present and consented to the arrangement; there was no objection.

Q. Leaving out the Abbeville meeting, state whether there was any prevention of republicans from speaking, so far as you know, at any of those joint discussions that you attended?—A. None, whatever. The democrats invariably requested them to speak, and desired them to speak at democratic meetings, and sometimes they did. I remember one or two colored people who wanted to express their views on the situation, and they were allowed to do so; and there was one white man that I remember.

Q. Were they heard patiently and without interruption?—A. They were.

Q. And generally during the canvass were there any signs of violence at the meetings you attended?—A. I saw no indications of violence.

Q. Were you ever interrupted yourself?—A. Yes, sir; I have been interrupted in this town by the republicans at a meeting.

Q. To any considerable extent?—A. Well, there was an effort to drown out my voice, and prevent me from being heard, at a meeting held right in front of this building, once or twice.

Q. How long did it last; long enough to prevent you making your speech?—A. I don't think I made the speech that I would have made if the interruption had not have occurred. I don't think I spoke as long as I would if I had not been interrupted. Also, in Abbeville, where I was holding court, I was interrupted; also, in Greenville, where I live; also in the town of Beaufort.

Q. That is a county where the colored people predominate?—A. Yes, sir. The interruption extended so far in Abbeville that I took occasion next day in court to order the arrest of the trial-justice and several others; I thought making an example of him would deter others from interfering with meetings for the future, and I had him arrested and bound over, and put under bond for a year and a day.

Q. The interruption there was serious?—A. It was. I thought at one time it was likely to terminate in a row in front of the hotel. The occasion was a band appearing at the hotel for the purpose of giving me a serenade and some few remarks that I addressed to the crowd assembled in front of the hotel.

Q. Were you present in the city of Greenville on the day of the election?—A. I was all day, except about half an hour. I don't think I was away more than fifteen minutes during the day. I had nothing to eat from morning until about twelve o'clock that night.

Q. How was it as to peacefulness there?—A. Everything passed off at Greenville quietly, with the exception of a little interruption. It struck me that the United States marshal stationed there, John P. Scruggs, at the time, was disposed not to act very fairly, and that impression being made upon my mind, I was led to watch him very closely; in fact, we had some words together when the polls were first opened. I watched him closely, and I noticed him leaving his post near the window where the box was, and through which the votes were deposited, and going to a colored man who was standing out in the crowd some little distance from the box, and they had a very few words together. I could not hear what they said, though I was very near, for their conversation was in a whisper. Scruggs went back to his former position, and about the time he got there this colored man made a rush for the box, swearing that he intended to vote, and began jostling and pushing white and black in every direction, and in consequence there came very near being a row. Immediately upon that course Scruggs rushed to the hotel for Captain Cook, who was in command of the post. He appeared very promptly, and nobody got hurt and nobody was prevented from voting.

Q. Were the opportunities for voting sufficient, or otherwise?—A. Quite sufficient. For the last three hours in the day there was not a vote deposited once in ten minutes, I think; I saw no obstruction at all; I don't think anybody was denied the right to vote, or the opportunity.

Q. As far as you saw did any North Carolinians vote at that precinct?—A. I don't think there was one there.

Q. Are you familiar with the people of Greenville so as to know them when you see them?—A. I am familiar with their faces; I don't know their names as a general thing, but the only white people or democrats who voted at Greenville were those confined properly to that township; the colored people no doubt came, many of them, over twenty miles off, but the white people who voted there were from that township. I know their faces generally, and I am satisfied there were no North Carolinians among them.

Q. Was there any attempt, so far as you could see, to prevent any black person who desired to vote from voting there by intimidation, or in any other way?—A. Well, if you call this anything of that kind, there was: I saw some colored people pressing forward a youth that I thought was not more than eighteen or nineteen years old, and I went to him and said, "My young friend, if you are not twenty-one years old don't you vote; you may get into trouble; if you are twenty-one years old, and you feel satisfied you have a right to vote, go and vote, but take my advice and don't attempt to vote unless you have reason to believe that you are twenty-one years of age." He left the crowd and started off, and the colored people wheeled him into line and brought him in and voted him afterward. I know no other instance of anything of the kind, and I did that only to protect the youth, because I felt that they were imposing on him, and I am satisfied to-day that he was not twenty-one years old.

Q. That you judge from his appearance?—A. From his appearance and from what I heard his original owner say that day.

Q. Did you have a conversation with the district attorney, Mr. Corbin, at any time previous to the election?—A. I did.

Q. You may state what it was.

[Mr. Lawrence objected to the witness stating the conversation, and Mr. Abbott did not press the question.]

The WITNESS. I desire to state this much, which bears upon the general question of the condition of affairs in South Carolina during the campaign. I think that peace and good order reigned during the entire campaign and for months before, and from then until now, except some difficulties of a strictly personal character. My mind is directed at this moment to the killing of a man by a party of colored people (it is said; I don't know how it was) in Abbeville County. I want to make this statement, because I think it is fair that it should be known. An understanding existed between Governor Chamberlain and myself to this effect, that if there was any necessity for troops in my circuit I would promptly inform him of the fact, and he left it with me to so inform him. At our last meeting, prior to his nomination for re-election, that was the understanding, and I have never until this day seen any necessity for troops in my circuit. I told the governor that I thought I could control the people of the circuit in peace and harmony and have a fair election, and I am satisfied that there was no necessity whatever for troops there; and, furthermore, I desire to state that I know that different republicans in that circuit—

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to the witness stating what other people said.

Q. You must state anything which was of common notoriety?—A. I know it was the opinion of common notoriety among them that the democracy would in all probability sweep the county unless they could get troops there and so maneuver—

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to that.

The WITNESS. Well, I am satisfied that the common sentiment which prevailed among the republican leaders in my circuit, and not only in my circuit but in other portions of the State, (for I visited over one-third of the State during the campaign and spoke in about one-third of the counties, or a little more,) was that unless they could get troops down here and have them distributed, and have them distributed over the counties, the democracy would sweep the country; that the colored people would be induced to vote the democratic ticket, and that unless the republicans could do something of that sort and in that way bring them back or prevent them from going over to the democracy by the presence of troops, the democracy would carry the State overwhelmingly.

Q. State whether in your circuit there was anything that prevented the full execution of the processes of the court?—A. Nothing whatever, sir. I never was more utterly astonished in my life than when I heard the governor's proclamation. There is one statement I would like to make in justice to myself and inasmuch as I testified before the Senate committee this morning. Among other things that I stated there was this, that I had heard republican orators say to colored people that if they voted the democratic ticket they would be put back into slavery. Now, that idea was impressed upon my mind from the true language which I did hear, and it has occurred to me since that it was used by Mr. Dunn. Mr. Dunn said this—and it was so strongly indicative of that idea that my mind became impressed with the idea, but I did not use the language that I should have used this morning. Mr. Dunn said, "When you colored people march up to the ballot-box and propose to deposit the democratic ticket, you must remember the old whipping-post and the auction-block." Those words impressed my mind with the idea which I stated before the Senate Committee this morning. That was said in the town of Greenville. General McGowan, who is now here, heard the words as well as I did. I also stated this morning that I thought it was Mr. Thompson or Mr. A. S. Wallace who had said it, but it was neither one of them; it was Mr. Dunn.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You are sure that those are the words he used?—A. I am pretty well satisfied of it, sir: "When you go to vote the democratic ticket, remember the auction-block," and I think the whipping-post was to be remembered also; but I am sure of the auction-block.

Q. And now you say, as your understanding of that language, that it conveyed the idea to you that slavery would be restored if the democratic party got into power?—A. It would strike me so.

Q. That is your idea of what is meant by those words?—A. I thought so then, and I think so yet.

Q. That is your judgment as to the effect of language?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is the innuendo.

Q. Is that the meaning of the words?—A. Well, I cannot say that it is the meaning of the words.

Q. What right have you to put innuendoes into another man's speech beyond what the words mean?—A. I don't claim any right to do it. I have a right to make up my mind as to the true import and meaning of a speaker when I hear him speak, as I did on that occasion.

Q. What right have you to give to a committee of Congress, unsolicited, an interpretation of the language of a speech which the words themselves do not bear out?—A. Well, I don't know that I have any right to do it; I simply wanted to make this statement in order to straighten myself with respect to a mistake that I made this morning, and I have so stated it.

Q. Would not the better place to straighten yourself have been the place where the mistake was made?—A. Perhaps it would be; and, if I can, I will endeavor to do so; but I don't want to be detained in the city to-morrow, because my business calls me home.

Q. How many political speeches did you make this year?—A. I cannot tell; I spoke thirty-five or forty times, or perhaps oftener.

Q. How long did you generally speak?—A. My speeches, as a general thing, averaged an hour, sometimes more and sometimes less.

Q. This was the most exciting political campaign that there has been in the State since the war?—A. I think it was the most exciting and enthusiastic.

Q. Didn't it stir up more animosity and strong feelings than any campaign since the war?—A. I was very much surprised not to see a great deal of that feeling exhibited. To witness so much enthusiasm and apparent delight over the prospects of success, and yet no demonstration of violence to the opposite side, when many of them were present on many occasions, struck me as rather remarkable.

Q. Could there be enthusiasm to the extent to which it existed without there being considerable feeling?—A. O, I think there was a great deal of feeling.

Q. And some bitterness of feeling?—A. I don't know that there was any bitterness of feeling.

Q. Was there not some bitterness of feeling on both sides?—A. Well, I think there was a good deal manifested at times toward myself. I think I can speak of that with more certainty.

Q. Is it usual for judges in this State to make political speeches in exciting political campaigns?—A. Well, I must say I don't think it is the case.

Q. Have you ever known an instance?—A. Well, yes, sir; I have known it to be done. I felt that the occasion had arrived when every man that loved his State should put his shoulder to the wheel.

Q. I did not ask you that.—A. Well, I give it you anyhow.

Q. Have you ever known it to be done during any political campaign in this State, except this year?—A. Yes, sir,

Q. When?—A. I took the stump for Chamberlain two years ago. I am sorry to say that I did.

Q. Do you know any other judge who did it?—A. Judge Mackey did it.

Q. Any other judge?—A. No, I do not think it; though I am not certain. I think, perhaps, the judges generally gave an expression of their disposition toward the campaign, but don't know that they actually entered into an active canvass of the State.

Q. Your court has criminal jurisdiction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made speeches in your circuit?—A. Yes, sir; I made very few in that campaign out of my circuit.

Q. Do you think a judge is in good condition to hear and try criminal cases which might grow out of tumult or excitement at a political meeting, when he has taken part in that meeting himself?—A. Well, I have never thought it would interfere with my judicial judgment in such matters.

Q. You made a political speech at Abbeville this year?—A. Two or three of them.

Q. There was some trouble there, if I understand you?—A. Yes, sir; in front of the hotel there was some disturbance, which caused me to have one of the parties, who held a position there as a peace-officer, arrested.

Q. You caused the arrest of the trial-justice there for what reason?—A. Because he was disturbing the meeting that was held in front of the hotel, at which myself and others spoke; he was disturbing the meeting, and my mind was very much impressed with the idea that he meant to get up a riot if it was possible.

Q. What did he do?—A. Well, sir, he was boisterous, making a noise and inciting others to make a noise.

Q. State what he said or did?—A. I have stated what he did; he was boisterous and making a noise.

Q. How did he make a noise; what language did he employ?—A. He did it by whooping and cursing.

Q. Can you give an expression that he used?—A. I know that he made several allusions in reference to myself; I don't remember at this time exactly what they were.

Q. Was that when you were speaking?—A. Yes, sir, and afterward, too.

Q. When he was arrested before whom was he tried?—A. He was brought before me, and I made an order simply requiring him to give a bond and keep the peace, and be of good behavior.

Q. Did you hear evidence against him?—A. I required him to show cause why he should not be bound over.

Q. You made an order requiring him to enter into bond?—A. To show cause first.

Q. Did he answer that?—A. I think he did.

Q. Was the cause heard?—A. I heard the return to the rule, I think; I am satisfied I did.

Q. Did you have any witnesses against him?—A. I did not want any; I saw what occurred.

Q. Then you made a rule absolute, or required him to give the security without any testimony?—A. Except what I saw myself, and he made no showing against the truthfulness of the view which I took of the case, and he filed his bond.

Q. Who filed the information against him, or whatever paper was filed?—A. I directed the solicitor of the circuit, if my memory serves me right, or, perhaps, the clerk of the court to prepare the rule.

Q. And without the intervention of a jury you required him to give the security?—A. Yes, sir; that is the practice in this State; I don't know what it is elsewhere.

Q. You deemed it a proper exercise of judicial power in a case such as you have described, to take cognizance of the charge against him and make a rule in that way?—A. I did think so, and I thought it would perhaps save him from much worse consequences, as his course was indicative to me that he might fall into much worse.

Q. You thought that a proper exercise of the jurisdiction of a judge in this State?—A. You must understand, sir, that in this State a judge is a peace-officer, and his jurisdiction extends throughout the State. I was satisfied that his conduct was of that threatening and boisterous character that I might judicially take cognizance of it as much so as I would if any gentleman, drunk and staggering, was to walk into my court-room while I was holding court.

Q. You think a judge is in a proper condition of mind to be impartial in the determination of a case of that sort, under the circumstances you have described, do you?—A. Yes, sir; I think I was fully cool and deliberate enough.

Q. How long have you been judge?—A. Nearly four years.

Q. How long had you been in practice before you became judge?—A. I was admitted to the bar in the winter of 1858. I had been in practice I think about fourteen years.

Q. Where had you practiced?—A. I lived at Orangeburgh Court-House, about 51 miles below here, and I practiced in the courts there and at Barnwell, and some little in Charleston, and occasionally here and at Lexington, about 12 miles from here westward.

Q. Did you devote your entire time to practice from your admission up to the time you were elected?—A. No, sir. We had what is known as a war in this country, and during that time there were very few people here who devoted their attention to the practice of the law. I refer to the late strife between the Federal Army and the Confederate States.

Q. Was your entire time devoted to practice after the close of the war up to the time you became judge?—A. Very much so, sir; and before the war also, until about the latter part of 1861.

Q. Were there any troops in your circuit this year?—A. I saw some in the town of Abbeville. I saw those upon my return to Greenville the day before the election came off, those who appeared at the polls when Captain Cook was sent for. I know of none stationed anywhere else only from hearsay. At Abbeville Court-House I saw Captain Lloyd's company, and I have understood that the troops were distributed over the county, but I don't know that myself.

Q. How far was the scene of the Hamburg and Edgefield riots from any part of your circuit?—A. I really don't know the distance across the county of Edgefield. I would suppose, though, some 30 or 40 miles from the nearest point of my circuit.

Q. You have read Governor Chamberlain's proclamation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You noticed that in it he referred to the fact that he had sworn evidence on which he issued that proclamation?—A. I think his language is that he has written and sworn evidence.

Q. Do you know what evidence he had before him at the time he issued the proclamation?—A. It is utterly impossible for me to tell what evidence, for I assure you he never showed me a particle of it.

Q. Do you know what information or evidence he had when he made a request of the President of the United States for the aid of troops?—A. No, sir; I don't know what evidence he had, and I don't know where he could have gotten evidence from, which showed the necessity of sending troops into my circuit. He certainly could not have received it from any reliable source.

Q. The governor's sources of evidence might have been as reliable as yours, might they not?—A. I don't think so.

Q. He was the officer who was charged with the duty of judging when troops were necessary and of calling for them. Do you undertake to say, that as the officer charged with that duty he would not be as likely to have as full information and to judge as correctly as you would?—A. Well, I don't think he possibly could have had as correct information in this case, for I was up there among the people, saw the people, and talked with them from all portions of my circuit, and had dealing with them, more or less, all the time, and especially with the republican officials, the county treasurer, and county auditor, &c. The trial-justices, all appointed by him, sent their accounts to me for my approval, as the law requires.

Q. How soon after troops were sent to South Carolina were any of them sent to Abbeville?—A. I don't remember when they were sent to Abbeville; they were sent there some considerable time before the election.

Q. You don't know whether Governor Chamberlain had any agency in sending troops there, or whether it was done at the instance of the military officers here charged with the duty of preserving the peace?—A. No, sir; I cannot tell; I only have an idea in regard to it.

Q. Do you know the colored boy that you spoke of at Greenville, whom you supposed to be a minor?—A. I heard his name, but I cannot give it to you now. He was a light-colored lad.

Q. You saw him vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was sworn that he was of the proper age?—A. Everybody was sworn, I believe; not that he was of the proper age, but that he was entitled to vote at that election. I think that is about the oath administered.

Q. Don't you know that the law requires that the oath administered shall be to the effect that the voter is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the county, and over 21 years of age?—A. I believe it is. At the same time I don't think I have ever seen the oath administered in this State in that way at any election. My recollection, which is quite clear, is that the form of the oath has been invariably: "You do solemnly swear that you are entitled to vote at this election?" I am satisfied I have never had any other oath administered to me.

Q. Did you hear any democratic speeches during this campaign except your own?—A. Well, I thought I made republican speeches in favor of the democracy. I heard democratic speeches from persons claiming to be democrats.

Q. Do you know that the democratic speakers to some extent advised the people in this State that if colored men living on their lands should vote the republican ticket, they ought to give a preference to men who voted the democratic ticket or didn't vote at all?—A. I don't know it, but I have heard of some such talk being had and some such speaking.

Q. Don't you know that among the colored people of this State, or of those localities which you visited, the impression prevailed that if they did not vote the democratic ticket they would be in danger of losing their places on the lands which they occupied?—A. I don't know anything of the kind. I never heard one say that he had been so threatened.

Q. Don't you know that such threats were made in the newspapers?—A. O, of course. I have read such things as that in the newspapers, I believe.

Q. Did you read Governor Chamberlain's letter addressed to Colonel Haskell on the 4th of October, 1876?—A. In answer to your last question, perhaps it is proper for me to say this: I remember hearing some speaker, I don't remember who it was, but it was at some meeting, say that by reason of the misrule in this State, he had lost all his goods and effects, and that he would not be able to employ the colored people any longer if there was not a change in the government, and that if he did employ any at all he would certainly give a preference to those who had voted the democratic ticket.

Q. You were at their meetings where speeches of that sort were made?—A. I recollect hearing only one such speech; I think it was at Honeypath.

Q. You spoke afterward at the same place on that day?—A. I think I spoke before that.

Q. And you allowed a speech of that sort to be made without expressing any disapprobation of its sentiment?—A. I saw nothing wrong in it. The man simply stated that he did not think he would be able to employ any one hereafter; but if he did, he would certainly employ those who stood by him and his interests, as I think every man has a right to do.

Q. You think every man has a right to look after his own interests?—A. I don't think you have a right to send any man into my yard and put him upon me against my will.

Q. You think it is proper for land-owners to discriminate against men in giving employment or renting lands because they vote the republican ticket, do you?—A. I have never advocated such a course, sir. I don't think it is right. I think it is our duty to take care of our whole people. Furthermore, I think that it is our duty to take care of those who, in my judgment, have erred and endeavor to make them our friends by kind treatment hereafter, and I so stated on more than one occasion while addressing the colored people in this State, and I have heard General Hampton—

Q. Did you believe the statement which you heard that if the republican party could succeed in re-electing Chamberlain, that speaker would not be able to employ laborers any more?—A. That was not his statement exactly. His language, I think, was that if this misrule did not cease, as his fortune or whatever he had had at the close of the war had been well-nigh swept away, he could not employ them any longer; furthermore, for the reason that the colored people whom he had employed were very inefficient as laborers, in that they were not able to give good service in the capacity of laborers, and that they had neglected his work, and his crops were short, and he had been so reduced in his circumstances that he would not be able to employ them much longer, if at all.

Q. Are you acquainted with General Conner, of Charleston?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him to-day.

Q. Do you believe him to be an able and candid man?—A. I do think so.

Q. A man having the means of judging in respect to many of the questions affecting this State?—A. Well, General Conner lives in the city; he has a large practice, but it is mostly confined to the city, and I don't know whether he could judge well for other parts of the State.

Q. Don't you know the fact that he has large opportunities to know whether it is practicable to secure peace and protection to the citizens of the State through the courts of the State?—A. I would suppose he could speak for that country down there; I don't think he could for the entire State; I would not undertake to speak for his section myself.

Q. If he has expressed the opinion that it is not practicable to secure protection to the citizens of this State through the courts, would you regard his opinion as reliable, especially in relation to that portion of the State with which he is familiar?—A. I certainly should not question it.

Q. Have you ever known an instance where a white man has been hanged in this State for murdering a colored man since the war?—A. I know of only one white man having been hanged in my immediate circuit; I know but one colored man that was hanged; they were both convicted before me. One was tried for killing a colored man about twelve months before he was hanged. The proof was not sufficient to warrant conviction, and I so stated to the jury; but after the jury had rendered a verdict of not guilty, I gave the man a lecture; told him that notwithstanding the testimony failed to warrant his conviction, I felt a moral certainty that he was guilty of the blood of that man, and warned him to take care or he would be in that court again, perhaps in less than a year, and would be sentenced to be hanged; and I believe that in less than twelve months he was tried and convicted for killing, I think it was a white man, in the very same locality. He was regarded as a very desperate man. The colored man who was hanged was hanged for killing a colored man.

Q. With the single exception which you have stated, do you know of any instance in this State where a white man has been hanged for killing a colored man since the war?—A. I don't know; I cannot answer that question.

Q. This paper which I show you is the Union Herald, a newspaper of this city, of this date, is it not?—A. Yes; I believe it is.

Q. Have you read that little notice of a killing which it contains?—A. Yes, sir; I have read it now.

Q. Are not similar notices of the killing of colored men of very common occurrence in this State?—A. I remember seeing them occasionally, and I remember seeing notices occasionally of the killing of white people. A case occurred in my circuit not more than ten days or two weeks ago.

Q. Is it not notorious that all over this State, in many localities, white men have committed many outrageous acts of personal violence upon colored men within the last two years?—A. I think there have been occasional instances of that kind, and I think there have been on the other side a great deal of house-burning, gin-burning, and barn-burning.

Q. I did not ask you for that.—A. Well, I want to tell you all that strikes me in that connection when you ask me about these acts.

Q. Do you know any instances where white men have committed outrages upon colored men, not amounting to murder, where they have been punished as the acts deserved?—A. I remember one case to have come before me in the city of Greenville, and I punished the man pretty severely and inflicted a fine upon him. It was for shooting at a colored man, but he did not hit him. He shot at the colored man, and I imprisoned him for six months, I think, and inflicted a fine of fifty or seventy-five dollars on him. He was a man in very moderate circumstances, too. I remember another case, in the county of Abbeville, where a white man took occasion to chastise a colored boy, and I put the white man in jail. Those are really the only two cases of that character that ever came before me in my circuit that I remember now; but there have been numberless cases of that kind occurred, and almost invariably between the colored people themselves. I suppose nine-tenths of litigation in the courts of sessions in my circuit has been among the colored people.

Q. Is it not notorious in this State that you cannot get grand juries to indict white men or juries to convict white men for crimes committed against colored men?—A. I cannot speak for the State, but I can speak for my circuit; and I don't think it will hold good there. In one or two counties in my circuit, the juries have been largely composed of colored people, and I have thought frequently that they should have rendered verdicts of guilty where they have rendered verdicts of not guilty where they were charged with the trial of persons of their own color. I have been impressed with that idea especially in the county of Abbeville, and I have felt the same thing here in Richland County, where I held one court last May for Judge Carpenter. I felt the same thing three years ago or more in Camden, in Kershaw County. In my own circuit, with the exception of one or two cases in Abbeville, I think there has been no inclination to shirk the responsibility of a juror, either petit or grand.

Q. Have you read the letter of Governor Chamberlain, dated October 4, 1876, to Colonel Haskell?—A. I think I did read it, to a large extent; I don't know that I read the whole of it.

Q. Have you noticed the evidence which he presents in that letter, copied from democratic newspapers and resolutions of democratic meetings, of a purpose on the part of white men owning lands to proscribe colored men in case they voted the republican ticket?—A. It strikes me that I have noticed it.

Q. Could the circulation of newspapers among the people of the State containing such evidence as he presents fail to create an impression among the colored people that if they did vote the republican ticket they would be in danger of losing their employment and the lands which they occupied?—A. I cannot say whether it would or would not. I know this much: that the colored people, as a general thing, don't read newspapers, and if they were informed that such would be the result of their voting, I would presume that they received their information direct from the lips of some person or persons. I expect, though, that it would have the effect you say upon those who do read.

Q. Where there is a state of public opinion which tolerates newspapers and resolutions of that character, the colored people could not fail to be apprised of that purpose on the part of land-owners and employers, could they?—A. I suppose not, to some extent, but I cannot tell to what extent. As a general thing, the meetings which are referred to there, at which those resolutions were passed, I don't suppose were attended by any colored people. It was early in the organization of the campaign, and I would undertake to say there were not many colored people there.

Q. You made a speech in front of the hotel in which we are now sitting since this committee has been in Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of the disturbance at that meeting. Do you regard that as a serious disturbance?—A. No, sir; you are mistaken, I didn't speak of the disturbance occurring at that meeting; I spoke of a disturbance that occurred here about the 25th of September last. I did not see anything in the nature of a disturbance at the meeting that you refer to.

Q. Did you make a speech at that meeting in September?—A. The interruption that I spoke of occurred at that meeting.

Q. How were you disturbed at that meeting?—A. By the hallooing and whooping and hurraing of the colored people across the street, hurraing for Chamberlain.

Q. The meeting was in the street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the disturbance such as to prevent the meeting from going on?—A. Yes; I thought at one time that in all probability they would succeed in getting up a row, but the marshal came up, and after a while he succeeded in stopping it; so I was told by him.

Q. And so the meeting went on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have attended a great many democratic meetings this campaign. Do you know any instance where any republican has interfered with any democrat?—A. I remember, in the town of Beaufort, that Mr. Youmans was interfered with, and a Mr. Gibbs, both claiming to be democrats, and I claiming to be a republican. No one of the three of us could speak satisfactorily.

Q. The interruption was merely by noise, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; a determination not to allow us to speak.

Q. You don't know of any personal violence being inflicted by any republican upon any democrat at any democratic meeting?—A. I don't think so; only a general determination to prevent our speaking.

Q. I ask you whether you know of any personal violence inflicted by republicans at any democratic meeting in the State?—A. O, I saw no violence there or anywhere else that I remember of now. I only witnessed that which I thought might possibly lead to violence if great caution was not had.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know whether the prosecuting officers in the different parts of this State, up to this last election, and the county and State officers, were or were not all appointees of Governor Chamberlain?—A. All the trial-justices are appointed by him. They try all petty cases, both civil and criminal. All of them are his appointees except the solicitor, who prosecutes in the court of general sessions.

Q. Do the prosecuting-officers generally belong to the republican party?—A. I should say that they did. With the exception of the solicitor in one or two of the counties, I think every solicitor in the State was a republican up to this last election.

Q. How was it with the county officers?—A. All the trial-justices were the appointees of the governor, and as a general thing republicans. In some cases I think he appointed democrats.

Q. How was it with the judges of the court up to the commencement of the campaign; did they belong to the republican party?—A. With the exception of Judge Maher and Judge Townsend and Judge Shaw, all the judges were republicans. I so regarded them, and those judges I have mentioned were considered very conservative men.

The chairman announced that the hour agreed upon for the final adjournment here had arrived.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I must request of the committee permission to introduce further testimony. I have read to the chairman and Judge Abbott what I propose to prove.

Here the committee adjourned to Washington.

WASHINGTON, January 22, 1877.

WILLIAM BEVERLY NASH (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am 51 years old; I reside in Columbia, S. C.

Q. For what office were you a candidate at the election held in South Carolina on the 7th of November last?—A. I was a candidate for presidential elector.

Q. Did you vote in the electoral college for President?—A. I did.

Q. For whom?—A. I voted for Mr. Hayes for President and Mr. Wheeler for Vice-President.

Q. State in your own way what propositions, if any, were made to you in regard to your vote as elector, by offer or promise of money or other valuable things.—A. To understand it, I will have to tell you the circumstances: I had an interview with Colonel Childs with regard to the organization of the legislature; that was the week previous to the time when the electors were to meet—I can't say exactly what day; I met him at the Carolina National Bank, and General Hampton was there also, and we had a conversation.

Q. What is this Mr. Childs's first name?—A. L. D. Childs. In the senate of my State I took a position different to most of the republicans; I was favorable to seating the democratic senators elected, as I thought, from the counties of Edgefield and Abbeville.

Q. You are a member of the State senate of South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been a member?—A. Since 1863. After that conversation Colonel Childs called at my house. I was not there, but my wife told me he had been there to see me in his carriage, and had left word for me to come and see him; this was on Monday, I think; I am not certain about that, but at any rate it was the day before we met to cast the electoral vote. When I went home in the morning my wife told me that Colonel Childs's servant had come there to see me and said that Colonel Childs was very ill, and for me to come around and see him. I had had some banking transactions with him all along, and I didn't know what he wanted to see me about. I went to his house, and I found that he was not ill; he was up and dressed, but he said he did not feel very well, and his health has been bad for some time. In that conversation he was commending my course with regard to the admission of the democratic senators from Abbeville and Edgefield, and he then asked me if I couldn't get three senators on our side—the republican side—to join me in seating Mr. Maxwell from Abbeville, and General Gary from Edgefield, and also the senator-elect, as he said, from Laurens. I was opposed to seating the one from Laurens, but in favor of seating the other two. Mr. Childs then said that $20,000 was placed in his hands by some gentlemen from Charleston, I don't know whether he said bankers or lawyers—

The CHAIRMAN. I shall object to inserting in our record any statement that pertains to the question of the State organization.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is all connected together.

The WITNESS. He then said he would give me $20,000 if I would get three senators to join with me. I told him I couldn't do it, that I had no influence with those men, and wouldn't do so; I told him that I myself would vote so, because I had already said so on the floor of the senate, but I would not attempt to influence any one else. He insisted on my not deciding positively, and after awhile I said I must go, because I had got to meet the electors for the purpose of organizing to vote to-morrow. Says he, "Yes, that is another subject that I want to talk to you about; I can get you $10,000, and $40,000 when it is consummated, if you cast your vote for Tilden."

Q. For President?—A. For President of the United States. That I declined to do. That is all that transpired between us.

Q. When was it that you had this conversation with him?—A. That was the day before the electoral vote was cast. We had to meet that day for the purpose of electing a chairman and secretary of the college of electors.

Q. This conversation was on the same day that you met to organize the college of electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been acquainted with Mr. Childs?—A. A good many years—ever since he went to Columbia.

Q. What business is he engaged in now?—A. He is a banker. He first engaged in manufacturing. He is the president of the Carolina National Bank.

Q. State whether you transacted your banking business in his bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been doing business with him?—A. I suppose since 1869.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. I understand you that Colonel Childs did not make you any offer, but simply said that he could get certain money for you?—A. When I made the remark that I had to go to attend the meeting of the electors, he said that was a matter that he wanted to talk about, and he said that he would, or could—I don't know which word he used—get me $10,000 if I would cast my vote for Tilden, and $40,000 more when the matter was consummated.

Q. When what matter was consummated?—A. When he knew that I had voted.

Q. The $10,000 was to be given when?—A. There at once.

Q. You mean to say that he told you he could get $10,000 for you down, upon your agreeing to vote, before you had voted or done anything at all in the matter?—A. Yes, sir; he said to me that would make $30,000—that was in connection with the other matter.

Q. But the $40,000 that he was to give you is what I am after now?—A. Well, he was to give me $10,000 right down, and $40,000 when the matter was consummated.

Q. What answer did you make to that?—A. I told him I couldn't do it and wouldn't do it.

Q. You told him you really would not do it?—A. I told him I would not do it.

Q. What reason did you give him for not doing it?—A. He didn't ask me any reason.

Q. But didn't you give him a reason? He said to you, as I understand, "Now, I will give you $10,000 if you promise to vote for him, and $40,000 if you do vote?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him you really could not do it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when you said, "I cannot do that," what reason did you give?—A. Well, I don't recollect that I gave him any reason. I told him I wouldn't do it; I don't recollect saying to him "I can't do it," for such and such reasons; but I know that I refused to do it.

Q. Did you leave immediately?—A. Yes, sir. He asked me to meet him that night at eight o'clock, and I told him finally I should try to meet him.

Q. You agreed to meet him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you meet him?—A. No, sir; I never had any such conversation with him any more.

Q. But you agreed to meet him again?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You parted with him on good terms?—A. Yes, sir; perfectly friendly, and are friendly now.

Q. You were then doing your banking business with him?—A. Yes, sir. When I had money I generally deposited it in Mr. Childs's bank.

Q. And you have continued to deposit with him?—A. No, sir; I haven't had anything to deposit since; but if I had it I would do it either with that bank or the other.

Q. Then this matter has not altered your relations with Mr. Childs?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. There was nothing in it that impressed itself on your mind so as to alter your relations with him?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. They remain precisely the same that they had been up to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You were originally a slave?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And continued so up to what time?—A. Until Sherman came to Columbia. I followed the Army from Columbia.

C. B. BARR, the assistant sergeant-at-arms who accompanied the committee to South Carolina, called and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State whether Col. L. D. Childs was summoned to appear before this committee while it was in session in Columbia, S. C.—Answer. He was.

Q. At what time was the subpoena served on him?—A. I think on the 26th of December. It was served by either Mr. Hamilton or Mr. Morris.

Q. Did he appear before the committee?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What reason was assigned for his not appearing?—A. Indisposition; that he was confined to his room. That was the reason, as near as I remember.

Q. Was the return made by the officer who served the subpoena, that Colonel Childs did not appear because he was unwell?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. It was that he was more than unwell—that he was confined to his room?—A. That was it, as I remember.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Has he been served with a subpoena to appear here since the committee's return to Washington?—A. He has been served with a subpoena to appear here. He was also telegraphed to, and I remember that the reply was that he would come as soon as he was able.

WILLIAM B. NASH recalled and further examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Did you see Colonel Childs while this committee was in session in Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he out of his house?—A. Yes, sir; I met him in the bank.

Q. How frequently did you meet him in the bank?—A. I only recollect one day. I recollect having a conversation with him; I think it was a week before your committee came away, or during the same week that you left Columbia.

Q. You were served with a subpoena to appear before the committee?—A. No, sir; I was personally requested to come.

Q. And you refused to come on a personal request to come?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State if this paper which I now show you is a copy of the Greenville Daily Union, a paper published in your State?—A. Yes, sir; at Greenville Court-House.

Q. How far is that from Columbia?—A. One hundred and forty-three and one-half miles by rail.

Mr. Lawrence offered to put in evidence an extract from the newspaper identified by the witness. The chairman objected, and the extract was not admitted.

The chairman put in evidence the following paper which he said had been forwarded to him by Mr. L. D. Childs, of Columbia, with a statement that he would probably be in Washington within ten days from date of his letter, January 17, 1877.

Mr. Lawrence objected to the admission of the paper on the ground that it was not sworn to. Objection overruled.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
County of Richland :

I hereby certify that L. D. Childs, esq., has been unable to travel for the past ten days on account of ill health; and from the nature of his complaint I am able to certify that he will not be able to travel for the next ensuing ten days.

A. W. KENNEDY, M. D.

COLUMBIA, S. C., January 17, 1877.

To HON. MILTON SAYLER,
Chairman of House Investigating Committee on South Carolina Affairs.

I certify that Dr. A. W. Kennedy is a respectable practicing physician in the city of Columbia, S. C.

JNO. B. MILLER, C. C. P.

WASHINGTON, January 22, 1877.

RICHARD T. GREENER (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age and where do you reside?—Answer. My age is thirty-two; I reside in Columbia, S. C.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. I am professor in the University of South Carolina.

Q. What part did you take in the recent political campaign in that State?—A. I was one of the speakers assigned to the third congressional district.

Q. Where did you make speeches?—A. At Newberry Court-House, at Abbeville, at Anderson, at Walhalla, at Greenville, at Pickens, at Laurens, at Newberry again, at Columbia, and at Lexington.

Q. For which party did you speak?—A. I spoke in behalf of the electors for Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. What did you see at those meetings, or at any of them, of armed men, or of any intimidation, interruption, or violence?—A. At Newberry, when we arrived there, we found quite a number of colored people, I should think about a thousand, assembled at the depot to receive us; we went to the rooms of the local committee, and we found that the square in front of the court-house, from the steps of which (or from the platform above) we expected to speak, was entirely occupied by the mounted men known as "red-shirts." There were, I should think, about eighteen hundred of them in the square. They had banners with the usual political devices—banners with the names of Hampton and Simpson, and they were drawn up directly in front of the court-house. The colored people were on the outside and upon the right, completely crowded out from the front; but after a while we had a consultation as to whether we had better try to have the meeting in front of the court-house or adjourn to some other place; part of the local leaders being in favor of adjourning, and seeming to be very much frightened. We finally concluded to go out to the court-house steps. We went out there, and managed with some difficulty to get up through the throng of colored people who crowded the steps. That was about the only place they had there; that and up on the portico in front, which was rather high. After getting up there, several of the democratic leaders, General Pope for one, a lawyer of Newberry, came up, and I asked him to move his men back, so that the colored people could get in front of the place so that we could speak to them from the steps. He very courteously said he would try to do so, but that he was not in command, but that Colonel Lipecomb was in command. I felt rather indignant at their taking up so much room, and I probably spoke rather sharply about it, and told them that they ought to crowd back, but they would not do it; they were making considerable noise, both the people and their leaders. The conspicuous persons were Colonel Lipecomb for one, and Mr. D. Wyatt Aiken, the candidate for Congress on the democratic ticket for that district; he seemed to be quite noisy; he was gesticulating and telling us we were to have a joint discussion. It seems that some of the local leaders, being fearful that we should have a tumult, had agreed—I don't know that they had agreed, but that was the presumption I had—to have a joint discussion, and arrangements for a joint discussion were then pending between the republican and the democratic committees; but we had been instructed not to have any joint discussion, the fear being that it would give rise to a collision. We told them that we couldn't have a joint discussion, and upon that Colonel Lipecomb said that we had broken faith with them, and declined to move his men back. He said he'd be damned if he would move them back. He seemed to be very much excited. Finally, after considerable delay, we started our meeting at the right of the portico; we spoke from the right-hand end to the crowd of colored people, who, according to our advice, had massed themselves there, so that we could speak to them. The entire square beyond, and the windows and every available space, was filled by the white people of the town and these red-shirts, who had come in from the different counties. Mr. Taft spoke for about a half an hour, I should think. That was the length of time he was speaking, but he was interrupted most of the time. Some of the men were drunk evidently, and they were cursing us pretty roundly.

Q. While you were speaking?—A. Yes, sir; while he was speaking. After he had finished I spoke, or tried to. Just as I began to speak, Colonel Aiken, who had been standing theretofore, was told to get up on horseback, by a colored man who was near him, and he took a seat directly in front of me on his horse. While speaking I was interrupted with such phrases as that it was "a damned radical lie;" that I was "a radical liar," and so on. There was so much interruption that I couldn't proceed. Being very anxious to speak, however, I took it good humoredly. I laughed and waited until they got through interrupting me, and then I went on again. Finally, one man told me to take off my glasses, and accordingly I did so, telling him that I could speak without them, and thereupon he told me that I could go on; but I was interrupted so much by the cries all around from the men on horseback and some in the windows, that I finally stopped and waited again. A third time, when I began, some one in the crowd asked me, "What about Joe Crews?" Joe Crews was a republican leader in Laurens, who was killed in September, 1875. I had intended not to answer any interruptions of that kind; but, as they asked me that question, I answered that I believed he was murdered by democratic bullets. That incensed them very much, and there was a great deal of confusion. Colonel Lipscomb and Colonel White stood up on their horses and shook their fists at me and told me that I was lying and that I knew I was lying; and Colonel Lipscomb asked me why I made such a statement as that? I told him I made it because I believed it. He asked me if I didn't know that the matter was in the courts at that time, and that it was not certain whether republicans or democrats had killed him. I replied that I didn't know; that that was the first time I had ever heard of any dispute on the subject, and that was the reason I asserted it.

I spoke but very little longer after that. When I had concluded I found that quite a crowd of these "red-shirted" men—twenty or thirty of them, armed with something like pikes or staves—came up the steps and took their places on the platform. They were led by a man who came from Abbeville County, whose name I do not remember. I went up to him and asked him what those men were doing. He replied that he was up there as much to protect my life as anybody's, and he would not go down from the platform. I staid there awhile. Colonel Pope's brother came up afterwards and I met him and a son of Mr. Pelham, the editor of the Register, in Columbia. Mr. Pope was very angry with me because I had made a statement that in former times there had been a property qualification for white voters in South Carolina before reconstruction, and he told me that I knew it was not true. I told him that I had it from very good authority and I presumed it was true. Mr. Pelham's son was also very angry with me. He said that I had stated that the democrats had put no colored men on their ticket. I told him that I had not so stated; that I had merely said that they had put none on the State ticket. He said I knew that a colored man was put on the ticket in Richland County. I told him I knew that. He was very angry with me and shook his fist at me and told me I knew I was telling a lie. At last, I found that Mr. Carpenter, who had commenced speaking after I had finished, had concluded and gone, and that I was up there alone. Meanwhile quite a crowd of colored people had collected. One or two of my students, who live at Newberry, came to me and begged me to go away, as they were afraid there would be violence. I went down the steps amid the jeers of the men on horseback, who were cursing me, and when I got to the bottom of the steps Colonel Lipscomb was so very near that I could not get around without pushing against his horse, and he was gesticulating to me so that I supposed he wanted to speak to me. I leaned forward and asked him what he wanted, and he began again to accuse us of bad faith in breaking our promise to have a joint discussion. I told him I had not promised anything of the kind, but that so far as I was concerned I was perfectly ready for a joint discussion, and had always been in favor of it; with that I went off to the room of the committee, in the same square, and I staid there during the day. The other members of the party went down to Columbia; they were afraid to stay there.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was that meeting called as a republican meeting or as a meeting for joint discussion?—A. It was called as a republican meeting for the 16th of October. After the republican meeting was through the democrats held a meeting. From the window where I was, in the square, I could see the crowd gathering, and hear them cheering, but I could not see the speakers. I heard afterward that Colonel Aiken and Mr. Lipscomb spoke. During the day, while seated at the window, there were two or three rows in the streets between the drunken members of the democratic party. I saw two men knocked down by members of their own party, and the colored people, after our meeting adjourned, got away as quickly as possible, although there were a few of them standing around nearly all day.

Q. From whom did the interruptions of your meetings come?—A. They came from the men on horseback, and their leaders.

Q. The red-shirt men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent were they armed?—A. Some of them were armed; I didn't see arms generally.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. What do you mean by armed—pistols?—A. Yes, sir; pistols, and guns in some instances.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. State whether the colored people were armed?—A. I saw no colored people with arms at all.

Q. Proceed and state what occurred at other places.—A. We left Newberry the next morning for Abbeville. On the way to Abbeville, at nearly every station, men would come into the cars and inquire for "Chlory," as they called Mr. Carpenter, and walk through the car.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What Mr. Carpenter was that?—A. L. Cass Carpenter, a former member of Congress and a candidate for Congress at the time. There was a party of about six or eight of us. These people would come through the car and make remarks about, cheering for Hampton, as usual, and very often cursing Governor Chamberlain. At one station a man with a wooden leg, I think, or else he had been hurt so that he stumped as he walked, came in with two pistols in his vest and one in his belt. He sat on the seat directly in front of Mr. Carpenter, and glared at him, and looked over at me where I was sitting, on the opposite side, and quite a crowd collected at the door and jeered at us and called us all sorts of names, and finally asked, "Had we better take him out, or had we better light the cars with his red hair;" but they offered no other violence. By the time we got to Hodges Station we began to expect this at every station. From Hodges Station the cars go on direct for Greenville, and we had to change to go to Abbeville. When we arrived there the turbulence had reached its height. The car was taken entire possession of by the crowd, so much so that I could not get inside at all, but had to stay on the platform. Mr. Carpenter seemed to be the main object of their wrath. They called us, as usual, by those epithets, and abused us all pretty generally for being damned radicals, and for about half or three-quarters of an hour it was about as near pandemonium as anything I have ever seen. Finally we went from there to Abbeville. At Abbeville we found that notice of the meeting had circulated about and the colored people were very much frightened, and we had considerable doubt whether they would come out to the meeting or not. It seems they were frightened because Governor Chamberlain had been up there during the summer before the convention and there had been considerable interruption. They were afraid that the red-shirts were coming in from the different counties, which was the usual programme, and they were fearful of having a row. They also said that the democrats wanted to have a joint discussion as usual. That always was the plea. We told them that we could not have a joint discussion; that we had concluded to have our meeting by ourselves, and so we had it on what is called the colored people's fair-ground; that was a private place belonging to them entirely where they could not be interrupted, and besides there were United States troops there that day, and we had the officer with us. The troops were not directly on the ground, but they were within half a mile. During the morning the red-shirts came galloping into the town from all quarters, and by the time we had the meeting begun I should think there were about 2,500 of them. When they found that we were not going to have a joint discussion they were rather indignant, and they had a meeting by themselves. Our meeting at the colored fair-ground consisted of about 3,000 people, and all the members of our party spoke without interruption. There were not more than two or three white men there outside of our own party. After the meeting was over we held a council of war, and we concluded that it was best not to go back to Hodges Station.

Mr. ABBOTT. It is not necessary for you to state what you concluded among yourselves.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was that meeting called as a republican meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had there been any call for a democratic meeting on that day?—A. Not that I know of. We went from there to Anderson. We rode across the country twenty-two miles. It was a very rainy day, and we reached Anderson about six o'clock at night. As we come into town we could hear the cheering and hurrahing that we had begun to get used to by that time, and we found that some of the red-shirts were already coming in, to be on hand for the meeting next morning. Next morning we went to the hotel to make arrangements for the meeting which we expected to have in the courthouse, and we found that a great many of the red-shirts had collected, and we understood that their intention was, when the doors were open, to crowd in and take possession.

sion of the court-house first; and, fearing that there would be some collision in that way, we decided to hold our meeting at what was called the Greeley Institute, a colored school about a quarter of a mile from town. We held our meeting there, the democrats holding theirs at the fair-ground. They sent two or three of their men to picket the road in front of our building, so as to keep their people, who were drunk or disorderly, from coming and interrupting us, and one or two of their leaders were there to hear the speeches, and the reporters were there to take down our speeches. We all spoke, and had no interruption. As we were going to the depot that evening quite a number of them followed us down, and stood about and talked rather saucily to us. Colonel Aiken was there; I saw him, and knew him. He had nothing to say, of course. We went from there to Walhalla. There we found that they come down as usual to demand a division of time, which we refused.

Q. Was the meeting at Walhalla called as a republican meeting?—A. Yes, sir; all these were set meetings, regularly appointed and advertised.

Q. Had there been any democratic meeting called there that day?—A. Not that I know of, sir; they simply knew that we were going to have our meeting at that time, because it had been published in the papers. At that meeting there was considerable interruption. I spoke first. I was speaking in front of the court-house, and I was interrupted very often with rather opprobrious epithets, jeers, and interruptions. While I was speaking one of the men who interrupted me, and who had been in the front, went around to the back of the building, and drew his pistol to shoot me. He was prevented from doing so by Mr. Bryce, the postmaster of the town, and Mr. Carpenter, who were inside. After the meeting was over our party separated. We were to meet at Bryce's house; it was a quarter of a mile off, and to get there we had to go up a hill. I was surrounded by a large number of the cavalry of the democrats, and my friends were rather fearful for me and thought I had better not go in among them, but I said I was not afraid, I guessed they would not trouble me; and so I went up the hill talking with them on the way and discussing the political situation. They treated me very pleasantly, but asked me a great many pointed questions, which I tried to answer as well as I could, and finally we reached the top of the hill, where my friends were waiting for me, and I got out of the crowd and went off. That evening we drove to Westminster Station; we didn't go by railroad, the usual route, fearing that we might have trouble, as there had been a circus at the station that day, and we feared there might have been a number of drunken men about, and that they, knowing who we were, might give us trouble. We drove over to Westminster, and went from there to Greenville. We spent the Sunday in Greenville, and on Monday we went over to Pickens Court-House, which is up in the mountains. We drove in a carriage some twenty miles. When we arrived within three miles of Pickens we found about twelve hundred red-shirts drawn up in line on both sides of the road to receive us. We rode through them in rather grim silence; no cheers were given and not a word said. They looked, I thought, rather fierce, and evidently desired to impress us with their array. We went to the office of the auditor and made arrangements for having a public meeting there. I was to speak first. I had been speaking, I should think, about five minutes when there was a yell heard, and we found that they began galloping up in front of us. Finally these mounted men rode up and formed, in some places five and six deep, in a semi-circle, right around the table upon which I was speaking, which was placed in front of the door; they were commanded, I judged, by the senator from that county, Mr. Bowen. I recognized him, as I was used to seeing him in the senate at Columbia. He seemed to give the orders, and they seemed to obey him pretty generally. I was interrupted from the beginning of my speech. I was told to get down off the platform; that no damned nigger should speak there; and finally some one asked me a question about the Freedman's Bank, and I retorted by bringing up the bank in Columbia that had failed, and of which General Hampton was one of the directors. One man then became very much incensed and drew his revolver upon me, but he was kept quiet by Colonel Bowen, and finally he was pulled off his horse. He was very noisy and turbulent; I think his name was Holcomb. He was afterward arrested. Mr. Clyde, to whom I was afterward introduced, was also very noisy and interrupted me a good deal. He said he wanted my photograph to frighten the rats away. I told him I did not have one with me, but I thought if he could get his own it would prove more efficacious. He took that very good humoredly and said I might speak on. I continued to speak. One man at my right kept cheering for Jefferson Davis. I told him that was the first time I had heard that cheer, but I supposed there were some who could give it with their hearts in it. I occupied about half an hour I think, and really I didn't speak more than ten or fifteen minutes. I finally gave way to Mr. Carpenter, who had I think, if anything, worse luck than I had.

Q. Were you able to make as much of a speech as you desired to make there?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. From whom did the interruptions come?—A. They came from those mounted men who were in front of us.

Q. Democrats?—A. Democrats, I presume.

Q. What was the length of your speeches, ordinarily, when not interrupted?—A.

At Anderson, where I was not interrupted, I spoke an hour and a quarter, and said all I wished to say.

Q. To what extent were the democrats armed at this last meeting you have described?—A. I saw only two or three with pistols. This man who was pulled off his horse drew a pistol. We presumed that all of them were armed, but I saw only three or four have arms. We were afraid to go back by the same road by which we came. It is a very mountainous road, and that is a famous illicit-whisky-distilling district, and Mr. Carpenter was the internal-revenue collector, and that probably added to the complications. These men had followed us in large numbers, and they appeared to be so indignant, that we were rather afraid to go back by the same road, so we took another. Mr. Barton, the deputy collector, who has since been wounded in an affray with the distillers, went back with our party. We were also accompanied by about twenty or thirty men who rode along with us, some in front and some behind our carriage, jeering at us, burrahing for Hampton, asking us to come back and have another meeting, &c. We took the cars and went to Greenville, and had a meeting there that night in the court-house. I spoke there, and the next day, Tuesday, we started for Laurens. We went from Greenville to Clinton. At Clinton we were to take the cars for Laurens. I was the only member of the original party left by that time—the only one who was a speaker; we had two United States deputy marshals with us.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You don't mean that they had shot and killed all the rest of them?—A. No, sir; but some of them had pressing engagements at home. At Clinton we took the cars for Laurens. The cars go only within nine miles of Laurens. When we reached the place where they stopped we found that there was an escort of some twenty colored men who had come down to escort our party up to the court-house. It is rather a lonely road, the same road on which Mr. Joe Crews was killed. There had been a great deal of trouble a Laurens, and we really expected to find it the worst place during the campaign. Mr. T. J. Minton, who is the book-keeper of the State treasurer, and a friend of mine, a colored gentleman, met us at that point. He came to assist in the speaking. We reached Laurens about nine o'clock that evening, and, with the local men there, made an arrangement for the meeting that morning. They were very much afraid that we were going to have trouble; there had been considerable turbulence about there and we found that they were very much frightened. There were troops there at the time and some of the local people said they were afraid to go out unless the troops came upon the ground. The next morning we found that the colored people of the surrounding county had begun to gather in the same way that the democrats had done, and they rode into the town on horseback to the number, I should think, of 800 or 1,000; they galloped by the house where we were stopping and cheered us, and when the time to have the meeting arrived, part of them escorted us up to the ground. In the mean time the democrats had assembled also; I should think there were from two thousand to two thousand five hundred of them; they could be seen in all parts of the town, with banners and mottoes and flags—various flags—the American flag, and in one instance the confederate flag, or at least a flag that looked very much like it; I don't know whether it was intended for the confederate flag or not. Our meeting began. It was held on an open lot, and there were, I should think, two thousand people in all, including the mounted men. While I was speaking the red-shirts filed up in front of me—they were about a square and a half off—cheering for Hampton, but didn't offer to interrupt us in any way. Three or four came over and stood and listened to our speakers. I spoke first, Minton followed me, and General Dennis also made a short speech. From Laurens we decided to go back to Newberry. Our first meeting there having proved a failure through interruptions, it had been decided by the executive committee to have another meeting, and the next day we started for Newberry and arrived on Wednesday. We held our meeting at the colored school-house. Mr. Tomlinson, Mr. Carpenter, Adjutant-General Purvis, and Mr. Thomas, a representative from Newberry, were there to speak. The other gentlemen came up from Columbia. We all spoke, and had a very successful meeting; the colored people were out, and there were no interruptions at all on the part of the democrats. I also spoke at Columbia on the next Friday at a public meeting. Of course it is always peaceful in Columbia, and we had no interruption there. I spoke also in Lexington, and we had a very successful meeting there in the court-house. That completes the list of places at which I spoke.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of citizens of Georgia being in South Carolina at the election?—A. I don't exactly understand what you mean; voting there, do you mean?

Q. Yes, voting there.—A. I don't know of any voting there.

Q. At these meetings, all of them of which you have spoken, state to what extent the democrats were armed.—A. I think it was their policy not to show any arms; but very often I should say that at least one-third of them were armed.

Mr. ABBOTT: Confine yourself to what you saw, not what you suspected.

A. Yes, sir. Everybody went armed about there.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. At how many of those meetings did you have an opportunity to speak all that you desired; in other words, to what extent were you prevented from speaking as fully as you wished?—A. I had an opportunity of speaking at four of them as fully and freely as I would wish. At the others I was interrupted and kept from speaking as fully and as freely as I should have spoken if I had been assured that I would not be molested either while there or going or returning.

Q. Are you acquainted with W. H. Hurd, a member of the legislature from Abbeville?—A. Yes, sir; he was a student of mine for the past two years.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Two years.

Q. What is his reputation for truth and veracity?

Mr. Abbott objected to the question. Decision reserved.

Q. State whether you received any letter or telegram from Hurd, from the State of Georgia; and, if so, when, and where the letter or telegram came from.

Mr. ABBOTT. I will not object to the letter, but the telegram is of no significance.

A. I received a letter from Mr. Hurd, dated Abbeville, November 15, 1876, the envelope of which bears a postmark of the same date. I received a telegram from W. H. Hurd, which I now produce, which is dated Augusta, Ga., November 22, 1876, and is addressed to me at Columbia, S. C. I had corresponded with him all along. He was at the Abbeville meeting; he was one of those who come there from the precinct.

Q. If there is any other fact or matter that you know which is pertinent to this investigation, you may state it.—A. The fact of the intimidation and of the trouble we experienced going to Charleston.

Mr. ABBOTT. That is outside this investigation; it is after the election.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Your first meeting was at Newberry, as I understand you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you were there you understood that there was a negotiation going on in reference to a joint discussion?—A. During the time I was there.

Q. Before you got there you understood there had been an agreement for a joint discussion?—A. No, sir; there had been no agreement. I can state briefly how it was.

Q. I want to know whether you understood or not that there had been an agreement for a joint discussion.—A. No, sir; I did not understand it.

Q. The claim was made by Colonel Lipscomb that there had been an agreement for a joint discussion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you refused to admit a joint discussion, his claim was that faith had been broken with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was angry at the breach of faith, as he claimed?—A. That is what appeared to be the fact.

Q. And that claim was repeatedly made, that faith had been broken with the other side in reference to a joint discussion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a claim made against you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your reply was that you had not refused, and that you were not to blame?—A. I was entirely in favor of it.

Q. Do you know whether there had or had not been in point of fact a democratic meeting arranged at the same time at the same place?—A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You simply know nothing about it?—A. I know nothing about it.

Q. And that is so with reference to the other meeting, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether there had been a democratic meeting arranged or not, you have no means of knowing?—A. No, sir.

Q. During all this time you were not harmed in any way, you or any of your party?—A. No, sir, there was no actual violence done us.

Q. Your trouble consisted in these interruptions and opprobrious epithets and threats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But in point of fact no attack was made upon you or any of your party?—A. No, sir.

The following questions and answers were taken conditionally, subject to the decision of the chairman as to their admissibility.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How long have you been acquainted with Hurd?—A. Two years.

Q. Do you have the means of knowing his general reputation for truth and veracity?—A. It is that of a truthful and trustworthy young man in every respect. While he has been at the university he has always maintained a good character as a good, faithful, diligent young man.

Mr. ABBOTT. [To the witness.] The question is simply as to his reputation for truth and veracity.—The WITNESS. Well, he has always maintained that; it never has been questioned to my knowledge.

Q. You knew him as a student during that time?—A. Yes, sir.

JOURNAL OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 5, 1876.

The House committee, authorized by Mr. Hewitt's resolution to investigate the election of the presidential electors in the State of South Carolina, met in the room of the Committee on the Public Lands, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The following members were present: Hon. Milton Saylor, of Ohio; Hon. J. G. Abbott, of Massachusetts; Hon. W. S. Stenger, of Pennsylvania; Hon. J. R. Eden, of Illinois; Hon. T. L. Jones, of Kentucky; Hon. J. F. Phillips, of Missouri; Hon. N. P. Banks, of Massachusetts; Hon. E. G. Lapham, of New York; Hon. William Lawrence, of Ohio.

Mr. Stenger resigned his position on the committee, and Hon. A. G. Cochrane, of Pennsylvania, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

On motion, the committee determined to leave, Wednesday, December 6th, instant, for Columbia, S. C.

Allen O. Myers was appointed by the chairman as chief clerk of the committee, and his appointment was confirmed by the committee.

Mr. C. B. Barr was appointed deputy sergeant at-arms of the committee, and J. B. McCormick was named as his assistant.

On motion of Mr. Lawrence the chairman was authorized to procure two competent stenographers, and more, if necessary.

The committee adjourned to meet at 11 a. m. Wednesday, December 6.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1876.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

A full attendance, and Mr. Saylor in the chair.

The committee determined to leave at 5.20 p. m. for South Carolina.

On motion, an additional stenographer was employed.

The committee adjourned subject to call.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Friday, December 8, 1876.

The committee convened at 11 a. m., at the call of the chairman.

There was a full attendance, and Mr. Saylor in the chair.

The chairman was instructed to procure copies of all the proceedings in the disputed elections, both before the board of State canvassers and the supreme court.

A communication was laid before the committee from Mr. J. C. Sheppard, chairman of a committee appointed by the democratic house of the South Carolina legislature, to aid the committee in its investigation of the elections, as follows:

Hon. MILTON SAYLER,
Chairman Congressional Committee:

MY DEAR SIR: The house of representatives of South Carolina appointed a committee to communicate and co-operate with your committee touching any investigation you may institute in reference to the organization of the general assembly of South Carolina. Do me the honor to indicate at what time and place it will be the pleasure of your body to confer with said committee, and we will adapt ourselves to your convenience.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

J. C. SHEPPARD, Chairman.

MANSION HOUSE, Friday Morning.

The communication was laid on the table.

Mr. Lawrence moved that the chairman be authorized to procure from the secretary of state certified copies of the certificates of election, the proceedings of the State board of canvassers, and the returns of the precinct managers. Carried.

H. Mis. 31, pt. 1—30

On motion, Messrs. Eden, Jones, and Lawrence were appointed a committee to secure rooms for the use of the committee in taking testimony.

On motion, Messrs. Abbott and Banks were authorized to act with the chairman in procuring documents ordered by the committee.

The committee adjourned to meet Saturday, December 9, at 10 o'clock a. m.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Saturday, December 9, 1876.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Saylor in the chair, and a full attendance.

On motion, the Sheppard communication was taken from the table and referred to a subcommittee—Messrs. Philips, Eden, and Banks—to frame a suitable reply.

Recess until 3 p. m.

Mr. Philips, from the subcommittee, reported a reply to the Sheppard communication. After some debate and modification, the following was adopted:

ROOMS OF THE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
Columbia, S. C., December 9, 1876.

Hon. J. C. SHEPPARD, Chairman, &c. :

Your communication of Friday morning last, expressing a willingness on the part of a committee represented by you to have been appointed by the house of representatives of South Carolina, to communicate and co-operate with the congressional committee of nine, now in this city, touching any investigation to be instituted in reference to the organization of the general assembly of South Carolina, has been laid before the congressional committee.

I am instructed by the committee to say that, owing to the delicacy of the relation they sustain to the contending parties in this State, and the limitations imposed upon them by the body delegating them, they desire that no act of theirs as such committee should imply a recognition of the validity of either of the acting legislative bodies of this State.

Under the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States sending us hither, we do not feel authorized to enter upon an "investigation in reference to the organization of the general assembly of South Carolina." Our mission is "to investigate recent elections in South Carolina and the action of the returning or canvassing boards in the said State in reference thereto, and to report all the facts essential to an honest return of the votes received by the electors of the said State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and to a fair understanding thereof by the people."

In the line of investigation thus indicated, the committee will be pleased at any time to receive from you any information or assistance you may see fit to offer.

Very respectfully,

MILTON SAYLER,
Chairman Congressional Committee.

The committee adjourned to meet Monday, December 11, at 10 o'clock a. m.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Monday, December 11, 1876.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Richland:

Personally appeared before me W. H. Heard, United States deputy marshal, who upon oath says that while acting as special messenger on Sunday, 19th day of November, 1876, for the purpose of conveying the returns of Calhoun's Mill precinct, Abbeville County, State of South Carolina, for presidential electors, he was set upon by a band of armed men, consisting of Wm. Odd, Eli Thornton, Ed. Mitchell, Bonn. Link, Marion Link, Wm. Dubose, Percy Brown, Thomas Brown, and four or five others, to the said W. H. Heard unknown, and assaulted, fired at at least twelve times by the aforesaid Wm. Odd, Eli Thornton, and others to him unknown, captured, his returns and papers of value taken from him, bound upon horseback, and carried into the State of Georgia, Baker's Ferry, Wilkes County, and then and there let loose, upon the sole promise that he would never again return to the State of South Carolina or have anything whatsoever to do with the election, under the threats of assassination, even if found in the streets of Columbia.

And the aforesaid W. H. Heard further deposes and says that the returns for presidential electors aforesaid taken from him by force and violence were as follows :

For C. C. Bowen .....	467	For S. McGowan .....	247
For John Winsmith .....	467	For Theo. G. Barker .....	247
For T. B. Johnston .....	467	For Wm. Wallace .....	247

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Columbia, December 11, 1876.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original affidavit on file in this office.

[SEAL.]

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County :

F. E. Wilder, on oath, says that he is a citizen of the State of South Carolina, residing in Beaufort County; that he was chairman of the board of canvassers for that county at the recent election; that the said board appointed three managers to conduct the election at Gardner's Corner precinct; that the election for that precinct was held at Sheldon or Sheldon's Mill, which is in said Gardner's Corner precinct, and within one-quarter of a mile from the corner known as Gardner's Corner; and that all elections held at Gardner's Corner precinct for the last eight years have been held at said Sheldon or Sheldon's Mill.

F. E. WILDER.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 7th December, 1876.

JOHN L. LITTLE,
Notary Public, South Carolina.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County :

Robert Smalls, on oath, says that he is a citizen of the State of South Carolina, residing in Beaufort County; that he is well acquainted with the locality of places, and limits of voting-precincts in that county generally; that he is well acquainted with the locality of places in the voting-precinct in that county known as Gardner's Corner precinct, particularly of the places in that precinct where elections have been held for the last eight years; that the election held in that precinct on the 7th day of November instant, was held at a place known as Sheldon or Sheldon's Mill, about one-quarter of a mile from the corner of the Port Royal road and main State road, called Gardner's Corner, and about three miles from the station on the Port Royal Railroad called Sheldon station; and that all the elections held in that precinct since 1868 have been held at said place known as Sheldon.

Deponent further says that there was an election held in 1868 at the corner known as Gardner's Corner, in a store-house then at said corner, but that said store-house has long since been removed from said corner, and that there is no building now at said corner at which an election could properly be held, nor any building whatever between said corner and Sheldon.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County :

F. E. Wilder, on oath, says that he is a citizen of South Carolina, residing in Beaufort County; that he was chairman of the board of commissioners for that county at the election held on the 7th day of November last, and performed his duties as such; that, in the performance of his duties, he had occasion to examine the ballots in the box from Brick Church precinct, in said county, and found that, although the return of the managers of that precinct set forth the vote for candidates for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States as follows :

C. C. Bowen .....	719	T. J. Barker .....	716
John Winsmith .....	719	Samuel McGowan .....	16
T. B. Johnston .....		J. W. Harrington .....	16
Timothy Hurley .....	719	I. I. Ingram .....	16
W. B. Nash .....	719	William Wallace .....	16
Wilson Cooke .....	719	J. H. Irwin .....	16
W. F. Myers .....	719	Robert Aldrich .....	16

yet, in fact, the votes for candidates for electors was as follows :

C. C. Bowen .....	719	T. J. Barker .....	16
John Winsmith .....	719	Samuel McGowan .....	16
T. B. Johnston .....	719	J. W. Harrington .....	16
Timothy Hurley .....	719	I. I. Ingram .....	16
W. B. Nash .....	719	William Wallace .....	16
Wilson Cook .....	719	J. H. Irwin .....	16
W. F. Myers .....	719	Robert Aldrich .....	16

the omission of the name of T. B. Johnston from the list of candidates, and the addition of seven hundred of the number received by him to the number of votes received by F. J. Barker being evidently a clerical error on the part of the managers in making up said return.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County :

Personally appeared W. H. Rutherford, who, being duly sworn, says that he is a citizen of Laurens County, and was duly commissioned and appointed as a commissioner of election for Laurens County in the general election held on the seventh day of November instant; that on the day of said election, and for some time previous, a special system of intimidating republican voters was resorted to by the democrats; threats of violence were general and abusive, and insulting language was used to republicans; democrats rode over the county by night with yells, and fire-arms of various descriptions were discharged; that at the polls various devices were used to prevent the republicans from exercising their right of suffrage; they were challenged on the slightest pretext, and if they voted did so with the impending threat that they would be immediately arrested; some were so arrested without just cause and committed to jail, and this fact kept many legal voters from voting, as they feared to suffer the same fate; that so universal was this system of intimidation that deponent, influenced by this knowledge, and also by a personal observation of the illegal way in which the election was conducted, did not feel justified in subscribing to the return of the election, in his official capacity as commissioner, and only consented to do so under protest, as said return will show on its face, when he became satisfied that his life would be placed in jeopardy if he declined to so subscribe to said return.

Personally appeared T. F. Hunter, who on oath says he was manager of election at Young's store, in Laurens County, on seventh November instant; that at that precinct a general system of intimidating republican voters was practised by democrats; threats, abusive and insulting language was freely resorted to, and many republicans who had come there for the purpose of voting retired from the polls without doing so, and stated to deponent that they were afraid that their lives would be taken if they attempted to vote the republican ticket; that in consequence of this terrorism only a few republican votes were cast, most of them being the votes of personal friends of deponent who had accompanied him to that precinct and remained and voted there because they desired him to have the benefit of their presence and protection, as they believed his life to be endangered by the fact of his being a republican manager of election.

T. F. HUNTER.

H. H. D. BYRON,
*Not. Pub., S. C.*STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County :

Personally appeared James O. Ladd, who, being duly sworn, says that he is a duly qualified and commissioned deputy marshal of the United States; was present in that capacity at Laurens Court-House at the election on the 7th day of November instant. That while en route to that point the day previous to said election he saw at different stations on the Laurens Railroad, in said county, squads of men mounted and ready to mount, who were part of a general organization whose avowed purpose was to overawe and intimidate republicans. By their remarks they conveyed the idea that threats and violent conduct would impress many republicans with fears of personal safety on the day of election, or on the day succeeding the same, and thereby influence them to remain away from the polls or "vote with us," meaning with the democrats. That at Clinton, S. C., the present terminus of said railroad, there was quite a body of men with horses saddled ready to mount and scour that section in furtherance of this plan of intimidation.

That he arrived at Laurens Court-House about 9 o'clock in the evening. Before 10 o'clock the public peace and quiet at the court-house was violently disturbed by yells of a turbulent and frightful character, coming from all quarters and lasting continually during the night, accompanied by frightful oaths, jeers, and discharging of firearms. These demonstrations were made by a large body or bodies of mounted men constantly moving to and fro, or passing through from one part of the county to another. Their evident purpose was in furtherance of the aforesaid plan of intimidation by frightening and driving off the large number of colored republicans who had congregated at and in the vicinity of the court-house from a large adjacent territory, there being four polling-places at or near the court-house. As a result, many colored voters did not even approach the court-house for fear of violence or bodily harm, and many returned to their homes before the opening of the polls the following morning, and did not attend the polls during the election.

That during the day of election it was apparent that this system of intimidation must have been waged for some time, and was of a grave and serious character. Opportunity sufficient for all to vote could and did obtain during the day, but as early as 9 o'clock, when the polls had been open but three hours, republicans commenced returning to their homes without having voted. The effect of the democratic intimidation was now apparent, for frivolous challenges and threats of arrest on trivial and groundless charges, made effective by the actual arrest of perhaps two or three colored men on the charge of repeating, was all-sufficient, and did lead many republicans to return home without voting. A positive assurance of ample protection, not only on that day, but in the future, when the excitement of campaign and election might be over, was what seemed essential, as these republicans do assert that the real danger they fear is in the future, when the protection of the United States marshals and United States troops are withdrawn from them.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Richland:

Personally appears Samuel B. Spencer, who on oath says he was chairman of the board of commissioners of election, in the recent election in Aiken County.

That on the 10th day of November, 1876, the board of commissioners of election met and organized as a board of county canvassers, and elected Nathan R. Williams as secretary, and adjourned, after instructing said Williams, together with Charles Edmundson, to place the ballot-boxes in a cell in the county-jail to be safely kept until otherwise ordered by the board, the said adjournment to continue until Tuesday, the 14th day of November, A. D. 1876, at 10 a. m. On Sunday morning, the 12th day of November, a writ was served upon said deponent by George W. Croft, county chairman of the democratic party, which writ is herenunto attached, marked Exhibit A.

On Sunday night, the 12th of November, 1876, I proceeded to Aiken, and on Monday morning, November 13th, at six o'clock, the returns were canvassed, the board being assisted by members of the democratic party, as stated in affidavit of Nathan R. Williams, the secretary of the board, only two republicans besides this deponent being present. Deponent further says that when the Fountain Academy box was opened no returns were found in it. Mr. Edmundson thereupon stated that the returns and ballots were in the possession of Mr. W. F. Carston; the returns for said box were shortly after brought in. That in the Windsor box, the returns of the managers for the presidential electors was not filled up except as to the names of the persons voted for, the number of votes not having been put down in words or figures; that Mr. George W. Croft called the number of votes for the electors from a supervisor's book.

This deponent has since been informed, by affidavits and reports of the managers, marshals, and supervisors of the precincts of Graniteville, Miles's Mill, and Fountain Academy, that gross frauds were committed at said precincts on the day of election aforesaid, and had this deponent known of said frauds at the time of canvassing the votes aforesaid, he would have objected to the counting of the votes contained in said boxes.

And deponent further says that he would now sign the accompanying supplementary report of George Washington, one of the members of the board of commissioners of election, but for the reason that before the frauds herein named were brought to the official knowledge of said deponent he had signed a return with Charles Edmundson, one of the members of said board.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Aiken :

To S. B. Spencer and George Washington, commissioners of election for Aiken County :

Take notice, that at six o'clock in the forenoon of Monday, the 13th day of November, 1876, at the Gregg Mansion, in the town of Aiken, a meeting of the board of commissioners of election for Aiken County will be held to proceed to canvass the returns of managers of election in said county; that said returns, with all papers connected with the election, shall be forwarded to the secretary of state by the 9.30 a. m. train on said day.

And further take notice, that should you fail to be present at such meeting, I shall myself proceed to make out such returns, and to canvass the returns of such managers of elections, and to forward the same, as aforesaid, to the secretary of state, as aforesaid, protesting upon your absence as willful, and a premeditated fraud upon the candidates who have received an honest majority in the late election.

CHS. EDMONDSON,

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Richland :

Personally comes before the subscribing officer George Washington, one of the board of commissioners of election for the county of Aiken, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says :

That the board of county canvassers was organized on Friday, November 10, 1876, by electing Samuel B. Spencer chairman, and Nath. R. Williams secretary, and that the board adjourned until Tuesday, November 14, 1876. Deponent knew nothing officially or otherwise of the meeting of said board said to have occurred on Monday, November 13, 1876.

Deponent further says that if he had been present at the canvassing of the returns he should have objected to the admission of those from Graniteville, Fountain Academy, Miles' Mill, and Windsor precincts, on account of the gross frauds which were committed at those precincts, of which deponent has information partly from his own personal knowledge and partly from affidavits of the managers, supervisors, any deputy marshals at those polls, which affidavits are in his possession and their existence known to the board of county canvassers.

Deponent does therefore most solemnly enter his protest against the notion taken by a portion of said board on Monday, November 13, 1876, for the reasons herein stated.

Personally appeared before me D. W. Johnson, who, being duly sworn, says : That he is one of the managers of election of the Fountain Academy precinct, Aiken County; that deponent held the election at the precinct aforesaid on the 7th November, 1876; that at six o'clock in the afternoon of the said day deponent, with George Brodie, another manager, started to close the polls, as the law required them to do, but a crowd of some fifteen white men came up and demanded that the polls be kept open until they could vote, and although deponent and the other manager knew that the law required the polls to be closed at six o'clock in the afternoon of the day of election, yet they were afraid to refuse compliance to the demands of the crowd of white men, and the managers of said precinct were compelled to keep the polls open at said precinct for some time after six o'clock p. m., and that during said time after six o'clock they were compelled to allow about fifteen persons to vote.

Deponent has been informed and believes that a great number of votes cast at the said precinct on the day of election were illegal, as a number of the persons voting are residents of the State of Georgia, and a number of other persons voting at said precinct had voted on same day at other precincts in the county and State aforesaid. Deponent believes that had he or the other managers refused to allow the said illegal votes to be cast, that he and they would have been killed.

Before me personally came Abram Knopf, who, on oath, deposes and says: That as a commissioner of election for the county of Barnwell, he went from Blackville to Barnwell Court-House on Friday, the 10th of November, 1876; that the commissioners of election for said county organized as a board of county canvassers and proceeded to canvass the votes of said county between one and four o'clock, and canvassed the returns of all the precincts of said county except Canaan Fair church and Robbins. That from Canaan Fair church precinct a box was received, but accompanied by no papers except a note signed by David Mixson, one of the managers at said poll, which note stated that he had received a paper prior to the day of election which threatened him with death if he opened the box on election-day, and that in consequence of said threats he did not open said box at all. That this paper threatening the said manager was seen and read by this deponent and then returned to Mr. Blanton, the democratic member of the board of county canvassers for said county. That about nine or ten o'clock p. m. of the same day one of the managers from Robbins poll called this deponent from the room in which he was canvassing the returns, and asked if he, this deponent, would receive the returns from Robbins poll. That this deponent answered, "I shall receive nothing from Robbins." That this deponent made this answer because he felt that if he had anything to do with the returns from Robbins he would be suspected of doing wrong and would be in danger. That next morning at about eleven o'clock two of the managers of Robbins met this deponent and asked him if he would receive the returns from Robbins; that this deponent answered that it was too late, as the board of canvassers had completed their work.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County:

Personally appears David J. Spry, who, on oath, says: That he was a duly appointed and qualified manager at Cross Hill precinct, New Hope church box, in Laurens County, South Carolina, on the 7th day of November, 1876, at the general election.

That as such manager of election, he saw, at ten o'clock a. m. on election-day, as many as three hundred republicans who wished to vote, and that but one hundred and fifty of them voted. The others were prevented from voting by the attitude and conduct of the democrats who were present, who uttered threats of discharging their hands if they voted the republican ticket, fired off pistols, and obstructed the voting by delays and frivolous causes of challenge.

That two different men separately came to this deponent (and he saw the same act done to others) and put a pistol to his breast, and threatened this deponent that if he voted the republican ticket they would kill him; and when this deponent voted the republican ticket he was told, "Never mind; we will get even with you to-night."

During the canvass of the ballots at night, this deponent was summoned by a large number of democrats; and when this deponent drew the ballots from the box, it was found that two and sometimes more democratic tickets were folded together, and numbered, probably, (to the best of deponent's judgment,) one hundred ballots more than should have been voted; deponent was prevented by force, and the display of pistols by the democrats, from comparing the number of ballots cast with the number of names on the poll-list, the clerk of the managers refusing to tell this deponent the number of names on the poll-list, and deponent was compelled to submit to allowing the surplus democratic ballots to be counted, his desire to reject all but one ballot found in each of the packages being overruled by the crowd of armed democrats.

During the canvass, as aforesaid, two republican tickets were found inclosing other tickets, that is to say, in two instances two republican tickets folded together were found, and the crowd of democrats compelled deponent to burn all of such tickets and not count one of them.

That during the canvass of the votes, as aforesaid, there was but one republican present in the room, and that deponent's co-manager, who stated to this deponent that he voted the democratic ticket because his life was threatened if he did not do so.

Deponent saw many republicans with republican ballots in their hands, who were pulled about roughly by democrats and threatened with being turned in the big road, (meaning a discharge from employment,) together with the pointing of pistols at them, who were compelled against their will to vote the democratic ticket.

Personally appeared W. D. Dunlap, who, being duly sworn, says: That he was a duly appointed and qualified manager of election at Clinton Box precinct, Laurens County, at the general election held in that county on the 7th November, instant.

That at that precinct a general system of intimidation of republican voters prevailed. Democrats surrounded the polls and tried to keep republicans from voting. Others told republicans who had voted that they would employ them no longer. Republicans were arrested without any authority upon frivolous pretexts, and all manner of charges were made in order to deter them from voting.

Personally appeared before me B. L. Jordan, who, on oath, deposes and says that he was present at New Hope polling-precinct, in the county and State aforesaid, and performing the duties of United States deputy marshal, duly appointed as such by proper authority.

That at said polling-precinct Dr. Wilbur, Dr. McSwain, and several others did threaten to drive him from said polling-precinct box, and used abusive, threatening, and insulting language to hinder him in the performance of his duty, and to frighten away and deter republican voters from said precinct; that in furtherance of their purposes one — Boyd drew his pistol and threatened to use it on some person in the crowd around the poll who was out of deponent's sight, or so situated that he could not recognize him.

That the conduct of the democrats generally during the day was so defiant and overbearing that many republicans could not vote through fear of bodily harm, and that there was not, and could not have been, a free exercise of the elective franchise at that poll in consequence thereof.

That he made no arrests as deputy marshal, because he would have been powerless as situated.

Personally appeared before me Raiford Stewart, who, on oath, deposes and says that he was chairman of the board of managers at the Hamilton precinct box, in the county and State aforesaid, at the general election held on the 7th of November, 1876.

That throughout the day abusive, insulting, violent, and threatening language was very generally used by the members of the democratic clubs who resided in that precinct, and who came from other portions of said county, toward persons who voted or desired to vote the republican ticket, with a view of intimidating and preventing such votes being cast. That these threats were usually of a general character, and to the effect that such voters would be turned from their homes and places of employment, and have to leave the country, &c. That the effect of this intimidation, as practiced throughout the campaign, and the attitude and demeanor of the organized democracy on that day, made many voters remain from the polls through fear, and led others to vote the democratic ticket, as a matter of self-protection, who otherwise would and desired to vote the republican ticket. That for these and other reasons, growing out of the intimidation waged, there was not, and could not have been, a fair and free expression of the suffrages of the people at that polling-precinct, and from deponent's knowledge of affairs in said county, and the evidence which might be obtained if witnesses did not stand in fear of harm in one way or another, there has not, and could not have been, a fair and free election by the people in said county.

That many persons are now hid away from their homes who voted the republican ticket, and many have been turned out of house and refused further employment who did vote the republican ticket.

That, as a result of the intimidation hereinbefore related, the usual republican majority at said polling-precinct was overcome, and a large democratic majority secured.

C. Bowen, John Win-smith, T. B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, William F. Meyers; and there were also cast ninety-six votes for each of the following seven candidates for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, to wit: T. Q. Barker, Samuel McGowan, John W. Harrington, J. J. Ingram, John H. Erwin, William Wallace, Robert Aldrich. That immediately after the election the said managers prepared a written statement of the result of the election in said precinct, and intended to sign the same; and that if the said statement was not signed by them it was altogether through an oversight, as it was the purpose of the said managers to sign the same.

And the said S. Q. A. Guillard further says that he, being chairman of the said board, and being duly designated by the board for that purpose, delivered to the commissioners of election for that county, within three days after the election, the poll-lists, the box containing the ballots, and the said written statement.

H. E. HAYNE,
*Secretary of State.*U. S. AMERICA, DISTRICT SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Barnwell :

Personally comes before me L. W. Minns who, on oath, says that he was at Robbins polling-precinct on November 7, 1876, and held appointment as deputy marshal. The polls were opened about six o'clock, and voting proceeded till about noon. Up to that time there had been no actual disturbance, although considerable violent language and threats had been made against republicans. About twelve o'clock deponent heard three guns fired; saw white man with gun dodging behind the thicket on railroad. Then six more guns were shot off. The voting was being done in the depot, and the guns were fired at it. The bullets went through the building. All the white men ran to a little house near the depot and got guns and pistols. I went up to the crowd and commanded peace, and asked the assistance of fifteen of them to help me take the men who committed the riot. Dr. M. A. Turner, who seemed to be leading, ordered all the democrats to get their guns, and all republicans to stay back. They would give me no assistance, but attempted to shoot me, so I rode off down to Millet's where the troops were, and asked the lieutenant for help. Did not get the troops, and staid at Millet's. Lieutenant Warwlok telegraphed to Captain McLaughlin for instructions, and the latter telegraphed to General Ruger. I did not hear the reply. At Millet's seven or eight white men came up after me, saying they had voted at Robbins, but the box was burnt up, and they claimed the right to vote again. They voted again.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Barnwell :

Personally comes before me Benjamin G. Hughes, who, on oath, says that he was deputy United States marshal at Allendale poll, in Barnwell County, on November 7, 1876. The polls were not opened till seven and a half or eight o'clock. When they were opened a crowd of white men, known to be democrats, took possession of the house in which the voting was done, and filled up all approaches to the same in such a manner that no republicans could approach the box. This was continued until after noon, up to which time very few, if any, republicans had voted. Deponent made repeated application to the officer in command of the troops for assistance in clearing the way, but could obtain none until about one and a half o'clock, when, by request of Captain McLaughlin, the chairman of the democratic club made his men give way. The republicans then commenced to vote and continued until the closing of the polls at six o'clock, at which time a large number had not been able to vote. Deponent was unable to exercise any authority at the polls, as his official position was not respected in any respect. After the polls were closed he was surrounded, and threats made against his life until he was guarded into Captain McLaughlin's office.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Barnwell :

Personally comes Thomas H. Moses, who, on oath, says that he was supervisor of election at Allendale precinct on November 7, 1876. The polls were opened about eight o'clock. On the night before one of the managers, Cain Cave, was run away from his house by night-riders, and driven in a different direction from the polls, so he was unable to get back before the time stated. When the polls were opened they were entirely captured by the democrats. They crowded round them and allowed no republican to vote until two o'clock p. m. The entrance was through a narrow door, and the democrats took possession of that, and allowed no one to pass unless he wished to vote the democratic ticket. Deponent requested that the way might be cleared repeatedly, and asked the deputy marshal to use his official authority for the same purpose, but without effect. About two o'clock the republicans began to come in and vote, and each one was halted, delayed, and questioned by democrats inside the door, who had lists, and who allowed no one to come to the ballot-box until their inquiries had been answered. The polls were closed at six p. m. At that time there were about two hundred colored men, known to be republicans, who had not voted, not having an opportunity.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Barnwell :

Personally comes before me Wesley S. Dickson, who, on oath, says that he was at Red Oak precinct, on November 7, 1876, holding the position of supervisor of election. No republicans were allowed to come into the house where the box was without a great deal of trouble. A democrat, by name of Lee, stood with his arms across the door and kept them back. He was no officer and had no authority. Frequently a voter had to stoop down and pass under his arms. Persons were at the gate with pistols and knives in their hands. Deponent did not dare to challenge any one, although he knew that a great many were there from Georgia who voted once or twice or oftener.

F. H. EATON,
United States Commissioner.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Barnwell :

Personally comes before me Sumpter H. Blocker, who, on oath, says that he was supervisor of election at Millet's poll, in Barnwell County, on November 7, 1876. That in starting to go to the polls on the night previous, with three other men, he was stopped at Furse's Mill by parties who told him the road was picketed ahead, and that no person professing to be a republican would be allowed to pass. At that time heard the reports of guns and pistols in every direction. Went back about a mile, and stopped till daybreak, then went on to Millett's. Found the polls open and about sixty votes polled. This was just after six o'clock. The colored republicans seemed very much demoralized. Whenever one of them would start to vote, a number of democrats would take hold of him, take his republican ticket away, and force him to vote the one they substituted. Heard such words as these, "If you don't vote this ticket, we will shoot you," &c. One old man said, "Please give me a little time to think, sir;" to which the reply was, "Damn you, you have had your whole life to think. Vote the democratic ticket, or it will be worse for you." Deponent saw personally at least a dozen cases of this character, and has knowledge of sixty or seventy-five men who were forced to vote against their wishes in this manner. There was no deputy marshal at this poll, and the officer in command of the troops said he had no authority to interfere in any way, except on application of a deputy marshal. For this reason, the colored republicans had no protection. Threats were repeatedly made against deponent for his action in his official capacity.

About twelve o'clock a crowd of white men, numbering from fifty to one hundred, surrounded the polls. The yelling was such that the manager's voice could not be heard. These men clasped hands and stood compactly, so that no republican could get near the box. This continued for half an hour or more, during which time none but democrats voted. About one o'clock my friends begged me to leave, as my life was in danger. I replied that we had better stay a little longer. About two o'clock about fifty or sixty mounted men, some of whom had pistols in their hands, came galloping up from the direction of Robbins. They came to the ballot-box on their horses and used all sorts of abusive language to deponent and the colored manager. They yelled and shouted at the top of their voices, saying that every damned nigger that voted the republican ticket would see hell before many days. Deponent leaned toward one of the managers, asking him what they should do for protection, when Seabrook Dunbar knocked him in the head, saying, "Damn you, no whispering here." About this time deponent went out to get something to eat, and saw in a store belonging to Mr. Dunn, on the same lot as the polling-place, fifty guns stacked. These guns were taken back to Georgia the day following.

Deponent heard from the cook that his life was in danger, and accordingly left about three o'clock. Rode thirty miles that night to save himself.

The following were the most prominent in acts of intimidation—proof can be furnished in every instance—viz: Stephen S. Furse, Seabrook Dunbar, H. D. Hankerson, L. H. Johnson, W. H. Easterling, J. R. James, Sandy Qdom, besides others.

The white people came to the polling-precinct armed with shot-guns, and that there was no interference on the part of the military other than to preserve order.

Munnerlyn, clerk of said board of managers of said poll, who, being duly sworn, depose and say that, on Tuesday, November 7, 1876, they were at the poll the entire day; saw no confusion whatever; heard not a single threat against any one who might vote the ticket of his choice; saw no clubs or guns or other weapons that might be used to intimidate, deter, hinder, or prevent any person or persons from the free exercise of his rights, privileges, and franchise as an American citizen or citizens; that there were three tickets at the poll, two of which were headed with Daniel H. Chamberlain and republican nominees for other State offices, and one with Wade Hampton for governor and the democratic nominees for other State offices, each ticket, however, differing as to the candidates for county officers and the general assembly, the democratic ticket bearing the name of R. Dozin for the senate, one republican ticket the name of Bruce H. Williams and the other that of W. H. Jones for the State senate.

We heard no objection raised against any one voting either of the said tickets, but that voters could and did vote each of the said tickets without fear or molestation; that no women were at the poll to disturb or control voters; that the election at the said poll passed off as quietly and peaceably as any they had ever seen, and that prominent white citizens, (democrats,) A. W. Cordes, democratic manager, W. J. Lucas, U. S. supervisor, A. G. Trenholm, and others, and scores of respectable colored citizens, remarked publicly that the election was conducted at said poll quietly and creditably; that those who voted the regular republican ticket did so from their own free will and choice, and not from the slightest intimidation, force, threats, or deception. The only deception at the poll was that practiced by the democratic party in the circulation of a ticket, the fac-simile of the regular republican ticket, headed with the words, "Union Republican Ticket," and bearing the names of the national, State, and county democratic nominees.

To the board of State canvassers of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C. :

The undersigned, commissioners of election of Oconee County, South Carolina, respectfully state that at the time of the signing of the statements by them of the result of the election herewith transmitted, they protested against the count of the boxes at Westminster and Wagner precincts, and they hereby protest against the same being counted for the following reasons:

1. That many of the persons who voted at said Wagner precinct, in the town of Walhalla, were from North Carolina and Georgia, and in sufficient numbers to render the result of the election by the legally-qualified voters at said box uncertain.

2. That at the box at Westminster precinct (Tugaloo Township) many persons were prevented from voting the ticket of their choice by different methods of intimidation, such as being compelled to show their tickets before voting. Numbers were deprived of their vote because they preferred not to show their tickets. This was done by the authority of one of the managers.

3. At both of said precincts riotous demonstrations and cursing and abuse were frequent, and were intended to prevent, and did prevent, a full and fair election.

We further and in conclusion say, in explanation of our having signed the statement of the result of the election as commissioners of election, that we were induced to do so by representations made to us by those whom we consulted for legal advice upon the subject, in the absence of specific knowledge on our part in reference to this matter, to the effect that our failure to so sign the statement would make us amenable to the penal law for violation of our duty as said commissioners.

I went first to Westminster precinct for the purpose of voting, but was prevented from voting by sundry persons known to this deponent, who drew their pistols and threatened deponent's life. I then returned to my residence with my wife, and from there proceeded to Walhalla for the purpose of voting at that box, but was prevented from voting there by the great crowd of democrats who blocked up the passage-way to the box. I saw as many as twelve colored voters prevented from voting by the crowd who surged about the box, crowding republicans out of the room. At the Westminster box, deponent saw several persons known to him to be residents of the State of Georgia deposit their ballots in the box in violation of the law of the State.

Deponent proceeded to West Union precinct, where he was allowed to vote un molested. Deponent was thus obliged to go twelve miles to vote instead of voting at the nearest polling-precinct, only three miles from his residence.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Oconee County :

Emery McDow this day personally appeared before me, after being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was manager at Westminster box; that William Stubbing, the democratic manager at box, kept up all day the abuse of every republican was d—n thieves and rogues, and made all of the voters open their ticket, and a democrat take the names of the rogues. They use all kinds of abuse, cursing and abusing the party, causing a great many to vote contrary to their wish, or leaving the polls without voting at all. The democrats lead some up and made them vote the democrat ticket. There was a great many from Georgia and North Carolina voted the democrat ticket. There was no fair election at that box; if there had been, that box would have resulted in favor of the republicans.

Roland Long personally appeared before me, and, after being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was deputy United States marshal, acting at the court-house in this county on the 7th day of this month. Deponent saw several men from Georgia and North Carolina voting the democratic ticket, and also from the Newberry College. The democrats were abusing and cursing the republicans for liars, thieves, and rogues, causing some to vote the democratic ticket, or leave the polls without voting. Deponent was powerless, as deputy marshal, to keep order, so that a free and fair election could be had. If a free and fair election had been had at this box, the result of the vote would have been uncertain.

H. E. HAYNE,
*Secretary of State.*SOUTH CAROLINA, Marlborough County :

Personally appeared Thomas David, sr., one of the managers of election at Hebron precinct, in the State and county aforesaid, who, being duly sworn, says on oath :

1. That at said precinct, on Tuesday, the 7th of November, 1876, there were about three hundred and forty-nine votes cast, of which ninety were colored. This was in the election for national, State, and county officers.

2. That out of the above number the union republican ticket only received about twenty-one votes.

3. That, according to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief, undue influence was used on the minds of a considerable number of the voters at said precinct, as will appear from the following circumstances which came under my own observation :

1. I saw money paid to men in a number of instances. I would see the man vote the democratic ticket, and then see the money paid to him.

2. In a great many instances men were led up and made to vote the democratic ticket, under circumstances which satisfied me they were not voting according to their own choice. For instance, a colored man would come up with a white man on each side of him, guarding him, and would present every appearance of voting unwillingly.

3. That deponent, one of the managers of election at said precinct, while in the discharge of his official duty, was cursed, abused, and threatened by the democrats, and this course of conduct continued during the day. They threatened to shoot deponent's d—d head if he would turn it; wanted to know what he and another colored man present (a supervisor) were there for; said they were going to run that shebang, and that they would take deponent's place at the box. This was done, according to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief, simply because he objected to receiving the votes of certain persons he considered under age.

4. Deponent further says that intoxicating liquors were used by the democrats in the immediate vicinity of the polls, from an early hour in the day until the closing of the polls. The managers of election were surrounded by a crowd of drunken men, so that it was entirely impossible to maintain any semblance of order.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Aiken County:

Personally appeared before me Peter A. Waggiels, who, being duly sworn, says that he was a deputy marshal of the United States on the day of the general election in South Carolina, and that he went to the Fountain Academy voting-precinct, in the county of Aiken, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the day aforesaid, and deponent remained at said precinct until about 7 o'clock p. m. of the same day.

About 6 o'clock p. m. of the 7th day of November, 1876, when the managers were about to close the polls, a crowd of about fifteen or twenty white men came up to said precinct and demanded of the managers to be allowed to vote, and when the managers informed them that the time for closing the polls had arrived, the crowd cursed the managers and swore that they would vote, and compelled the said managers, by their cursing and threats, to keep the poll open until they all voted except one, John F. Murray, who, after being sworn, went out of the house without voting. Deponent further says that he believes that, had the managers refused to keep the polls open and allowed the said crowd to vote, the said managers would have been killed, and there would have been a riot.

Deponent further says that himself and the other United States marshal present could not keep the peace, and could not have protected the citizens at said precinct, if the managers had attempted to close the poll at 6 o'clock, as required by law.

Secretary of State.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Sumter:

Personally appeared before me Henry J. McLaurin, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a citizen of the State of South Carolina, and a legal voter of said county, residing in Raftin Creek Township in said county at the present time, and was appointed a United States supervisor at Raftin Creek precinct, to attend there on election-day, the 7th of November instant; that he remained at said poll or precinct all of said day, and knows all of the transactions at said poll; that the poll was not opened on the morning of said election-day at six o'clock in the morning, as required by law, but was opened at about twenty minutes after seven o'clock on said morning, one hour and twenty minutes after the proper time; that Marion Sanders was appointed as clerk at the said precinct or poll, but that he did not take the oath of office as said clerk as required by law, and the managers at said precinct did not administer to the said Marion Sanders, or require him to take, the oath so required by law; that the said Marion Sanders, acting as clerk, though not sworn as such clerk, kept the only poll-list at such poll or precinct at said election on said day.

That the box used at said poll at said election-precinct had more than one opening in its lid, and the openings aforesaid were larger than is allowed and prescribed by law; that there was an adjournment of the board of managers at said precinct during said election between the time when the polling or voting at said precinct commenced and the time when said voting ended, and there was an interruption in said election of one hour, during which time all the managers, supervisors, and clerk left the polls and the box containing the ballots cast at said precinct unguarded.

That a large company of men, armed with muskets and guns, marched up near the polls aforesaid, in martial order, commanded by officers; that they stacked their arms near the polls, and marched up in a body to said polls and deposited their ballots; that each one of said men, so armed as aforesaid, had a haversack hung upon his right shoulder, which haversack deponent supposed to contain ammunition, and deponent believes that the demonstration so made intimidated sundry persons at said polls and hindered them from voting.

That another company of men marched up near to the said polls in martial order, with fife and drum, under command of officers, and deposited their ballots at said poll; and that deponent believes that the demonstration so made intimidated sundry persons and hindered them from voting.

That sundry persons known to deponent to be minors, and others known to deponent to be of unsound mind, and others who were non-residents, were allowed by said managers to vote at said poll at said election, notwithstanding they were challenged by sundry persons.

That the said Marion Sanders, acting as clerk as aforesaid, administered to 352 of the persons who offered to and did vote at said poll the oath prescribed by law to be administered to each voter before voting, and that such oath was not administered to any of the said 352 persons by any of the said managers at said poll.

That at the close of said election, the ballots deposited in the said box, at the said precinct, on the said day, were taken out and assorted according to the respective colors of said ballots; the red ballots were placed together on one side and the white ballots were placed together in another heap, apart from the red ballots; that the said ballots were not read, that is to say, the names of the persons voted for thereon for the respective offices were not all read out, nor was there any counting of any of said ballots according to law, but that the red tickets or ballots (which red ballots were printed in red color on white paper) were counted as votes for each and all of the persons known to be candidates for the various offices on the republican ticket; and the said white ballots (which were printed in black color upon white paper) were counted as votes for each and all of the persons known to be candidates for the various offices on the democratic ticket; and it was not ascertained by inspection of each of the said ballots that they were votes for the respective persons for whom they were counted.

Personally comes before me Dennis Sullivan, United States supervisor, who, on oath, says that he was United States supervisor at Shaw's Mill precinct, and was at said place November 7, 1876, to discharge his duty. That before six o'clock he saw a crowd of white democrats unloading a wagon which was loaded with guns. That the voting was commenced down stairs, and the box was carried up stairs against the will of the republican manager; that when the box was brought down stairs it was carried some other way; he saw it brought from behind the house by Joseph Merriwether, the democratic manager. That there was only one republican manager to act. Joseph Merriwether took the blank oath out of the box which was for the other republican manager to take, and put it in his pocket and would not allow the republican manager to take it. That not a republican could get to vote for at least an hour when the poll was first opened. That the democrats would not allow some republican voters to vote who were legal and justified voters to his knowledge. That white men came there and voted who were not known by any of the election officers, and they refused to give their names, but would say to the clerk, who was a democrat, "You know my name." Deponent is satisfied that Georgians voted at Shaw's Mill on the 7th of November, 1876, in the State and county aforesaid. That he could not challenge any voter but colored men, as his life was threatened by Joseph Merriwether. That two strangers came up and voted without taking any oath. That no clerk was elected or sworn. That some one stood between the clerk and manager all the while, and when the votes were counted there were twenty-seven tickets in the box more than names, and all of the twenty-seven votes overplus were not drawn out. That Joseph Merriweather took the box and did not seal it, and he did not know that it was locked.

D. S. SULLIVAN,
United States Supervisor.

Sworn to before me this 13th day of November, 1876.

JESSE JONES, C. C. C. P.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County:

Personally appeared before me the undersigned deponent, Seabron Merreweather, manager, who, being duly sworn, made oath as follows: That Joseph Merreweather, democratic manager, took the box from him, (Seabron Merreweather, republican manager,) and then Joseph Merreweather had both box and key, and then Joseph Merreweather carried said box off a short distance and took out the blank oath which was for the other republican manager to take, and thereby defeated his acting as such manager that day.

The voting was commenced down stairs, and Joseph Merreweather took the box, carried it up stairs, and had it in his exclusive possession for about thirty minutes, while I and the United States marshal were protesting against carrying said box up stairs; and when the box was brought down it was carried behind the house, and the table and chair were brought down the same way it went up. Joseph Merreweather carried the box around the house.

Deponent was intimidated, and not allowed to challenge any voter, except a colored man who he thought was an illegal voter; that white voters came up and refused to give their names, and said to the clerk, who was a democrat, "You know my name."

When the poll was closed, Joseph Merreweather took the box off without sealing it and without locking it, so far as he knows, and he did not feel safe in questioning anything Joseph Merreweather did; that he pronounces the election at Shaw's precinct or polling-place unfair, and it should not be counted. Hence he enters his solemn protest against the same.

Before me comes H. W. Thomas and Sampson Pope, who, being duly sworn, make oath that they are the managers appointed to attend at the Mount Willing precinct.

First. That there was not a fair election at said precinct, and that we were prevented from discharging our duties as we were sworn to do, to wit: we were intimidated by the democrats and prevented from ordering the clerk to sit in our presence. The clerk was a democrat, and he was made to sit out of our presence, and we were not allowed to object. The democratic party voted more than one ticket to a man, and we know not how many names the clerk wrote down to correspond with the double tickets. We were both born and raised in that settlement, and men voted there whom we never saw there before. We know that repeating was done, and that minors voted. Hence we enter this our most solemn protest against the election at said precinct.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County:

Personally appeared before me Wallace Morgan, supervisor for box No. 1, Edgefield Court-House, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he appeared at box No. 1, about six o'clock on the morning of November 7, to act in the capacity of supervisor. That when he reached the court-house (village) it was crowded to its utmost capacity with armed white men; that he expected the box to be opened under the arch of the court-house steps, the place designated by the commissioners of election for Edgefield County. That he was informed the box had been taken up stairs by one of the managers. That during the entire day the court-house and court-house steps were so crowded with white men that numbers of colored men were forced off the steps while trying to reach the poll. That during the entire day, the ground around the court-house steps was so occupied with horsemen that it was impossible for colored men to push their way through to the poll. That box No. 1, at the court-house, is a place where the colored voters have always polled from 800 to 900 votes, but owing to facts enumerated above, only 35 or 40 colored men voted at this place on the 7th of November instant. That about four o'clock in the afternoon, the court-house steps and portico were occupied by speakers from the democratic party, and several speeches were delivered to the horsemen then surrounding the steps.

That during the day many strangers to this deponent voted at box No. 1. That deponent is a resident of Edgefield County, has resided in this county all his life, being 30 years of age, and is well acquainted with most of the voters of said county.

That owing to the facts set forth, this deponent is compelled to swear that the election held at this precinct was unfair, and that the votes here polled should not be counted.

Personally appeared before me Ambrose Cartledge, who, being duly sworn, says on oath that he was United States marshal at Tolbert Store precinct, and a great many voted there that he was not acquainted with, and he is perfectly acquainted with the whole settlement, and he is one of the county officers for that section of the country, and has been for two years, and he can swear that he saw men vote there who, as he is informed by managers at other voting-places, voted elsewhere.

Deponent further swears that he saw numbers of men from Georgia that he is personally acquainted with, and he is perfectly satisfied that men from the State of Georgia, who were not legal voters in this State, voted at said precinct.

Deponent further swears that when these strangers presented themselves as voters, they would not give their names openly but whispered their names to the clerk, who wrote them down as given by these parties; that he remonstrated against this mode of voting by appealing to one of the managers and the supervisor, and that the said supervisor and the manager said if they undertook to put a stop to it it would cause a row, and therefore they were afraid to interfere. Deponent further swears that he was present at this precinct during the entire day, and believing, as he does, that many persons voted there who were not legal voters in this State and county, enters his solemn protest against the counting of the ballots polled at such precinct by the commissioners.

That the commissioners of election in and for said county advertised according to law that the election at said precinct would be held in the office of the county treasurer in the village of Edgefield, to which place deponent believed it to be his duty to appear pursuant to the advertisement of the said commissioners of election.

That two of the managers of election at said precinct, viz, Charles Holmes and John Wardenborough, without the knowledge or consent, and without any manner of consultation with deponent, changed the place of holding the election for said precinct from the office of county treasurer to Macedonia Church, a point about one-half or three-quarters of a mile from the office of the county treasurer.

Deponent further swears that after the said change had been made as aforesaid, without his knowledge or consent, he suggested to the managers aforesaid that the election for said precinct should be held as nearly as possible to the office of the county treasurer, and proposed to secure a comfortable and suitable building for such purposes; to all of which suggestions and propositions the said managers objected.

LANHAM STORE PRECINCT.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County :

Personally came before me Aaron Miles, who, being duly sworn, made oath as follows: That he was appointed by the commissioners of election to act at Lanham store precinct as manager of the election which took place November 7, 1876; that he went to said precinct on the 7th November, 1876, to act as aforesaid, but was met and refused upon the ground that he was too late; that two democrats met him when he first went to said precinct and said, "We want no radicals here;" that he went on up to the voting-place, and upon being positively refused by B. R. Tillman, democratic manager, the right to act as manager, he went off; that he did not feel safe in voting at said precinct; that from what he saw while at said precinct, republicans had no chance to vote at said precinct.

AARON MILES.

JESSE JONES, C. C. C. P.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County :

Personally appeared before me Willis Brunson, one of the managers of the precinct known as Torbett's store, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he acted as manager at the above-named precinct, and that he is thirty-four years of age and has resided in the neighborhood of Torbett's store all of his life, and is well acquainted with all the voters within ten miles of said precinct; that this deponent has acted as manager at said precinct at the last four elections held in this county, and that at no election has the entire vote exceeded 150, but at the election held on 7th November, 1876, 385 votes were polled; that there were nearly two hundred white men at this polling-place on 7th November that were strangers to this deponent, and when many of these strangers were asked their names they refused to give them openly, but would say to the clerk, "You know my name."

This deponent further deposes and says that Robert Cheatham voted at said precinct, and that this deponent is now informed by some of the managers that the said Robert Cheatham voted elsewhere.

This deponent further deposes and says that since the facts have been brought to his knowledge he is compelled to swear that the election held at Torbett's store was unfair, parties having voted there that voted elsewhere; that while this deponent has signed affidavit, he now swears that at the time of signing said affidavit he had not been informed of the voting of the parties herein named at other precincts.

WILLIS BRUNSON.

Sworn to before me this 13th, 1876.

JESSE JONES, C. C. C. P.

I have heard the above affidavit read, and certify to the correctness of the same.

WESLEY SETTLES.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Edgefield :

Personally appeared before me Augustus Glover, who, upon oath, says that he was a supervisor at Richardsonville on the day of election, (November 7, 1876;) that a large number of unknown persons to him voted at that precinct; that upon inquiring their residences they replied that it was none of his damned business; that he is an old resident at Richardsonville, and knows that they were strangers; that Wade Taylor and John Rambo voted at Richardsonville, of which I was a supervisor, and I am informed that they voted at other precincts.

AUGUSTUS GLOVER.

Sworn to before me this 11th day of November, A. D. 1876.

JESSE JONES, C. C. C. P.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County :

Personally appeared before me Wiley Weaver, one of the managers for Red Hill, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that a great many persons (whites) voted at Red Hill precinct that are unknown to this deponent; that Pierce Winfield and Benj. T. Morris voted at said polling-place, and that this deponent has since been informed by other managers attending at other precincts that the said Pierce Winfield and Benj. T. Morris voted elsewhere; that owing to the above facts this deponent is satisfied that the election was unfair and protests against counting the votes polled at Red Hill.

T. W. WEAVER.

JESSE JONES, C. C. C. P.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County :

Personally appeared before me, Jesse Jones, clerk of the court of common pleas, Thomas P. Carroll and Levi H. Graham, managers for the election-precinct known as Hattiwanger's Store, who, upon oath, depose and say that they, as managers of said precinct, repaired there early on the morning of the election, November 7, 1876, to enter upon the discharge of their duties as managers. That while on their way there they were met by Eldred S. Addison, Preston S. Brooks, J. H. Brooks, Pierce Connerley, D. H. Pompkins, with a large crowd following them, and they carried out intimidation generally, and drove many colored people from the poll, and they went off without voting.

Deponent further says that he requested one J. H. Brooks to quiet his men, and he answered that he was nobody's master, and he intended to let his men do as they pleased, and if certain negroes voted he would assist in putting them and the managers and all negroes out of the way.

Personally appeared before me, Jesse Jones, clerk of court of Edgefield County, Budd Stephens, one of the managers for Meeting street, and made oath that he was born and raised in the neighborhood, and has lived there all his life. That on Tuesday, 7th November, while managing the election, a great number of persons presented themselves as voters who were unknown to this deponent, and from the information received from other managers this deponent believes that many of said parties voted at Richardsonville and other polling-places in the county. This deponent further deposes and says that one J. C. Rambo voted at Meeting street; that he is now informed that the said J. C. Rambo voted at Richardsonville. This deponent further deposes and says that one Pierce S. Addison voted at Meeting street, and that he is now informed that the said Preston S. Brooks voted at Holliwanger's store. This deponent, believing as he does that a great deal of wrong was practiced in the way of illegal voting and repeating, enters this his affidavit and solemn protest against counting the vote in favor of any candidate that were polled at Meeting street.

LANHAM STORE PRECINCT.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County :

Personally came before me H. T. Tanksly, who, being duly sworn, made oath as follows: That he was a manager at Lanham Store precinct, in said State and county, of the election held on the 7th November, 1876; that he was born and raised in that settlement, and knows very near or quite every voter in said settlement, and a great number of white men voted at said precinct on said day at said election that he never saw before in his life, and he has never heard of their names before said day; that he has been informed that Marshall Mays, who voted at said precinct, voted elsewhere; that there was only two managers, one republican and one democrat; that the other republican manager was refused by the democratic manager, who was chairman of the board; that he wanted the other manager to act; that the other manager went off when he was refused the right to act by the democratic manager; that when the votes or tickets were counted they outnumbered the names by about eleven or twelve; that the clerk was a democrat and sat behind the managers all the while.

Personally appeared before me Wiley J. Williams and Abraham Lanham, two of the managers of box No. 1, Edgefield Court-House, and D. B. Cotton, clerk for said box, and made oath that, on the morning of the election, they appeared to the court-house as managers to conduct the election; that, according to the instructions given by the commissioners of election, they intending to hold the election under the arch of the court-house steps; that A. A. Glover, one of the managers, took the box contrary to the desire of these two managers and the directions of the commissioners of election, and carried it up into the court-house; that at the time the court-house was crowded with armed white men; and that there were some arms stacked away in the court-house; that the court-house was packed with white men, and been all night; that after these men voted they remained in the court-house and on the court-house steps, and so crowded the polling-place that colored men were not allowed to vote; that about 9 o'clock this crowd had all voted; yet they remained in the court-house and on the court-house steps; that while the crowd was in the court-house and on the court-house steps, several hundred horsemen were crowded around the court-house steps in such a manner that colored men could not approach the court-house; that during the day many of these parties voted four or five times, and when we protested against such a proceeding we were told that it was none of our business; that William T. Gary, of Augusta, Ga., told these managers that he had several boys here to-day from Georgia that no one knew; that when these deponents would protest against this repeating, and would ask the repeaters where they lived, they were told by James M. Cobb and J. C. Sheppard that it was none of their business where they lived, and hence these repeaters would not answer the questions; that these deponents finding that they could not carry on the election according to law, were anxious to abandon the poll, but were told that they would not be allowed to leave; that all of these white men around there were armed, and that these deponents were compelled to yield to anything they demanded; that in the evening about 4 o'clock the steps of the court-house were taken possession of by Butler Gary and J. C. Sheppard, who delivered speeches to the horsemen who were crowded around the court-house steps; that these managers wanted to write the names of colored men under the column fixed for colored men, and the names of white men under the column fixed for white men, but were not allowed to have it done; that not more than thirty-five or forty colored men voted at this box during the entire day, and that most of these voted late in the evening when they were accompanied by the box of United States marshal; that when the poll was closed after 6 o'clock the box was taken possession of by William T. Gary, of Augusta, Ga., J. M. Cobb, and J. C. Sheppard, of Edgefield Court-House, who assisted without authority in the counting of the votes; that when the votes were counted in several cases four or five democratic votes were folded together; that, in the face of all these facts, knowing them to be true, these deponents declare that the whole affair was unfair and contrary to law, and enter their solemn protest against the counting of said votes for or against any of the candidates.

RIDGE SPRING PRECINCT.

SOUTH CAROLINA, Edgefield County :

Personally came before me Moses D. Lott, manager of the election at Ridge Spring precinct, who, being duly sworn, made oath as follows :

That on 7th November, 1876, he was at the said precinct on said date, as manager, and did act as such on said day. That he is now 23 years of age. That he has lived 20 of these years in said precinct next before the election. That white men voted at said precinct that he never saw nor heard of before that day, and in many cases these unknown white men would not give their names, but would say to the clerk, who was a democrat, "You know my name," which was not satisfactory to the republican managers, and against which they protested. That seeing a strict enforcement of the law would have endangered his life, he, with his colleague, waived many of their rights and legal duties. That when, in counting the votes, the number of votes or tickets in the box exceeded the names on the poll-list by 113, which was drawn out, and I know all these were democratic except 7, because they were into each other; and the democratic United States supervisor refused to allow them to be thrown out as found in each other, but had them stirred up together and drawn such out, which was contrary to law. That for the above reasons I know that said ballot-box was stuffed, and there was not a fair election at said voting-precinct, and I protest against the counting of any votes found in said ballot-box.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, December 15, 1876.

I certify that the foregoing twenty-seven (27) affidavits are true copies of the originals on file in this office, as furnished by the several managers and supervisors of election and United States deputy marshals for Edgefield County.

[SEAL.]

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

CERTIFIED COPY OF THE MINUTES OF THE BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE,
November 10, 1876.

Pursuant to the provisions of section 21, chapter 8, of the revised statutes, the board of State canvassers met in the office of the secretary of state at twelve m.

Present, Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state; Hon. F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; Hon. T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; Hon. William Stone, attorney-general; Hon. H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general.

On motion of the comptroller-general, Hon. H. E. Hayne was elected chairman, and H. B. Johnson secretary.

There being no further business before the board, on motion of the comptroller-general, board adjourned until Saturday, November 11, at ten o'clock.

SATURDAY, November 11, 1876.

Pursuant to adjournment, the board met at ten a. m.

Present, Hon. H. E. Hayne, Hon. F. L. Cardozo, Hon. T. C. Dunn, Hon. William Stone, and Hon. H. W. Purvis.

The question being raised as to the jurisdiction of the board in the matter of the election of members of the general assembly, the following resolution was introduced by the attorney-general and unanimously adopted by the board:

Resolved, That as to the returns of the election of members of the general assembly, the board will consider them in connection with any protests or notices of contest that may be presented, this having been the established practice of the board heretofore.

General James Connor, on behalf of the candidates on the democratic ticket, submitted the following papers, and requested the board to indicate by resolution its action in regard to the points therein :

That, under the 4th section of article 3 of the constitution, the returns of every election of governor and lieutenant-governor shall be sealed up by the managers of election in the respective counties and transmitted to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house.

That, under these provisions of the Constitution, the State canvassers have no duties or powers in regard to election of governor and lieutenant-governor. But, in any event, the duty and power of the board of State canvassers can extend no further than to transmit to the secretary of state the returns as forwarded by the managers of election to the board of State canvassers.

JAS. CONNOR,
Counsel for Democratic Candidates.

That the State board of canvassers has no right or duty in regard to the election of electors for President and Vice-President and members of Congress, except to aggregate the vote of the respective counties, and certify what persons have received the greatest number of votes.

All questions of contest or protest belong to the other tribunals, and not to the board of State canvassers, to hear and determine.

JAS. CONNOR,
Counsel for Democratic Candidates.

That, for the offices of treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, adjutant-general, and superintendent of education, there is a contest or protest. That the function and duties of the board of canvassers on such contests or protests are judicial.

That the board of canvassers, as organized, consists of Hon. F. L. Cardozo, as treasurer, (who is a candidate for re-election;) of the Hon. T. C. Dunn, as comptroller-general, (who is a candidate for re-election;) of the Hon. H. E. Hayne, as secretary of State, (who is a candidate for re-election.)

On behalf of the citizens of the State, whom we represent, and on behalf of the democratic candidates on the State ticket, we protest against the board of State canvassers exercising jurisdiction.

That the members of the said board hereinbefore named and all the republican candidates were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the offices of each and every one of them depend upon the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest and protest in regard to said offices is for them to make themselves judges in their own case, and to enable them to decide the election in their own favor.

Against such a bold violation of justice we enter our earnest protest.

JAS. CONNOR,
Counsel for Democratic Candidates.

So far as regards the election of members of the general assembly, that the board of State canvassers can only aggregate the vote of the several precincts in the counties as certified by the board of county canvassers, and declare what persons have received the greatest number of votes for the senate and house of representatives, and certify such statements to the secretary of state, who shall transmit a copy of such certified determination, under the seal of office, to each person declared to be elected.

We submit this point, and ask the decision of the board thereon.

And the board of state canvassers, having thereupon passed its resolution refusing the said application, we protest against the said resolution, and notify the board that any further action of it under such resolution is regarded as illegal, null, and void.

JAS. CONNOR,

By Mr. CARDOZO:

Resolved, That the board deliberate on the points submitted by counsel, and then adjourn until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

On the question of the decision of the board on the points submitted by General Connor, the following resolution was offered by the attorney-general:

Resolved, That the board of State canvassers do not propose to canvass the returns of governor and lieutenant-governor; as it is of opinion that the determination of the election of those officers is given by the constitution to the general assembly.

Adopted; the affirmative being Messrs. Hayne, Cardozo, Dunn, and Stone.

The attorney-general also offered the following resolution; which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the State board of canvassers have the right to hear protests as to the election of electors for President and Vice-President and members of Congress, and to give their certificate to such persons as have the highest number of votes.

Also, the following was offered by the attorney-general, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the board of State canvassers that the State treasurer, secretary of state, and comptroller-general have the right to sit as members of the board to hear and determine all questions coming before them, except that neither of the said officers shall vote upon his own election.

MONDAY, November 3, 1876.

Pursuant to adjournment, the board met at 10 a. m., all the members being present.

The comptroller-general introduced the following resolution; which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the board hear oral argument on the point as to the limitation of time in which the board can canvass the returns for presidential electors, and that argument be limited to half an hour on each side.

General James Connor, on behalf of the democratic candidates, submitted the following paper in regard to the jurisdiction of the board:

To the Board of State Canvassers:

On behalf of the citizens of the State, whom we represent, and of the democratic candidates on the State ticket, we submit that all acts of the general assembly authorizing the board of State canvassers to hear and decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise in regard to the election of electors for President, Vice-President, members of Congress, and all officers elected at any general election held in this State are in violation of the twenty-sixth section of article I of the constitution, and, therefore, unconstitutional and void. We demand that the board of State canvassers, now assembled, shall not hear or decide any such cases of contest or protest, but shall only act ministerially in ascertaining from the returns and statements forwarded by the board of county canvassers the persons who have received the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates, and declare the same, and certify it to the secretary of state.

After hearing argument by General Connor, the attorney-general introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the board of State canvassers will proceed to canvass the returns for electors of President and Vice-President, beginning on the —— day of November, 1876, (unless the returns for all the counties have been previously received,) and will continue to canvass such returns from day to day until the last day of their session, if it be necessary to do so.

Unanimously adopted.

The board then took a recess until one p. m., to allow counsel to prepare argument on the constitutionality of the act under which the board exercise their functions, the question having been raised by counsel for the democratic candidates.

The board re-assembled at 1 p. m., all the members being present.

Mr. L. F. Youman, on behalf of democratic candidates, appeared and made argument to sustain the constitutional objection submitted by General Connor.

On motion of the comptroller-general, General Elliott, of counsel for the republican candidates, was allowed until Tuesday morning, November 14, at 10 o'clock, to prepare reply to Mr. Youman, and board adjourned until that time.

TUESDAY, November 14, 1876.

Pursuant to adjournment, the board met at 10 o'clock a. m., all the members being present.

The chairman laid before the board a process served upon them by the counsel for the democratic candidates, setting forth that they would apply to the supreme court for a writ of prohibition and mandamus in certain cases, in consequence of which the board adjourned to await the result of the application.

WEDNESDAY, November 15, 1876.

The board met at 10 o'clock a. m., the secretary state, comptroller-general, attorney-general, state treasurer, and adjutant and inspector general being present.

General Connor, on behalf of the candidates on the democratic ticket, submitted the following papers, and asked a decision of the board in regard to them:

To the Board of State Canvassers:

We submit that the comparing the statements of the board of county canvassers with the returns of the managers and the verifying of the aggregation of the returns be accomplished by the clerk and an assistant clerk of the board and a clerk and assistant clerk on the part of those whom we represent.

That the clerk of the board open the sealed packages in the presence of one clerk, and that the two clerks verify the papers and compare them with the returns of the managers and call off the figures, and that the assistant clerks shall on separate papers keep the tally and aggregate the figures.

JAS. CONNOR, Counsel.

To the Board of State Canvassers :

We request, on behalf of the parties whom we represent, that the board will decide upon the request submitted on the 13th instant, and regard its failure to decide as a refusal of the requests.

Mr. Cardozo introduced the following resolution :

Resolved, That this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its jurisdiction and duties be decided by the supreme court.

Unanimously adopted.

The board adjourned until 10 o'clock Thursday.

THURSDAY, November 16, 1876.

Pursuant to adjournment, board met at ten o'clock, all the members being present. On motion of the state treasurer, the board took a recess until 3 p. m.
3 p. m.—Board met and adjourned without action.

FRIDAY, November 17, 1876.

The board met at ten o'clock, all the members being present.

The following resolution was introduced by the attorney-general and unanimously adopted :

Resolved, That the board will now proceed to make up the statement of votes given at the last general election for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States and other officers, and also for and against the proposed constitutional amendment; and that during the canvassing of the returns from the several counties eight persons from the democratic and eight persons from the republican party be invited to be present and witness the same.

The board then took a recess until one o'clock.

The board re-assembled at 1 p. m., all the members being present.

The board then proceeded to canvass the returns of the managers of election at the several precincts in Abbeville County for presidential electors; and having canvassed Abbeville, Aiken, Anderson, Barnwell, Beaufort, Charleston, Chester, Chesterfield, Clarendon, Colleton, Darlington, Edgefield, Fairfield, Georgetown, at 11 p. m. adjourned until 10 o'clock Saturday, November 18.

SATURDAY, November 18, 1876.

The board met at 10 a. m., all the members being present.

The canvass of the electoral vote was proceeded with and concluded.

General Connor submitted the following exception :

Except to the aggregation of the result and the announcement of them, on the ground that the canvass and comparison of the managers' returns with the county canvassers' statements shows irregularities and errors and omissions which vitiate the result and prevent the aggregation of the county canvassers' statements from being regarded as a true aggregation of the votes cast at the election.

JAMES CONNOR, Counsel.

After which the board adjourned until 3 p. m.

4 o'clock p. m.—The board met at 4 p. m., all the members being present.

On motion of Mr. Cardozo, the board commenced the canvass from the returns of the county canvassers of the vote cast for State officers, and completed the same at 7 p. m.

General Gordon submitted the following request :

To the honorable board State canvassers :

I respectfully request, in the interest of fairness, that the clerks appointed by the board and the democratic attorneys respectively be permitted to take copies of the returns as certified by the precinct managers. I make this request both in order to insure satisfaction and in view of the fact that these returns may become an important factor in ascertaining the result of the election.

Respectfully,

J. B. GORDON.

The consideration of this request having been postponed until Monday morning, the board adjourned.

MONDAY, November 20, 1876.

The board met at 10 a. m., all the members being present.

The board canvassed the returns for Congressmen, circuit solicitors, and county officers, and completed said canvass at 8 o'clock p. m., after which the board adjourned.

TUESDAY, November 21, 1876.

The board met at 10 a. m., all the members being present.

A report was submitted to the supreme court, in obedience to its order of the 17th instant, showing the number of votes received by each person voted for at the election on the 7th day of November, as returned by the canvassers of election for the several counties.

The board adjourned until 4 p. m.

4 o'clock p. m.—The board re-assembled, all the members being present.

On motion of Mr. Stone, the following resolution was offered:

Resolved, That this board do now proceed to certify, determine, and declare the result of the election for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Upon a vote being taken, the resolution was rejected, those voting nay being Messrs. Purvis, Cardozo, and Hayne, those voting yea being Messrs. Dunn and Stone.

After which the board adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, November 22, 1876.

The board met at 10 a. m., all the members being present.

The secretary of state offered the following resolution; which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the votes cast for F. C. Dunn, as comptroller-general, and John B. Tolbert, as superintendent of education, be counted for T. C. Dunn and J. R. Tolbert, respectively, for the said offices of comptroller-general and superintendent of education.

The following certificates and determination of the board were submitted and adopted:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Office Secretary of State:

Whereas, in pursuance of the constitution and of the statutes of this State, an election was held on the seventh day of November, 1876, for seven electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and, upon examination of the returns which have been received, it appears that Christopher C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnson, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cooke, and W. F. Myers have been duly elected by the highest number of votes, we do therefore, by virtue of the powers in us vested, certify and declare that the said Christopher C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnson, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cooke, and W. F. Myers have been duly elected as electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Given under our hands and the seal of the State, in Columbia, this twenty-seventh day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and in the one hundred and first year of the Independence of the United States of America.

Board State Canvassers.

On the question as to whether the statement of the county canvassers of Laurens County should be included in the statement and determination of the board, the vote was as follows: Those voting in the negative were the adjutant and inspector general, comptroller-general, and State treasurer; those voting in the affirmative were the secretary of state and attorney-general.

On the same question as to Edgefield County the vote was as follows: Those voting in the negative were the adjutant and inspector general, comptroller-general, attorney-general, and State treasurer; in the affirmative, the secretary of state.

The secretary of state submitted the following, and asked that it be entered in the minutes:

"I vote 'yes' on the question of including Edgefield and Laurens Counties in the certificate and determination of the board, for the reason that the testimony before the board as to irregularities in the conduct of the election in those counties is entirely ex parte.

"H. E. HAYNE,
"Secretary of State."

The attorney-general submitted the following, and asked that it be entered in the minutes:

" To the board of State canvassers :

" I vote in favor of declaring such persons elected from Laurens County as members of the general assembly and county officers for said county as appear by the statement of the board of county canvassers of said county to have received the highest number of votes cast at the general election held on the 7th day of November, 1876"

" I do not regard the affidavit of W. H. Rutherford, one of the commissioners of election of said county, explaining why he signed the statement of the board of county canvassers under protest, sufficient, without further evidence, to justify this board in declining to declare any persons lawfully elected as members of the general assembly or county officers for said county.

I vote in favor of making no declaration as to what persons were elected as members of the general assembly from Edgefield County, or what persons were elected as county officers of said county, for the reason that it appears from papers filed with us on behalf of candidates of the democratic party that one precinct in said county was established at a place not fixed by law; and, further, that it appears from affidavits of managers of election at many of the precincts in said county—which affidavits are filed with this board—that said managers were unlawfully interfered with and prevented by threats or force from discharging their duties as managers as required.

In the light of these affidavits, and because of the doubt I entertain as to whether the precinct complained of as having been unlawfully established was a lawful precinct, I do not think this board can undertake to determine and declare what persons received the highest number of legal votes cast for the several officers voted for at said election.

William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State
canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

Be it remembered that, on the 14th day of November, A. D. 1876, come R. M. Sims, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leuphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise, as citizens of the said State, and as candidates for the offices of secretary of state, comptroller-general, State treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector-general, here into court, and give the court to be informed that, on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, a general election was duly held in the said State, and in all the counties thereof, for the following officers, to wit, for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; members of the Congress of the United States; governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, comptroller-general, treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector-general of the said State; and for members of the general assembly of the said State, from the counties thereof, respectively; and for sheriffs, clerks of the court, judges of probate, school commissioners, county commissioners, and coroners in the several counties, and solicitors in the several circuits of said State; and that at said election divers persons were candidates for the several offices, respectively; and that said election having been held as aforesaid, the votes for the opposing candidates for said offices, respectively, were thereupon duly counted by the several boards of managers of said election, and by them duly returned in their respective counties to the boards of canvassers of the said counties, respectively; and the said boards of county canvassers having made their statements of the votes cast, in manner as required by law, the same, together with all protests and papers appertaining to said election, were, by the said boards of county canvassers, duly transmitted to the board of State canvassers of the said State, or are in the course of transmission, as these relators are informed.

And your relators further give the court to be informed that the statements so transmitted by the boards of county canvassers to the board of State canvassers were, in a large number of instances, accompanied by protests and contests of the said election, upon the part of certain persons who were candidates for the said offices, and that thereupon your relators appeared before the said board of State canvassers on the 11th day of November, A. D. 1876, and insisted that so far as pertained to the election of members of the general assembly, the duty of the said board of State canvassers was purely ministerial; and demanded in writing that said board should do no more than to state the votes of the said counties as certified to it by the boards of county canvassers, and thereupon declare what persons had received the highest number of votes for the senate and house of representatives, and certify such statement to the secretary of state, who should transmit a copy of such certified statement and determination, under the seal of his office, to each person declared to be elected; but the said board of State canvassers refused the demand of your relators, and, on the contrary, resolved, contrary to the protest of your relators, to consider and determine matters of contest and protest in such cases, (all of which particularly appears by the copy of the demand and protest of your relators and of the resolution of the said board, annexed hereto, and to which your relators crave that reference may be had as part of this suggestion,) and the said board of State canvassers are now proceeding to hear and determine all cases of protest or contest that are made in regard to the election of members of the general assembly.

And that, so far as pertains to the election of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States and members of the Congress of the United States, your relators further demanded that the said board of State canvassers should limit itself to the duty of aggregating the managers' returns from the several counties, as certified to the said board by the county canvassers of the several counties, and of declaring the persons who had received the highest number of votes cast, respectively, for electors of President and Vice-President, and the highest number of votes cast for members of Congress in the several congressional districts; and further demanded that said board of State canvassers should not hear or assume to decide any question of protest or contest in regard to the election of any electors for President or Vice-President, or of any member of Congress; but the said board of canvassers refused to accede to the demand of your relators, and, on the contrary, resolved to hear protests as to the election of such electors and members of Congress, (as will appear by the copy of your relators' said demand and the certified copy of said resolution, hereto annexed, and to which your relators crave that reference may be had as part of this suggestion;) and are now proceeding to hear and determine all protests and contests in regard to said election for electors and members of Congress, and are thereby assuming functions and duties which belong to other tribunals.

And your relators further suggest that for the offices of treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector-general, contests or protests have been made before the said board of State canvassers; and the said board, as organized, consists, among others, of the Hon. F. L. Cardozo, as treasurer, who is a candidate for re-election; of the Hon. T. C. Dunn, as comptroller-general, who is a candidate for re-election; and of the Hon. H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, who is a candidate for re-election; and that at the said general election, held on the 7th instant, the said members of the board of State canvassers, together with all the candidates for the several offices on the one side, were voted for on one and the same ticket; and your relators, together with all candidates for the said offices on the other side, were voted for on one and the same opposing ticket; and the offices of each and every one of them depend upon the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest or protest in regard to any one of said offices is for them to make themselves judges in their own cases, and to enable them to declare the election in their own favor. And although in respect of the election of said officers, the duties and functions as prescribed by the act are judicial, yet, contrary to the protest of your relators, the said board of State canvassers have resolved that the said treasurer, comptroller-general, and secretary of state shall sit as members of said board to hear and determine all questions that shall come before them, except only that the said officers shall not vote upon their election, (all of which will appear by reference to the certified copy of the resolution of the said board, and your relators' protests, hereto annexed, and to which reference is craved as part of this suggestion;) and the said treasurer, comptroller-general, and secretary of state are now proceeding, as members of said board, to hear and determine the matters aforesaid.

And that the said board of State canvassers, in assuming to hear protests or contests in respect to the election of officers heretofore first mentioned and voted for at the said general election, excepting only the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor of said State, have assumed to exercise and discharge duties and functions which are clearly judicial; that article I, section 26, of the constitution of the State provides that "in the government of the commonwealth, the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other;" that said board of State canvassers, as organized, consists of the State treasurer, the comptroller-general, the secretary of state, the attorney-general, and the adjutant and inspector-general of said State, all of whom are executive officers of the State and belong to that department of the State government, and are prohibited by the constitution from exercising judicial powers or functions, and all acts or parts of acts giving to the members of the said board the power to hear and determine such contests or protests are unconstitutional and void. And notwithstanding the premises and the protests of your relators, the said board of State canvassers, and the several members thereof, as aforesaid, are now proceeding to hear and determine matters of contest and protest arising upon said election as aforesaid.

And the said board of State canvassers are proceeding to hear and determine all matters of contest or protest before them in regard to the election of persons who are candidates for the several offices aforesaid, at the said general election, and are proceeding to certify their determination on such contests and protests to the secretary of state; and the said secretary of state is about to issue certified copies of such determination of the Board of State canvassers to the parties in whose favor such determinations are made; whereas your relators aver that the said board of State canvassers have no right or authority to hear such protests or contests, or to determine the same, or to certify such determination to the secretary of state; that their only power or duty is to certify to the secretary of state the persons who have received the highest number of votes as appears by the managers' returns and the statements of the board of canvassers of the respective counties, without regard to or consideration of any protest or contest, and the secretary of state has no power or authority to receive or record any certified statement or determination of the board of State canvassers in any case in which the said board has heard or determined any protest or contest, or to issue to any person any copy of such certified determination in any case in which the board of State canvassers has heard and determined any protest or contest; wherefore your relators pray that a writ of prohibition may issue from this honorable court to the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, as chairman; and the said F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the said board of State canvassers, and to the said H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, prohibiting and forbidding them, the said board of State canvassers, from exercising any judicial functions or duties whatever in regard to any protests or contests which have been or may be submitted to them touching the said election held on the 7th day of November instant, and from hearing or determining any such contests or protests, and from doing anything other or further than the ministerial acts of ascertaining from the managers' returns and the statements forwarded by the boards of county canvassers for the respective counties, the persons who have received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates, and declaring the same, and certifying such statements to the secretary of state.

And particularly prohibiting and restraining the said board of State canvassers from hearing or determining any contest or protest in regard to the election of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, and members of the Congress of the United States, and from doing anything other or further than to ascertain from the managers' returns and the statements forwarded to the said board by the boards of county canvassers the person or persons who have received the greatest number of votes for said offices respectively, and certify the same to the secretary of state.

And restraining and prohibiting the said board of State canvassers from hearing or determining any contest or protest in regard to the election of members of the general assembly of the State, or from doing anything other or further than to declare the persons who, according to the managers' returns and the statements forwarded by the boards of county canvassers of the respective counties, have received the greatest number of votes in said counties for said offices, and to certify such determination to the secretary of state.

And restraining and prohibiting the said board of State canvassers from hearing or determining any contest or protest in regard to the election of county officers in the respective counties, and from doing any more than declaring the persons who have, according to the managers' returns and the statements made by the boards of county canvassers for the respective counties, received the greatest number of votes for said offices respectively, and certifying such determination to the secretary of state.

And restraining and prohibiting him, the said H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, from receiving or recording any certified statement or determination of the said board of State canvassers in any case in which the said board of State canvassers has heard or determined any contest or protest, and from issuing to any person any copy of any certified statement or determination of the board of State canvassers, in any case in which the said board of State canvassers has heard or determined any protest or contest, and from issuing any copy of any certified statement of the board of State canvassers to any person who has not received, according to the managers' returns and the statements forwarded by the boards of county canvassers, the greatest number of votes cast for the office for which he was a candidate.

And that your relators may have such other and further relief, and such other and further original and remedial writs, as may be necessary to the supervisory control of the said board of State canvassers, in furtherance of justice and to the protection of your relators.

Sworn to before me, November 13, 1876.

W. K. BACHMAN,
Notary Public.

So far as regards the election of members of the general assembly, that the board of State canvassers can only aggregate the vote of the several precincts in the counties as certified by the board of county canvassers, and declare what persons have received the greatest number of votes for the senate and house of representatives, and certify such statement to the secretary of state, who shall transmit a copy of such certified determination, under the seal of office, to each person declared to be elected. We submit this point, and ask the decision of the board thereon.

And the board of State canvassers, having thereupon passed its resolution refusing the said application, we protest against the said resolution, and notify the board that any further action by it, under such resolution, is regarded as illegal, null, and void.

JAS. CONNER,
Counsel for Protestants.

That the State board of canvassers have no right or duty in regard to the election of electors for President and Vice-President, and members of Congress, except to aggregate the vote of the respective counties, and certify what persons have received the greatest number of votes.

All questions of contest or protest belong to other tribunals, and not the board of State canvassers, to hear and determine.

JAS. CONNER,
Counsel for the Protestants.

That for the offices of treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, adjutant-general, and superintendent of education there is a contest or protest.

That the function and duties of the board of canvassers on such contests or protests are judicial; that the board of canvassers, as organized, consists of Hon. F. L. Cardozo, as treasurer, who is a candidate for re-election; of the Hon. T. C. Dunn, as comptroller-general, who is a candidate for re-election; of the Hon. H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, who is a candidate for re-election.

On behalf of the citizens of the State whom we represent, and on behalf of the democratic candidates on the State ticket, we protest against the board of State canvassers exercising jurisdiction. That the members of the said board hereinbefore named, and all the republican candidates, were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the offices of each and every one of them depend on the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, the said H. E. Hayne, or any or one of them, to hear and decide any contest and protest in regard to said offices, is for them to make themselves judges in their own case, and to enable them to decide the election in their own favor.

Against such a bold violation of justice we enter our earnest protest.

JAS. CONNER,

By the board: Resolved, That as to the returns of the election of member of the general assembly, the board will consider them in connection with any protests or notices of contests that may be presented; this having been the established practice of the board heretofore.

A true copy.

HENRY B. JOHNSON,
Secretary.

The following resolutions were adopted in regard to the points submitted by General Conner:

1. Resolved, That the board of State canvassers do not propose to canvass the returns of governor and lieutenant-governor, as it is of opinion that the determination of the election of those officers is given by the constitution to the general assembly.

2. Resolved, That the State board of canvassers have the right to hear protests as to the election of electors for President and Vice-President, and members of Congress, and to give their certificates to such persons as have the highest number of votes.

3. Resolved, That it is the opinion of the board of State canvassers that the secretary of state, State treasurer, and comptroller-general have the right to sit as members of this board, to hear and determine all questions coming before them, except that neither of the said officers shall vote upon his own election.

HENRY B. JOHNSON,
Secretary Board of State Canvassers.

To the honorable the Board of State Canvassers:

Please take notice that the relators above named will move before the supreme court of the State of South Carolina, at 10 o'clock a. m., on Tuesday, November 14, 1876, for the writs of prohibition and mandamus above prayed for.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX REL. R. M. SIMS, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise, as citizens of said State and as candidates,
vs.
 H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN; AND F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State canvassers; and H. E. Hayne as secretary of state.

Return to rule to show cause.

The respondents in the above-entitled cause, having been served with a rule to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue in accordance with the prayer of the suggestion, for cause show:

That their duties and powers as a board of State canvassers are defined in chapter 8, title 2, of the general statutes of the State of South Carolina as follows:

"SEC. 21. The secretary of state shall appoint a meeting of State canvassers, to be held at his office or some convenient place, on or before the 10th day of November next after such general election, for the purpose of canvassing the votes for all officers voted for at such election.

"SEC. 22. The secretary of state, comptroller-general, attorney-general, State auditor, State treasurer, adjutant and inspector-general, and the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections of the house of representatives shall constitute the State canvassers, four of whom shall be a sufficient number to form a board.

"SEC. 23. If a majority of these officers shall be unable, or shall fail to attend, the president of the senate, being notified by the secretary of state, shall attend without delay, and, with the officers attending, shall form a board.

"SEC. 24. The board when thus formed, shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct, and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe on the proper statement a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state.

"SEC. 26. Upon such statements, they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been, by the greatest number of votes, duly elected to such offices or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise, when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body.

"SEC. 27. The board shall have power to adjourn from day to day for a term not exceeding ten days.

"SEC. 29. The secretary of state shall record in his office, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, each certified statement and determination which shall be delivered to him by the board of State canvassers and every dissent or protest that shall have been delivered to him by a canvasser.

"SEC. 30. He shall, without delay, transmit a copy, under the seal of his office, of such certified determination to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor.

"SEC. 31. He shall cause a copy of such certified statements and determinations to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State.

"SEC. 32. He shall prepare a general certificate, under the seal of the State, and attested by him as secretary thereof, addressed to the House of Representatives of the United States in that Congress for which any person shall have been chosen of the due election of the person so chosen at such election as representative of this State in Congress, and shall transmit the same to said House of Representatives at their first meeting."

That as to the duty of the board of State canvassers in relation to the election of electors of President and Vice-President, section 7, chapter 9, General Statutes, page 35, provides as follows:

"The board of State canvassers shall proceed in making a statement of all the votes, and in determining and certifying the persons elected, in the manner prescribed by law in relation to the election of other officers."

The duty of the secretary of state in connection with this election is defined as follows by section 8, chapter 9, General Statutes:

"The secretary of state shall, without delay, cause a copy, under the seal of his office, of the certified determination of the board of State canvassers to be delivered to each of the persons therein declared to be elected, and for that purpose he may employ such and so many messengers as he shall deem necessary."

And these respondents further say, as to the matters of fact set out and alleged in the suggestion of the relators, that they admit the same to be true, except as follows:

That as to whether the several boards of managers of said election have duly counted the votes cast of said election, and have duly returned the same in their respective counties to the board of canvassers of said counties respectively; and whether the board of county canvassers have made their statements of the votes cast in the manner required by law, and the same, together with all the protests and papers appertaining to said election, have been forwarded by said boards of county canvassers to these respondents, or are in the course of transmission, these respondents are not informed, and as yet have not sufficient information to found a belief relating thereto. They admit that a portion of the returns of the managers of election and of the board of county canvassers have been received, but as yet they have not proceeded to examine and certify the same; that the returns of the managers of election and the board of county canvassers for several counties in the State have not as yet been received by these respondents, and no opportunity, therefore, as yet has been had to pass upon the same as required by law.

As to the suggestion on the part of the relators that, as the Hon. F. L. Cardozo, treasurer, Hon. T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general, and Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, members of the State board of canvassers, are candidates for re-election, and were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the relators, with all candidates for said offices on the other side, were voted for on one and the same opposing ticket, and the offices of each and every one of them depended upon the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, and the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest or protest in regard to any one of said offices is for them to make themselves judges in their own cases, these respondents say they deny the same, and say that when the said board passes upon the election or right of any one of these persons to the office for which he was a candidate, and for which he was voted at the election, that person must and will retire from the board for the time being, and until the other members of the board shall determine whether he or his opponent is entitled to a certificate of election.

This mode of procedure does not in any proper sense make any member of the board a judge in his own case, but expressly excludes him from such position.

These respondents say as the matters of law set out in the suggestion of the relators, the same are erroneous, and contravenes the statute law of the State hereinbefore recited, and the practice of the board of State canvassers since the adoption of the present constitution of the State.

These respondents say that they are ready and willing, as soon as the returns of the managers of election and the returns of the board of county canvassers, and all papers connected therewith, of the election held on the 7th of November instant are received, to proceed and discharge their whole duty according to the constitution and laws of the State, keeping strictly within the same, and this they are, under heavy penalty, bound to do.

Having fully answered the exigencies of said rule, these respondents pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs, in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA EX RELATIONE R. M. SIMS,
Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise, as citizens of the said State and as candidates,

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN; AND F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

Be it remembered that, on the 14th day of November, A. D. 1876, come R. M. Sims, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise, as citizens of the said State, and as candidates for the offices of secretary of state, comptroller-general, state treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector-general, here into court, and give the court to be informed that on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, a general election was duly held in the said State and in all the counties thereof, for the following officers, to wit: For electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, members of Congress of the United States, governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, comptroller-general, treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector-general of the said State; and for members of the general assembly of the said State from the counties thereof, respectively; and for sheriffs, clerks of the court, judges of probate, school-commissioners, county commissioners, and coroners in the several counties, and solicitors in the several circuits of said State; and that at said election divers persons were candidates for the said several offices, respectively; and that said election having been held as aforesaid, the votes for the opposing candidates for said offices, respectively, were thereupon duly counted by the several boards of managers of said election, and by them duly returned in their respective counties to the boards of canvassers of the said counties, respectively; and the said boards of county canvassers having made their statements of the votes cast in manner as required by law, the same, together with all protests and papers appertaining to said election, were by the said boards of county canvassers duly transmitted to the board of State canvassers of the said State, or are in the course of transmission, as these relators are informed.

and protest of your relators and of the resolution of the said board, annexed thereto, and to which your relators crave that reference may be had as part of this suggestion;) and the said board of State canvassers are now proceeding to hear and determine all cases of protest or contest that are made in regard to the election of members of the general assembly.

And that, so far as pertains to the election of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, and members of the Congress of the United States, your relators further demanded that the said board of State canvassers should limit itself to the duty of aggregating the managers' returns from the several counties, as certified to the said board by the county canvassers of the several counties, and of declaring the persons who have received the highest number of votes cast, respectively, for electors of President and Vice-President, and the highest number of votes cast for members of Congress in the several congressional districts; and further demanded that said board of State canvassers should not hear or assume to decide any question of protest or contest in regard to the election of any electors for President or Vice-President, or of any member of Congress; but the said board of canvassers refused to accede to the demand of your relators, and on the contrary resolved to hear protests as to the election of such electors and members of Congress (as will appear by the copy of your relators' said demand and the certified copy of said resolution, hereto annexed, and to which your relators crave that reference may be had as part of this suggestion;) and are now proceeding to hear and determine all protests and contests in regard to said election for electors and members of Congress, and are thereby assuming functions and duties which belong to other tribunals.

And your relators further suggest, that for the offices of treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and adjutant and inspector general, contests or protests have been made before the said board of State canvassers; and the said board, as organized, consists, among others, of the Hon. F. L. Cardozo, as treasurer, who is a candidate for re-election; of the Hon. T. C. Dunn, as comptroller-general, who is a candidate for re-election; and of the Hon. H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, who is a candidate for re-election; and that at the said general election held on the 7th instant the said members of the board of State canvassers, together with all the candidates for the several offices on the one side, were voted for on one and the same ticket, and your relators, together with all candidates for the said offices on the other side, were voted for on one and the same opposing ticket; and the offices of each and every one of them depend upon the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest or protest in regard to any one of said offices is for them to make themselves judges in their own cases, and to enable them to declare the election in their own favor. And although in respect of the election of said officers the duties and functions as prescribed by the act are judicial, yet contrary to the protest of your relators, the said board of State canvassers have resolved that the said treasurer, comptroller-general, and secretary of state shall sit as members of said board, to hear and determine all questions that shall come before them, except only that the said officers shall not vote upon their own election, (all of which will appear by reference to the certified copy of the resolution of the said board and your relators' protests, hereto annexed, and to which reference is craved as part of this suggestion;) and the said treasurer, comptroller-general, and secretary of state are now proceeding, as members of said board, to hear and determine the matters aforesaid.

And that the said board of canvassers, in assuming to hear and determine protests or contests in respect to the election of officers hereinbefore first mentioned and voted for at the said general election, excepting only the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor of said State, have assumed to exercise and discharge duties and functions which are clearly judicial; that article 1, section 26, of the constitution of the State provides that "in the government of the commonwealth, the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other;" that said board of State canvassers, as organized, consists of the State treasurer, the comptroller-general, the secretary of state, the attorney-general, and the adjutant and inspector general of said State; all of whom are executive officers of the State and belong to that department of the State government, and are prohibited by the constitution from exercising judicial powers or functions; and all acts or parts of acts giving to the members of the said board the power to hear and determine such contests or protests are unconstitutional and void. And notwithstanding the premises and the protests of your relators, the said board of State canvassers and the several members thereof, as aforesaid, are now proceeding to hear and determine matters of contest and protest arising upon said election as aforesaid.

And the said board of State canvassers are proceeding to hear and determine all matters of contest or protest before them in regard to the election of persons who are candidates for the several offices aforesaid, at the said general election, and are proceeding to certify their determination on such contests and protests to the secretary of state; and the said secretary of state is about to issue certified copies of such determination of the board of State canvassers to the parties in whose favor such determinations are made; whereas your relators aver that the said board of State canvassers have no right or authority to hear such protests or contests, or to determine the same, or to certify such determination to the secretary of state; that their only power or duty is to certify to the secretary of state the persons who have received the highest number of votes as appears by the managers' returns and the statements of the boards of canvassers of the respective counties, without regard to or consideration of any protest or contest; and the secretary of state has no power or authority to receive or record any certified statement or determination of the board of State canvassers in any case in which the said board has heard or determined any protest or contest, or to issue to any person any copy of such certified determination in any case in which the board of State canvassers has heard and determined any protest or contest; wherefore your relators pray that a writ of mandamus may issue from this honorable court to the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, as chairman; and the said F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, members of the said board of State canvassers, commanding and compelling them to ascertain from the managers' returns and statements forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, the persons who, at the general election held on the said 7th day of November instant, received the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates respectively, and to declare the same, and certify such declaration, and none other, to the secretary of state, and commanding and compelling them to perform all ministerial acts devolved upon them by the acts of the general assembly, and commanding and compelling them to revoke and annul all illegal and unauthorized acts by them committed, and to revoke and annul any determination or decision which they have made in any case of contest or protest, if any such there be.

W. K. BACHMAN,
Notary Public.

So far as regards the election of members of the general assembly, that the board of State canvassers can only aggregate the vote of the several precincts in the counties as certified by the board of county canvassers, and declare what persons have received the greatest number of votes for the senate and house of representatives, and certify such statement to the secretary of state, who shall transmit a copy of such certified determination, under the seal of office, to each person declared to be elected, we submit this point, and ask the decision of the board thereon.

And the board of State canvassers, having thereupon passed its resolution refusing the said application, we protest against the said resolution, and notify the board that any further action by it, under such resolution, is regarded as illegal, null, and void.

JAS. CONNER,
Counsel for Protestants.

That the State board of canvassers have no right or duty in regard to the election of electors for President and Vice-President, and members of Congress, except to aggregate the vote of the respective counties, and certify what persons have received the greatest number of votes.

All questions of contest or protest belong to other tribunals, and not the board of State canvassers, to hear and determine.

JAS. CONNER,
Counsel for the Protestants.

That for the offices of treasurer, comptroller-general, secretary of state, attorney-general, adjutant-general, and superintendent of education there is a contest or protest.

That the functions and duties of the board of canvassers on such contests or protests are judicial. That the board of canvassers, as organized, consists of Hon. F. L. Cardozo as treasurer, (who is a candidate for re-election;) of the Hon. T. C. Dunn as comptroller-general, (who is a candidate for re-election;) of the Hon. H. E. Hayne as secretary of State, (who is a candidate for re-election.)

On behalf of the citizens of the State whom we represent, and on behalf of the democratic candidates on the State ticket, we protest against the board of State canvassers exercising jurisdiction. That the members of the said board hereinbefore named, and all the republican candidates, were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the offices of each and every one of them depend on the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest and protest in regard to said offices, is for them to make themselves judges in their own case, and to enable them to decide the election in their own favor.

Against such a bold violation of justice we enter our earnest protest.

JAMES CONNER,
Counsel for Protestants.

By the board.—Resolved, That as to the returns of the election of members of the general assembly, the board will consider them in connection with any protests or notices of contests that may be presented; this having been the established practice of the board heretofore.

A true copy.

HENRY B. JOHNSON, Secretary.

The following resolutions were adopted in regard to the points submitted by General Conner:

1. Resolved, That the board of State canvassers do not propose to canvass the returns of governor and lieutenant-governor, as it is of opinion that the determination of the election of those officers is given by the constitution to the general assembly.

2. Resolved, That the State board of canvassers have the right to hear protests as to the election of electors for President and Vice-President, and members of Congress, and to give their certificate to such persons as have the highest number of votes.

3. Resolved, That it is the opinion of the board of state canvassers that the secretary of state, state treasurer, and comptroller-general have the right to sit as members of this board, to hear and determine all questions coming before them, except that neither of the said officers shall vote upon his own election.

HENRY B. JOHNSON,
Secretary Board of State Canvassers.

To the honorable the Board of State Canvassers:

Please take notice that the relators above named will move before the supreme court of the State of South Carolina, at 10 o'clock a. m., on Tuesday, November 14, 1876, for the writs of prohibition and mandamus above prayed for.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX REL. R. M. SIMS, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise, as citizens of said State and as candidates,
vs.
 H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN; AND F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

Return to rule to show cause.

The respondents in the above-entitled cause, having been served with a rule to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue in accordance with the prayer of the suggestion, for cause show—

That their duties and powers as a board of State canvassers are defined in chapter 8, title 2, of the general statutes of the State of South Carolina, as follows:

"SEC. 21. The secretary of state shall appoint a meeting of State canvassers, to be held at his office, or some convenient place, on or before the tenth day of November next after such general election, for the purpose of canvassing the votes for all officers voted for at such election.

"SEC. 22. The secretary of state, comptroller-general, attorney-general, State auditor, State treasurer, adjutant and inspector-general, and the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections of the house of representatives shall constitute the State canvassers, four of whom shall be a sufficient number to form a board.

"SEC. 23. If a majority of these officers shall be unable, or shall fail, to attend, the president of the senate, being notified by the secretary of state, shall attend without delay, and, with the officers attending, shall form a board.

"SEC. 24. The board, when thus formed, shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct, and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe on the proper statement a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of State.

"SEC. 26. Upon such statements, they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been, by the greatest number of votes, duly elected to such offices, or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise, when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body.

"SEC. 27. The board shall have power to adjourn from day to day for a term not exceeding ten days.

"SEC. 29. The secretary of State shall record in his office, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, each certified statement and determination which shall be delivered to him by the board of State canvassers and every dissent or protest that shall have been delivered to him by a canvasser.

"SEC. 30. He shall, without delay, transmit a copy, under the seal of his office, of such certified determination to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor.

"SEC. 31. He shall cause a copy of such certified statements and determination to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State.

"SEC. 32. He shall prepare a general certificate, under the seal of the State, and attested by him as secretary thereof, addressed to the House of Representatives of the United States in that Congress for which any person shall have been chosen, of the due election of the person so chosen at such election as Representative of this State in Congress, and shall transmit the same to said House of Representatives at their first meeting."

That as to the duty of the board of State canvassers in relation to the election of electors of President and Vice-President, section 7, chapter 9, general statutes, page 35, provides as follows:

"The board of State canvassers shall proceed, in making a statement of all the votes, and in determining and certifying the persons elected, in the manner prescribed by law in relation to the election of other officers."

The duty of the secretary of state, in connection with this election, is defined as follows by section 8, chapter 9, general statutes:

"The secretary of state shall, without delay, cause a copy, under the seal of his office, of the certified determination of the board of State canvassers to be delivered to each of the persons therein declared to be elected, and for that purpose he may employ such and so many messengers as he shall deem necessary."

And these respondents further say, as to the matters of fact set out and alleged in the suggestion of the relators, that they admit the same to be true, except as follows:

"That as to whether the several boards of managers of said election have duly counted the votes cast of said election, and have duly returned the same in their respective counties to the board of canvassers of said counties respectively; and whether the board of county canvassers have made their statements of the votes cast in the manner required by law, and the same, together with all the protests and papers appertaining to said election, have been forwarded by said boards of county canvassers to these respondents, or are in the course of transmission, these respondents are not informed, and as yet have not sufficient information to found a belief relating thereto. They admit that a portion of the returns of the managers of election and of the board of county canvassers have been received, but as yet they have not proceeded to examine and certify the same. That the returns of the managers of election and the board of county canvassers for several counties in the State have not as yet been received by these respondents, and no opportunity, therefore, as yet has been had to pass upon the same, as required by law.

As to the suggestion, on the part of the relators, that as the Hon. F. L. Cardozo, treasurer, Hon. T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general, and Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, members of the State board of canvassers, are candidates for re-election, and were voted for on one and the same ticket, and the relators, with all candidates for said offices on the other side, were voted for on one and the same opposing ticket, and the offices of each and every one of them depended upon the same canvass and decision; and for the said F. L. Cardozo, the said T. C. Dunn, and the said H. E. Hayne, or any one of them, to hear and decide any contest or protest in regard to any one of said offices is for them to make themselves judges in their own cases, these respondents say they deny the same, and say that when the said board passes upon the election or right of any one of these persons to the office for which he was a candidate, and for which he was voted at the election, that person must and will retire from the board for the time being, and until the other members of the board shall determine whether he or his opponent is entitled to a certificate of election.

This mode of procedure does not in any proper sense make any member of the board a judge in his own case, but expressly excludes him from such position.

These respondents say as to the matters of law set out in the suggestion of the relators, the same are erroneous and contravene the statute-law of the State, hereinbefore recited, and the practice of the board of State canvassers since the adoption of the present constitution of the State.

These respondents say that they are ready and willing, as soon as the returns of the managers of election and the returns of the board of county canvassers, and all papers connected therewith, of the election held on the 7th of November instant, are received, to proceed and discharge their whole duty according to the constitution and laws of the State, keeping strictly within the same, and this they are, under heavy penalty, bound to do.

Having fully answered the exigencies of said rule, these respondents pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs, in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

This statement is made to the court in obedience to its order of November 17, 1876, but it is respectfully submitted that under the present proceedings in this court, this board is not by law compelled to report any of its action to the court.

This board further declares that in its opinion the votes returned for F. C. Dunn for comptroller-general should be counted for Thomas C. Dunn, the only candidate for the office of comptroller-general by the name of Dunn. By making this addition to the votes cast for said officer the said Thomas C. Dunn has received 91,176 votes for the office of comptroller-general.

So also the votes (532 in number) returned for John B. Tolbert should be counted for John R. Tolbert for the office of superintendent of education. By making this addition, the said John R. Tolbert has received for said office 91,644 votes.

This board further shows to this court that allegations and evidences of fraud have been filed with this board as to the election held in Edgefield County by many of the managers of election in said county; that similar allegations have been made and filed as to one or more precincts in Barnwell County; that the statements of the commissioners of election for Laurens County laid before this board are signed by two commissioners only, one of whom signed, as he certifies, under protest. Said commissioner has also filed an affidavit that the reason he signed said statements was because he was in fear of bodily injury if he refused to do so. That various protests and notices of contest have been filed from many other counties of the State, alleging irregularities on the part of the election-officers, illegal voting, &c.

That in view of the said allegations, protests, and notices of contest, none of which have been heard or passed upon by this board because of the pendency of these proceedings, this board cannot, in their opinion properly, ascertain and certify who have actually received the greater number of legal votes in said counties for the several offices voted for, unless they have the opportunity of investigating these allegations and hearing evidence upon these protests.

Mandamus.

It appearing from an inspection of the above-stated petition for mandamus that the same relates to different classes of officers, to wit, of members of the general assembly, of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, of members of Congress of the United States, of circuit solicitors, of county officers; and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that there are, or may be shown to be, different provisions or rules of law applicable to these several classes of officers; and that the emergency of time may render necessary and proper a priority in the order in which the court shall pass upon the questions of law relating and applicable to these different classes of officers respectively:

Ordered, That the petition herein be considered and determined by the court as if several separate petitions had been filed herein, one each in the several above-specified different classes of officers.

vs. } Suggestion for mandamus.
H. E. HAYNE ET AL., BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS, } and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state. }

PER CURIAM.—Moses, C. J.

The necessity of an immediate decision prevents, for the present, any extended views of the court on the question submitted for its determination. Neither does it propose now to declare its views of the extent or the character of the powers of the board of State canvassers, except so far as they relate to the election of members of the general assembly.

The constitution, by the 14th section of the 2d article, declares that "each house shall judge of the election, return, and qualification of its own members." It was necessary, therefore, for the organization of each house, that a mode should be provided through which the choice of the electors might be made known, so far as it primarily appeared from the evidence, which the statutes required should be submitted to them. Without some such mode of ascertaining, in the first instance, the probable will of the constituency, there could be no organization of either house. It was not intended by the authority conferred on the State board to delegate to it any of the power vested by the constitution in "each house," but merely to provide a mode and manner which was deemed the most reliable and effective in ascertaining in each county the will of the people, expressed through the ballot-box, as to the offices to be filled by the election. The machinery by which the proposed end was to be met was through the appointment of precinct managers, boards of county canvassers, and the board of State canvassers. The several "statements" submitted to the last-named board, as required by the act, provided the means, not of "judging of the election, return, and qualifications of the members of either house," but of ascertaining who, according to the mode by which the fact was to be established, were entitled to the certificates, not to show the election in the terms of the constitution, but the apparent choice of the people as expressed in the "statements;" and this conclusion was to be reached by the evidence of the number of votes cast, and of the parties in whose favor the greatest number of votes was given, for the senate or house, as the case might be. It was not competent for the board to determine, as the house only could, who, in fact, was the chosen member; for the extent of their means to that end were not commensurate with that of the house. One averring against the seat of another, who is admitted by possession of the certificate, does not arrest his right, by way of appeal from the action of the board, but asks the intervention of the house by force of its inherent and original jurisdiction. The board of State canvassers having certified to this court the number of votes given in the various counties for members of the general assembly, now, in accordance with the views above expressed—

It is ordered, That a writ of peremptory mandamus do issue; directed to the chairman and members of the board of State canvassers and the secretary of state, commanding the said board forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senators and members of the house of representatives the persons who by said certificate of the said board to this court have received the greatest number of votes therefor, and do forthwith deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state; and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State.

William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State
canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA:

To H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, chairman; and F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state:

Whereas R. M. Sims, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson and E. W. Moise, relators, did, on the 14th day of November, A. D. 1876, file their petition and suggestion in the supreme court of this State against you for a writ of mandamus; and whereas the said court did thereupon, on the same day, issue a rule against you to show cause why the said writ should not issue, to which said rule you duly responded; and whereas the said court did, on the 22d day of November, A. D. 1876, after consideration of the matters in issue, order and adjudge that a writ of peremptory mandamus do issue, directed to you, commanding the said board of State canvassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senators and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by the certificate of the said board to the said court, had received the greatest number of votes therefor, and to forthwith deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State:

Now, therefore, we do command you, the said respondents, immediately after the receipt of this writ, that you, H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, chairman; F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senators and members of the house of representatives of the general assembly of the State of South Carolina the persons who, by the certificate of the said board of State canvassers to the said supreme court of the said State, have received the greatest number of votes therefor, and do forthwith deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to H. E. Hayne, secretary of state.

And that you, H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, do immediately, upon the receipt of said certified statement and declaration, make the proper record thereof in the office of secretary of state, and do, without delay, transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of the secretary of state, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor of the said State, and do cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of the said State.

And how you the said respondents shall have executed this our writ make known to the said supreme court forthwith.

Witness, Albert M. Boozer, clerk of the supreme court of the State of South Carolina, at Columbia, this 22d day of November, A. D. 1876.

THE STATE EX RELATIONE R. M. SIMS, JOHNSON HAGOOD, et al., as citizens of said State, and as candidates, and in behalf of electors for President and Vice-President,

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE; F. L. CARDOZO, State-treasurer, et al., members of the State board of canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, secretary of state.

The said H. E. Hayne, respectfully answering, says as follows:

1. That under and by virtue of the general statutes of the State of South Carolina he, as secretary of state, constituted one of the board of State canvassers of election held in said State on Tuesday, the 7th day of November instant.

2. That after the holding of the election on said day he was notified by H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, of a meeting of the State canvassers on the 10th day of November for the purpose of counting the votes of all officers voted for on said day.

3. That he and the other persons and officers constituting said board met accordingly on the 10th day of November and adjourned from day to day, (Sunday excepted,) and proceeded to perform the duties imposed on them by law, and, among other things, to ascertain, determine, declare, and certify who had been elected at said election on said day electors for President and Vice-President.

4. That, having fully completed their labors and performed their duties in the premises, a motion was, on Wednesday, the 22d instant, regularly made and carried that the said board adjourn sine die, and thereupon the said board accordingly adjourned at the hour of 12.48 p. m. of said day; and at the time of the order of said court in this case, and of the service thereof on this defendant, the board had ceased to exist, and that his function as a member thereof had entirely ceased to exist.

5. He therefore respectfully submits that no further proceedings or action can be taken by him as a member of said board, and that, in view of its dissolution, a peremptory mandamus would be unavailing and cannot properly be allowed.

R. B. ELLIOTT,
Attorneys for Respondent.

Notary Public, South Carolina.

The State of South Carolina, in the supreme court.

THE STATE EX RELATIONE R. M. SIMS, JOHNSON HAGOOD,
S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E.
W. Moise,

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN; AND F. L.
Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general;
William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general; members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

And now come into court the relators aforesaid, and give the court to understand and be informed that, on the pleadings filed in this court by the relators against the respondents, the questions submitted to the court for its adjudication were the duties and powers of the board of State canvassers under the law and the rights of the relators and the citizens of the State thereunder. That your relators asked for a rule to show cause, and inserted in said rule an ad-interim order that no further proceedings should be had by the said board of State canvassers until the decision of the court upon the matters submitted to it. That your honors refused to grant such ad-interim order, and directed that it should be stricken out of the rule, stating in substance that the board could not and would not do anything after rule had been served upon them from this court. If they do, it will be a high contempt of court.

That the board of State canvassers, by their resolution, filed as an exhibit in this cause, resolved, "That this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its powers and duties be decided by the supreme court."

That on the 21st day of November, instant, the board of State canvassers filed in court a certified statement of the persons who had received, at the general election held on the 7th of November, instant, the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates, according to the statements of the boards of county canvassers.

That the board of State canvassers in the same report informed the court that there were clerical errors in regard to T. C. Dunn and J. R. Tolbert, candidates on the one side for comptroller-general and superintendent of education, respectively; and that there were contests and protests from the counties of Edgefield, Barnwell, and Laurens, on account of irregularities, frauds, and intimidation in said counties. But in said report the board of State canvassers did not claim any authority to correct these clerical errors or to adjudicate the protests and contests, their authority and duty in these respects being then under the consideration of the court.

That on the 22d day of November, instant, this court, by its order, commanded "the board of State canvassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senators and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by said certificate of the said board to the court, have received the greatest number of votes therefor, and to forthwith deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and to cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more newspapers of the State.

That immediately thereafter, and without adjournment, the court took up the matter of electors for President and Vice-President, wherein these relators alleged that there were many errors and irregularities in the statements of the county canvassers, and many discrepancies between the county canvassers' statements and the managers' returns of the precincts, and prayed that the board of State canvassers should compare the statements of the county canvassers with the managers' returns so that the true result of the election should be reached, and that the board should perform their duties according to law, and submit to this court their report with all official papers on which the same is in any manner based.

And this court thereupon issued its rule directed to said board of State canvassers to show cause why the prayer of the relators should not be granted. That the said board of State canvassers, by their counsel, asked for time to answer said rule, alleging, among other things, that the duties imposed upon the respondents, by the previous order of the court in regard to members of the general assembly, would occupy time and prevent due attention to the rule, and time was accordingly granted.

That while these proceedings were being had in court, and the respondents were asking the indulgence of the court, the respondents met without the knowledge of these relators or of any of the parties interested, altered the alleged clerical errors in favor of T. C. Dunn and J. R. Tolbert, candidates of their own party, and thereby reversed the certified aggregation of votes which they had submitted to the court, and further refused to certify as elected the persons who, in Edgefield and Laurens counties, had received the greatest number of votes for members of the general assembly, as appears by the certified report of the said board submitted to this court, and thereby decided the protests from those counties in favor of their own party, and against these relators and the democratic members from those counties, one member of said board voting against said action of the board in this regard, because the testimony was entirely ex parte. And the said board of State canvassers further declared elected all the republican candidates for electors, and declared F. L. Cardozo elected as treasurer, T. C. Dunn, elected as comptroller-general, H. E. Hayne elected as secretary of state, R. B. Elliott elected as attorney-general, John R. Tolbert elected as superintendent of education, and James Kenedy elected as adjutant and inspector-general; it not appearing by the minutes of said board that either the said F. L. Cardozo, T. C. Dunn, or H. E. Hayne withdrew from said board when their election was acted upon and declared, and then adjourned sine die between the hours of 12 m. and 1 p. m. of the 22d; all of which will appear by the certified copy of the minutes of the said board of State canvassers, hereto annexed.

And these relators show to this court that the mandate and order of this court have been disobeyed by the said board of State canvassers. That, while in court, a party to the proceedings to decide the powers and duties and submitting itself to the jurisdiction of the court, the said board of State canvassers has not waited for the judgment of the court determining its legal duties and powers and the proper execution of them, but has assumed to construe the law and decide those questions for itself and act on its own decision, and to place itself, by adjournment, beyond the reach and control of the court.

And these relators submit this information to the court that such order may be made thereon as to the court may seem meet and proper.

JAMES CONNER, Counsel.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Richland :

Charles F. Janney, being duly sworn, deposes and says the facts set forth in the above information and suggestion are true of his own knowledge, except such as are stated on information and belief, and as to those he believes it to be true.

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

On the question as to whether the statement of county canvassers of Laurens County should be included in the statement and determination of the board, the vote was as follows:

Those voting in the negative were, the adjutant and inspector general, comptroller-general, and State treasurer; those voting in the affirmative were, the secretary of state and attorney-general. On the same question as to Edgefield County, the vote was as follows: those voting in the negative were, the adjutant and inspector general, comptroller-general, attorney-general, and State treasurer; in the affirmative, the secretary of state. The secretary of state submitted the following, and asked that it be entered on the minutes:

"I vote yes on the question of including Edgefield and Laurens Counties in the certificate and determination of the board, for the reason that the testimony before the board as to irregularities in the conduct of the election in those counties is entirely ex parte.

"H. E. HAYNE,

On hearing the suggestion and information of the relators, it is ordered that a rule do issue, directed to H. E. Hayne, to record in his office the certified statement of the board of State canvassers reported to this court, and do certify thereon, as duly elected, the persons who, by the said certificate of the board to this court, have received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house of representatives from the several counties in the State, and, without delay, transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby certified to be elected to the offices aforesaid, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more of the newspapers of the State; and that he do show cause to this court, under this order, by four (4) o'clock of this day.

The return of Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, to the rule served upon him this day, to show cause why a writ of peremptory mandamus should not issue, commanding him to record in his office the certified statement of the board of State canvassers reported to this court, and to certify thereon, as duly elected, the persons who, by the said certificate of the board to this court, have received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house of representatives from the several counties in the State, and, without delay, transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby certified to be elected to the offices aforesaid, &c., respectfully shows to the court :

I. That the respondent has on file in his office a statement of the board of State canvassers as to the number of votes cast for members of the general assembly in the several counties of the State, and that he is now having the same recorded. That he has also received from the said board a certificate of the persons whom the said board has determined and declared to be elected as members of the general assembly of the said State, and that he is proceeding, as required by law, to transmit copies, under the seal of his office, of such certified determination to each person thereby declared to be elected.

II. This respondent further shows that he has no power or authority to issue certificates except upon the determination of the board of State canvassers.

III. That the certified statement of the aggregation of the returns of the several boards of county commissioners, with the limitations and qualifications therein expressed, referred to and made a part of this return, and of record in this court, was not, and is not, the determination of the election held on the 7th instant by the board of State canvassers, and is not the certified statement and determination by law required to be recorded in respondent's office. That the certificate of the board of State canvassers of their determination of said election, as appears from the record of said determination in the office of this respondent, is not materially different from what is necessarily implied by the return made to this court, as this respondent is informed and believes ; but for more certain information to the court this respondent appends to this return a copy of the determination of the board of State canvassers of said election, as certified to this respondent on the 22d day of November, A. D. 1876, by the board of State canvassers, as to members of the general assembly.

IV. That this respondent is not by law required to transmit to any person anything but the certified determination of the election which shall be delivered to him by the board of State canvassers, and the paper referred to is not such determination, and therefore cannot by this respondent be transmitted as required by the relators.

Having fully answered the rule, this respondent prays hence be dismissed, and the rule discharged.

Rule to show cause.

It is ordered that the respondent, H. E. Personally appeared Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state; Thomas C. Dunn, comptroller-general, F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, late adjutant and inspector general, who, on oath, says, each for himself, as follows:

That he, H. E. Hayne, was served at 1.30 o'clock p. m.; he, Thomas C. Dunn, was served at 1.30 o'clock p. m.; he, F. L. Cardozo, was served at 1 o'clock p. m.; he, William Stone, was served at 1.15 o'clock p. m.; and he, H. W. Purvis, was served at 1.15 o'clock p. m., with a certified copy of a rule to show cause before this court, at 4 o'clock p. m. of this day, (November 24, 1876,) why he and they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying the mandate of this court in this case:

That these deponents have received no copy of any suggestions upon which said rule was issued, and are not informed with particularity as to what they are required to make answer; that one mandate was served upon them as a board, which they conceive they have obeyed, and do not know in what way they have violated it, or can be charged with having violated it; that the leading counsel for the deponents, D. T. Corbin, esq., has also been served with a rule to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt of court; which rule is also made returnable at 4 o'clock p. m. this day; that in the interval of only three hours allowed them by the court, these deponents have had no sufficient opportunity to consult with counsel as to what sort of a return they should make to said rule; that these deponents, and each of them, have endeavored to follow out the provisions of the statute regulating them in the discharge of their duties, and they respectfully submit that a reasonable time ought to be permitted to them in which to make their defense; and they believe that if time is allowed them they can fully and satisfactorily answer the said rule.

To obtain such necessary time, and not for the purpose of delay, this affidavit is made.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX RELATIONE R. M. SIMS,
Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S.
Thompson, and E. W. Moise,

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN, AND F. L.
Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general, and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

In re Rule vs. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, chairman of board of State canvassers, for contempt.

The relators in the above cause having filed their suggestion in this court on the 14th day of November, 1876, praying, among other things, that the said respondents might be commanded by this court to perform their duties as State canvassers according to law; and the said respondents having answered thereto, and the duties and powers of the board of State canvassers having been submitted to this court and argument heard thereon; and the said respondents having adopted their resolution, "that this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its powers and duties be decided by the supreme court," which said resolution was duly filed as an exhibit in this cause; and the said board of State canvassers having, in obedience to an order of this court, made their certified report to this court, setting forth the persons who had received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates at the general election held in this State on the 7th instant; and this court having on the 22d day of November, 1876, made its order that a writ of mandamus do issue, directed to the said respondents, commanding the said board of State canvassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senator and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by the certificate of the said board of State canvassers to the said court, had received the greatest number of votes therefor, and forthwith to deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State;

And the said board of State canvassers having, on the 22d of November, and while this court was in session, met and made their other certified statement of the persons who had received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house of representatives from the several counties, and declared the same duly elected, and delivered said certified statement and declaration to the secretary of State; but the said board of State canvassers refused to certify and declare as elected the persons who had received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and adjourned sine die;

And this court, in pursuance of its order dated the 22d day of November, having issued its writ of mandamus, directed to the said respondents, commanding them to do and perform the matters and things heretofore set forth in their said order, and to make known to said court, forthwith, how they, the said respondents, executed said writ;

And said writ having been duly served upon the said respondents, and the said respondents having failed to obey the mandate of this court expressed in said writ, and having failed to make any return to said writ, showing their performance and execution of the mandate of the court, or good and sufficient cause why the same had not been done; and thereupon a rule having issued from this court, on the 24th day of November, directing the said respondents to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying said mandate of the court; and said rule having been served on the said respondents, and the said respondents having appeared in court in answer to said rule, and having failed to make any return thereto, or to show any good and sufficient reason why they had not obeyed and executed the mandate of this court:

It is now adjudged, that the said H. E. Hayne is in contempt of this court; and it is ordered that he do pay a fine of fifteen hundred dollars, and that the sheriff of Richland County do take him, the said H. E. Hayne, into custody, and confine him in the common jail of said county until he be discharged by the order of this court.

William Stone, attorney-general, and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

In re Rule vs. H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, member of board of State canvassers, for contempt.

The relators in the above cause having filed their suggestion in this court on the 14th day of November, 1876, praying, among other things, that the said respondents might be commanded by this court to perform their duties as State canvassers according to law; and the said respondents having answered thereto, and the duties and powers of the board of State canvassers having been submitted to this court and argument heard thereon; and the said respondents having adopted their resolution, "that this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its powers and duties be decided by the supreme court;" which said resolution was duly filed as an exhibit in this cause; and the said board of State canvassers having, in obedience to an order of this court, made their certified report to this court, setting forth the persons who had received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates, at the general election held in this State on the 7th instant; and this court having, on the 22d day of November, 1876, made its order that a writ of mandamus do issue, directed to the said respondents, commanding the said board of State canvassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senator and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by the certificate of the said board of State canvassers to the said court, had received the greatest number of votes therefor, and forthwith to deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State;

And this court, in pursuance of its order dated the 22d day of November, having issued its writ of mandamus, directed to the said respondents, commanding them to do and perform the matters and things heretofore set forth in their said order, and to make known to said court forthwith how they, the said respondents, shall have executed said writ;

And said writ having been duly served upon the said respondents, and the said respondents having failed to obey the mandate of this court expressed in said writ, and having failed to make any return to said writ, showing their performance and execution of the mandate of the court, or good and sufficient cause why the same had not been done; and thereupon a rule having issued from this court on the 24th day of November, directing the said respondents to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying said mandate of the court; and said rule having been served on the said respondents, and the said respondents having appeared in court in answer to said rule, and having failed to make any return thereto, or to show any good and sufficient reason why they had not obeyed and executed the mandate of this court;

It is now adjudged, that the said H. W. Purvis is in contempt of this court; and it is ordered that he do pay a fine of fifteen hundred dollars, and that the sheriff of Richland County do take him, the said H. W. Purvis, into custody, and confine him in the common jail of said county until he be discharged by the order of this court.

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN, AND F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general; and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state.

In re Rule vs. T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general, member of board of State canvassers, for contempt.

The relators in the above cause having filed their suggestion in this court on the 14th day of November, 1876, praying, among other things, that the said respondents might be commanded by this court to perform their duties as State canvassers according to law; and the said respondents having answered thereto, and the duties and powers of the board of State canvassers having been submitted to this court and argument heard thereon; and the said respondents having adopted their resolution, "that this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its powers and duties be decided by the supreme court;" which said resolution was duly filed as an exhibit in this cause; and the said board of State canvassers having, in obedience to an order of this court, made their certified report to this court, setting forth the persons who had received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates at the general election held in this State on the 7th instant; and this court having, on the 22d day of November, 1876, made its order that a writ of mandamus do issue, directed to the said respondents, commanding the said board of State canvassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senator and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by the certificate of the said board of State canvassers to the said court, had received the greatest number of votes therefor, and forthwith to deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State;

And the said board of State canvassers having, on the said 22d of November, and while this court was in session, met and made their other certified statement of the persons who had received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house of representatives from the several counties, and declared the same duly elected, and delivered said certified statement and declaration to the secretary of state; but the said board of State canvassers refused to certify and declare as elected the persons who had received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and adjourned sine die;

And this court, in pursuance of its order dated the 22d day of November, having issued its writ of mandamus, directed to the said respondents, commanding them to do and perform the matters and things hereinbefore set forth in their said order, and to make known to said court forthwith how they, the said respondents, shall have executed said writ;

And said writ having been duly served upon the said respondents, and the said respondents having failed to obey the mandate of this court expressed in said writ, and having failed to make any return to said writ, showing their performance and execution of the mandate of the court, or good and sufficient cause why the same had not been done; and thereupon a rule having issued from this court on the 24th day of November, directing the said respondents to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying said mandate of the court; and said rule having been served on the said respondents, and the said respondents having appeared in court in answer to said rule, and having failed to make any return thereto, or to show any good and sufficient reason why they had not obeyed and executed the mandate of this court:

It is now adjudged that the said T. C. Dunn is in contempt of this court; and it is ordered that he do pay a fine of fifteen hundred dollars, and that the sheriff of Richland county do take him, the said T. C. Dunn, into custody, and confine him in the common jail of said county until he be discharged by the order of this court.

In re rule vs. William Stone, attorney-general, member of board of State cavassers, for contempt.

The relators in the above cause having filed their suggestion in this court on the 14th day of November, 1876, praying, among other things, that the said respondents might be commanded by this court to perform their duties as State cavassers according to law, and the said respondents having answered thereto, and the duties and powers of the board of State cavassers having been submitted to this court and argument heard thereon, and the said respondents having adopted their resolution "that this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its powers and duties be decided by the supreme court," which said resolution was duly filed as an exhibit in this cause;

And the said board of State cavassers having, in obedience to an order of this court, made their certified report to this court, setting forth the persons who had received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates at the general election held in this State on the 7th instant;

And this court having, on the 22d day of November, 1876, made its order that a writ of mandamus do issue, directed to the said respondents, commanding the said board of State cavassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senator and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by the certificate of the said board of State cavassers to the said court, had received the greatest number of votes therefor, and forthwith to deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State;

And the said board of State cavassers having on the said 22d of November, and while this court was in session, met and made their other certified statement of the persons who had received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house of representatives from the several counties, and declared the same duly elected, and delivered said certified statement and declaration to the secretary of state; but the said board of State cavassers refused to certify and declare as elected the persons who had received the greatest number of votes for members of the senate and members of the house from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and adjourned sine die;

And this court, in pursuance of its order, dated the 22d day of November, having issued its writ of mandamus, directed to the said respondents, commanding them to do and perform the matters and things hereinbefore set forth in their said order, and to make known to said court forthwith how they, the said respondents, shall have executed said writ;

And said writ having been duly served upon the said respondents, and the said respondents having failed to obey the mandate of this court expressed in said writ, and having failed to make any return to said writ showing the performance and execution of the mandate of this court, or good and sufficient cause why the same had not been done; and thereupon a rule having issued from this court on the 24th day of November directing the said respondents to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying said mandate of the court, and said rule having been served on the said respondents, and the said respondents having appeared in court in answer to said rule, and having failed to make any return thereto, or to show any good and sufficient reason why they had not obeyed and executed the mandate of this court:

It is now ordered that the said William Stone is in contempt of this court; and it is ordered that he do pay a fine of fifteen hundred dollars, and that the sheriff of Richland County do take him, the said William Stone, into custody and confine him in the common jail of said county until he be discharged by the order of this court.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX RELATIONE R. M. Sims, Johnson Hagood, S. L. Leaphart, James Conner, H. S. Thompson, and E. W. Moise,

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, CHAIRMAN, AND F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; William Stone, attorney-general, and H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general, members of the board of State canvassers, and H. T. Hayne, as secretary of state.

In re rule vs. F. L. Cardozo, State treasurer, member of board of State canvassers, for contempt.

The relators in the above cause having filed their suggestion in this court on the 14th day of November, 1876, praying, among other things, that the said respondents might be commanded by this court to perform their duties as State canvassers according to law, and the said respondents having answered thereto, and the duties and powers of the board of State canvassers having been submitted to this court, and argument heard thereon, and the said respondents having adopted their resolution "that this board will not act upon any proposition until the question of its powers and duties be decided by the supreme court," which said resolution was duly filed as an exhibit in this cause;

And the said board of State canvassers having, in obedience to an order of this court, made their certified report to this court, setting forth the persons who had received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were respectively candidates at the general election held in this State on the 7th instant; and this court having, on the 22d day of November, 1876, made its order that a writ of mandamus do issue, directed to the said respondents, commanding the said board of State canvassers forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senator and members of the house of representatives the persons who, by the certificate of the said board of State canvassers to the said court, had received the greatest number of votes therefor, and forthwith to deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state, and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State;

And this court, in pursuance of its order dated the 22d day of November, having issued its writ of mandamus, directed to the said respondents, commanding them to do and perform the matters and things hereinbefore set forth in their said order, and to make known to said court forthwith how they, the said respondents, shall have executed said writ;

And said writ having been duly served upon the said respondents, and the said respondents having failed to obey the mandate of this court expressed in said writ, and having failed to make any return to said writ showing their performance and execution of the mandate of the court, or good and sufficient cause why the same had not been done; and thereupon a rule having issued from this court on the 24th day of November, directing the said respondents to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt in not obeying said mandate of the court; and said rule having been served on the said respondents, and the said respondents having appeared in court in answer to said rule, and having failed to make any return thereto, or to show any good and sufficient reason why they had not obeyed and executed the mandate of this court:

It is now adjudged that the said F. L. Cardozo is in contempt of this court; and it is ordered that he do pay a fine of fifteen hundred dollars, and that the sheriff of Richland County do take him, the said F. L. Cardozo, into custody and confine him in the common jail of said county until he be discharged by the order of this court.

Amended suggestion for mandamus.

Be it remembered that, on the 22d day of November, 1876, came R. M. Sims et al., as above stated, under and by virtue of the order of severance granted by the court on that day, and say that, on the 7th November, 1876, a general election was duly held in the said State for the State officers above enumerated and named, (amongst other persons voted for at the said election;) that at said election the votes for the opposing candidates for said offices, respectively, were duly counted by the several boards of managers of the said election, and by them duly returned in their respective counties to the board of canvassers for their several counties, and the several boards of county cauvassers having made their statement of the votes cast, the same, together with all papers appertaining to said election, were by the said boards of county canvassers duly transmitted to the board of State canvassers of the said State.

And whereas the said board of State canvassers, as in duty bound, did begin to compare the returns of the precinct managers with the returns of the board of county canvassers, and did proceed in that legal manner until the several returns from the counties of Aiken, Abbeville, Anderson, Barnwell, Beaufort, and Charleston had been duly compared, when the said comparison was stopped by order of the board of State canvassers;

And whereas the result of said comparison, partially made as aforesaid, made manifest and caused it to appear that there were many errors, irregularities, and discrepancies between the returns of the managers and the statements of the county canvassers, so that it was and still is necessary to continue said comparison and conform the statements of the county canvassers to the returns of the precinct managers, that a true result should be arrived at, from which true result, when duly arrived at, your relators' rights will be derived and exhibited, and which will show such true result to be more favorable to your relators than now appears, and that your relators have received the greatest number of votes cast at said election for the offices for which they were respectively candidates;

And whereas the said board of State canvassers have failed and refused to conform to the law and perform their said duties in this behalf and in other respects also, although frequently requested so to do according to law;

And whereas the said board of State canvassers have failed and refused to do their legal duty by failing to exclude from their count returns sent up to them from precincts not named in any act of the State legislature, and have actually received and included in their said count returns not duly or legally authenticated or forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, and have failed and refused to continue the count, and to compare the several returns from the county managers with the statements of the county canvassers; by means of all which derelictions of official duty, your relators are worse and are debarred of their rights, to wit, to have a true result of the said election declared, and the proper and legal officers, some if not all of whom are your relators, furnished with the proper evidences of their title to the offices to which they have been duly elected:

Wherefore your relators pray that this honorable court will grant to your relators the State's writ of mandamus, to be directed to the said H. E. Hayne et al., the respondents, members of the board of State canvassers, requiring them to proceed to perform their said duties according to law, and to submit to this court their report, showing such performance, and bringing into court, with the said report, all official papers on which the same is in any manner based, including the returns of the several managers and the statements of the county canvassers, &c.

And may it please the court to grant your relators such other and further remedial writs and remedies as to the nature of the case may appertain, and to justice may seem meet. And your relators will ever pray, &c.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County, ss:

Louis LeConte, being duly sworn, says that, on the 17th day of November, instant, the board of State canvassers did, under the order of this court in the above cause, proceed to compare the statements of the county canvassers with the returns of the managers of the several precincts, and did so proceed until the comparison had been made for the counties of Abbeville, Aiken, Anderson, Barnwell, Beaufort, and Charleston, when said comparison was stopped by order of the board of State canvassers; that in said comparison it was made manifest that there were many irregularities and discrepancies between the returns of the managers and the statements of the county canvassers; that votes not entered upon the managers' returns were entered by the county canvassers in the statements; that votes given to one candidate, and appearing in the managers' returns, were by the board of county canvassers transferred to another candidate, and so set down in their statements; that the county canvassers included in their statements returns purporting to come from precincts not designated by statute; that the said board of State canvassers received a return not forwarded according to law, signed by the managers of one party only, and never submitted to the board of county canvassers, and forwarded by said managers of one party, after the county canvassers had made their official statement and closed their labors.

against } Return of defendants.
 H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, AND OTHERS. }

And now comes William Stone, attorney-general, one of the above-named respondents, and to the amended suggestions for mandamus filed herein, makes return as follows:

I. That this court has no jurisdiction of this cause, for the reason that no power has been conferred on it by the constitution of this State, or by the laws passed in pursuance thereof, to exercise control over the board of State canvassers in matters within the discretion of said board as executive officers, and upon which said board is, by law, required to act.

II. That the board of State canvassers has already fully performed and discharged all the duties imposed upon it by law, as this respondent is informed and believes, in the manner and form prescribed by law; that after said board had performed said duties, and on the 22d day of November, A. D. 1876, it adjourned sine die; that the period within which said board was required by law to perform its duties expired on the said last-mentioned day, and there is now no lawful authority under which the members thereof can re-assemble or perform any official act as a board.

III. That among other duties performed by said board as required by law, the said board duly prepared a certificate declaring the result of the general election held on the 7th day of November, 1876, and said certificate was duly delivered by authority of said board to the respondent, Henry E. Hayne, as secretary of state, as in that behalf and required by law.

IV. That the said board, as this respondent humbly submits; cannot now make any other declaration or certificate of said general election than that which has already been made by said board and delivered to the said secretary of state; and this court, in this form of proceeding, cannot review the action of said board, or make any order to the said board in the premises.

V. That if the said relators or either of them have a lawful right to the offices for which they were respectively candidates, (which this respondent denies,) they have another complete and ample remedy by which to gain possession of the same, to wit, by summons and complaint, as provided by law; but the said remedy is not by mandamus.

VI. That this court, as this respondent is advised, has already heard the original suggestions herein, and has, by an order made on 22d day of November, 1876, passed upon the rights of the relators, and has virtually decided and determined the whole cause, and no further proceedings can properly be had herein.

VII. That as the respondent is advised, no errors, irregularities, and discrepancies between the returns of managers of election and statements of county canvassers, sufficient to affect the result of the general election, were made apparent to the board of State canvassers, nor did the said several relators receive for the offices for which they were respectively candidates the highest number of votes cast at the said election; and this respondent avers that the said board, by their action, arrived at the true and correct result of the said election.

VIII. And this respondent denies that the board of State canvassers failed to do their legal duty by failing to exclude from the count and returns sent up to them from precincts not established by law, or that they have received or included in their count returns not duly or legally authenticated or forwarded to them by the several boards of canvassers. On the contrary, this respondent avers that the said board made up their count of votes cast at the said general election from the statements of the several boards of county canvassers, as required by law to do, and that upon said statements they duly determined and declared the result of said election as to the offices now claimed by said relators.

IX. And this respondent further avers, on information and belief, that H. W. Purvis, late adjutant and inspector general, one of the members of the board of State canvassers, has, since the 22d day of November, 1876, resigned the office of adjutant and inspector general, and does not now hold said office.

And this respondent did, on the 6th day of December, 1876, resign his office as attorney-general of the State of South Carolina, to take effect December 7, 1876; and further, this respondent's term has now expired by law.

That so far as these two respondents are concerned, they have no legal right to perform any further duties as members of the board of State canvassers.

WILLIAM STONE.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX RELATIONE WILLIAM H.	}
Wallace, speaker of the house of representatives,
against
H. E. HAYNE, AS SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M.	}
Mackey.

To the honorable the judges of the supreme court of said State :

The humble petition of William H. Wallace, speaker of the house of representatives of said State, sheweth :

That a general election was held in said State on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, for the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor of said State; and upon such election, the returns of the several managers of election were duly transmitted to the said H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and laws of said State.

And your petitioner further sheweth that the house of representatives of the general assembly convened in the city of Columbia on the fourth Tuesday in November, 1876, to wit, in Carolina Hall, in said city, the members thereof having been excluded by force of arms from the State-house by the Army of the United States; and after convening, duly organized, elected your petitioner speaker of the said house, and sent the proper and usual message to the senate of said State that said house was duly organized and ready to proceed to business.

That your petitioner, as speaker, as aforesaid, thereupon demanded of the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, the returns of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor, in the possession of the said secretary of state under section 4, article III, of the constitution of said State; but the said secretary of state refused to deliver the said returns to your petitioner, and still refuses so to do; and has unlawfully delivered said returns to one E. W. M. Mackey, claiming to be speaker of a body claiming to be a house of representatives, which is not legally elected or organized.

Wherefore, and inasmuch as your petitioner is without any other adequate remedy in the premises, your petitioner prays that a writ of mandamus may issue from this honorable court, directed to the said H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey aforesaid, commanding and enjoining them forthwith to deliver to your petitioner, as the speaker of the said house, the returns of the managers of election transmitted to him upon the said general election as aforesaid; and that your petitioner may have such other and further relief as may seem just and necessary. And your petitioner will ever pray, &c.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Richland, ss :

William H. Wallace, being duly sworn, says that the matters and things stated in the foregoing petition are true to the knowledge of deponent, except in so far as the same are stated on information and belief, and as to such matters he believes the same to be true.

H. E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M. MACKEY. }

On hearing the suggestion in mandamus in the above-entitled case, on motion of relator, it is ordered that the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey, do show cause before this court, at 11 o'clock on Monday the 4th December instant, why the prayer of the said suggestion and petition should not be granted.

WILLIAM H. WALLACE }
vs.
E. W. M. MACKEY ET AL. }

Comes now the said respondent Mackey, and demurs to the reply of the petitioner to respondent's reply for the following reasons, to wit :

The said reply is not sufficient in law to constitute a good and sufficient reply to said respondent's return.

And said respondent demurs specially to that portion of the said reply which sets up and seeks to rely upon the certificates issued in pursuance of the order and decree of this court, for the reason that the court had no jurisdiction of the said matter.

2d. Because the said parties named in said reply were not parties to or in any way before the court.

HENRY E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M. MACKEY. }

Comes now Henry E. Hayne, and for answer to the petition of the said William H. Wallace says, that before the filing of the petition in this court, and before he had any notice of said proceedings, he had delivered to said E. W. M. Mackey the returns of the election which have been forwarded to him by the proper election officers of this State, in pursuance of section 4, article III, of the constitution of this State; that before he so delivered said returns the said Mackey had been elected speaker of the house of representatives of this State, and was then in the speaker's chair and acting as such, and that he so delivered the same before any demand was made upon him by said Wallace, and before he pretended to have been elected; that he did refuse to deliver the same to said Wallace because he could not do so, the same being then in the hands of said Mackey. He therefore says that said returns had, before the filing of said petition in this court, gone beyond his control, and therefore he cannot now produce said returns or deliver them to said Wallace.

STATE EX REL. WILLIAM H. WALLACE, SPEAKER OF THE house of representatives. }
vs. }
HENRY E. HAYNE, SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M.
Mackey. }

A rule to show cause having been served on this respondent, E. W. M. Mackey, in the above-entitled cause, now comes said E. W. M. Mackey, and for cause shows:

1. That this court has no power or authority or jurisdiction to inquire into, hear, or determine the matters and things alleged and put in issue in the petition of the relator.

That the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina duly assembled in the hall of the house of representatives at the city of Columbia, the capital of said State, on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1876, pursuant to the constitution, and proceeded to organize by the election of this respondent as speaker thereof, and of A. O. Jones as clerk thereof.

That having been duly elected speaker of said house of representatives as aforesaid, the returns of the election for governor, held in said State on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, were delivered to this respondent by Hon. Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, pursuant to section 4, article III, of the constitution, and he now holds said returns as speaker of said house of representatives, and for the purpose indicated in said section 4, article III, of the constitution, and for no other purpose whatever. This respondent therefore says that this court has no power, authority, or jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters in issue in said petition; and he prays to be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs in this behalf sustained.

E. W. M. MACKEY.

Personally appeared E. W. M. Mackey, and, being sworn, says that the facts stated are true of his own knowledge.

HENRY B. JOHNSON,
Notary Public, South Carolina.

Supreme court of South Carolina.

WILLIAM H. WALLACE }
E. W. M. MACKEY ET AL. }

Comes now the said E. W. M. Mackey, and for return to the rule entered against him in this cause in this court, says that he was, on the 7th day of November, 1876, duly and legally elected a member of the house of representatives of this State, and is now in his place in said house, having been duly and legally qualified as such. And that heretofore, on the 28th day of November, 1876, the house of representatives of said State did assemble in the hall of the house of representatives, a constitutional quorum of the legally-elected members of said house being present and answering to their names, and said house did then and there organize by the election of this respondent speaker, and A. O. Jones, esq., as clerk, and did in all respects proceed to perfect its organization in conformity with the constitution and laws of this State, and that said house has continued in session from day to day until the present time, and he has at all times since his said election continued to act as such speaker.

And that the senate and house of representatives, by concurrent resolution, have appointed this 4th day of December, at 2 o'clock p. m., in the hall of the house of representatives, as the time and place for opening, counting, and publishing the returns of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor.

And this respondent further says that he was duly and legally elected such speaker, and that said Wallace was not elected by a majority of votes of a majority of the house of representatives who had been legally elected; that eight of the pretended members who acted and voted for said Wallace had not been legally elected, and were not legal members of said house; which question has been submitted to and decided by the legally-constituted house of representatives of this State; and therefore he says that the pretended house, who pretended to act as a house, and who pretended to vote for said Wallace, was composed of fifty-six members, and no more.

And this respondent, having been duly elected speaker of said house of representatives, as aforesaid, the returns of the election for governor held in said State on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, were delivered to this respondent by Hon. Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, pursuant to section 4, article III, of the constitution; and he now holds said returns as speaker of said house of representatives, and for the purpose indicated in said section 4, article III, of the constitution, and for no other purpose.

Wherefore this respondent says that this court has no power, authority, or jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters in issue in said petition, and he prays to be hence discharged with his reasonable costs in this behalf sustained.

E. W. M. MACKKEY.

Personally appeared E. W. M. Mackey, and, being duly sworn, says that the facts stated are true.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX RELATIONE WILLIAM
H. Wallace, speaker of the house of representatives, against
H. E. HAYNE, AS SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M.
Mackey.

And the relator alleges that he is entitled to the writ of mandamus prayed for, notwithstanding anything in the return of the respondent's contained; for the relator alleges that the body of which respondent claims to be the duly-elected speaker is not, and never was, a constitutional house of representatives; inasmuch as said body, when assembled in the hall of the house of representatives, as alleged, did not consist of one hundred and twenty-four members chosen by ballot by the citizens of this State; and that a majority of a lawfully-constituted house of representatives, constituting a legal quorum, viz, sixty-three members, did not assemble or organize; but, on the contrary, as relator is informed and believes, not more than fifty-nine members chosen by ballot (if so many) assembled in the said hall of the house of representatives at the time alleged in the answer, and proceeded to organize, as pretended.

And the relator further says, that he was elected speaker by a majority of votes of a majority of the house of representatives who had been duly elected, viz, by a majority of a legal quorum of the house of representatives of one hundred and twenty-four members; that is to say, sixty-five members; of which sixty-five members fifty-seven members held, as evidences of their legal membership, certificates of the secretary of the state, and of the clerk of the supreme court, as hereinafter more particularly described, of the certified determination of the board of canvassers, and eight members, to wit, the members-elect from the counties of Laurens and Edgefield, (W. S. Allen, J. C. Sheppard, James Callison, T. E. Jennings, and H. A. Shaw, from Edgefield; and J. W. Watts, D. W. Anderson, and J. B. Humbert, from Laurens, who had been refused certificates by the secretary of state,) held as evidences of their title certificates of the clerk of the court, issued in accordance with the judgment of the supreme court, on the petition in mandamus, in the case entitled The State ex relatione R. M. Sims et al., vs. H. E. Hayne, chairman, et al., the board of State canvassers, and H. E. Hayne, secretary of state.

All of which the relator is willing and ready to verify. Wherefore he prays judgment, &c.

herein set forth. All of which the relator is ready and willing to verify. Wherefore the relator prays judgment.

EXHIBIT A.

TUESDAY, November 28, 1876.

Pursuant to the provisions of the constitution of the State of South Carolina, the members of the house of representatives from the several counties of this State assembled in Carolina Hall, in the city of Columbia, this day at 8 o'clock p. m. Mr. Robert Aldrich, a member-elect from Barnwell County, was called to the chair, and Mr. J. C. Sheppard, a member-elect from Edgefield County, appointed temporary clerk.

Mr. Sheppard, the temporary clerk, commenced a call of the members elect of the house of representatives by counties, when the following-named gentlemen appeared, produced their credentials, were sworn by the honorable Judge Thompson H. Cook, and took their seats:

From Abbeville County: Messrs. R. R. Hemphill, T. L. Moore, W. K. Bradley, Wm. Hood, F. A. Conner.

Alken County: Messrs. C. E. Sawyer, J. J. Woodward, John G. Guignard, L. M. Asbill.

Anderson County: Messrs. W. C. Brown, R. W. Simpson, James L. Orr, H. R. Vandiver.

Barnwell County: Messrs. J. W. Holmes, I. S. Bamberg, L. W. Youmans, M. A. Roundtree, Robert Aldrich.

Colleton County: Messrs. H. E. Bissell, Wm. Maree, J. M. Cummins, L. E. Pailer, R. Jones.

Chesterfield County: Messrs. J. C. Coit, D. T. Redfearn.

Edgefield County: Messrs. W. S. Allen, J. C. Sheppard, Jas. Callison, T. E. Jennings, H. A. Shaw.

Greenville County: Messrs. J. W. Gray, James F. Donald, J. T. Austin, J. L. Westmoreland.

Horry County: Messrs. L. D. Bryan, J. R. Cooper.

Lancaster County: Messrs. J. B. Erwin, J. C. Blakeney.

Laurens County: Messrs. J. W. Watts, D. W. Anderson, J. B. Humbert.

Lexington County: Messrs. G. Muller, G. Leaphart.

Marion County: Messrs. J. G. Blue, James McRae, R. H. Rogers, J. P. Davis.

Marlborough County: Messrs. P. M. Hamer, T. N. Edens.

Oconee County: Messrs. B. Frank Sloan, J. S. Verner.

Orangeburgh County: Mr. W. H. Reedish.

Pickens County: Messrs. D. F. Bradley, E. H. Bates.

Spartanburgh County: Messrs. W. P. Compton, J. W. Wofford, E. S. Allen, C. Petty.

Sumter County: Mr. J. W. Westbury.

Union County: Messrs. W. H. Wallace, G. D. Peake, William Jeffries.

York County: Messrs. A. E. Hutchinson, W. B. Byers, B. H. Massey, J. A. Deal.

The clerk announced that sixty-six members were present and sworn, which is a quorum of the whole representation of the house.

On motion of Mr. Erwin, the house proceeded to vote viva voce for a speaker, and the roll having been called, it appeared that the following-named members voted for Mr. W. H. Wallace:

Messrs. Aldrich, E. S. Allen, W. S. Allen, Anderson, Astell, Austin, Bamberg, Bates, Bissell, Blakeney, Blue, D. F. Bradley, N. H. Bradley, Brown, Bryan, Byers, Callison, Coit, Comings, Compton, Conner, Cooper, Davis, Deal, Donald, Edens, Erwin, Gray, Guignard, Hemphill, Haines, Holmes, Hood, Humbert, Hutchinson, Jeffries, Jennings, Jones, Leaphart, Maree, Massey, McRae, Moore, Muller, Orr, Parler, Peake, Petty, Redfearn, Reedish, Rogers, Roundtree, Sawyer, Shaw, Sheppard, Simpson, Sloan, Vandiver, Verner, Watts, Westbury, Westmoreland, Wofford, Woodward, Youmans.

Mr. W. H. Wallace, a member from Union County, having received sixty-five, being all the votes cast, was declared duly elected speaker of the house of representatives.

On motion of Mr. Erwin, a committee of three, consisting of Messrs. J. B. Erwin, J. W. Westbury, and W. H. Reedish, was appointed to wait upon the speaker-elect and conduct him to the chair, who was duly sworn by Hon. Judge Thompson H. Cook.

On motion of Mr. Erwin, the house proceeded to vote viva voce for a clerk, and the roll having been called it appeared that the following-named members voted for Mr. John T. Sloan, sr.:

Messrs. Aldrich, E. S. Allen, W. S. Allen, Anderson, Asbill, Austin, Bamberg, Bates, Bissell, Blue, Blakeney, D. F. Bradley, William K. Bradley, Brown, Bryan, Byers, Callison, Coit, Comings, Compton, Conner, Cooper, Davis, Deal, Donald, Edens, Erwin, Gray, Guignard, Hamer, Hemphill, Holmes, Hood, Humbert, Hutchinson, Jeffries, Jennings, Jones, Leaphart, Maree, Massey, McRae, Morse, Muller, Orr, Parler, Peake, Petty, Redfearne, Reedish, Rogers, Roundtree, Sawyer, Shaw, Sheppard, Simpson, Sloan, Vandiver, Verner, Wallace, Watts, Westmoreland, Wofford, Woodward, Youmans—

Mr. Westbury voted for E. H. Holleyman—1.

RECAPITULATION.

Mr. John T. Sloan, sr., received.....	65
Mr. E. H. Holleyman received.....	1
Whole number of votes given.....	66
Necessary to a choice.....	34

The speaker announced that Mr. John T. Sloan, sr., having received a majority of the votes given, was duly elected clerk of the house.

Mr. Sloan appeared at the speaker's desk, and was duly sworn by the chair.

The house proceeded to vote visa voce for a sergeant-at-arms, and the roll having been called, it appeared that the following-named members voted for Mr. John D. Brown:

Messrs. Aldrich, E. S. Allen, W. S. Allen, Anderson, Asbill, Austin, Bamberg, Bates, Bissell, Blakeney, Blue, D. F. Bradley, W. H. Bradley, Brown, Bryan, Byers, Callison, Coit, Cummings, Compton, Connor, Cooper, Davis Deal, Donald, Edens, Erwin, Gray, Guignard, Hamer, Hemphill, Holmes, Hood, Humbert, Hutchinson, Jeffers, Jennings, Jones, Leaphart, Maree, Massey, McRae, Moore, Muller, Orr, Parlor, Peake, Petty, Redfearne, Reedish, Rogers, Roundtree, Sawyer, Shaw, Sheppard, Simpson, Sloan, Vandiver, Verner, Wallace, Watts, Westbury, Westmoreland, Wofford, Woodward, Youmans—66.

The speaker announced that Mr. John D. Brown, having received the whole number of votes given, is elected sergeant-at-arms of the house.

The house then proceeded to vote visa voce for reading-clerk, and the roll having been called, it appeared that the following-named members voted for Mr. W. B. Williams:

Messrs. Aldrich, E. S. Allen, W. S. Allen, Anderson, Asbill, Austin, Bamberg, Bates, Bissell, Blakeney, Blue, D. F. Bradley, W. K. Bradley, Brown, Bryan, Byers, Callison, Coit, Cummings, Compton, Connor, Cooper, Davis, Deal, Donald, Edens, Erwin, Gray, Guignard, Hamer, Hemphill, Holmes, Hood, Humbert, Hutchinson, Jefferies, Jennings, Jones, Leaphart, Maree, Massey, McRae, Moore, Muller, Myers, Orr, Parler, Peake, Petty, Redfearne, Reedish, Rogers, Roundtree, Sawyer, Shaw, Sheppard, Simpson, Sloan, Vandiver, Verner, Wallace, Watts, Westbury, Westmoreland, Wofford, Woodward, Youmans—66.

The speaker whereupon announced that Mr. W. B. Williams, having received the whole number of votes given, was duly elected reading-clerk of the house.

On motion of Mr. Reedish, ordered that the clerk notify Mr. John D. Brown that he had been elected sergeant-at-arms of the house, and Mr. W. B. Williams that he had been elected reading-clerk of the house.

On motion of Mr. Erwin, ordered that the following message be sent to the senate:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S. C., November 28, 1876.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the senate:

The house of representatives respectfully inform your body that, pursuant to the provisions of the constitution of the State of South Carolina, the members-elect of the house of representatives assembled in Carolina Hall this day at 8 o'clock p. m., when the following-named gentlemen, sixty-six in number, being a quorum of the whole representation of the house of representatives, appeared, produced their credentials, and were sworn by the Hon. Judge Thompson H. Cooke:

On motion of Mr. Sheppard,
Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to wait upon Mr. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, and demand that he deliver to the Hon. Wm. H. Wallace, speaker of the house of representatives of South Carolina, the election-returns for governor and lieutenant-governor of the State of South Carolina, and to take such other proceedings as may be necessary to obtain them.

Whereupon the speaker announced Messrs. Sheppard, Orr, and Aldrich of the committee.

On motion of Mr. Youmans the house was adjourned at 10 o'clock p. m.

SUPREME COURT,
 Monday, December 4, 1876.

STATE, EX REL. WALLACE, }
 vs. }
 HAYNE AND MACKEY. }

JOHN T. SLOAN, sr., being duly sworn, deposes:

I am clerk of the house of representatives of State of South Carolina, elected Tuesday, November 28, 1876. I keep the journal of the house, as part of my duties. The house assembled on Tuesday, 28th November, 1876, in Carolina Hall. We came to State-house, and were met at the door by military. After some detention we entered, and were, as I have been informed and believe, met at door of house by military, and only such as held certificates from secretary of state were allowed to enter. We then retired, and went to Carolina Hall, situated in Richardson street, in city of Columbia. (Mr. Sloan here read journal, &c., of that day. Exhibit A.)

By Mr. BARKER:

Question. What kind of credentials did the members present?

By Mr. DENNY:

(Objected to, on the ground that the credentials themselves should be presented; credentials produced by Mr. Sloan, who read one signed Albert M. Boozor, clerk of supreme court of South Carolina; objected to; objection overruled; Mr. Sloan then proceeded to read the remaining credentials.)

Mr. Denny submitted that the testimony thus presented was irrelevant. The court ruled to hear the testimony subject to this objection.)

I returned to the members the credentials from secretary of state. The members of Edgefield and Laurens Counties had no credentials from the secretary of state. I retained the certificates issued by the clerk of supreme court, which all the members had. (Cross-examination waived.)

By Associate Justice WRIGHT:

Q. Were all kept out of the State-house?—A. All were detained at the outside door. I did not go in myself.

By Mr. DENNY:

Q. Was any member who held the certificate of the secretary of state kept out?—A. They were all detained about ten or fifteen minutes at outside door—as well the Edgefield and Laurens members as the others. There was United States soldiers at the door, uniformed and armed.

I. C. SHEPPARD, being duly sworn, deposes: I am member-elect from Edgefield; was in Columbia on day referred to, and went with members at head of column to main door of State-house. When I reached the door I started to pass in; was halted by sentinel at door, a private of United States troops, uniformed and armed, acting, apparently, under one Dennis. I informed him I was a member of house of representatives. He asked me what evidence I had. I referred to certificate of judgment of supreme court of the State, signed by the clerk. I think I at first denied his right to request it. One Captain Kellogg said that no one could enter unless he could present a certificate from the secretary of state. I turned around and said to my associates that the door was barred to house, and I commenced to read protest. Mr. Haskell interfered and said he thought arrangements could be made to enter. It was then decided by Kellogg that all having either certificates from secretary of state or clerk of supreme court could enter. All presented certificates from clerk of supreme court and passed in. They presented none other. We passed on, myself at the head. I demanded admission and presented certificates of clerk of supreme court. The door-keeper said that was insufficient. At that time no troops were there, but in about ten minutes about six soldiers presented themselves and took position at the door. I then retreated. I did not observe any officers with the soldiers. I demanded again admission and presented my certificate a second time and was refused. Several members did the same thing. I suggested that we retire. We then retired and went to Carolina Hall, beyond Law Range, and organized.

(Mr. Sheppard then produced certificate of clerk of supreme court, Exhibit B, and also copy of county canvassers' return for Edgefield County at election on 7th November, 1876, Exhibit C.)

Question by the COURT. Did you offer the copy of county canvassers' return?

Answer. I did not; I did not have the paper there.

(Mr. Denny objected to this paper being used in evidence, because not then produced when seeking admission. Objection overruled.)

Cross-examination by Mr. DENNY:

I do not know that any one of the soldiers said anything to any of us. They said nothing whatever to me. No one interfered with me or any of us as far as I could see, but those who professed to be door-keepers. The door-keeper was a civilian. I passed through the file of soldiers to the door. I do not know the name of the door-keeper.

(Admitted that the Laurens County members would prove the same facts as the members from Edgefield.)

(Judgment of the supreme court submitted in evidence.)

ROBERT ALDRICH, being duly sworn, deposes:

I am a member of the house of representatives from Barnwell County; was present on 28th November, 1876, on first assembly; accompanied the members to the State-house, and retired with them to Carolina Hall, where we organized the legislature of the State of South Carolina. I was chosen temporary speaker; the journal shows all this. I had two certificates or credentials; one from the secretary of state, and one from the clerk of supreme court. I retained the former, and left the other in the hands of the clerk of house.

(Cross-examination waived.)

THOMAS HAMILTON, being duly sworn, deposes:

Am member of the house of representatives of South Carolina from Beaufort County; was here on 28th of November, 1876. I was in an assemblage of persons purporting to be members of the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina on that day.

[Journal of said house offered. Objected to by Mr. Denny. Objection sustained.]

The house was called to order on Tuesday, 28th, by A. O. Jones, former clerk of house, who called the roll: Members-elect presented their credentials. He did not, as I remember, announce how many answered to their names. The point was raised by Mr. Straker, of Orangeburgh, by what authority we could meet. Mr. Mackey decided that, by a decision in Congress, one hundred and sixteen were a legal body elected, and hence fifty-nine were a quorum. The speaker said that fifty-nine were present. Mr. Mackey was speaker then. He mentioned that one hundred and sixteen was a legal body.

Cross-examination:

I don't know, of my own knowledge, how many were present, except that the speaker said "fifty-nine."

N. B. MYERS, being duly sworn, deposes:

Am a member of house of representatives of South Carolina from county of Beaufort; was here on the 28th of November, 1876; was present on first meeting in State-house. Mr. Jones said that one hundred and sixteen members had been chosen; that fifty-nine were present, and they were ready to go into an election for speaker. The first business in order was the election of speaker. Mr. Jones presided temporarily—the clerk of the last house—as is the custom. Mr. Straker suggested as to a ruling by the speaker as to the house. He ruled as stated by last witness.

Testimony on part of relators closed, with the understanding that certain records, as before stated, be considered as submitted.

Adjourned at 7½ p. m. until Tuesday, 5th, 10 a. m.

It is admitted that all of the sixty-five members of the body which assembled as a house of representatives on the 28th of November at Carolina Hall in the city of Columbia, and which elected W. H. Wallace speaker, held certificates from the secretary of state, excepting the members claiming seats from the counties of Edgefield, five in number, and Laurens, three in number, who held certificates of the clerk of the supreme court, offered in evidence in this cause.

J. C. DENNY, for Respondents.

December 5, 1876.

(Submitted and filed 5th December, 1876.)

Respondents offered no testimony.

Opinion of Moses, C. J.

The State of South Carolina. In the supreme court, November term, 1876.

THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EX RELATIONE
William H. Wallace, speaker of the house of representatives, against
H. E. HAYNE, AS SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E.
W. M. Mackey.

This case is an application, upon suggestion, filed by leave of the court, in the name of the State, at the relation of William H. Wallace, claiming to be the speaker of the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, against H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey.

The petition sets forth that a general election was held in said State on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, for the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor of South Carolina, and, upon such election, the returns were duly transmitted to the said H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State. This allegation is admitted by respondents. The petitioner alleges that the house of representatives, convened in the city of Columbia, on the fourth Tuesday in November, and after convening, duly organized and elected him, William H. Wallace, speaker, and notified the senate; that the petitioner, as such speaker, thereupon demanded of the said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, the returns of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor; that the secretary of state refused to deliver said returns to the petitioner, and still refuses, and has unlawfully delivered said returns to one E. W. M. Mackey, claiming to be speaker of a body claiming to be a house of representatives which is not legally elected or organized, and petitioner prayed that a writ of mandamus issue, directed to H. E. Hayne, as secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey, commanding and enjoining them forthwith to deliver to the petitioner, as speaker of the house of representatives, the returns of the managers of election, transmitted to him upon the election, and for further or other relief. On this suggestion the court granted an order that H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey show cause on the 4th of December instant why the prayer and suggestion of the petition should not be granted.

The pleadings, evidence, and arguments of the counsel having been submitted to the court, we now proceed to deliver our decision and judgment.

As to the jurisdiction of the court, the exercise of which has been objected to on the part of the respondents, the court feels no doubt at all that it has power under the constitution. Section 4 of Article IV provides that "the supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction in cases of chancery, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law, under such regulations as the general assembly may prescribe: Provided, The said court shall always have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to give it a general supervisory control over all other courts in this State." Now, according to the view of the learned counsel for the respondents, the power of the court as to those writs under section 4, Article IV, of the constitution is limited to the control by our supervision over all other courts of this State.

The mere reading of the section is enough, I trust, to convince the learned counsel that his interpretation of the section is not well founded. The writ of injunction is used, not to control other courts, but acts directly on parties; and no form of injunction could issue to a court to enjoin the proceedings of one of inferior jurisdiction. The writ of mandamus stands upon a different footing. It may be addressed to another court, may control the exercise of an assumed power by another court, and in that view may be said to supervise. But quo warranto is never used in the supervision of another court. It is directly an issue between two persons claiming the same office. So, too, the writ of habeas corpus, mentioned in the section, how can that writ issue to supervise courts of inferior jurisdiction?

It is the great writ of privilege, interposing the shield of the law over the person of the prisoner. This great writ of right and of liberty acts only upon the person and never upon a court. To show that the views which we entertain of the said section is in consistency with the end designed by the framers of the constitution, and that the exercise of this power was to continue as it existed at common law at the time of the adoption of that instrument, they went further, and gave to this court power to issue such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to give it general supervisory control—for instance, the writ of certiorari and every other writ which was requisite to bring into this court the proceedings of an inferior tribunal, that its action might be supervised by the court. So much for the objection in that particular.

It is then alleged that this court has no jurisdiction over Hayne, one of the executive officers of the State, because, according to the limitations of the constitution, the powers of the government are vested in three distinct bodies, neither one of which can exercise any control over the other. That may be conceded to the fullest extent, and yet what would become of the rights of the citizen, vested in him, not only by the common law but by statute, if there was no control over the executive department of the government? The treasurer is a part of the executive department, and yet more than one case may be found where this court has interposed to compel him to perform duties specifically required of him; and so of other officers. It is not an encroachment upon the duties of their particular departments.

This court does not undertake to say to them that we are to perform the duties assigned by law to you. It does no more than say you must perform the specific duties assigned to you by law where you have not the privilege of exercising discretion. That is all. The mandamus could not compel the governor to issue a pardon; that would be an encroachment on his prerogative. But to say that the judicial department of the government, when a citizen avers that his right has been infringed by an executive officer, could not interpose, as, for example, when the legislature had appropriated a certain sum of money to be paid to him, and the treasurer refuses, is startling. Where would the judiciary be? Where would the departments of the government be? The judiciary would sink into mere insignificance. The other departments might increase and wield their powers to such extent that the liberties of the people might be entirely destroyed. The court has previously decided this point in the same way. It was only out of respect to the learned counsel from abroad that it permitted it to be again argued.

The question is whether Mr. Wallace has established in this court his right by reason of his holding under the constitution the office of speaker of the house of representatives. We do not feel it incumbent upon us to the possession of the "returns of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor filed with the secretary of state," either to inquire or determine if Mr. Mackey, one of the respondents in this case, is the speaker of a legally-constituted house of representatives of the State of South Carolina. We do not consider that inquiry necessary to the judgment demanded in this case.

The court holds that Mr. Wallace is the speaker of a legally-constituted house of representatives of South Carolina, therefore, has such a status here as not only authorizes but requires the court to hear and determine the matters set forth in his suggestion. It has been made to appear by evidence that of the constitutional number, one hundred and twenty-four, of which the house shall consist, sixty-three members were in their seats when Mr. Wallace was elected. The constitutional requisition having been thus complied with, there was present the necessary "quorum to do business."

This is no new question. It was decided by this court in a day when everything was calm and serene, when the political atmosphere was pure, when there was no excitement in the country, as unfortunately prevails now.

In the case of Morton, Bliss & Co. against the comptroller-general, reported in 4th South Carolina Reports, it was held that to constitute a house of representatives there must be a majority of the number which the constitution requires to make a house, and that is one hundred and twenty-four, (124,) in the proportion of members to the respective counties as fixed by law. Now it is contended that there was not sufficient evidence of the right to membership on the part of the gentlemen constituting the number of sixty-three (63) to entitle them to the floor in the organization of the house. As we understand it from the proof in the case, and it is conceded by the respondents, that all the members had certificates from the secretary of state except eight, (8,) and the qualification of those eight was established by the proceedings in this court.

No matter what was the character of the certificates they had, the return of the board of State canvassers to this court showing that they had received the greatest number of votes in their particular counties entitled them to access to the floor for the purpose of organization.

The return made to the court by the board of State canvassers shows the name of every candidate in every county and the number of votes he received, and therefore the names of those who received the greatest number in their respective counties.

The court then required that the board of State canvassers should make a report in conformity to that return. Instead of performing that duty, they adjourned sine die, possibly with the view in that way of avoiding the performance of the duty plainly imposed upon them by the law, but more especially brought to their notice by the order of the highest court of the State of South Carolina.

The law cannot be evaded in that way. We must at least preserve our civilization and maintain the due enforcement of the laws according to the judgment of those upon whom the constitution has imposed the duty and responsibility of interpreting them.

Unfortunately in every case there will be differences of opinion, but we think that when a clearer day comes in the political horizon than the present, the whole people of South Carolina will unite in saying that the law must be obeyed. Peace and prosperity can never be the reward of the people until every man knows that his first duty is not only to submit to the laws, but to lend his moral influence to their proper enforcement.

So much of the prayer of the petition as asks for a mandamus against Mr. Mackey must necessarily be dismissed. There cannot be two speakers of the house of representatives in South Carolina, and Mr. Mackey stands in the position, so far as appears by the testimony and in the view of the court, as a private citizen, against whom mandamus cannot issue.

In regard to Hayne, the court considers that another important question is involved, and will order a further hearing at some future day.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the said W. H. Wallace is the legal speaker of the lawfully-constituted house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, and, as such officer, was and is entitled to the possession of the returns of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor, held on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, and which were transmitted to H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, but it appearing that the said election-returns have been unlawfully delivered by said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, to E. W. M. Mackey, one of the respondents, the question is reserved for further argument and consideration whether the writ of mandamus should now issue to said H. E. Hayne, secretary of state.

It is further ordered and adjudged that the petition be dismissed as to E. W. M. Mackey.

THE STATE EX REL. WM. H. WALLACE, SPEAKER OF THE	} house of representatives,
vs.
H. E. HAYNE, AS SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M.	}
Mackey.

Opinion of A. J. Willard, associate justice.

As this is a case of very great magnitude, it would be proper to enunciate briefly the propositions upon which I concur with the action of the court. The supreme court has constitutional jurisdiction in cases of mandamus. Our jurisdiction is original and general. We have so construed the constitution repeatedly without objection to that jurisdiction having been raised at this bar, although we repeatedly affirmed that to be under our jurisdiction. Mandamus issues whenever a public officer is called upon to perform a ministerial act of a specific character, and on demand has refused its performance. The question then arises whether the secretary of state and E. W. M. Mackey occupy that position. Are the duties they are called upon to perform ministerial; are they specific; have they been called upon to perform them; and have they refused performance? And the additional question, whether Mackey is a public officer. There can be no question as to the character of the duty of the secretary of state. He is ordered to do a specific thing, to deliver certain papers to a certain person invested with the office of speaker of the house of representatives; that is clearly a ministerial act. We have rightfully defined a ministerial act to be one proceeding from a duty to do something which an individual or corporation has a right to demand should be done. The speaker of the house of representatives has a clear right to demand that the secretary of state should transmit to him the papers in question; the secretary of state, being a public officer, charged with this specific ministerial duty, is bound to perform it, and refusing it he may be compelled by mandamus. The question which is raised is, is Wallace speaker of the house of representatives? It seems that the body over which he presides had the constitutional majority, provided the members from Edgefield and Laurens Counties were entitled to seats in that body. This is in disputable. I am satisfied that the provision of the constitution that the house of representatives shall consist of (124) one hundred and twenty-four members is mandatory, and the house cannot obtain a constitutional organization without having a majority of that specific number of members participating in the organization. The question as to whether the members from Edgefield and Laurens Counties were entitled to seats was rightly understood by counsel as depending upon the jurisdiction of this court in mandamus. If this court had power to command the board of State canvassers to declare the election of those members from Edgefield and Laurens Counties, then we think they are to be regarded as members of the house of representatives. We permitted counsel to argue this question of our jurisdiction, not because we had any doubt or could conceive of a possible doubt, but because this is a case of great importance, and the court wished to hear everything that could be said upon the subject. We have no doubt about our jurisdiction to confine the board of canvassers within the limits of their proper jurisdiction, to say what the jurisdiction of that body is. We do not claim, nor have we ever exercised, nor do we intend to exercise, the right to control the discretion of any executive officer or board whatever, nor to interfere with their discretion. We determined that they had a mere ministerial duty to perform as regards members of the legislature. The provisions of the constitution making each house the judges of the elections, returns, and qualification of its own members could leave nothing for the board to do, but the ministerial duty of certifying the results of the election as they appeared prima facie, and the act of the legislature itself has paid respect to the constitution by withholding in terms from the board of State canvassers such powers when it is lodged in any other body. In the case under consideration it had been already lodged by the constitution in the several houses of the general assembly. The court commanded that specific ministerial duty to be performed. After the judgment was rendered from the bench, and before the writ of mandamus was issued, it appears from the proceedings in that case, which are before us, that the board undertook to make certain declarations in violation of their duty under the judgment of this court. Under familiar principles, that action was null and void, and could give no legal foundation to any legal action whatever. The members of the legislature were then in the same position as if the board had refused to make any declaration whatever after having been commanded by this court; and I presume that there is no lawyer, who will give fair consideration to this matter, who will doubt that if, after judgment pronounced, the board had refused to make any declaration whatever, it would have been competent for the members elected, under the statement of the board made to this court, to take their seats without any certificates whatever, inasmuch as their action was abortive when they disobeyed the order of the court. Technical restrictions are never to be applied in the vital stages of the organization of such a body. Red-tape can never be allowed to tie up the organic powers of the government. It would be to attempt to carry matters of form proper to the minor transactions of life into those great matters which cannot be hampered by such things. I am fully in accord with the court that the body which contained the constitutional number was the house over which Wallace presides; the one presided over by Mackey has no legal status whatever. Mackey is a private citizen, and is subject to arrest and punishment. The criminal courts of the country furnish the means of punishment. As to the secretary of state, I fully concur in the view that the question whether mandamus can go to him after he has parted with the papers should be fully argued at the bar.

THE STATE EX REL. WM. H. WALLACE, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE of Representatives,

vs.

H. E. HAYNE, AS SECRETARY OF STATE, AND E. W. M. MACKEY.

Opinion of Wright, J. J., Associate Justice.

I fully concur with my associates in all that they have said. I have just remarked to the chief-justice that it was not necessary for me to say a word, inasmuch as he and my other associate have better expressed my views than I am competent to do. The whole point in this case is whether or not five persons from Edgefield and three from Laurens had a prima facie right to take their seats and participate in the organization of the general assembly of South Carolina.

In looking a moment ago at the statutes under which the State board of canvassers are directed to act, I find the twenty-fourth section, which is one of the sections which defines their powers and duties, reads thus: "The board when thus formed shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given; they shall certify such statement to be correct, and indorse the same with their proper names." That was an indisputable duty devolved upon the board of State canvassers; it is evident that they did not perform that duty, inasmuch as they assumed to throw out two counties in the State, and to leave the people in those counties unrepresented in the organization of the house of representatives. Now, was there or is there any remedy or redress for the citizens of Edgesfield and Laurens Counties? The statutes provide that the board of county canvassers shall file certified copies of their statements in the office of the clerk of the court for each county; also with the governor, comptroller-general, and secretary of state. I regard that as a wise provision for the simple reason, if it can be called simple, that if the board of State canvassers could throw out a county or counties and declare that those counties shall have no representation, that there is a way by which you can tell who received the highest number of votes. Now, I presume the object of the government is, or should be, the protection and representation of the people. If a body of men acting as a board of State canvassers have a right to throw out one county and thus defeat its representation, they can throw out one-half or all the counties in the State and defeat an entire election, consequently I take it that those eight men had a right to participate in the organization of the house of representatives; that being the fact, it was impossible for the other so-called house to have the requisite constitutional majority.

So far as regards the other case, I fully concur with my associates that it is a very important and grave question; the secretary of state should be fully argued by counsel; it has not yet been argued at all.

The State of South Carolina, in the supreme court, November term, 1876.

I, Albert M. Boozer, clerk of the supreme court of South Carolina, do hereby certify that the foregoing annexed printed and written pages contain true copies of the proceedings had and of record in this court in the case of "The State of South Carolina, ex relatione W. H. E. HAYNE AND OTHERS, in re THE STATE OFFICERS. }

Report of referee, T. M. Wilkes.

To the honorable the justices of said court:

Pursuant to the order of this court, whereby it was referred to me "to take the testimony in the above cause and report the same to the court," I now beg leave respectfully to report:

That I have held references from time to time under the said order, attended by counsel for relators and respondents, and have taken the testimony produced before me, which is herewith submitted to the court.

The statements of the county canvassers from the several counties of the State, for the general election held on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, together with the managers' returns, poll-lists, and papers appertaining to the said election, so far as the same were on file in the office of the secretary of state, were produced before me under subpoena, and a careful comparison was instituted by me, assisted by the counsel for the parties respectively, and experts furnished by them, between the said statements of the county canvassers and the managers' returns from the precincts in the several counties, and a tabular statement prepared of the managers' returns for each county, upon which was noted all errors and irregularities apparent upon the face of the returns. These tabular statements are herewith filed as part of my report.

From the county canvassers' statements, the managers' returns, and the comparison so made, as well as the evidence, both oral and documentary, produced before me, I beg leave to report specially:

I. That an aggregate of the statements of the county canvassers for all the counties of the State shows the following persons to have severally received at said general election the number of votes set opposite their names for the several State offices voted for, to wit:

For secretary of state.

II. In making a comparison between the statements of the county canvassers in the several counties and the aggregates of the votes from the managers' returns, according to the tabular statements annexed, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the county canvassers had truly and correctly added the votes returned by the managers, I was compelled to omit the counties of Aiken and Williamsburgh, for the reason that no managers' returns were produced before me from the precinct of "Graniteville" in the former, and the precinct of "Black Mingo" in the latter county; and my own aggregate for these two counties was therefore necessarily incomplete; but upon making such a comparison in respect of all the other counties of the State, I discovered many errors of mere addition upon the part of the county canvassers. These errors, as they affect the several candidates voted for, are particularly set forth in the schedule annexed to this report, marked "Schedule I," from which it will appear that to make the votes above set forth, according to the county canvassers' statements, correspond with the true aggregate of the votes as they now appear upon the managers' return, (so far at least as they were before me,) the following changes should be made:

From the vote of H. E. Hayne should be deducted 42 votes.

To the vote of R. M. Sims should be added 9 votes.

To the vote of R. B. Elliott should be added 20 votes.

To the vote of James Conner should be added 6 votes.

From the vote of F. L. Cardozo should be deducted 55 votes.

To the vote of S. L. Leaphart should be added 52 votes.

To the vote of T. C. Dunn should be added 114 votes.

To the vote of Johnson Hagood should be added 2 votes.

From the vote of J. R. Tolbert should be deducted 3 votes.

From the vote of H. S. Thompson should be deducted 4 votes.

To the vote of E. W. Moise should be added 5 votes.

The 114 votes, however, which would thus be added to the vote of T. C. Dunn, include a discrepancy between my aggregate of the managers' returns for Horry County and that of the county canvassers in that county, amounting to 50 votes; that is to say, my aggregate exceeds the county canvassers' aggregate to that extent. Testimony was produced before me to show that this discrepancy arose not from any error in addition on the part of the county canvassers, but from an alteration of two of the managers' returns after they had been passed upon by the county canvassers, viz, by changing the figure 10, representing T. C. Dunn's vote at the precinct of Dogwood's Neck, in said county, into the figure 30, and by changing the figure 2, representing T. C. Dunn's vote at the precinct of Simpson's Creek, in said county, into the figure 32. If such alterations were in fact made, only 64 votes should be added to the vote of T. C. Dunn, according to the aggregate of the county canvassers' statement, for errors of addition, and not 114, as above stated.

III. The comparison between the county canvassers' statements and the managers' returns also developed the following discrepancies, to wit: That at the precinct of Chisolm's Landing, in Beaufort County, thirty-nine votes returned by the managers for "R. M. Sims as attorney-general" were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for James Conner as attorney-general; that at the precinct of Lizenby, in Kershaw County, 145 votes, returned by the manager for James Conner as comptroller-general, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for James Conner as attorney-general, and 145 returned by said managers for Johnson Hagood as attorney-general, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for Johnson Hagood as comptroller-general; that at the precinct of Fountain Academy, in the county of Aiken, 86 votes returned by the managers for R. B. Elliott as comptroller-general, and 163 votes, returned by them for James Conner as comptroller-general, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the votes for the said candidates respectively as attorney-general, and 86 votes returned by said managers for T. C. Dunn as attorney-general, and 163 votes returned by them for Johnson Hagood as attorney-general, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the votes for said candidates respectively for comptroller-general; that at the precinct of "Britton's Neck," in Marion County, 94 votes, returned by the managers for R. B. Elliott as comptroller-general, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for R. B. Elliott as attorney-general, and 94 votes, returned by the managers for T. C. Dunn as attorney-general, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for T. C. Dunn as comptroller-general; that at the precinct of White Plains, in Spartanburgh County, 158 votes, returned by the managers for F. C. Dunn as comptroller-general were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for T. C. Dunn as comptroller-general; that at the precinct of "Ralph Smith's Old Place," in Spartanburgh County, 85 votes, returned by the managers for J. B. Tolbert as superintendent of education, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for J. R. Tolbert as superintendent of education; that at the precinct of "Jamison's Turn Out," county of Orangeburgh, 175 votes, returned by the managers for R. M. Hayne as secretary of state, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for H. E. Hayne as secretary of state; that at various precincts in the county of Orangeburgh, votes, aggregating 1,308, returned by the managers of said precincts for J. B. Tolbert as superintendent of education, were included by the county canvassers in their statement of the vote for J. R. Tolbert for the same office; and that at the precinct of Market Hall, in the county of Charleston, the vote for E. W. Moise, as adjutant and inspector general, returned by the managers as 282, was included by the county canvassers, in their statement, as 382; all the other candidates on the same side having received about that number of votes, and the managers having returned the whole number of votes cast for said office to be 100 votes in excess of the number which would have been cast had said E. W. Moise received only 282 votes; all of which will more particularly appear by reference to the schedule marked "Schedule 2," annexed to this report.

IV. Testimony was produced before me to show that at Graham's precinct in Barnwell County, and McMillan's precinct in the county of Marion, 407 votes returned by the managers of said precincts for James Conner as comptroller-general, and 241 votes returned by them for R. B. Elliott as comptroller-general, and so stated in the statements of the county canvassers for said counties, were in fact cast for said candidates, respectively, for the office of attorney-general; and that the failure so to return them arose from a clerical mistake upon the part of the managers or their clerk; and that 410 votes returned by the managers for the same precincts, for Johnson Hagood as attorney-general, and 238 votes returned by them for T. C. Dunn as attorney-general, were in fact cast for the said candidates, respectively, for the office of comptroller-general; and that the failure so to return them arose from a like clerical mistake; also, that for the neglect of the county canvassers to correct said mistakes protests were filed.

V. Testimony was also produced before me to show that at Campbell's Bridge precinct, in the county of Marion, 246 votes were actually cast for S. L. Leaphart as State treasurer, and 101 votes for F. L. Cardozo, as State treasurer, and were so counted by the managers at the precinct, but that said managers or their clerk omitted by mistake to include said votes in their return to the county canvassers, and the said county canvassers to include them in their statement; and that protests were filed for the omission of the county canvassers to include said votes.

VI. The returns produced before me as the managers' returns from Barnwell County contained, with other returns, a paper purporting to be a return of the managers from Robbins precinct in said county. This paper was included by me in the tabular statement of the managers' returns from said county, but appears not to have been so included by the county canvassers or the State canvassers in their respective statements. Testimony was taken as to the manner in which said paper came to be included among the papers produced as the managers' returns from Barnwell County, and also as to the character of said paper or return, and to show that it had not been included by the county or State canvassers in their statements; all of which is herewith submitted.

VII. Testimony was also taken by me touching the return purporting to come from the precinct designated as "Abbeville Court-House, No. 2," and as to the legality of a poll at such precinct.

VIII. The several managers' returns produced before me exhibit upon their faces many irregularities; some of them purporting to be from precincts not named in the statutes; some having no signatures of any managers, others being signed by only one or only two managers, &c.; these, with many other irregularities, were noted, as already stated, in the margin of the tabular statements; for convenience, I have made a special table of such of these irregularities as appeared of most importance, and have attached the same to my report, marked "Schedule 3."

Respectfully submitted.

Suggestion for mandamus.—In re State officers.

Before T. M. WILKES, referee :

At a reference held January 2, 1877—present, Messrs. Conner and Corbin, attorneys in the cause. Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, at 10 o'clock a. m., appeared at the office of the referee in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum, and tendered the referee and the counsel engaged in the cause the use of the ante-room of his office at the State-house for the purpose of holding the reference, and stated that he would there produce the papers demanded, to wit, the statements of the county canvassers and the returns from the managers of precincts, and all protests and papers appertaining to the election of November 7, 1876, which accompanied said statements and returns.

At 10.30 a. m. reference adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m.

Reference opened at 11 a. m. in the ante-room of the office of the secretary of state. Present, Messrs. Conner and Cavender, attorneys in the cause. The returns of managers of election and county canvassers for the county of Abbeville were first taken up, and a tabulated statement of the votes reported cast at said election, according to said returns, was made.

A tabulated statement of the returns of managers of election and of the county canvassers for the county of Aiken was then made. Upon examination of said returns it was ascertained that the managers' return for Graniteville precinct was wanting. General Conner, counsel for the relators, introduced in evidence the managers' return for presidential electors for that precinct, which shows that the democratic electors received 786 votes and the republican electors 76 votes. Mr. Cavender, counsel for the respondents, objected.

The several counties of the State were now taken up in alphabetical order, and tabular statements of the returns of the managers of election and county canvassers of each county were prepared, the work being continued from day to day until completed. Mr. LeConte appeared with General Conner as counsel for the relators, and Mr. Cavender as counsel for the respondents. Notes were made, which appear upon the tabular statements, indicating discrepancies and irregularities in the returns. In addition to these notes a copy was taken, at the request of General Conner, of a statement appearing upon the return of the managers of election for the Club-House precinct of Charleston County, to wit: Underneath the signatures of T. A. Johnson and Nathaniel Mayrant, chairman of the board of managers for the Club-House precinct, is the following, signed in writing by Timothy Hurley, chairman board of canvassers:

"By the poll-lists and the tally-sheet this return shows that the votes recorded for the several persons therein mentioned do agree. The managers sign the same after their attention was called to the same."

Also, the further note was taken, at the request of General Conner, of the following statement appearing upon the return for Rantowle's precinct, Colleton County, to wit:

"The managers of Rantowle's precinct, after counting and verifying the ballots at that precinct, failed to make any statement or return of the votes cast. The ballots were counted by the board of canvassers on the 10th day of November, 1876, and the statement and return of votes made by them. Five ballots were found in the box so folded that their contents were exposed. They were not counted by the board of canvassers. The poll-list was returned by the managers, which was verified.

"C. B. BROOK.
"J. J. FOX."

The tabulated statements herein referred to are attached, marked "A."

A tabular statement of the aggregate votes, as reported by the managers' returns of each county, was prepared, and is attached hereto, marked "B."

FRIDAY, January 5

Reference began at 10 o'clock a. m.
Present, General Conner and Mr. Cavender.

J. W. PERRIN, a witness offered in behalf of the relators, being duly sworn, testified as follows: I reside in Abbeville County. I was one of the commissioners of election for Abbeville County in the last general election, 7th of November, 1876. On the 30th day of October, 1876, the first meeting of the board of commissioners, the two other commissioners proposed to open box No. 2, stating that they had written to the attorney-general as to the legality of their doing so. I made strenuous opposition to it, and at my suggestion it was adjourned over to the next meeting. At the next meeting, November 4th, 1876, they announced their determination to open precinct No. 2, as will appear from abstract of the record of their proceedings. (A certified copy of this record was here put in evidence, and is attached hereto, marked "C.") I further read to them the legal opinion of two members of the Abbeville bar (General McGowan and Mr. Burt) against the legality of box No. 2. I also requested to see the opinion of the attorney-general which they said they had received, stating that I supposed it was the property of the board. They declined to show it to me, and never did so. Citizens of Abbeville were advised not to vote at poll No. 2, which was held at the A. M. E. school-house.

Mr. Cavender, counsel for respondents, examines witness: If no formal vote was taken at the second meeting, as to holding an election at precinct No. 2, it amounted to the same thing. It was understood that a majority of the board decided a question two to one. My protest was a verbal one. The managers for the other precincts had been appointed at the first meeting. After this decision the board proceeded to appoint managers for precinct No. 2. The managers for this precinct were appointed in the same way as were the managers for other precincts. They appointed two managers and I appointed one. Notice to the voters was published as to elections being held at the other sixteen precincts. Precinct No. 2 was not included in this notice because it had not been established until the preceding Saturday, which was subsequent to the publication-day of the county papers. No public notice was given of this precinct. When I said "Citizens of Abbeville were advised not to vote at poll No. 2," I meant that I had been informed that such a notice had been given to the crowd in the town of Abbeville on the morning of the day I arrived there, which was on the day of the election, 7th of November, 1876. I did not hear the notice given. I was told that Colonel Cothran gave the notice. He was not an election-officer, but a private citizen and a candidate for office. A ballot-box and blanks for poll-lists and election-returns, I presume, were furnished to the managers of that precinct. The matter was intrusted to Desverney, commissioner, living at Abbeville Court-House. The three managers appointed for that poll served as such to my knowledge. Subsequently to the election, they returned to the county canvassers a statement of the results of the election at that poll, with the poll-list and box containing the ballots. I acted as one of the canvassers in counting the votes of the county. We included the returns of this box in the general return of the canvassers. I signed the statement of the county canvassers. I made no protest on the statement. My understanding was that the paper marked "C," the proceedings of the board, including the protest, was to be forwarded with the returns. Two years previous to the 7th of November there was a poll held at precinct No. 2, A. M. E. school-house.

Mr. Conner examines witness in reply: My verbal protest was entered on the minutes. The distance between precinct No. 1 and precinct No. 2 was about 300 yards; both were in the corporate limits.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1877.

Reference opened at 10 o'clock a. m.

Messrs. Conner and LeConte, and Mr. Cavender, attorneys, were present.

Counsel agreed that where it has been noted that the christian names or initials of candidates have been omitted, such notes be stricken out, as the noting was not general throughout the returns. Also that the note of the date of the return be omitted for the same reason.

Reference adjourned at 2 o'clock p. m. until 7 o'clock p. m.

7 o'clock p. m., January 10, 1877.

Reference opened. Present, General Conner and Mr. Cavender.

Hon. H. E. HAYNE, secretary of state, witness called on the part of the relators, being duly sworn, says: I was chairman of the board of State canvassers that canvassed the results of the last general election. The return of the precinct called Robbins precinct, Barnwell County, was not included in the county canvassers' statement. The votes of that precinct were not included in the canvass of the State canvassers. The return of that precinct was not included in the canvass of the State canvassers.

The return of that precinct was not forwarded by the county canvassers to me by the messenger who delivered the other returns from that county. The statement forwarded by the county canvassers of Barnwell County was signed by all three of the county canvassers. The statement of the county canvassers that is with the return of the Robbins precinct is signed by only one canvasser.

Question. When and by whom was the return from Robbins precinct delivered to you as secretary of state?—Answer. I can't answer the question; my clerk, Mr. Johnson, can tell.

Mr. Cavender, counsel for respondents, examines witness:

Q. When and by whom was the statement of the county canvassers of Barnwell County delivered to you as secretary of state?—A. I can't say. The returns from Barnwell County were delivered to my clerk, Mr. Johnson. The State canvassers made up their statement from the face of the county canvassers' statements. The statement of the county canvassers of Barnwell County did not declare on its face whether it did or did not include the votes at Robbins precinct.

Q. From what fact do you know that the board of State canvassers did not include the votes at Robbins precinct in their statement?—A. There was an additional return signed by one commissioner only, and the return from Robbins precinct accompanied that paper.

Q. Did that return or paper state that the county canvassers had not counted the votes at Robbins precinct?—A. I can't say from memory. I will have to see the paper.

Q. Where is the paper?—A. In my office.

(The witness was asked to produce the paper.)

Q. At the time the return from Robbins precinct was delivered to you, was it or was it not accompanied by a written statement why it was not delivered to you with the county canvassers' statement?—A. I think there was such a paper. I received two papers, one signed by Mr. Knopf and the other signed by Mr. Generette, both county canvassers.

(Witness was requested to produce these papers.)

General Conner, in reply:

There is a statement from the county canvassers of Barnwell County; cannot state contents from memory, but will produce the paper.

Reference adjourned at 8.30 o'clock p. m. till to-morrow, 9.30 o'clock a. m.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Thursday, January 11, 1877.

Reference opened at 10.30 o'clock a. m. Present, General Conner and Mr. Cavender.

Mr. Hayne, secretary of state, produced papers referred to in his testimony of yesterday, to wit: Affidavits of Abram Knopf, L. W. Generette, and supplemental return of commissioners of election. These papers are attached hereto, marked "D."

The protests of Messrs. Hagood and Conner produced, were identified, and marked as papers in the bundle of the Barnwell papers in the office of secretary of state. They are hereto attached, marked "E."

Mr. Hayne (witness) says, he can't say positively that last above papers came up with the statement of county canvassers. Mr. Johnson received them.

H. B. JOHNSON, sworn and says:

I am clerk of the secretary of state. As such, I received the package sent up by messenger from the commissioners of election for Barnwell County. The package was sealed and wired. The package was received about one week after the election. The Robbins return was received two or three days after the original package was received, as near as I can recollect. The Robbins return was brought by one of the commissioners, L. W. Generette.

Witness examines protests of Messrs. Conner and Hagood, and says that those papers were in the custody of the secretary of state, and produced from that office; presumes that they came up with the returns sent by the messenger, but does not know the fact. Hundreds of papers are now in the office of the secretary of state, connected with the returns, and witness cannot identify all of them. Witness produced paper from Marion County, styled "protest from W. W. Harlee," and papers attached to it. Also produces statement of the board of canvassers which came up with the return. These papers are attached hereto, marked "F."

Cross-examined by Mr. Cavender:

I cannot state at what time the returns from the Robbins precinct was delivered to me; but it was two or three days after the statement of the county canvassers was received from messenger.

L. B. ROGERS, witness called by General Conner, being duly sworn, says, (Mr. Cavender objecting:)

I was one of the managers at the Campbell's Bridge poll, Marion County, at the last general election. Witness identifies the tally-list as the original tally-list kept at the polls by John A. Breeden, United States supervisor. On that tally-list witness says S. L. Leaphart is put down as a candidate for the office of State treasurer, and received 246 votes. It was from this tally-list that the managers made up their returns. Mr. Breeden kept the tally-list; and the reason why managers did not include the votes for Leaphart in their return must have been that he failed to call out the vote, or the clerk failed to put it down when called out. The error of omission was brought to the attention of the county canvassers. They did not correct it. It was brought to their attention on Saturday after the election.

Witness cross-examined by Mr. Cavender :

Cardozo got at that precinct 101 votes for State treasurer. The managers all insisted that the United States supervisor should keep the tally-list, as he had been manager of election several times previously. After the clerk had made out the return, the managers did not compare the return with the tally-list. After the return was made out, the supervisor kept the tally-list. I first discovered the omission of the votes for State treasurer the first Saturday after the election. Mr. Johnson, the chairman of the democratic county committee for Marion County, wrote me a note that no votes for State treasurer were returned as cast for Leaphart at our precinct. I then went to the supervisor, who had the tally-list, and got it from him. I identified the tally-list from my knowledge of the clerk's handwriting and my memory of the figures. I had put no mark on it by which I could identify it. I then carried the tally-list to Mr. Johnson, chairman of the democratic committee. I do not know what was done with it afterward.

W. H. McPHERSON, a witness called by General Conner, being duly sworn, says, (Mr. Cavender objecting:)

I was clerk of the board of managers for McMillan's precinct, Marion County, in the last general election. Mr. Mike Manheim, chairman of the board of managers, called out the votes and witness kept the tally. I have the paper on which I kept the tally. (Witness produced it, hereto attached, marked "G.") On this list Hagood received 186 votes. Hagood was voted for for comptroller-general at that poll. Conner was voted for for attorney-general at that poll. The votes voted at that precinct were printed votes, on both sides, with one exception on the republican side. Witness called off the vote from the tally-list, and Manheim wrote them on the return. Supposes the error occurred in that way. Mr. Manheim took a copy of witness's tally-list, which he enclosed with the poll-list, which were forwarded to the commissioners of election at Marion Court-House.

Witness cross-examined by Mr. Cavender :

I made out this tally-list myself. Two other persons were chosen by the supervisors to make out tally-lists. I don't know what became of their tally-lists. The chairman's order was to tally for Hampton and Chamberlain. He did not tell me to keep any tally for the other officers. I did not keep the tally in the regular way for the other candidates. The votes marked on my tally-list for Johnson Hagood and T. C. Dunn were cast for them as comptroller-general. Mr. Manheim made out the managers' return. He made out the return, so far as Chamberlain and Hampton are concerned, from my tally-list. The return on file in the office of secretary of state, and now exhibited, is the return he made out. I cannot tell why he did not give Hagood and Dunn the votes on my tally-list. I see on my tally-list that the vote for Dunn is 176, and for Hagood 186, while the vote on the return for Dunn is 175 and for Hagood 187. I see on my tally-list that the vote for Elliott is 176, and for Conner 186, while the vote on the return is for Elliott 175, and for Conner 187. I did not examine every ballot so as to enable me to say for what office each candidate was voted for. I know that all the votes cast for Elliott and Conner were for them as attorney-general, and all those cast for Dunn and Hagood were for them as comptroller-general, because the chairman called them out as the ballots were counted. There were some scratched tickets; only one on the State ticket.

T. C. CRAWFORD, witness called by General Conner, sworn, says, (Mr. Cavender objecting:)

I was supervisor of McMillan's poll, Marion County. I attended the polls from 6 o'clock a. m. to 6 o'clock p. m., 7th November, 1876. The voting at that precinct on both sides was on printed tickets. Hagood and Dunn were voted for as comptroller-general; Conner and Elliott were voted for as attorney-general. I saw none for Dunn or Hagood for attorney-general.

Mr. CAVENDER. No questions.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1877.

Reference opened at 10 a. m. Present: Messrs. Conner and LeConte, and Mr. Cavender.

The managers' returns for each of the several counties in the State were again canvassed as to the vote reported for General Hagood and Captain Dunn for the office of comptroller-general; and the returns for Corbettsville precinct, Orangeburg County, being examined as to the correct meaning of the vote reported for T. C. Dunn and Johnson Hagood, counsel for Mr. Hagood insisted that his vote should be read 170, and Mr. Dunn's vote 218. On the other hand, counsel for Mr. Dunn insisted that the vote for Mr. Hagood should be read 169, and for Mr. Dunn 219, as was already entered on the tabular statement as previously announced by counsel.

Remark by referee: The figures in dispute appear to have been altered twice by the clerk or some one, and the referee is unable to decide, in the absence of testimony to show the true vote, what number of votes the respective parties are here entitled to. Return attached, marked "I."

E. C. BEHLING, witness called by General Conner, sworn, says, (Mr. Cavender objecting:)

I was chairman of the managers at Graham's precinct, Barnwell County. (The original tally-list kept by witness was identified, and was offered in evidence by General Conner; also the statement or affidavit of the managers of that precinct. The same are hereto attached, marked "H.") The voters at that precinct, in election of 7th November, 1876, voted printed tickets on both sides, and, with the exception of two or three, the tickets were voted straight. General Hagood was voted for for comptroller-general on those tickets. Captain Dunn was voted for for comptroller-general on the republican tickets; and Elliott and General Conner were voted for for attorney-general. By mistake of the clerk, General Conner was placed on the returns as being voted for for comptroller-general, and Hagood for attorney-general; and Elliott and Dunn were transposed in the same way. The mistake was brought to my attention some two months ago.

Mr. CAVENDER. No questions.

SATURDAY, January 13, 1877.

Reference opened at 5 o'clock p. m.

Present, Messrs. Conner and LeConte, and Mr. Cavender.

Abram Knopf, witness called by Mr. Cavender, sworn, says: I was one of the commissioners of election of Barnwell County, in election held on 7th November, 1876. I was chairman of the board. The commissioners first met on Friday, 10th November, 1876, and organized as a board of county canvassers. I had at that time received ballot-boxes, poll-lists, and managers' returns from thirteen precincts, and one empty box from Canaan's Fair Church, with information from one of the managers that no election was held there. We proceeded to count the votes of the county. We took the figures from the returns of the managers, and then aggregated them. We met at the clerk's office at Barnwell Court-House. When we first met to canvass the returns there were a goodly number of people there; the room was full at first. There were some persons in the adjoining room and some on the piazza. General Hagood was there. Judge Maher and others were there. I think I saw one or two colored persons there at the first gathering. I presume all the rest were democrats. Judge Maher offered his services to advise us as a board. We did not employ him as counsel. He said he would advise and assist us in making out the returns. At a previous meeting Mr. Blanton, the democratic commissioner, had said to me we ought to have some advice for the board. I said I did not think that we needed any; nevertheless, Judge Maher did come on this Friday and advise us. I am not positive whether I asked him for any advice or not; I might have done so. The board did not pass any resolution or take any action requesting him to act as their adviser. I went to the meeting that day thinking that we would organize, receive the boxes, and adjourn until the following Tuesday, to canvass the votes. This was my understanding with the other commissioner, Generette. By advice of Judge Maher we proceeded to canvass the votes on Friday, November 10, 1876. Mr. Generette proposed to adjourn, and I said that we had better proceed to canvass the votes under the advice of Judge Maher. So we proceeded to make the canvass. We canvassed the returns for thirteen precincts. Between eight and nine o'clock that night one ballot-box was said to have come from Robbins. I did not see the box. The box which came was offered to me as the Robbins precinct box, and the returns, poll-lists, &c. One of the men was named Bush. The other one I did not see. Bush offered me what he said were the returns. I asked Bush who had the ballot-box, and he said [answer objected to by General Conner] "There is the box," pointing to the other person, who he said was the other messenger. I saw the bag; did not know what was in the bag. I said to them, "Leave; I will touch nothing from Robbins." I told them that I had given orders to bring all the returns by twelve o'clock. I told them it was too late. The meeting of the board continued until eight or nine o'clock next morning. Heard nothing further during the meeting from any of the managers at Robbins precinct. After we had completed the whole canvass, Mr. H. M. Thompson, of Williston, drew up a few lines to the effect that we commissioners had canvassed thirteen precincts and an empty box from Canaan's Fair Church, and nothing received from Robbins. This paper was signed by all the commissioners. I don't re-

Cross-examined by General Conner :

The paper that Mr. Thompson drew up and the commissioners signed was put with the rest of the returns, sealed up. I delivered the package to the chief clerk of the secretary of state. Generette and the clerk of the board were with me while riding from Barnwell to Blackville with the returns. The time at which Generette signed was near dark, Saturday evening, at Blackville. Monday I brought the sealed package of papers up to Columbia. Generette did not come to Columbia with me. I remained in Columbia till Wednesday night. The clerk of secretary of state, when I handed him the returns I had, asked me if these returns were all. I said, "This is all I have received." He asked me if I had a supplemental return, and I said I had not. He then said he could not receive them. This was on Monday morning about eleven o'clock. He did not take the package until Wednesday. On Wednesday morning I went to the State-house and delivered him the package of the returns, and he gave me a receipt for them. I saw Generette here in town on Monday when I got here. When I was called out on the night of the 10th by the two men to receive what they said were the returns from Robbins precinct, I said nothing about it to the other commissioners on my return to the room. G. E. Osborne was the county commissioner of Barnwell County, who spoke to me in Columbia, and asked me if I did not intend to make a supplemental return.

In reply, by Mr. Cavender :

The clerk of the secretary of state opened the package I gave him by taking the wire off the package and glanced at the back of several of the rolls outside; each roll having an India rubber around it. And he then took the whole into the secretary of state's own room. I am sure he did not examine the papers. The secretary of state was not present at that time.

L. W. GENERETTE, witness called by Mr. Cavender, sworn, says :

I was one of the commissioners of election for Barnwell County at the last election. I was present at the meeting when we organized as a board of county canvassers. This was on the Friday after the election. We met at Barnwell Court-House in clerk of court's office. We met on that day for the purpose of receiving the poll-lists and returns, and to adjourn until the following Tuesday. There had been an agreement made at a previous meeting of the board to this effect. The chairman notified me at the close of that previous meeting to meet on the Friday after the election for that purpose. We received at the Friday meeting returns from thirteen precincts and one empty box from Canaan's Fair Church. We did not adjourn after receiving the returns. I made a motion to adjourn. Mr. Knopf told me that I had better go by the advice of Judge Maher, who was then acting as an adviser of the board. The board had not employed Judge Maher to act as its adviser. Judge Maher asked me why I was not willing to go to work when the others were ready; and I told him by the instructions I had I thought it was right to adjourn until Tuesday, and to canvass the votes then. I continued to object to going on with the count. I finally yielded.

Mr. Knopf, the chairman, said [General Conner here objected to witness's saying anything that Knopf told him] that I had better take the advice; that the democrats were there in such force that it would not do to object any further. I believed there was danger in refusing, and therefore I went on with the work. There were a great many democrats there in the room we were in; in the adjoining room and outside also. Some of them were cursing the radicals, &c. Judge Maher staid there until we got through the canvass. Judge Maher advised us all the way through. The crowd staid there for two hours after we began to count. After that the crowd began to thin off. I heard nothing during that meeting about the returns from the Robbins box. Mr. Knopf, chairman of commissioners, called the roll of the managers, and there was no answer from Robbins. I heard nothing from any returns from Robbins precinct until the next morning, after we had left the building. Mr. Knopf, the clerk of the board, and myself were about leaving Barnwell on Saturday morning, 11th of November, when Mr. Bush, one of the managers from Robbins precinct, presented the returns and ballot-box and poll-list all together from Robbins precinct to Mr. Knopf and myself. I saw Allen, Mims, and another person along with Bush. Mr. Knopf said he would not receive them; said he was afraid to receive them. I said that I would receive them, and told him to take them on to Blackville. Bush went on to Blackville. We all went on to Blackville. When we got there I received them. I made out a supplemental statement as commissioner of election, and put it with the other papers I had received from Bush, tied them all up together, and brought them to Columbia that Saturday night. Tuesday or Wednesday afterwards I presented them to the secretary of state. I asked Mr. Knopf to sign the supplemental return or statement. He did not sign it.

Question. Did he give you any reason for not signing it?

(Question objected to by General Conner.)

Answer. He said he was afraid to sign it. Said if he did so he knew that he could not live in Barnwell. He said I could sign it if I wanted to.

(Same objection by General Conner.)

Question. Did you ask Mr. Bush why the returns from Robbins had not been brought in at an earlier day?

(Question objected to by General Conner.)

Answer. He told me that while on his way with the poll-list, box, and returns, to Barnwell, he was attacked by an armed body of men and was turned back.

Witness cross-examined by General Conner:

It was after breakfast when we left Barnwell for Blackville. We had adjourned just a little before we started. Bush went on ahead of us to Blackville. It was some time after one o'clock when he turned over the poll-list, &c., to me at Blackville. I left Blackville for Columbia at ten o'clock that night. I did not present them until Tuesday or Wednesday, because I did not know that the board had met to receive returns before that time. I paid my own expenses here, and remained here Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, without ascertaining whether I could present my supplemental return or not. The only conversation I had in Columbia about the returns was with Mr. Knopf, up to the time of delivering them to the secretary of state. I live now at Midway, in the county of Barnwell, off and on.

Question. What instructions do you refer to when you say you differed from Judge Maher with regard to adjournment because you had instructions?

Answer. I refer to the constitution and the election laws. I don't know whether that was the way the paper was headed or not. I think that each of the board had a copy of the instructions of the attorney-general, Mr. Stone. This is the paper I refer to.

In reply, by Mr. Cavender:

Question. Whether the instructions you refer to were or were not the instructions of the attorney-general, what was the purport of the instructions you refer to, as to whether you should canvass the votes of the county within three days after the election or on the Tuesday of the week following?

Answer. I understood the instructions to be that we should meet on Friday to receive the returns and on the following Tuesday to canvass them.

JANUARY 15, 1877.

Reference opened at 4 o'clock p. m.

Present, Messrs. Couner and LeConte, and Mr. Cavender.

L. W. GENERETTE recalled by Mr. Cavender, and testified as follows:

In my conversation with Mr. Knopf, after my arrival in Columbia, I asked him when he was going to present the returns he had to the secretary of state. He said that he had offered them once and they had not been received, and he did not know when he would offer them again. I told him the reason why I asked him was that I wanted to present my supplementary return the same time when he presented his. Does not know that Knopf's remark was the basis of my not knowing that the State board of canvassers was ready to receive returns. I thought that they would not be ready to receive the returns before Tuesday.

General CONNER. No questions.

B. F. FREDERICK, called by Mr. Cavender, sworn, says :

I was one of the managers at Corbettsville precinct, Orangeburgh County, at the last general election. I was the chairman of the board of managers. I participated in counting the ballots at the close of the election. George F. Frederick, the clerk, counted the ballots as they were taken out of the box. G. A. Summers and myself kept the tally. He was one of the managers. I made out the returns. I made out three returns: one general return, including State and county officers; one of presidential electors, and one of governor and lieutenant-governor. This is the return (marked "I") for State and county officers I allude to. This was made out from the tally-list G. A. Summers and myself kept. I notice the votes given for the democratic State officers. There has been an alteration in each of them. This alteration was made by me in the presence of the board, and by the direction of the board. We made this correction because we found on adding up the return there were 389 votes for each office, while the whole number of names on the poll-list was 388. When we found this out we put the entire number of ballots in the ballot-box and shook them up, and the clerk then drew out one ballot, and that one was a democratic ballot. That caused us to alter the democratic vote from 170 to 169, except General Hampton's, which is changed from 172 to 171. General Hagood's vote, before the alteration, was given as 170; it was altered to 169. Captain Dunn's vote was originally given at 219. His vote was never changed to my knowledge; it was not changed at all. The figures are not plain because the return was made up hurriedly at night, and the figure 9 in Captain Dunn's vote was blotted, but it was not altered at any time. This was all done in the presence of the board and by its direction. This return and the other returns and the poll-list were put inside the ballot-box, which was locked up and sealed, and was delivered to the county commissioners by Robert Washington, another of the managers, and myself. The box was locked and sealed on Tuesday night in the presence of the board and supervisors, on the night of the election, and was delivered to the county commissioners of election on the following Thursday. I notice the return is not signed by the managers. This fact was first called to my attention to-day. The other returns I have mentioned were signed. I know that I signed two returns: for presidential electors and for governor. I don't know why this report was not signed. It was only an oversight. We thought they were all signed before we put them in the box. The whole proceedings of the board were unanimous.

Cross-examined by General Conner: I have my tally-list at home. Nobody kept tally-lists except myself and Summers. G. A. Summers was the democratic manager at that poll. We found that there was one vote too much when we counted the ballots on the tally-list. We found out the mistake after we had filled out the return. The total vote cast, as stated on the first page of the return, has not been altered. I don't remember whether I discovered the error before we finished the return or not. The total number of votes was first 389, altered to 388. The whole ticket was not voted straight on each side. The only split that occurred as to the State officers was two scratched off Chamberlain and put on Hampton.

In reply, by Mr. Cavender: The error was discovered before we completed the returns, but I am not sure that we discovered it before all the figures were down.

It is now agreed between counsel that the referee shall close his report upon all testimony now in or that may come in before twelve o'clock to-night, and that all testimony which shall come in after that time shall be embodied in a supplemental report.

TUESDAY, January 16, 1877.

Reference opened at two o'clock, p. m.
Present, Messrs. Conner and Cavender.

C. C. BOWEN, called by Mr. Cavender, sworn, says: I am sheriff of Charleston County. I am familiar with the election precincts in Charleston County; know them all. Rushland precinct is on John's Island, near the Stono River. The managers at Rushland precinct were William F. Dover, Dr. Hannihan, and Isaac Anerum. (Newspaper advertisement of managers of election for the several precincts for Charleston County was here put in evidence, marked "J.")

General CONNER. No questions.

H. B. JOHNSON, clerk of secretary of state, being sworn, says :

The testimony of Mr. Kuopf having been read to me, I desire to say that it is not according to my recollection that I refused to receive the returns because they were not complete. He came into the office just as I arrived there, saying that he had the returns of the election for Barnwell County. I asked him if he wanted to deliver them; he replied, "Yes; but that he would like to see General Elliott first." I told him where General Elliott could be found; and also said that he could bring back the returns any time during the morning and I would receive them from him. I then asked him, incidentally, if the return of Robbins precinct was amongst those he had;

he replied, "No;" said Commissioner Generette had them. He did not come back that day. When he brought the returns back again, I received them and receipted for them.

General Conner cross-examined witness:

I had heard it said around the State-house by persons that there was a supplemental return. The first I heard of it was at the republican executive committee room Sunday night or Monday morning. Don't know whether Generette had been to the committee-room or not.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1877.

Reference opened at ten o'clock a. m.

Présent: General Conner and Mr. Cavender.

H. B. JOHNSON, clerk of secretary of state, called by General Conner, sworn, says: I now produce the returns, poll-list, and canvassers' statement for the county of Horry. The return for Simpson's Creek is not in the bundle of returns for that county. Ordinarily all the papers relating to each county are kept together. The return for Simpson's Creek poll was in the Horry County package of returns. I don't know what has become of the return from Simpson's Creek. It is possible that the return from Simpson's Creek is among some of the papers from some of the other counties.

(Witness desires to return to the office of secretary of state and examine other papers, and see if it cannot be found there.)

L. E. LÉCONTE, esq., being duly sworn, says:

I examined the returns from Horry County several times. I had noticed (at the first examination of the returns) that the returns from Simpson's Creek and Dogwood Neck, where the vote for Dunn and Hagood was designated, wore the appearance of having been altered. I bore the matter in mind for more special investigation if it should prove to be necessary. On Wednesday last I made a more particular examination of these returns, and then made memoranda from the returns from Simpson's Creek, Dogwood Neck, and Bayboro', in Horry County. These are the original memoranda which I made. It appears upon the face for Simpson's Creek that the total number of votes for comptroller-general was 220; Hagood's vote being 218, and Dunn 32. These were aggregated on the return as 250. In the figures 32, representing Dunn's vote, the "3" appeared to be in a different hand from the "2," and the figures 250, representing the aggregate of the vote, were written over the original figures, which were 220.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cavender:

At the time I first made the examination of the return for Simpson's Creek, which was at the time the tabular statement was made out by the referee, I did not have a note made on the margin of the statement for the reason that I did not wish to suggest a suspicion which might prove unfounded. I had the return in my hand, and I called out the figures from it which were put down by the referee in his tabular statement. In calling out the figures I gave Hagood 218, Dunn 32. I did not call the attention of counsel, for respondents to what appeared to be the alteration in the figures.

In reply, by General Conner:

The suspicion was confirmed in my mind at the time the aggregation of the returns was made, and a discrepancy was found to exist between the aggregation of the managers' returns and the canvassers' statement. This discrepancy amounted to fifty votes. The suspected alteration at this precinct and at the precinct of Dogwood Neck made up the fifty votes. At the time (on Wednesday) I informed General Conner of my suspicions, and showed him these returns. I afterward carefully replaced the return from Simpson's Creek in the batch of returns from Horry County.

W. B. CARTER, witness called by General Conner, being duly sworn, says: I was a manager at Simpson's Creek poll, county of Horry, in the last general election. This poll was held at Round Swamp; there is a store there. N. W. Goss, J. W. Hardwick, and myself were the managers at that poll. T. C. Dunn received two votes for comptroller-general; I made out the returns myself. There were only two votes put down on that return for Dunn. When the return from that poll was completed it was returned to the county canvassers. Before doing so I carried it to Mr. Walsh's office, and a copy of the State vote and the electoral vote was made out from the return I made out at the election-ground. After the copies were made, I carried the returns myself to the county canvassers. The return was never out of my possession till I delivered it to the canvassers.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cavender:

When the votes for that precinct were canvassed by the managers, there was a tally-list kept by myself and the other two managers. We took turn about in calling out the vote and keeping tally. I don't know where the tally-list is. We put it in the ballot-box and sent it up to the county canvassers, to the best of my recollection. I am confident that neither Mr. Walsh nor Mr. Quattlebaum had the return in their hands. I called off the return to them. I carried the return in my hands, I think, rolled up in a newspaper. It was not sealed then. The number of votes given to the other republican candidates at the poll was, I think, 32. The vote given for the other democratic candidates at that poll was, I think, 218 or 219.

In reply, by General Conner :

The small vote given to Captain Dunn was noted. He had received a large vote before for senator for that county, and the small vote was noted for that reason. It was noted by others beside myself. I do not remember any other circumstances which impressed this on my memory. One of these two votes was by S. T. Bessant. Bessant was deputy United States marshal. He was with me when counting was going on. He seemed to recognize his vote, and said that he did not intend to vote for Captain Dunn. He said he had ordered it marked out, but it was not done. I think he desired us to do so, but we could not do so.

N. W. Goss, called by General Conner, sworn, says: I was manager at Simpson's Creek precinct, called Round Swamp Store precinct, Horry County. Captain Dunn was voted for for comptroller-general, at that precinct, and received two votes. Captain Dunn, four years ago, got the largest vote there for senator of any candidate running; he fell so far behind in the last election that it was generally talked of about the polls when the votes were counted. The colored people generally had his name scratched off, when they did not take off any other name on the ticket. There were two votes put down for Dunn on the return of the managers. The return I signed. There was a tally-list kept; Mr. Carter kept the most of it. It was kept by turns by all the managers. We returned this tally-list to the county canvassers.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cavender :

I did not examine the colored people's ballots at the time they were cast. I heard them frequently say they would not vote for Captain Dunn, and ask others to scratch the name of Dunn off their tickets. I heard this while I was acting as one of the managers out on the piazza. I speak from what I heard and not what I know as to their scratching Captain Dunn's name. I think that the tally-list was sent to the canvassers outside the ballot-box, rolled up but not sealed. I went with it. I saw it delivered to the county canvassers.

In reply, by General Conner :

The poll was held in the piazza. I scratched out Captain Dunn's name for the voters when they would ask me to do so. There were other votes in the ballot-box scratched that I had not scratched.

L. N. BRYAN, called by General Conner, sworn, says: I was manager at the last election at Dogwood Neck precinct, Horry County. To my best recollection Captain Dunn received 10 votes for comptroller-general. I made out the returns. (The return from Dogwood Neck precinct handed to the witness.) This return is in my own handwriting. This is the one I made out. The figures on the return now for Captain Dunn are not the figures put there by me. I put a figure 10 opposite Dunn's name. The figure there now is (30) thirty. The figure 3 of the 30 was not put there by me. The whole number of votes given for comptroller-general, put by me on the return, was 83. There are marks of alteration, but I still read the vote as 83. (Poll-list for "Dogwood Neck precinct" handed to witness. Identifies the poll kept by himself.) There are the names of sixty-six white voters on the list, thirty-five colored. The managers' return was returned to the county canvassers. I delivered the return to them myself. I delivered the poll-list also.

Cross-examined by Mr. CAVENDER :

The other republican candidates got twenty-seven votes to the best of my recollection. Hagood received 83 votes for comptroller-general. Seventy-three I should have said. The vote for each of the other democratic candidates was seventy-three. The whole number of votes given for comptroller-general was 83. [Witness here examines the managers' returns, and says:] The figures 100 as the whole number of votes given for comptroller-general were not written by me. I do not know who wrote them. The figures 100 were not there when I put the figures 83 there. We kept a tally at the time of counting the votes. Myself and a clerk made out the tally-list. I made out the return from the tally-list. I do not know where the tally-list is. Did not send it to the county canvassers. I had the custody of the return from the time I made it out till I delivered it to the county canvassers.

C. P. QUATTLEBAUM, witness called by General Conner, being sworn, says :

I reside at Conwayboro, Horry County. I made a tabular statement of the managers' precinct returns for that county while they were in the possession of the county board of canvassers for that county. That is to say, Mr. John R. Cooper called off from the returns and I took down the figures. [Witness has paper alluded to and exhibits it.] I see on this paper that the vote for T. C. Dunn, at Simpson's Creek precinct, is put down as 2. I have the vote put down for Hagood at this precinct as 218. At Dogwood Neck precinct there are 10 votes put down for T. C. Dunn. At this precinct the vote for Hagood is put down as 73. The figures on the tabular statement for Buck's Township were put down by Mr. Cooper. The other figures are all mine. The figures in Buck's Township don't relate to comptroller-general's election at all. This paper has been in my possession all the time. I was a witness before the House congressional committee. This paper was produced before the House committee. I was examined particularly as to the vote for presidential electors. I was examined to supply the figures for several precincts. These two were among them. Confident as to "Simpson's precinct." I took this tabular statement for my own convenience, having agreed to furnish the result of the election to the Journal of Commerce and the Horry News.

Cross-examined by Mr. CAVENDER :

I was not one of the board of county canvassers for Horry County, nor its clerk, nor had I any official connection with it. I was not present during the time they canvassed the returns. I may have been in and out of the office several times during the progress of the canvassing. I made out the statement at the time they were making out the returns. I think I had completed this statement before they had completed their canvass. Jno. R. Cooper was simply a bystander, not a member of the board. I did not look over the figures as he called them out from the return. I may have glanced sometimes at the figures, but my main purpose was to take them down as he called them out. At the time I made out this statement, we did not aggregate the total number of votes at the several precincts for comptroller-general, nor have I done so since. At Simpson's Creek the republican candidates, except Mr. Dunn, got 32 votes, and the democratic candidates generally got 219. At Dogwood Neck the other democratic candidates generally got 73, and the republican candidates got 27, except Dunn.

J. R. COOPER, witness called by General Conner, being sworn, says :

I live in Horry County. [The statement exhibited by last witness examined and identified.] I assisted him in making it out. I called off from each managers' precinct return the name of the candidate and the number of votes each had received, and he set them down. [The precinct return for Dogwood Neck handed to witness.] I don't think that the figures that are now here opposite Captain Dunn's name were on this return when our statement was made. Here on this return now, Captain Dunn appears to have 30 votes; I am satisfied that I called it off 10. I have lived in Horry County all my life. "Green Sea" is at Blanton's Cross Roads, Horry County. Round Swamp Store is at Simpson's Creek. Bull Creek's Muster Shed is in Bucks Township. The poll was held at the Muster Shed, so I was informed. Muster Shed is the usual place. I have been clerking for the last twenty-six years.

General Conner put in evidence the poll-list from Dogwood Neck and the returns marked "K."

Mr. CAVENDER. No question.

L. E. LECONTE, Esq., recalled by General Conner, says :

The day when the re-examination of the returns from Horry was made by me was on Friday and not Wednesday, as first stated. I first stated it to be Wednesday upon the general consent that that was the day when the votes of Hagood and Dunn were recanvassed. The recanvassing in fact took place on Friday. After I replaced the return from Simpson's Creek in the general batch of returns, these returns were recanvassed by Messrs. Cavender and Monteith in the presence of myself and General Hagood and others, in the office of the secretary of state.

Cross-examined by Mr. CAVENDER :

At the time I first made the examination of the return from "Dogwood Neck," which was at the time the tabular statement was made out by the referee, I did not have a note made on the margin of the statement of the alteration in the vote for Mr. Dunn, although I observed it. I had the return in my hand and I called out the figures, which were put down by the referee in his tabular statement, just as they now appear—that is, 73 for Hagood and 30 for Dunn. I did not call the attention of counsel for respondents to what appeared to be the alteration in the figures. The note which appears on the tabular statement was made at the time of the recanvass of the votes for Hagood and Dunn last Friday, the 12th. It was made upon Mr. Monteith's calling attention to a discrepancy between the total number of votes cast for comptroller-general and the whole number of votes polled. It was not my purpose otherwise to have made it.

W. S. MONTEITH, Esq., recalled by General Conner, sworn, says :

I assisted in the recanvass of the returns for Dunn and Hagood, on Friday the 12th inst. I canvassed the votes for Horry County. I examined the tabular statements, and the votes were called by Mr. Cavender from the returns. As the returns were brought to me by Mr. Cavender from the inner room of the office of the secretary of state, Mr. Cavender called off each return and I verified it by a comparison with the sheets, and the returns were then taken by counties by Mr. Cavender, in the presence of a number of persons, and laid side by side in the recording office of the secretary of state. There I left them. There were no returns from Horry County missing.

Mr. CAVENDER. No questions.

THOMAS S. CAVENDER, Esq., on affirmation, says:

On the original examination of the managers' returns, which was at the time the referee or his assistant made out the tabular statements, I handed the packages for the several counties in alphabetical order to either General Conner or Mr. LeConte, one of whom, in every instance, called out the names of the candidates and the number of votes given for each. I remember, as I looked over the returns, that there were alterations apparent in many of the figures; sometimes General Conner or Mr. LeConte would call my attention to such alterations, and we generally agreed as to what the figures appeared to be. I do not remember any instance in which we did not agree. I do not particularly remember any alterations appearing in the figures in any of the returns from Horry County. As they are stated in the tabular statement, so they were called off by either General Conner or Mr. LeConte. On the re-examination of the managers' returns, with reference to the votes for General Hagood and Captain Dunn, I called off the names of the candidates and the votes given for each, with General Hagood constantly standing at my side or near to me, and with General Conner part of the time, Mr. LeConte and Mr. Monteith most of the time, and at least one of them all the time, overlooking the tabular statements. Frequently after I had completed the calling of a return and had laid it aside, General Hagood would pass behind me to where it was, take it up, review it, and put it down again. I think he did so twice or thrice in the matter of the returns from Horry County; and once, as I remembered, after having done so, he engaged in conversation for a moment with some one standing nearly behind me. After we had gotten through with the returns from Horry County, some one of the parties on the side of the relators asked for the return from Dogwood Neck, which led to our all examining it, and finding that there had been an alteration in the figures denoting the number of votes given for Captain Dunn, and also in the figures denoting the whole number of votes cast for comptroller-general. We also found that the whole number of votes purporting to have been cast for comptroller-general was larger than the total number of votes which appeared on the first page of the return to have been cast at the election, and larger than the number of names on the poll-list. So far as I remember, nothing was said about any alterations in any other of the returns from Horry County. After we had gone through the returns for each county, they were put in a pile and placed in a row on the floor, except for two or three counties, where they were left on the table. While I was telling Captain Dunn, a few minutes after we had completed the re-examination of the returns, of the alterations which had been discovered in the return from Dogwood Neck, the secretary of state directed one of his young men to carry the packages back into the other room. This was done partially, and, I think, altogether before I left the office. The next day, while at the state-house, I urged upon Captain Dunn the necessity of having witnesses from Horry County to establish what had been the actual vote at Dogwood Neck, and, as he did not seem to appreciate the importance of the matter, I invited him to examine the return. He did so, in my presence and in the presence of two or three other persons, in the office of the secretary of state. The return was then put back in the package and the package tied up and put back in the place from which it had been taken. I did not notice any other returns in the package, for the reason that my attention had not been directed to any alterations in any of them.

H. B. JOHNSON, recalled, says:

Since this examination to-day I have made careful examination in the office of the secretary of state, and the missing return from Simpson's Creek cannot be found. The time is now twenty minutes past 2<sup>o</sup>'clock p. m.

Adjourned till 4 p. m.

R. R. DESVERNEY, witness called by Mr. Cavender, sworn, says:

I was one of the commissioners of election for Abbeville County at the last election. There were seventeen polls opened for the whole county. When the members of the board first talked about opening the seventeen polls, Mr. Perrin, one of the members of the board, objected. He said he did not think we had a right to establish more than sixteen. He said that he had consulted with some of the members of the legal profession there and they had so advised him. This was on the Monday of the week preceding the election. We, that day, all agreed to open the sixteen polls, and adjourned until Saturday of the same week to decide about the other poll. I had written to the attorney-general about the matter, and desired to get his answer. I did not get an answer to my letter, so I came to Columbia to see him. On Thursday of the same week I saw him, and he advised me that we had a right to conform to the law in establishing seventeen precincts. I returned the next day—Friday—and the board met on Saturday. I advised the board of the opinion I had gotten from the attorney-general, and the board agreed, by a majority vote, to establish the seventeenth poll. We established it at the school-house at the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the town of Abbeville. We established it there because the elections had all been held there since the war. We appointed three managers: Mr. Perrin one, Mr. Tolbert one, and I one. We furnished them with blanks for poll-list and return, and a ballot-box. I know of my own knowledge that an election was held there. I saw a good many voting. All of those who voted were not residents of Abbeville Court-House. There were a few from Calhoun's Mills, a few from Bordeaux, and about two hundred from Magnolia. These last came in about two o'clock. They came for the reason the managers failed to establish a poll at Magnolia. The managers for Magnolia, who had the box and blanks, came in about one-half hour before these men and told me that no poll had been opened at Magnolia. The managers, who held the election at the school-house, made a regular return of the election to the county canvassers, with poll-list and box containing the ballots. On the day after the election this was done. The county canvassers included in their statement the return from that precinct without a word of objection being raised against it.

Cross-examined by Mr. LECONTE :

Mr. Perrin, one of the board, asked me if I had heard from Columbia. I said I had. He said he would like to see the letter. I said I had no letter. Then he said it would not make much difference any way. Mr. Perrin said he had a written opinion from General McGowan and Mr. Burt against the legality of opening a poll at A. M. E. church; but I did not see it. We could not advertise the seventeenth poll, because there was no paper afterwards before the election in the county. We advertised the other sixteen polls on Wednesday following the first meeting. What I have called the "seventeenth poll" is the one returned Abbeville Court-House No. 2. Abbeville No. 1 precinct was in the building of the court-house; the other was at the A. M. E. church, on the border of the town.

ELIAS L. TOLBERT, a witness called by Mr. Cavender, sworn, says :

I was one of the county commissioners of election for Abbeville County in the last general election. There were seventeen polls opened for the whole county. We agreed upon opening the seventeenth poll on Saturday before the election. We had agreed upon opening sixteen polls the previous Monday. After it had been agreed to open the sixteen polls, we agreed to let the matter of opening the seventeenth poll lay over till the next meeting. At the Monday meeting, Mr. Perrin objected to opening the seventeenth poll, and we deferred acting in order that we might find out if we had a right to open the seventeenth poll. Mr. Desverney appealed to Mr. Stone, the attorney-general, to know if we had the right to do so. I united with Mr. Desverney, agreeing to get the opinion of the attorney-general. Desverney told me afterwards he got the opinion of the attorney-general. He did not show it to me. He told me that he had seen the attorney-general in person. He told me that the attorney-general's opinion was that, according to law, we had a right to open the seventeenth poll. I was satisfied with that. When we had the meeting on Saturday, Mr. Desverney made the same statement there. We established the seventeenth poll by a majority vote, at the meeting of the commissioners. We then appointed three managers for it. Mr. Perrin appointed one, Mr. Desverney appointed one, and I appointed the other. This seventeenth poll was opened at the school-house, called Abbeville Court-House No. 2. We opened it there because it had always been a place for voting. I do not know of my own knowledge whether an election was held there. The managers furnished us with a return of the election held there, with poll-list and a box containing the ballots. We included this return in the county canvassers' statement. There was no objection made to our doing so by any member of the board. I am well acquainted in Abbeville County. I was familiar with the state of political feeling in that county previous to and at the last election. I believe that the having of two voting-precincts in the town of Abbeville was conducive to the interests of the public peace.

Mr. LECONTE. No questions.

T. J. MINTON, called by Mr. Cavendar, sworn, says :

(Witness identifies a paper handed to him by Mr. Cavender.) This paper is in my handwriting. (Paper put in evidence, marked "L.") I made this paper out the 19th day of November last. I made it out in the private office of the secretary of state. I made it out from the managers' returns for the precincts of Conwayborough, Socastee, Buck's Township, Dog's Bluff, Galivant's Ferry, Floyd's Store, Green Sea, Bayborough, Little River, Dogwood Neck, and Simpson's Creek, county of Horry. The figures in the columns of this paper are the same as were on the face of the returns for the several candidates for the several offices voted for. In Dogwood Neck, there were 30 votes given for Mr. Dunn and 73 given for Mr. Hagood. At Simpson's Creek, there were 32 votes given for Mr. Dunn and 218 votes for Mr. Hagood. At the time I made out this paper, there were present Mr. Johnson, Mr. Eaton, Mr. Hayne, secretary of state, and Mr. Cardozo. Mr. Cardozo called off from the returns for me. Mr. Eaton was at another table in the corner of the room with Mr. Hayne. Mr. Johnson handed down the returns from time to time in packages.

Cross-examined by Mr. LeCONTE :

This was on Sunday, the 19th. I was not doing it in any official capacity. I did it at the request of Mr. Cardozo. I am a clerk in his office. I was not employed in any sense by the board of State canvassers. I have not seen this paper since that day. I put it on the desk in the office. I don't know in whose possession it has been. I am willing to swear that the figures on this paper are my figures, and made at that time; but have no recollection of the figures apart from the paper. I refer to the figures representing Dunn's vote at the precincts of Dogwood's Neck and Simpson's Creek.

In reply, by Mr. CAVENDER :

The secretary of state was present the whole time I was making out this paper. After I completed this paper I put it on the table behind me for some one to complete the addition of the figures.

H. B. JOHNSON, called by Mr. Cavender :

(Witness identifies the paper referred to, by previous witness, and marked "L.") I was present at the time it was made out. I handed to Mr. Cardozo and Mr. Minton, as well as to Mr. Eaton and Mr. Hayne, all the packages of returns which they made up tabular statements from that day. I had the care of those bundles; that is, they were in the secretary of state's office. Nearly in every case the returns were received by me as they were delivered by the messenger from the county canvassers. To the best of my knowledge, none of the packages which I handed down that day had ever been opened, from the day they had been received from the messengers, except for the purpose of getting the commissioners' statements, and in the counties of Abbeville, Anderson, Aiken, Barnwell, and Beaufort for the purpose of obtaining the returns for presidential electors, which were canvassed by the board of State canvassers. I am generally in the office of secretary of state during the business hours of the day, and I had the lookout for all the papers filed in the office. These bundles of returns were generally kept in one part of the office in one pile. The bundles were all tied up, each one separately. It would scarcely have been practicable for any one to have gone into any of those bundles from the time they were received up to the time of the making up the statements marked "L" without my knowledge, unless while I was absent. If I stepped out for a moment or two, the porter was left in the office.

Cross-examined by Mr. LeCONTE :

These returns were kept in the recess formed by the south window, in the inner office of the secretary of State. They were piled up on the floor in this recess, not under lock and key. The door between the two offices was usually open. The inner room was usually vacant, except at the particular time while the board of canvassers were in session. During the session of the board there were a good many coming in and out of the office. I was not absent from the office often.

In reply, by Mr. CAVENDER :

No one but Mr. Hayne, secretary of state, could enter the inner room in which these packages were kept except by passing through the room in which I was occupied while there, and which the porter was left in charge of during my occasional absence. Mr. Hayne only had the key from the inner room to the passage.

Mr. LeConte recalls Mr. HAYNE, secretary of state, who says :

I found to-day the missing return of Simpson's Creek precinct, Horry County. I found it in the package of Abbeville returns. When my clerk, Mr. Johnson, told me that he could not find the Simpson Creek return this morning, we looked through the returns hastily and failed to find it. I made a more thorough search afterwards and found it. (Mr. LeConte offered this return in evidence, marked "M.")

Cross-examined by Mr. CAVENDER :

The paper marked "L" was one of the papers tabulated on Sunday, the 19th day of November. Was present the whole time those papers were made up. None of the packages of returns handed down by Mr. Johnson that day had been opened to my knowledge since they were first received at my office, except for the purposes mentioned by Mr. Johnson. During this period I was in the office most of the time. I felt that it was necessary for Mr. Johnson or myself to be there all the time. From the reception of the returns up to the completion of the canvass, before and after the 19th, I was there during office hours. From the time the returns were received up to the meeting of the board of State canvassers to canvass, which was, I believe, on the 17th, the returns were all kept under lock and key in our safe; then they were put in the alcove Mr. Johnson spoke of.

In reply, by Mr. LeCONTE :

After the paper marked "L" was made, it remained in the office subject to the examination of members of the board; it was not made officially by the board.

W. B. CARTER, recalled by Mr. LeConte :

(Paper marked "M," returns from Simpson's Creek, handed to witness.) Witness says: This is my hand-write. The votes as they appear now reported on this return for Hagood and Dunn for the office of comptroller-general are not as they were written by me on the return, that is to say, Johnson Hagood's vote is the same, but the vote for T. C. Dunn has been changed. The figure 2 of the 32 I made; I did not the figure 3. The figures representing the aggregate of the vote as they now stand were not made by me. The original figures made by me were 220. The figure 5 made over the second 2 was not made by me. Mr. Dunn's vote, as returned by me at that precinct, was 2 votes. The return was signed by the managers, and forwarded as made out by me.

Mr. CAVENDER. No questions.

Mr. N. W. Goss, recalled by Mr. LeConte, says :

(Witness identifies the return marked "M" as the return made out by Mr. Carter.) The vote now appearing upon the face of the paper as the vote of T. C. Dunn for comptroller-general is not the vote reported by the managers. The vote reported by the managers was 2; it is now 32. I looked over the return after it was made out, at Mr. Carter's instance, and Dunn's vote was 2. The alteration in the figures representing the aggregate vote of the comptroller-general was not there when the report was made by the managers. The vote was 220 at that time; this paper has been altered since it left the hands of the managers.

By Mr. CAVENDER. No questions.

I, F. M. Wilkes, referee in the above-stated cause, do certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of my report and testimony taken therein.

SHOOTING IN BRANCHVILLE.

Quite a serious shooting and stabbing affray occurred at Branchville on Tuesday evening, about 6 o'clock, in which a colored man named Stephen Rigsby was shot and killed, another named Warren Wilson shot in the leg, and Mr. J. W. Fairey stabbed in the thigh near the groin. It appears there was a considerable row brewing, and Mr. Fairey was trying to quell the disturbance, as one of his employés was implicated, when some unknown person stabbed him from the rear. About this time the shooting occurred.

Capt. E. R. KELLOGG,
Eighteenth Infantry, Commanding Company A.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, in compliance with instructions from the post-commander, I reported to you to proceed with the company to polling-box No. 2, Edgefield, about 9.30 a. m. on the 7th instant; that after the arrival of the company in the vicinity of said box, I was ordered, with a detail of four men, to proceed to the place of voting and assist the deputy United States marshal, and, in accordance with his instructions, and on account of the obstructions in front of the entrance, we entered the building at a window used as an exit for voters. At that time there were three or four colored and as many white men in the act of voting. When the door was opened to admit more voters, I saw a large number of white men on horseback drawn up in front of the door in such a manner as to completely obstruct the way, and prevent the negroes from coming in, except under the horses, and at the danger of losing their lives from pistols and clubs in the hands of these men. The deputy marshal also, Mr. Sheppard, (a manager of election,) tried to have them give way and allow some of the negroes to come in, but these white men swore they would not allow the negroes to come in and vote. They (the white men) were asked to come in and vote, but said they were not ready to vote yet. At this time, by direction of the deputy United States marshal, I, with my detachment, forced an opening through the white men in front of the door, sufficiently wide to enable all who wished to vote to pass through from the front, and kept this passage open.

I would further state that all the white men above referred to were armed with revolvers, which were drawn, and at times used in a very threatening manner. They seemed to be anxious for some pretext for using their pistols and clubs on the negroes, who were gathered around in great numbers, but who, as far as I could see, were entirely without arms.

In conclusion I would respectfully state that, in my opinion, it was a carefully arranged plan to prevent the negroes from voting at this box, and to use force and violence, if necessary, in doing so. I saw one negro struck on the head with a club by a white man when attempting to enter the door.

Respectfully submitted.

EDGEFIELD, S. C., November 8, 1876.

LIEUTENANT: I have the honor to submit the following report of duties performed and scenes witnessed by my company and myself at the election held in this place yesterday. At about half-past nine o'clock in the morning I was directed by Major and Brevet Major-General Brannan, First Artillery, commanding this post, to report for duty with my company to Deputy United States Marshal Beatty, at a school-house in the outskirts of this village, which was one of the two polling-places in the village. I marched my company to the place designated, accompanied by yourself as first lieutenant of the company; arriving at the school-house a few minutes later—about fifteen minutes before ten (10) o'clock—I halted my company about fifty yards from the school-house and reported to United States Marshal Beatty for instructions. He requested me to send a few men to open a passage-way through a large number of armed and mounted men, whites, who had crowded together in front of and all around the entrance to the ballot-box, and would not permit a negro to enter the building. In compliance with this request, I sent four (4) enlisted men, (increased to eight (8) after you had opened a passage,) under your command, to so dispose the turbulent crowd that those who had courage to brave the almost incessant threats of violence, accompanied by a free display of pistols and bludgeons that were made by the whites, might cast their votes. For a detailed account of the manner in which you performed this duty, I submit herewith your own report for the information of the post-commander.

I will state, however, in this connection, that I soon followed you to the school-house for the purpose of personally ascertaining the state of affairs there. It was difficult for me to make my way through the crowd of horsemen, but I finally succeeded in doing so; and then I saw that you had a delicate, extremely difficult, and even dangerous task to execute; for around you were hundreds of almost frenzied white men, many of them inflamed by liquor, all shouting and cursing the blacks, every white man with his pistol ready to be drawn, while several of the horsemen had their revolvers raised in their hands with their thumbs on the locks and their fingers on the triggers.

But for the courteous but determined manner in which you performed the duty assigned you at this time, the good discipline of the men under your command, and the presence of my company, fifty yards away, I have not the slightest doubt that scores of negroes would have been killed and wounded; for the whites were all armed with pistols, nearly all of them openly displayed, and many of them had heavy clubs in addition to their fire-arms; while I did not see a negro who had any other weapon than a cane, save a few who carried clubs; but the most of the blacks had neither clubs nor canes. There may have been a few negroes who carried concealed pistols, but I scanned them closely, and I saw none whom I suspected of doing this. By simply requesting them to do so, I persuaded the negroes to abstain almost wholly from shouting and cheering. I saw that it was indiscreet for any considerable number of them to shout in concord, as every time they did so I could see angry movements on the part of the whites, and some of them would say, "Now; there's going to be a fuss," or make expressions of like meaning.

I did not see any violence offered by a negro, nor did I hear a black man make a threat against any one, while the shouting, cursing, and angry demeanor of nearly all of the whites, and the frequent threats of violence to negroes by some of them, rang in my ears almost continuously from the time of our arrival at the polling-place until a very short time before our departure, which was about half-past six o'clock in the evening. After the action taken by yourself, described in your report, the voting was continuous until the closing of the polls, at 6 o'clock p. m., but several hundred negroes were unable to cast their votes. At the request of some of the election managers, and the approval of all of them, and in compliance with an order from the post-commander, I left Lieutenant Williams, Eighteenth Infantry, and ten (10) enlisted men, to protect the managers while they counted the votes.

Lieutenant Williams, in compliance with my request for another officer, was sent to me about noon, and he performed discreet and efficient service until after midnight.

To you I am specially indebted for valuable assistance during the whole day, and particularly for the prompt, resolute, but conciliatory manner in which you opened a passage through the mob to the polling-place. I fully concur with you in the opinion that "it was a carefully arranged plan to prevent the negroes from voting at this box, and to use force and violence if necessary in doing so."

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. R. KELLOGG,

The following was put in evidence by Mr. Lawrence :

GOVERNOR CHAMBERLAIN'S LETTER TO PRESIDENT GRANT.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Columbia, July 22, 1876.

SIR: The recent massacre at Hamburg, in this State, is a matter so closely connected with the public peace of this State that I desire to call your attention to it for the purpose of laying before you my views of its effect and the measures which it may become necessary to adopt to prevent the recurrence of similar events.

It is, in the first place, manifestly impossible to determine with absolute certainty the motives of those who were engaged in perpetrating the massacre at Hamburg. The demand which was made by the mob upon the militia company for the surrender of their arms, taken in connection with the fact that the militia are not shown to have committed or threatened any injury to any persons in that community, would seem to indicate a purpose to deprive the militia of their rights on account of their race or political opinions. It seems impossible to find a rational or adequate cause for such a demand, except in the fact that the militia company was composed of negroes, or in the additional fact that they were, besides being negroes, members of the republican party. Those who made the demand were, on the other hand, white men, members of the democratic party. The lines of race and political party were the lines which marked the respective parties to the affair at Hamburg. I mention this as a fact, and as apparently the most trustworthy index of the motives and aims which inspired those who brought on this conflict.

As affecting the public peace, however, the effect of this massacre is more important than the motives which prompted it. Upon this point I can speak with more confidence. It is not to be doubted that the effect of this massacre has been to cause widespread terror and apprehension among the colored race and the republicans of this State. There is as little doubt, on the other hand, that a feeling of triumph and political elation has been caused by this massacre in the minds of many of the white people and democrats. The fears of the one side correspond with the hopes of the other side.

I do not intend to overstate any matters connected with this affair, nor to omit any statement which seems to me essential to a full understanding of its significance. It is certainly true that most, though not all, of those who have spoken through the newspapers or otherwise here on the white or democratic side upon this matter have condemned the massacre. Their opposition to such conduct has not, however, sufficed to prevent this massacre, nor do I see any greater reason for believing that it will do so in the future. That class which now engage in this cruel work certainly disregard the expressed sentiments of those who assume to speak, for the most part, for their communities, and go forward without fear of public opinion or punishment.

It is sometimes asked, Why do not the colored race return this violence with violence? Why do they suffer themselves to be thus terrorized when their numbers greatly exceed those of their enemies in the localities where many of these outrages occur? The answer is not difficult. The long habit of command and self-assertion on the part of the whites of these Southern States, their superior intelligence as compared with the colored race, the fact that at least four-fifths of the property of these States is in their hands, are causes which contribute to give them an easy physical superiority thus far over the recently-emancipated race, which still exhibit the effects of their long slavery in their habit of yielding to the more imperious and resolute will and the superior intelligence and material resources of the white men.

Add to this that in almost every southern community there may be found a considerable number of daring, lawless, reckless white men, accustomed to arms and deeds of violence, over whom the restraints of the sentiments of the better and more conservative classes of society have little, if any, power; who are inspired by an intense and brutal hatred of the negro as a freeman, and more particularly as a voter and a republican, and you have the elements which would naturally give rise to, and in point of fact do give rise to, nearly all the scenes of bloody violence which occur in the Southern States. Besides all this another fact must be noted here, a fact which, in my judgment, marks and explains the world-wide difference between the effects of such occurrences as this at Hamburg upon the mass of the white people here, and the effects of deeds of blood and violence upon the people of other sections of the country, namely: That such occurrences as this at Hamburg have generally resulted in what is thought to be political advantage to the democratic party here. From this fact it results that the white people here are induced, to a considerable extent, to overlook the naked brutality of the occurrence and seek to find some excuse or explanation of conduct which ought to receive only unqualified abhorrence and condemnation, followed by speedy and adequate punishment. In this way it often happens that a few reckless men are permitted or encouraged to terrorize a whole community and destroy all freedom of action on the part of those who differ from them in political opinions. The more respectable portion of the white people here content themselves with verbal perfunctory denunciations, and never adopt such measures or arouse such a public sentiment as would here, as well as elsewhere, put a stop to such occurrences.

In respect to the Hamburg massacre, as I have said, the fact is unquestionable that it has resulted in great immediate alarm among the colored people and all republicans in that section of the State. Judging from past experience, they see in this occurrence a new evidence of a purpose to subject the majority of the voters of that vicinity to such a degree of fear as to keep them from the polls on election-day, and thus reverse or stifle the true political voice of the majority of the people.

But the Hamburg massacre has produced another effect. It has, as a matter of course, caused a firm belief on the part of most republicans here that this affair at Hamburg is only the beginning of a series of similar race and party collisions in our State, the deliberate aim of which is believed by them to be the political subjugation and control of the State. They see, therefore, in this event what foreshadows a campaign of blood and violence, such a campaign as is popularly known as a campaign conducted on the "Mississippi plan."

From what I have now said it will not be difficult to understand the feeling of a majority of the citizens in a considerable part of this State. It is one of intense solicitude for their lives and liberties. It is one of fear that, in the passion and excitement of the current political campaign, physical violence is to be used to overcome the political will of the people. I confine myself here to a statement of what I believe to be the facts of the present situation in this State as connected with the public peace and order, without any expression of my individual feelings and opinions. My first duty is to seek to restore and preserve public peace and order, to the end that every man in South Carolina may freely and safely enjoy all his civil rights and privileges, including the right to vote. It is to this end that I now call your attention to these matters. I shall go forward to do all in my power as governor to accomplish the ends above indicated, but I deem it important to advise you of the facts now stated, and to solicit from you some indication of your views upon the questions presented. To be more specific, will the General Government exert itself vigorously to repress violence in this State during the present political campaign on the part of persons belonging to either political party, whenever that violence shall be beyond the control of the State authorities? Will the General Government take such precautions as may be suitable, in view of the feeling of alarm already referred to, to restore confidence to the poor people of both races and political parties in this State, by such a distribution of the military forces now here as will render the intervention of the General Government prompt and effective, if it shall become necessary, in restoring peace and order?

It seems proper to add that I am moved to make this communication to you by no motive or feeling save such as should animate me as the chief executive of this State, bound to do justice to all, and oppress none. I venture to say that I have given sufficient evidence by my whole conduct in this office that, as governor, I am guided by my oath of office and my duty to all the people. I challenge any proof or indication from any word or act of mine as governor that I am capable of doing injustice or denying justice to any citizen of this State. But I do deem it my solemn duty to do my utmost to secure a fair and free election in this State; to protect every man in the free enjoyment of his political rights, and to see to it that no man, or combination of men, of any political party, shall overawe or put in fear or danger any citizen of South Carolina in the exercise of his civil rights. In accomplishing these results, I now recognize, with deep regret, that there are many indications that it will be necessary for me to invoke the aid which, under the constitution and laws, the authorities of the General Government may extend under certain circumstances.

And I trust you will permit me to add that I know no official duty more binding, in my judgment, on the Chief Executive of the United States than that of exercising the powers with which he is invested for the protection of the States against domestic violence, and for the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his political rights whenever a proper call is made upon him. I understand that an American citizen has a right to vote as he pleases; to vote one ticket as freely and safely as another; to vote wrong as freely and safely as to vote right; and I know that whenever, upon whatsoever pretext, large bodies of citizens can be coerced by force or fear into absents themselves from the polls, or voting in a way contrary to their judgment or inclination, the foundation of every man's civil freedom is deeply, if not fatally, shaken.

I inclose, for your information respecting the Hamburg massacre, the following documents: The report of Hon. William Stone, attorney-general of this State; the report of General H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector general; a copy of all the evidence taken before the coronor's jury; a copy of the printed statement of General M. C. Butler; a copy of a letter addressed by me to Hon. T. J. Robertson; an address to the American people by the colored people of Charleston, and a similar address by a committee appointed at a convention of leading representatives of the colored people of this State in Columbia on the 20th instant.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN,
Governor of South Carolina.

THE ELECTION LAWS OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

"An act providing for the next general election, and the manner of conducting the same," was passed September 20, 1868. (See Statutes at Large, vol. 14, pp. 138-145.)

This act provided for the holding of the then next general election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November then next only.

"An act providing for the general elections, and the manner of conducting the same," was passed March 1, 1870. (See Statutes at Large, vol. 14, pp. 393-397.)

This act provided for the holding of the then next general elections on the third Wednesday in October, 1870, and forever thereafter on the same day in every second year; and was in form substantially the same as the preceding act, except that it contained no provision for "the election of electors of President and Vice-President."

The substance of this act, and the substance of the text of the preceding act, so far as related to the election of electors of President and Vice President, were embodied in the revised statutes passed February 10, 1872. (See Revised Statutes, pp. 28-34.)

The revised statutes took effect and went into operation from and after February 10, 1872. (See Revised Statutes, p. 766.)

The "act providing for the general elections, and the manner of conducting the same," not being repealed by the passage of the revised statutes, was amended in certain provisions concerning the precinct managers and county canvassers, or commissioners, by "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for the general elections,'" passed March 12, 1872. (See Statutes at Large, vol. 15, pp. 170, 171.)

The following are such parts of the revised statutes and the amended act as refer to the machinery of the general elections:

AS TO PRECINCT MANAGERS.

SEC. 2. That, for the purpose of carrying on such election, it shall be the duty of the governor, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, at least sixty days prior to any such election, to appoint, in and for each county, three commissioners of election, whose duty it shall be, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, to appoint three managers of election for each election-precinct of the county for which they shall, respectively, be appointed. The said commissioners of election and said managers of election shall take and subscribe, before any officer authorized to administer oaths, the oath of office prescribed by section 30, article 2, of the constitution. * * * (See Revised Statutes, p. 29.)

SEC. 3. That the managers are hereby authorized to appoint a clerk to assist them in whatever duties may be required of them, who shall take the oath of office prescribed by section 30 of article 2 of the constitution before the chairman of the board of managers. (See Revised Statutes, p. 29.)

SEC. 4. That the commissioners aforesaid and the managers aforesaid, at their first meetings, respectively, shall proceed to organize themselves as a board by appointing one of the number chairman of the board; and such chairman, in each instance, shall be empowered to administer the necessary oaths. (See Revised Statutes, p. 29.)

SEC. 9. The voting shall be by ballot, which shall contain, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, the names of the persons voted for, and the offices to which such persons are intended to be chosen, and shall be so folded as to conceal the contents; and such ballot shall be deposited in a box to be constructed, kept, and disposed of as hereinafter provided. (See Revised Statutes, p. 30.)

SEC. 11. The commissioners of election shall provide one box for each election-precinct. * * * (See Revised Statutes, p. 30.)

SEC. 12. Each clerk of the poll shall keep a poll-list, which shall contain one column headed "names of voters," and the name of each elector voting shall be entered by the clerk in such column. (See Revised Statutes, p. 30.)

SEC. 3. At the close of the election the managers and clerk shall immediately proceed, publicly, to open the ballot-box and count the ballots therein, and continue such count, without adjournment or interruption, until the same is completed, and make such statement of the result thereof, and sign the same, as the nature of the election shall require. If, in counting, two or more like ballots shall be found folded together compactly, only one shall be counted and the others destroyed; but if they bear different names, the same shall be destroyed and not counted. If more ballots shall be found on opening the box than there are names on the poll-list, all the ballots shall be returned to the box and thoroughly mixed together, and one of the managers, or the clerk, shall, without seeing the ballots, draw therefrom and immediately destroy as many ballots as there are in excess of the number of names on the poll-list. Within three days thereafter the chairman of the board of managers, or one of them, to be designated in writing by the board, shall deliver to the commissioners of election the poll-list, the boxes containing the ballots, and a written statement of the result of the election in his precinct. (See Statutes at Large, vol. 15, p. 171.)

AS TO COUNTY CANVAßSERS OR COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 14. The commissioners of election shall meet at the county-seat, as provided in the last preceding section, and shall proceed to organize, and shall form the county board of canvassers. (See Revised Statutes, p. 31.)

* Changed to "the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November, in every second year," by amendment to constitution.

SEC. 15. They shall meet in some convenient place at the county-seat on the Tuesday next following the election, before one o'clock in the afternoon of that day. They may appoint some competent person as secretary. The chairman shall then proceed to administer the constitutional oath to each member of the board, as canvassers; and shall administer the constitutional oath to the secretary, and the secretary shall administer to the chairman the same oath that he shall have administered to the other members of the board. (See Revised Statutes, p. 31.)

SEC. 16. That they shall then proceed to count the votes of the county, and shall make such statements thereof as the nature of the election shall require, within ten days of the time of their first meeting as a board of county canvassers, and shall transmit to the board of State canvassers any protest and all papers relating to the election. (See Revised Statutes, p. 31.)

SEC. 17. Duplicate statements shall be made and filed in the office of the clerk of the county, and, if there be no such clerk, duly qualified, according to law, then in the office of the secretary of state. (See Revised Statutes, p. 31.)

SEC. 19. There shall be prepared by the commissioners three separate lists of each statement, beside the lists to be filed in the office of the county clerk or secretary of state, and each list shall be certified to as correct, by the signatures of the commissioners, subscribed to such certificates. (See Revised Statutes, p. 31.)

SEC. 4. After the final adjournment of the board of county canvassers, and within the time prescribed in this act, the chairman of said board shall forward, addressed to the governor and secretary of state, by a messenger, the returns, poll-lists, and all papers appertaining to the election. * * * (See Statutes at Large, vol. 15, p. 171.)

AS TO STATE CANVASSERS.

SEC. 21. The secretary of state shall appoint a meeting of State canvassers, to be held at his office, or some convenient place, on or before the tenth day of November next after such general election, for the purpose of canvassing the votes for all offices voted for at such election. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 22. The secretary of state, comptroller-general, attorney-general, State auditor,* State treasurer, adjutant and inspector general, and the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections of the house of representatives, shall constitute the State canvassers, four of whom shall be a sufficient number to form a board. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 23. If a majority of these officers shall be unable, or shall fail, to attend the president of the senate, being notified by the secretary of state, shall attend, without delay, and, with the officers attending, shall form a board. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 24. The board, when thus formed, shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct, and subscribe the same with their proper names. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe, on the proper statement, a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 26. Upon such statements they shall proceed to determine and declare what persons have been, by the greatest number of votes, duly elected to such offices, or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 27. The board shall have power to adjourn from day to day, for a term not exceeding ten days. (See Revised Statutes, p. 32.)

SEC. 29. The secretary of state shall record in his office, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, each certified statement and determination which shall be delivered to him by the board of State canvassers, and every dissent or protest that shall have been delivered to him by a canvasser. (See Revised Statutes, p. 33.)

SEC. 30. He shall, without delay, transmit a copy, under the seal of his office, of such certified determination, to each person thereby declared to be elected, and a like copy to the governor. (See Revised Statutes, p. 33.)

Of the election of electors of President and Vice-President.

SECTION 4. The commissioners of election of each county shall make four certified copies of the statement of votes given for electors in their county; one of which copies shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the county, if there be such clerk duly qualified by law; another of such copies they shall forthwith transmit to the governor; another to the secretary of state, and deliver the other as hereinafter directed. (See Revised Statutes, p. 35.)

SEC. 5. The commissioners of election of each county shall appoint a messenger, and shall deliver to such messenger the remaining certified copy of the statement of the votes given in their county for electors, securely inclosed and under seal, and such messenger shall proceed forthwith to deliver the same to the secretary of state. (See Revised Statutes, p. 35.)

SEC. 6. The board of State canvassers shall meet at the office of the secretary of state on or before the 10th day of November next after such election—or sooner, if all the certified copies of the statements of the county canvassers shall have been received from all the counties—to canvass the votes given for the electors of President and Vice-President; and in case all the certified statements shall not have been received on that day, the board may adjourn from day to day until the same shall have been received, not exceeding five days; and if, at the expiration of four days, certified copies of the statements of the county canvassers shall not have been received from any county, the board shall proceed to canvass upon such of the said statements as shall have been received. (See Revised Statutes, p. 35.)

SEC. 7. The board of State canvassers shall proceed, in making a statement of all the votes, and determining and certifying the persons elected, in the manner prescribed by law in relation to the election of other officers. (See Revised Statutes, p. 35.)

SEC. 8. The secretary of state shall, without delay, cause a copy, under the seal of his office, of the certified determination of the board of State canvassers to be delivered to each of the persons therein declared to be elected; and for that purpose he may employ such and so many messengers as he may deem necessary. (See Revised Statutes, p. 36.)

W. H. RUTHERFORD,

County Board of Canvassers for the County of Laurens.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Office Secretary of State :

I, H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original return of the commissioners of election for Laurens County, now on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, at Columbia, this 15th day of December, A. D. 1876, and in the one hundred and first year of the Independence of the United States of America.

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Richland County :

Personally appeared W. H. Rutherford, who, being duly sworn, says that he is a citizen of Laurens County, and was duly appointed and commissioned as a commissioner of election for Laurens County in the general election held on the 7th day of November instant; that on the day of said election, and for some time previous, a general system of intimidating republican voters was resorted to by the democrats; threats of violence were general, and abusive and insulting language was used to republicans; democrats rode over the county by night, with yells and jeers, and fire-arms of various descriptions were discharged; that at the polls various devices were used to prevent republicans from exercising their right of suffrage; they were challenged on the shallowest pretexts, and, if they voted, did so with the impending threats that they would be immediately arrested; some were so arrested without just cause and committed to jail, and this fact kept many legal voters from voting, as they feared to suffer the same fate; that so universal was this system of intimidation that deponent, influenced by this knowledge, and also by a personal observation of the illegal way in which the election was conducted in some particulars, did not feel justified in subscribing to the return of the election in his official capacity as a commissioner, and only consented to do so under protest, as said return will show on its face, when he became satisfied that his life would be placed in jeopardy if he declined to so subscribe the said return.

W. H. RUTHERFORD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this November 16, 1876.

JAMES O. LADD,
Notary Public, South Carolina.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE, SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, July 15, 1876.

I certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original affidavit on file in this office.

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE,
South Carolina:

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original poll-list for Robbins precinct, Barnwell County, now on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 23d day of December, 1876, at Columbia, S. C.

[SEAL.]

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

The State of South Carolina. In the supreme court.

THE STATE, EX RELATIONE THEODORE G. BARKER, SAMUEL McGOWAN, J. I. INGRAM, ROBERT ALDRICH, JOHN W. HARRINGTON, WILLIAM WALLACE, AND JOHN B. ERWIN,

vs.

C. C. BOWEN, TIMOTHY HURLEY, JOHN WINSMITH, THOMAS B. JOHNSTON, WILLIAM B. NASH, WILSON COOKE, AND WILLIAM F. MYERS.

Be it remembered that Theodore G. Barker, Samuel McGowan, J. I. Ingram, Robert Aldrich, John W. Harrington, William Wallace, and John B. Erwin, come here the 2d December, A. D. 1876, before the honorable the supreme court of the State of South Carolina, and by leave of said court first had and obtained according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided, give the court here to understand and be informed that, on the 7th November, 1876, a general election was duly held in the said State for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; that at said election, the above-named relators, Theodore G. Barker, Samuel McGowan, J. I. Ingram, Robert Aldrich, John W. Harrington, William Wallace, and John B. Erwin, were duly and legally elected by general ticket, (they being as many in number as the said State is entitled to appoint,) and had the highest number of votes at said election.

That at said election the votes for the opposing candidates for said offices, respectively, were thereupon duly counted by the several boards of managers of the said election, and by them duly returned in their respective counties to the boards of canvassers for their several counties; and the several boards of county canvassers having made their statements of the votes cast, the same, together with all the papers appertaining to said election, were, by the boards of county canvassers, duly transmitted to the board of State canvassers of the said State.

That the said board of State canvassers met at the office of the secretary of state, on or before the 10th day of November next after such election, and proceeded to canvass the votes given for the electors of President and Vice-President, and made a false and fraudulent statement of all the votes, as appears by a comparison of the statements of the county canvassers with the statements and returns of the precinct managers in the several counties, and falsely determined and certified as the persons elected as electors of the State of South Carolina, of President and Vice-President, the following-named persons: Christopher C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Timothy Hurley, Thomas B. Johnston, William B. Nash, Wilson Cooke, and William F. Myers.

And, thereupon, the secretary of state caused a copy, under the seal of his office, of the certified determination of the board of State canvassers, to be delivered to each of the persons therein declared to be elected.

And the said Christopher C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Timothy Hurley, Thomas B.

Johnston, William B. Nash, Wilson Cooke, and William F. Myers, not being duly and lawfully elected, and not having received said certified determination so delivered, and under and by virtue thereof, as evidence of title to the said offices and functions of State electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, claim the right as such to meet and assemble at the capital on the first Wednesday in December next, being the next after their election, and then and there threaten and claim to vote by ballot for President and Vice-President.

And the said relators further give the court to understand, and be informed, that if a true and correct statement of all the votes cast at said election had been made by the board of State canvassers, by comparing the statements of the county canvassers with the statements and returns of the precinct managers in the several counties; and if the said board had justly and truly determined and certified the persons so elected as electors, your relators above named would have been found to be elected, and to have received the highest number of votes cast for electors at said election, and would have been so determined and certified, and would have been entitled to receive a copy of the said certified determination, under the seal of his office, from the secretary of state, and would have been entitled to assemble, according to law, at the State capital on Wednesday next, and then and there to cast the votes of the State of South Carolina for President and Vice-President of the United States of America.

Whereupon the said relators pray the consideration of the court here in the premises, and that due process of law may be awarded against the said Christopher C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Timothy Hurley, Thomas B. Johnston, William B. Nash, Wilson Cooke, and William F. Myers, in this behalf; and to make them answer to the State and show by what warrant or authority they claim to have, use, and enjoy the offices, liberties, privileges, and franchises aforesaid.

and William F. Myers.

In quo warranto.

Your petitioners, C. C. Bowen, Timothy Hurley, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, William B. Nash, Wilson Cooke, and William F. Myers, who are made defendants in the above-entitled proceedings in quo warranto, respectfully pray that the said case and proceeding in quo warranto may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, and for ground of such prayer and motion petitioners say—

1. That said suit and proceeding is one at law and of a civil nature.

2. That the title and right of your petitioners respectively to the office of electors for the State of South Carolina for President and Vice-President of the United States and the pay and emoluments attached by law to the said office of electors are matters in dispute and which will be disposed of in said case, (if this court has jurisdiction to try said matters, which petitioners deny;) and the said pay and emoluments attached by law to said office of electors are $600 to each of the undersigned petitioners, or $4,200 to all of your petitioners, besides mileage, at 20 cents per mile, as provided by the act of assembly approved March 26, 1875, entitled "An act to regulate the compensation of members of the general assembly and to fix the mileage of the same," and the act of assembly fixing the compensation of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, found in the General Statutes of South Carolina, chapter 9, section 21. Or, if petitioners are not entitled, under said statutes, to the said pay of $600 each, and are only entitled to the per diem allowed to members of the general assembly, yet such per diem, added to said mileage for all of your petitioners, exceeds the sum of $500.

3. Said suit and the matters in dispute therein arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States, in this, that the Constitution and laws of the United States prescribe, regulate, and require the duties, powers, and rights of your petitioners as such electors, and are paramount and supreme; and after your petitioners were duly appointed such electors and had received the certificate of such election, and of the board constituted by law to make such determination and deliver such certificates, no State court has authority to try or question the title to said office of electors; and such determination of the election of each of your petitioners was made by such State board of canvassers in favor of the said election of each of petitioners respectively, and such certificates of election were made and delivered as to each of petitioners before said proceeding in quo warranto was begun.

There are also other provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States which are drawn in question in said suit.

4. Petitioners herewith render and file the bond required by the statute in such case made and provided. (18 Stats. at Large, 471.)

STATE EX REL. J. J. INGRAM ET AL. }
 vs. } Brief for defendants.
 C. C. BOWEN ET AL. }

That the right of the electors to hold their office is predicated upon the provisions of the eleventh article and first section of the Constitution of the United States.

Article 12, which is an amendment made by the first session of the Eighth Congress, provides where and when the electors shall meet and vote, and how the result shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate.

Pursuant to such authority contained in the Constitution of the United States, the legislature of South Carolina provided for a State board of canvassers, by an act approved March 1, 1870.

That the State board of canvassers had the right to determine who were legally elected electors. No provision is made for appeal to any other tribunal. We therefore submit that their action is final, except as it may be revised by Congress.

When any other remedy is given this proceeding cannot be sustained, the rights of the parties can be fully determined by Congress, and therefore the judgment of this court will be futile.

The term of office of the electors has expired by limitation of law, and therefore if the court should, on a final hearing of this cause, determine that they are not electors, no more will be done than is now done by operation of law.

As to power and conclusiveness of acts of board, see 45 Ind., p. 85, and cases referred to.

OPINION OF SUPREME COURT.

The following opinion of the State supreme court was filed on the refusal of the petition to transfer the quo warranto case as to electors of President and Vice-President, to the United States circuit court:

Supreme court, November term, 1876, T. G. Barker et al. vs. C. C. Bowen et al.—Opinion by Willard, associate justice.

The defendant, C. C. Bowen, and his associates, ask, by petition, a transfer of this case to the United States circuit court for the district of South Carolina. They allege that this is a civil action, involving the title and emoluments of the office of electors of South Carolina for President and Vice-President of the United States, and that the pay and emoluments attached to such office by the laws of the State of South Carolina exceed in value four hundred dollars; and further, "that said matters in dispute therein arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States."

The authority claimed for removing the cause is that of the act of Congress of March 3, 1875. (Stat. 1874 and 1875, p. 472.) Its requirement is, "that any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, now pending or hereafter brought in any State court when the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of four hundred dollars, and arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States," may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by any party actually interested either as plaintiff or defendant.

We will consider whether this is a case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

This is an action in the nature of a writ of quo warranto brought originally in this court under the authority of section 4, article iv, of the constitution of this State, which is as follows: "The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction only in cases of chancery, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law, under such regulations as the general assembly may by law prescribe: Provided, The said court shall always have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to give it a general supervisory control over all other courts in this State."

Under section 9, article v, of the constitution, providing for a revision and codification of the laws and forms of procedure, it was enacted that "the writ of quo warranto, and proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto," were abolished, "and the remedies heretofore obtainable in these forms may be obtained by civil actions under the provisions of this chapter." (Code of procedure, section 443.) It was held by this court, in Alexander vs. McKenzie, (2 S. C., 81,) that the effect of this act of legislature, read with the constitution, was to do away with the formal characteristics of the writ of quo warranto, but that the substantial jurisdiction covered by that writ remained vested in this court, under the protection of the constitution, and could be exercised under the form of a civil action originally brought here.

The case in hand is of the character just described, namely, an action in the nature of quo warranto, in which the plaintiff seeks a judgment of ouster against the defendants for unlawfully intruding upon and holding the office of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.

The matter in dispute relates to the title by which the respective parties claim the offices in question. Is it a case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States?

It is proper to observe that, for the purpose of the present question, it must be assumed that the court has jurisdiction to pronounce such a judgment as the principal case calls for; that is, a judgment of ouster. That question of jurisdiction is before us in a plea to the jurisdiction interposed by the defendant; but we have no occasion to anticipate a decision on that question of jurisdiction in order to dispose of the question of transfer to the United States circuit court. The theory of the present application is that the circuit court has concurrent jurisdiction with this court to determine all questions that can properly arise in the progress of the cause. To destroy the jurisdiction of this court at the present stage of the proceedings, is to destroy the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court, which must receive the same interpretation as that of this court, and thus to defeat the object intended by the petition for transfer.

It must be conceded at once that in order to determine the questions raised by the defendants' plea to the court, it will be necessary for us hereafter, should we conclude that it is our duty to proceed with the case, notwithstanding the petition to transfer, to look into the Constitution of the United States, to see by what authority the State of South Carolina acts in the matter of choosing the presidential electors, and in order to determine whether the authority to act in the matter is of a special and limited character, such as might only authorize a particular legislative or executive act, in relation to which the public officers performing such act should be regarded rather as the immediate agents of the United States Constitution and laws than as agents of the State government; or whether she possesses general authority to proceed in the performance of her duties under the Constitution of the United States, as a State, clothed with local sovereignty, and thus be authorized to exert all her functions, legislative, executive, and judicial, in order to consummate the act of duty and authority cast upon her. It may be assumed that such an inquiry will be necessary in order to reach a conclusion as to the competency of the State judiciary to deal with the question at all. Would such a reference to the Constitution and laws of the United States be sufficient to constitute the case as one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States? If this question is answered in the affirmative, then it is difficult to see what would become of the boundary-line between the State and national jurisdictions. It would be only necessary for a party to a suit in the State courts, in order to practically defeat their jurisdiction through a transfer to the United States circuit court, to raise an objection to jurisdiction, with or without foundation, based on some reading of the Constitution or laws of the United States; for the moment the State judges undertook to open the Constitution or laws of the United States, to see whether there was any force in such objection, they would be told that the fact of the necessity for such an objection established the case as one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and that it must go to the United States circuit court under the statute.

It is clear that such a construction has not been put upon the Constitution and laws, conferring jurisdiction on the courts of the United States, and that it has no foundation on which to rest. We know of no case resting on the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States holding any such doctrine as that it is enough to confer upon a case depending in a State court the character of one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States; that a plea to the jurisdiction of the court has been, or may be, interposed involving a construction of the Constitution or laws of the United States. It is not intended to say that limitations imposed by the Constitution and laws of the United States and affecting and controlling the character of the judgment which the court is authorized to render, may not have that effect in any case, but it is intended simply to affirm that where it is alleged that the State court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the controversy, it is not enough to establish the case as one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, to claim the want of jurisdiction on the ground of something contained in such Constitution or laws. We understand the Supreme Court of the United States to have said that, in order to ascertain the character of the case, they must look into the pleas as well as into the plaintiff's case; but we do not understand that a plea to the jurisdiction of the court is one of those pleas that are regarded as exhibiting the character of the case in this respect. (Cohens vs. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 379.)

We must, therefore, conclude that the parties are bound to show, before they can take away our control over the case, that some provision of the Constitution or laws of the United States properly comes in question in determining the matters on which the respective claims of the parties to have been duly elected to the office in question depend.

We are satisfied that the petitioners ought to show more than this; but even this much cannot be shown, according to the view that we take of the case. There is nothing in the Constitution or laws of the United States that can be of the least service in determining which of the parties to this suit were duly elected to the office in question. The only feature of the general proceeding to appoint electors that Congress is authorized by the Constitution to control, is the day on which they are appointed. (Art. 2.) Authority to determine the mode of appointment is conferred by the Constitution (article 2, section 1,) on the legislatures of the States. No limitation or restriction as to the mode of appointment, or certifying the fact of appointment, is imposed upon the State legislature. In accordance with this authority this State has undertaken to provide for the election of the electors of President and Vice-President by the electors of the State, and has for that purpose put in operation election-machinery that embraces the action of certain officers deriving their appointment and authority solely from the constitution and laws of the State. By the constitution and laws of this State the ultimate right to determine the result of an election resides in the courts, who, by an action in the nature of a quo warranto, may go to the very foundations of right involved, and inquire as to the truth behind all conclusions and determinations of executive bodies and officers in all cases where the nature of the office is such that the writ of quo warranto is a proper remedy.

It is not alleged that Congress has ever attempted to abridge the full exercise of State authority in this respect, and, therefore, we are not called upon to examine any question as to the authority of that body under the Constitution.

It is evident, therefore, that it cannot become necessary to construe any provisions of the Constitution or laws of the United States, in order to ascertain who were actually and legally elected to the offices of electors of President and Vice-President.

If it were otherwise it would not be enough to show that the Constitution or laws of the United States were incidentally drawn in question. (Carter's Con. Law, 130.) In our view it would be necessary to show that that which has been done, as the ground of the claims of the respective parties to be duly elected, was done under the direct authority of the Constitution or laws of the United States. On the contrary, the direct authority that stands as the sanction and test of such proceedings is that of the Constitution and laws of the State, while the utmost that can be claimed for the Constitution and laws of the United States is, that they create the office in question, and thus affect the subject-matter to which the controversy relates, without entering at all into the controversy itself.

It is clear that the fact that the matter or thing that the parties are seeking to possess themselves of, by means of a judgment, derives its existence or value from anything contained in the Constitution or laws of the United States, has no effect to confer on the case the character of one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. If it were otherwise every suit that seeks the recovery of money would be of that character, for the very foundation of the character and legal value of money lies in the Constitution and laws of the United States, who can alone create it as such to make it a legal object of pursuit through the judgment of a court.

The proposition just stated is supported by Nesmith vs. Calvort, (1 Woodbury and Minot, 34.) There it was held that an action on a contract affecting the ownership of letters-patent, issued for an invention, was not one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, notwithstanding the letters-patent, the subject-matter to which the controversy related, owed their existence as a subject of legal consideration to such Constitution and laws.

The fair conclusion is, that in order to constitute a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, the right of action must, in its principal and essential features, rest upon such Constitution or laws, so that if they be withdrawn the case would be without support. If any question depending on the Constitution, and such Constitution and laws, incidentally arises, the proper mode of correcting any error committed is by review in the Supreme Court of the United States, if proper force is not allowed thereby to such Constitution or laws.

The petition should be dismissed.

Wright, associate justice, concurs; Moses, C. J., was not present at the final hearing on account of illness, but concurs in the judgment.

Filed December 26, 1876.

The proceedings in the circuit court and the opinion of Judge R. P. Carpenter in the habeas corpus case of Peter Smith.

The petition and the writ of habeas corpus are omitted, as their substance appears in the subsequent proceedings.

OPINION OF THE COURT.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
County of Richland :

EX PARTE }
PETER SMITH. }

The motion is to discharge the petitioner from the penitentiary in which he is confined under sentence for burglary. The petition for the writ of habeas corpus is in the usual form, except the statement of his conviction, sentence, confinement, the pardon of D. H. Chamberlain, the governor, and the refusal of the superintendent of the prison to discharge him according to executive direction. The writ issued, and the superintendent made return thereto that D. H. Chamberlain, who granted said pardon, was not on the day said pardon was granted, in fact or law, governor; that his attempted installation into the office of governor had taken place before an illegal house of representatives without organization; that he had received less votes at the election than General Hampton, his only competitor; that the Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, claiming to be speaker, had unlawfully procured the election returns, and withheld them from the legal and organized house of representatives, and that Wade Hampton had been legally elected and installed into office, and was the legal governor of South Carolina. The prisoner replied, in substance, that Governor Chamberlain had been re-elected and installed, and that General Hampton had neither been elected or inaugurated.

I find, as matters of fact, from the pleadings and evidence—

1st. That D. H. Chamberlain was elected governor of this State at an election held on the 19th day of October, 1874; that he was legally installed into office on the 3d day of December of that year, and that he then entered upon the discharge of his official duties, and from that time until the present has been exercising the functions of governor, in possession of the office provided by law for the use of governor, and the archives and property attached to the same.

2d. That an election for governor and members of the general assembly was held in this State on the 7th day of November last; that there were but two candidates for governor, Messrs. Chamberlain and Hampton; that returns thereof were made by the commissioners of election from every county to the secretary of state; that, according to said returns, the former received 91,127, and the latter 92,231—a majority for Hampton of 1,134.

3d. That the whole number of members of the house of representatives elected at said election, was 124.

4th. That on the 28th day of November last, that fifty-nine members of the house of representatives met in their hall in Columbia, and elected the Hon. E. W. M. Mackey their presiding officer.

5th. That on the 5th day of December last, the said Mackey, having received the election returns from the secretary of state, proceeded in the presence of the senate and the body over which he presided to open and publish the same; that the votes returned from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens were, without formal contest, proof, or debate, excluded by a separate vote of the senate and this body over which he presided, and thereupon said Chamberlain was declared by said Mackey duly elected governor for two years; that on the 7th of December last, before the same bodies, said Chamberlain assumed to take the official oath prescribed by the constitution and delivered the address usual upon installation, and from that time has claimed to be governor by virtue of his last election and installation.

6th. The senate was organized on the 28th day of November, and recognized from that time until its adjournment the body over which said Mackey presided as the lawful house of representatives, and refused to recognize the house over which Wallace presided.

7th. On the 28th day of November fifty-seven members of the house of representatives who had received certificates of their election from the board of State canvassers, and eight members who had certificates from the clerk of the supreme court, met in Carolina Hall in the city of Columbia, and organized by the election of William H. Wallace as speaker and John T. Sloan, sr., as clerk.

8th. On the 14th day of December, the speaker, not being in possession of the election returns, published in the presence of the house and some of the senators "a tabular statement of the votes of the several counties for governor," as sworn to by Mr. John Scoffin, "and a certificate from the secretary of state, showing the whole number of votes given at the elections of 1874 and 1876 for governor," and thereupon the speaker announced that Wade Hampton had received a majority of the votes, and that upon the same day, in the same presence, General Hampton assumed to take the official oath prescribed by the constitution and did then and there deliver the usual inaugural address, and has from that time until the present claimed to be the governor of the State and to act as such.

Upon the foregoing facts three legal questions arise, viz :

1st. Was Governor Chamberlain legally inducted into office on the 7th of December last ? If not, was General Hampton installed as governor by virtue of the proceedings of the 14th of December, 1876 ?

If a negative answer is given to both questions, did the attempted installation of Governor Chamberlain operate in law as a resignation of his former office ?

Before entering upon these questions it will be proper to notice some objections made by the petitioner to the jurisdiction of the court.

It is contended that to decide upon the validity of the pardon granted in this case is equivalent to the decision of the question of title to the office of governor. It was insisted in the argument that the general distribution of powers in the various States, into three distinct departments, had been emphasized in our State constitution, which declares that "In the government of this commonwealth, the legislative, executive, and judicial power of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other." (Article I, section XXVI.) The doctrine of independent co-ordinate and co-equal departments of the State government is fully entertained by this court. The judiciary can no more direct the action of the general assembly than the latter can dictate the decisions of the former, and the legislative and judicial departments combined cannot give direction to the executive in the most important official act.

In all governments there must reside sovereign power, in which exist legislative, executive, and judicial functions. They inhere in every form of government ; in an absolute despotism as much as in a republic. This power is the source of law and legal agencies for its exposition and execution. In the States this sovereignty resides in the people. They have appointed three general agencies, and delegated to them respectively the powers belonging to that particular branch of the government, except so far as their exercise is restricted by the constitution. Within the scope of this delegated authority each is supreme, subject neither to the supervision or control of the others. These departments are simply agencies established by the people, and the officers elected or appointed are but the agents of the people. The constitution is the supreme and paramount law—superior to legislative enactments ; and, of course, to any official act performed by any person elected or appointed under its provisions. The oath of office prescribed by the constitution is conclusive. It is to "support, protect, and defend" that instrument. How can support be given, protection afforded, and defense made by the courts, except by solemn judgments in cases of its infraction by the other departments ? Whether a law passed by the general assembly, or an act done by the executive department, is or not inhibited is a question devolved by the constitution upon the judiciary, for the reasons that its forms of procedure, laws of evidence, cautions of construction, and the presumed absence of partisan feeling, render that department most appropriate for such investigations. This court has not jurisdiction to try the question of title to the office of governor, not only because the proceeding in the case is between third parties, but because the Constitution gives that power to the general assembly. (Art. III, sec. IV.)

Questions in their nature political, or which are by the constitution intrusted to other departments, cannot be heard or decided in the courts. The election by the voters of the State confers the title. The duty of this court is confined to inquiring whether either of the claimants have complied with the constitutional conditions precedent to entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office of governor. The constitutional provisions bearing upon the subject are as follows : "The governor shall be elected by the electors duly qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives, and shall hold his office for two years and until his successor shall be chosen and qualified, and shall be re-eligible. He shall be elected at the first general election held under this constitution for members of the general assembly and at each general election thereafter, and shall be installed during the first session of the said general assembly after his election, on such a day as shall be provided for by law." (Sec. II, Art. III.)

"The returns of every election for governor shall be sealed up by the managers of election in their respective counties and transmitted by mail to the seat of government, directed to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives at the next ensuing session of the general assembly, and a duplicate of said returns shall be filed with the clerks of the courts of said counties, whose duty it shall be to forward to the secretary of state a certified copy thereof, upon being notified that the returns previously forwarded by mail have not been received at his office. It shall be the duty of the secretary of state, after the expiration of seven days from the day on which the votes have been counted, if the returns thereof from any county have not been received, to notify the clerk of the court of said county, and order a copy of the returns filed in his office to be forwarded forthwith. The secretary of state shall deliver the returns to the speaker of the house of representatives at the next ensuing session of the general assembly, and during the first week of the session, or as soon as the general assembly shall have organized by the election of the presiding officers of the two houses, the speaker shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses." (Sec. IV, Art. III.)

"The legislative power of the State shall be vested in two distinct branches, the one to be styled the 'senate' and the other the 'house of representatives,' and 'both together the general assembly of the State of South Carolina.'" (Sec. I, Art. II.)

"The house of representatives shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members, to be apportioned among the several counties according to the number of inhabitants contained in each." (Art. II, sec. IV.)

The organization of the two houses presupposes a quorum in both. "A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such a manner and under such penalties as may be provided by law." (Sec. XV, Art. II.)

As no law has been enacted upon the subject, the only business possible for a number less than a quorum to transact is to adjourn and continue to do so until the legal number of members take their seats. All acts done where less than a legal quorum is present are void. (Logansport vs. Legg, 20 Ind., 315. Rice vs. R. R. Co., 13 Ind., 58. McCracken vs. San Francisco, 16 Cal., 591. State vs. Wilkesville, 20 Ohio St. R., 288.)

The question arises, Was the body over which Mackey presided, and in the presence of which he opened and published the returns for governor, the legal house of representatives? I am saved the labor and responsibility of deciding this question by the decision of the supreme court in the case of The State ex rel. William H. Wallace vs. Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey. Wallace, as speaker of the house, applied for a writ of mandamus to compel the delivery to him of the returns of election for governor and lieutenant-governor. After full hearing of the evidence and arguments the court unanimously decided that Wallace was the lawful speaker; that the body over which he presided (which was a different body from that over which Mackey presided) was the legal house of representatives; that the body over which Mackey presided was organized without a governor, and that Mackey acquired in law no legal title from his pretended election, but remained a "private person." It was contended by the learned counsel that this case was not authoritative, because the court did not grant the relief asked. The court dismissed the petition as to Mackey upon the express ground that, as he was not speaker but a "private person," he was not amenable to a proceeding by mandamus. The legality of the body over which Mackey presided, his title to the office of speaker, were directly involved in the proceeding, and formed the basis of the order made in the case. They were necessary and unavoidable issues involved in its decision. It is certainly novel to contend that the decisions of the highest judicial tribunals are not authority in the inferior courts unless the judgment is for the plaintiff. In the leading case of Marbury vs. Madison, that great judge, Chief-Justice Marshall, in an opinion as exhaustive of the law as it was lucid in statement and apt in illustration, held that the plaintiff had a vested right; that his right had been violated; that the remedy invoked was the proper one, and refused the writ on the ground that the act of Congress conferring authority on the court to issue it in such a case was unconstitutional and void. (1 Cranch, 137.)

This great case has perhaps been more frequently cited in the Federal and State courts than any other found in the reports. It is the universal practice in courts of last resort to settle the principles involved in cases, and when the decision is made it binds all inferior tribunals. If there could be doubt, our State constitution is decisive upon the point, as it provides that the supreme court shall consider and decide "every point made and distinctly stated in the cause." (Art. IV, sec. 8.)

The most cursory examination of the records and judgment of the court in the case will show that the points above referred to were made, distinctly stated, and decided. While I am unable to follow the reasoning of the supreme court as to some of the points decided, I accept its authority. It does not become me to examine into or supplement the reasons for that decision. It is enough that the court, having appellate control over the decisions of this court, have, in a case in which these issues were clearly presented in the record, decided them, emphasizing their concurrence in the decision by pronouncing separate opinions.

"To see the supreme court passing in the review a judgment of this court, in order by an examination of its reasons to ascertain whether it will adopt its principles as a rule of law, would certainly be a very novel spectacle. This would be reversing the order of proceeding contemplated by the constitution." (Per Bradish, president of the court of errors, in Hunsford vs. Archer, 4 Hill, 324.)

"A rule of law laid down by the House of Lords cannot be reversed by the chancellor. * * The rule of law must remain until reversed by the House of Lords." (Lord Chancellor Eldon in Perry vs. Whitehead, 6 Vesey, 544.)

"I gave the judgment in this case in the fourth circuit, because, sitting as an inferior tribunal, I felt myself bound to follow the decisions of this court, although I could not assent to the reasoning upon which they are founded." (Chief-Justice Taney in Cook vs. Woffat, 5 How., 308.)

"A respect to the duty which we owe to the highest judicial tribunal of the country, as well as to ourselves, requires that we should not only give to the decision all proper effect in the case presented by the facts, but that we should accept the argument of the opinion as it affects the general question involved in its judgment." (Chief-Justice Moses in Cochran vs. Darcy, 5 South Carolina, 126.)

The authority of the highest tribunals, and the most illustrious names, might be multiplied almost without limit upon this principle so universally recognized and so essential to the administration of justice; but the foregoing is sufficient to show that this court is bound by the authority of the decision of the supreme court of the State, in the language of Sir William Jones, "as firmly as the pagan deities were supposed to be bound by the decrees of fate."

If the body over which Mackey presided had consisted of members of the house of representatives numbering less than a quorum, assembled for organization, the only legal act that could have been performed would have been the adjournment from day to day, and all other acts done would have been void. (Cushing's Law and Practice of the Legislative Assemblies, page 95.)

But the legal and logical conclusions of that decision go still further. There can be but one legal house of representatives in this State, and it follows, from the principles laid down by the court, that the body over which Mackey presided was not simply illegal from being incomplete, but actively so, violating positive law and usurping the rightful authority of the house of representatives; that all its acts were illegal and void, and the attempted installation of governor was without lawful authority, and conferred no right whatever.

The next question for consideration is, whether the proceedings of the 14th December last in reference to the installation of General Hampton have the sanction of law, and entitled him to enter upon the discharge of official duties. It will be observed that the legislative power of the State is vested in two distinct branches, "both together the general assembly," and that the governor shall be installed during the first session of the general assembly after his election. The returns are to be made to the speaker of the house at the next ensuing session of the general assembly. "As soon as the general assembly shall have organized by the election of the presiding officers of the two houses, the speaker shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses." It would seem clear from these provisions that the framers of the constitution not only intended the organization, harmonious and united action of both to precede the installation of the governor, but to be a condition precedent to any legislative action whatever. The presiding officer, when the returns for governor are opened and published, is designated, but the acts to be performed are to be done by "both together." When the general assembly convenes, their officers elected, messages interchanged, and a joint message sent to the executive, they then constitute the legislative power of the State and can transact business, and not until then. (Cushing's Law and Practice of Leg. Ass., and cases there cited, page 107; Senate Journal, 32d Congress, 2d sess., 351; House Journal, 30th Congress, 1st sess., 887.) The attempted inauguration of General Hampton took place in the presence of the house of representatives, without the concurrence of the senate, and, so far as appears by the pleadings and evidence, without its knowledge. No official communication took place between the indisputably lawful senate and the house; indeed, the former persistently refused to recognize the legal existence of the latter. Could the house of representatives, under such circumstances, perform the important functions of opening and publishing the election returns and installing the chief magistrate? From the frequent iteration in the constitution of the term "general assembly" in connection with the election, opening and publishing the returns, and the installation of the governor, the actual presence of both branches would appear to be necessary for the legal and proper performance of such duties, and the absence of either would render nugatory such an exercise of legislative power. The proceedings, therefore, of the house of representatives on the 14th day of December, 1876, were ineffectual to invest General Hampton with official authority. It was contended in argument, with much earnestness and ability, that by operation of the law the attempted installation of Governor Chamberlain was a resignation of his former office. The case of Mellons vs. May, cited in Bacon's Abridgment, vol. 5, page 653, was relied on, where it is stated "if one be lessee for life or years, and take a new lease of the same lands, though such lease be void for any defect in the making or execution of it—as, if it were for life, to begin at a future day—yet it is a surrender of the first lease." In a note on the same page it is impliedly asserted that the case was erroneously reported. If it ever was law in England, the case has long since been overruled. "No surrender, express or implied, in order to, or in consideration of, a new lease, would bind, if the new lease is absolutely void, for the cause, ground, and condition of the surrender fails." (Lord Mansfield, in Zouch vs. Parsons, 3 Burrows, 1807; Wilson vs. Sewatt, 4 Burrows, 1980.) So far as my examination of the authorities extends, this doctrine has been sustained by all the British courts since that time; and I think, notwithstanding the case of Mellons vs. May, has in a few cases been approved by some American courts of undoubted learning and ability. The preponderance of authority in this country is largely adverse to the ruling said to have been made in that case. It is, perhaps, not unworthy of remark that most of the cases in which the doctrine laid down in Cro. Eliz., 873, has received commendation, arose upon a very different state of facts, and the references thereto were illustrative of some supposed analogy, rather than cited as an authority in point.

What reason can be adduced in support of the proposition? Is not the statement a solecism? An act without legal efficacy, validity, or binding force, conferring no authority in law, null and void, by some legal legerdemain becomes suddenly possessed of life and vigor; powerless to confer a right, it is potent to destroy those already existing; adding nothing, it subtracts all; ineffectual to support the slightest claim, it is effective in dispossessing a citizen of an admitted legal possession. My reason revolts from a conclusion so illogical and unreasonable. An act void for one purpose is invalid for all. This is one of the cases in which the law overrules the intention of the individual, and renders ineffective and futile his expressed will; and being ineffective for one purpose, it is so for all purposes. (Broom's Legal Maxims, 669.)

The peculiar delicacy of this case, the novelty of the circumstances, and the real difficulty attending some of its points, have induced me to give it a more extended and careful examination than usually occurs in cases heard in this court.

1st. I find, therefore, as conclusions of law, D. H. Chamberlain was not on the 7th day of December last legally installed as governor of South Carolina.

2d. Wade Hampton was not on the 14th day of December, 1876, legally installed into the office of governor of said State.

3d. The attempted installation of D. H. Chamberlain being illegal and void, it did not operate in law as a resignation of the office of governor which he held at that time, as by the constitution the governor holds his office for two years and until his successor is chosen and qualified; and as there has been no legal qualification of his successor, D. H. Chamberlain is lawfully in the possession of the executive office, and entitled to discharge the legal functions of the same until such qualification takes place.

It is, therefore, ordered and adjudged that the petitioner, Peter Smith, be discharged from further confinement in the State penitentiary.

The Peter Smit habeas corpus case.

In the following proceedings in the above-named case before Judge R. B. Carpenter, in the fifth circuit court of South Carolina, the writ of habeas corpus case is omitted as not essential.

RETURN TO WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,

County of Richland:

Ex parte Peter Smith.

The respondent herein, Theodore W. Parmele, by his attorney and counsel, Ed. J. Maxwell, in obedience to the writ of habeas corpus, issued therein on the 21st day of December, 1876, by honorable R. B. Carpenter, judge of the fifth judicial circuit of South Carolina, now appears in court, and respectfully shows: that he has produced the body of the said Peter Smith, now in his custody, in conformity to the injunction contained in said writ, and has here said Peter Smith now present.

This respondent begs leave to refer herein to the petition upon which said writ was issued, and to further answer and return as follows:

That on the 20th day of December, 1876, the date of the alleged pardon set forth in the petition herein, the said Daniel H. Chamberlain therein named, and whose signature is attached thereto, was neither in fact nor in law the governor of the State of South Carolina, but that Wade Hampton was on the said date the lawful governor of the said State, in fact and in law, and this respondent avers that the alleged pardon set forth in the petition is of no force or validity.

And in support of the said allegation this respondent avers and gives this honorable court to be informed, that on the 7th day of November, 1876, an election was duly held in pursuance of the provisions of the constitution and laws of the said State, for the office of governor thereof; that by the provisions of the said constitution it is ordained that the returns of such election shall be delivered to the secretary of state, and by him to the speaker of the house of representatives at the next ensuing session of the general assembly and during the first week of the session, or as soon as the general assembly shall have been organized, by the election of the presiding officers of the two houses; that the said speaker shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses, and that the person having the highest number of votes shall be governor.

That after the said election had been duly held, the said returns thereof were duly certified and delivered to the secretary of state, and that, without any warrant of law, the said secretary of state delivered them to one E. W. Mackey, a person illegally claiming the office of speaker of the house of representatives, neither he being speaker nor the body electing him being the house of representatives, it containing only fifty-nine members, all told, at the time of its pretended organization, which said claim has been adjudged to be null and void by the supreme court of this State, in a judgment duly rendered December 6, 1876, (to which reference is craved,) made on a petition for mandamus by William H. Wallace as speaker of the house of representatives of said State against said secretary of state, H. E. Hayne, and said Mackey, claiming to be speaker of the house of representatives of said State; and the said Mackey, by such judgment, has been adjudged to be only a private citizen, and not speaker of the house of representatives of said State, and the body which elected him and over which he presided, not to be the house of representatives, and the said Wallace to be speaker of the house of representatives; and the body which elected him, and over which he presided, to be the lawful house of representatives.

That afterward, to wit, December, 1876, said Mackey, in presence of a body of men illegally claiming to be the house of representatives, but which was a mere unauthorized and unorganized assemblage of individuals, and not the house of representatives, in the hall of the house of representatives, the doors being closed, pretended to open and publish the returns of the election for governor; that in reality he opened and published only a portion thereof, and did not open and publish the returns from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, in which said counties Hampton received a majority of 4,272 votes over Daniel H. Chamberlain, his only competitor, and thereupon illegally declared said Chamberlain to have received the greatest number of votes, and to be elected governor, although, in fact and in truth, the said Chamberlain had not received the greatest number of votes, and had not been elected governor; and thereafter, on the 7th of December, said Chamberlain went through the pretended ceremony of taking an oath of office as governor, and thereupon asserted his claim, in virtue of said action, to be governor of this State for two years from the performance of said pretended ceremony; and this respondent denies the validity of such claim, and insists that the only legal effect of all the said proceedings was to put an end to the term of the office which said Chamberlain had held in fact as well as in law.

And this respondent, for further return, avers that the lawful house of representatives of said State duly and lawfully convened on the 28th of November, 1876, in the city of Columbia, and on said day duly and lawfully organized with a legal quorum, to wit, sixty-five members, and on said day duly and lawfully elected said Wallace speaker of said house; and that afterward, to wit, on 14th of December, 1876, the said house, having given the senate of the said State due notice thereof, said Wallace, as said speaker, in default of possession of said returns of the election of governor, which were illegally detained by said Hayne and said Mackey, opened and published in the presence of said house and of a number of senators who attended, the duplicate of the returns of the election of governor, which had been filed with the clerks of the courts of the several counties, and a certificate by said secretary of state, Hayne, of the number of votes cast for governor at said election, and the said Wade Hampton having received the highest number of votes was duly declared duly elected governor of the said State, and thereupon took the oath of office prescribed by the constitution and then and there entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office. And so this respondent avers that at the date of the said alleged pardon, set forth in the petition, Wade Hampton was the lawful governor of the said State of South Carolina, and the only officer authorized by law to grant pardons.

Whereupon this respondent respectfully submits to this honorable court that he cannot lawfully recognize or yield obedience to the said alleged pardon, and therefore retains the said Peter Smith in his charge and custody, pursuant to the sentence of imprisonment in his said petition set forth.

Attorney for Respondent.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
County of Richland:

Theodore W. Parmele, the respondent above named, being duly sworn, deposes and says, that he has read the foregoing return, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to those matters which are therein stated on information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

Sworn to this 26th day of December, 1876, before me.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Richland County:

Ex parte Peter Smith.

Now comes Peter Smith, and, in reply to the further return of Theodore W. Parmele, says:

That on the 20th day of December, 1876, at the time of granting the pardon set forth in his petition, Daniel H. Chamberlain, who granted the same, was in fact and in law gov-error of the State of South Carolina, and by virtue of the constitution of said State was authorized to grant reprieves and pardons after convictions (except in cases of impeachment) in such manner, under such terms, and under such restrictions as he shall think proper, (section 11, article 3;) that Wade Hampton was not then and is not now the lawful governor of the State of South Carolina; that on the — day of November, 1874, Daniel H. Chamberlain was, upon the returns of the election theretofore held on the — day of November, 1874, in the presence of both houses of the general assembly of South Carolina declared by the speaker of the house of representatives duly elected governor of the State of South Carolina, for the term of two years then next ensuing; that thereupon, on the first day of December, 1874, the said Daniel H. Chamberlain was duly inaugurated, by taking the oath of office, and was inducted into said office; that since his said induction into office until the present time, he, the said Daniel H. Chamberlain, has been in possession of the office of governor of South Carolina, exercising the functions and performing the duties of said office, and in the possession of the public property and offices set apart for his use as such governor; that on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, a general election was held in the State of South Carolina, for the election, among other persons, of a person to fill the office of governor for the term of two years, to commence at the expiration of the then existing term; that the returns for said election for governor were sealed up by the managers of election in their respective counties, and transmitted by mail to the seat of government, to the Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state; that the said secretary of state duly received said returns; that on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1876, the day fixed by the constitution of the State, the next ensuing session of the general assembly of the State convened at the capitol in the city of Columbia. At 12 o'clock, noon, of said day, the senate was duly called to order, and a quorum of members elected, being present, was duly organized by the election of a clerk and other officers, and declared ready for business; that on the same day and at the same hour that the senate met and organized as aforesaid, the members of the house of representatives met in the hall of the said house, and a majority of members elected at the recent election on the 7th day of November, 1876, a quorum being present, proceeded to organize by the election of Hon. E. W. Mackey, member from the county of Charleston, speaker, and A. O. Jones, clerk; that for a full and correct statement of the details of said organization of the house of representatives, as well as a statement of the facts relative thereto, preceding said organization, and the law relative thereto, the "report of the special committee of the house of representatives of South Carolina relative to the organization of that body, and the constitutional validity thereof," adopted December 21, 1876, is hereto appended and made a part of this reply.

That the facts therein stated on information and belief are alleged to be true.

That said house of representatives, having been duly organized as aforesaid, announced itself ready to proceed to business; that said announcement was made to the senate, and a similar announcement was received by the house from the senate as to the organization of that body. A joint committee of the two houses was then appointed, and the same waited on the governor, D. H. Chamberlain, and informed him that the two houses were duly organized and ready to receive any communication which he might be pleased to make.

That on information and belief this replicant says that subsequently to the organization of the house of representatives, as aforesaid, to wit, on the 28th day of November, 1876, the Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, pursuant to section 4, article 3, of the constitution, did deliver the returns of the election of November 7, 1876, for governor and lieutenant-governor to the Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, speaker of the house of representatives as aforesaid.

That on the 5th day of December, A. D. 1876, at 1 o'clock p. m., pursuant to a joint resolution previously adopted, the senate and house of representatives aforesaid met in joint convention in the hall of the house of representatives for the purpose of canvassing the returns of the late election of November 7, 1876, for governor and lieutenant-governor, in pursuance to section 4, article 3, of the constitution of the State. The returns of said election received from the Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state as aforesaid, by the Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, speaker, were opened and published by him in the presence of both houses, and when the counties of Edgefield and Laurens were published, objections being made to the returns from those two counties, in accordance with rules previously adopted, the senate withdrew, and the two houses, acting separately, decided not to count the votes alleged to have been cast in those two counties.

The canvass of the returns was then completed and the following result announced:

FOR GOVERNOR.

D. H. Chamberlain received.....	86, 216 votes.
Wade Hampton received.....	83, 071 votes.

FOR LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

R. H. Gleaves received.....	86, 620 votes
W. D. Simpson received.....	82, 521 votes

The speaker, Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, thereupon declared that the Hon. D. H. Chamberlain and the Hon. R. H. Gleaves were duly elected respectively governor and lieutenant-governor of the State of South Carolina for the two years ensuing. The joint assembly of the two houses was then dissolved and the senate returned to its chamber.

That on the 7th day of November, 1876, at 1 o'clock p. m., the senate and house of representatives met in joint assembly, pursuant to resolution adopted by both houses, for the inauguration of the governor declared elected as aforesaid.

That then and there appeared the Hon. D. H. Chamberlain, governor-elect, and took the oath of office prescribed by the constitution and delivered his inaugural address. That thereupon the joint assembly was dissolved and the senate returned to its chamber, when the oath of office was duly taken by the Hon. R. H. Gleaves, lieutenant-governor.

That the said Daniel H. Chamberlain was, at the time of his said inauguration and qualification as governor, by virtue of his former election and qualification as governor, in possession of the property and offices, and in the discharge of the functions of governor of the State of South Carolina, and he has, from that time forth to the present time, been in possession of the property and offices, and in full exercise of the functions of governor of the State of South Carolina, and has been and is so recognized by the general assembly of the State of South Carolina, met and organized in the manner aforesaid.

Now, as to the claim of the respondent, that Wade Hampton was, on the 14th day of December, A. D. 1876, by W. H. Wallace, speaker of the house of representatives, duly declared elected governor of the State of South Carolina, this replicant, on information and belief, says:

That it is admitted that said William H. Wallace, as a pretended speaker of a pretended house of representatives, did pretend, in the presence of said pretended house and a few senators, who, without permission, and without the knowledge of the senate, by accident or by design on their part individually, were present, to declare Wade Hampton duly elected governor of the State of South Carolina, but that the senate of the State of South Carolina had no notice of said intended declaration by said William H. Wallace, and was not present thereat: that the senate did not, at the time of its organization on the 28th day of November, 1876, recognize the validity of said pretended house of representatives, of which William H. Wallace was the pretended speaker, and at no time since has recognized said pretended house.

That said body of persons, styling themselves the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, assembled on the 28th day of November, 1876, in a certain hall, called "Carolina Hall," in the city of Columbia, in said State, and pretended to elect William H. Wallace as speaker and John T. Sloan as clerk, but that said assemblage was without authority of law, and said pretended election of William H. Wallace as speaker and said election of John T. Sloan as clerk were without authority of law and void.

That said body of persons so assembled in "Carolina Hall" was composed of fifty-seven persons only who had been declared elected members of the house of representatives at the recent election of November 7, 1876, by the board of State canvassers, and, as such, had received certificates of election. That said members of the house of representatives wrongfully refused to assemble in the hall of the house of representatives at the State capitol with the other fifty-nine members there, and thus refused because eight certain other persons, claiming to have been elected representatives (five from Edgefield County and three from Laurens County) were refused admittance there, they not having certificates of election from the board of State canvassers. Having refused to assemble in the hall of the house of representatives as aforesaid, said fifty-seven persons proceeded to assemble in said "Carolina Hall," where they proceeded to organize as a house of representatives by the election of W. H. Wallace as speaker and said John T. Sloan clerk.

And this replicant avers that said pretended organization as a house of representatives at Carolina Hall was irregular, unconstitutional, and void—

First. Because said persons composing it refused to assemble at the State-house, in the hall of the same set apart for the use of the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, and where said body has for years been accustomed to assemble.

Second. Because said persons, composing it, had not sufficient members to constitute a quorum to do business. That the whole number of members declared elected at the election of November 7, 1876, by the board of State canvassers, who received certificates of election, was one hundred and sixteen, and a majority of this number, fifty-nine at least, was necessary for a quorum.

Third. Because said persons, admitting that they, said fifty-seven members, with certificates of election from the board of State canvassers, were not sufficient to constitute a quorum, unlawfully admitted said eight persons, without certificates of election, from Edgefield and Laurens Counties upon an equal footing with themselves, and counted them to make up a quorum, and permitted them to participate in the organization of their said body; that they could not, according to the constitution, so organize, and all acts done by said body then and since, on the basis of said organization, are without lawful authority and void.

Fourth. Because no persons claiming a seat in the house of representatives as members from Edgefield and Laurens Counties could lawfully participate in the organization of the house unless they held certificates of election from the board of State canvassers. And this replicant avers, on information and belief, that said pretended house of representatives, unlawfully organized as aforesaid, and unlawfully assembled in Carolina Hall, unlawfully proceeded on the 14th of December, A. D. 1876, and without proper returns of the election of November 7, 1876, to declare Wade Hampton duly elected governor of South Carolina for the two years next ensuing.

That said Wade Hampton thereupon unlawfully assumed to take the oath of office prescribed in the constitution. And this replicant, on information and belief, avers that the returns of the election of November 7, 1876, made and forwarded by the managers of election for the several counties to Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, and upon which alone could the election of governor and lieutenant-governor be determined and declared, were not in the possession of said pretended house of representatives, nor in the possession of William H. Wallace, the pretended speaker of said pretended house of representatives, and said returns were not, therefore, opened and published by the said speaker of said house.

That the Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, did not, on the 14th day of December, 1876, nor at any time theretofore, deliver to said William H. Wallace the returns of the election for governor of November 7, 1876, nor copies of said returns, nor certified copies of the duplicates of said returns, filed by the managers of election for their respective counties with the clerks of the courts of said counties. That said William H. Wallace did not have, therefore, from any lawful source any returns upon which, had he been the lawful speaker of a lawful house of representatives, he could determine and declare the result of the election of November 7, 1876, for governor.

And the replicant further says, on information and belief, that said William H. Wallace, the pretended speaker of said pretended house, did have a certificate which had been furnished by Hon. H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, to John S. Richardson, democratic candidate for member of Congress for the first congressional district, showing the aggregate results of the election of November 7, 1876, for governor, as made by him. That this certificate included the vote of the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, which vote had by the senate and house of representatives assembled in the State-house been thrown out as invalid and not entitled to be counted in ascertaining the result of said election.

That a duplicate copy of said certificate is hereto appended as an exhibit to this replication; that said certificate furnished no basis to said William H. Wallace or anybody else for determining the election of Wade Hampton.

And this replicant, on information and belief, further says, that at the time of the pretended publication of the returns of the managers of the election for governor by said William H. Wallace, on said 14th day of December, 1876, in the presence of said pretended house of representatives, the senate of the State of South Carolina was not informed thereof, and said senate did not attend, and was not present at the time of the said pretended opening and publication of the returns of the election by said William H. Wallace, (see constitution, section 4, article 3;) and this replicant denies that the supreme court of this State has determined in the case referred to by the respondent, viz, "William H. Wallace, speaker, vs. E. W. M. Muckey, speaker," or in any other case; that a majority of the whole possible representation in the house of representatives, one hundred and twenty-four members, is necessary for a quorum of said body; that it is true that a question as to what constituted a quorum of the house of representatives arose as one of the questions in said cause, but the court could not, as it held, grant the writ of mandamus in said cause as prayed, or any relief at all, and therefore no question was or could be determined in said cause, and no judgment could be or was rendered in favor of the petition in said cause. It is true that the court casually expressed some opinion upon the question of a quorum of the house of representatives, but said opinion so expressed was obiter dictum, and in no way necessary to the conclusion reached by the court, viz, that it was not in the power of the court to grant the relief prayed.

And this replicant further says that this court has no power or jurisdiction to determine the contest between Wade Hampton and Daniel H. Chamberlain as to which of them is entitled to be, to have, and to exercise the office of governor of the State of South Carolina. That the jurisdiction of said cause, if one there be, is by the constitution and laws of the State expressly confided in the general assembly of the State of South Carolina. Section 4, article 3, of the constitution provides as follows: "Contested elections for governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as shall be prescribed by law." That section 28, of chapter 8, of the general statutes provides (page 32) how a contest of the election of governor shall be conducted by the general assembly. Thereupon the case of a contest of the election of governor expressly made in this cause is withdrawn from the jurisdiction of any and every tribunal in the State except the general assembly. And this replicant submits that to determine the validity of the pardon granted to him, it is only necessary for this court to determine whether Daniel H. Chamberlain, who as governor signs the same, became lawfully possessed of said office and now holds and exercises the functions thereof, and did so exercise said functions at the time of granting said pardon. And this replicant submits that said pardon granted to him by said Daniel H. Chamberlain as governor of the State of South Carolina is legal and valid, and that he of right forthwith ought to be released from custody and permitted to go hence without day. That this replicant further says, that if the said proceedings whereby Daniel H. Chamberlain was do clared elected as governor and was inaugurated on the 7th day of December, 1876, were for any cause invalid in law, then the same Daniel H. Chamberlain remains and is governor, under section 2, article 3, of the constitution of the State, which provides that the governor shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor be chosen and qualified.

Secretary of State.

Report of the special committee of the House of Representatives of South Carolina, relative to the organization of that body, and the constitutional validity thereof, adopted December 21, 1876.

REPORT.

The special committee of this house, appointed under the following resolution:

Resolved, That a special committee of five, of which the speaker shall be chairman, be appointed for the purpose of preparing a report relative to the organization of the house of representatives, and such subsequent acts thereof as may seem to said committee pertinent to the matter of the constitutional validity of the said house,"

Beq leave to submit the following report:

In considering the question of the organization of this house and its constitutional validity, your committee have deemed it best to present such statement of facts as seemed necessary for the proper understanding of the entire case submitted to their consideration, with a full discussion of all the legal questions involved, in the following order:

I. A statement of the action of the board of State canvassers relative to members of the house of representatives, together with the grounds and reasons for such action.

II. A statement of the proceedings had in the supreme court of the State relative to members of the house of representatives.

III. The proper and legal mode of organizing the house of representatives, as established by general parliamentary law and by the law and practice of this State.

IV. A discussion of the authority of the clerk in excluding from the organization of the house of representatives all but legally elected members having proper certificates of election.

V. A discussion of the legal question of a legislative quorum, and a statement of the precedents relating thereto.

VI. A statement of the actual facts connected with the organization of the house, and such subsequent acts thereof as are pertinent to the matter under consideration.

Following this order, your committee now proceed to consider:

*This statement includes the vote in Edgefield and Laurens.

I. ACTION OF THE BOARD OF STATE CANVASSERS.

On the 7th November, 1876, a general election was held in this State for the election, among others, of members of the house of representatives of this State. In accordance with the laws of the State, the returns of this election were forwarded to the proper officers at the capital to be submitted to the board of State canvassers. This board met on the 10th day of November, and began the work of canvassing the returns. In the course of the canvass the board was called upon to consider the election in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, where it was alleged, upon evidence submitted to the board, that certain unlawful influences had so far affected the election in these counties as to render it impossible for the board to determine and declare who had been duly elected.

Edgefield County.—It may be here stated that the leading evidences against the validity of the election in Edgefield County are:

First. The immense disproportion between the whole number of votes cast at this election as compared with the entire population of the county, as exhibited by the United States census of 1870, and the State census of 1875.

By the former census (U. S., 1870,) the entire population of Edgefield County, as then constituted, was 42,486. This included the village of Hamburg and the townships of Gregg, Hammond, and Schultz, having at that time, according to the same census, a population of 7,728, all of which were in 1871 made a part of the new county of Aiken. Deducting this from the entire population, as above stated, we have left 34,758 as the population in 1870 of the territory now comprised in Edgefield County. A further deduction should here be made for the township of Shaw's Creek, fully one-third of which is also included in the county of Aiken. For this, however, we have made no deduction.

According to the State census of 1875, the entire population of Edgefield County, as now constituted, is 35,039.

The whole number of votes cast in this county at the late election, according to the returns before the board of State canvassers, was 9,374. Taking, then, either the United States census of 1870, or the State census of 1875, as giving the population of this county, the result is that at the late election the votes cast considerably exceeded the ratio of one vote for every four inhabitants. This fact alone would throw great discredit upon the accuracy of the returns.

But, by the State census of 1875, the whole number of male persons over twenty-one years of age in the county of Edgefield is only 7,122, showing an excess in the total vote cast at this election, according to the returns, of 2,252 over the entire possible vote of the county.

Second. A comparison of the vote of this county at previous elections will establish the same result as above stated.

In 1870 the entire vote of this county for governor was 8,251. In connection with the vote of this year, it should be remembered that General M. C. Butler was a candidate upon the democratic ticket for lieutenant-governor. It is fair to presume that, owing to the fact of his being a citizen of this county, and the acknowledged leader of the democratic party in that county, he brought out the full democratic strength. In the vote of 1870, as above given, is included the vote of that portion of the county which has since been made a part of the county of Aiken. By reference to the United States census of 1870 it will be found, as already stated, that the entire population of the territory now embraced in Aiken County was 7,728, which gives a voting population—reckoning by the same ratio as is established by a comparison of the entire population of the county with the whole number of males over twenty-one years of age—of, in round numbers, 1,506. Deducting this number from the entire vote, 8,251, we have 6,745 as the vote for 1870 of what constitutes the present county of Edgefield.

The aggregate vote of Edgefield County as reported by the returns for this year is 9,374, showing an excess over the unusually full vote of 1870 of no less than 2,623, or an excess over the vote of the entire county of Edgefield, before the present county of Aiken was established, of 1,123; or, again, an excess in the vote of the present year for the democratic candidates over the entire vote of the old county of Edgefield for General M. C. Butler in 1870 of 2,545.

In 1872, there being no democratic candidate for governor, it will be necessary to take the vote for State senator in that county as the standard of comparison. This vote in the aggregate was 5,374, or exactly 4,000 less than the reported vote of this year.

In 1874 the entire vote of the county was 6,298. By the United States census of 1870 the entire population of the territory embraced in the present county of Edgefield was 31,758. Allowing one voter for every five persons, the ratio established by the same census, there would have been in this county in 1874 a total voting population of 6,351. By the State census of 1875 the whole number of males over twenty-one years of age in this county was 7,122. An examination of these figures will show that the above vote of 1874, 6,298, is very nearly six-sevenths of the entire number of persons over twenty-one years of age, according to the United States census of 1870 or the State census of 1875. The statistics of popular elections in this country have established the fact that six-sevenths of the entire voting population is the highest limit reached in any elections, except in a few extreme and exceptional cases, which do not affect the general rule as here stated.

The conclusion is that the vote of this county in 1874 was a full vote under all ordinary circumstances, and yet this year the reported vote of this county exceeds the vote in 1874 by 3,076. And in this connection it may be added that General M. W. Gary, who claims to have been elected State senator from this county at the late election, has stated in a public card that about 600 colored voters did not vote, which number, being added to the excess just named, would give an aggregate excess of 3,676 over the very full vote of 1874.

Third. The evidence before the board of State canvassers also showed that this large excess of voters over the lawful vote of the county was due to the increase exclusively of the democratic vote. For while the vote was at the recent election largely increased over the vote at any previous election, yet the republican vote was decreased. This decrease in the republican vote was shown by the evidence before the State board of canvassers to be due not to a natural change of party connections, but to the fact of an organized and systematic plan of intimidation and violence carried on throughout the canvass and reaching its culmination on the day of the election.

The increase of the reported democratic vote of this year over the vote for General M. C. Butler in 1870, before the county of Edgefield was divided, is 2,646, and an increase over the democratic vote in 1874 of 3,367.

Fourth. The evidences before the board of canvassers also establish the fact that many of the election officers in Edgefield County were deterred by fear of physical violence from discharging their duties according to their convictions of justice and right. This result was accomplished in various ways. Some of the managers were prevented by threats from assuming the duties of their offices at all; others, again, during the progress of the election, were prevented from rejecting the votes of persons not authorized to vote; others were prevented from making such returns of the election as their judgment dictated, or from forwarding their statements or other written evidences of the fraud and violence practiced at their poll; and, finally, the republican members of the board of county canvassers were coerced by threats of violence into signing returns which they believed registered the results of this overwhelming fraud and violence, rather than the free ballots of the lawful voters of this county.

Laurens County.—In Laurens County the conduct of the election in its leading features was not unlike that in Edgefield County. This additional feature appeared, that the return of the board of county canvassers was signed by but two of the three commissioners composing the board, and one of the two signers signed the returns under protest, affixing his protest to the return itself, and afterward filing his affidavit with the board of State canvassers in the following terms:

"That so universal was this system of intimidation that deponent, influenced by this knowledge, and also by a personal observation of the illegal way in which the election was conducted in some particulars, did not feel justified in subscribing to the returns of the election in his official capacity as commissioner, and only consented to do so under protest, as said return will show on its face, when he became satisfied that his life would be placed in jeopardy if he declined to so subscribe the said return."

Under these circumstances, and for these causes, of which the foregoing statement is but a brief and imperfect summary, the board of State canvassers reached the conclusion that no valid and lawful election had taken place in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and accordingly refused to declare any persons elected from these counties.

Having concluded the discharge of their duties, the board of State canvassers adjourned sine die on the 22d November, 1876.

II. PROCEEDINGS IN THE SUPREME COURT.

During the sittings of the board of State canvassers, proceedings were instituted in the supreme court for the purpose of controlling the action of the board. That the supreme court had no jurisdiction to control the board in the manner attempted will be clear to all impartial minds when the case is fully understood. It is possible that after the work of the board was fully completed the court could, by some process of review, have inquired into the correctness of its action as to some officers, but it was clearly beyond its power to attempt to control its action in advance of any decision by the board; and as to the declaration of the election for members of the legislature, the court could not have, either before or after the work of the board of canvassers was completed, any jurisdiction or right to interfere with, control, or modify that action. Upon this point the authorities are abundant and conclusive, but the length of this report precludes your committee from presenting them here at length. Your committee will content themselves with quoting two authorities only, in which the language is brief and pointed. Cushing, in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 52, section 141, in speaking of returning officers, says:

"It remains to be observed, in conclusion, that the proceedings of these officers, from the necessity of the case, are in the first instance uncontrollable by any other authority whatever, so that if on the one hand, notwithstanding an election has been effected, the returning officers refuse or neglect to make the proper return, the party thereby injured is without remedy or redress until the assembly to which he is chosen has examined his case and adjudged him to be duly elected; and, on the other hand, if the returning officers make a return when no election has in fact taken place, or of one who is not eligible, the person returned will not only be entitled, but it is his duty to assume and discharge the functions of a member until his return and election be adjudged void."

In the celebrated Dorr case, Chief-Justice Durfee, of Rhode Island, used the following significant language in his charge to the jury:

"Courts and Juries, gentlemen, do not count votes to determine whether a constitution has been adopted or a governor elected or not."

After enlarging upon this principle, he continues:

"And why not? Because, if we did so, we should cease to be a mere judicial and become a political tribunal, with the whole sovereignty in our hands. Neither the people nor the legislature would be sovereign."

This view of the want of jurisdiction in the supreme court is fully sustained by the decision of Judge Bond, of the United States circuit court, in deciding the habeas corpus case; and from that decision we quote as follows:

"The first question, then; to be decided at this time, and upon this motion, is whether or not the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter before it.

"Article I, section 26, of the constitution of South Carolina, provides: In the government of this commonwealth the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other, and no person or persons exercising the functions of one of said departments shall assume or discharge the duties of any other."

"Section 4 of Article IV of the same instrument defines the power of the supreme court, thus: 'The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction only in cases in chancery, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law under such regulations as the general assembly may by law prescribe: Provided, The said court shall always have power to prescribe writs of injunction, mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to give it a general supervisory control over all other courts in this State.'

"The powers of the board of State canvassers, so far as this case is concerned, are defined by chapter VIII, title II, sections 24, 25, and 26, thus:

"SEC. 24. The board, when thus formed, shall, upon the certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe on the proper statement a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state."

"SEC. 26. Upon such statements they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been, by the greatest number of votes, duly elected to such offices, or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body."

"And the objection to the jurisdiction of the supreme court made by the petitioners is that they are a part of the executive department of the government charged with the execution of a law of the State, and that they alone are authorized to canvass the votes, and that they are not subject, in the exercise of their functions, to the control of the judicial branch of the government.

"The Supreme Court of the United States, in a very able opinion by Mr. Justice Miller, in the case of Galves vs. Thompson, (7 Wallace, 347,) has very clearly determined what the law is on this subject, and that is, that 'if it appear that the act which the court is asked to compel the officer of the Executive Department of the Government to do be purely ministerial, the court, having jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandamus, may compel the executive officer to perform his duty; but if the act required to be done by the executive officer be not merely ministerial but discretionary, or one about which he is to exercise his judgment, a court cannot, by mandamus, act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care in the ordinary exercise of official duty;' and the court further says that 'the interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the Executive Departments would be productive of nothing but mischief, and we are quite satisfied that such a power was never intended to be given them;' and for this Mr. Justice Miller quotes the opinion of Chief-Justice Taney in the case of the Commissioner of Patents vs. Whately, (4 Wallace, 522;) and the law is stated to the same effect in a very celebrated case in Maryland by Mr. Chief-Justice Bowie, Miles vs. Bradford, (22 Md. Rep., 170,) a case where the powers of the governor to canvass the votes was not so broadly given as in the case at bar.

"That the duty of this board of canvassers was not merely ministerial, but that they were clothed with a large discretion, seems to me, is very plain. They were not merely to take the returns and aggregate them—they were to canvass them; that is, they were to examine, to sift, to scrutinize them, which implies a power to reject such as were not lawful in their judgment; and more, they were to decide all cases under protest or contest that might arise when the power to do so did not by the constitution reside in some other body

"They were the executive officers appointed to declare the election of such persons as had, in their judgment, the majority of the legal votes cast. If they decided erroneously or falsely, the remedy of those candidates who thought themselves wronged was by quo warranto; but no court had the jurisdiction to compel the board of State canvassers to do otherwise than their own judgment dictated.

"It remains now to be seen what the court was asked to do by the relators. Their suggestion sets forth 'that the board is proceeding to hear and determine all matters of contest and protest before them in regard to the election of persons who were candidates at the general election, and is proceeding to certify their determination on such contests and protests to the secretary of state.' And they pray that a writ of mandamus may issue commanding them to ascertain from 'the managers' returns and statements, forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, the persons who, at the general election held on the said 7th day of November, ultimo, had the highest number of votes, and commanding them and compelling them to revoke and annul any determination or decision which they may have made in any case of contest or protest, if any such there be.'

"Under the cases cited in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, (7 Wallace, 347,) Gaines vs. Thompson, above referred to, I am of opinion that the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had no jurisdiction to entertain any such 'suggestion' or petition."

In the closing portion of his opinion Judge Bond says:

"That the State board of canvassers were clothed, under the law, with discretionary powers which required them to discriminate the votes, to determine and certify the candidates elected after scrutiny, and that they were a part of the executive department of the government, and were in no wise subject to the control as to what they should do, after they had commenced to perform that duty, of the judicial department."

Your committee, therefore, reach the conclusion that the board of State canvassers acted justly and properly, in view of the law and the facts, as to the election in Edgefield and Laurens Counties.

It will be seen that your committee have presented and defended at some length the conclusions of the board of State canvassers. This has been done for the sole purpose of establishing the fact that the action of that board was in itself just and legal; but it should be borne in mind that the validity of the present organization of this house does not depend in any degree upon the correctness or justice of the action of the board of canvassers. That board having completed its work, whether that work was just or not, it was final, and it only remained for this house to act in view of their declaration as it was actually made. It then became the duty of those who were elected to this house to proceed to effect an organization in accordance with general parliamentary law and the law and usage of this State.

III.2. MODE OF ORGANIZING THE HOUSE.

Your committee now proceed to consider what is the proper and legal mode of organizing the house of representatives, as upon that question depends, to some extent, the validity of the present organization of this house.

In the well-known case of Kerr vs. Trego, (47 Pa. S. R., 292,) cited in Brightley's Leading Cases on Elections, (p. 632,) Chief-Justice Lowrie of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, laid down the following principle:

"On the division of a body that ought to be a unit, the test of which represents the legitimate social succession is, which of them has maintained the regular forms of organization, according to the law and usages of the body, or, in the absence of these, according to the laws, customs, and usages of similar bodies in like cases, or in analogy to them. This is the uniform rule in such cases."

And in the same case, speaking of the custom of the clerk of the former organization taking charge of the organization of the new body, he says, (p. 638):

"It has the sanction of the common usage of every public body into which only a portion of new members is annually elected; it is the periodical form of re-organizing the select council and the senate of the State, and also the form of organizing the Senate of the United States on the meeting of a new Congress, when the Vice-President does not appear, and the last President pro tempore does; and we understand this custom to be uniform throughout the United States, though this is not very important. And when there is a president whose term as a member has expired, then the functions of the clerks continue, and they, in all cases, act as the organs of re-organizing the body, and continue to hold office until their successors are chosen and qualified. Our State and Federal Houses of Representatives are illustration enough of this. So universal is this mode of organizing all sorts of legislative and municipal bodies that all departures from it can be justified only as founded on special and peculiar usages, or on positive legislation. Whenever this form is adhered to, a schism of the body becomes impossible, though the process of organization may be very tardy." * * *

"It is objected that a rule that attributes so much power to the officers of the previous year gives them an advantage which they may use arbitrarily and fraudulently against the new members, so as to secure to themselves an illegitimate majority. No doubt this may be so; but no law can guard against such frauds so as to entirely prevent them, just as it cannot entirely prevent stealing and perjury and bribery; the people are liable to such frauds at every step in the processes of an election or organization. But so much the more need for order and law in this part of the process; the law can dictate that, though it cannot furnish honesty and sound judgment to the actors in it. That the law and order which we have announced have existed so long and so generally, is proof, at least, that they are better than no law at all."

In Willson's Digest of Parliamentary Law, (sec. 1603, p. 221,) this author says:

"At the commencement of every regular session the Clerk of the House opens the session by calling the names of members by States and Territories, if in Congress, and by counties, if in State legislative assemblies. If a quorum answer to their names, he will put the following question: 'Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed to the election of a Speaker?' If decided in the affirmative, tellers are generally appointed to conduct the vote."

This seems to be the universal custom in the organization of legislative bodies, and such custom not only prevails in this State, but is specially established by the rules of the house of representatives of this State.

Rule 80 of the rules of the house of representatives of this State is as follows:

"In all cases not determined by these rules, or by the laws, or by the constitution of this State, as ratified on the 14th, 15th, and 16th days of April, 1868, this house shall conform to the parliamentary law which governs the House of Representatives of the United States Congress."

Rule 81 is as follows:

"These rules shall be the rules of the house of representatives of the present and succeeding general assemblies, until otherwise ordered."

Turning now to Barclay's Digest, (pages 44 et seq., and 126,) we find that the parliamentary law governing the House of Representatives of the United States Congress requires the clerk of the last House to make up the roll of the members of the new House by placing thereon the names of such persons only whose credentials show "that they were regularly elected;" that having ascertained by a call of this roll that a quorum is present, the clerk then proceeds to call the names of the members for the choice of a Speaker; the Speaker being chosen, assumes the duties of presiding officer, and, after swearing in the members, the oath of office being first administered to him, proceeds to complete the organization; pending the election of a speaker, the clerk preserves order and decorum.

Such being not only the custom and parliamentary practice of this State, but also the general parliamentary law governing legislative bodies, the question arises, Was the present House of Representatives organized on the 28th day of November, in accordance with this universally-established custom? That it was so organized the facts prove beyond a doubt.

IV.—AUTHORITY OF THE CLERK IN EXCLUDING ALL BUT LEGALLY-ELECTED MEMBERS.

Before stating, however, the facts connected with the organization of the house of representatives, your committee deem it proper to consider next the question whether the clerk of the last house was authorized to omit from the roll the names of the claimants from Edgefield and Laurens Counties.

Your committee have already in this report stated the fact that the board of State canvassers determined that no valid election had taken place in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and had refused to issue certificates of election to any person in those counties.

Upon the question of the right of the claimants of these counties to be placed upon the roll and to participate in the organization, the following citation from Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies (section 229, page 87) is in point:

"The right to assume the functions of a member, in the first instance, and to participate in the preliminary proceedings and organization, depends wholly and exclusively upon the return or certificate of election, those persons who have been declared elected and are duly returned being considered as members, until their election is investigated and set aside, and those who are not so returned being excluded from exercising the functions of members, even though duly elected, until their election is investigated and their right admitted."

To the same effect is section 141, page 52, of the same work, which your committee have already cited in connection with the action of the supreme court.

In section 238, page 91, of the same work, in discussing the principles of parliamentary law governing the assembling and organization of legislative bodies, Cushing says:

"Hence it has occurred more than once that struggles for political power have begun among the members of our legislative assemblies, even before their organization; and it has happened, on the one hand, that persons whose rights of membership were in dispute, and who had not the legal and regular evidence of election, have taken upon themselves the functions of members; and, on the other, that persons having the legal evidence of membership have been excluded from participating in the proceedings."

In order to avoid such difficulties this distinguished writer lays down the following principles in section 240, which are applicable to the question now under consideration:

"That no person, who is not duly returned, is a member, even though legally elected, until his election is established."

"That those members who are duly returned, and they alone, (the members whose rights are to be determined being excluded,) constitute a judicial tribunal for the decision of all questions of this nature."

In Korr vs. Trego, (Brightley's Election Cases, page 636,) already cited, the Chief-Justice said :

"In all bodies that are under law, the law is that where there has been an authorized election for the office in controversy the certificate of election, which is sanctioned by law or usage, is the prima-facie written title to the office, and can be set aside only by a contest in the form prescribed by law. This is not now disputed. No doubt this gives great power to dishonest election-officers, but we know no remedy for this but by the choice of honest men."

It is proper here, in this connection, to again refer to the language already quoted from the same authority, (page 638:)

"It is objected that a rule that attributes so much power to the officers of the previous year gives them an advantage which they may use arbitrarily and fraudulently against the new members, so as to secure to themselves an illegitimate majority. No doubt this may be so, but no law can guard against such frauds so as to entirely prevent them, just as it cannot entirely prevent stealing and perjury and bribery. The people are liable to such frauds at every step in the processes of an election or organization; but so much the more need for order and law in this part of the process. The law can dictate that, though it cannot furnish honesty and sound judgment to the actors in it. That the law and order which we have announced have existed so long and so generally is proof, at least, that they are better than no law at all."

Applying the law as now stated to the facts in the present instance, it is clear, first, that there were no representatives from Edgefield and Laurens Counties having certificates of election according to the law and usage of this State; and, second, that, under the law, without such certificates, the clerk had no right to place the names of any persons upon the roll of the house as representatives from these counties.

It is true that certain parties did appear at the time of the organization of the house claiming to represent those two counties, and presenting certain certificates signed by the clerk of the supreme court, upon which certificates they claimed that their names should be placed upon the roll, and that they should be admitted to participate in the organization of the house. These certificates the clerk of the house very properly refused to recognize as certificates of election, sanctioned either by law or usage. But, aside from their validity, it is a fact worthy of notice here that those certificates were not authorized to be issued by the court itself. On the contrary, when asked to do so, the court distinctly refused to grant such certificates, but remarked that the parties in interest before the court could obtain transcripts of the record of the court from the clerk. In the proceedings of the court, as reported at the time in the leading democratic journals of the State, and, so far as your committee knows, undisputed up to the present time, the following appears :

"Mr. Youmans then submitted an order that the clerk of court issue certificates to the persons who have received the highest number of votes for members of the general assembly for the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and that his certificates stand in lieu of those which should have been issued by the board.

"Judge WILLARD. That we cannot do. There is no authority or precedent for such an order. If our opinion has not weight enough to be respected in the organization of the houses, putting it on paper would not add to it." (Charleston News and Courier, November 27, 1876; Columbia Register, November 26, 1876.)

But admitting that the court itself had undertaken to issue certificates of election to persons from Edgefield and Laurens Counties, such certificates would be clearly of no value as certificates of election, entitling the holders to be regarded as representatives of those counties, nor could they be regarded as such prima-facie evidence of election as entitled the holders to be placed upon the roll of the clerk.

The position assumed and maintained by the republican party before and during this entire contest was :

First. That no persons except those declared elected and duly returned by the board of State canvassers, and holding certificates of the secretary of state, were entitled by law or usage to be placed upon the roll. (Cushing, secs. 229 and 240.)

Second. That the organization of the house must be effected by those persons only whose election had thus been declared by the board of State canvassers and certified by the secretary of state in accordance with the law of the State.

Third. That all other persons claiming to be entitled to seats in the house as representatives must submit their claims to the house (after its organization by the members whose seats were undisputed. (Cushing, secs. 229 and 240.)

In these just and reasonable demands the democratic members elect of the house of representatives refused to acquiesce, although in the organization of the senate the course which the republicans had laid down was not only followed but acquiesced in by all the democratic senators without protest or debate; and even to this date no person has been admitted to a seat in the senate from either Edgefield or Laurens County.

V.—LEGISLATIVE QUORUM.

Having ascertained and determined the proper course to be pursued in organizing the house, and having discussed the authority of the clerk to exclude all but legally-elected members having the proper certificates of elections, the only legal question now remaining to be considered is, what number of the duly-elected members were sufficient to constitute a quorum for the purpose of organizing the house of representatives and discharging the functions of a legislative body?

By the action of the board of State canvassers, in regard to the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, but one hundred and sixteen persons were returned as duly elected members of the house of representatives, and the question now arises, what number of these one hundred and sixteen members were necessary to form a quorum for the purpose of perfecting a valid organization?

By section 4, article II, of the constitution of this State, it is provided that "the house of representatives shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members, to be apportioned among the several counties according to the number of inhabitants contained in each;" and by section 14 of the same article it is further provided that "a majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business."

The language of the Constitution of the United States upon the subject of a legislative quorum is identical with the language used in the constitution of our State—"A majority of each (house) shall constitute a quorum to do business."—(Const. U. S., sec. 5, art. 1.) And while it is true that the number of members of which the two houses of Congress may consist is not as precisely fixed as in this State, yet the possible number of which each house may be composed at any given time is absolutely as certain as though it was an unalterable number, the possible membership at any given time being always an absolutely fixed number.

This similarity in the constitutional provisions in regard to the legislature of South Carolina and the Congress of the United States is important in determining what constitutes a quorum of the house of representatives of this State, since, in the absence of all precedents in our own legislative annals, your committee are compelled to refer to the decisions of Congress upon this question.

Fortunately, this matter has been decided by both houses of Congress, and is no longer a disputed question. During the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, in the House of Representatives, the Speaker (Hon. G. A. Grow, of Pennsylvania) decided that a quorum of the House consisted of a majority of the members chosen, and in this decision of the Chair the House acquiesced, (Journal H. R., 1st sess. 37th Congress, p. 117.) This decision was not rendered, as has been erroneously stated on several recent occasions, for the purpose of enabling the House to organize because several of the States failed to choose Representatives, but it was made fifteen days after the organization, upon a question which in no wise affected the validity of the organization.

The question as to whether a quorum consisted of a majority of the entire number of members provided for by the Constitution, or a majority of the members actually chosen, was first raised in the Senate of the United States on the 11th April, 1862, and after a discussion, which was prolonged for several sessions, it was finally decided on May 4, 1864, by a vote of 26 yeas to 11 nays, that "a quorum of the Senate consists of a majority of the Senators duly chosen." Among those voting for this decision we find the names of eminent men of both political parties, such as Reverdy Johnson, Lyman Trumbull, Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson, W. P. Fessenden, Benj. Wade, and others.

Precedents to the contrary may be found in the earlier decisions in Congress and among the earlier writers, but they have been overruled by these later decisions, in which all recent writers concur. For instance, Professor Farrar, in his Manual of the Constitution of the United States, page 166, says in relation to the constitutional provision in regard to a quorum, that "this has been held to be a majority of the members actually sworn in and entitled to seats at the time, and not a majority of a full delegation from all the States."

This question of a constitutional quorum has also been decided by the legislature of Indiana. Certain members of the legislature resigned, in order to leave the legislature without a quorum; the constitution of Indiana providing that two-thirds of the members shall constitute a quorum. The legislature, in consequence of the withdrawal of these members, adjourned without passing the regular appropriation bills, and the governor ordered new elections to fill the vacancies, and again convened the legislature. The appropriation bills were passed, when certain members, in order to defeat a vote upon the ratification of the fifteenth amendment, withdrew again, as on the former occasion. The legislature thereupon decided that two-thirds of the actual membership constituted a quorum, and proceeded to ratify the amendment. This action was certified in forwarding the vote of the legislature on the ratification of the amendment. No question was raised in regard to it by Congress, and the vote of Indiana as thus cast was passed upon and counted.

From this examination of the provisions of our constitution, relating to a legislative quorum, and from the precedents in the Congress of the United States which have been cited, as well as the Indiana case, your committee feel fully warranted in concluding that the true definition of a legislative quorum, under our constitution, is a majority of the members cho- sen, and the organization of the house of representatives upon this basis would be constitutional and valid.

It is objected to the view which your committee has presented of a legislative quorum under our constitution, that if less than a majority of the possible number of members was elected, it would then place it within the power of but a very few members to organize the house. This your committee admit, for unless we act upon this view of the constitution, in certain contingencies it would become impossible to organize a house of representatives in this State. Without such an organization no speaker could be elected, and consequently no writs of election could be issued to fill vacancies, if by any possibility the people failed at the general election to elect a majority of the one hundred and twenty-four members provided for by the constitution. The government, therefore, would, in such an emergency, be brought to a permanent standstill until the next general election. Such a result cannot be reasonably supposed to be within the scope or intent of the constitution.

VI. STATEMENT OF FACTS RESPECTING ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Having concluded their examination of all the legal questions involved in the organization of the present house of representatives, your committee now proceed to state the facts connected therewith.

The clerk of the last house of representatives, Mr. A. O. Jones, was, as your committee have already explained, charged with the duty of organizing the new house by preparing the official roll of members elect, and by calling the house to order and presiding during the election of a speaker. Mr. Jones placed upon the roll of the house the names only of the one hundred and sixteen persons bearing the certificates of the secretary of state, based upon the decision of the board of State canvassers, the election in Edgefield and Laurens Counties being declared by the canvassers to be void by reason of fraud and violence.

At 12 o'clock m. of Tuesday, the 27th November, 1876, the day fixed by the constitution for the assembling of the legislature, Mr. Jones proceeded with the organization of the house, having previously given orders to the sergeant-at-arms to admit no person to the floor of the house as members except those holding the certificates of the secretary of state. It may be mentioned here that in enforcing this latter order of the clerk, the sergeant-at-arms found himself confronted at the door of the house by the entire body of democratic members, headed by the persons claiming to be elected from Edgefield and Laurens Counties. Having no force at hand sufficient to guard against the entrance of these persons from Edgefield and Laurens, the sergeant-at-arms called upon the United States Army officer on duty in the building to aid him against being overpowered while executing the order of the clerk. The officer complied with the call, and assisted the sergeant-at-arms in maintaining his position. It is not true, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding, that any officer or soldier passed upon or undertook to pass upon the certificates of members of the house. The United States forces acted at this point simply as a support to the sergeant-at-arms, who was engaged in executing a lawful order of the clerk.

Upon the refusal of the sergeant-at-arms to admit the persons claiming to be elected from Edgefield and Laurens, the entire body of democratic members retired from the State-house, notwithstanding all who held certificates of the secretary of state were freely permitted, and even invited and urged, to enter the hall of the house.

At 12 m. the clerk proceeded to call the roll of the house, whereupon fifty-nine answered to their names. The clerk then immediately announced that an election for speaker was in order, and immediately called the roll upon this question, whereupon fifty-nine members voted, one democrat, Mr. W. H. Wallace, of Union, who had entered the hall subsequently to the first call of the roll, being present, but not voting. The result of the vote was declared by the clerk to be that E. W. M. Mackey received fifty-five votes, and was therefore duly elected. Mr. Mackey immediately appeared, took the oath of office, and assumed the duties of speaker. After the election of clerk, a message was sent to the senate informing that body of the organization of the house, and immediately thereafter received a similar message from the senate announcing the organization of that body. A joint committee of the two houses were thereupon appointed and waited upon the governor and informed him that the two houses were duly organized and were ready to receive any communications which he might be pleased to make. After transacting other business, the house and senate adjourned until twelve o'clock the next day. During the second day's session the committee on privileges and elections reported upon the contest for seats from Barnwell County, and their report, seating the republican contestants, was adopted, and four of the persons declared elected were sworn in and took their seats; the other member from Barnwell subsequently appeared and qualified. The house again adjourned until 12 m. of Thursday, the 30th November, the senate adjourning until 12 m. of Friday, the 1st December.

Your committee would here state the action of the democratic members after their refusal to enter the house on Tuesday, the 27th ultimo. They then immediately proceeded to the hall of the Highland Rifle Club, where they elected General W. H. Wallace, before named in this narrative, as speaker, the parties from Edgefield and Laurens taking part in all the proceedings. The whole number of persons present at this time was 65, of whom only 67 held the certificates of the secretary of state. This body continued its sessions from time to time until the morning of Thursday, the 30th ultimo. At about 11.30 a. m. of the 30th the entire body which had been sitting in the hall of the Richland Rifle Club appeared in a body at the door of the hall of the house of representatives in the State-house, and demanded admission of the officers of the house then on duty at the door. While these officers were endeavoring to enforce the rules of the house, excluding from the floor of the house all parties excepting members and officers of the house and certain privileged persons, the democratic members overpowered the door-keepers and forced their way, together with the claimants from Edgefield and Laurens, into the hall of this house. Mr. Wallace immediately seized and occupied the speaker's chair, and Mr. Sloan took possession of the clerk's desk.

At 12 m. of the same day the speaker and clerk of this house appeared and demanded possession of their respective positions. This demand was refused. This situation was continued until Monday, December 4, 1876, when the house adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina did assemble in the hall of the house of representatives on Tuesday, the 28th day of November, 1876, a constitutional quorum of all the members duly elected as members thereof being present and answering to their names, and did organize by the election of Hon. E. W. M. Muckey as speaker, and A. O. Jones, esq., as clerk, and did, in all respects, proceed to perfect its organization in conformity with the constitution and laws of South Carolina, and has continued in session from day to day until the present time; and

'Whereas on Thursday, the 30th November, 1876, a body of men, comprising many persons having no legal claim or credentials, did enter the hall of the house of representatives by force and arms, and did proceed to usurp the speaker's chair and clerk's desk, and did refuse, upon the demand and order of the speaker of the house of representatives, to yield the same; and

"Whereas said body of men have been, since the said 30th day of November, 1876, engaged in interrupting the proceedings and defying the authority of the house of representatives, and are now preventing the house of representatives from proceeding with business; and

"Whereas the senate and house of representatives, by concurrent resolution, have appointed this, the 4th day of December, at 2 o'clock p. m., in the hall of the house of representatives, as the time and place for opening, counting, and publishing the returns of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor; and

"Whereas the house of representatives is unable to enforce its authority against said body of men, who have unlawfully intruded themselves into the house of representatives; and

"Whereas said intruders have openly proclaimed that they will not obey the orders of the house of representatives or retire from the hall thereof, but will resist by force of arms any attempt on the part of the officers of the said house to enforce its orders and authority: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the governor of the State be, and he is hereby, requested to take such measures as will protect the house of representatives against the unlawful intrusion, interruption, and violence caused and done by the said body of men who have unlawfully intruded themselves into the hall of the house of representatives, as hereinbefore set forth, and who are now engaged in unlawfully interrupting the proceedings thereof, and who are also, by their unlawful conduct and presence in the house of representatives, preventing the assembling of the general assembly in joint convention, as is provided by the constitution of the State of South Carolina."

Upon the adoption of the foregoing preamble and resolutions, and upon a notification from the speaker of this house that the governor was prepared to immediately respond to the request contained in the resolution, Mr. Wallace, after a few remarks addressed to the body cooperating with him, withdrew with them.

Previous to the withdrawal of Mr. Wallace and his companions, the committee on privileges and elections made a report, which was adopted by the house, confirming the action of the board of State canvassers in regard to the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and declaring that no valid election was held in either of those two counties on the 7th November, 1876.

On the same day (2d December, 1876) the committee on privileges and elections also reported upon the contest for seats from Abbeville County, and their report, seating the republican contestants, was adopted, four of whom immediately qualified and took their seats, the other member subsequently appearing and qualifying.

On the 5th December, 1876, the same committee reported upon the contest for seats from Aiken County, and their report seating the four republican contestants was adopted, all of whom being in attendance, were duly sworn in and took their seats.

At one o'clock of the same day, pursuant to a joint resolution previously adopted, the senate and house of representatives met in joint convention in the hall of the house of representatives for the purpose of canvassing the returns of the late election for governor and lieutenant-governor, in accordance with section 4, Article III, of the constitution of this State. The returns were opened and read by the speaker of the house, and when the counties of Edgefield and Laurens were reached, objections being made to the returns from those counties, in accordance with the rules previously adopted the senate withdrew, and the two houses, acting separately, decided not to count the votes alleged to have been cast in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens. The canvass of the returns was then completed and the following result was announced:

For governor.

D. H. Chamberlain received.....	86,216
Wade Hampton received.....	83,071

R. H. Gleaves received.....	86,620
W. D. Simpson received.....	82,521

The speaker then declared that Hon. Daniel H. Chamberlain and Hon. Richard H. Gleaves were duly elected, respectively, governor and lieutenant-governor of the State of South Carolina for the ensuing two years. The joint convention was then dissolved and the senate retired.

On the 7th December, 1876, at one o'clock p. m., the senate and house of representatives met in joint assembly, pursuant to resolution adopted by both houses, for the inauguration of the governor elect. The constitutional oath of office was then administered to Hon. D. H. Chamberlain, governor elect, who thereupon delivered his inaugural address, after which the joint assembly was dissolved and the senate returned to its chamber, where the oath of office was administered to Hon. R. H. Gleaves, the lieutenant-governor elect, thereby perfecting the organization of the government of the State in accordance with the will of the people, as expressed by their legal votes at the general election on the 7th November, 1876.

Your committee have now presented, as they trust, with sufficient clearness and detail, the facts which have attended the history of this house since the declaration of the late election by the board of State canvassors. They have also presented the law which, as it has seemed to them, was applicable to the decision of the legal and parliamentary questions which have arisen and were involved in the facts.

In conclusion, it only remains for your committee to express their unhesitating opinion that the foregoing report establishes in all respects the legal and constitutional validity of this house, and, by consequence, the validity of all its acts since its organization on the 23th day of November, 1876.

  H. E. HAYNE ET AL. }

In re the State officers.

And the relators aforesaid reply to the return of the said respondents, and say:

As to first allegation of said return, that this court has jurisdiction.

And to second allegation, relators say that the said board of State canvassors has not performed its duty as required by law; and that the time for the performance of its duties has not expired, and that it can be re-assembled by this court and required to perform its duties according to law.

As to third allegation, relators say that the said board did prepare a certificate, as alleged on said return, but that the same was not prepared as required by law.

And to fourth allegation, relators say that the said board can convene and can revoke, under the mandate of this court, their illegal action and determination, and declare the true result of said election.

And to fifth allegation, relators say that there is no other legal remedy to ascertain the true results of said election, and to obtain a proper and legal declaration and determination thereof.

And to sixth allegation, relators say that this cause has not been decided and determined by this court as alleged, as will appear by the records of this court.

And to seventh allegation, relators say that there are errors, irregularities, and discrepancies between the returns of the managers and the statements of the county canvassors, sufficient, as these relators are advised and believe, to affect the result of the election declared by the said board of State canvassors, and to give to these relators the greatest number of votes cast at said election, for said offices respectively, as will appear by said returns and statements when produced in court, as required by the suggestion of these relators.

And to eighth allegation, relators say that the said board did receive returns from precincts not established by law, and did include in their count returns not legally authenticated and forwarded to them, as will appear by said returns and statements, when produced in court, as required by the suggestion of these relators; and that the said board did not make up their count in the manner required by law.

And to ninth allegation, relators say that the resignation by the said H. W. Purvis of the office of adjutant and inspector-general, and by the said Wm. Stone of the office of attorney-general, cannot affect or limit the action of this court, or exempt the said H. W. Purvis and Wm. Stone, as members of said board of State canvassers, from the performance of duties imposed upon them by law, and which they have not performed.

OPINION.

Willard, A. J. This is an action in the nature of quo warranto, brought by the plaintiffs, claiming to have been elected to perform the functions of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of South Carolina at a general election held in and for this State on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876; and complaining that the defendants claiming to have been elected at such general election electors of President and Vice-President have procured certificates of such election to be issued to them by the secretary of state of this State, and claim to exercise the offices of such electors; whereas, as they allege, said defendants were not so elected. The prayer of the complaint is, that the defendant may make answer to the State and show what warrant or authority they have to use and enjoy the offices, liberties, privileges, and functions aforesaid. The defendants have answered, pleading to the jurisdiction of this court, without setting up any other defense. If, then, this court should conclude that it possessed full jurisdiction in the premises, judgment final in behalf of the plaintiffs would necessarily follow from the date of the pleadings. This court possesses, under section 4, article 4, of the constitution of this State original jurisdiction in cases of quo warranto, and since the adoption of the code of procedure (sec. 443) that jurisdiction has been exercised in the form of an action in the nature of quo war- ranto, (Alexander vs. McKenzie, 2 S. C., 81; State ex rel. Barker vs. Bowen, S. C.) If any want of jurisdiction exists, it must arise either from the nature of the rights alleged to be wrongfully exercised by the defendants in form, the character of the parties that stand before us as plaintiffs. The question before us was discussed by the counsel for the defendants chiefly from the general proposition, that national questions belong to the national courts, and State questions to the State courts. On this general theory it was urged that as the controversy relative to the title of the respective parties to an office created under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the case was one necessarily of cognizance in the United States court and improper for the consideration of a State tribunal. I know of no such test, as to the relative jurisdictions of the courts of the United States and of the States, as that contended for. As a general rule the State courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the United States court of questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. This concurrent jurisdiction is the basis of transfer in certain specified cases, from the courts of the State to those of the United States, (act of Congress March 3, 1874 and '75, p. 472.) Certain cases of this general class, among which the most characteristic are those affecting international commerce and diplomatic intercourse, in a particular way, and certain cases immediately affecting the national revenues and administration, are exclusively conferred upon the courts of the United States, but these must be regarded as exceptions to the more general rule of concurrent jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the United States court arising from the character of the parties, rests on special grounds not affecting the general proposition. Such a scheme of divided jurisdiction resting upon dual courts, as would result from the application of the rule contended for, would have deprived the judicial system of the country of organized stability, and committed it to the consequences flowing from the attrition between inharmonious parts. As long as we have judicial unity no serious inconvenience is likely to arise from the fact that our laws spring from two distinct sources, the one supreme as to certain subjects, and the other final as to all other subjects not prohibited to it. Both legislative jurisdictions blend in giving shape to the rights of citizens. These rights, from their nature, must be cognizable as to their entirety by a judicial body. Two judicial administrations acting independently upon the same rights or subject-matter, each limited to training the operation of laws derived from a particular source upon such right or matter in controversy, would present an anomaly consistent with neither sound theory.

The Constitution and legislation of the United States has, on the whole, embodied the brightest practical wisdom in solidifying the national and State judicial systems, by making every court in the land subject to all consequences flowing from a dual legislative system. Congress has effectuated this purpose by drawing the line that divides their jurisdictions, when not influenced by the character of the parties, upon the return of this right, capable of being brought into controversy, and not upon anything of committing the interpretations of the National Constitution and laws to one body, and that of State constitution and laws to another. It follows that should it appear that both the rights in controversy and those to which the controversy relates, arose or derived their essential features from the Constitution and laws of the United States, that fact would not of itself defeat the jurisdiction of this court, otherwise than by means of transfer to the concurrent authority of the United States circuit court, where the questions to be considered arose under the Constitution and laws of the United States; but it would be necessary, in order to attain that end, to show that the case belongs to a category which, conferred exclusively in the United States courts, is prohibited to the State courts. The real point of difficulty in the present case was not noticed by the counsel for the defendants. It arises out of the general rules governing the writ of quo warranto and therefore applicable to formal proceedings serving as a substitute for that remedy. The present action is brought in the name of the State of South Carolina. Can it be maintained in the name of the State, and if not, does not that circumstance prevent judgment? If so a further question will arise, whether that defect can be ever available to the defendants under their present plea to the jurisdiction, notwithstanding that the objection was not taken by them in form. The familiar rule governing proceedings by quo warranto is, that only the sovereign from whom the officer franchise is liberty that is the subject of controversy originated, and with whose hands the same, if forfeited, would return, can maintain the remedy or authorize it, by the allowance of his name as a means of asserting the title a right of a citizen to the same. It is necessary then to inquire whether the United States or the State stand in the relation just expressed to the rights in controversy in the present case. The question arises then, did the authority claimed to be exercised by the defendants as electors of President and Vice-President originate in the Constitution and laws of the United States or in those of the State? Whatever difficulty this question presents arises from the fact that while the functions exercised by the electors of President and Vice-President were created and governed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, the right of the respective parties to possess and exercise those functions depends wholly on the effect to be given to the action of State officers acting under the Constitution and laws of the State. The nature of the function of electors of President and Vice-President must then be examined in order to discover the relationship of those functions to the national and State authorities. The electoral function certainly involves a franchise or privilege, for the electors are permitted to exercise choice, as it regards the selection of a President and Vice-President, that is not enjoyed in common with other citizens and does not arise out of common right. It is conferred by the sovereign authority and exclusively enjoyed by those upon whom it is so conferred. This franchise a privilege is one of a public nature as immediately concerning the public. It will not be necessary to inquire whether each elector is to be regarded as holding an office under the United States, for it is enough for the purpose of the present question to know that the functions of the electors involve the characteristics just stated.

The Constitution and laws of the United States look rather to the body of electors within each State as the subject of legal control and the sources of legal authority, than to the rights and duties of the individual electors. The Constitution (art. 2, sec. 2) declares that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof shall direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled to in Congress." The twelfth amendment provides that "the electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President and Vice-President and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit to the seat of Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate."

The action of the electors contemplated in these provisions is such as is proper to an aggregate body of a particular constitution, and not to individuals exercising separate and independent directions. Following this idea, Congress has described the body as a "College of Electors," (Rev. Stats., p. 21, sec. 133,) and as such has regulated the action of such body in many particulars. It is true that each elector, acting with the body in conformity to law, influences separately the general count at the seat of Government, independently of whether the majority of votes cast by the body with which he is immediately connected are in accordance with his individual vote; still his right to vote depends upon his acting with and as part of the electoral college, for if he neglects so to do a vacancy occurs, capable of being filled under the authority of the legislature of the State. (Rev. Stat. U. S., p. 21, sec. 133.)

That this was the idea that Congress entertained of the electoral function is very clearly implied in the case of an election classed with that of a Representative to Congress and member of a State legislature under the provisions of section 2110 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, where a right of action is conferred upon all persons who have been deprived of any office other than these above named, by reason of a denial of the civil rights of any citizen.

The only explanation of this classification that appears is that all the persons excepted stand in the relation of members of a body recognized by law, and through which alone their functions are capable of being exercised.

It may therefore be affirmed that the right in controversy is accurately stated, one to participate in the action of a public body clothed as such, with a certain franchise or privilege of a public nature, to wit, of exercising choice in the selection of a President and Vice-President of the United States. It is indisputable that the right, so claimed to be exercised by participating in this action of the electoral college, has its origin and sanction in the Constitution and laws of the United States. The view just presented assumes that the collective body of electors called the college of electors is, as distinguished from the individual electors, clothed with the elective franchise conferred by the Constitution and laws of the United States in relation to the choice of a President and Vice-President. This view would exclude the idea that the true effect of the Constitution of the United States was to confer that franchise in the States as such to be exercised according to their discretion. The difference between the two theories of the deposition of the electors' franchise, just noticed, would lead to opposite conclusions bearing directly on this case. If the Constitution of the United States vests the franchise wholly in the State, so that the discretion involved in the selection of persons to fill the offices of President and Vice-President might be exercised by the State acting through her ordinary political agencies, then the State would have to be regarded as the true elector, having as many votes as the number of electors she is entitled to appoint, and it would be competent for her to appoint electors whose only legal duty would be to express in form the choice already fully determined by the authority of the State. In this case the electors of President and Vice-President would fall into the condition of mere agents of the State to carry out matters resting wholly in its discretion. In this case, no reason appears why such agent might not be displaced at will by the State, either through political or judicial agencies.

If, on the other hand, the electoral college is the true depository of the elective franchise, then the discretion to be used in the selection of persons to fill the offices of President and Vice-President rests with persons composing legally such electoral college. In this case the State has mere authority to appoint, and, at most, may confer the title to hold the franchise, but not control its exercise.

I regard the latter view as the one entitled to be received. The idea that is embodied throughout the legislation by Congress is consistent with itself from the earliest to the latest acts, and is entitled to the authority of a contemporaneous exposition of the Constitution in its original provisions in article 2. This idea is fairly embodied in the twelfth amendment and must prevail. According to this idea the college of electors is the proper depository of the electoral function. Only those who participate in its action are entitled to a voice in the election of President and Vice-President. The rule of its procedure is placed beyond the control of the State, and emanates from the Constitution and Congress of the United States. The right of each elector assembled to exercise his individual choice is clearly indicated by the words "vote by ballot." Such is the ordinary sense of these terms when applied to the more numerous class of electors who participate in the general elections, and no reason appears for giving them any other interpretation in the present connection. These reasons appear to be sufficient to support the conclusions above stated, while that conclusion is consistent with the actual practice since the Constitution went into operation. Does the fact that the title of the individual electors to claim this right is matured under the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State alone, through the acts of public authority performed by State officers and agencies, tend to place the State in such a relation to the functions performed that the State may exercise the rights proper to the sovereign who created such functions? Clearly it does not. The sovereign who creates an office or franchise often places in the hands of a subject the right to fill such office or confer such franchise by election or appointment, yet that fact has never abolished the necessity of proceeding in the name of the sovereign who created and may resume such office or franchise where the title of a subject to it was to be asserted.

When the question arises between the supreme sovereignty and a subordinate sovereign it should receive the same solution.

In the present case the United States have created the function but authorized the State to exercise power of appointment to fill it.

The case of a municipal corporation created by the sovereign who has conferred upon the corporators the power of choosing municipal officers involves the same general relationship. In the latter case the ouster must take place in the name of the sovereign. The act of appointment is one that can be exercised in the hands of a subject, while the act of ouster through the courts of law can only be claimed of common right through the sovereign. The existence, therefore, of the former right cannot imply the existence of the latter, for its nature and quality are different.

In Wallace vs. Anderson, (1 Wheat., 291,) it was held that a writ of quo warranto could not be maintained against an officer of the United States, except in the manner of the Government of the United States. The same was held in Territory vs. Lockwood, (5 Wall., 236.)

It is very clear that if the action in the nature of quo warranto is an appropriate remedy under the claims made in behalf of the individuals who unite with the State as plaintiffs, that such proceeding should be prosecuted in the name of the United States.

It will not be necessary to determine whether an action in the nature of quo warranto can be maintained in the State courts in the name of the United States; although no good reason has yet appeared why if the United States choose to employ the courts of the State for such a purpose, they might not do so. It will be the proper time to discuss and settle that question when an attempt is made to exercise it. The State cannot properly raise it, nor can private relators raise it, in the name of the State. The objection raised by the defendants to the jurisdiction by this court involves the question just stated. To meet this objection directly, it would be necessary to decide that which, in my view, cannot be properly decided until the proper parties are before the court. As, however, the court is enabled to procure a real objection to its proceeding with the case arising from the want of proper parties, it is not restricted to the grounds of want of jurisdiction urged by the defendants, and may give weight to the considerations that present an insupportable objection to our exercising such jurisdiction in the present case, should we conclude that we possess it, in a general proposition. (McClung vs. Silliman, 6 Wheat., 598.)

The complaint should be dismissed.

State of South Carolina. Supreme court.

I certify that the foregoing nineteen pages contain a true and correct copy of the judgment and opinion of the supreme court aforesaid in the case of The State ex rel. T. G. Barker et al. vs. C. C. Bowen et al.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said court, at Columbia, this 31st day of January, 1877.

ALLEN M. BOOZEE,
Clerk of Supreme Court of South Carolina.

(Indorsed :) Supreme court. November term, 1876. The State ex rel. T. G. Barker et al. vs. C. C. Bowen et al. Opinion. A. J. Willard, A. J. S. C. I concur in the result: F. J. Moses, C. J., J. J. Wright, A. J. S. C. Filed January 26, 1877. Attest, Allen M. Boozee, clerk of supreme court of South Carolina.

The State of South Carolina county of Chester, sixth circuit.—Ex parte Amzi Rosborough.—Habeas corpus.

OPINION OF JUDGE T. J. MACKEY.

The issues involved in this case arise upon the petition of Amzi Rosborough, a prisoner confined in the common jail of Chester County, under sentence of assault and battery, and the return of the sheriff to the writ of habeas corpus issued by the judge of the sixth judicial circuit in accordance with the prayer of the said petitioner and pursuant to law. The petition alleges the conviction of the prisoner on the charge of assault and battery, in the court of general sessions of the county of Chester, at the September term, 1876, and his sentence by the presiding judge thereof, on the 22d day of the said month, to a term of six months' imprisonment in the county jail. It further alleges that a free and unconditional pardon, under the seal of the State, has been granted to the petitioner, and has been delivered to and accepted by him, the said Amzi Rosborough, the said warrant of pardon having been issued and signed by Wade Hampton as the governor of South Carolina, and that the sheriff of Chester County has refused and doth refuse to release the petitioner from custody in accordance with the mandate of the said warrant of pardon.

The petition is dated January 30, 1877, and the writ of habeas corpus, for which it prays, was issued on the same day, and made returnable at 10 o'clock a. m., January 31, 1877.

The sheriff by his return denies that Wade Hampton is governor of the State of South Carolina at the date of the alleged warrant of pardon, January 29, 1877, and denies, therefore, that it is a valid pardon of the prisoner, Amzi Rosborough, whose body is produced in court pursuant to the mandate of the writ.

The argument of the learned counsel for the prisoner (T. W. A. Walker, esq.) and of the learned solicitor of the circuit (T. C. Gaston, esq.) in support of the sheriff's return was not unworthy of the magnitude of the cause, and have been duly considered by the court.

The question here presented for judicial determination is of the highest gravity. It involves the threefold issue as to the right of the people to have their will expressed at the ballot-box in the choice of a chief magistrate to rule over them duly enforced; the personal liberty of the prisoner who invokes the interposition of this court to release him from alleged illegal custody, and the right of a citizen to hold and exercise the powers of the highest office in the State, to which it is claimed he has been elected, and has been duly installed therein, pursuant to the constitution and laws.

The court will proceed to its determination with due regard to the public interests and the no less vital considerations affecting private rights.

I find as to matters of fact deduced from the evidence herein:

1. That on the 19th day of October, 1874, D. H. Chamberlain, esq., was elected "the governor of the State of South Carolina" for two years, and until his successor shall be chosen and qualified, and was installed into said office on the 3d day of December of the same year, and has continuously exercised the functions of governor from the date of the said installation to the present date, and still claims to be "the governor of the State of South Carolina."

2. That a general election was held in the State on the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November, 1876, at which general election it was required by the constitution that a governor should be elected by the electors duly qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives.

3. That at the said general election the only candidates for the office of governor were Wade Hampton, esq., and D. H. Chamberlain, esq., and according to the returns thereof made by the commissioners of election to the secretary of state, embracing the vote cast for the said two candidates for the office of governor in each and every county of the State, and according to the duplicates of said returns filed with the clerks of the courts of said counties, as required by the constitution, (section 4, article 3,) the whole number of votes cast for the candidates for the office of governor was 133,388; of which Wade Hampton, esq., received 92,261, and D. H. Chamberlain, esq., received 91,127; showing a majority for Wade Hampton, esq., of one thousand one hundred and thirty-four (1,134) votes.

4. That the whole number of persons elected to the house of representatives at the said general election was one hundred and twenty-four, (124.)

5. That on the 28th day of November, 1876, the same being the day fixed by the constitution as that on which the general assembly shall convene, fifty-nine persons claiming to have been duly elected members of the house of representatives, and holding certificates of such election from the secretary of state, met at the usual place of meeting in the State-house, at Columbia, and at the usual time therefor, and claiming to be the house of representatives, elected E. W. M. Mackey, esq., presiding officer of their body, whom they entitled the speaker of the house of representatives.

6. That on the same day fifty-seven persons claiming to have been duly elected members of the house of representatives, and holding certificates of such election from the secretary of state, and eight persons claiming to have been duly elected members of the house of representatives, and holding certificates of such election issued by the clerk of the supreme court, pursuant to the returns of said general election made by the board of State canvassors to the said court, proceeded to the door of the hall of the house of representatives at the usual time for the assembling of that body on the morning of the said day, and were halted at the said door by an armed sentinel of the United States Army, who refused to admit into the said hall the persons who held certificates of election from the clerk of the supreme court as above stated, such armed sentinel being one of a number of United States soldiers then occupying the body of the State-house, having been stationed therein the night before at the instance and by the request of D. H. Chamberlain, esq., as governor of the State of South Carolina.

7. That thereupon the sixty-five persons above referred to, all of whom had been returned by the commissioners of election as having been duly elected members of the house of representatives at the said general election, retired from the State-house and assembled on the same day in a building in the city of Columbia known as "Carolina Hall," and did there proceed to organize themselves into a body which they entitled the house of representatives, and did elect W. H. Wallace, esq., as presiding officer of their body, whom they entitled the speaker of the house of representatives, together with the other officers thereof.

8. That on the same day the senate was duly organized.

9. That on the 29th day of November, 1876, the body presided over by W. H. Wallace, esq., and claiming to be the house of representatives, notified the senate that it had assembled in Carolina Hall, in the city of Columbia, and was duly organized for business; but that the senate failed and refused to recognize or act with the said body, but recognized and acted with the body assembled in the State-house, and passed bills and transmitted them to the body presided over by E. W. M. Mackey, esq., as the house of representatives.

10. That on the — day of December, 1876, W. H. Wallace, esq., claiming to be the speaker of the house of representatives, instituted proceedings in the supreme court of the State against E. W. M. Mackey, esq., claiming likewise to be the speaker of the house of representatives, and H. E. Hayne, esq., secretary of state, to compel the said respondents to deliver to him, the relator, W. H. Wallace, as speaker of the house of representatives, the returns of the vote for governor, to the end that he might make due publication of the same pursuant to the constitution.

12. That on the 6th day of December, 1876, the supreme court of the State rendered its decision in the case above referred to, entitled ex rel. W. H. Wallace vs. Henry E. Hayne, secretary of state, and E. W. M. Mackey, and did decide therein that the body presided over by W. H. Wallace, esq., was the house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, organized pursuant to the constitution, and that the said W. H. Wallace, esq., was the duly-elected speaker thereof.

13. That on the 7th day of December, 1876, D. H. Chamberlain, esq., appeared in the hall usually occupied by the house of representatives in the State-house, and in the presence of the body presided over by E. W. M. Mackey, esq., and of the senate, did take the oath of office as governor in pursuance of the alleged publication of the returns of the election of governor made by the said E. W. M. Mackey, esq., as hereinbefore stated, and the said D. H. Chamberlain, esq., has since such alleged installation claimed to exercise the powers and functions of the office of governor, and does still continue to assert such claim.

14. That on the 13th day of December, 1876, the house of representatives notified the senate, in due form, that on the next day, at the hour of 12 meridian, the speaker, W. H. Wallace, esq., would proceed to open and publish the returns of the election of governor, as required by the constitution, and the senate took no action whatsoever in regard to said notification.

15. That on the 14th day of December, 1876, W. H. Wallace, esq., speaker of the house of representatives, did, in the presence of the said house, then consisting of seventy-one (71) members, sixty-three of whom held certificates of election from the secretary of state and eight from the clerk of the supreme court, the senate failing and refusing to attend thereat, open and publish a sworn transcript of the returns of the election of governor, exhibiting the votes cast for the respective candidates for the said office, as set forth in the duplicates of said returns filed with the clerks of the courts of the several counties, as required by the constitution, (section 4, article 3;) and did further open and publish a certificate from the secretary of state, under the seal of the State, setting forth the total vote cast for each candidate for the office of governor at the general elections of 1874 and 1876, respectively of which certificate the following is a true copy:

VOTE FOR GOVERNOR, ELECTION OF 1874.

John T. Green.....	68,818

VOTE FOR GOVERNOR, ELECTION OF 1876.

Wade Hampton.....	92,261

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct statement of the vote for governor at the general elections of 1874 and 1876, as appears by the commissioners' returns now on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, at Columbia, this 9th day of December, 1876, and in the 101st year of American Independence.

[SEAL.]

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

This statement includes the vote in Edgefield and Laurens Counties.

And the said speaker did then and there declare that Wade Hampton, having received the highest number of votes for the office of governor, is elected "the governor of the State of South Carolina" for two years from the 7th day of November, 1876, and until his successor shall be chosen and qualified.

16. That on the same day, the 14th of December, 1876, Wade Hampton, esq., did, in the presence of the house of representatives, publicly and in the customary form, take and subscribe the oath of office as the governor of the State of South Carolina, as prescribed in section 30, article 2, of the constitution of the State, and has continuously since said day and up to the present date claimed to be the governor of the State of South Carolina, and has exercised the powers and functions of the said office.

17. That there has been no contest or notice of contest of the election of Wade Hampton, esq., to the office of governor, and that said election has not been contested before the senate and house of representatives, as required by the constitution and laws in case of a contest of the election of governor, (general statutes, section 28, chapter 8,) and that the general assembly adjourned sine die on the 22d day of December, 1876.

I find as matters of law that Wade Hampton, esq., having received the highest number of votes at the election of governor, held on the 7th day of November, according to the returns thereof, duly made by the commissioners of election, and his election thereto not being contested as required by the constitution and laws, (constitution, section 4, article 3; general statutes, section 28, chapter 8,) in case of a contest of the election of governor was entitled to be declared by the speaker of the house of representatives elected thereto, and on his taking and subscribing the oath of office prescribed by the constitution, was entitled to be duly installed as the governor of the State of South Carolina.

In coming to this conclusion, I have duly weighed the argument presented by the learned counsel in support of the sheriff's return as to the publication of the vote by the speaker not having been made from the original returns but from attested copies or transcripts thereof.

The sworn transcripts or copies of the returns, together with the certificate of the secretary of state under the seal of the State, appear to my mind to have been the best evidence attainable in view of the facts in the premises.

The rule of law which requires that the best of evidence must always be given, excludes such evidence of facts as from the nature of the thing supposes still better evidence behind in the party's possession or power. The rule is satisfied by the production of the best attainable evidence. (Phillips on the Law of Evidence, vol. 1, p. 396; Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1, sec. 91.) The constitution itself provides that the publication by the speaker may be made on "a copy of the returns" filed in the office of the clerk of the court, in case the return from any county has not been received, and directs that in such case "a copy" shall be forwarded forthwith to the secretary of state.

The same principle applies with redoubled force where the secretary of state, in violation of his sworn duty, withholds the returns from the speaker, who is required by the constitution to "open and publish them," and delivers them to a person not authorized to receive them. Especially must it be deemed potential in a case where the person who, by his acts and attitude, questions the validity of such publication, clearly appears to have been a party, by connivance, to the unlawful withholding of the original returns, and has sought to avail himself of the illegal delivery and publication of the same in open defiance of the solemn judgment of the court of last resort of the State.

Whether the sworn transcripts and the statement certified by the secretary agreeing therewith correctly exhibit the aggregate of the votes shown by the returns, equally with all questions affecting the validity of the election and the correctness of the returns themselves, must be determined by a formal contest instituted by or on behalf of the adverse party in interest, D. H. Chamberlain, esq., before the senate and house of representatives, pub-suant to the constitution, which declares that "contested elections for governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as shall be prescribed by law." (Constitution, section 4, article 3.)

The manner of contesting the election has been prescribed by law, (general statutes, section 28, chapter 8,) and the adverse party in interest, D. H. Chamberlain, esq., having refrained from contesting the said election in the manner prescribed by law, and having failed and refused with full knowledge and ample opportunity to invoke the only tribunal empowered by the constitution to determine contested elections of governor, he and all other parties are estopped by his default from questioning in the courts the correctness of the sworn transcripts of the returns of the said election, the certified statement of the secretary of state, the validity of the election and the accuracy of the returns thereof.

It is well and forcibly observed by that eminent authority, Bigelow on Estoppel, that "where a man has been silent, when in conscience he ought to have spoken, he shall be debarred from speaking when conscience requires him to be silent." (Bigelow on Estoppel, 501; Fonblanque on Equity, 161.)

The said publication by the speaker of the house of representatives concludes all courts and parties, and even the general assembly itself, as to the election of Wade Hampton, esq., to the office of governor, except in case of a contest of the election of governor, in which "case" alone can the general assembly assert any jurisdiction in the premises.

The further question arises upon the pleadings herein, and was urged in the argument, that even granting that Wade Hampton, esq., was duly elected to the office of governor, the publication of the returns by the speaker in the presence of the house only, the senate being absent, having refused to be present thereat, is not a compliance with the requirements of the constitution, which provides that "the speaker shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses," (section 4, article 3,) and that such publication, in the absence of the senate, is not sufficient to invest Wade Hampton, esq., with the office of governor.

The principles that must govern the solution of the issue here presented have found frequent elucidation in the decisions of the highest courts of judicature, both in England and America, and have been fully expounded by all the text-writers who have treated upon the important subject of constitutional interpretation.

There is an entire harmony between the rules of interpretation of constitutions and those of statutes. (Potter's Dwaris on Statutes and Constitutions, 654.)

Mr. Justice Story says "that the first and fundamental rule in relation to the interpretation of all instruments applies to the Constitution—that is, to construe them according to the sense of the terms and the intention of the parties; the context, the subject-matter, the effects and consequences, or the reason and spirit of the law." (Story on the Constitution, section 399.)

The constitution of this State is the organic statute of an elective system, designed to perpetuate a government republican in form. The central idea of this system is the sovereignty of the people. The most direct assertion of sovereignty by the people is found in their election of their rulers. The interpretation of the constitution which tends to impair or defeat the exercise of this sovereign right or choice by the people, must be held repugnant to the elective system which the constitution was intended to perpetuate.

Where there is doubt as to the true construction of the constitution, we must recur to the system of government itself, which, as in a clear mirror, reflects the meaning and intent of those who framed its organic law. All the varied apparatus of the electoral machinery, its multiform agencies for the conduct of elections, the counting and aggregation of votes, and the transmission and declaration of returns, are designed under this system to effect the supreme object of ascertaining and giving effect to the will of the people, expressed at the ballot-box. Yet the position that the court is here called on to combat is that after the people have expressed their choice of a chief magistrate by their ballots, even though the electors should be unanimous in their choice, one branch of the legislature, and that the less popular and numerous, should have the power of annulling that choice by merely abstaining from being present at its annunciation. An interpretation of the constitution which effects a result so repugnant to a republican system of government, and which invades the sovereign right of the people to choose their rulers just where its exercise would appear to be most vital and most jealously guarded, ought not to receive judicial sanction, unless it follows inevitably from the plain words and manifest intent of the instrument.

That illustrious jurist, Chief-Justice Marshall, said, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. Fisher, (2d Cranch, 501:)

"That the consequences are to be considered in expounding laws where the intent is doubtful is a principle not to be controverted. Where rights are infringed, where fundamental principles are overthrown, where the general system of the laws is departed from, the legislative intention must be expressed with irresistible clearness to induce a court of justice to suppose a design to effect such objects."

In accordance with the canons of constitutional interpretation that have received the approving sanction of the greatest jurists, and are stamped with the authoritative judgment of the highest courts, I am constrained to hold that the clause of the constitution that says

"The speaker shall open and publish the returns in the presence of both houses" is simply directory, and the voluntary and willful absence of the senate did not invalidate such publication. Lord Mansfield's rule for determining whether a provision of a statute is to be deemed mandatory has here a striking exemplification. His lordship said in the celebrated case of Rex vs. Lookdale, (1 Burrows, K. B., 447,) "Whether the provision of the statute is to be considered mandatory or not depends upon whether that which was directed to be done was or was not of the essence of the thing required."

The court of appeals of New York announced it as a settled rule of construction, (People vs. Cook, 8 N. Y.,) that "statutes directing the mode of proceeding by public officers are directory, and are not regarded as essential to the validity of the proceedings themselves, unless it be so declared in the statute."

The provisions of a law which are merely directory are not to be construed into conditions precedent. (Whitney vs. Emmot, 1 Baldwin's United States Reports, 303.)

The provision of the city charter of New York that every person appointed to office under the city government shall take the oath of office before the mayor was held to be merely directory; if it cannot be so taken, it may be administered by some other officer. (Caniff vs. The Mayor, &c., 4 E. D. Smith, 430.)

The title to the office is derived from the election. The publication by the speaker is but the formal notice to the person elected, and to both houses and to the public of the fact of such election, in order that the person duly elected may take and subscribe the oath prescribed, and thus be qualified to enter upon the duties of the office of governor. The two houses do not act "both together" in the matter of opening and publishing the returns. The act of publication is not performed by them either "together" or separately. They cannot act at all in the premises, but are present as mere auditors. The constitution declares that the speaker shall open and publish the returns. They are delivered to him by the secretary of state, and at no time are they in the custody of either house. Upon the speaker alone is devolved the whole duty to be done in the premises. It will hardly be contended that if the senate had been actually present at the opening of the returns and had objected to their being published, that such objection should have availed to restrain the speaker from performing his constitutional duty of publishing the returns of the election of governor. The contumacious absence of the senate after due notice can only be considered in the character of a protest against such publication, yet no greater weight can be attached to it than if that body had been really present and protesting against the publication of the said returns. To hold otherwise is to contend that the senate has greater power to control the matter upon which it desires to act, when absent from the scene of action, than when present. Not one solitary line or word of the constitution can be adduced that even in the remotest degree implies that "both houses" or either of them shall perform any function in relation to the opening and publication of the returns of the election of governor. There are two contingencies, and only two, in which the general assembly can act at all in relation to the election of governor, and neither of them has occurred in the present case. Section 4 of article 8 of the constitution, which is the only section that relates to this branch of the question, provides that "the person having the highest number of votes shall be governor; but if two or more shall be equal and highest in votes, the general assembly shall, during the same session, in the house of representatives, choose one of them governor viva voce. Contested elections for governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

In this case, two or more were not "equal and highest in votes." One person only was "highest in votes," and he was declared elected by the speaker of the house of representatives, in accordance with the mandate of the constitution, which requires that "in all elections held by the people under this constitution, the person or persons who shall receive the highest number of votes shall be declared elected." (Constitution, section 10, article 8.) Nor was the election "contested." Even had this been a case of a contested election for governor, the general assembly could only have determined in the manner prescribed by law, and the manner prescribed by law is that the two houses shall first severally determine by concurrent resolution, to be voted on not by "both together," but by each in its own chamber, to entertain the contest, and should each so determine, then "the senate and house of representatives shall each separately proceed to hear and determine the facts in the case, so far as they deem necessary, and decide thereon who, according to the tenth section of article 8 of the constitution, is entitled to be declared elected. If the two branches of the general assembly come to the same decision, they shall by concurrent resolution declare who is duly elected, and entitled to enter upon and exercise the office of governor; and such person thereupon shall, upon taking the oath prescribed in the constitution, be inducted into the office. If the two branches of the general assembly do not come to the same decision, then a general election shall be called by the governor, to take place in not less than sixty nor more than ninety days. (General Statutes, section 28, chapter 8.)

jointly as the general assembly in relation to the election of governor only when two or more of the persons voted for "shall be equal and highest in votes." But no such feature was presented in this case. And even had the two persons voted for been equal and highest in votes, the general assembly are not required to act thereon when the speaker opens and publishes the returns of the election. The general assembly in such case is required to choose one of them governor "during the same session," and a choice made on the last day of the session would be a full compliance with the requirements of the constitution. There is no doubt that our State constitution of 1790—happily superseded by the present constitution, which recognizes in its full import the sovereignty of the people—was mandatory as to the presence both of the senate and house when the vote for governor was declared, for the governor under that constitution was elected by the senate and house of representatives, and not, as under ours, by the people. The senate, therefore, having no function to perform at the publication of the vote for governor, it cannot be maintained that its refusal to be present renders such publication invalid. In refusing to recognize the house of representatives, after it had been duly adjudged to be the constitutional house by the supreme court of the State, the senate committed a lawless and revolutionary act which has no precedent in the history of American States.

The Supreme Court of the United States, the most august judicial tribunal in the world, holds even itself bound by the decision of the court whose solemn judgment the senate of South Carolina now audaciously defies.

Mr. Justice Swayne said in delivering the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Leffingwell vs. Warren: "The construction given to a statute of a State by the highest judicial tribunal of such State is regarded as a part of the statute, and is as binding upon the courts of the United States as the text." (2 Black, 603. See also Green vs. McNeil's Lessee, 6 Peters, 291.)

Yet the effect which the court is asked to give to that act of unlawful contumacy is no less than the practical annulment of the will of the people expressed at the ballot-box, and solemnly recorded and announced.

Moreover the rights of a citizen are clearly involved in this extraordinary issue.

Says Blackstone: "An office is a species of incorporeal hereditament wherein a man may have a property or estate." (Blackstone's Comm., 2d Book, 36.)

"An appointment or election to office vests in the officer legal rights which are protected by the laws of his country." (Chief-Justice Marshall, in Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cranch, 377.)

The people have made the grant, and have set upon it their broad seal, the grantee has complied with all the conditions annexed, and the courts are then called upon to declare it void because the senate perversely closed its eyes and refused to witness the delivery.

I am of opinion, therefore, after full and deliberate consideration of all the constitutional provisions involved, and of the law and the facts in the premises, that Wade Hampton, esq., having been elected to the office of governor on the 7th day of November, 1876, and having been so declared pursuant to the constitution by the speaker of the house of representatives on the 14th day of December, 1876, and having taken and subscribed the oath of office prescribed in the constitution, is "the governor of the State of South Carolina." The warrant of pardon issued under his hand to the prisoner, Amzi Rosborough, must be duly respected, and the said prisoner will be discharged from custody in accordance therewith.

T. J. MACKEY,
Circuit Judge.

RECENT ELECTION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

TESTIMONY

TAKEN BY THE

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE RECENT ELECTION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

JANUARY 12, 1877.—Ordered to be printed.

CHARLESTON, S. C.,
Wednesday, December 20, 1876.

The subcommittee, composed of Messrs. Alexander G. Cochrane, chairman, T. L. Jones, and N. P. Banks, met at 3 o'clock p. m.

C. C. PINCKNEY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I reside in Charleston.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a lawyer by profession.

Q. Have you any business in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. Yes, sir; I am the owner of some phosphate-mines in Saint Andrew's Parish; mining phosphate rock.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-seven.

Q. How long have you resided in this State?—A. All my life; sir. I was born here, and, except a temporary absence in Europe a year or two, I have always been a resident of the State.

Q. In what voting-precinct are your works situated?—A. Well, I do not know the name of the precinct; the place where the residents of the parish vote is called the "Club-House precinct."

Q. Will you state whether you went to the Club-House precinct on the morning of last election-day?—A. Yes, sir; I went up to my place the evening before and spent the night there, and arrived at the precinct about six o'clock, perhaps a few minutes before six, on that morning.

Q. The morning of the election?—A. Yes, sir; the morning of the election.

Q. Whom did you go to the election with?—A. I went in company with Mr. E. T. Legare, who owns a place there a short distance from mine.

Q. When you reached the polls, how many negroes were there?—A. They were just assembling. They were scattered about the roads in the neighborhood coming in. I suppose perhaps some fifty or so had arrived. I did not estimate the number very accurately, but there were a good many already there.

Q. (By Mr. Jones.) How many had arrived there?—A. I did not make a very careful estimate of them. About fifty were around there; it was early, and they were just coming in from all directions. I passed a good many on the road coming down. They were walking and I was riding.

Q. (By the Chairman, Mr. Cochrane) You say there were fifty negroes at the polls when you got there?—A. Perhaps about that number.

Q. Well, did the negroes continue to come in?—A. They continued to come in pretty rapidly after that.

Q. From the same direction or different directions?—A. From different directions.

Q. Did they come singly or in bands?—A. Generally in batches; sometimes one or two; generally more than that.

Q. What were they doing?—A. They were just drawing toward the voting-precinct.

Q. I want to know what they were doing.—A. At the poll?

Q. No, sir. In coming in, were they making any noise of any kind?—A. They occasionally yelled, whooped, hooted, and blew horns about the country, but at that early hour the noise was not very great.

Q. Well, sir, in the course of two or three hours, how many negroes were there?—A. Well, after that time they began to come in rapidly; and on one or two occasions, I recollect, in large numbers. One body came rushing down the road at a great rate, yelling and whooping, and all armed, a sort of a company. They just came rushing down the road with a great noise.

Q. How were they armed?—A. They were armed mostly with muskets, most all of them with bayonets on them. Others around the polls were armed with all sorts of things.

Q. Did you see any shot-guns?—A. I do not remember seeing any; perhaps one or two shot-guns, and some had dilapidated rifles.

Q. Any clubs?—A. Clubs, bushes, sticks, old swords, and old bayonets. It struck me that they had a considerable variety of implements with them.

Q. Do you recollect seeing a negro with a club fixed in any special way?—A. I noticed one that struck my attention. It was a large oak wooden club, with nails driven in different directions through it, so that the nails would project on the outside, the head being left out about a half-inch, with the spikes projecting all around the club. It was a very singular-looking weapon.

Q. Did you see him shortly after you came to the polls, or how long after?—A. I did not see him or notice him until shortly before we left.

Q. What, if anything, did you hear him say?—A. He passed by Mr. Legare and myself, and was swinging this club in one of his hands. As he passed, he made a rather obscene remark.

Q. What did he say?—A. Well, he says, "If I hit any democrats with this ting, and it don't kill him, Christ will never —."

Q. Now, when a negro would be approaching the polls to vote, what would these negroes standing about the polls do, if anything?—A. They stood around talking and moving about a great deal, going to and fro; and usually, when any new-comers would arrive, they would run down to meet them—half a dozen of them, perhaps—with whatever weapons they might have in their hands. Those who had clubs and arms would run down to meet these new arrivals, and crowd around them, and ask them if they were all right, and such questions, if they had the right ticket, and perhaps carry them tickets, and then they would come up together.

Q. During this time, how were they acting? Were they quiet or disorderly?—A. They were not quiet. There was great exhibition of excitement among them. There was no very positive disorder, because there was no opposition. There was no fighting, because there was not a single negro who voted the democratic ticket, and there was no collision between anybody.

Q. You say not a single negro voted the democratic ticket?—A. At least not up to the time I left.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I was there about three hours.

Q. Until about nine o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any negroes who wanted to vote the democratic ticket?—A. There were some at my place who were employed there, who desired to vote the democratic ticket, but very few of them came to the polls. One or two desired to vote the democratic ticket, but were afraid to. One I remember particularly.

Q. What was his name?—A. The one I have in my mind was named Kent.

Q. Well, what, if anything, did you hear said to Kent?—A. He was standing near me, and I observed that he appeared to be very much frightened. He did not stand with the others. He stood to one side, looking very uncomfortable and uneasy, but I did not speak to him because I was afraid I would attract attention to him, and I did not want to do that. There was one man there who had voted, and as he was going off he turned around and called out to somebody in the crowd, "Mind now and watch Kent for me."

Q. Well, how did he vote after that?—A. He voted the republican ticket.

Q. How many negroes do you suppose were there at one time while you were there?—A. I think that the negroes increased in number in the time I came; some came and went away. They were coming and going all the time, but probably there might have been from one hundred to one hundred and fifty at one time. They were a good deal scattered about the woods.

Q. How many of these did you see armed with guns?—A. I suppose about one-third were armed with guns; perhaps a little more.

Q. How many with bludgeons?—A. Well, perhaps as many more, sir. Probably, including all varieties of things, a little more than half of them were armed.

Q. How many democratic votes were polled while you were there?—A. I think there were seven white men there, and each one of them polled a democratic vote.

Q. How many negroes had voted?—A. Well, they voted pretty rapidly, sir. I did not attempt to count them.

Q. Give us your estimate.—A. There may have been one hundred and fifty, sir.

Q. Do you remember the whole vote at that precinct—how many republican votes were cast?—A. At this last election, I think there were some three hundred and forty altogether; three hundred and forty-odd perhaps.

Q. How many of those were republican?—A. Well, there were nine democratic votes the balance were republican.

Q. Prior to the election, did any negroes tell you anything about how they were going to vote or how they wanted to vote?—A. There were a good many at my place who expressed an intention of voting the democratic ticket. In fact, they had formed a club among themselves, and signed a roll expressing their intention to support the democratic nominees.

Q. Did any of these vote there at that precinct?—A. One or two of them I think voted there and voted the republican ticket.

Q. The balance did not vote there?—A. The others did not appear. I did not see them.

Q. Was that the voting-precinct in which they live?—A. That is the precinct they would have voted at naturally. I advised several of them to go across the river and vote, fearing, from the indications, there might be some trouble. It is a parish in which there are scarcely any white people at all. The few who are connected with the phosphate works, form about the only white population in the parish.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did you see any negro attempt to vote the democratic ticket at the box?—A. No, sir, not a negro; the white men voted the democratic ticket. There was no opposition made to the white men voting, but no negro while I was there offered or made any move in that direction whatever.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Has there been any trouble between the negroes and white people in that particular neighborhood?—A. No, sir.

Q. In what part of the State is Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. It is just across the river, near to Charleston.

Q. How far from Charleston?—A. I do not know exactly where the line is, but my impression is that it is about twelve miles.

Q. Has there been any trouble there between the negroes and white people?—A. As I say, there are no white people there, with one or two exceptions. The foreman, superintendent, and engineer at the works, are about the only white population in the parish.

Q. I see the papers here state that a large number of fires have occurred in different parts of the State?—A. Not in our neighborhood, sir.

Q. No negroes have been charged at any time with setting fires?—A. No, sir; not at all. Perhaps I should have mentioned that I remember one disorder that occurred there. One night the negroes fired into the store of a white man, about two miles from me, and run him out of the store and robbed it. That is about the only instance of the kind that has occurred in that parish.

Q. The negroes did that?—A. It was so supposed.

Q. Was any action taken by the people of Saint Andrew's Parish, in regard to that?—A. Not that I remember. The man who was run out was a timid fellow, and he declined to prosecute them. There is no trouble of that kind in the parish usually.

Q. What is the name of the precinct at which you voted?—A. The Club-House precinct.

Q. Has there been any trouble between the negroes and white people in this city?—A. Yes, sir; a good deal.

Q. What was it about?—A. Well, sir, it is more usual perhaps in the city, between the negroes of the different political parties.

Q. But how was it between the negroes and the white people?—A. There have been several occasions on which there have been serious riots.

Q. Persons killed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Many persons?—A. Not many killed.

Q. Many wounded?—A. Some killed and a good many wounded.

Q. Much excitement in the public mind?—A. Very painful excitement, sir.

Q. When did the last occur?—A. The last occurred, I think, the day after the election—that is, of any moment or size.

Q. When did the first occur?—A. Some few occurred previously in the campaign.

Q. Were both parties armed in that case?—A. Not on the first occasion. It took everybody by surprise.

Q. How was it on the last occasion?—A. It had become very customary for persons to arm themselves. Some were armed and some were not. Some were armed with bricks, some pistols, &c.

Q. And there was a great deal of excitement in the public mind?—A. A very great deal of excitement on the first occasion. It was a very violent outbreak. Business was suspended for two or three days.

Q. You say that at this precinct of which you have spoken, they came in batches in the morning—two or three together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large was the largest company that came down together?—A. Well, this company that I spoke of with bushes was not large. We saw them as we were passing along on the road.

Q. What was the occasion of their coming in squads together?—A. Well, that was their style.

Q. Might not the difficulties that occurred here and there have led them to that as a precautionary measure?—A. No difficulties have occurred there.

Q. Well, but here?—A. I should not suppose that difficulties in the city had anything to do with it.

Q. Might not they suppose it? Are the negroes timid, or brave and resolute?—A. They are very timid when there is any danger, but in that parish they have it all their own way.

Q. Might not their fear be the reason of their coming in squads of two or three or more?—A. I think not.

Q. Might they not think so?—A. I do not think they are so timid as that.

Q. If they are timid, and there had been difficulties for two months or more, might it not have affected them?—A. Not in my judgment.

Q. Might it not have affected them?—A. Well, I say in my judgment it would not have affected them in the least. I do not think there was any such idea in their minds.

Q. Have you been accustomed to mix in political matters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never had any experience in politics?—A. Very little. I have no taste in that way.

Q. Have you been accustomed to vote?—A. I vote usually.

Q. Have you been present at elections?—A. Not more than to vote. I have not taken much part in these matters.

Q. Have you been present at any considerable time during elections?—A. I have been there two or three times during the day.

Q. Have you ever served upon a committee of any kind?—A. No, sir; not at an election.

Q. At what time have you served on a committee?—A. I never have.

Q. At no election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not know that it is a common thing for people who are interested in elections on one side or the other to look after men when they come up, offering them tickets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to ascertain how they are going to vote?—A. Yes, sir; I am aware of that. I have seen it often.

Q. You say when the negroes saw a squad of their own people coming they ran toward them to see if they were going to vote and if they had the right ticket. Is not that the way it is usually done?—A. No, sir. The style was different on this occasion.

Q. Is it not always the case at polling-places, when voters come up, that one side or the other look after them and see whether they have the right ticket?—A. That is quite natural.

Q. Well, then, how did this differ from that?—A. It differs, from this fact, that the people usually have no knives and clubs in their hands. This last election in Saint Andrew's Parish was different from anything I had ever seen, one of its peculiarities being their style of hallooing and yelling around and making a great excitement.

Q. Are the negroes excitable?—A. Very excitable, sir.

Q. Might it not be necessary to arm themselves on account of these difficulties that had occurred before?—A. I can only judge of what they think from the circumstances surrounding them. I think it would have been a very absurd supposition, and I do not believe that any of them entertained it. I have no idea that any of them had any such thought as that there was anybody there to trouble them.

Q. Had they assurances from the white people here or there that there would not be trouble?—A. Well, it was pretty much understood. There is no bridge across the river, and there is but one way of access to the parish.

Q. If there were parties disposed to do the negroes harm it would not require a great many of them to hurt them if they were armed. Now suppose two or three men were to fire into a company of negroes, would it be likely to frighten them or disturb them?—A. Not if there was a large body of negroes.

Q. You say this man Kent, who was in your employ, wanted to vote the democratic ticket. Had you ever a talk with him about it?—A. Frequently, for some time previous.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. The conversation was general. I did not talk much with him myself, but I occasionally spoke to the hands. The foreman, engineer, and the others had more talk with them—more than I did. The talk was of the usual kind on such occasions, being an endeavor to induce them to vote with us, and stating to them that it was their interest as well as ours to get rid of the class of rulers we had had heretofore.

Q. Did you intimate to Kent that it was an injury to your business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that he could not get work from you if he voted against your interests?—A. I told him that it was a very great injury to my business, but I did not tell him I would not employ him. If he had it would have injured my business. I could not get anybody to do my work.

Q. What did your foreman say to these people?—A. Just the same as I did.

Q. You say you know that he talked with them more than you did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say exactly what you said?—A. I instructed him to say so and told him to pursue the same policy with them.

Q. When you say you instructed him to say so, and he talked with them more than you did, what do you mean?—A. What I mean is this: I did not go up there more than once or twice a week to see how affairs were getting on. I was busy during that time, and I did not come in such constant contact with my employés as my foreman did.

Q. You say he talked with them; what did he tell them? How do you know he did not tell Kent that your business would stop, and that you would discharge him?—A. Well, of course I cannot know everything he did say.

Q. Has there been any talk about not employing negroes who voted the republican ticket and did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. Those who had a choice, where there was material enough on both sides to choose from, generally chose democrats.

Q. That has been the general feeling?—A. Very general.

Q. Might not this Mr. Kent have had sense enough to know that? What kind of a man was he?—A. We told him very plainly that if an opportunity occurred to favor them we would do so.

Q. Is not that a sufficient reason for his coming to you and saying that he was going to vote the democratic ticket, and does not that account for his voting the republican ticket when he got to the polls? What I mean to say is, that if you had talked with him about this matter and told him it was for your interest if he voted the democratic ticket, and against your interest if he voted the republican ticket, and your foreman talked with him and told him that you would prefer men who voted the democratic ticket, might not this negro have had a keen and strong suspicion that if he came to your foreman and talked as if he would vote the democratic ticket he would be employed?—A. It is not natural, sir.

Q. Do you not understand that a man has a right to vote just as he pleases?—A. Well, I think he ought to have, but when he is surrounded by muskets and clubs I do not think he—

Q. Well, there was nothing extraordinary in his voting the republican ticket, if he was that way inclined, when he came to the polls?—A. Nothing, except what he said previously to the men employed there with him. It struck me as not natural under the circumstances that he should change his views.

Q. If public opinion was formed in the direction that men who voted the republican ticket could not get employment, was not that an inducement?—A. Well, we knew, as one of them said before election, he was not afraid, because if we discharged the republicans we would discharge everybody. They knew it was impossible to carry on the work without them.

Q. You speak with reference to your place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say there were democratic clubs up there. How many were in them?—A. I think there were eight or nine that signed the democratic roll.

Q. Where were they employed?—A. They were mostly employed at my works, either permanently or temporarily; some were there temporarily.

Q. Your foreman had said to them that you had said to him that it was to your interest for them to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Well, at that time I had not said anything to them.

Q. Had not your foreman said something to them?—A. I do not know that he had. I suppose that he had.

Q. Has labor been scarce there?—A. It is variable. Sometimes it is scarce and sometimes there is plenty of it.

Q. Is it scarce here?—A. In this city?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. If a man has a good place, should he not want to keep it?—A. I should think he would.

Q. Was it not very natural that these eight or ten men should want to stand well with you?—A. Very natural.

Q. Might they not understand that they would lose good positions?—A. I do not think they anticipated any change in employment; in fact, I told them distinctly that I did not intend to discharge them either way they voted, but that I would prefer their voting with me, and would think better of them, and would favor them more if they did it.

Q. You say Kent was a republican and wanted to vote the republican ticket, but he told you that he was inclined to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I did not say that he was a republican.

Q. Did you not state that they were all republicans?—A. They are almost all republicans. I did not say that Kent was at all.

Q. Well, if he went to the polls and stood about there not voting, would it be an unusual thing in politics that those who were interested in politics should wish to see how he intended to vote, and make a record of it for examination?—A. You mean merely as a matter of opinion.

Q. Yes.—A. I think it would have been very natural.

Q. When this man cried "Watch Kent," was it not for the purpose of seeing how he voted?—A. From the surrounding circumstances and the tone of voice in which it was said I imagined it meant more than that.

Q. When you say that it was natural that all of his political friends should say "Watch Kent," you mean by saying that you should imagine that this man had some hidden meaning when he said "Watch Kent?"—A. I understand that he intended that a strict lookout should be kept upon Kent, and the inference from the surrounding circumstances was that he was being watched for some purpose.

Q. There is nothing criminal in his saying "Watch Kent?"—A. I simply stated the fact, and I did not attempt to draw the inferences; that is for the committee.

Q. You say the negroes are timid and apprehensive in the presence of danger?—A. I think they are.

Q. There has been some excitement here in this part of the State for two months?—A. Yes, sir; a good deal of excitement.

Q. There was a riot the day after the election and some persons were killed?—A. Yes, sir; a white man was killed.

Q. Some negroes were killed?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. You said some persons were killed; were they all white men?—A. Only one white man was killed.

Q. There had been considerable difficulty before the election?—A. For some two months before the election there was a riot.

Q. Did the white people make any threats as to what they would do in matters of that kind?—A. They said they would defend themselves.

Q. There was great excitement in the public mind during these two months?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anything said about it in the newspapers?—A. The newspapers discussed the matter every morning.

Q. Was it unnatural that the negroes should feel some protection when they came together?—A. I think it entirely unnatural that the negroes up there should feel any apprehension.

Q. Do you think so about this part of the State?—A. In the parish of which I am speaking, I think it would have been exceedingly unnatural.

Q. It is only twelve miles distant, you say. Do you think it is unnatural with the excited state of feeling in this city that they should arm themselves?—A. I do not know that you could call it unnatural.

Q. (By Mr. COCHRANE, chairman.) Just state what that first riot in Charleston was?—A. Well, sir; I did not witness the actual riot, because I passed up King street that night about twenty minutes after ten o'clock on my way home, and I observed lots of negroes about, but I did not think anything of it. I thought it was a political meeting somewhere; I thought it was only natural. As I learned, the outbreak occurred about ten minutes afterwards. With reference to the excitement prevailing, I cannot speak of my own knowledge. The next morning I was going up to my works in the country, but after going two or three miles I felt uneasy and turned back, and spent the next few days in the city. The people were gathered around the bulletin-boards, and great excitement prevailed.

Q. How many blacks were engaged in the riots?—A. I could not say of my own knowledge.

Q. Give us your general knowledge?—A. From the testimony of those who were in it, I suppose at the beginning a hundred or so, and then they gathered in different parts of the city, without taking any actual part in the riot; they were gathered in knots about, and stopped people who were passing; would not allow them to pass, and turning them back. A great many people were beaten in isolated places, and it created naturally a great deal of excitement in the city.

Q. You say that business was practically suspended?—A. For the next two days business was suspended, and on the following night the white citizens remained under arms pretty much all night, gathered together with such arms as they had, and remained so until midnight, when it became apparent that there would not be any further disturbance.

Q. (By Mr. JONES.) I understood you to say a while ago that, notwithstanding this excitement in Charleston, you thought that the negroes in Saint Andrew's Parish had no reason to be alarmed or afraid of any danger to them?—A. No earthly reason to be alarmed, sir.

Q. What was the proportion of blacks and whites in that parish?—A. Well, sir; I think it is about a hundred to one.

Q. They could not therefore have been alarmed or afraid of any personal danger to themselves?—A. No, sir; not without a great exaggeration of timidity. We felt rather uneasy ourselves; the alarm was rather the other way.

Q. The whites were afraid of some demonstration on the part of the blacks in consequence of the great numbers of them in that parish?—A. I was not afraid of them doing anything to me, because I know most of them and was friendly with them; but I knew from the condition they were in they might proceed to great lengths, and I did not feel comfortably during the morning.

Q. Do you think, from what you heard certain black men say previous to the election as to their disposition to vote, that many were deterred from voting the democratic ticket in consequence of these armed men that you saw at the polls and certain demonstrations that they made?—A. There were not a great many, sir; I think there were some. I do not think their numbers were very large. I do not think there were many who intended to vote the democratic ticket.

Q. But you think that some would have voted except for these violent demonstrations on the part of colored men at the polls?—A. Yes, sir; some.

Q. I understood you also to say that you did not make any threats nor did you instruct your overseer or your foreman to make any threats of discharging certain persons in your employ if they did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir, I did not; I should have hated to do so, not only from the nature of the case, but from the fact that there were no other laborers in the country. I made no such threats.

Q. You saw no such demonstration on the part of white men towards negroes as you saw on the part of negroes to negroes?—A. There was no motion in that direction, for very good reasons.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You said that business was suspended for a couple of days?—A. That would be rather a strong expression, sir; but I will say to a considerable extent. Men stood talking on the sidewalks all day.

Q. Some of them were under arms all night the first night?—A. The night succeeding the—

Q. It appears from your statement that the negroes showed a disposition to fight in that case?—A. They did fight; that is, they beat every white man they could get hold of, as far as we could learn the next morning. For two or three hours the streets were held by this mob of negroes.

Q. You say that the negroes nine out of ten are republicans?—A. Not negroes generally. I spoke of those in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. You say there were a hundred negroes to one white man there. Did those negroes all vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; every one at that poll while I was there.

Q. And the nine out of ten would naturally have voted? What do you call that? Is that intimidation?—A. It is not intimidation as to those who wanted to voted it.

Q. Did they ask protection of white people?—A. They formed themselves into a club, called a democratic club, and signed their names to a roll, and published it in the newspapers.

Q. You have said already that it was generally understood that if they voted the republican ticket they might not get employment?—A. I did not say that, sir.

Q. Has there been such intimidation as to produce any serious consequences to the people of this State?—A. I think it has produced very serious consequences.

Q. In that parish?—A. No, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Wednesday, December 20, 1876.

EDWARD P. LEGARE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran:)

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I am living in this city at present.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am planting in the country, and am carrying on the butcher-business here in Charleston.

Q. Do you own property in the country?—A. Yes, sir; I have a plantation in the country.

Q. How long have you resided in this State?—A. I was born here, sir; and have lived here all my life.

Q. In what parish is your plantation?—A. It is in Saint Andrews Parish.

Q. You are acquainted with Mr. Pinckney, the witness who has just been examined?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state whether you went with Mr. Pinckney on the morning of election-day to Club-House precinct in Saint Andrews Parish.—A. Yes, sir; he and I went together.

Q. About what time did you get there?—A. We got there at the opening of the polls in the morning. I did not have a watch with me to notice the time by, but I believe that it was six o'clock, as that is the time the polls open.

Q. Do you know about how many negroes were present at that time?—A. I did not count them, sir; but judging from the looks of them, there were over a hundred. They were going and coming; sometimes there were a good many and sometimes less.

Q. But I mean when you first went to the poll?—A. There were not a great many out when we got there.

Q. Will you go on and describe when they came, what they had, and their general conduct during the time you staid there?—A. Well, sir, some came up there and behaved themselves very nicely; others came up with a good deal of excitement about them. Sometimes before they got up to the polls they would hoop and hollo and shout and yell, and some of them would blow horns, while others at the polls would answer them, and they would run and meet each other and carry on.

Q. Did they have anything in their hands?—A. Some had guns and some had sticks.

One man I noticed particularly. He had an old bayonet with a pole put in it. There was another man that struck me as having a singular weapon. His name was Moses Waters. He had a stick about four feet long in his hand, with long nails driven through the head of it. Then he had a bag of ammunition hanging to him. I thought at first it was provisions, because I heard him say in the morning that he had not had time to eat, and I thought he had brought his provisions along. But I found out from him afterward that it was ammunition. I says to him, "Moses, what are you going to do with that ugly-looking stick?" He turned around to me and says, "Great God, sir, if I hits a democratic nigger wid this stick I'll knock his damned brains out." I could not tell you what he did say; it was too indecent.

Q. What was the general demeanor of the negroes assembled at that poll?—A. I will tell you the plain truth, sir. I have been through the war, and I have been in some pretty close places, but I never felt so uncomfortable in my life as I did that day. If I had undertaken to carry a democratic negro up to vote that day I believe he would have been mobbed, and I would have been mobbed for carrying him up.

Q. Just state what their conduct was toward negroes who may have been suspected of voting the democratic ticket, or of intention to vote it.—A. They did not come from my part; they came in the same crowd; some of them from town. I did not notice any that were inclined to vote it. You see, sir, I can only speak of those in my immediate neighborhood, on my plantation. We do not mingle much from place to place. We have to attend to business so closely that we only know those in our neighborhood. Pinckney did not know those negroes on my place, and I would not know any of his.

Q. When you say that no negro came up inclined to vote the democratic ticket, you mean none from your plantation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, will you just state whether you had negroes on your place who did intend to vote the democratic ticket.—A. Yes, sir; I had some who promised me to do it.

Q. How many did you expect to vote it?—A. Well, I have a good many hands on my place.

Q. How many as laborers, and in other capacities?—A. Over thirty male people; the rest are women and children.

Q. How many of those negroes promised you they would vote the democratic ticket?—A. There were six.

Q. Where was the precinct at which they would naturally vote?—A. They voted at Brick Church, where we went.

Q. Did any of those six who had promised you to vote the democratic ticket come to that poll to vote?—A. None of them voted there. Three of them came to town and voted; one I told he had better stay at home and attend to my mules; one was working on James Island as a carpenter, and he told me he had better vote over there because the negroes on our side would treat him badly and he was afraid to come back and vote; and one backed out on me and voted the republican ticket after all.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. They were afraid to vote at their own precinct?—A. They did not come to the church. Three of them, as I tell you, came to town.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. What was the reason?—A. The reason was this. At first the head fellow told me that I had better, instead of voting in town, come up to the church. I have always let them come to town and vote. But he said that I had better come over into the parish this time and let the men vote there, because he thought if they came to town the negroes would kick up such a fuss that there might be a riot and they would get hurt. So I and Pinckney came over. But when I got there I found that they had got alarmed and come to town because they thought they would be protected here, there being more white people in Charleston. So when I did not find them there I came back to town.

Q. Did you hear any profane language used by any of the negroes at the poll in Brick Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir; one man used some very indecent language, so much so that I would not like to mention it to you gentlemen.

Q. Is there any other fact which you know of?—A. Not that I recall at this moment.

Q. How in reference to a boy that you employed here; what do you know about him as to his voting?—A. Well, he is over on James Island now, I believe, working somewhere, but he voted in town. He was one of the boys that came to vote here. When this boy came to town, he came with my wife's cousin, who works on the place for me and manages it, and who took two of these men and carried them up to the polls to vote. Some white man has to go with them; if they do not the negroes won't go; they are afraid. So after this boy had voted, my wife's cousin let him go to go home. When I got home my wife told me that she had seen these men go with this young lad to vote. Some time afterward, after they had got through voting, he turned them loose to come home, saying that they had better go back home and stay in the yard, as he feared they might be mobbed. When this boy came off a whole lot of these rowdy negroes just crowded around him. I did not see it, because I was in the country, but I was told about it. A mulatto man who came from the North, named Hunter, was pushing up these young negroes to mob this fellow. My wife says she was sitting at the window looking out at the time, and she heard a great noise, and she saw this man Moses coming home with a lot of these rowdy negro boys around him abusing him, calling him a damned democratic country nigger, and saying that he had voted in the country and had come to town to vote. This man Hunter was pushing these negroes up to mob him. She saw Moses backing like, with a brick in his hand, trying to keep them from closing up on him, and telling them they must not put their hands on him or he would defend himself with this brick. He kept them at bay as long as he could. He thought that he could run and get away from them, which he did finally. She said she was afraid that they would catch him at the door before he could get in and hurt him; so she ran down-stairs to open it for him, and just as she got down she saw him jumping over the fence into the yard. She could not get the door open in time. This boy says to Hunter, "Never mind, sir. I know you, and as soon as this thing is over I mean to prosecute you." When I got home my wife told me about this, and I went into the yard, and asked the boy about it. He was a young lad, what we commonly call a boy, about twenty-two or three, I suppose. In old times they called all the colored men boys. So I told him then that he had better stay in the yard and not go out.

Q. What now, if anything, do you know in regard to the action of the republican negroes in this vicinity—in Charleston—as against the negroes who voted the democratic ticket?—A. Well, sir, they carried it to such an extent that I really felt sorry for a negro who went and voted the democratic ticket. There are a great many negroes who would have voted with us but for the ostracism practiced toward them. One man told me that he would like to vote the ticket, but he did not dare do it, because he lived in a community with a great many negroes; that he went to church with them and mingled with them socially, and he was afraid that if he voted the ticket they would kill his fowls, beat his children, and make it very unpleasant for him. He says, "Of course I would like to vote with you gentlemen, but I cannot possibly do it."

Q. Is that carried on to any great extent?—A. I think it is, sir.

Q. My question was more particularly directed to what you knew, if anything, in reference to any interference by the republican negroes with those democratic negroes who met together during the last canvass.—A. How do you mean, sir?

Q. Do you know of republican negroes interfering with the meetings of democratic negroes?—A. Well, we had very few meetings of them here. The only meeting that I remember of was in George street the night of the first riot. I went to that meeting with a man by the name of Murray Bennett, to hear Stepney Riley speak. Stepney could tell you all about that meeting.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Was Riley a negro?—A. Yes, sir; a real black man. Riley spoke at the meeting, and said that he felt that his interests were identical with those of the white people; that they had always treated him well, and he intended to stand with them; that if the white man was elevated, he and his race would be elevated; that if he groveled in the dust he would grovel with us. I went to that meeting feeling that it was my duty to go, for the purpose of giving moral support to the colored people who wanted to vote with us. While I was at the meeting I saw indications which led me to believe that certain colored men had come in there for the purpose of breaking up the meeting. They made so much disturbance that, the thing becoming very rowdyish, I spoke to Mr. Barnwell and told him I thought the best thing he could do with the meeting was to have it adjourn. I never liked the idea of the democratic negroes meeting by themselves. I thought it would be better for them to meet with us, all together. Mr. Barnwell took my advice and adjourned the meeting. After the adjournment such a noisy and threatening crowd of negroes assembled on the pavement in front of the building that we concluded that our democratic negroes would be mobbed, if not protected. Our white people at that time had made up their minds to protect these democratic negroes, and we surrounded them, placed them in the middle, and started to carry them home. On our way up King street, as we got near the citadel, I heard some quarreling on the opposite side of the street. It was too dark to distinguish any one at that distance, but I could see the confusion. I heard some one strike another one a good, heavy lick—whether it was with a stick or the hand, it was a pretty heavy lick—then I saw the flash of a pistol. In a few minutes it became a sort of general confusion, and pistols were fired indiscriminately, but whether they were fired by negroes or white men I could not tell, the whole crowd was so mixed up. A policeman came up on his horse, and the men gathered around him, and some of us thought that in the excitement some man might strike the police-officer, or shoot him, or something of the kind, and Riley and myself, and several other gentlemen in the crowd, all told the men to keep quiet, and not molest the policeman—that he was doing his duty. About that time a good many white people left, and the thing sort of quieted down, and I started to go home. After I got home I heard some firing again, and I heard the next morning that these democratic negroes had to be carried to the citadel for protection.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many negroes do you say you thought would have voted the democratic ticket in Saint Andrew's Parish, who, being afraid to vote there, came away and voted somewhere else?—A. I spoke of those six, who had promised me; that is all I know about it.

Q. You think they were deterred from voting by the appearance of armed negroes at the polls?—A. They did not go to the polls; they came to town and voted here—that is, three of them did.

Q. They were deterred from voting or going to the polls there by violent demonstrations on the part of other negroes?—A. I think so, sir; they were afraid to go there.

Q. Were these negroes who were armed and making violent demonstrations at the polls republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Does the law allow a voter in one county to vote at another precinct in that county?—A. I think it does, sir.

Q. So that a negro could take his choice. If he preferred to vote in one parish to another, he could vote there if it was in the same county?—A. He can vote at a half a dozen polls in this county now.

Q. You spoke of three men who came here and voted in this city. These men voted here because they chose to vote here, did they not?—A. I spoke of six who said they were going to vote the democratic ticket. One staid at home altogether—he did not vote; one voted on James Island because he was working there, and one of them promised me to vote, but voted the republican ticket afterward. The other three came to town and voted.

Q. They did not tell you that they came here because they could not vote anywhere else? They did not tell you they were driven away from the other polls?—A. No, sir; because they did not go there.

Q. Now, about this boy that was chased by some people and got into your yard, what time was that?—A. That was ten o'clock in the day.

Q. Ten o'clock in what day?—A. The day of the election.

Q. Was he a voter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he voted?—A. Yes, sir; he had voted when they got at him.

Q. Was it ten o'clock in the morning?—A. It must have been ten o'clock in the morning. I was in the country. I do not know anything about it except what my wife told me.

Q. Well, now, you spoke about a negro man having a bag of ammunition; how large a bag had he?—A. I expect it was about the size of a shot-bag—an ordinary twenty-six-pound shot-bag.

Q. Did he tell you it was ammunition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he use it?—A. No, sir; not while I was there.

Q. Did he have a shot-gun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he fire it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was anybody killed there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Anybody wounded?—A. Not while I was there.

Q. Anybody frightened besides yourself?—A. I do not know that anybody was frightened besides myself. Mr. Pinckney and myself and two or three white men were the only democrats there so far as I know.

Q. Nobody was harmed, and everybody that wanted to vote voted, and those that did not want to vote there voted here in the city or elsewhere?—A. There was no colored democrat could have voted at that poll if he had tried it.

Q. That is your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as to these men that cultivated land of yours; had you ever told them that they could not cultivate that land if they did not vote the democratic ticket, or if they voted the republican ticket?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you intimate that to them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any of your men tell them that?—A. What sort of men?

Q. Men that you employed or otherwise?—A. No, sir; my foreman is a republican.

Q. Did any person ever tell them or give them to understand from you that if they voted the republican ticket they could not occupy your land?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever join any party of men in any resolution or declaration, or did you ever attend at any meeting where the declaration was made, that those who voted the republican ticket should not be employed?—A. No, sir; some of my best hands are republicans.

Q. I am asking you if you ever joined with anybody in making such a declaration?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not know that such declarations have been made in public—that those persons who voted the republican ticket, negroes especially, would not be employed?

Mr. JONES. (To the witness.) Did you ever hear that?

Mr. BANKS. I want to know if he knows; if he does not know it that is enough.—A. I have heard some men say that there were certain negroes whom they would not employ after this thing was over. It was not on account of their voting the republican ticket, however, but because they had threatened to murder us and all that sort of thing. I would not employ a white man under those circumstances.

Q. I ask you again, do you not know that resolutions have been passed at public meetings, and printed in the newspapers, to the effect that negroes or other men who voted the republican ticket would not be employed; have you seen that in the papers, or do you know that such resolutions have been passed?—A. You see the papers yourself, sir; you can judge for yourself.

Q. I want to know if any such public notice has been given to the negroes in this part of the State; if you do not know it, you can say so.—A. It depends on circumstances.

Q. I desire that you answer my question. It is susceptible of a very plain and simple response.—A. I have heard some men say so, but I cannot say that it is a general thing. For instance, in the case of my own hands; some of my best men are republicans, and I would not like to tell them that I was going to do a thing I did not intend to do.

Q. Suppose your poorest hands were to vote the republican ticket, would you turn them off?—A. No, sir. I have never threatened my hands with dismissal for such a cause. But I have reasoned with them as I had a right to do. I have said to them, "Now, I have done you a great many favors, and I think it is your duty to go to the polls and try to protect my property from the men who are taxing us and grinding us down." Said I to them, "There is scarcely anything in which you wanted help that I have not given it; I have got up in the night in sickness to wait on you and give you physic, and I have treated you the same as if you were members of my family; I have done all sorts of things for you and your interests, and now when my interests are so much at stake you ought to do for me. If you don't help me now, you will make it out of my power to help you, for pretty soon I won't have anything to help you with."

Q. Do you not know that that has been the feeling here in this part of the State with the white men—the democrats particularly?—A. Yes, sir; I know that everybody tried to do the best they could to influence the negroes in a friendly way, and nobody was threatened that I knew of. We were trying to get a good government, sir.

Q. Has there been any trouble between the whites and blacks, or between the democrats and republicans, in the last three months—or six months, if you please?—A. Nothing except what you may have seen in the newspapers about the riots.

Q. Where did these riots occur?—A. One occurred in Cainhoy and one in King street.

Q. When was the Cainhoy?—A. Before the election.

Q. Anybody killed there?—A. There were some people killed. I knew one gentleman that was killed, a white man by the name of Simmons.

Q. Any black men killed?—A. Yes, sir; one was killed.

Q. Any wounded?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any excitement about that?—A. Yes, sir; there was a great deal of excitement about it.

Q. Was the Cainhoy the last one in point of time; did it occur after the King street riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything like a general disregard of business for a day or two after that?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. Any public preparation made to take measures in case such riots occurred again?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many were killed in the King street riot?—A. I do not know that anybody was killed; some people were wounded.

Q. Men wounded on both sides?—A. Well, all I knew of the affair was what I read in the paper. You can find anything you want to read in the newspaper sometimes. They do not always give exactly the true statement, though.

Q. You are a citizen of this place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were here at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any steps were taken in reference to such outbreaks as that?—A. I know that General Conner wanted to keep everybody quiet, because General Hampton said we must have peace and quiet.

Q. General Conner was apprehensive that there might be some fighting?—A. I do not know about that.

Q. He did not want to have any fighting?—A. He wanted everything peaceable. He said it was wrong to have any excitement at election times; that everybody ought to try to be quiet and have the election without any disturbance, and he advised the people to be orderly, to have no confusion or breach of the peace, to submit to everything and anything.

Q. Was it not natural that the average negro should have the same feeling; might he not think that as well as General Conner?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Who is General Conner?—A. He was a general in the late war, and is a man very popular in this city.

Q. What is his position in politics?—A. He ran on the State ticket at the recent election.

Q. He is a leading man?—A. He is a very popular man and a leading democrat.

Q. When he called upon the people to be quiet he thought there might be some fighting, I suppose. Now, might not the average negro have the same feeling?—A. Nobody was going to trouble them.

Q. Mr. Conner is a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he chairman of the democratic committee here?—A. No, sir; Col. Simonton is chairman.

Q. Does he not hold some position on the democratic committee?—A. No, sir; he ran on the ticket for the attorney-generalship.

Q. Is he not a man whom everybody looks to for advice?—A. Yes, sir; he is a prominent man.

Q. Well, when he advises the democrats not to fight, is it not reasonable to suppose there is some reason for it?—A. I did not say that he advised the democrats not to fight. In election times if men are not advised to be quiet and peaceable—

Q. I will ask you once more; if General Conner thought it necessary to say that it would be very bad to have any fighting about election-time; that he wanted everybody to be quiet, and he said that to the democrats, is it not natural to suppose that he thought there might be fighting, and that there might be trouble about election-time; and if he thought it, might not the average negro think the same thing?—A. It would be very likely in times like these.

Q. If, then, the negroes thought they were going to be attacked, might they not come to the polls with whatever weapons they might have for self-defense?—A. Nobody threatened them at all sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Was General Conner's suggestion thrown out to the democrats alone, or to all the people?—A. To everybody.

Q. He said he wanted everybody to be quiet?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I mean.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Would General Conner undertake to advise republicans what to do, or would they take advice from him?—A. I do not know that they would take any advice from him.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you suppose that the negroes in Saint Andrews Parish in consequence of what General Conner advised, or of anything else that occurred in Charleston, or elsewhere than that parish, were induced to carry arms to the polls there to protect themselves from any violence by white men?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. General Banks has examined you in regard to your influence upon your own hands, and as to what was understood to be the influence of democrats generally in employing hands, to wit, that they would not give them employment if they voted the republican ticket. Now, in what you said to General Banks as having said to your hands, you did not mean to have it understood that you ever threatened or intimated to any of them that you would turn them off if they voted the republican ticket?—A. No, sir; I talked to them just as I would to my own family.

Q. Did you ever say to one of your employes if he did not vote the ticket you would turn him off?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of any republican planter or manufacturer, or of any man in the republican party who carried on any business whatever, and employing a number of persons, employ other than those who voted the republican ticket?—A. No, sir; all I heard was that they wanted to turn a colored man by the name of Doctor Boseman out of the custom-house.

Q. There are republicans in this county who carry on business who have negroes in their employ?—A. Very few of them. Most of the republicans here are office-holders.

Q. Do you not suppose that men who carry on plantations, or engaged in business of any kind, who belong to the republican party, would prefer to employ men who voted with them, or held like sentiments with themselves?—A. I would suppose it to be very natural. I would like to have the men working with me hold the same political sentiments I hold.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You mean to say that a man who employs hands should employ those he likes?—A. Yes, sir; I would like my hands to vote with me, but I could not discharge a hand who voted the republican ticket simply because he did so vote. A man on my place, referring to his creed as a republican, said to me, "Now, sir, that is my principle, and if I was to vote against the republican party now you would not trust me any more."

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. You still retain him?—A. Yes, sir; I would not turn him off for that reason alone.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you know of many democrats who have republicans employed to carry on their business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do republicans ever employ democrats?—A. No, sir; I do not know a republican that has any democratic employe in this city.

Q. Do you not know that in general employment, everywhere, they employ only republicans?—A. That has been my observation, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. In other words, they employ only the man they like best?—A. I suppose so, sir.

Q. Did you or did you not say a little while ago that you had said to the men in your employ that if they voted the democratic ticket you could not do for them as you had done before?—A. What I meant was, that I am getting so poor under the republican rule of this State, that I am so hampered with taxes and one thing and another, that I could not help my people, or do what I would like to do for them. I have killed a cow for them every year at Christmas, and distributed it among them without charge; but I cannot do it this year. I am too poor.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Was Mr. Mackey here during the last election?—A. You mean E. W. Mackey? I heard he was here. I did not see him.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Ever since the war stopped.

Q. Do you know of any action of his in the last canvass toward influencing colored voters in any way?—A. Well, I cannot answer you. I do not know exactly what you mean.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, of any advice given by Mackey tending towards any riotous proceeding on their part? I do not ask for what people said to you.—A. No, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Wednesday, December 20, 1876.

A. M. LATHAM sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. What is your age, sir?—Answer. Forty-nine.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live in South Carolina.

Q. How long have you lived in South Carolina?—A. Since 1851, sir; twenty-five years.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I was born in Scotland, sir.

Q. Is there a precinct in Saint Andrews Parish known as Red-top Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you engaged in any business in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What?—A. Mining phosphates.

Q. How long have you been engaged in business there?—A. I used to plant rice and cotton there since 1868, but for the last three years I have been mining phosphates.

Q. Did you go to the Red-top Church precinct on last election-day?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What time did you reach the polls?—A. Before 6 in the morning.

Q. Before they opened?—A. Before they opened.

Q. What time did the polls open?—A. Six o'clock.

Q. Where was the voting conducted?—A. At Red-top church; in the church.

Q. What position, if any, did you occupy on that day?—A. I was democratic supervisor of election.

Q. At that place?—A. Yes, sir; at that place.

Q. At the time the polls opened about how many negroes were there?—A. There might have been from a dozen to eighteen.

Q. Well, sir, did others come?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Singly or in bands?—A. They came occasionally in bands and sometimes singly.

Q. Were they armed; and if so, with what?—A. Most of them had bludgeons; some had guns.

Q. Did you see any one with bayonets?—A. I saw some bayonets tied on poles or sticks.

Q. How many managers of election were there?—A. Three.

Q. How many colored men?—A. Two of them were colored men and one was a white man.

Q. Two colored republicans, and the white man was a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was there a republican supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he white or black?—A. He was a white man.

Q. Well, sir, I wish you would go on now and state from that point, in your own language, and without questions from me, what occurred during the day, giving the events, as near as you can, in their order.—A. About, I should say, a few minutes after I entered the church and the polls were opened, the box was examined by the people to see that it was all right. I proposed to the managers of election that but one person should be admitted to the church at a time, for the purpose of having a fair election; and the managers agreed that it was right enough, and requested the marshals to clear the church. By that time there were a great many in the church, and the people would not go out, so the managers didn't insist upon it. The church then became filled with people who crowded all around the box.

Q. What kind of people?—A. Colored people; all colored people, sir.

Q. Did they surround the box?—A. They were all around the box, close to it, and packed all around it; and a short time after that there was a boy came up to vote by the name of Jenkins, and I challenged the vote.

Q. How old was he?—A. He seemed to be about sixteen years of age—perhaps from thirteen to sixteen—and the crowd became very unruly at my objecting to his vote.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You challenged the boy on account of his age?—A. I challenged his age, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Well, sir, proceed.—A. The crowd became very unruly about my expressing myself as dissatisfied with the vote, and they brought forward his father, and his father said that he was in his twenty-first year. I told him that that would not do; that he must be twenty-one years and out, and proceeded to swear his father; and they got perfectly obstreperous.

Q. What did they do?—A. They crowded all around me with sticks and hollered, "Take him out; bring him out;" and, of course, I was unable to challenge any more.

Q. Did the boy vote?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did you protest against it?—A. I did, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Were there any others?—A. There were many others, sir, but I could not protest after that; it was as much as my life was worth. Some democratic negroes came in to vote then, and among others my foreman, James Grant. He voted and showed his ticket.

Q. What ticket did he vote?—A. The democratic ticket; and the people became very much annoyed about that; apparently, and were for assaulting him; indeed, they expressed themselves so violently that they frightened the man. He wanted to go away, and he slipped out, and no sooner did he get out than they got after him, and they run him about two hundred yards.

Q. Were you present when any further difficulty occurred?—A. I was not present when they caught the man.

Q. Did you see Grant the next day?—A. I did, sir. He was very much cut up.

Q. What was his condition?—A. When I saw him he was lying in bed, and he told me he was unable to turn over.

Q. How many cuts were there about his head?—A. Well, sir, I think there may have been three or four. There certainly was one very bad one on the brow and head, and a very bad one across the top, and another in the back of his head—probably three or four cuts.

Q. Were there any other injuries or wounds about his person?—A. He was very badly cut in the knee, stabbed with a knife. I saw the cut. It was a very bad one.

Q. Any other cuts?—A. Another cut in the arm.

Q. Now, go back to the polls and tell us what followed after Grant ran out.—A. After that some little time went by before another man came in to vote—Peter Lucas.

Q. Was he a colored man?—A. He was a colored man and a pronounced democrat. He had been in my service for years and had always voted the democratic ticket. Well, they got after Lucas as he was going in, and they marched him up to the door with bludgeons over him, and he came to me and asked me what he should do. I remarked to him that I thought he had better sit down a little while and not vote at present. Just to wait a little while. He was afraid to stay, and went and put in his ticket. He then went out and they got after him again.

Q. Did you see Lucas the next day?—A. I saw him the next day and his head was tied up, and he told me they had all but killed him.

Q. He was cut up, you say?—A. His head was tied up, sir.

Q. Well, now, what further occurred at the polls?—A. Well, sir, at a later period in the day the negroes were around the church all the time, and men and women cursed me. I was kept in the church from six in the morning till eight or nine at night. I could not get out.

Q. What more, if anything, was done?—A. There was a man by the name of John Brown, a democratic negro, got into the church with me in the morning, and he could not get out; and one man came up there and cursed him for a son of a bitch, and that he wanted to knock his brains out. He didn't come into the church, but he came over to the door.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did you see him?—A. I saw him and heard him.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Who did he curse?—A. He cursed Brown.

Q. Who was Brown?—A. He was a democratic negro. He was afraid to vote and never voted.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Do you know of democratic negroes coming up?—A. Several; a number that told me they were going to vote the democratic ticket were brought up by men one on each side with bludgeons. These men came up to the door with them, and told them if they didn't vote the republican ticket, what they would do, and they stood at the door and saw them vote the republican ticket. Men voted the republican ticket that I am satisfied would have voted the democratic ticket if they had been let alone; they told me so afterward.

Q. How many colored women were there about there?—A. There were thirty or forty armed with bludgeons. There was hardly a woman that hadn't a bludgeon, and they were, if anything, worse than the men.

Q. Was there any incident occurred between a negro woman and yourself that day?—A. There was. One of these women took a gun and aimed it in the window. I happened to go to the window and some one called out, "Look at that woman; she is about to shoot you, sir." I looked out and they had just taken the gun from her by that time.

Q. How many democratic votes were there at that poll altogether that day?—A. Four white men and nine negroes voted the democratic ticket—13 votes.

Q. How many republican votes?—A. Two hundred and ninety-seven; in all there were three hundred and ten.

Q. How many white men were there about the polls on that day?—A. Five.

Q. Who were they?—A. There was one republican supervisor, one democratic manager; there was myself, democratic supervisor, and two others.

Q. Were those two others white democratic voters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state whether either of them was detained through fear in the church?—A. Yes, sir; one young man was detained there as long as I was. He remained there the whole day from 6 in the morning until 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening.

Q. He was afraid to go out?—A. Yes, sir; I went to the door two or three times, and whenever I saw the crowd surging toward the church I had to get in again.

Q. You made several efforts to get out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But was driven back by the threatening attitude of the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state whether there was great noise and confusion there during the day?—A. A great deal, sir, and the wildest intimidation I ever saw anywhere.

Q. What did the intimidation consist in?—A. There was a band of men marching backward and forward, beating drums, hallooing and screaming, and carrying on with the women in front of the men. I saw a company of men there, with forty or fifty in it probably, and mostly all armed apparently, half of them with bright, shiny rifles, and the others with bludgeons, sticks, and bayonets.

Q. Were these colored people?—A. Yes, sir; all colored people.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many rifles did you say there were?—A. There were about forty or fifty men probably in the company, and half of them were armed with bright, new, shiny rifles, and the others with shot-guns, old muskets, and mixed arms.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How many negroes told you before election that they would vote the democratic ticket?—A. I could not positively say, sir; my estimate would be from 25 to 30.

Q. How many of those actually voted the democratic ticket?—A. Just 9.

Q. What became of the others?—A. The others voted the republican ticket. They had to do it.

Q. Some didn't vote at all?—A. Several didn't vote at all. Several didn't go to the polls; several went to the polls and didn't vote. Some were inside the church, and did not vote, and could not be made to vote.

Q. I wish you would state, sir, whether you used any threats to induce these colored men to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I used no threats, sir; there was no intimidation there, either by myself or any one else, to make them vote the democratic ticket.

Q. But did you use any threats prior to the election to induce these colored men to say that they would vote the democratic ticket; did you threaten to discharge them if they didn't vote the democratic ticket, or anything of that kind, or did you just reason with them?—A. I may have told them that I would think better of those that would vote with me. I may have told some of them that if I could not get along well, and if they were impertinent to me, I would think of it whether they should stay with me after the election or not.

Q. Did you ever threaten to discharge a man if he did not vote the democratic ticket, or anything of that kind?—A. Not that I remember, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What did you say your business was, Mr. Latham?—A. I am engaged in mining phosphate rock.

Q. You live in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At this precinct of which you have been speaking?—A. Near by.

Q. How many hands do you employ?—A. Fifty or sixty generally.

Q. Are you there most of the time?—A. Only part of the time; most of the time I am in the city.

Q. Have you any other business than that of mining?—A. I used to plant rice and cotton, sir.

Q. Do you take any special interest in commercial affairs?—A. No, sir; I don't pay any special attention to it.

Q. Educational affairs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Religious matters?—A. No, sir; nothing of that sort.

Q. Do you give any particular attention to the charities of the State, or the institutions of that kind?—A. No, sir; nothing of that sort.

Q. Do you take much interest in political matters?—A. No, sir; never until now.

Q. How many colored republicans do you say came to you to tell you that they wanted to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I think there were some twenty-five or thirty men.

Q. What led those men to come to you to tell you that they wanted to vote the democratic ticket, knowing that you took no interest in political affairs? I suppose, of course, they knew you took no interest in political affairs?—A. All of us take an interest in these times in political affairs, to a certain extent.

Q. What is the interest you take?—A. We are very anxious to see honest men occupy the positions of governor and lieutenant-governor. We have had a great many dishonest ones here, and I think every good citizen has that feeling, and it is the feeling of every man of any sense of honor in the country.

Q. Did these thirty or forty republicans go about the town and tell everybody that they wanted to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I do not know that they did. They might have come up in a little conversation, and say, "I am going to vote with you this time."

Q. They were republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What had occurred between you and them to lead them to come to you, and make this declaration that they were going to vote with you this time?—A. I will tell you one thing that occurred: They have been looking for schools up in that parish, and they have never had any yet. A man came to me and asked me why they didn't get these schools, and I told them that these scoundrels here were taking all the money. I told them that Wade Hampton would give them schools.

Q. You told them, if they didn't vote the democratic ticket you would think whether you would employ them or not. Did you or not tell them that if they did not vote the democratic ticket, they would fail in getting employment?—A. No, sir; I didn't tell them that if they would not vote the democratic ticket I would see whether I would employ them or not.

Q. Did ever anybody say that to them in your name?—A. No one was authorized to say that for me.

Q. Do you know whether here in this part of the State it has been the general purpose to give the republicans to understand that, if they did not vote the democratic ticket, they would not have employment?—A. I have heard something of the kind.

Q. How generally has that purpose been pursued?—A. I have heard of it being pursued in the city here in some cases, but I cannot say that it was general.

Q. Have you attended any meeting for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that the papers have taken the ground that men who voted the republican ticket could not expect to be employed by democrats?—A. I believe that they did to a certain extent. I may have seen something of the kind, but I know nothing of my own knowledge.

Q. And you believe that the papers have taken that ground; that there has been an impression given to the public that democrats ought not to employ negroes who vote the republican ticket?—A. Well, we wanted people who would vote with us. I did not propose that everybody should be dismissed.

Q. Now, what proportion of these men at the polls of whom you have spoken were armed?—A. I think that nearly every negro at that precinct that day had a bludgeon.

Q. What is a bludgeon?—A. A bludgeon is a piece of wood about two and a half feet long. They were dressed very nicely at the handles, with a string attached, with which they would swing them in their hands.

Q. And the men had the same things?—A. The democratic negroes went there without anything of the kind. They didn't wish to have anything offensive.

Q. But the negro women?—A. O yes, sir; they had them.

Q. Had there been any trouble in this part of the country with the negroes at the time of the election?—A. There was some rioting in the city, sir.

Q. To what extent?—A. I did not see any of them, sir, and do not know anything of them.

Q. Was anybody killed?—A. Yes, sir; young Walter was killed.

Q. Any black men?—A. No black man was killed in the riot in the city.

Q. Any wounded?—A. Some wounded.

Q. When did this occur; shortly before the election?—A. It was only a week or two before the election.

Q. Had there been any riots before that?—A. Yes, sir; in the city there were some.

Q. Who was killed?—A. A white man by the name of Buckner was killed in one.

Q. Any negroes?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. Where was Mr. James Grant when he was hurt?—A. Well, sir, he left the church after he found that he was obnoxious to the negroes. He went out of a sort of a side door and they had the door just packed.

Q. Did you see that yourself?—A. I saw him just before he went out.

Q. But you did not see him when he went?—A. I saw them chase him.

Q. What was your position?—A. Supervisor.

Q. Were you not attending to your duty?—A. When I heard that row I ran to the door.

Q. Was the door in the center or on the side?—A. There is a door at the end and a window at the side, and I was sitting close to the window.

Q. Did you see out of the side window, or did you go to the door?—A. I went to the door, sir.

Q. But you didn't see him when he was hurt?—A. I saw him after he was hurt.

Q. How do you know that he was hurt by the negroes because of his politics?—A. do not know of my own knowledge. I do not know anything further than what I have heard. I have a pretty good idea, but I can't say positively. I saw one man come back immediately after the row, and I saw him pull out a long knife, and it had fresh dirt on it, as if it had been covered with blood and ran in the dirt to clean it.

Q. Well, now, you do not know that those colored men of whom you have spoken did not vote the democratic ticket of their own accord; that they would not have voted it anyhow? You do not know that any other colored man would have voted the democratic ticket, save that some of them told you that they would? Can you come here and swear distinctly and positively, because a negro had told you six months before the election that he was going to vote with you this time, that they did not vote because they were frightened and because they dared not do it?—A. It would be impossible for me to say that. It looked from their appearance that they were democrats. Why should other negroes take hold of these men with bludgeons if they were not democrats?

Q. And the only thing that led you to think that they were going to vote the democratic ticket was because they told you they were going to vote it?—A. They looked as if they were when they came up.

Q. Are the negroes in this section republicans or democrats?—A. Many of them are republicans, but a good many have changed just from the wretched condition of matters here. If there had been no intimidation, I believe we would have had some sixty or seventy votes. A great many old men told me themselves that they were tired of this concern now, that they were getting no schools.

Q. And you told them that if they wanted schools they must vote for Wade Hampton?—I did, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Well, sir, as to any intimidation that might have been offered by you, you never threatened any colored man in your employ that if he did not vote the democratic ticket you would turn him off?—A. I told them, sir, that those that voted with me I would think better of.

Q. Is it not the policy of the republicans to have employes that vote with them?—A. I thought so then.

Q. As for this man that ran away, you say they pursued him?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Did you see them strike him?—A. No, sir; I was not near them. There was too large a crowd between for me to see.

Q. You saw him the next day?—A. O, yes.

Q. You saw the cuts upon him?—A. O yes, sir.

Q. Did he say who cut him?—A. He told me who struck him with the bludgeon, but he told me that when the cutting was done a woman was lying on his head.

Q. As for these twenty-four or twenty-five colored men you say that you said you believed intended to vote the democratic ticket, you believed so from what they said to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they influenced by any threats made by you or by any threats that anybody else made?—A. No, sir; I do not think so; just from what I had been telling them.

Q. Then you saw those persons coming to the polls, and from their appearance you thought that they intended to carry out their wishes?—A. I felt sure that they intended voting the democratic ticket.

Q. But they didn't vote the ticket?—A. O, they voted the republican ticket, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You had told these men that if they did not vote the democratic ticket you should think whether you would give them employment or not?—A. These men were good democrats—most of them; they are all men who would have voted the democratic ticket without my saying a word to them. There were some men to whom I may have said: "Well, now, if you don't vote with me this time, and if you are impudent, or saucy, I will think whether I will dismiss you or not."

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You assert, however, that you never threatened any man in your employment that if he did not vote the democratic ticket you would turn him away or you would refuse to employ him?—A. I don't recollect ever threatening anybody.

Q. Do you know the fact that many negroes have joined democratic clubs?—A. A number of them have joined the democratic clubs. We had a democratic club out with us. I saw the paper and saw the signatures.

Q. Were any of them forced to join the clubs by threats or intimidation?—A. No, sir; they were intimidated from joining the club.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Were there democratic negroes who came to the polls and were compelled to vote the republican ticket outside of these men in your employ of whom you have spoken?—A. I could not tell what they were before. There were very few democratic negroes before this last election.

Q. But there were a few negroes that had been voting the democratic ticket all the way through, and they were intimidated—some of them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You said that twenty-five or thirty at least had told you that they were going to vote the democratic ticket, and they didn't do it?—A. That is so, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. You say there were not many democratic negroes before this last election?—A. Very few, sir.

Q. A great preponderance of the negro vote was republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But this time you noticed a marked change?—A. A very great change, sir.

Q. And this you attribute to the fact that the men whom they elected to office before had not complied with the promises they had made them—had not give them schools?—A. Exactly, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You have said just now to the chairman that there were very few colored democrats in your precinct before this last election. Now, at this last election how many were there?—A. There were nine voted the democratic ticket there.

Q. How many more were there that did not vote? Can you name one?—A. John Brown didn't vote.

Q. Name another one.—A. Simon Bennett promised to vote the democratic ticket, but did not vote at all.

Q. Who was another one?—A. I could not give you the number. These two men were right before me there.

Q. Did they stand by you in the meeting?—A. John Brown stood by me in the meeting all day. He could not get out. If he had gone out he would have been killed.

Q. Did you tell them to stay there; that they would get hurt if they went out?—A. They staid themselves.

Q. You know two that did not vote?—A. Two that were there that did not vote, and many that did not come at all that didn't vote.

Adjourned.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

The subcommittee met at 10 o'clock a. m. All the members present.

PETER LUCAS, colored, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question, How old are you?—Answer, Forty-nine, sir.

Q. Were you born in this State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have always lived here?—A. Always, sir.

Q. Do you live in the Red Top Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir; right in that same place.

Q. Did you vote at the Red Top Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time did you get there?—A. About nine o'clock in the morning.

Q. How soon after you got there did you vote?—A. I went there about nine o'clock; I reckon I voted about quarter after nine.

Q. Well, after you voted, just state what you did, where you went, and what occurred.—A. I went in, and when I was gwine to vote I was told to hold up my ticket, but I couldn't do it.

Q. Who told you to hold it up?—A. The managers of the poll was the party who said we must hold up our tickets when we voted, so that they could see who voted and who didn't vote. I couldn't hold up my ticket, 'cause there was a murmuring, &c., and I couldn't do it, and I just went and put my ticket in the box.

Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. The democratic ticket, sir.

Q. Well, go on, sir.—A. I then retired back, out of the doors, and about 50 yards from the doors they surrounded me.

Q. Who surrounded you?—A. A crowd of colored people with clubs and sticks, and one said, "Let him alone; he voted the right ticket." The others said, "No, kill him; for he didn't," and they let me go. After I went home to my house six men came there—

Q. Six of whom?—A. Colored people.

Q. Six of those that had been at the polls?—A. Yes, sir. They came to my house and asked me for the ticket what I voted, and I gave them the ticket back what I voted.

Q. What tickets were those that you had?—A. Republican tickets, sir.

Q. When the crowd surrounded you after you came out from the polls, did you say anything about what ticket you had voted?—A. I told them, to save myself, that I voted the right ticket, but I know what I voted, and our party couldn't protect one another, 'cause they were weak, and they was a killing and slaying, and we retired.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. At the church, they asked you what ticket you had voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the colored men?—A. Yes, sir; and they came to my house and asked for the ticket what I had, and I give it back to them, and one says, "The committee says you must give the ticket back for they want it back." And I gave it back. Then I started from my house to go to feed the hogs over the road, about a hundred yards from me in the swamp, and I looked out in the road and I saw a gang of men coming down the road.

Q. What, if anything, did they have in their hands?—A. Clubs, sir. I saw them coming and I knew then they were coming after me, and I ran across the swamp and they run me down and coted me, and then they fetched me up at the Red Top again; at about two hundred yards from it, and then they stripped off my jacket down to my vest and give me about 150 lashes with grubs, a switch about as big as my thumb, and they let me go, and in that time a gang of women was seen coming down from the Red Top after me again; then I run and got away from them.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. From the women?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did the women have in their hands, if anything?—A. Clubs, too. Then in my running I left my wife in the road where they whipped me; after I run up in the woods I heard a great noise behind me in the road where I left my wife; then I turned back to the road. I thought they were murdering my wife behind me. Then a young man met me in the time I was coming back for my wife, and he stripped me again.

Q. Who was this man?—A. Eppa Small, a colored man.

Q. What office did he hold?—A. He was one of the rallying committee.

Q. What did he do?—A. He stripped me again and he gave me about ten lashes more.

Q. Well, then did you go home?—A. Then I went around in the woods and went home.

Q. Were the women gone when you got home?—A. Yes, sir; I left them in the road. I went around through the woods.

Q. When you got home the women had gone and your wife was home?—A. Yes, sir; my wife had come back home.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did you ever vote before this time?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. How many times?—A. I have always been voting, but since I changed my desire to vote on the other side, it's about eight years ago.

Q. It is about eight years since you began to vote?—A. No, sir; eight years since I changed on the other side.

Q. What side did you vote on eight years ago, before you changed?—A. The republican, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any trouble before?—A. No, sir.

Q. When they came to your house and asked you for the tickets that you had, did you give them to them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many did you have?—A. Only one.

Q. You gave that back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who gave it to you?—A. A young fellow on the road.

Q. A colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you were whipped the first time you turned to go back, hearing a great noise in the road, what did you find there?—A. When I heard the noise I went back, thinking they had my wife. When I went back my wife was squealing and hallooing, and she had went into a house and the women couldn't catch her.

Q. What house did she go into?—A. Sampson McNeal's house.

Q. Was he a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he a wife?—A. Yes, sir; he had a wife.

Q. How long did she stay there?—A. Well, I couldn't tell you how long she staid there, because she went into the house when they came to catch her. When I came back they came out of the house.

Q. Who whipped you the second time?—A. Whereabouts, sir?

Q. The second time when you came back and when somebody met you and stripped you and gave you ten lashes?—A. Eppa Small.

Q. He was a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say?—A. He says, "What did you vote that ticket for, sir?" I says, "No, Eppa, I didn't, son." He says, "You are a damn liar, sir; you sent the ticket back to us." I told him no I didn't sent the ticket back, but that they asked me for it, and said that the tickets ought to be in before 6 o'clock, and so I give the tickets back; that's what I told Eppa; so he stripped me off and give me ten lashes over again.

Q. You said before, that you had given the ticket back when they first came to your house?—A. Yes, sir; I give them a ticket before.

Q. Before the lashes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you ran away, then ran back again, and this man Small took you and gave you ten lashes more?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give him the ticket?—A. No, sir; I gave it to a man by the name of Andrew Effy.

Q. What did Small say to you?—A. He says, "What did you vote that ticket for?"

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr Cochrane:)

Q. What ticket?—A. The democratic ticket, and I told him I didn't, and he says, "You old son of a bitch, you lie," and I begged him and told him that I didn't; and so he tumbled right on me, and stripped me off again, and give me about ten lashes more.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Was he alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were the other people?—A. The gang was in the church. There was two men with him in the road, but he was the only one that give me that lick.

Q. Had you had any talk with those colored people about your voting before this?—A. Yes, sir; they always talked, and I told them I voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Who did you work for?—A. I worked for myself, sir; I have my own place.

Q. Own your own land?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you do on your land?—A. Plant corn, cotton, and potatoes.

Q. Had you talked with any white people about your voting, or had they talked with you?—A. No, sir; not one.

Q. You voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; it's eight years ago now, sir, since I changed over.

Q. And you never said anything about your voting to anybody, and they had not said anything to you?—A. Not the day of voting.

Q. But before?—A. Well, of course, I always said I would vote the same old way.

Q. Had you talked with the white people the day of the voting about how you would vote?—A. No, sir; not that day.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

JAMES GRANT, colored, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. How old are you?—Answer. Twenty-six, sir.

Q. Were you born in this county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have always lived here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote at the Red Top Church precinct in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. The democratic ticket, sir.

Q. What time did you go to the polls on the morning of election-day?—A. Very early in the morning, before six o'clock, before the poll opened.

Q. When you went there, and when you went in to vote, were there many people in the church?—A. When they turned the box there didn't been many, but the time I put in the ticket there was a good many crowded in.

Q. Were there many about the table at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Colored people?—A. All colored; just a few whites.

Q. How many white men do you say were there?—A. There was Captain Latham, Mr. Murphy, and Julius Gess.

Q. Who was he?—A. Julius Gess works with Captain Latham.

Q. Who was the republican supervisor?—A. It is a gentleman, I don't know his name. I think his name is Mr. Johnson. I am not certain of it. He is a short gentleman, a white man.

Q. Any other white man there?—A. No, sir; these are the only ones, if I don't mistake the names.

Q. Without any questions from me, I want you to go on and state in your way, from the time you voted, what was said or done to you during the day.—A. After I got in and voted my ticket, the place where I put my ticket in the box was so crowded that I jumped out of the window; the window was always open. I went out and took a ticket out of my pocket—

Q. What ticket?—A. Democratic, sir; the same that I voted.

Q. How many democratic tickets did you have?—A. I had a good deal, sir. I didn't count them. After I had voted my own and I took the tickets out of my pocket, a young man came up to me, that time, by the name of Simon Bennett. Simon Bennett said to me, "The crowd is very strong around the door, and if anybody votes the democratic ticket he will be put to death," and says he, "If I can't vote the ticket I won't vote at all." I says, says I, "If you can't vote as you choose, fold your ticket up close, and show it to no man, and then you can put it in the box; don't show it to no man till you get up to that box." At that time he was standing with me, a little way from the church, and then he commenced walking with me, and I had my ticket in my hand, and the crowd burst right out behind me, and we considered the crowd was coming to get the ticket. I wheeled around and I says to Bennett, "Do you think that crowd is after me?" He says, "I don't know." By that time the crowd was nearly up on me, and I heard one man in the crowd say, says he, "Catch the son of a bitch," and as I looked behind me Simon Bennett broke off and run, and I broke off and run, and then we run down the road a little ways, and we turned the fork of the road that goes up to the O'Hare's plantation. As we turned the fork we saw a crowd coming across the field to cut me off.

Q. Part followed after you and the balance cut you off?—A. Yes, sir; after I turned the fork I seen the crowd cutting me off, but they didn't have closed up on me yet, and I wheeled round and saw that they had me in a ring. Then I run round in the ring trying to break out and get away. Then the crowd that had cut me off closed up on me, when one man, by the name of Solomon Lyon, struck me and knocked me down.

Q. Where did he strike you?—A. He struck me right in the head. He struck me two blows; one blow staggered me and the last one, in the back of the head, knocked me down.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What did he strike you with?—A. A green gum-club. As he knocked me down I jumped up and he knocked me down again.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. Where did he hit you that time?—A. All in the same spot, sir. Then I jumped up again and Ben Manigault flew up and says he, "Kill the son of a bitch; he voted the democratic ticket." One man says, "No; don't kill him." Sol Lyon says, "Kill the son of a bitch; he is nearly done died. Kill him at once." I says, "O, do, boys; don't kill me," and I jumped up, and Ben Manigault struck at me again, and as Ben struck at me he fell with the force of his own blow and I jumped up and run toward the bank to get to the road, and Lyons says, "Kill him, kill him; don't leave him; he's nearly dead now;" and he runs up and strikes me on the head again.

Q. What with?—A. The same club, and I grabbed hold to the grass on the dam and crept across the dam and run cross the road, and Rebecca Bennett, she run down the road screaming, and I says, "O, do, darling, save me; save me;" and she run toward me, and she hugged I and I hugged she, and she threw me down, and she was on top of me trying to cover me with her clothes.

Q. I see a long scar on your forehead. How did you get that?—A. Ben Manigault, sir, gave me that.

Q. Was that the last time he struck you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, what did they do, if anything, after Rebecca Bennett threw herself over you and tried to protect you?—A. Sol Lyon struck me a lick then on the right side of the head, and in that time Rebecca, she cotched me and I cotched she, and she threw me under her, and they caught up my leg, which was sticking out a piece from her dress, and beat me on my leg, and one of my arms was out, which I cotched she with, and they beat me on my arm too, and some one, to break my hold on sho, cut my arm.

Q. How many times?—A. Two times, sir; cut right to the bone.

Q. Suppose you let us see your arm. (The witness exhibited his right arm to the committee and displayed two long cuts near the elbow. The witness also exhibited the cuts on his head, one on the forehead on the top and one at the back of his head, which were not entirely healed.)

Q. Were you cut any place else?—A. Yes, sir; on my knee.

Q. On the knee of what leg?—A. The left leg.

Q. Was that a deep cut?—A. Yes, sir. You know that cap you can twist about on your leg, they cut down to that; and whatever they was cutting it with, slipped, and it went down side of that bone, and went in there. They sawed right across the cap, and the cap want one side and slipped down. That is the chief pain I've got now, and the doctor says it'll be over six months before I can walk good on it, sir.

Q. You are lame now from that wound?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go on and state what occurred after you were cut.—A. Rebecca she was on top of me, and she covered up everything except this right arm and left leg, and they cut that; and one woman she came up and struck me in the head, and Rebecca she was hollerin', "Do marster; don't kill him; don't kill him!"

Q. You say a woman came up and struck you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, after she struck you, what occurred?—A. Julia Madison she came up and struck me.

Q. What occurred after that?—A. After that, Rebecca was then hollerin', and they said, "Kill the woman and get the damned nigger out; kill him, for he voted the democratic ticket."

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Who said that?—A. One of the party. He says, "Kill the woman; kill the damned woman and get the damned nigger out. Kill her; there's no women here to-day; there's no law." Some of them said, "The governor says any nigger man that votes the democratic ticket to-day, kill him, and he will stand in front of the law."

Q. You do not know who it was that made that remark?—A. No, sir; I was covered up by she. Then after that Rivers came up—Richard Rivers.

Q. Was he a colored man?—A. Yes, sir; he was one of the rallying committee. He came up, and says: "Boys, don't do that man so;" he says, "If he did vote the democratic ticket you ought to whip him, but you have no right to beat him that way;" says he, "Stop, boys; don't beat him so;" then every one of the men stopped.

Q. Rivers said, "If you did vote the democratic ticket to whip you, but not beat you in that way?"—A. Yes, sir; whip me, but not beat me with clubs.

Q. Well, then, did they go away?—A. Says he, "Stop, boys; go away," and then they went away. After the crowd went away, says he, "Get up, Miss Bennett;" and Miss Bennett wouldn't get up off me, and Rivers he lifted her up, and she lifted I up, and we three raised up together off the ground. Then Rivers walks a little ways with I and Miss Bennett and leaves me in the hands of Miss Bennett, and Miss Bennett leads me home.

Q. When you got home did you go to bed?—A. When I got home they stripped me. Of course they had to close my bleeding, and I washed myself and went right to bed.

Q. How long were you in bed?—A. After I went to bed the arm commenced to bleed again, and that was Tuesday morning about 9 o'clock, and I laid in bed till Sunday, when Dr. Simmons came up from the city and sewed up the arm and knee and said I must go to the city. Says he, "Grant must go to the city," and I refused coming to the city. Says I, "I never been to a hospital yet." Says he, "Grant, if you don't go to the city your wound will turn out bad; you must go where you can get close attendance." So I says, "Doctor, I'll do what you said." Sunday evening they lifted up the mattress off the bed and put the mattress in the wagon and the men pulled the wagon across the bridge and hitched the mule in and fetched me to the railroad and took me up and put me into the conductor's box and put me in the hospital.

Q. How long were you in the hospital?—A. I was there three weeks, sir; and I asked the doctor to let me go home, and he said, "Yes, if I promised not to walk on my leg." Said he, "That leg won't be fit to walk on for six months."

Q. Have you been able to do anything since?—A. No, sir; my leg won't hold the weight of my body.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Had you voted before this year?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. How many times?—A. Once, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. The last election time, sir; two years ago.

Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. I voted for Mr. Green, sir.

Q. Was that the democratic or conservative ticket?—A. It was what they called the independent republican ticket.

Q. It was not the republican ticket?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you have only voted twice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who do you work for?—A. Captain Latham, sir. I have been with him since I've been a small boy.

Q. What did he say to you about politics?—A. He never said anything to me, sir. He just was reading the paper, and he said the election was coming off.

Q. Has anybody talked to you about politics?—A. No, sir; neither republicans nor democrats.

Q. Have you ever been to a meeting?—A. No, sir; we have our own meetings.

Q. To whom did you tell this story, that you have told us; who have you talked with about being beaten?—A. Well, I didn't talk to any one, sir. Of course, after being beaten, I was carried right to my house, and after Dr. Simmons came up and sewed up my wounds, he didn't speak. The most talk I had was with Dr. Porcher at the hospital.

Q. You were three weeks in the hospital?—A. Yes, sir; three weeks in full.

Q. Then you came away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk to anybody about being beaten after coming away?—A. Only with Dr. Porcher.

Q. Did you talk with anybody else about it?—A. No, sir; I only seen Captain Latham when I went home, and I said to him, "I liked to have died from voting."

Q. Did you talk to anybody yesterday about this matter?—A. No, sir; nobody but that gentleman, (pointing to the chairman.)

Q. You told your story to Mr. Cochrane?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk to anybody the day before?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had a blow on the side of your head and you had two cuts on your right arm and a cut on your left leg by the knee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after this affair was over, Rivers lifted Miss Bennett up and she lifted you up; then you went home?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. How far was it to your home?—A. About two or three acres, sir.
- Q. And you washed and went to bed, and it was Sunday before the doctor came to you?—A. Yes, sir; it was Tuesday morning when I voted and it was Sunday when the doctor came.
- Q. And you lay in bed all that time?—A. Yes, sir; I couldn't move, sir. I couldn't move nary leg, and I couldn't move none but the left arm. I couldn't move myself, sir; indeed, I could't get up to go on a chamber.
- Q. They had to lift you up on the mattress?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who helped you into the wagon?—A. Four men, sir.
- Q. Who were they?—A. One was named Given, sir.
- Q. A colored man?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were they all colored men?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the name of another man?—A. I'll tell you the truth; I was so sick that I didn't know.
- Q. How did you know Given?—A. I knew him by his voice, sir.
- Q. Is he here?—A. No, sir. It was a four-cornered mattress they lifted me up on, and one man took hold of each corner, but I was so sick I don't know who they was. They lifted me on the mattress out of the bed, and I lay on that mattress at the hospital.
- Q. You lay in the hospital three weeks?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That was in Charleston here?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What did you do when you came out of the hospital?—A. I went right home, sir.
- Q. How did you get home?—A. I went on the train, sir. A wagon carried me to the railroad, and a cart met me at the train and carried me over to my house.
- Q. What have you been doing since then?—A. Nothing, sir; except trying to walk about on my stick.
- Q. When did you begin to walk on your stick?—A. After I went home, sir.
- Q. Dr. Porcher gave you your discharge?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How long ago was it you got your discharge?—A. I think I was home about two weeks since.
- Q. What have you been doing in this two weeks?—A. I went home, sir; and I lay there in bed, and I would get up by the stove and bathe my leg of a morning. The doctor gave me some dressing to dress my leg with.
- Q. Who do you live with?—A. I live on a piece of land I bought myself, sir.
- Q. How much land is it?—A. Twenty-two and a half acres, sir.
- Q. What do you raise on your land?—A. I plant corn, peas, and cotton, sir.
- Q. Have you got a family?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Anybody in your house besides your own family?—A. No, sir; none at all.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

J. D. MURPHY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question: Where do you reside, sir?—Answer. In the city of Charleston.

Q. Where do you do business?—A. In Saint Andrew's Parish, on the Savannah Railroad.

Q. Where were you on last election-day?—A. At the Red Top church precinct. I was there on the day of election, but I do not live in the parish.

Q. At what time in the morning did you get there?—A. Six o'clock.

Q. With whom did you go?—A. With Captain Latham, James Grant, and John Brown.

Q. How long after you got there did the polls open?—A. I suppose almost immediately after I got there.

Q. Did you go into the church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether many colored people or few came in.—A. There were a great many there. I suppose upward of a hundred. Some of them slept there the night before for the purpose of being there early.

Q. Did they crowd the church up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they around the box?—A. They were around the box early in the morning, but at the persuasion of the republican supervisor they came out later in the day. They assembled around the building with shot-guns and muskets, and some with bayonets on poles and broomsticks, threatening the life of any colored democrat who chose to vote. They actually beat one.

Q. Was there any confusion or noise?—A. There was a colored militia company came there early in the morning with drum and fife and marched past the polls, and countermarched and went down to the other poll, at Brick Church, and, later in the evening, the Old Town colored militia came there, and voted also. They had State arms.

Q. Did you hear any horns blown?—A. Plenty of them—any quantity of them. That was a kind of signal they adopted.

Q. Did you hear any cursing or loud talking?—A. Yes, sir; from a great many of them. They were very boisterous in their remarks; in fact, they threatened Captain Latham's life several times.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What did they call him?—A. They called him a damned democrat, and dared him out of the building. Immediately after Grant had been beaten, I went to see him. I had to be guarded there by the United States deputy marshal, my life being threatened.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane.)

Q. What had been said to you?—A. They expressed a wish to get me out of the building to mob me, I being a democrat. They said no white man had any business there at all; that that portion of the country belonged to them. I went to Grant's house and found him in a very bad condition, all beat up and cut with razors; and sent for a doctor.

Q. Did you see any colored women about there that day?—A. Any quantity of them. I think the day would have been more peaceable if it had not been for the women; they were more boisterous than the men.

Q. State whether they were armed with anything.—A. They had sticks, and some of them had hoes, that you work with in the field.

Q. Were they violent in their language?—A. O, yes, sir. One of them grabbed a musket out of the hands of one of the men and pointed it at Captain Latham. They were very anxious to take his life.

Q. Do you remember how many democratic votes there were polled at that precinct?—A. After the polls closed I think they announced thirteen votes.

Q. Do you recollect how many republican?—A. Some three hundred and odd, I think—three hundred and fifteen or sixteen. I am confident that if the people had not been interfered with, there would have been at least a hundred to a hundred and fifty darkies that would have voted the democratic ticket.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You do not know that?—A. Only from what they stated before the election.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. I wish you would state whether, prior to the election, you heard any persons express their intention to vote the democratic ticket.—A. I did. Some of them came to me during the morning and told me that they intended to vote the democratic ticket, but that it was more than their lives were worth to do it.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many told you that?—A. About half a dozen at that time, but it got so in the day that it was dangerous for them to be seen talking with a white man.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. About half a dozen, on election-day, came and told you that?—A. Yes, sir; early in the morning.

Q. Well, now, prior to the election, within two weeks before the election, did you talk to many of these colored people?—A. Yes, sir; a great many of them. I have a brother-in-law up at Captain Latham's place, and I often go up to see him. A great many have there expressed a willfulness to vote the democratic ticket, and would have done it. There was a colored democratic club formed up there, and the republicans broke it up.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Do you know that fact?—A. Yes, sir; I know that fact.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Give us an estimate of about how many of these colored people talked with you, prior to the election, and announced their desire to vote the democratic ticket.—A. I suppose there were from fifty to a hundred of them altogether, or in that neighborhood.

Q. What reason, if any, did they assign for their desire to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Well, a great many of them told me that they had tried the republican administration in this State for eight years, and found that there was no good came out of it, and that they thought they would try the home-folks now—their old masters; that they thought Mr. Hampton had given every pledge that one man could be expected to give another, and that he was the best man to trust with the State.

Q. Did they say anything about schools?—A. Yes, sir; they said they thought they would get their children educated if the administration was changed. They have no schools here now.

Q. I wish you would state whether these acts of violence at the polls that day which you have spoken of covered the whole day?—A. Yes, sir; the whole day. It was dangerous for a man to have a democratic ticket then in public; he could not exhibit one. I had to vote secretly myself.

Q. You would have been fearful to exhibit your own ticket?—A. I was afraid to examine my ticket.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What is your business?—A. I am employed on the Charleston and Savannah Railroad; I am a carpenter; and my age is thirty-two.

Q. How long have you been employed by this company?—A. I have been employed by the company six years.

Q. Where does the railroad run?—A. From Charleston to Savannah. That evening, after I left the poll, I had to get a deputy United States marshal to see me to the depot. The republican supervisor requested that I should have one, and even then I had to take a by-road to go to the depot.

Q. How many white men were there?—A. Five altogether; one republican and four democrats.

Q. Did any of them have a guard except yourself to leave the polls?—A. No, sir; they did not.

Q. What had you done that you should have a guard?—A. I had done nothing at all, sir; my only offense was being a democrat.

Q. But there were other democrats there?—A. Yes, sir; but they went away in the night; I went away at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. Who was your guard?—A. I forget his name.

Q. Was he a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A colored man?—A. A colored man.

Q. How far did he go with you?—A. About a mile and a half, sir.

Q. Did you have any trouble?—A. We avoided any trouble by taking a by-path. There would have been trouble if I had gone the regular road, because it was regularly guarded by squads of colored men.

Q. Are the officers of the Charleston and Savannah Road democrats?—A. Well, I never questioned them; I do not know, sir.

Q. Did you ever talk politics with them at all?—A. Very seldom, sir.

Q. Did they talk with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they employ republicans?—A. O, a great many, sir; we have plenty of colored men there.

Q. How large was the militia company that came to the polls in the morning?—A. I suppose there must have been from seventy-five to a hundred in it.

Q. Did they belong there?—A. There were two militia companies came there during the day. One of them belonged very near the place. One was called the "Old Town" militia, and the other called themselves Company D, in the lower end of the parish.

Q. How long were they in the neighborhood of the church?—A. They remained there all the best part of the day.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Do you speak of the company of militia as having remained there all the day?—A. Yes, sir; this Company D remained there the best part of the day, and the "Old Town" militia company came there in the evening.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What was that company that came there in the evening?—A. They came from Brick church, and a great many of them voted and returned.

Q. That was another company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large was that?—A. I do not suppose there was over fifty men in that company.

Q. What was the name or letter of that company?—A. I do not know any letter. The negroes call it the "Old Town" militia.

Q. Did they vote during the day?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. Did they have on their uniforms?—A. No, sir; they did not have on any uniforms.

Q. Just had on their ordinary clothes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With muskets, cartridge-boxes, and the usual infantry equipments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they stack their arms?—A. I didn't notice that; they left them outside of the building.

Q. How long was the company that came in the evening there?—A. I suppose they staid there an hour, firing off their guns.

Q. Where did they fire them?—In the bushes right around the church.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

REBECCA BENNETT (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. How old are you?—A. Forty-five years old, I suppose; I really don't know myself.

Q. You have a son?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he a voter?—A. No, sir; he doesn't vote, or he couldn't vote at this election.

Q. Is he twenty-one years of age?—A. Yes, sir; he is about twenty-two years of age.

Q. Did you see any of these men doing anything on election-day in the neighborhood of Red-Top Church precinct to James Grant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did you see? Just tell us in your own way.—A. Whilst I was standing up by the church, sir, I heard a young man by the name of John Green say, "That fellow gwine to vote the democratic ticket;" and say, "See him walking along the road with that other fellow, James Grant;" and that was my son was coming with James Grant. I was standing up by the window when Green said this, and then he went with the men that was standing up to the edge of the church. James Grant had done voted already.

Q. Then Green went up to the crowd, and what did he do?—A. John Green walked from where he was standing by me and walked to the end of the church, and I don't know what he said to the men, but some of the other men said, "One democratic ticket is nothing;" and he said, "One democratic ticket is against us, and it will throw us out of gear." And after he went to the end of the church and talked with those men, I seen them broke to the direction in which my son went. I thought to myself they'll kill my son, and I can't hinder them from killing him, but I will see where they kill him; and I ran up and said to Simon, "What's that kind of noise they have out there?" I says, "I thought they had been whipping you." He said, "They asked me where Grant gone to, and said if I didn't told them, they would kill me, and I told them where Grant went;" and he said, "Mother, run and save Grant." And then I ran and saw the crowd, and James Grant said, "Do, darling, save me, or they'll kill me;" and I run and hugged him, and threw him down under me, and put my clothes over him, and says to the crowd, "O, goodie massie, don't kill him! O, goodie massie, don't kill him! O, goodie massie, don't kill him!" And one man behind me said, "Don't kill the man;" and one said, "For the sake of getting at the man, kill the woman; one woman don't amount to nothing; I want the damn son of a bitch." And I just begged and begged, "Do, massie, don't kill him." So they got him, and beat him, and cut my clothes off my back, clean from the binding to the very last piece on my back.

Q. Where did they cut you?—A. On my knee, sir. And I begged them all I could, "Don't kill him;" and they said they would kill him anyhow, "the God damn son of a bitch; he voted the democratic ticket."

Q. Did any women strike him while you were lying there?—A. When I ran and hugged him Solomon Lyon was nearest to me, and Lyon struck him in my arms, and he said he would kill him—he was so well wounded—he would kill him anyhow, and I just threw him right down, and got on him, and one of his arms and one of his legs was out, and they just got that, and they beat him on his arms and on his legs, and cut him on his knee and on his arms just dreadfully.

Q. Did any woman strike him while he was down?—A. Yes, sir; after I seed the men strike him, I seed the women had a chance to strike his head. Then I put my body over his head, cause the blood was pouring over him just like water, and I was begging them not to knock him any more: "Don't kill him; don't kill him; don't kill him;" and then Rivers come up and told them to stop.

Q. And when did Rivers come up?—A. Rivers come up a good while after that, sir; after Solomon Lyon struck him in my arms, and I was determined to save him. Solomon straddled us and said Miss Bennett get up, and I wouldn't trust him, and Mr. Rivers come up, and said "Don't hit him another lick." Then he said "Get up," and he came and raised me up and I raised up Grant, and we all raised together.

Q. Did you help him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he go to bed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his condition; was he badly cut?—A. Yes, sir; he was badly cut.

Q. Did you see the wounds in his arm?—A. Yes, sir; I washed and dressed them myself, sir.

Q. Did you see the wounds in his knee?—A. Yes, sir; washed and dressed them.

Q. Were these deep cuts?—A. Yes, sir, very.

Q. Was he bleeding?—A. Yes, sir; we had to put the wash-tub to catch the blood.

Q. Did he stay home, or did he go to the hospital?—A. He went to the hospital.

Q. How long was he at home before he went to the hospital?—A. Five days, sir.

Q. Then he was brought down here, was he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at the house when he was carried out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was he carried out?—A. Four men brought him out; four men put him in the wagon, and four men put him in the cart.

Q. The four men carried the mattress out?—A. Yes, sir; they carried him on the mattress and put him in the wagon.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You said you were at the church that morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go to the church where they were voting?—A. I went to the church about 7 o'clock.

Q. What time did all this happen that you have been speaking about?—A. That happened between 8 and 9 o'clock, sir.

- Q. Was your son in the church?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him in the church.
 Q. He did not vote, you say?—A. No, sir; he couldn't vote. He was twenty-two years of age.
 Q. He couldn't vote at the last election?—A. No, sir; he never voted any.
 Q. Was he old enough to vote?—A. I don't think he was old enough to vote.
 Q. When Grant left the church was your son with him?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did you follow them?—A. No, sir; I didn't follow them right off. I didn't have any idea of following them when they walked off together, and I didn't have the idea till I heard John Green say what he did, and I saw the crowd moving across the field and dividing up; then I went. I thought they would kill my son.
 Q. Did they knock him down while you were with him?—A. I threw him down, sir.
 Q. Did they strike him on the head?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did they knock him down?—A. I didn't see that. He was knocked down before I got to him.
 Q. How do you know he was knocked down?—A. He said so, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

- Q. You saw the wounds on his head?—A. Yes, sir; for they struck him right under mo.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. Where do you live?—A. Red-Top church.
 Q. Have you a family?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Who do you live with?—A. I live by myself, on my own land, sir.
 Q. Have you any family besides yourself and son; have you a husband?—A. No, sir.
 Q. What is your business; what do you do for a living?—A. I work at farming.
 Q. Have you land of your own?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. How much land?—A. Fifteen acres of high land, and seven acres of marsh land.
 Q. What do you plant?—A. Corn, pease, potatoes, and cotton.
 Q. Does your son work with you?—A. Yes, sir; but he works out sometimes, too.
 Q. Do you live near where Giant lives?—A. I live on the same plantation. We bought the place together.
 Q. How far does he live from you?—A. About three or four farms. The plantation was cut up in fifteen-acre farms.
 Q. Were you at the church all day?—A. No, sir; I didn't stop at the church all day. I went away directly after the noise started, and of course I didn't have time to go back any more when I took Grant home and washed him and cleaned myself up.
 Q. What time in the day was it that he went home and you washed him?—A. About nine o'clock, sir.
 Q. It was about half past eight when they struck him, when you were with him?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did you see the militia company in the morning?—A. I don't know what they was, sir, but I seen them all.
 Q. They had arms?—A. I didn't see no guns. I seen clubs.
 Q. Did they have file and drum; any music?—A. I think they did, sir; but directly after I got to the church the row started, and I didn't have time to go back any more.
 Q. You did not see anything that happened except this affair?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

- Q. You say your son did not vote on that day?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Why didn't he vote?—A. Well, sir; he said that he would have voted the democratic ticket, but he couldn't vote the ticket, 'cause he would get killed or whipped or something or another.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. He never has voted?—A. Not in his life, sir.
 Q. He could not vote?—A. Not before, sir. He was old enough to vote, however, at this last election.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

SIMON BENNETT (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

- Question. You are the son of Rebecca Bennett?—Answer. Yes, sir.
 Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-two, sir.
 Q. You live in the Red Top Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Were you there on the last election-day?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. What time did you go there in the morning?—A. About seven o'clock, sir.

Q. How many colored people did you see about there when you went there?—A. A great quantity of them, sir.

Q. What were they doing?—A. They were going around with clubs and sticks, making people vote the republican ticket who didn't want to do it.

Q. Were they threatening at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Much noise, confusion, and cursing?—A. Yes, sir; a great deal of noise and confusion.

Q. What was said to you?—A. Nothing was said, only that if I didn't vote the republican ticket they would whip me.

Q. Who said that to you?—A. The crowd said that; I couldn't name them.

Q. What ticket did you want to vote?—A. I wanted to vote the democratic ticket, sir.

Q. Did you vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I didn't vote neither.

Q. Why didn't you vote?—A. Because I could not vote the ticket I wanted to vote, and I didn't vote either one.

Q. Did the threats which these people made keep you from voting the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. When were you twenty-two years old; what was your birthday?—A. I don't know rightly, sir; but I am about twenty-two years of age. I was born in August.

Q. What is your business?—A. My regular business is running a locomotive, sir, in machinery works.

Q. You work on the railroad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you worked there?—A. About four years, sir.

Q. Are you working there now?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. I am working for Captain Latham.

Q. When did you leave the railroad?—A. About two years ago.

Q. How long have you been working for Captain Latham?—A. About seven months, rolling sand from the washer to the sand-pile on the tram-railroad, on the phosphate-works.

Q. Did Captain Latham say anything to you about voting?—A. No, sir; he asked me what ticket, and I told him the democratic ticket, and he said a man is liable to vote whatever he is pleased to vote.

Q. What did you do when you came to the polls in the morning?—A. When I came I had a republican and democratic ticket, but I intended to vote the democratic ticket, and I found out the republican majority was so strong that I didn't vote for any one.

Q. Could you not have voted if you had chosen?—A. No, sir; you could not do it.

Q. Why not?—A. Because they would not let me; because they would whip you.

Q. But they could not do it in the church?—A. But they would whip you after you come out, though.

Q. You could have voted the democratic ticket if you had chosen?—A. I could have voted the democratic ticket if I had wanted to, but I would have got a whipping on the strength of it.

Q. You had a democratic ticket in your hand?—A. Yes, sir; I tore it up; the crowd was so strong that I was afraid to keep it.

Q. If you had folded your ticket as the others did, would they have known what ticket you put in?—A. No, sir; they would not. Some mens would have been whipped whether they voted the democratic ticket or not.

Q. Then it made no difference whether you voted or not?—A. They would whip you, sir.

Q. Who were those men?—A. I couldn't name them, sir; there was a crowd of them.

Q. Where did they belong?—A. They were republican mens.

Q. Did they belong in that parish?—A. That parish, sir.

Q. Yes. Who did they work for?—A. Different people, sir.

Q. And they would whip men whether they voted the republican ticket or not?—A. The only way they wouldn't whip you was if they carried you up to the box and saw you put the republican ticket in; that is the only way they wouldn't whip you.

Q. Then that was the only way there was to avoid a whipping?—A. That was the only way, sir.

Q. Where did you discover that?—A. I went there about seven o'clock, and about eight o'clock the noise was commenced; but I didn't stay there all day. When I saw there was a fuss, I got away as quick as I could.

Q. How long did you stay at the polls?—A. Till about three o'clock in the evening, when everything was quiet as far as I seen. I only went away once before three o'clock.

Q. How long did you stay then?—A. I didn't stay very long. I went home at three o'clock, after I see the great quantity that was there, I went back home and staid till the meeting was over at six o'clock.

Q. Did any one talk with you about your vote?—A. They asked me what ticket I voted, and I told them I voted the republican ticket, in order to escape.

Q. But you told Mr. Latham you were going to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir, I did; but I didn't do it, because I couldn't help myself. He said to me: "Vote as you please; no man can prevent you."

Q. Were you with your mother and Grant?—A. No, sir; I was not with them. Grant and I was walking up and down the road, and he gave me the democratic ticket to vote; and I told him, says I, "I don't think I can vote this ticket. I will be in danger." He said, "Yes; if you are going to vote this ticket, you have got to be very bold;" and I said, "Well, I don't think I will run the risk of it." Then we walked up and down till we saw a crowd coming, and they hollered out, "Catch the son of a bitch; catch him, catch him." Then he asked me if I thought they was running after him; and I said, "I think I will run." Then he run, and I didn't run, because I didn't think they was after me. Then they asked me where was Grant, and I told them, and I went back to the poll.

Q. How long did you stay there then?—A. I staid there till about three o'clock, and I went away.

Q. And you didn't come back at all?—A. No, sir; not till the evening; not till everything was quiet.

Q. Do you live near Grant?—A. On the same place.

Q. In the same house?—A. No, sir; not in the same house.

Q. How far from him?—A. I live about half a mile from grant.

Q. How much was he hurt?—A. He was cut five places, and beat all over the body.

Q. Did you see him when he was in his own house after he was hurt?—A. No, sir; I never seen him till about three days afterward.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. I went to his house to see him.

Q. Where was he?—A. In his house.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He was laying down.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. In his bed.

Q. Was he very ill?—A. Yes, sir; he could not raise his right hand, nor raise his leg.

Q. Were you with him when he went to the city?—A. Yes, sir; I helped to put him on the cars.

Q. How did you do that?—A. I held one end of the mattress.

Q. When did he come back from the hospital?—A. He was in the hospital three weeks. He came back home one Sunday morning.

Q. How did he come home?—A. He came home in a cart.

Q. Was there anything done about his being hurt? Did they make any complaint against those fellows who struck him and cut him?—A. No, sir; they didn't have any complaint about them.

Q. Do you know who they were?—A. No, sir; I don't know them rightly, because I didn't know either at the time he got cut. When he run off I went back up to the poll.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. You spoke about living on the same place with Grant. This was a plantation once?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the land was together then; it was divided up into fifteen-acre pieces?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your mother bought one piece?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Grant bought another?—A. Yes, sir; about half a mile away.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

JOHN BROWN (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About thirty-three, now, sir.

Q. Were you born and raised in this State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What ticket do you vote?—A. I vote the democratic ticket. I vote the ticket I think is the right ticket.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live now in Saint Andrew's Parish, where my occupation is—in the Red Top Church precinct.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Were you at the polls on election-day?—A. Yes, sir; at the Red Top Church precinct polls.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. Six o'clock, sir.

Q. Go on and state in your own way what occurred there.—A. When I came up there was another party coming up, and they hollered "Hurrah for Chamberlain," and I hollered "Hurrah for Hampton," and the opposite party shook their clubs at me, and I said "Boys, there is no use having trouble; we came here as friends, let's all go away that way; you do all you can for Chamberlain, and I will do all I can for Hampton." By that time I commenced issuing out democratic tickets. James Grant voted his ticket and he went out, and directly I heard a row outside, and I heard that they had beaten James Grant. I says to Captain Latham, "Let's go out and relieve Grant;" and he says, "I can't leave the box; if I go out they will kill me;" and he said, "You go and get a crowd and relieve him." And after that a man came up to the door and said, "Is John Brown in here?" I said "Yes; what do you want with him?" He said, "Never mind, you son of a bitch, we'll kill you before night." And I began to get scared. I says, "I must get out of here." Captain Latham says, "Ain't you going to vote?" And I says, "No, sir; I ain't going to vote; I ain't going to give my life to vote." Then I went upstairs and staid there from eight o'clock in the morning in the top-loft until 4 o'clock in the evening, and they came all around the house and hollered, "Come down and get what you are going to get; never mind, Zacharias is after you." They said, "Come down, salvation is coming." I said, "Your time is done this evening;" and they said, "We have got till next Wednesday night to fix you."

Q. What time was that?—A. About 12 o'clock. There was a window in the loft, and I went to the window and at the same time I saw two men that stood leaning on their guns, and these men were watching around there, and I fired back. And when I went to the window again I peeped out and these men had disappeared, and I saw another crowd with clubs at that door, and I goes right in sight where they could see me again and these two men came back; and then I staid in there till they ran off after another man; and when the crowd yelled and ran off I stole my chance, and two marsha's came and brought me home.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir; I was afraid to vote.

Q. You would have voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I went there with that intention, but they told me that if I voted that ticket they would kill me before night. They said all they was waiting for was for me to put it in the box. There would have been thirty or forty men who would have voted that day, but the threats that was made caused the clubs to disband. We had a democratic club up there, and if you don't believe it I will show you something, sir.

[The witness produces a paper and hands it to the chairman.]

There were thirty names on my list, sir.

Q. What is this paper? [Referring to the paper handed him by the witness.]

A. That was the constitution of the club.

Q. How many members did you have?—A. Thirty.

Q. Who drew up this paper?—A. Well, I had it drawn up. I got Mr. Latham to write it. The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The paper is as follows:

"CONSTITUTION OF THE CLUB.

"HAIG PLANTATION, SAINT ANDREW'S PARISH, S. C.,

"October 2, 1876.

"At a meeting held at the above plantation by the colored citizens of said parish, for the purpose of taking into consideration the political issues of the day, a club was formed by the title of 'Saint Andrew's Colored Democratic Club,' when John Brown was elected president, James Grant vice-president, and James Gibbs secretary.

"The following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"That we, the colored citizens composing this club, consider that the republican party of this State has, by its corruption and flagrant departure from economy and honest government, ceased to have the confidence of every upright, honorable man, and seeing that the interests of the whole community, rich and poor, suffer to such an extent as to render the name of the party a reproach to all that belong to it, therefore we hereby pledge ourselves to the support of the democratic party, as represented by Wade Hampton for governor and Simpson for lieutenant-governor; indeed, to give the whole ticket as nominated by the democratic convention our most cordial support.

"Resolved that we recognize with gratitude the great effort made by the white citizens of the State to get honest men and an honest government, and particularly the protection extended to the colored man, and hereby take the opportunity of denouncing the late riots in Charleston as well as in other sections, and the radical party, or rather its leaders, as the instigators thereof."

Q. Who did you say wrote that paper?—A. Mr. Latham. It was on his plantation where we had this club.

Q. You say that this club was disbanded?—A. Yes, sir; they were scared apart.

Q. Was this paper submitted to the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it voted for by all these thirty?—A. Yes, sir; all these men were present, sir, and they all adopted that resolution by a vote.

Q. It was read to them?—A. Yes, sir; it was read to them.

Q. How long did the club have an existence—how long after it was organized and passed that resolution?—A. We had some four or five different meetings before it was broken up, and then they commenced talking about cutting the heart out of any one that joined the democratic club, and then they commenced drawing razors, and then they separated.

Q. Who commenced drawing razors?—A. Richard Rivers.

Q. When was this?—A. At one of our meetings; and after that they got to making rows, and we disbanded.

Q. How many votes did you say would have been polled that day if you had had a peaceable and quiet election?—A. From seventy-five to eighty; that is my judgment, sir.

Q. How many colored men did you talk with who promised you to vote?—A. There was over eighty that promised me to vote, sir, by my influence amongst them. I told them I thought I was doing right, and if they did right they would be doing just the same thing; that I thought it was right to go with the men we was doing work with; that it was not right to vote against him to-day and come back the next day and beg him for bread. They broke up the Wilkes poll; they broke it up and divided a part of the votes to the Brick Church, and the other part went to the Red Top Church, with the intention to keep up these riots, and they said that day that there was no law that day, and they could do anything they chose.

Q. Do you work for Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir; I am with him two years now.

Q. What do you do?—A. Engineer, sir.

Q. I wish you would state now whether Captain Latham ever used any improper influence with you to compel or to induce you to vote?—A. He never did, sir.

Q. Did he ever threaten that if you did not vote the democratic ticket he would discharge you?—A. He never did, sir.

Q. Do you know of his ever having threatened any of his men?—A. He didn't do it in my presence; but I am satisfied he never threatened them.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say that over eighty promised you to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; there was more than that, sir.

Q. How many of those eighty men did you see vote the democratic ticket, or did they vote at all?—A. All of them voted the republican ticket with the exception of nine. There was fourteen votes at that poll. One was thrown out, I believe, sir; that made it thirteen; and there was four white democratic votes.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You have worked for Mr. Latham two years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it suggested this club that you spoke of, of which this paper is the constitution?—A. I got it up myself.

Q. What prompted you to do that?—A. I will tell you why I got it up. When the governors were first nominated all the people around the place commenced to say that they were going to vote for Hampton. Well, now, says I, "I am going to vote for him;" so says I, "The best way to do this business is to find out who is going to vote with us, and we will draw up a paper and every man will sign his name, and pledge himself when he signs to vote the ticket," and thirty men signed.

Q. [Referring to constitution.] Whose writing is that in?—A. Mr. Latham's writing.

Q. That is just as you prepared it?—A. Yes, sir. I asked him to do it.

Q. He only wrote it for you?—A. Yes, sir; he asked me the words, what I wanted to write, and he wrote down the words as I spoke them to him.

Q. Had you voted before this year?—A. I didn't vote at all.

Q. Have you never voted?—A. Before this year at every election.

Q. What ticket have you voted before?—A. Always the democratic ticket.

Q. You never had any trouble before?—A. No, sir. I have always voted in the city. I have had no trouble in the city here.

Q. You have never voted the republican ticket?—A. No, sir.

Q. In getting up this club, was this paper read to the members of the club?—A. It was, sir.

Q. Who read it?—A. I had a man, that was the secretary, that read the papers to them; and also Mr. Latham's clerk read the papers to them.

Q. Where did the men sign? I see no names here.—A. The old paper what I had was written with a pencil, and I carried that old paper to Mr. Latham, and I got him to draw up this new one from the old paper.

Q. Then the signatures were on your old paper? This is not the paper they signed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is it?—A. I left it there at the plantation.

Q. Why did you bring this paper here?—A. I have had this all the time to show that I had the club there.

Q. But they didn't sign this paper?—A. O, yes, sir, they signed it.

Q. Show me the names.—A. They didn't sign it; they didn't sign that paper, sir; but they signed the one that it was writ by.

Q. What paper did they sign?—A. They put their names to the piece of paper that I told you that was drawn up in pencil.

Q. Well, what did you bring this paper here for?—A. I have toted this paper all the time with me.

Q. Why did you bring this paper here?—A. I wanted to prove that I had a club.

Q. Why didn't you bring the paper with you that they signed—the paper in pencil?—A. If I couldn't find it I could bring the colored men that signed it.

Q. You don't know where it is?—A. I don't know exactly where it is. I don't know whether I could find it or not.

Q. Well, why did you bring this paper?—A. I only pulled out this paper to prove what I said was true.

Q. But it doesn't prove anything of that kind?—A. It proved that I had the club, sir.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran.) Of course, this paper speaks for itself.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did Mr. Latham tell you to show that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who were the men that signed this paper of which you spoke?—A. Well, sir, there are four of them out there now, [pointing to the hall,] Jack Davis, Jim Simmons, Simon Bennett, and Jim Grant.

Q. Where do they work?—A. They work for Mr. Latham.

Q. All work for Mr. Latham?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of those thirty men who signed the paper work for Latham?—A. All that signed the paper were working in his employ; but some that worked for him didn't live on his place.

Q. Now, have you ever heard it said, or do you know, that the white people, or democrats, did not employ republicans, who voted the republican ticket?—A. I don't know nothing about anything except Mr. Latham, who has got over fifty republicans working there now.

Q. How many men does he employ?—A. Sometimes he has a hundred head.

Q. How many men does he employ now?—A. I suppose somewhere about sixty; and then he ain't got half as many as he wants.

Q. Cannot he get as many as he wants?—A. Sometimes he can and sometimes he can't.

Q. How do you know that he wants more men than he has got?—A. Because he takes on every man that comes, sir.

Q. Can't he get men?—A. Well, there are so many phosphate-works around there that they can't always get enough men.

Q. Who was it ran you up in the loft?—A. I could not tell you who it was; a gang of men with clubs.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I got up then from where I was sitting down, and I said to Mr. Latham, "I have got to get out of here;" and I went out of there and I went up there into the loft, and they spied me there.

Q. How did you get up in the loft?—A. I went up by the stairs that goes up in the side of the house. There was an old preacher standing by the window, and I asked him to go up there and move that door from the hole; and he says, "Wait;" and I said, "Go and move it now, or they will take me out of here;" and he went and moved the door, and as soon as he opened it I went and crawled up, and they spied me up there, and they ridiculed me, and they told me to come down, and that salvation was at my door; to come down, that they wanted to see me, and they wanted to know if I rented the room up there.

Q. How long did you remain up there?—A. It was about four o'clock when I came down. I went up there about eight o'clock.

Q. Who were the marshals that went home with you?—A. Simon Cryer and Richard Rivers, and the other was this old preacher.

Q. Did you have any trouble in going home?—A. No, sir; I didn't have any trouble. When they got to the place they called the new building, just before they got to my house, they turned back, and this old preacher turned to me and said, "Let us go through the woods, and we will get home."

Q. What was the preacher's name?—A. Samuel Green.

Q. He went with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you get home?—A. I left the church about four o'clock, and I suppose I was half an hour getting home.

Q. Did he go with you to your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he at the polls all day till he came home with you?—A. Yes, sir; and then he went back again in the evening.

Q. What was the poll at Wilkes's, that you said was broken up?—A. There was always three voting-precincts in that parish, but this year the Wilkes poll was broken up.

Q. Who broke it up?—A. I don't know that, but the voters there was divided into the Brick church and the Red Top church.

Q. And out of this club of thirty men, nine, you say, voted the democratic ticket?—A. Well, sir, there must have been nine, because there was thirteen tickets in the box, and there was only four white men that voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Had these colored men always voted the democratic ticket?—A. Well, I never noticed no one of them vote the democratic ticket before.

Q. Did you vote that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who else did not vote?—A. Well, I do not know of anybody not voting, but this same Simon Bennett. So he told me.

Q. Have you ever testified before anywhere?—A. No more than on a case for Jim Grant; never before that time in my life.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

JAMES SIMMONS (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran:)

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About twenty-five, sir.

Q. Where do you live?—A. I live at the Red Top Church precinct, in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. Will you state whether you were at the Red Top Church precinct on the day of election?—A. Yes, sir; I was there.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. I got there about a little before six o'clock.

Q. How long did you stay there altogether?—A. I was there, sir, until 1 o'clock in the day.

Q. Did you see many people there toward 7, 8, or 9 o'clock?—A. O, yes, sir; a great crowd of people.

Q. What did they have, if anything?—A. They had clubs and guns.

Q. Did you see any bayonets or swords?—A. I saw bayonets, sir.

Q. Just tell us what they did to you, if anything?—A. After I went into the church to vote, they came to the door and said if I ever came out there they would kill me.

C. Did you vote?—A. Yes, sir; I voted.

Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. I voted the republican ticket, sir.

Q. What ticket did you want to vote?—A. I wanted to vote the democratic ticket, sir.

Q. Did you get a democratic ticket from anybody?—A. Yes, sir; I got a democratic ticket from James Grant.

Q. Well, did any of these people see you get it?—A. No, sir; they didn't see it at all, sir.

Q. Tell me what they did to you when you voted. Did you meet anybody; and, if so, what did they do and say to you?—A. They never said anything at all. I went in to vote, and they told me if I ever came out there they would kill me, because I voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Before you went in to vote, did anybody offer you a republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; before I went in to vote they brought me a republican ticket.

Q. Who was that?—A. Sol Lyon.

Q. Was anybody with him?—A. Yes, sir; the other rallying committee were with him.

Q. What did they have with them?—A. They had clubs.

Q. What did you say when he offered you this republican ticket?—A. I told him I didn't want no republican ticket.

Q. What did he say then?—A. They said, "Well, let him alone; if he don't vote this republican ticket, he won't vote no other ticket here to-day."

Q. After you voted did you go out?—A. I couldn't go out, sir.

Q. Well, when did you go out?—A. I never went out till one o'clock, as I told you, and how I got out was this way: I had to go to the door and tell them I didn't know it was a democratic ticket; and one man caught me by the coat, and said he would introduce me to a party, and I must beg the party's pardon; and he took me, and I had to go down on my knees and take off my hat and ask their pardon.

Q. Ask pardon for what?—A. They said I voted the democratic ticket, and I said I didn't; and they threatened to beat me, and if I hadn't done that they would have beaten me to death.

Q. Well, did you tell them you voted the democratic or republican ticket?—A. I told them I voted the republican ticket, sir.

Q. Was that a quiet crowd, or was it a noisy one?—A. O, George, it was the same as a tiger, sir.

Q. Did you hear any threats made?—A. About killing, sir?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. O, yes, sir; I heard plenty of it, sir.

Q. Did you hear any cursing?—A. Yes, sir; cursing and going on all the time.

Q. Were they standing still, or were they running?—A. Running backward and forward, sir, to see who they could catch voting the democratic ticket.

Q. That frightened you?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. You say you voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. I wish you would state whether, if there had been no threats or violence there, you would have voted the republican or democratic ticket.—A. If they had not threatened to kill me, sir, I would have voted the democratic ticket, and I had to vote the republican ticket to save myself.

Q. State whether anybody was watching you while you were voting.—A. O, yes, sir; they had spies all about the house.

Q. How long have you lived in this State?—A. I have always lived here. I was born here, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. How many times have you voted, Mr. Simmons?—A. I have been voting, sir, ever since years ago; five or six times.

Q. What ticket have you voted generally?—A. Well, sir, I voted the republican ticket when I voted before.

- Q. You have always voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; always.
- Q. Because you wanted to?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. This year you wanted to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who had you talked with, or who had talked with you, about politics?—A. No one.
- Q. Who did you work for?—A. Captain Latham, sir.
- Q. What was your business?—A. I went on the field and rolled rock for him.
- Q. He never said anything to you?—A. No, sir; he never cracked his breath to me.
- Q. Did you understand that it was necessary for you to vote the democratic ticket in order to keep at work there?—A. No, sir; I never thought so, sir.
- Q. You had never heard anything said about that by anybody?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You wanted to vote the democratic ticket because that was your inclination?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did anybody hurt you?—A. No, sir.
- Q. They did nothing only say to you that you would be whipped or killed?—A. Yes, sir; if I voted the democratic ticket.
- Q. Do you know anybody who was hurt that day because he voted the democratic ticket?—A. James Grant was hurt, sir.
- Q. Did you see him?—A. Yes, sir; I was at the poll in the church at the time he got hurt.
- Q. You didn't see him hurt, then?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you know of any other person being hurt but him?—A. No, sir; but they beat old man Lucas. I saw him beat right before the church door on the day of the election.
- Q. Where was Grant beaten?—A. Over by the dam, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

JOHN DAVIS (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About twenty-five years of age, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in South Carolina?—A. I have lived in South Carolina now rising six years.

Q. Where did you live before that?—A. Mecklenburgh, North Carolina.

Q. Were you born there?—A. Yes, sir; and came from there about six years ago.

Q. Do you live in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the Red-Top church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You work for Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at Red-Top church precinct on the day of election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. I went there about ten minutes before the ballot-box opened.

Q. When you were near the church what was done?—A. When I got within about 200 feet of the church there was about two hundred men met me on the way, rallying committees for the republican party. One had an ax on his shoulder, and he offered me a republican ticket, which I didn't prefer voting, and he told me if I didn't take that ticket I should get beaten, as much so as if I voted the democrat ticket, and he cut a club with his ax.

Q. They offered you the ticket, and you said you didn't want it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, did you go to the poll?—A. Yes, sir; I went to the poll.

Q. You got a democratic ticket?—A. I had a democrat ticket, but was not able to vote it.

Q. Who did you get a democratic ticket from?—A. I got it from John Brown.

Q. Just tell us what occurred when you got it and where you went.—A. When I got my ticket I was gwine in the church, and I seen those parties that was after Grant when he had voted that time. I seen that party make a great run for Grant, and when I went into the church, I had the democrat ticket, and also a republican ticket, in my pocket, and I was gwine to delay a little time to get a chance to vote the democrat ticket, but there was a man followed me and told me I couldn't vote no other ticket except the republican ticket, and if I did I would get beaten.

Q. What was the name of that man?—A. Alford Jenkins.

Q. Did he have anything—was he armed at all?—A. Yes, sir; he had a club in his hand and a sword to his side.

Q. Did he follow you up to the church?—A. He followed me up to the poll where I was sworn in.

Q. Did you vote?—A. I voted, sir.

Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. The republican.

Q. Now, I want to ask you, if there had been no threats or violence used towards you that day, whether you would have voted the republican ticket or not?—A. If there had been no threats and I had been allowed the freedom of a man, I would have voted the democratic ticket. There was four other men on the same day that didn't vote for the same reason—

Glasgow Green, Simon Bennett, John Brown, and Thomas Smith. I might mistake in calling Thomas Smith's name, but I don't think I do.

Q. That is, you might have made a mistake in the name?—A. I might have made a mistake in the name; if I have made any mistake I hope you will excuse me for it.

Q. These men were all colored men?—A. All colored men, sir.

Q. And they were at the polls?—A. Yes, sir; at the polls.

Q. Did you know others that were kept away from the polls that would have liked to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Well, sir, there was others that staid away from the polls who would have voted that ticket; but there was others that came to the polls with the intention of voting the democrat ticket, who when they got there was overpowered and made to vote the republican ticket; they were made to do it by force.

Q. Do I understand you to say you had voted the republican ticket before?—A. Yes, sir; I had voted it at the election before that, and I saw it had done no good, and so I repealed.

Q. Did Captain Latham ever threaten to discharge you if you would not vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; he never has called me privately to myself and talked to me about voting. He has never talked to me at all, nothing more than he thought it was the best ticket for his men to vote, but he didn't try to compel us to vote the democrat ticket; there was never a threat that he would discharge any one at all.

Q. He has a great many republicans in his employ?—A. O, yes, sir; a great many republicans that voted there that day; there was some thirty-odd names on a list of men in his employ that would have voted the democrat ticket, but they were threatened and didn't dare to vote it.

Q. Did you know of any threats before election-day?—A. No, sir; not more than I heard men say there on that day that if any colored man voted the democrat ticket they should give him a beating; that is all the threats I heard. I heard that as I passed them in different places.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. They did not threaten you?—A. Yes, sir; well, they didn't threaten no man by his name.

Q. Did anybody make any remarks to you?—A. They never made no remarks by name.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Did you hear anybody say that?—A. O, yes, sir; I heard it said by a female party. I was told on Sunday evening about 4 o'clock—the Sunday before the Tuesday of election—"I want you to own that name on Tuesday, at 7 o'clock," and they showed me a name on a ticket.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. I will ask you whether anybody made any threats to you or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You only heard of it from the females?—A. Yes, sir; from the females, and from the females to the males.

Q. You say Mr. Latham did not talk to you; that he never had talked to you, but you had heard something that he had said about voting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you hear that he had said?—A. The only thing I heard that he had said was when he was giving advice that you or any other man would do what you thought would be the most benefit to you, but he didn't persuade you and didn't compel you; he left it to your own mind.

Q. He said nothing about your work being dependent upon the way you voted?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard anything of that kind in this city?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say there were some other men who came there wishing to vote the democratic ticket and did not vote it. How do you know that?—A. As I said before, Glasgow Green wished to vote that ticket, but didn't have the opportunity.

Q. How do you know?—A. Simon Bennett wanted to vote it, but didn't have the opportunity. John Brown, and he didn't have the opportunity, and Thomas Smith wanted to vote the democrat ticket and didn't have the opportunity.

Q. Well, now, how do you know that Simon Bennett wanted to vote and didn't have the opportunity?—A. Well, sir, I seen him make an attempt to go up to the ballot-box two or three times.

Q. Did anybody stop him?—A. Men told him if he voted that ticket—

Q. Did you hear that yourself?—A. I heard that remark myself, sir, made by parties of men outside of the door; people outside gave signs to the men inside.

Q. Did you see that?—A. Yes, sir; the same tricks was done to myself. They gave notice to men inside to take notice what ticket these men voted, so that when the others came in to vote they should give signs to the men outside, so that after these men had voted the men outside could follow them a certain distance from the polls and get after them like they had about Grant.

Q. Did they take hold of any man to prevent him from voting as he liked?—A. No, sir.

Q. They didn't touch you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody stand in the way of Mr. Green when he was going up there to prevent his going?—A. They stood in the way so much as this, sir: they stood in his way on the way-side; they stood in his way to see whether he voted the republican or democrat ticket; they staid close enough to see that.

Q. That is not my question. I want you to tell me if anybody took hold of him, if anybody held him, if anybody laid a hand upon him—if they stood in his way with their arms out to prevent him from going up to vote?—A. They staid in about fifteen feet of the ballot, and they put hands on him just so, touching his shoulders, and saying, "If you vote the democrat ticket you shall have a beating when you come out."

Q. But did they by force stop him from voting or from going up to the polls and putting his vote in the box?—A. O, yes, sir; they did.

Q. How did they do it?—A. Well, sir, when he was in about fifteen feet of the box I saw them. They patted the man on the shoulders, and I heard them tell him if he put in that vote—

Q. Yes; but what I want to know is if they stopped any one from voting as he pleased?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. How did they stop him?—A. They stopped him by the tone of their voices. They said that to him, and, of course, by the way they done other man, he thought that would be the way they would do him; that they would do him some harm.

Q. But I want to know if they stopped him by force from going up and putting in his vote. I do not want your reasoning upon what he thought.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did he do it?—A. I have already told you.

Mr. JONES objected to Mr. Banks's manner of questioning the witness.

Mr. BANKS. It is evident that somebody has instructed the witness to come here and tell a story.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did anybody instruct you how to give evidence here?—A. Nobody instructed me.

Q. Did anybody tell you what to say when you came here to be examined?—A. Nobody told me what to say.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. You perhaps do not clearly understand General Banks's question; the question he wants you to answer is this: Whether or not you saw any person catching hold of these men, and holding them, and preventing them from going up to the box and voting? Now answer that question, and tell how it was, and who it was.—A. Yes, sir; there was a man who wanted to vote the democratic ticket. He was in about fifteen feet from the house, when the rallying committees of the republican ticket would rush up and seize hold of the man and march him up to the polls.

Q. Do you know of a case of their catching hold of and holding a man?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything of that kind; but I saw these rallying committees patting men on the shoulder and giving them tickets, asking them how they were going to vote, and if they had democratic tickets they would take them away from them and tell them there was a republican ticket.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. I want to know if I correctly understood you in your answer to the chairman's question, which was the answer I thought you intended to give to the question of General Banks. You say you saw parties take hold of a man on the outside, as he was approaching the house, and that they took him by the shoulder and asked him how he was going to vote, and if he had a democratic ticket they took that away from him and told him that there was a republican ticket he might have and should only vote that ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You spoke of some others who came to vote the democratic ticket, and who did not vote it?—A. I didn't speak of any other but one.

Q. You spoke of men that signed a constitution or paper?—A. Well, they all might have been on that list, but I was certain of two of them. One of them on there was coming, but he was hailed about 150 feet from the poll, and the republican ticket was forced upon him, when he didn't want to take it; that was Peter Lucas.

Q. I want to know how you knew that these men came there to vote and did not vote. You spoke of a considerable number of others that came to vote and did not vote; how did you know that?—A. Well, Glasgow Green he came there and they offered him a republican ticket and he wouldn't take it.

Q. You spoke of others.—A. Simon Bennett is on that list.

Q. Who else was there besides him?—A. John Brown.

Q. Well, we have heard John Brown's story.—A. Thomas Smith.

Q. Who were the others?—A. Those were the only ones I know.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

PAUL BENSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Question. Where do you live ?—Answer. Saint Andrew's Parish, sir.

Q. Were you born in South Carolina ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How old are you ?—A. About twenty-four years of age.

Q. Will you state whether you were at Red-Top Church precinct election-day ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you reach there ?—A. I went about 7 o'clock.

Q. How long did you remain there ?—A. I was there till night; till the poll was closed up.

Q. Did you see many people about there ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they have, if anything ?—A. Well, there was a crowd of them, and they every one had clubs, and some of them had guns.

Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks ?—A. Yes, sir; I seen some of them. There was a few of them had bayonets, guns, and sticks, and clubs.

Q. Will you state whether they were quiet and orderly, or whether they were violent ?—

A. They were pretty violent at the time I saw them.

Q. What ticket did you vote at that poll ?—A. They made me vote the republican ticket by force.

Q. Just state what occurred.—A. They came to me while they was ravenning so after the others there, and I went off a piece out in the road, and they came after me, and I wheeled back up to the church, and they came up there after me with sticks, and they pulled me into the house. One man gave me a republican ticket, and they marched me back and made me vote it.

Q. How many were in this crowd that were after you ?—A. Some ten or fifteen.

Q. At this time were there a great many negroes about the place ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Inside and outside the church ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If there had been no violence used toward you, and everything had been quiet, and you had been left to vote as you pleased, what ticket would you have voted that day ?—A. I was intending to vote Mr. Hampton's ticket.

Q. Have you voted before ?—A. O, Lord, yes, sir.

Q. What time did you vote before ?—A. On the last election I voted for Green.

Q. He was the independent republican ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you work ?—A. I work with Captain Latham.

Q. What do you do there ?—A. I am working about his machinery there.

Q. Did Captain Latham ever threaten to discharge you if you ever voted the republican ticket, or anything of that kind ?—A. No, sir; he never asked me to vote it.

Q. He never had any talk with you on the subject ?—A. He never asked no one to vote. Of course he said this was a free country, and every man is liable to do just what they please. He never asked me to vote. I just voted for the good-will of myself.

Q. State whether you were frightened on that day.—A. Yes, sir; I was frightened that time, sir, sure. After voting, Captain Latham asked me to get some mens and carry him home. They were frightening him.

Q. Do you say they frightened him ?—A. Yes, sir; them mens were very violent.

Q. Did you get anybody to go with Captain Latham ?—A. Yes, sir; I got about eight or ten; but I was frightened and I ran off.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You say Captain Latham never asked you to vote or told you anything about voting ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You said that he never threatened any one; never said that he would not give work to any one ?—A. He never did.

Q. Did he say anything about work to his men, or about their voting ?—A. No, sir; if he did I never heard it, sir.

Q. You spoke about your votes before. How many times have you voted? You voted for Green, you said. When you voted for Green did anybody undertake to make you vote then different from what you wanted ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have always voted as you wanted to until now ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wanted to vote for Hampton and you were not allowed to ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did anybody prevent you; take hold of you and stop you from coming up to vote ?—A. One man caught me by this hand, and one man put the paper in this other hand, and pulled me into the house and I voted.

Q. Did they go up to the house ?—A. They went up near enough to the box to see me vote, and they all seen me put it in, and they came away.

Q. They did not have hold of you ?—A. Not at the time that I put it in the box.

Q. There was nothing to prevent you from putting whichever ticket you pleased in the box; if you had had a democratic ticket you could have put that in ?—A. I could not do it, sir.

Q. You stood at the box alone ?—A. They stood around and saw me, and I didn't have but the republican ticket that this man had given me.

Q. You might have had another ?—A. No, sir; I didn't have any other.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

JOHN S. HORLBECK sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Thirty-two, sir.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I reside in the city here.

Q. Do you do business in Christ Church Parish at Four-mile Church precinct?—A. I do business in Christ Church Parish, three miles above that place.

Q. How long have you resided in Charleston?—A. All my life, sir.

Q. Were you born in South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. I am planting and making bricks.

Q. Will you state whether you went to Four-mile precinct on election-day?—A. I did.

Q. Last election-day?—A. Last election-day.

Q. About what time in the morning did you get there?—A. I suppose I got there about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes before the polls were opened.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I remained there until after they closed.

Q. How many negroes were there when you first went?—A. About fifty negroes.

Q. Will you state whether they were armed with anything; and, if so, what?—A. The men had clubs of various descriptions, and of the women some had clubs and some sticks or poles with bayonets stuck on the end of them. There were from fifteen to twenty women there at the time the polls were opened.

Q. State whether any more negroes arrived?—A. During the day they arrived pretty rapidly. Within two hours after the polls were opened the main batch were there.

Q. How many were there?—A. At least two hundred and fifty.

Q. They would keep coming and going, I suppose?—A. Well, in the country the negroes would vote early in the morning, and they rushed to the polls all together, and as a general thing they all leave together. At the election prior to this, when the evening came on, and when the votes were counted, I don't suppose there were twenty present.

Q. How was it at this election?—A. Well, a great many were there when the polls closed.

Q. What, if anything, did you hear these negroes say there that day?—A. When the voting commenced early in the morning, I heard one say that he would "like to see the first negro that would vote the democratic ticket here to-day."

Q. You say they were armed with clubs?—A. Yes, sir; with clubs.

Q. Well, did you hear any threats?—A. I heard similar threats to that during the day.

Q. Did you hear anything said by the negro women?—A. The women were very boisterous and noisy at times, pulling the negroes off the stand and examining their tickets when they went up to vote, saying what they would do if their husbands were to vote the democratic ticket, and that "he better not do it." In one instance I saw one woman shake a club in the face of a man that was there and curse him for a red-bearded son of a bitch. She did it two or three times, following him about the grounds. I told him he had better go away, and I got him off after awhile. He said he was afraid she was going to knock him.

Q. When the polls closed what occurred?—A. Well, I can't say when the polls were closed, but when they were about closing—it was about dark in our climate here and I was not allowed inside of the voting-place—it was cold outside and I was sitting beside a small fire, and after awhile I saw guns commence to appear. There were but three white men left there at that time, at least on the outside. I am not speaking of those in the building—the board of election officers. I suppose about half a dozen came out; there were more negroes there, but half a dozen came out with arms and said, "We would like to see anybody come within fifty yards of this place to-night," and I said to my partner, "There is no chance of seeing a fair vote," and we got in the buggy and rode off. The polls were closed a half an hour when we left.

Q. With reference to these crowds of negroes who stood about the polls during the day, I wish you would state what they did as voters would approach.—A. Well, when voters were coming down the road four or five or a half a dozen of their committee would rush after them and give them tickets and ask them if they were all right. In some instances, when they did have tickets they took them away from them. None of the colored men then dared to vote the democratic ticket openly; they did it clandestinely, and to this day they dare not say they voted the democratic ticket.

Q. How many negroes voted the democratic ticket?—A. Fourteen.

Q. How many white persons?—A. Seventeen or eighteen.

Q. How many republicans voted there?—A. About four hundred and sixty or seventy. There was one white republican vote cast.

Q. From what you saw there, I wish you would state whether, in your opinion, it would have been safe for a negro to have voted the democratic ticket?—A. Well, sir, I will tell you; the negroes generally look upon a white man as being a man that will vote the democratic ticket anyhow, but I do not think it would have been safe for a white man to have boasted there that day that he voted the democratic ticket, or any other man there.

Q. Would it have been safe for any negro, not hiding his ticket, to have gone up and put it in the box?—A. It would not, and the reason I say that is this, that, to my knowledge, there were at least fourteen or fifteen hands on my place that had become members of a democratic club, and I was satisfied before the poll opened that we should have seventy-five votes.

Q. What did you base that expectation upon?—A. From general conversation with the people about my place, and with others that belonged to the club. I think there were that many that would have voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Did the negroes, prior to the election, seem to be dissatisfied with the manner in which they had been governed?—A. Very much so. I remember in one instance of being at a democratic barbecue, where there were a hundred and fifty negroes, and they appeared to be very well pleased with what they heard there. Of course they didn't all promise to vote, but a good many told me that they would.

Q. And you attribute their not voting to these negro men being there at the polls, armed, and acting as they did?—A. I would suppose that was the reason; they were afraid to do it. I know of an instance where a boy, up to the night before, said he would vote the democratic ticket at that poll if he died in his steps; but the next day he didn't do it.

Q. He voted the republican ticket?—A. He did. I saw him vote it myself. I was not two feet from him when he put it in.

Q. You spoke of fourteen negroes who voted the democratic ticket, and you said that to this day they are afraid to own it?—A. They are afraid of being knocked down, or bruised, or killed. In fact, I really hesitated about bringing a great many witnesses that could have been brought, for fear of violence after they got back.

Q. You hesitated for fear that if they appeared and made statements before the committee there would be violence offered them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say there were but fourteen negroes who voted the democratic ticket there?—A. Fourteen or fifteen, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You were surprised that there were so few democratic votes there?—A. I was.

Q. Have you had much acquaintance with politics? Have you voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been voting?—A. Since I was twenty-one—about eleven years.

Q. You must have formed some acquaintance with politics and election business in that time?—A. No; I have never mingled a great deal with politics.

Q. Did you know, or did you not know, that it was a common thing for men interested in elections to be surprised with the result?—A. Well, I don't know; they always think they are on the winning side.

Q. Were you a candidate yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, have you ever known of a man being surprised at the result of an election?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. You expected at least seventy-five votes, and you got only fifteen or twenty; now is it not a common thing that men expect more votes for themselves and for their ticket than they got?—A. I can't answer that exactly, because I am not sufficiently well posted.

Q. You do not know enough about politics to answer that question?—A. I suppose that people are surprised sometimes. Sometimes they get more and sometimes they don't get as many votes as they expect.

Q. Well, now, what right had you to expect that you would get 75 democratic votes at least at that election?—A. Well, sir, I was a candidate myself for the legislature. I own 5,000 acres of land; I have had 500 acres laid off in ten-acre lots, which I have sold to these people, and I have allowed them their own time to pay for it. In many instances I have given them the boards to build their houses. I have always kept their money for them and many times they have put their whole year's crop in my hands to keep for them, and they have shown so much confidence and expressed such good-will toward me, that I was naturally surprised that out of that number there were so few voted for me.

Q. Well, now, when you divided 500 acres of land in this way, and let these people have it on conditions so favorable, did you think they would vote as you thought best or as they thought best?—A. It was not divided out with any view to their voting. These people came to me for advice and everything.

Q. Now I want to know, when you did all this, if you expected them to vote as you voted, or as they wanted to vote themselves?—A. I expected them to vote as they pleased.

Q. When you make a contract with a man for cotton, you would not think you had any claim upon him for the land, growing out of that cotton contract?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you made a contract for land, you would not expect to get a cargo of oranges out of that contract?—A. O, it wasn't that, sir.

Q. Well, then, how did you expect them to vote with you?—A. They told me they were going to vote as I did.

Q. When did they tell you that?—A. During the campaign.

Q. Did you ask them how they were going to vote?—A. No, sir; but about 35 or 40 of them came around the store every day, and everybody was talking politics in this State, and naturally they would join in, and they would say, "Well, we are going to vote as Mars. John does."

Q. Have you made any threats to control the votes of the colored people, or the republicans, by refusing to trade with them or refusing to give them work, or by not recognizing them, or by using any other influence?—A. I have not.

Q. Has it been a customary thing for the democrats in the parish where you live to do that?—A. This is the first time we have run a democratic ticket.

Q. In what county is that?—A. In Charleston County.

Q. I want to know if you have ever known democrats to control the votes of republicans by any such means as I have named?—A. I know of none in my parish.

Q. Do you know that the democratic party has passed resolutions at public meetings that they would not employ men, and that they would not trade with men that voted the republican ticket?—A. I know this, that they would give the preference to those that went with them. I saw that in the papers; we wouldn't have anybody to work for us at all if we only employed those who voted the ticket.

Q. I am speaking now of the county and city of Charleston. Do you not know that there has been an organized effort on the part of the democratic party of this city and county, where you live and where your business is, to control the votes of republicans by the use of such means as I have stated?—A. I do not know that it is by the use of such means; they endeavored to control them by talking about the robbery and corruption that was going on.

Q. But I mean by refusing to trade with them, refusing to have any intercourse with them?—A. I do not know that.

Q. Do you know that it is not done?—A. I cannot say whether it is done or not. I see the same hands working now at the same places they were working before the election.

Q. Do you know of a man that wanted to vote at this precinct of which you have spoken that was prevented voting by violence?—A. I cannot say by violence, but fear of violence.

Q. Who was that man?—A. A man by the name of Jim Collins; he went to another poll.

Q. He preferred to vote at one precinct in preference to another?—A. No; he didn't. He preferred to vote at the precinct where he lived. He came up there two or three times during the day, but he was afraid to vote.

Q. How do you know that?—A. He told me so.

Q. Who prevented him from voting?—A. The threatening manner of the voting there and so on. I know of an instance at the poll that day where one man even attempted to scratch his ticket and put another name on it; but they said, "no," he "must vote the whole thing."

Q. Who was that man?—A. He was a man by the name of Guy Simmons, I believe.

Q. How could he be controlled by their telling him what to do?—A. O, they rushed around him with sticks, and there was a general uproar.

Q. Were the women there as violent as the men?—A. Worse, sir.

Q. Was it you that said that one of them shook a club in the face of one of the officers?—A. Not the officers; in the face of one of the white men there.

Q. What was the occasion?—A. I don't know what was the occasion. He was walking along there; I saw no occasion for it.

Q. How did you know it was shaken at him?—A. I saw it shook in his face. I suppose the stick could not have been five inches from his nose when she shook it.

Q. There must have been some provocation for that. A woman does not go around that way usually.—A. I never saw them at the polls before this election.

Q. How many were at the polls there?—A. Some twenty-five; sometimes a little more, and sometimes a little less.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Mr. Banks has asked you some questions in regard to white people intimidating negroes by threatening that they would discharge them. I will ask you now, whether there is not, in this State, among the colored people a systematic effort to compel all colored people to vote the republican ticket, and whether they do not put them out of churches, and refuse to associate with them?—A. Of course they do; and I will give you an instance of it. We had a meeting, which we called the reform meeting, up there. We gave the people a barbecue, and we wanted to open the proceedings with prayer. There was a colored minister there, and we asked him if he would not open the meeting by prayer. He said, "I will sit on the stand, but I cannot pray, because I will lose my caste by it." That very man said he was with us, but on the day of election he was kept in his house by the women, and he didn't vote at all.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say that in that precinct you think there were about seventy five men who would have voted the democratic ticket?—A. I offered to bet on it in the morning going up to the polls.

Q. You formed your opinion as to that number from hearing colored men speak on the subject?—A. Yes, sir, from what occurred before the election.

Q. You heard them talk of the influence of different tickets, and whether they would be benefited or not, and so on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any case of the coercion of colored men if they didn't vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; we wanted to do all we could to cut down the majority.

Q. You think they were deterred by the demonstrations of the republican negroes on that day?—A. I think so.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You had offered to bet, you say?—A. I offered to bet, before the polls were opened, that we would have 75 votes there that day. Shortly after the polls opened one of my friends said to me, "Ain't you glad you didn't bet?" I said, "O, yes; I should hate to be a democratic negro here to-day."

Q. The chairman asked you if you did not know if there was an organized and systematic effort to compel the colored people to vote the republican ticket, and you said, "Of course there is." Is it to be expected?—A. I will tell you why, sir. You will see 50 or 60 or 75 colored people from one plantation coming to the polls, many of them who can't read or write, and if I offered them a ticket they wouldn't take it from me, but they would refer to one of them colored men around the polls and say, "He has the right ticket; whatever ticket he gives me I'm going to vote;" none of my colored men dared carry the tickets that were given out to them.

Q. It doesn't follow from that fact that there is a systematic effort. Now from what does it follow? Does it follow from the fact that the white people and democrats have organizations for that specific purpose?—A. No, sir; they have not, until this election they had no organization at all.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that there is no such an association?—A. I do not know of it.

Q. Do you know that there is not?—A. I cannot tell you what there is not.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Have you ever had any democratic meetings or public discussions in your precinct?—A. Yes, sir; the one I spoke to you of awhile ago; they called it a democratic reform meeting.

Q. Would you consider it safe, even now, to hold a democratic meeting in that precinct?—A. Well, I would consider it safe for myself, or for men who lived in that parish to do so, but I would not like to have a large number of white men from the city go up there and have meetings.

Q. You held democratic public meetings and discussions there?—A. Only one.

Q. Were there any negroes present?—A. About 150 or 200.

Q. Was there any disturbance?—A. No, sir; there never was a more quiet meeting than that.

Q. How many whites were there?—A. About twenty-five at the outside.

Q. Was it a joint discussion?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Do you know the practice of democratic meetings in other parts of the State, whether armed men came to surround the polls, and so on?—A. I don't know anything of that.

Q. Did it ever occur to you that the colored people might have interests of their own, apart from the designs of white democrats to control their votes, that would lead them to take their tickets from some person that would not deceive them?—A. I have never thought of that for this reason: that when a man comes to me to get me to write a letter to his wife, I should think he would trust me.

Q. You were a candidate for the legislature?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many votes did you get?—A. All the votes that were cast there were by these fourteen negroes and seventeen white men. While I was at the North I was nominated. I was not in the county at the time the nominating convention met.

Q. Did it occur to you when you became a candidate that your political ideas might not be in accord with the interests of the colored people, according to their judgment?—A. I could not think so, because I have been more than once called upon by these people, and asked to allow my name to be used for the office. They said, "Why don't you put up a man like yourself, a man whom we all know and for whom we can vote?"

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You were known to be a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You presumed that having been called upon by these seventy-five or eighty negroes that you would receive their votes?—A. I was never called upon by them in a body. They came to me at different times. This thing was talked of by the colored people for two or three years.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. I will ask you whether or not at the time another democratic candidate was running for the legislature, and they asked you, or said, "Why don't you run?" that was not their method of saying in a polite way that they did not want to vote for the man that was nominated?—A. They did not have any nomination of their own, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

FREDERICK RANDALL (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

- Q. Question. How old are you?—Answer. Over sixty years of age.
- Q. Do you live in Christ Church parish?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. In the Four-Mile Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were you at that precinct on last election-day?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. About what time did you go to the polls?—A. Between 10 and 11 o'clock, sir.
- Q. How many negroes were there when you got there?—A. At the polls?
- Q. Yes.—A. There was a great gathering there when I got there.
- Q. What did they have in their hands?—A. When I went to the polls those that were there had nothing in their hands but sticks.
- Q. Did you see any women there?—A. Yes, sir; a whole parcel of women were there.
- Q. What did they have?—A. The women had sticks too, sir.
- Q. What kind of sticks?—A. Club sticks, sir.
- Q. Did you vote?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What ticket?—A. I voted the ticket against my will. I was made to vote that ticket I did vote.
- Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. I voted the republican ticket, but it was against my will.
- Q. Just tell us in your own way what they did.—A. First and foremost, I was down at the sea-shore milking the cow at the pen, and George Gray and Levy Kepler and John Moore came there and ordered me out of the pen, and says they, "Damn it if you don't come out of that pen just what I've got in this gun I'll give to you."
- Q. Were you at your work?—A. Yes, sir; they said I must make haste and milk that cow and come on and vote, and if I didn't come on quickly they would give me what they had in that gun.
- Q. Did they have a gun?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How far was the place you were working from the voting-place?—A. A little over a mile, sir.
- Q. Well, did you go with them?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did they carry the gun along?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What did they do when they got to the polls?—A. They dragged me to the polls shamefully.
- Q. Where did you get your ticket?—A. They had the tickets at Mr. McCant's avenue, and when they got up there they presented this ticket, and said, "This is your ticket and you have got to vote it." George Gray said that to me and he stuck to me until I put that ticket in the box.
- Q. It was a republican ticket, was it?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And they didn't leave you until you put it in the box?—A. Never an inch, sir, until it was put into the box by me.
- Q. What did the crowd of negroes do that were standing up there when you came marching up with these three men?—A. They were always sticking right around there, and there was a great crowd around there hurrahing.
- Q. What ticket did you want to vote that day?—A. The democratic ticket, sir.
- Q. If they had not marched you up in that way, what ticket would you have voted?—A. My intention was to vote the Wade Hampton ticket.
- Q. So you would have voted that ticket if they hadn't scared you?—A. Yes, sir; I would have done it.
- Q. Did anything else happen to you after you voted?—A. After I had done voted, there was nothing else happened to me.
- Q. Did you see anything happen to anybody else?—A. No, sir; I didn't see anything happen to anybody else.
- Q. Who do you work with?—A. With Mr. Porcher.
- Q. He was the democratic manager at the last election?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you were frightened, were you?—A. I did get a little dampered when they attacked me alone there at the sea-shore. I had nothing with me to defend myself with, and I was scared.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. You were scared, were you?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. These colored people scared you?—A. Yes, sir; I was just by myself, and I had nothing and nobody to defend me.
- Q. You had seen colored people before?—A. Yes, sir; I had seen them before.
- Q. Were you ever scared before by colored people?—A. Not so near as that time, sir.
- Q. You went down to the sea-shore?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That was election-day, and they came down after you?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. They wanted you to go up and vote, and you went with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you were at the sea-shore were you scared?—A. Not until they attacked me, sir.

Q. When you went up to the polls where the voting was were you scared, sir?—A. After I saw all the gentlemen there which I knew, I felt a little more satisfied, sir.

Q. And then gave you a republican ticket to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they staid there until you put it in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they use any force—any violence?—A. At the polls, sir?

Q. Yes, sir; at the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they do?—A. They made me swear upon the Bible before I put it in the box, and they staid there until I put it in and walked off.

Q. Was there anything very remarkable about that proceeding; was there anything to frighten you in what they did?—A. I did get frightened when I was down beyond by myself.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You were scared when the three men came to you and told you that if you didn't come up and vote the republican ticket they would give you what they had in their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. But when you went up near the church where the men were you felt better?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there women there?—A. Yes, sir; a great many.

Q. Were they pretty violent?—A. Yes, sir; but I didn't mind the women.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. After you had voted the republican ticket you felt better, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. But you would not have voted the republican ticket if you had been let alone?—A. No, sir: not at all.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

CHLOE RANDALL (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. How old are you?—Answer. I don't know my age, sir.

Q. Are you the wife of Frederick Randall?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you think you are over fifty years old?—A. I don't know sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How old is your husband?—A. He is a great deal older than I am; he is about twelve years older than me.

Q. Were you at the Four-mile Church precinct on election-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did you see there?—A. I was at my house, and I saw Levy Kepler and John Moore. They two came right up in the yard with their guns on their shoulders, and they say, "Where's the old man?" And I tole him he goes down to the sea-shore to milk, and they went right down there after him. George Gray, too, came up to the yard, and he went down to the sea-shore, and he was the one that threatened the old man with the gun.

Q. Where did they take the old man?—A. When he came up to the house I was in my chamber, and I heard them say, "Look here, old man, make haste; I ain't got any time." He says, "I must carry the milk in the house to the white lady," They didn't give the old man time to eat his breakfast, or time to put on his shoes, but they took him right off.

Q. Where did they take him to?—A. They carried him down to the voting.

Q. Did you go down to the polls where the voting was?—A. No, sir; I was not there at all.

Q. You were not at the voting-place at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then all you know was what you saw at your house?—A. Yes, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 21, 1876.

PHILIP G. PORCHER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. Were you the democratic manager at the Four-mile Church precinct in Christ Church Parish last election-day?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you get to the polls.—A. Six o'clock in the morning, sir.

Q. Just state what you heard or saw.—A. When I got to the polls I found about one hundred and fifty people there, and the polls were opened. They were opened by candle-light, and the rush was very great at first. They were negroes, with the exception of four or five whites on the ground at the time.

Q. What did they have in their hands, if anything?—A. Some of them had sticks in their hands. They had a marshal there to keep things in order and to clear the people away and keep them from pulling too much.

Q. Did you hear any threats made?—A. Not while I was in the house.

Q. Well, outside?—A. Outside I could see women and men talking there loud and boisterously.

Q. How many people were there outside?—A. About three hundred and odd, sir—that is, at one time.

Q. Negroes?—A. Negroes and whites.

Q. How many negroes?—A. There must have been three hundred, or more. There weren't more than about thirty democratic votes polled at that poll during the whole day.

Q. Were the negroes boisterous and noisy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any intimidation of democratic negroes there?—A. Not while I was in the house.

Q. But while you were out?—A. The day before the election I heard of threats.

Q. Well, what were they?—A. That whoever voted the democratic ticket could not stay there.

Q. Who did you hear threatened?—A. Who did I hear threatened?

Q. Yes.—A. There were two or three there that I could bring here as witnesses who would swear that they were afraid to vote on account of threats. These republicans said that whoever voted the democratic ticket could not stay there.

Q. Was that the general talk among the negroes the day before election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of men having been intimidated and prevented from voting by reason of these threats?—A. Yes, sir. Some of them told me that they would have voted, but that they were afraid to vote on account of these threats.

Q. Several negroes?—A. Yes, sir; that they would like to vote the ticket, but that they were afraid to do so; they were afraid to express their opinions even.

Q. How many told you that?—A. Three or four.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-four, sir.

Q. Were you born in South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir; in Charleston County.

Q. Do you live up in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir; I live within four miles of it.

Q. I wish you would state now from your general knowledge upon the subject, if you have any such general knowledge, whether any influence during the last canvass was exerted to prevent negroes, who were inclined to vote the democratic ticket, from so voting?—A. Well, they were intimidated by others telling them that they should not vote that ticket; that the democratic party wanted to put them back in slavery, and all that sort of thing, and that whoever voted should not stay in the country, and they further threatened to beat or kill them.

Q. A general system of terrorism?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of them threatening to put democratic negroes out of churches?—A. I have heard of that, but I don't know it positively.

Q. And of men who voted the democratic ticket, or wanted to vote it, being subjected to all sorts of petty annoyances?—A. Yes, sir; of their being subjected to insults and abuse.

Q. How many white votes were polled that day at that poll?—A. I think there were eighteen, sir; there were thirty-one democratic votes altogether polled at that poll.

Q. How many negroes?—A. Thirteen.

Q. How many negro republican votes?—A. I think there were five hundred votes polled altogether at that poll, and thirty-one from five hundred would give the number.

Q. About four hundred and seventy?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many white men voted the republican ticket in that precinct?—A. Only one. That was Mr. Johnson, the United States deputy marshal.

Q. Did you talk with a number of negroes in that neighborhood prior to the election about the manner in which they would vote, or did they talk to you on the subject?—A. Well, they asked me questions for information, and I gave it to them to the best of my ability. I told them that Hampton was the best man to vote for; that he was an honest man; that we were tired of this sort of government, and they all agreed with me; and even a great many that voted the radical ticket said they wanted to vote for Hampton.

Q. Did any of them promise you that they would vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; they did not promise me.

Q. You were in the house all day attending to your duty as manager?—A. Yes, sir; I could only see through the bars in front of the window what was going on outside.

Q. From the best of your knowledge and information received previous to the day of election, how many negroes would have voted the democratic ticket, if there had been no intimidation whatever?—A. I think at least a hundred.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You were a manager ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What makes you think that there were a hundred negro men that would have voted the democratic ticket that day ?—A. Because I heard them tell a great many persons that they were going to vote the democratic ticket, and a great many promised their white friends that they would vote it.

Q. You were surprised that so few voted it ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And surprised that more didn't vote it ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That happens very often in elections ; does it not ?—A. It is only the second time I have ever attended one.

Q. Did you not know that it was often the case that men were surprised at the result of the elections ?—A. I was surprised at this election because there was so many that promised faithfully to vote the democratic ticket, and they didn't do it.

Q. Are you not aware now that it is not the custom of people to go about telling other persons how they are going to vote ?—A. No ; I don't think it is the general practice, but I know among the white people we do not hesitate to express who we are going to vote for.

Q. You are now aware that all who tell you they are going to vote the democratic ticket, will not always vote that way ?—A. There were thirteen of them voted at that poll.

Q. Why did you sign this return if you knew there were a hundred people that were not allowed to vote as they wanted to ?—A. I said they would have voted if they had not been intimidated by the general talk of the people.

Q. You said there were at least a hundred men there who would have voted the democratic ticket if they had not been frightened out of it. Now how came you to sign the return if that was the fact ?—A. I had to sign the return of what was put in the box.

Q. How many votes were there ?—A. Five hundred.

Q. Well, now, if you had known that there were five hundred votes there, and a company of armed men—say a rifle-club—had come up and driven those five hundred voters away so that there would not have been a vote put in the box, would you have reported that as an election ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why do you report it now, then ?—A. Because they were intimidated at home among their friends and neighbors. They were told at home that if they went and voted the democratic ticket they should not come back and stay there.

Q. You said that they had been told that they might be put back into slavery again. Is that intimidation ?—A. Yes, sir ; their fears were excited that the democrats would put them back into slavery.

Q. That is what you call intimidation ?—A. Yes, sir ; I consider that intimidation.

Q. Would that be the same as armed men driving off the people ?—A. No, sir ; that I would call a violent measure. I would call that driving them away by force of arms.

Q. What you would call intimidation is when a negro is told that if the democrats succeed he will be put back into slavery again ?—A. I think it influenced them very much.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. When you say that it was proclaimed among the negroes that if they voted the democratic ticket they would be put back into slavery, and that they were thus intimidated, you do not mean to say that that was the only intimidation ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now as to the returning of the polls : you simply considered it your duty to return the votes as they were in the box ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Where do you reside ?—A. In Christ Church Parish, Charleston County.

Q. You understood that those negroes were told that they could not stay there ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever known of any intimidation of colored republicans by the democrats of this city and county, to the effect that if they did not vote the democratic ticket they would not have employment ?—A. Well, I have heard some say that they would not employ any man that would not vote with them.

Q. That they would not trade with them ?—A. I cannot say that.

Q. Why can you not say that ?—A. Because I do not know that.

Q. You have said that the negroes were told that they might be put into slavery again if the democrats succeeded, and that if they voted the democratic ticket they could stay there, and you also know that it has been said by the democrats in the city and county of Charleston that if any man voted the republican ticket they would not be employed by the democrats ?—A. Yes, sir ; I have heard some say so.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :) )

Q. Do you know that it has been generally said ?—A. No, sir ; I do not know that it has been generally said, or that it has been carried into effect.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You cannot say that you have heard men say that they would not employ negroes unless they were of their own political thinking?—A. No, sir; I have only heard them say that they would give them the preference.

Q. But did you hear any employers say to the negroes themselves that if they didn't vote the democratic ticket they would not employ them?—A. No, sir; I never heard one.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You do know that it has been said of republicans that if they voted the republican ticket the democrats would not employ them?—A. I have heard it said.

Adjourned to meet at 3 p. m. to-morrow, Friday, December 22, 1876.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Friday, December 22, 1876.

JOSEPH BARNWELL sworn and examined.

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I am thirty years old.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a lawyer, sir.

Q. Do you practice law in the city of Charleston?—A. I practice law in the city of Charleston.

Q. How long have you resided here?—A. I have resided here for the last eight years. I was born here, but went away when I was five years old. I have been here for the last eight years; that is ever since I have returned from college.

Q. You are a democrat, I believe?—A. Well, sir, we called ourselves conservatives until the other day. We call ourselves democrats now.

Q. State sir, if you please, whether you took any part in the last campaign in the way of canvassing?—A. I did, sir; a very active part.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Canvassing means making addresses, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; I made addresses and attended meetings. The most of my speeches were to colored people.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. Do you recollect the riot that occurred in September in the city of Charleston?—A. I do, sir.

Q. On what date did that occur?—A. It occurred on the 6th of September—on Wednesday, the sixth of September.

Q. Where did it occur—at what point did it occur?—A. It occurred on Green street; it originated on that street; that is, the first real rioting occurred there.

Q. Were you present?—A. I was present, sir, during the greater part of it—during, certainly, the first part of it.

Q. I wish you would proceed and state in your own way the causes which led to that riot, and what occurred during the riot.—A. As soon as General Hampton was nominated and the campaign opened, we had a ward meeting in the room over the way. At that meeting two republicans came over to us and made speeches, one by the name of Isaac D. Rivers, and the other a man by the name of Sawyer. They announced their affiliation with the democrats, saying that if they were protected they would give up the republican party and stump the county. They made themselves prominent by that. Quickly following that they attended two or three democratic meetings and made speeches. A few nights after these meetings we had a democratic meeting, at which some republicans came and asked to be allowed to divide time, and we did give them half of the time—we spoke alternately. That meeting was very riotous. I was present myself and was personally and grossly insulted.

Q. By whom?—A. By a man named Darrall, who was then, and is now, a member of the detective force. There was a tremendous row going on, and I went out and said "Keep quiet," and he turned on me and would have struck me if I had not turned off. I called on the police to arrest him, and they would not. On that evening, going home from that riot, this man Rivers was assaulted, and I saw the wound which he had on his face the next morning. At that riot Rivers was beaten, and it caused a good deal of discussion in the city. Rivers and Sawyer came to me personally and told me that they were afraid to go to these democratic meetings any more. I told them that I thought they could go to the democratic meetings in the future with safety, because a great many white men would be there, and that the white men would come home with them. A meeting was then called—the next meeting after that conversation—at Archer's, at the corner of George and King streets, on Wednesday, the 6th of September. At the meeting I was asked to speak, and I went up and spoke. When I got to the hall, I found three or four white men there, and I found Rivers and Sawyer standing on the other side of the street. There were only two or three white men there. I went up to Rivers and Sawyer and asked them why they didn't come into the hall. They told me that they were afraid to come—that they were afraid of being beaten. I asked them why. They pointed out to me squads of colored men, at that time marching down on the other side of the street and uttering threats against the democrats. Rivers and Sawyer said that they had told them they were going to come up there and break up that meeting. My own impression was that we would not have any row if a plenty of white men were there with the blacks; that no attempt would be made to interfere with Sawyer and the colored democrats who would be there, if we had a large crowd. I thought that they would only attack them in case they met them on by-streets by themselves, and that it was only necessary to have the presence of white men at the meeting to prevent any trouble. I therefore sent around to a ward meeting, which was going on near by, and asked some of the gentlemen to come around there so as to be at the meeting. They came, and gradually the hall filled up with them, from about twenty-five to thirty blacks and about seventy-five whites. Just then I saw collecting about fifteen or twenty colored republicans.

Q. Were these colored men that were in the meeting democrats?—A. Yes, sir; there were about twenty-five colored democrats at the meeting. As I say, I saw about twenty colored republicans come up and stand around with sticks in their hands.

Q. Did they come into the hall?—A. No, sir; They came to the door of the hall. A mounted policeman just then rode up. I went up to him and told him what I had heard these men say about the threats, pointed out to him these men standing around, and asked him to send off for a force of police, as I was fearful that we might have trouble. He laughed when I said I was fearful of trouble, went to the corner, and I heard him tap on the post; giving their signal for summoning policemen. Then knowing that there was a club meeting down town that night, I went down to ask them to attend the meeting in case there was trouble. I saw a doctor come up in his buggy, and I told him about it. Then the meeting went on. Gradually about forty of these republicans collected outside of the door. Some after came in and looked on and some went off. As the meeting drew to its close and was about to be dismissed, a large number of them were present with clubs talking very loudly and threatening all the democrats. Just before the meeting drew to a close, the chairman of the meeting announced that the white men would accompany these colored men to their homes, as the crowd around seemed to be very noisy and threatening. We came out of the hall. The colored men fell in with us, and when I say fell in with us, I do not mean in military order, I mean just a crowd in the middle of the street, and we started up Green street. We had about forty white men with us and about ten or fifteen or these colored democrats.

Q. What did the crowd outside amount to?—A. The crowd outside amounted to about fifty or sixty colored republicans, some with sticks and some without. They marched up on the left-hand pavement as we went up the middle of the street. They were cursing at the colored democrats and brandishing their sticks. This mounted colored policeman kept between our crowd and the colored republicans, trying to keep them back. And he did succeed in keeping them from striking any of us until we got to Calhoun street, which was the end of his beat. As soon as he stopped at the end of his beat, the head of their crowd, re-enforced by colored idlers who were always standing at that corner, closed up on the end of our crowd and commenced throwing bricks. Though I was at the head of our column one brick came right by me. Just then some pistol-shots were fired down at the other end of the line, I can't say by whom, but I saw the flashes of the pistol-shot apparently in the air. Immediately this mounted policeman and another one rushed down. I, myself, rushed down to where the pistol-firing was and tried to find out who had fired it. When I got down there I saw the policeman arrest a white man, and asked him what he was arresting him for, and he said, "He knows who fired the pistol." The man who accompanied the colored policeman was a colored detective by the name of Hood. I went up and asked this man if he had fired the pistol, and he said no. Then the policeman said he just wanted him to come outside of the crowd, as he desired to ask him a question. I asked why he didn't ask him the question there. And then the man went into a little alley-way there, and the policeman did ask him the question, I suppose, and I never saw the man any more. As soon as the police came down on our crowd and our line stopped, a large number of blacks assembled again just on our rear. I was fearful that we were going to have trouble, and I led our line up the street as fast as possible, so as to get out of it. When we got opposite to the next street, which is Vanderhorst street, a large number of colored men came rushing down on our line. I was at the head of the line, and again I heard four or five pistol-shots. When our line had passed Vanderhorst street I heard five or six more, apparently in the air. I ran down to the end of our column and asked a colored policeman that I saw there, by the name of Robinson, for God's sake to get the colored people on the left-hand pavement; that we would take the right-hand pavement, and would thus get out of the trouble. We then marched on for a square, and the colored policeman did try his best to get the crowd on the left-hand pavement, but they would not go. I ran down again and told him that we were quiet, and asked him if he could not keep his crowd in charge. We marched up another square, and just then three policemen from the up-town guard-house broke into our line, halted it, and one of them, a very large black man, brandishing his club, exclaimed, "Sawyer is the man who fired that pistol, and I intend to arrest him." Sawyer, I understood afterwards, was not even in the crowd, and these policemen were two squares off from us when this pistol was fired, to my positive knowledge. I went up to him and said that Sawyer was the most peaceable man possible; that I didn't think he even had a pistol. He at once turned on me and accused me of attempting to draw my pistol, and held his club over my head, and said, "Barnwell, if you put your hand on your pistol I will knock your brains out." He was head and shoulders taller than I was, and I turned on my heel and retreated from him. I went thirteen or fourteen paces away from him, in the hope that he would let me alone. He followed me, with his club up in the air, threatening me as hard as he could. When I found that I could not escape from him, and saw pistols pointed at me, I took out a pistol and shot at him and hit him, and he fell. I walked to the corner and went down to the hall where this club I spoke of was meeting, found only two or three gentlemen there, and mentioned to them that I had been obliged to use my pistol, and asked whether I had not better surrender myself at once. Later in the evening reports came down that he was dead, which proved not to be so, for he is now on the police-force—but reports came that he was dead, and some of my friends advised me that I was in danger of my life. I went the next day and surrendered myself, and was put under two thousand dollars bond to answer the charge. At the time we thought he was dead I was advised to leave town, but I refused to do so. I replied to the urgent advice of some of my friends that I had done my best to keep the peace, and I intended to remain.

Q. Do you know anything more about this riot?—A. I only know that later in the evening I saw several white men who had come from the crowd with their heads all bleeding. Whilst I was in the crowd a white man right alongside of me was shot just as my pistol went off. As I turned around I saw him clap his hand on his leg.

Q. How long did this thing continue?—A. The riot?

Q. Yes.—A. The row must have started about ten o'clock. It continued about twelve hours and a half.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Ten o'clock at night?—A. Yes, sir. It was a moonlight night, but the moon was not very bright.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. State whether there was great fear excited in the community among the whites.—A. Yes, sir; intense excitement and fear.

Q. How about business in the town?—A. The next day business was almost entirely suspended. Many of my friends told me that my life was not safe in the city. I can illustrate the fear that existed here in this city. A telegram was sent here from the country saying that thirty white men were penned up in a building on the Charleston and Savannah Railroad, with about two hundred blacks surrounding them. These thirty white men telegraphed down for assistance from Charleston. A number of young white men, who were relatives of the gentleman who telegraphed, went to Mr. Barker and asked him whether they had better go there, and he told them that he thought that Charleston was in such danger that not a single white man ought to go from the city; that they had better not leave; and they telegraphed up to Mr. Elliott to know how long he could hold out, and he answered that he could hold out until the next day. There is nothing that can better illustrate the fear at that time than that.

Q. State whether any indictment has been found against you.—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You are still under bond?—A. Yes, sir; I am still under bond.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Did you, during the canvass, know of any instance where any republican orators gave advice to the colored people; and, if so, state when, where, and what was said in regard to what action the colored people were to take.—A. I will state, first, that I attended one meeting up at Strawberry Ferry.

Q. Was any advice given to the colored men there?—A. George Sass, who was the republican chairman on the stand, told the colored people that they must bring their arms there to the meeting, and refused to let them carry them away. That was one thing. He threatened to turn one of the colored members of the legislature out of the church.

Q. Who threatened?—A. This man Sass. He said he was going to turn him out of the church right there; that he would take care of him.

Q. Why would he turn him out of the church?—A. For being on the democratic ticket.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Who was he going to turn out of the church?—A. The Rev. Joseph Garrett.

Q. Was Sass a clergyman?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Did you hear anything said by anybody at any meeting as to any violence towards the blacks; and if so, what was said?—A. The next place that I heard violence threatened was on Edisto Island, where Cyrus Guilliard, a black man, advised the people to chuck—that was his word—and drive off the island any colored man that voted the democratic ticket.

Q. From what place was this given?—A. From the stand; in the presence of Sheriff

Bowen, the chairman of the executive committee of the republican party, to a crowd of fifty white men and two hundred and fifty blacks, and I suppose a hundred negro women in addition.

Q. What relation does this man bear to Bowen?—A. He is one of Bowen's strongest adherents.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. That is Guilliard?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Was he in the employ of Bowen in any capacity?—A. If I mistake not, he is one of the criers of the court, or one of Bowen's deputies. I think, though, he is a crier of the court; he accompanied him at every meeting I attended. All of the blacks that came to that meeting came in regular military order, with a captain, with a drawn sword, at their head, and I will say that all of the white men, except some five or six, were doing well to get off without being very badly hurt. They were abused very much. These men were all armed with sticks, and the captain had a sword. My friends that were there told me that they saw arms stacked in the building. The white men were insulted repeatedly. Further than that, this man Guilliard, and W. H. Thompson, also a black man, who was elected as county commissioner, and who was one of the canvassers, came up to me, and told me that they thought there would be a riot if any colored democrat attempted to speak, and both of them begged me not to have any colored men to speak, stating that it would certainly cause a riot.

Q. Who appoints the police officers in this town?—A. The mayor.

Q. Who is the mayor?—A. George I. Cunningham, a republican.

Q. Are there more white or black policemen?—A. At that time there were more blacks than whites.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Is Cunningham a white man?—A. Yes, sir; he is a white man. On another occasion I attended a meeting on John's Island. We were to have a joint discussion there, and we took Mr. Bowen and all his speakers up with us. When we got to the meeting, (we marched about four miles to get there,) we found at least three hundred blacks assembled; of that number at least one hundred and twenty-five had arms—muskets. The twenty-five white men who were with me had to go up to the stand through columns on either side.

Q. Through columns of blacks?—A. Yes, sir; columns of blacks, drawn up on either side, some with rifles and some without, and some with sticks. I was the first democratic speaker, and while I was speaking four sentinels were pacing up and down about ten yards right behind me. During the time that I was speaking I was frequently interrupted with great confusion and noise, and at one time my brother, who was present, and Mr. M. P. O'Connor, who was the democratic candidate for Congressman, had to go to Mr. Bowen, the republican chairman, who had announced the joint meeting, and ask him to quiet the row, because they thought there was great danger. A colored democrat whom we took up there said he was so scared that I could not get him to open his mouth. He said he was afraid. While I was speaking I thought there was danger, but I put a bold front on it. The white men who were with me, though, were in apprehension the whole time. W. H. Thompson, at that meeting, quoted with approval what George Sass had said about settling this colored preacher's business and turning him out of the church. He said to them then that we had five colored democrats on our ticket, but that George Sass would settle him (Mr. Garrett) and turn him out of the church.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How long has Cunningham been mayor?—A. Cunningham was elected mayor in 1875. This is his second term. His first term was from 1873 to 1875. His second term commenced in 1875 and runs to 1877.

Q. Is he a Southern man?—A. Cunningham was originally from Tennessee. He has always been a strong republican, and this time he was elected county commissioner. He is now mayor and county commissioner.

Q. Do you know of any petty annoyances to which colored people were subjected who announced that they proposed to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I know of individual instances. At the beginning of this campaign it was well recognized in Charleston County that black men did not allow other black men to vote differently from them—that is, black republicans would not allow black democrats to vote differently from them. I maintained from the beginning that I could not pretend to make any headway with the black people until we could devise some way or other to prevent those who wanted to vote with us from getting their heads broken. There was a man named Jencks, who, I suppose, five times came to me and asked protection to go home at night. There is an old respectable colored man in this city named Henry Haw, a tailor, who has, time after time, come and told me the same thing. On the night of the first riot in Ward 8, where I was insulted, this man Henry Haw sent a note to my house saying that these colored republicans were going up there to break up the meeting. That note came to my house, but I didn't get it until the next morning. On the stand this was not denied; that two of the Bowenites—

Q. What were they known as?—A. The Bowenites. They never let the Mackeyites differ from them, nor did the Mackeyites permit the Bowenites to differ from them when they were in the majority; but both of them were down on the democrats. I will state further, that at no election in the city of Charleston has a colored democrat voted the democratic ticket except at the danger of a broken head, unless he was protected by four or five white men going up to the polls with him, or unless, as happened at one poll where I was in the last election, the white men were in the majority.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What were the circumstances attending the invitation of these fifteen or twenty colored democrats that came to the meeting that you spoke of previous to the first riot on the 6th of September?—A. It was an advertised democratic meeting.

Q. What were the circumstances of getting up that meeting?—A. All that I know of it, sir, is that the president of the ward came to me and told me that Augustus Grant was to have a colored democratic meeting, and asked me to go there.

Q. You do not know anything about getting up the meeting?—A. I do not know anything except that it was advertised.

Q. You do not know whether this meeting was got up by the colored men or got up by the white men for them?—A. I think it was got up by the colored men. They had the meeting in the hall there. I think the colored men got it up.

Q. Who furnished them the hall?—A. I do not know.

Q. What club was it to which you sent for assistance, or the members of which you sent to notify that if there was trouble you would like them to attend?—A. The Carolina rifle-club.

Q. There is a social club called the Carolina Club. Is that the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a recent organization?—A. No, sir; it was organized seven years ago.

Q. What was the purpose of the organization?—A. Purely for social purposes, sir. Then, gradually, as they were not prevented by the State government, they grew into a sort of militia; that is to say, they came out in uniform, and even the United States troops used to turn out with us. Governor Chamberlain presented a flag to the Washington Light Infantry, which was an organization exactly like ours.

Q. How large was that club?—A. I think at that time it had about ninety men.

Q. Had they an armory?—A. I think so at that time, sir.

Q. Are there other clubs of that character?—A. Yes, sir; the Washington Light Infantry, the German Fusileers, (that was founded in 1776, and re-organized after the war,) the Palmetto Guard, the German Hussars, the Washington Artillery, and quite a number of other clubs, sir, by quasi consent, were allowed to go on and parade; and gradually, as time went on, a rivalry sprung up between them. They got better uniforms, and they became the citizen-soldiery, and were so addressed by Governor Chamberlain. They were the ones that welcomed the company from Boston, with whom they turned out here on the 28th of June.

Q. What is the number of these clubs altogether?—A. I do not think that they have had more than six or seven or eight hundred men altogether; but I cannot answer positively about that.

Q. They are still in existence?—A. I believe not, sir. They were disbanded.

Q. Had they an order from the President or Governor Chamberlain disbanning them?—A. From both, sir.

Q. The organizations existed at the time of the 6th of September riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see yourself and do you know the facts which you have stated?—A. Yes, sir; I know all that I have stated. I have always qualified my statements, separating that which I knew from that which had been told me.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Were there any statutes allowing the organization of those rifle-clubs?—A. One or two rifle-clubs had original charters and organized under them, and others organized under charters from the clerk of the court, whilst others organized as purely social organizations.

Q. Did you understand that Governor Chamberlain recognized these clubs here?—A. Surely, sir.

Q. Was he a member of them?—A. He certainly was an honorary member of one of them, and he was entertained by them, and addressed them as the citizen-soldiery in my presence.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. That was before the events which led to the order for their dissolution?—A. Yes, sir; that was the last 28th of June.

Q. He recognized them at one time and published an order disbanning them and requiring them to surrender their arms?—A. Yes, sir; and they surrendered all the State arms they had and disbanded.

Q. Now, in reference to those meetings?—A. The first meeting we had was by invitation. The chairman of the republican party, Mr. Bowen, agreed with Mr. Calcock, of the democratic party, to have a joint meeting.

Q. There were, of course, certain preliminaries agreed upon in reference to that meeting?—A. There were, sir.

Q. Was there any complaint made that the conditions of the meeting were not adhered to?—A. None, whatever. Let me say about the first meeting: we went to this first meeting on a steamer; the first meeting was at Strawberry Ferry; and we looked on shore and found that they had arms with them, and we took down arms with us, and Mr. Bowen at the next meeting objected to them, and the consequence was that we did not carry them.

Q. Then there was a condition about having arms at that Strawberry meeting?—A. Yes, sir; and we at once stopped.

Q. Was there any excitement or trouble at that meeting?—A. There was no trouble at that meeting.

Q. What was the number of democrats that went up there?—A. I suppose from thirty-five to forty.

Q. How did they get up?—A. They went up in a steamer, sir.

Q. Whose was it?—A. We rented the steamer and went up there by invitation of this club up there.

Q. How many went up in this steamer?—A. I suppose from thirty-five to forty.

Q. Were there not a hundred?—A. Well, no, sir; I am sure there were not over forty.

Q. Who participated in that meeting?—A. I suppose a hundred and fifty or two hundred blacks, and the gentlemen from the neighborhood came up. It was by the invitation of Mr. Bowen that we had that joint meeting.

Q. Why is this place called Strawberry?—A. I do not know, sir; it is an old church where the ordinary public meetings are held in that portion of the country.

Q. Is it in Charleston County?—A. It is, sir; Charleston County is sixty miles long and seventy-five miles broad.

Q. The democrats had arms?—A. Yes, sir; they had arms.

Q. What arms did they have?—A. They carried up some rifles on the steamer, which they didn't take there until they saw the arms at the meeting. The colored people had arms and then they took their arms.

Q. And of that Mr. Bowen complained?—A. Mr. Bowen at the next meeting complained. He said he did not like our having arms, and we told him that we had only taken them because we saw his men have their arms, but if he didn't like it we would not take them.

Q. What arms did the colored people have?—A. Some of them had muskets and some of them had double-barreled guns.

Q. What took place at the meeting; who were the speakers?—A. I spoke, Mr. Bowen spoke, Mr. Barker spoke, and others.

Q. Was there anything noisy occurred in the progress of the speeches?—A. Nothing at all, sir.

Q. The meeting separated peacefully?—A. Peacefully and quiet, sir; every now and then the blacks would get pretty stormy, but the whites kept cool.

Q. What was the number of the whites there?—A. I suppose, with what we carried up, we had about sixty or seventy.

Q. Where was the next meeting?—A. At John's Island.

Q. How many were there?—A. At least 250 to 300 blacks.

Q. How many whites?—A. Twenty-five, sir.

Q. That was the meeting where there was an agreement that there should be no arms?—A. That was the meeting where there were to be no arms.

Q. When was this?—A. The John's Island meeting was in October, I think.

Q. You say the blacks were armed; what did they have?—A. Some of them had breech-loading rifles. I think there were at least 125 with arms of various kinds. I saw a stack of breech-loading rifles and these sentinels marching up and down.

Q. Did the whites have arms?—A. I did not see any.

Q. Do you know that they did not have any?—A. I do not know it, sir. My impression is that the man who would go there without a pistol in his pocket, from the nature of that crowd, would have been in great danger.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. But you saw no arms?—A. I saw no arms.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. But you do not know that they did not have arms?—A. I do not know it, sir. I carried Mr. Bowen up there. I was pretty certain to have Mr. Bowen there. I would not have gone without him.

Q. What did the women do at Strawberry; what part did they take in it?—A. They stood on the outskirts and yelled and cursed the democrats.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. What excited the women?—A. The fact that we were democrats. I will tell you further what excited them. They had been informed by some of the republicans that if the democrats succeeded they would be put back in slavery.

Q. What action did the mayor take, if any, in regard to this meeting?—A. Mayor Cunningham did not make any effort until two or three days after the riot of the 6th. The mayor had nothing to do with what occurred outside of the city.

Q. How was it at Edisto?—A. We went there, but there were no arms there that I could tee. I knew that unless we were very cautious we would be in great danger. I understood that there were some arms in a building very near.

Q. Were there any women there?—A. Any quantity of them, sir.

Q. Did they attend all the meetings?—A. Well, they attended that meeting. There were rather more of them there than anywhere else.

Q. There was no disturbance; the meeting was not broken up; nobody was hurt?—A. No, sir; nobody was hurt at that meeting.

Q. Did you come away together?—A. Yes, sir; we came on our side and they came on their side. I made them very conciliatory speeches at that meeting.

Q. What was it that they threatened with regard to Mr. Garrett, this clergyman?—

A. George Sass said he would take care of him and turn him out of the church.

Q. That is just two meetings that you know about?—A. Yes, sir; those are all that I attended.

Q. Do you know of other meetings by public report or by attendance?—A. I know of pretty nearly all of them, but I only attended those I have mentioned.

Q. Has it been customary for men on one side and the other to have arms?—A. No arms have been carried by the whites, to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know that they have not carried arms?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you know, by public report or by attendance, of the character of these other political meetings?—A. I do not know anything of my own knowledge.

Q. Do you know by general report?—A. I have never seen any account of arms having been carried by whites.

Q. You do not know that the whites or democrats have had arms with them at any political meeting?—A. What sort of arms?

Q. Shot-guns or pistols.—A. I do not know about shot-guns.

Q. I am speaking of arms generally. Do you know, by report, anything about the democrats having arms whenever they have attended political meetings in this State?—A. I have heard about this Cainhoy riot. I saw about that in the newspaper.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. We don't want newspaper reports.

Mr. BANKS. I want to know as to the general practice of political meetings here.

The WITNESS. I never heard of such a thing, never in my life, prior to this election.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. When you say never prior to this election, in your life, do you mean prior to the election of 1876?—A. Never prior to the election of 1876.

Q. What exertions have been made by democrats to induce colored republicans to vote the democratic ticket or to prevent their voting the republican ticket?—A. Well, sir, I can tell you very simply, argument largely.

Q. What else?—A. Well, sir, in some instances I have known of their going this far, of their saying to colored democrats who were struck and beaten and who were threatened, "Now, my friend, I will help you; I will protect you."

Q. That is for men who are afraid of being hurt?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What beyond that?—A. I presume you mean the policy of proscription. I never advocated that. I do not know of any instance where a man was simply absolutely discharged on account of voting the republican ticket.

Q. If you do not know that, what do you know about the proscription of colored republicans because of their voting the republican ticket and because they did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. The only thing I can tell you is that they would say to the colored democrats, "Now, recollect that we will see for you and we will provide for you."

Q. I do not care about that. I am now talking about your opponents. What do you know to have been done, either by participating in it yourself or by the course of public meetings, to prevent colored republicans voting the republican ticket or to compel them to vote the democratic ticket against their will?—A. I know nothing of my own knowledge.

Q. What do you know by general report?—A. The republicans used to charge it.

Q. Do you know of public meetings—democratic meetings—passing resolutions that men that voted the republican ticket should not be employed?—A. Well, sir, I do not know of that myself.

Q. Do you know that to have been done, or do you know that it has not been done?—A. I do not know that it has been done.

Q. Do you know that it has not been done?—A. Certainly not; I would not say that, sir.

Q. You have been there, individually engaged in this canvass, and have been in this meeting of which you have spoken, as a leader. Now, do you know that public meetings have declared by resolution—meetings of democrats—that colored men who voted the republican ticket should not be employed?—A. To my own knowledge, I do not know of any occasion where they have done so; of my own knowledge I do not know that they have no done so.

Q. Now, I want to know if you know, by public report or by public action of the organized bodies of your own party, of which you were a leader, that they have done this, or that they have not done it?—A. I have seen in the newspapers that at a certain ward-meeting such a resolution was adopted.

Q. Now, does that ward-meeting deny that statement which has been made?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Have you attended public meetings of the democratic party, and have you heard speeches made there?—A. I have, sir.

Q. Have you heard, by the arguments of democrats in public meetings, the declaration made that men who voted the republican ticket were not worthy of the recognition of democrats, and should not receive their patronage?—A. I have not heard that at any meeting I have ever attended.

Q. Have you read the newspapers of your party in this city?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Are they recognized as leaders of political opinion?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not recognize them as such?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does the democratic party of this city recognize them as authorized to express opinions for the democratic party?—A. Well, sir, in Charleston, very little.

Q. Are they not recognized as leaders of public opinion on the democratic side?—A. Very little, sir.

Q. Do you not know that the democratic papers of this city have taken that ground?

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane.) I suggest that the newspapers be presented; they would be better evidence.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What do you know by the declaration of the democratic newspapers of this city upon this subject?—A. One paper was in favor of it, and the other was not.

Q. Which was in favor of it?—A. The News and Courier was in favor of it, and the Journal of Commerce was not.

Q. Do you know whether the trade of this city has been conducted upon this principle; that men that were of the democratic party and voted the democratic ticket should receive or would receive, or ought to receive, the support and patronage of democrats, and that men who did not vote it ought not to receive their patronage?—A. I would say emphatically that it has not been.

Q. Do you mean to say that it has not been in any instance?—A. I would not say to no extent, because one paper has advised it, and the other has not. The Journal of Commerce in this contest represented the public more than the News and Courier. The democratic committee voted down any such resolution as that you have referred to.

Q. What democratic committee?—A. The democratic committee of the city and county.

Q. Now, I want to know if the trade of this city has been conducted upon this principle to the extent that democrats ought not to support or to give their patronage to men of the republican party who did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. I think to a very small extent.

Q. Has it been so far as to induce men engaged in trade to advertise in the newspapers?—A. There has been much cry and little wool.

Q. To what extent has it been done?—A. I know nothing except what I see in the newspapers. The general fact is that it was conducted to a very small extent.

Q. Has it been practiced or expressed by organizations of the democratic party?—A. It has been considered a very dangerous and wrong precedent by the democratic committee, and it has not been advocated, as I know of, by any single prominent speaker, but it has been adopted by the News and Courier.

Q. What is this committee of which you speak, and when did they take this action?—A. This committee had the whole charge of the democratic management of the campaign.

Q. What is it called?—A. The democratic executive committee of the city and county of Charleston.

Q. They have published their action?—A. That I am unable to say.

Q. What was the motive or object for their action, if it was not for publication.

Q. That you must ask the committee. I am not a member.

Q. Well, now, I want to know if these things have existed to a greater or less extent; if white men are armed at meetings; if they attend in force; if they undertake to sustain their influence and their policy by the proscription of men who do not think and act with them; if it is singular at all that colored republicans or republicans without regard to color, should take the same course to defend themselves—do you regard that as singular or strange, or as extraordinary?—A. General, I would like to have taken you down to John's Island to that meeting there; why, sir, you would have been a democrat for ten years after that.

Q. You have not answered my question. I do not care to argue the question with you.—A. I will say this: the democrats never did take arms to the meetings. I will say this also, that it is exceedingly improper that the republicans should have had armed men at these meetings, when their chairman agreed with us and asked us to bring no arms, and it was agreed that they should have no arms.

Q. Considering what you have stated as the action of the democrats in the way of proscription in trade or employment of republicans, colored or white, I will ask you if it is extraordinary that they should have pursued the course they did?—A. I think it is exceedingly extraordinary that they should have been allowed to carry them there by their leaders.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Do you know of any settled policy among the democrats—among the leaders, (the executive committee,) or among the rank and file of the party—to proscribe negroes, or employés, because they would not vote with them at election?—A. I know of no such policy by the democratic committee. I know of no such universal policy. I know that one of the newspapers advocated it, and it is my impression that some people acted on it.

Q. Do you claim the right in this country to employ just such people as you please to labor for you?—A. Exactly. Regardless of their political opinions.

Q. And you concede the same right to the republicans?—A. We do, sir.

Q. Are there any republicans who employ hands in this country in the rice-fields, the cotton-fields, or in the manufacture of phosphates, &c.?—A. There are some, sir.

Q. And no one of the democratic party has ever interfered with them in employing whom they pleased?—A. No one, whatever, sir.

Q. Do you think it natural still in this country that people should employ those who are most agreeable to them in their politics or otherwise?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. And they claim the right to do so?—A. I think so.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Do you know that men have been proscribed, or deprived of employment, or deprived of trade, because of their opinions?—A. I do know it. Why, there is not a democrat allowed in the whole United States service, sir. Democrats are turned off the instant they are found out to be democrats. I do not believe you will ever find a colored republican that employs a colored democrat.

Q. I want to know if you know that it has been done, and to what extent it has been done?—A. I know of one of the papers advocating it, and it is my impression that some people said they would give the democrats the preference, and would employ those who were democrats in preference to those who were republicans.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. Do you know of any instance where negroes who voted the republican ticket have been discharged?—A. I know of no instance of my own knowledge.

Q. And have you no other knowledge on the subject than that which is derived from your reading of the newspapers of which you have spoken—the News and Courier?—A. I have heard persons say that it was done; I know of no instance of it.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You have said that a certain resolution was passed by the executive committee of the city and county of Charleston. Was that resolution published?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you know that it is the policy of the democratic party, or any of its leaders, to give certificates or tickets to men, "This man is a democrat and votes the democratic ticket?"—A. I do not know of such a custom; I have never seen such a ticket.

Q. And you do not know, from your own knowledge or from public report, that such has been the practice?—A. I do not know about any printed tickets at all.

Q. Have you acted with those of your party who have declared that they would not employ a man who would not vote the ticket?—A. I have never entered into it.

Q. Do you know that it has been done by your party?—A. I have already said that some have done it and some have not.

Q. You spoke of officers being employed by the Government of the same political faith with the Administration. Do you consider that the same as the proscription of individuals on account of their political opinions, in regard to their daily pursuits or employments?—A. I am a strict civil-service reformer, and I believe that the curse of this country is the discharge of its employés for political opinion.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. I wish you would state whether you have heard this argument used to the negroes; that unless honest men could be elected to official positions in the State, unless taxes could be reduced and the government of the State run economically, that ruin and disaster would certainly come upon all the business interests of the State, and that would necessitate the discharge of negroes?—A. O, I have, often, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. I will ask you if, in addition to these fine-spun theories, you have heard it asserted and urged upon republicans that they would lose employment and so on?—A. I have not heard it.

Adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow, Saturday morning, December 23, 1876.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 23, 1876.

WILLIAM J. EDMONDSTON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. In what parish do you live?—Answer. Christ Church, sir.

Q. Do you live near to the Four-Mile Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir; I live about four miles the other side of that.

Q. Is that the nearest voting-place to your residence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at Four-Mile Church precinct on the morning of last election-day?—A. Yes, sir; I was there before the polls opened.

Q. About what time did you arrive there?—A. I arrived there a few minutes before six o'clock.

Q. When you got there the polls were open?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you remain?—A. I was there all day except once, about ten o'clock. I left to carry the poll-list to Mount Pleasant.

Q. How long were you absent?—A. I was back in about an hour.

Q. With the exception, then, of the hour that you were absent, you were there from the time the polls opened until they closed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state, in your own way, what, if anything, occurred there at that precinct during the day; how many black people were there; whether they were armed or unarmed, and whether you heard any threats or saw any violence?—A. In the morning as soon as I got there the first words I heard, before the polls opened, were, "If any man votes the democratic ticket, we'll club him."

Q. Who said that?—A. It was the general cry.

Q. Among what class?—A. Among the colored people, sir. I saw a good many clubs and bayonets on poles, but I didn't see any guns at the polls. I saw one or two men go away after they had voted, with guns. During the day I was talking with one or two colored men, and a colored woman took and shook a stick in my face, and called me a "damned red-bearded democrat," and said that I had better leave those men, and not talk to them; that I was trying to induce them to vote. I passed her again and she did the same thing. All the remark I made to her was, "Old woman, you can shake your stick, but you mustn't knock;" and she followed me up the whole day, just talking and trying to aggravate me, and I wouldn't notice her. I took my seat by Mr. Horlbeck and one or two gentlemen, and there I remained.

Q. How many negroes, at any time, would be about the poll during the day?—A. Well, sir, I think there must have been two or three hundred—two hundred and fifty, at least—the whole day there, counting men and women.

Q. What proportion of that number had clubs?—A. I suppose at least one-half of them.

Q. You say you saw some bayonets on sticks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many bayonets?—A. Two or three, that I saw.

Q. I wish you would state what the manner of these blacks was; whether they were quiet and orderly.—A. No, sir; they were very noisy during the whole day, and we had to ask one or two of them during the day to try and keep the women quiet. They were more boisterous than the men. At one time I thought there was going to be a row there, because it got so noisy. It was as much as a man's life was worth to sit there, I considered; and after the close of the polls it was just as much as any white man had to do to sit there. In fact, we all had to leave. They guarded the box down to Mount Pleasant the next morning with guns.

Q. After the polls closed you say they all had guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they get these guns?—A. I believe they belonged to a militia company. They were furnished them by the State. There are two or three companies over there that are militia companies. This was one portion of them.

Q. Did the negroes who had been standing at the polls unarmed during the day have these guns after the polls closed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw no arms in their hands during the time that the voting was progressing?—A. Not at the polls; but I saw them going after they voted. Some of them went back home, and didn't stay at the polls, and they had their guns with them; so they must have had their guns concealed when they voted.

Q. Where did these negroes get their guns?—A. They must have had them concealed, because a good many of them lived too far to go way back home and get them. Some of them lived six or seven miles away.

Q. Did these arms appear very soon after the polls closed?—A. It was not very long, sir.

Q. You have stated that there was great noise and confusion there during the day. State, if you please, in what that noise and confusion consisted.—A. In language of a very boisterous kind.

Q. Give us an idea of the kind of language that was used; what was said by these colored people?—A. One part of the language was what that woman used toward me, that I had better not be talking to any colored men. She told me this every time she spoke to me.

Q. How about the men?—A. There were some men there in the morning, cursing terribly, and saying, "If I see a man vote the democratic ticket, I'll be damned if I don't kill him right off." Those few that were able to vote the democratic ticket had to do it concealed; they couldn't let it be known at all; and as soon as they had voted, they left the polls. If they had been found out, they would have been mobbed, sure. I think if things had been quiet there and they had known that they would not have been jeopardizing their lives, we would have had at least a hundred votes.

Q. Upon what do you base that supposition that you have just made?—A. About the number of votes, sir?

Q. Yes.—A. Because a great many of them joined the democratic clubs. We had at least sixty members, and a great many didn't join that would have joined.

Q. A great many colored men?—A. Yes, sir; we had a large club.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You had at least sixty members?—A. Yes, sir; and there were a great many that never joined the club who said they would vote the democratic ticket.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. I wish you would state what, if anything, would be done by these various knots or squads of colored men who would be standing at the polls, when a colored voter would be approaching the polls to vote?—A. They crowded all around him, sir; and it was hard work to get a vote in; and if a man had been going to vote the democratic ticket they would have mobbed him right away. It was a hard matter for me to get near the polls when I wanted to vote.

Q. You say all the colored men who voted the democratic ticket had to do so secretly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from what you saw there, you would not have considered it safe, if I correctly understand you, for a colored man to have let the crowd know that he was voting the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; the consequences would have been very serious.

Q. How many colored democratic votes were polled there that day?—A. I think there were fourteen or fifteen. I did have the right number, but I have misplaced it.

Q. How many white democratic voters?—A. Sixteen.

Q. How many colored republican votes?—A. Well, now, I have really forgotten. There was four hundred and something polled, and thirty-one of them was democratic.

Q. In the neighborhood of three hundred and seventy, you think?—A. Yes, sir; fully that.

Q. You would not undertake to give exact figures?—A. No, sir; I am not undertaking to give exact figures, but it was close to that.

Q. How many white men were at that poll at any time during the day?—A. That remained there during the whole day, do you mean?

Q. That would be there at the polls at any one time. Give us the time when the greatest number of white men would be there.

A. About eleven o'clock I suppose there was the greatest number; the sixteen were there. I don't think there was any more.

Q. That was the greatest number during the day?—A. Yes, sir; at one time. When I was down at Mount Pleasant there were some gentlemen had went up from the village to this poll just to see how things were working, and the negroes got an idea that these gentlemen had gone up there to vote a second time, and it almost raised a row. They didn't stay very long. I don't know when they arrived there.

Q. How many were there?—A. Six white men.

Q. Were you at the polls while they were there at all?—A. They had left when I was going back. They were coming down as I was going back.

Q. How many negroes, prior to the election, promised you that they would vote the democratic ticket? Give us an estimate of the number.—A. There was that club that I was telling you about; there were about sixty, I think; and then there were several gentlemen that had hands on their plantations that promised to vote. I had several on my own plantation, at least four, who promised me to vote the ticket.

Q. Only one of them voted it; the others voted the republican ticket at that poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state whether you used any threat to compel these colored people to vote the democratic ticket, or whether you threatened them that you would discharge them.—A. I never told them anything like that.

Q. Upon what ground would they say that they proposed to vote the democratic ticket; what reason would they give for the change?—A. I would talk to them and show them where it was to their interests to vote; that the government was going down every day.

Q. You referred to your State government?—A. Yes, sir. I thought that if they would make a change, and go with the men that they worked with, they would be better off. These four that promised me so threw out a suggestion that they would vote that way.

Q. Did you hear any talk among them about schools?—A. Yes, sir; I heard them say that half the time the schools were not open; that they were open only four months out of the year and that they ought to be open at least eight, and I told them that if we had a good government the schools would be open longer. I told them that if they had had more advantages they would have been better able to see for themselves to-day.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-six.

Q. How long have you resided in South Carolina?—A. All my life, sir. I was born and raised here.

Q. What is your business?—A. Planter, sir.

Q. You employ how many negro hands?—A. From ten to fifteen, generally.

Q. Out of this number four had promised you to vote the ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say you think you would have had a hundred votes at that poll but for the violent manifestations of the colored republicans?—A. Yes, sir; I think that we would have had at least a hundred colored votes at that poll.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You are a carpenter?—A. No, sir; a planter.

Q. What do these ten or fifteen men do that you employ?—A. Some are field-hands; some are plowmen; two of them are plowmen on the place.

Q. Did you have a foreman?—A. No, sir; I am my own foreman. I only plant on a small scale for the northern market—truck.

Q. You mean by truck a variety of things?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the character of these men that you employ as to intelligence in their business; in gardening, for example?—A. They got along very well in that, sir.

Q. In your absence you can trust them to carry on work for a little while?—A. There is only one man that I leave in charge, and he is my plowman.

Q. I am speaking in regard to their capacity; suppose they were working for themselves?—A. They could get along very well.

Q. Do you not think they understand something about the government under which they live?—A. Some of them do, but not all.

Q. How is it with the white people in your neighborhood; are they all capable?—A. Yes, sir; all that I know of are educated men.

Q. When you talked with these negroes, you say you explained to them what would be the advantage of a change in the government—that they would have schools, and the like of that; and that you made no threats. Now, did you attempt to influence them by any violent language?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or by saying that you could not employ them unless they voted with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you took a promise from them that they would do it?—A. Yes, sir; four of them.

Q. How happened they to make you that promise?—A. I explained to them and showed them where I thought they would be benefited by it, and they told me then that they would vote it. One man told me that he would vote it, but he was afraid to vote. I asked him what he was afraid of, and he said he was afraid of being mobbed; and I asked him who was going to mob him, and he said they would mob him after he left the polls.

Q. These men were republicans before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure that they said they would vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any skill in politics before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never had been engaged in any canvass?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know that men engaged in politics generally think that a great many people are going to vote their ticket who do not do it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You expect, in politics, when a man hears your arguments, and says that he thinks you are right, and he guesses he will vote that way, you expect him to do it?—A. Yes, sir; I always take a man's word until I find him out otherwise.

Q. Now, sir, you say that you have never undertaken to influence these negroes by any unjust means; that you have never threatened them. Do you know whether it has ever been intimated to them in any way that unless they voted the democratic ticket they would not get employment?—A. I have heard them talk that way, but I haven't heard any person who employed them say so.

Q. Do you read the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen anything in the newspapers to that effect?—A. I believe I have seen it in the papers.

Q. Have you attended democratic meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard any speeches upon that subject at the democratic meetings which you have attended?—A. No, sir; not at any of the meetings I ever attended.

Q. Are you a speaker yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have, therefore, never made any speeches upon the subject?—A. No, sir; I never made a speech in my life.

Q. Do you know of any resolutions having been passed to that effect at democratic meetings?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that there have been none?—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Now, is it not possible that these things may have been done by other persons than yourself, and that the colored republicans may have been led to believe that it was the intention of the democrats to frighten their men away; is it not possible that that may have occurred?—A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. You think that they have been in perfect freedom to do just as they please ; that they have not been influenced in any way at all ?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. When you hire a man do you ask him for some certificate from a leading or other democrat that he has voted the democratic ticket ?—A. No, sir ; I never have.

Q. Do you know that such certificates have been given ?—A. No, sir ; I don't know it.

Q. Do you know that they have not been given ?—A. No, sir ; I don't know anything about it.

Q. Do you know that great efforts have been made to get the colored republicans to vote the democratic ticket for the purpose of making a show so as to allow it to be said that the democratic party was made up of colored people and of white people alike ?—A. No, sir ; I don't know that, either.

Q. Do you know that it has not been done—that great efforts have not been made to make a show to that effect ?—A. I don't know it, sir.

Q. What do you turn your attention to ? Do you take any interest in the educational affairs of this city or county ? Are you connected with the school committees ?—A. No, sir. I hold no public position.

Q. Are you connected with the charitable institutions of the city or county of Charleston ?—A. No, sir ; my residence is Mount Pleasant.

Q. Where is that ?—A. I live about thirteen miles from here.

Q. Whereabouts ?—A. In Charleston County.

Q. Do you belong to the church, or do you give any time to the religious affairs of the county ?—A. I belong to the Episcopal Church.

Q. Do you undertake to manage ?—A. I leave that to other people.

Q. You do not trouble yourself about such matters ?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. You are engaged in farming, raising produce, and trying to make a living ?—A. Yes, sir ; trying to make an honest living.

Q. You have never been a politician ?—A. Never, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Were you in the Army ?—A. No, sir ; I was too young.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Mr. Banks asked you, awhile ago, if you took a promise from any of these hands of yours. Now, I ask you did you ever exact a promise from one of them ?—A. No, sir ; I left it to their own option.

Q. You argued with them as you would have argued with a white man about the condition of affairs ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. In other words, your men were so much satisfied with what you said that they concluded to come up and vote the democratic ticket ?—A. Yes, sir ; they thought there ought to be a change.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Saturday, December 23, 1876.

SEMPY GUILLIARD (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Question. Do you live in Christ Church Parish, in Charleston County ?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How near to Four-mile church do you live ?—A. I believe it is four miles.

Q. How old are you ?—A. I couldn't tell you how old I is.

Q. Well, give us an idea—are you thirty ?—A. O, I is over thirty.

Q. Are you forty ?—A. Well, I doesn't have no doubt but what I am.

Q. Were you born in this county ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you always lived here ?—A. No, sir.

Q. I wish you would state whether any colored men who were republicans did anything to you before the election ; and, if so, what they did.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell us what they did.—A. They told me this : that if I voted the democratic ticket and didn't vote the republican ticket, they would shoot me. Some colored men took me down on the edge of the swamp at night, and told me that I must vote the republican ticket. They says, "I ain't going to ask you to do it, for you must do it. If you don't do it we intend to shoot you as sure as you're born." Bress de Lord ! I was scared ; and so went and voted the republican ticket ; but I didn't intend for to do it, sir.

Q. How long was this before the election ?—A. A week, sir.

Q. Was it in the day-time or night-time ?—A. Night-time.

Q. What time of night ?—A. Between eleven and twelve o'clock.

Q. Where were you ?—A. In the road, sir.

Q. Near to your house ?—A. O, no, sir ; it was farther from my house.

Q. Did you meet these people on the road?—A. Yes, sir; I met them in the store.

Q. Well, when they took you down to the swamp, did they have any arms with them?—

A. O, yes, sir; they had a gun.

Q. What did they make you do when you went down to the swamp?—A. They made me make an oath that I would vote the republican ticket.

Q. Did they make you stand up or sit down, or what?—A. They made me stand up, sir.

Q. You voted the republican ticket, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many of these men were there?—A. Three of them, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. What ticket had you intended to vote?—A. I was intending to vote the democratic ticket.

Q. You would have voted the democratic ticket if you had not been scared by these men?—A. Yes, sir; I would have voted him, certain, sir.

Q. You met these men at a store?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go out of the store with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they ask you to go out, or did you go out of your own accord?—A. We were walking out in the road together.

Q. Going towards home?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. How many times have you voted?—A. I have voted three or four times.

Q. Did you vote the democratic ticket?—A. All the time, sir?

Q. Yes?—A. No, sir; I voted the republican ticket, until this time.

Q. Who do you work for?—A. Mr. Horlbeck.

Q. What was your business?—A. Plowing.

Q. Did he say anything to you about your vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any other white man?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody but these three men that you have spoken of?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know them?—A. O, yes; I knowed them, sir.

Q. Where did they live?—A. They staid right around me there, sir.

Q. Did they work for Mr. Horlbeck?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who did they work for?—A. One did; and one worked for Mr. Porcher, and one worked for Mr. Jervey.

Q. Where was the swamp that you went to?—A. Right by the road.

Q. What did they take you into the swamp for?—A. For me to tell them the truth—that I was going to vote the republican ticket; and they said if I didn't do that they would shoot me right then and there, and leave me there.

Q. Did you believe they were going to do it?—A. Yes, sir; I had a good idea that they would.

Q. Had they ever shot anybody before?—A. I never knowed them to shoot anybody up there, but they spoke so pompiously—and they didn't smile once—that I thought they would do it.

Q. Have you a family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A wife and children?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many children?—A. Four, sir.

Q. Is your wife a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. She doesn't go with the democrats?—A. Not before she works for them.

Q. She was not a democrat?—A. Not before. When she worked with them she was a democrat.

Q. And when she didn't she was a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it with you?—A. O, yes, sir; I never worked for anybody but them.

Q. How long have you worked for Mr. Horlbeck?—A. I was on his place for four years, sir.

Q. Well, did you not understand that it might be better for you if you voted the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I never had no understanding. I jined the club.

Q. Who asked you to join the club?—A. Well, a good many white folks.

Q. What did they say?—A. They said that no one should feel exposed to jine that club, and that we could do as we pleased; and so I made up my mind to jine the club; when I did.

Q. Did you leave the club afterwards?—A. I staid with the club up to election-day.

Q. You jined the democratic club to please the white men?—A. No, sir; not exactly to please them. I was just doing it of my own idea, sir.

Q. And you voted the republican ticket to please the republicans?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did you vote the republican ticket to please yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. I understood you to say that a good many white men wanted to join the democratic club, and you joined it; and these three republicans wanted you to vote the republican ticket, and you voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did anybody force you to join the democratic club?—A. No, sir; they never forced me.

Q. Did anybody ever threaten you that they would turn you out of employment if you didn't join the democratic club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you joined the democratic club of your own free will, and according to your own opinion?—A. Yes, sir; that is my idea.

Q. Therefore you wanted to vote the democratic ticket at the last election, and you voted the republican ticket because these three men took you down into the swamp and made you swear that you would vote the republican ticket, and told you that if you didn't that they would shoot you?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. This was a week before the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go after that?—A. I went back home.

Q. What did you do the next day?—A. I went out into the field and worked.

Q. Did you see these three men again?—A. I never seed them again till about four days after that.

Q. What happened then?—A. One of them says he was funning, and another one says "I wasn't funning; if they had a' been like me you would have been in the swamp now."

Q. When was this that this man said he was funning with you; how long after you were in the swamp with them?—A. They took me into the swamp Thursday, and Sunday of the same week I seen them again.

Q. Before the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now this was Sunday; did you see them after that?—A. No, sir; not after Sunday.

Q. When did you see them after Sunday?—A. The voting-day.

Q. What did they say to you on the voting-day?—A. I hidid from them on that day.

Q. What time did you go to the polls?—A. I went in the morning, sir.

Q. What time were they opened?—A. At 6 o'clock, sir.

Q. What time did you vote?—A. I didn't vote till about 12 o'clock.

Q. Where were you all the time?—A. O, I just been walking all around, backwards and forwards in the bush.

Q. Among the people?—A. Yes, sir; just back and forwards.

Q. They didn't say anything to you, and you didn't say anything to them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the voting in the church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody interfered with you?—A. Nobody.

Q. You voted the republican ticket and came away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody said anything to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody beat you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go right home?—A. O, yes, sir; I went right home.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Saturday, December 23, 1876.

GILES SIMMONS (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I guess, as near as I can get at it, thirty-six.

Q. Were you born in South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Always lived here?—A. Yes, sir; always lived in Pineville, but since the war I have lived at Christ Church Parish.

Q. You have always lived in the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived at Christ Church Parish?—A. I have been there since 1865.

Q. What is your business?—A. My trade is blacksmithing, but I am a planter at present.

Q. Have you your own land?—A. I have a piece now, sir; but I haven't got a title for it as yet, and I a'n't living on it.

Q. Do you rent?—A. I rent from Theodore Stoney.

Q. How many acres do you rent?—A. Ten acres.

Q. That is where you do your planting?—A. There's where I live, sir.

Q. How far away from the Four-Mile Church precinct do you live?—A. I guess about three-quarters of a mile, sir.

Q. Were you living there a month before the last election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any intimidation having been used or threats made prior to the election to prevent colored men from voting the democratic ticket?—A. As far as I know I will tell you as straight as I can.

Q. Confine what you say to the period prior to the election.—A. I know nothing about what occurred before the election, but just exactly at the election.

Q. What time did you go to the polls?—A. I guess I went in the morning about eight o'clock.

Q. Now tell us what occurred there all the time.—A. It was an agreement between I and the people, which they desired me to do, to cut Mr. Abram Smith off their ticket.

Q. What people?—A. The people of Christ Church—the voters at that poll.

Q. Who was Abram Smith? What was he running for?—A. He was the representative of that parish.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. On what ticket?—A. From the republican ticket.

Q. Was he a candidate for the legislature?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Well, you may go on.—A. And I went there to do so according to the request of them, and even also myself.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You wanted to do it?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Well, sir, go on.—A. The man who was on the republican ticket was one of the leading men, and his name was to be cut away, and the tickets was to be given to the people after I did cut them.

Q. The man who had the tickets was a leading colored man?—A. O, yes, sir. A man who didn't desire Abram Smith to be elected. He give me the tickets to cut out his name for the people. Then while I was doing that he came back himself and brought a crowd of womens and mens with clubs, and said that I was about ruining the republican ticket, because me, myself, was a democrat, and that I was only cutting out Abram Smith for Mr. Horlbeck to be elected, who was a democrat. Then they abused me for everything that occurred, and attempted several times to strike me, but then they didn't do it—saying I was a democrat. They tried to see whether I would vote the democratic ticket or not, but as it happened I wouldn't let them see me. The fuss then quieted down, and it was about three or four o'clock before I could vote. They went down the next morning and carried the box down to the village and sent it up to the city.

Q. Well, what was the demeanor of these colored republicans at the polls? Were they quiet or were they noisy?—A. O, Lord! I guess you could hear them almost a mile and a half. A man would have had a good heart to stay there at all.

Q. Did you hear any cursing?—A. They were all cursing and swearing—womens and mens—womens with clubs in their hands; some with bayonets on sticks; some with clubs with nails nailed in them all around; and some womens were there that was about sixty or seventy years of age. Some says, "Beat him;" some says, "Shoot him;" some says, "Put him to death."

Q. Did you hear anything said about any persons that voted the democratic ticket?—A. They said distinctly that any man who voted the democratic ticket ought to be killed.

Q. Did they say what they would do?—A. No, sir; they didn't say what they would do; but that is what they said ought to be done.

Q. Did you hear them threaten to beat any one?—A. They threatened to beat me myself. I saw another colored man which I knew right well; me and him was raised in the same parish; and he tried his best to vote the democratic ticket, but he said that he couldn't do it. There was a good many others, but he was the only one that came up to me and explained himself.

Q. What was his name?—A. His name was Tom Mulligan, sir.

Q. Did he vote finally or not?—A. I don't know that he did. He told me that he wanted to go and vote, but I don't know that he did.

Q. Do you know any colored men that would have liked to vote the democratic ticket and were prevented?—A. I know Charles Cooper, my brother-in-law. They made him take his ticket out of his pocket, and he had to show it to them. He had a republican ticket and a democrat ticket, and he had to take the republican ticket and put it in the democrat ticket, and when they called upon him to show his ticket, he took out his republican ticket and showed it, and then he voted the democrat ticket.

Q. Do you know of any colored men that were prevented from voting the democratic ticket?—A. I don't know of any that were made to leave the poll.

Q. I am not asking you that. I am asking you if you know of any colored men that were prevented from voting?—A. That is what I mean, sir.

Q. Do you know of any colored men that were scared, that wanted to vote the democratic ticket and didn't do it?—A. I believe in my heart, sir, that there were over a hundred who were so scared that they couldn't do it.

Q. Were there many colored men who, before the election, told you that they would like to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I had hoped to vote myself thirty men—thirty men were promised to vote the democrat ticket with me.

Q. How did those thirty men vote?—A. Every one of them voted the republican ticket, sir; every one of them.

Q. Why did they vote it?—A. Well, because, as I told you, they were afraid—they were scared into it. They wouldn't own to-day that they wanted to vote the democrat ticket.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Would not own what to-day?—A. I mean that they wouldn't own to day that they wanted to vote the democrat ticket after they seen what I went through.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :) :

Q. That is to say, that they would be afraid to acknowledge that they even intended to vote it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored republicans were there about the polls that day?—A. There could not have been less than four hundred.

Q. Well, how many at any one time?—A. I guess at one time there might have been as high as two hundred.

Q. You have stated that there was an agreement between you and the people to cut Abram Smith from the ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between you and what people? What persons agreed with you?—A. I mean the voters of that poll.

Q. Well, how many?—A. When this was made up it was made up by all the men that was coming to vote at that poll, and it seemed that it was going right straight through. I saw a good many of them, and it was agreed to by them.

Q. A good many of the people at that poll who were republicans and who intended to vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were satisfied to cut the name off the ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This leader who had charge of the republican tickets was one of the men who agreed with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He agreed to strike out Mr. Smith's name and put in Mr. Horlbeck's?—A. No, sir; but to put on Charles North.

Q. Who was Charles North?—A. He was a republican, sir.

Q. He was running against Smith?—A. Yes, sir; that's it.

Q. Let us hear what happened the next day.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Was he a colored man also?—A. Yes, sir; he was a colored man also; and the colored people desired him to run because Abram Smith beat him in the convention by fraud; but Smith denies it.

Q. Horlbeck was a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :) :

Q. What occurred next day?—A. Next day I was coming down to the village with a load of wood—

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Do you mean the day after the election?—A. Yes, sir; the day after the election; and I met about eleven men. I was coming to the village, and they were going up, and they halted me on the road. They said to me, says they, "Give me satisfaction for cutting our tickets, you damned democrat son of a bitch." Then, sir, the horse was very skittish and wouldn't stop and was afraid of the guns.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. These men had guns, had they?—A. Yes, sir; every one of them had guns.

Q. They were colored men?—A. Every one of them was a colored man.

Q. Well?—A. And as I passed them the horse was very skittish, as I tell you; and I heard one man say, "I'm your captain. Do nothing that I tell you not to do;" and at the same time that I passed by I heard a man say, "Don't shoot! Don't shoot! Don't shoot!" three times, but I never looked back. The next evening I sent my boy to the village—the next evening after that—and in coming back he met with about six men, and they tried to take the horse, and said, "The horse will do as well as the master." Then I didn't want out any more for the next coming two weeks. I was advised to stay at home for the protection of my life; and my business all went down for the next two weeks.

Q. Well?—A. That's all I can tell you concerning the election.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did they take the horse?—A. O, no, sir.

Q. They threatened to take it?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :) :

Q. Is it safe for a colored man to be a democrat, and to declare that he is a democrat?—A. O, no, sir; it ain't safe at all; it is very unsafe indeed.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. How do they treat you now in that locality?—A. O, very cold, indeed; very cold. I have no friends at all. I am in the parish as a stranger.

Q. Have you a church there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you go to church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any democrats there besides yourself?—A. Only one in about forty members.

Q. How do they treat you there?—A. Well, they try to treat me cold, even there; but they have a law that they has to overlook everything; but, notwithstanding, sir, they treat me very cold, indeed, sir.

Q. Are you the minister?—A. No, sir; I am the deacon.

Q. What is the minister?—A. He is a democrat; he voted the democratic ticket. That's all that saved me, sir.

Q. Do they like him?—A. No, sir; they don't like him one bit; but they can't justly approve him; if they could justly approve him, they wouldn't have him at all.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. He does not say anything at all?—A. No, sir; and that's the case with myself. Some says I am a democrat, some says I ain't, and I don't say I am at all. I just let them have it their own way.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What was your objection to Mr. Smith?—A. My personal objection was that Mr. Horlbeck was my real choice. I would give him every vote anywhere that I could.

Q. And you took the tickets, did you, from this leading man?—A. I did, sir.

Q. How many did you take?—A. He gave me ten at one time, and suggested I might have as many as I wanted.

Q. And you cut out Smith's name?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many did you cut?—A. I cut about four, when these people came up to me.

Q. And they were very excited?—A. O, my, very excited.

Q. And the women?—A. O, they were worse than the men. Well, I believe these men honestly desire to do what is right, but then these women were coaxed into it by the republican leaders to object to their husbands' doing what was right.

Q. The men want to do what is right and the women want to do what is wrong?—A. Well, there was one man that got up and said, "Let that man alone."

Q. You say that the women are worse than the men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not the women make the most of this trouble?—A. I believe honestly that the women made the most of it. If it hadn't been for them the others wouldn't have been bad up there.

Q. And you would have cut out Smith's name and put in your friend's name, and he would have been elected?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, is there not some way to keep the women away from the polls?—A. There's only one way, and that way, as soon as we have law—I don't believe we have any law; I don't believe we have had any for eleven years—that way is to have a law to protect the men from everybody.

Q. Is there any effort made to keep the women away from the polls?—A. I believe, sir, if we had good government here, and the laws were carried out properly, that the womens would see that things isn't left in their hands, and that things would have to go according to the laws of the State, and they would have to keep in their houses.

Q. Well, Hampton is a good man?—A. O, yes, sir; I believe, according to his own doctrine which I heard him speak, that he is an immense good man.

Q. He would keep the women away?—A. I believe he would, sir.

Q. The colored women make all the trouble?—A. I believe they do, sir.

Q. Your brother-in-law, Charles Cooper, wanted to vote the democratic ticket, you say?—A. And he did do it, too.

Q. Did he have any trouble?—A. As I told you, sir, they made him take out his ticket before he could vote, and he had to show them a republican ticket, and then he voted a democrat ticket.

Q. He showed them a republican ticket and then voted a democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, he is as bright a fellow as you are?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He knows what he is about?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He voted for North?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Smith was elected?—A. Yes, sir; and he is at Columbia now.

Q. Cooper voted the democratic ticket; did he have any trouble?—A. No more than that, sir; they did speak a little, but didn't say so much.

Q. Well, what did they say?—A. They said, "He's a democrat," and they say it now.

Q. They say it all the time, and he is all the time, and votes the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I suppose he believes the same as you do about the women being kept away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he believes that Hampton would keep the women away?—A. Yes, sir. I heard that Senator that come from Georgia. He spoke better even than Hampton. He spoke as if it was done in writing.

Q. He talked like a book?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. General Gordon said that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose you understood him to say that that was the way they did it in Georgia?—A. No, sir; I didn't understand him to say that, but I understand him to say that women gives more trouble, and even also among the whites.

Q. Now, in regard to the hundred men that were scared, who were those fellows?—A. Well, now, sir, I couldn't tell you that.

Q. Cooper was not scared, and you were not scared. Now you say that there were a hundred men scared—so scared that they could not vote. Who were they?—A. They were voters at that poll.

Q. Where did they live?—A. O, they lived all around that place.

Q. What was their business?—A. All planters, sir.

Q. Young men?—A. Young and old, sir.

Q. Colored men?—A. Colored men, every one of them.

Q. How did you know those men were scared?—A. I knew it from their talk.

Q. Did you hear them talk?—A. Yes sir; they wanted to vote the democrat ticket, and they didn't.

Q. They didn't want to vote the republican ticket, and they did it?—A. Yes, sir; they did it.

Q. You say it was the women that scared these men, and but for the women you would have had a hundred votes more?—A. I believe, honestly, that if the women were in their houses attending to their business, the men would have gone off and voted.

Q. You say thirty promised you to vote the democratic ticket—were they colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they do it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did not they vote it?—A. Well, if you was there, you would have seen that it couldn't have been done unless they made up their minds to die if they did it.

Q. How came you to be talking with these men about voting?—A. They said they would vote the democrat ticket just the same as I would tell you to-day. They said, "If that man is as you say, I think we had better vote for him."

Q. But they did not vote that way?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say that your business all went down for two weeks. How was it that it went down?—A. I am working by day's labor for my living, and of course, if I promised to be to you to-day and I didn't come, you ain't goin' to pay me for it! if I don't come. To-morrow I promise to carry a load of wood to this gentleman or that gentleman, and the wood doesn't get there, and of course I don't get paid for that.

Q. You did not go out?—A. I didn't go out because my wife and children and friends advised me not to go; and, of course, I wouldn't do it.

Q. How was it at the end of the two weeks?—A. At the end of the two weeks I met the men down to the village—some of them—and I never said anything to them, and they never said anything to me; and from that up to to-day they haven't said anything to me at all.

Q. The republicans are getting to be determined men, are they? They are determined to have men vote their ticket?—A. I believe they do, sir.

Q. They want to maintain their rights?—A. Certainly, sir.

Q. And the women, too?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You said a while ago that the women were worse than the men?—A. Yes, sir; a great deal worse.

Q. And you said that the leaders of the republican party influenced the women?—A. I do say so, sir.

Q. Well, what do you understand to be the policy or plan of the republican party there among the colored people generally; is it to approach the women and induce them to threaten the men if they don't vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To induce women to go out at election-time and make such demonstrations as will frighten the men away from the polls if they dare to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I do think so, sir, because I hear the republican speakers stand upon the stump and tell them plainly—says he, "You, women, take care of your husbands, and don't let them put you back in slavery." Any man that would go to the polls would hear that; it is no hidden history at all, sir.

Q. You have heard the republican orators appeal to the women in that way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And therefore the women are more violent than the men?—A. Of course. Some of them threaten to kill their husbands because they voted the democratic ticket. Now, that is honestly so, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Well, you will have to leave the State if the women keep on this way.—A. Yes, sir;

I will leave, and if General Hampton isn't declared the governor, I would rather leave, because I believe I am a worse slave now than I ever was before. I would rather be dead than live this way.

Q. If you go, will you take your wife with you?—A. Yes, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 23, 1876.

THEODORE G. BARKER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. What is your business?—Answer. I am a lawyer, sir.

Q. How long have you been at the bar?—A. Since I was 21; I was admitted to the bar in 1851.

Q. You are practicing in Charleston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-four.

Q. Were you in Charleston County during the late canvass?—A. Yes, sir; with the exception of an absence at one time at Chester, Winnsborough, Georgetown, and Somerville.

Q. Will you be kind enough to state any facts within your knowledge bearing upon the late canvass and the manner in which that canvass was conducted on both sides?—A. I can only state facts generally. I did not participate in the election itself beyond attending the polls on the day of election, and had only on that day the casual observation of a bystander. I heard reports coming into the committee-room during a portion of the day, when I was there. The active part that I had in this canvass in this county consisted in attendance at what is known as the Strawberry meeting on Cooper River, and certain ward meetings in the city of Charleston. I was present at the appointment which General Hampton made in Chester. I was present at the appointment which he made in Winnsborough, and his appointment at Georgetown; and returning from Georgetown I was with him at Somerville. I do not recall any other points during the canvass.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Was Mr. Hampton at Sumter, at Chester, and at Winnsborough?—A. Yes, sir; at Sumter, Winnsborough, Georgetown, Somerville, and Chester.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. State whether there was during the canvass any intimidation of colored voters, and give us from such information as you possess the manner in which the campaign was managed by the republican party?—A. The campaign in the low country differed entirely from the campaign in the up-country.

Q. I desire you to confine yourself to this portion of the country.—A. The seaboard counties were differently situated in reference to population, and the State republican party has held its stronghold in this lower portion of the State ever since emancipation, corresponding in power to the proportion of the population—the colored population—and its relative proportion to the white population.

Q. What is that proportion?—A. Well, I don't know the figures. There is a very great disproportion in the number of colored people through the seaboard counties, Beaufort, Colleton, Georgetown, and Charleston outside of the city of Charleston.

Q. The colored voters greatly exceed the white voters?—A. O, immensely. The white people are very sparse throughout those regions. In Charleston City the majority is in favor of the whites. The lower part of Barnwell, which borders upon Beaufort and Colleton, and the lower portion of Orangeburgh and Williamsburgh and Sumter present the same features of disproportion, and it gradually diminishes as you go into the upper portion of the State.

Q. Be kind enough to answer the question I put to you before.—A. The system of intimidation which was carried out in the election commenced in a labor movement just before the harvest. The same agents who afterward governed the political intimidators were the agents who appeared in the labor-strikes, and the process was very similar. The dictation on the subject of wages was in prescribing a certain amount of pay, which they got a portion of the negroes to agree to take, and to insist upon; and in the same agreement they embodied the pledge that they would not allow any others to work for any less wages than those. That was carried out throughout the counties of Beaufort and Colleton, and it was attempted on the Cooper River. The negroes were assembled at a meeting, and they were told what the orders were in regard to the wages that they were to demand of the planters. In some cases they signed agreements. In all cases they made agreements binding upon them to insist upon those wages, and agents were appointed by them to carry out the agreement and enforce it against any colored laborers who ventured to work for less wages than those which were prescribed. Numerous instances occurred in Beaufort and Colleton where the negroes—the laborers—were willing to work for the usual prices, and they were threatened with beatings and other maltreatment, which they received in many instances. The troubles originating from that source have become matter of general history. In many instances—in almost all instances—the majority of the negroes, especially at the commencement of this trouble, said that they were willing to work for the old prices, but that they must have protection; and they sought the protection of the planters. The planters applied to the legal authorities, the trial-justices and sheriffs, and applied to Governor Chamberlain. Riots occurred which threatened the peace of the whole country.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Who applied to Governor Chamberlain?—A. The planters.

Q. Did he afford them any relief or protection?—A. No, sir; not at all sufficient to stop the riots. They were permitted to go on until the arrival in Beaufort of a man named Wilson, I believe, who was sheriff and a republican, who did interpose and exercise his authority. There was nothing done which could be said to have been effectual by the constituted authorities. I cannot speak of my own knowledge, except as a matter of history, of the Beaufort and Colleton matter, but I can of the Cooper River matter.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :) :

Q. Well, if I correctly understand you, the same parties who controlled those negroes in these labor-strikes were the parties who subsequently controlled them politically?—A. Within my personal knowledge.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Describe what Cooper River is.—A. It is the confluence of the Cooper and Ashley Rivers. It is in Charleston County. The Cooper River country would be about sixty miles in direct length. That includes the windings of the river. I suppose fifty miles would carry one from Charleston to the head of the river.

Q. Well, go on, sir.—A. I was interested last summer in three plantations on the Cooper River, conducted under the superintendence of a man named Peter Nelson. He is of Danish origin, and moved out to this country and settled in Carolina since the war. He is a man who had very pleasant relations always with the laborers, and never had any difficulty until this year with any of them.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. He is your agent?—A. He is my agent. I am interested in three plantations on the Cooper River, and Mr. Nelson is part-owner of one of them, and on the two others he is my agent. On the 24th of August he was ready to harvest the rice, and called together the people who resided upon the place to ascertain who of them were going into the field next day, and he stated that he would pay the prices that he had been in the habit of giving. They generally expressed themselves satisfied, but a few of them raised objections and stated that the orders were that they should not take less than sixty cents, the usual price being fifty cents.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Fifty cents a day?—A. Fifty cents for what they call a task. A task is the cutting and tying of a quarter of an acre of rice. They began at once to make riotous noise and disturbance, much to his surprise. He had never had anything of that kind occur before. These orders, they stated, were given by a man in the neighborhood who is named George Sass, and three or four of these fellows stated that they had been appointed by George Sass as his foremen to see that these orders were carried out, and they said that the orders were that any man or woman who worked for less than sixty cents should receive fifty-five lashes on the bare back. One man said that he would join with them and see that the fifty-five lashes were put upon the back, and that if they didn't take care it would go up to sixty. The negroes still said generally that they were willing to work for the old prices, but they must have protection. Mr. Nelson sent me down this report, and I received it at 7 o'clock the next morning. I got a trial-justice to issue a warrant for conspiracy and riot and assault and battery, and got a colored constable and went up immediately on the North-eastern Railroad to this plantation where this thing was threatening. When I arrived there I was informed that all of the laborers had gone into the field to cut, including these men who claimed to be appointees of George Sass to carry out these orders; but I was informed by Mr. Nelson that they had sent off a message to George Sass to bring up his people from below to assist them in carrying out these orders. I directed Mr. Nelson to go back into the field where the harvest was going on, and to say to these men that I was there with the authority of the law, and with an officer of the law to protect any of the laborers who were desirous of working on the terms that they wished, and to arrest any one who made a disturbance on the plantation, and who molested any negro who wished to work. He came back to me and reported that he had spoken to one or two of these men who claimed to be appointees or foremen of George Sass, and it seemed that the announcement to them that I was there as a measure of protection to these other people discouraged the malcontents very much, and they apologized and said that they couldn't help taking the appointments, because they were present at the meeting the day before at George Sass's house, and that if they had not accepted these appointments the other negroes would have beaten them into it. I went from that plantation where the harvest was going on to the adjoining plan-

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did you hear this conversation?—A. No, sir; it was reported to me by Mr. Nelson. He told me that one of these men who had been threatening the evening before, had not gone into the harvest; that he supposed he had not gone in because he was disposed to stand out. I knew the man, and upon one occasion had had a talk with him in reference to the work up there; and I called him up to me and told him that I understood that he had not gone into the harvest that day because he was going to carry out this programme of George Sass's, and I warned him about the consequences of it, and told him that he had better send off and stop George Sass from sending up his people there, because if they did come and make a disturbance they would get into trouble. He disclaimed having participated in it, and told me of the others whose names had been previously given to me as being the leaders. He left me, and in a short time afterward a party of about twenty negroes, with guns and clubs, were reported to me as coming. He came back to me and reported that those people were coming, and the colored constable whom I had carried with me had gone out of his own motion, and met these people on the road; and this man said that he had spoken to them, and told them that the negroes were working quietly, and that they didn't want any disturbance that day; that he had had to leave; that they had reproached him for going back on the agreement, and they brandished their clubs over his head, and he came away. These people went on and went into the field, and called out one of the head men, as they call him, the foreman; and he, I was informed, told them the same thing about the people being willing to work. They then turned back and came through the lower plantation where I was, and went back home, firing off their guns as they passed.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Well, now, leave the laborers and come back to matters of election.—A. I was going on to say that this same man, George Sass, was the political leader of the intimidation that was practiced at the election.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. In what precinct was this?—A. The Strawberry precinct. There are two precincts there, the Strawberry precinct and the Biggin Church precinct.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane :)

Q. Well, sir, proceed.—A. The first republican meeting on Cooper River was at Biggin Church. There Mr. Bowen, the republican chairman of the county committee—

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Mr. Bowen was the manager of this meeting?—A. He was present at this meeting, and there met the chairman of the democratic precinct committee. At that meeting an agreement was had between them that they would have a joint discussion at Strawberry on a certain day, which I have forgotten the date of.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Who did he meet there?—A. Mr. Colcock, chairman of the democratic committee, and agreed with him to have a joint discussion at Strawberry.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane.)

Q. Well, sir; proceed.—A. Before the time appointed for the Strawberry meeting, at which they were to divide time, as the expression then was, a preliminary meeting had been held by the Bowen republicans under the auspices of George Sass, at which this man Sass and some of his followers had shown a disposition to make some disturbance and threaten the colored people who would venture to vote the democratic ticket. On the day before the day appointed for the joint discussion I received notice from Mr. Colcock that the negroes generally were threatened not to attend this meeting, and were threatened with being beaten and otherwise ill-treated if they joined the democrats, or professed any sympathy with them. He informed me that the negroes were willing to go to the meeting, but they were afraid to go, and that orders had been sent from Charleston, and circulated by George Sass among the negroes, to the effect that they would be prevented from going there. Ammunition had been sent up the day before on the cars and distributed among the negroes, and the negroes were ordered to bring their arms, and this order was accompanied with threats to the democratic negroes, or the negroes that were disposed to turn democratic. He begged me to bring up some people from Charleston to protect these democratic negroes, and I made arrangements for the presence at the polls of a sufficient number of persons from Charleston and from other parts to insure protection for the colored people who were threatened. I went up from Charleston myself in a steamer to Strawberry with fifty or sixty men, and when I got to the ferry at the foot of the hill on which the church is, I there found Mr. Bowen surrounded by a large number of his followers.

Q. How many?—A. Well, I suppose there must have been at least 200.

Q. Negroes?—A. Yes, sir; I could not judge well. Part of them were concealed from my vision when I came up. As we were landing from the steamer in a small boat Mr. Bowen withdrew his people, and went up the hill to the neighborhood of the church where the platform was arranged for the speaking. I was told that there was a good deal of excitement among the followers of Mr. Bowen and among the followers of his man George Sass, the representative of his party there—a good deal of excitement created by the presence of our people there, and I called together those who had gone with me and assembled them at the foot of the hill; and some of the colored people were standing about—men and women—and I stated to them that we were there for the purpose of participating in this joint discussion, and for the purpose of protecting those of the colored who wanted to vote the democratic ticket against the intimidation which had been threatened; that we were there for the purposes of peace outlyre, and that if the other side wanted to intimidate anybody they could intimidate us; that the threat had been given out that any colored persons who went with the democrats would be beaten or killed, and that we were there for the purpose of showing them that we intended to carry out the pledges with which we began the campaign, which was to assure them that if they voted the democratic ticket they would be protected and sustained by the democratic party; that they should not be intimidated, and that they would be allowed to vote as they pleased. I sent up word to Mr. Bowen to say that I would be glad if he would arrange a place for our people to be gathered about the stand; and I did that in order to avoid carrying a crowd into another crowd, and the chances of any collision that might grow out of that thing. Mr. Bowen did so, and I put a United States flag on a long pole and put the band and speakers in front of the column, and we marched up the hill to the stand, and took our places in the grounds that had been assigned to us by Mr. Bowen by agreement with the chairman of the democratic committee, all of which was arranged before I got there. This man George Sass presided nominally over the meeting, and we went into the joint discussion, Mr. Bowen's party, the republican speakers, having the opening and reply. Mr. Bowen, at one time during the discussion, said something in allusion to the armed men that were with me, and I interrupted him—standing alongside of him on the east—and said to him that the first armed men that appeared on this ground to-day were his followers, and that "we noticed yesterday that all of your followers were summoned by your chairman to be here to-day with arms to prevent the colored democrats from having any showing at this meeting." He at once said that he recognized it, and regretted to see that his followers had come there with arms, and claimed that he had always dissuaded them from doing so, and given them the most peaceable advice; told them that they must not come there and make any difficulty, but always vote the republican ticket. The result of the meeting was that it ended in the most perfect good nature. I was keeping the time, and I told Mr. Bowen that his time was up. He said that there was no use to stop, he could not get to the railroad that night; and I said, laughingly, "No; we can stay here;" and he said, "You will have to give me a passage down in your boat;" and we took him down in our boat. I mention that Strawberry meeting because you will probably find in Washington a report made by Marshal Wallace, after the Calhoun business, in which he refers to this Strawberry meeting as a meeting at which the colored republicans were aggravated by the presence of armed men brought there by the democrats, and he connects that with the Calhoun business in his report.

Q. Well, sir, proceed.—A. After that Strawberry meeting, Colonel Shumton, the chairman of the republican county committee, made an agreement with Mr. Bowen, the chairman of the democratic committee, for joint discussions, without arms on either side, and these joint discussions were held throughout the county until the Calhoun matter, which put an end to them. That Calhoun meeting was held under that arrangement.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. That there were to be no arms?—A. That there were to be no arms, sir; and the gentlemen who went from Charleston as the democratic speakers went up without any protection at all.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Well, go on, sir.—A. After the proclamation of Governor Chamberlain and the proclamation of President Grant, the temper of the republican leaders and of their followers changed very much. There was in this county perfect good-nature in the conduct of the canvass, and we were progressing, as we thought, very well in the influence upon the colored people to vote the democratic ticket; but after that the whole temper of the campaign was changed, and the intimidation began, or increased, and up to the time of the election—

Q. Intimidation of whom?—A. By the colored people of the colored people. They did not intimidate any white people. They threatened the negroes in every way from joining the democratic party or showing any sympathy for the democratic party, or voting for the democratic party. The efforts of those who were competing with the republicans were entirely paralyzed. They appealed to race prejudices.

Q. Who did?—A. The republicans. They insisted upon their party allegiance. They treated them as deserters of their race and of their party, and of their political friends, and brought to bear upon them the most tremendous pressure—a combination of the Union League and the power of the political organization which followed the Union League.

Q. What was that power—the Union League?—A. Yes, sir; after the emancipation the colored people of this State generally were brought into the Union League, and they were bound over by very solemn formula and oaths to adhesion to that organization.

Q. And to the republican party?—A. And to the republican party, which is a part of the understanding of the negroes of what the Union League means.

Q. What was the time of the organization of the Union League?—A. It was planted in South Carolina after the war. It preceded the reconstruction acts of 1867, which gave suffrage to the negroes.

Q. What evidences have you seen of the fact that such an oath was administered?—A. The evidence of that came in different directions from negroes, who expressed their sympathy with the white people with whom they lived, yet up to the point of voting against the republican party they said, "We cannot do that, because we took an oath." Before the first election at which the colored people exercised the suffrage the Union League was manifested in its control over the negro population by appearing in the disturbances of labor, or, rather, in commencing them, and some of the manifestations of it were in this way: "They would be at work in numbers in the field, and, suddenly, without any clew to it on the part of the employers, they would throw down their hoes or spades, or whatever tools they had in their hands, and would all go off, leave their work, and the inquiry would be, 'What is the matter?' and the answer was always, 'Word has come that we have to go to so and so.'"

Q. I wish you would state, sir, what influence was exerted, if any, by colored republicans over their colored brethren?—A. I was going on to tell you that I have heard from Mr. Timothy Hurley, who was one of the electors on the republican ticket, and who is our county treasurer, and who has been a leading man in the republican organizations of this State, that he assisted in the formation of the Union League. His statement to me was that he had assisted in its organization here after the war. All of the exercise of the control of that organization has been entirely in the hands of the republican political leaders from the time that this negro suffrage commenced, in 1868.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. He told you he had been one of the original formers of this league; did he tell you the design of it, or the number of its members?—A. He told me that he had come out in the interest of the members of the Chase party. As soon as suffrage was given to the colored people the organization of the party was upon the basis of this control which had been obtained over the colored population by the Union League, and the Freedmen's Bureau paved the way to the establishment of the political control of the party which took the place of it. The Union League appealed to them through their superstitions; the Freedmen's Bureau represented the Government, which set them free, and interfered between them and the land-owners in the matter of contracts, and furnished supplies to them, and was in the negro mind the representative of their friends against the land-owners; and that was succeeded by the political leaders of the republican party, who stepped immediately into that line, and obtained the most absolute control over the most ignorant men of the negro population of this country.

Q. Was not Mr. Bowen connected in some way with the Freedmen's Bureau at one time?—A. Mr. Bowen was released from prison here in 1865, and became first clerk of the provost court, which was established here in 1865. The provost courts administered all the civil and military police government here for some time. Mr. Corbin was the president of the provost court here in the time of Mr. Sickles and Mr. Canby. Mr. Bowen then became sheriff, and has built up his power in this county from that start to absolute dominion over the whole republican vote of this county, so as to make him independent of his own party. He owns Charleston County now, and he could have defied the whole republican leadership in the State generally. He was opposed to Mr. Chamberlain himself. At these joint discussions Mr. Bowen took no trouble about appealing to the negroes. He assumed that he was an absolute master of the vote, and said very good-naturedly to the democratic orators who went there, "You gentlemen are wasting your time; you are trying to do in one campaign what it has taken me eight years to do—to build up my influence over these people."

Q. Now, sir; I wish you would state what influence was exercised by the colored men over their colored brethren who might desire to vote the democratic ticket?—A. The younger and bolder of the negro men, those who were more disorderly and were not men of families, and not men of quiet dispositions, were generally the material that were organized to be active agents in the business of intimidation, first in the labor movement and afterwards the political intimidation. Boys of 17 and the more desperate side of the disorderly element of the negro population of older years constituted the body of those who were active in the matter. They went about threatening any negro who would dare to go with the white people, or who would dare to go with the land-owners, or who would not vote the republican ticket, and they were assisted very powerfully in their work by the negro women who were under the influence of the negro preachers, who are generally republicans. The negro preachers were in many instances active politicians. The Rev. R. H. Cain, who is the editor of the Missionary Record, in the city of Charleston, and the republican Congressman-elect from this congressional district, is the strongest man known among them, and the most incendiary. In the early part of the campaign he held a meeting, at which I was not present but the proceedings of the meeting were published in the paper, at which meeting he appealed to their race prejudices and to those feelings of antagonism to the white people, which started the inflammatory element in the campaign. With him were several others, and among them a man, also a negro, who was present at the speaking at this Strawberry meeting, named Hunter. Those people exercised a sway over the women. This sway was increased solely, I suppose, from the fact that the element was so completely ignorant. The combined influence of the religious teachers and the political teachers and leaders carried the most absolute sway over the colored people in this seaboard country. It was so strong that nothing could resist it. Their sway antagonized all the efforts which were made by the opposite side who represented the capitalists, the property-holders, the intelligence, and the general character of the community. There were many touching instances of the struggle between kindly feelings on the part of the colored man in favor of those whom he had lived with all his life and the sway of this party and race obligation which was brought to bear upon him. Those who showed any disposition at all to come over to the democratic side were denounced as traitors to their party and their race. Their political leaders told them that if they went with the white people and with the land-owners, they were voting to put themselves and children back into slavery, their lives were threatened, and exclusion from churches and the social sympathy of their people—everything was brought to bear upon them. Intimidation was exercised more and more as the canvass went on up to the day of the election, and at the time of the election. In Charleston the militia was entirely in the hands of the colored republicans; they were distributed about at the various precincts in small bodies and formed the nucleus upon which negroes rallied with such weapons as guns, sticks, clubs, and sticks with bayonets on the ends of them, that constituted the armed force at different precincts on election-day, and they frequently appeared at their meetings, before the election, threatening those who declared themselves at all on the democratic side. They were aided on election-day by a large force in the city of Charleston and elsewhere—constables, or rather deputy sheriffs—who were ignorant colored people, wearing badges of office under the appointment of Bowen, the sheriff of the county, and exercising the power of arrest at will of any one that they chose, without reference to the commission of any offense. They were assisted by the same class of persons, wearing the badges of deputy United States marshals, under the appointment of Mr. Wallace, and the exercise by these two sets of persons, who were entirely partisan, all appointed on one side, was always directed against the democrats, and it created a thorough and entire intimidation of that portion of the colored vote which was at all disposed to vote the democratic ticket. The exceptions were men of rare courage, or those who were under the absolute protection of individual white men. The militiamen, who had arms from the State, furnished by republican military commanders or militia officers, in numerous instances presented themselves at the polls in armed force, and controlled the voters to a very large extent.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Are there not white militia companies in Charleston?—A. There were none in the whole of this seaboard country.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran):

Q. That about completes the facts that you desire to state in answer to the general question that was asked you?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. About what is the population of this city and district?—A. The population of Charleston City, I believe, is estimated about 50,000, and the population of the county has been variously estimated at 80,000, including the city. I don't think that any accurate census has ever been taken since the war.

Q. Do you remember the votes given in the county altogether?—A. Twenty-three thousand, I think, were about the figures in round numbers, of which 15,000 were stated to be republican and 8,000 democratic.

Q. Well, sir, what do you suppose would have been the vote of this county and city if none of this intimidation which you have described had been exercised over the people?—A. I should suppose that the best judgment upon that subject could be formed from the previous vote. I think that the legitimate vote of the county would not be more than 15,000 or 16,000.

Q. You did not understand my question. In the first place, would not 23,000 votes be a very large, an unreasonably large, vote in such a population?—A. O yes, sir; 23,000 would be about 25 per cent. of the voting population, if the figures of 80,000 are taken as the total population.

Q. Well, what per cent. of the population do you think would be voters, if you have paid any attention to that subject heretofore?—A. Well, I have not paid very close attention to it, but I think 10 per cent. is a very large per cent.

Q. Do you remember the vote of this county at the previous election?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You say the democratic vote of this county was about 8,000. How many democratic votes do you think would have been given in this county if there had been no intimidation and none of this violence and threatening which you have spoken of?—A. That necessarily must be a matter of speculation, and the answer to it would only give my estimate of the amount of pressure that was put upon the voters.

Q. Well, we have been taking your opinion as to what intimidation was, and all that sort of thing.—A. My opinion is that if the combined intimidation that was exercised in the way that I have described had been removed, and the voters had been allowed to vote as they pleased, without these threats, that the democratic vote could have been easily double what it was; but I give that simply as a matter of speculation and as a matter of my own estimate.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. In that event, what would have been the republican vote?—A. Of course, it would have taken that much from the republican side.

Q. It would have changed their places?—A. I think it would have changed their places. The control which was exercised at the polls over those people enabled them to repeat to a great extent, and enabled them to vote a great many persons who were not of age.

Q. Will you please to state to what extent there has been repeating here?—A. Do you mean to say of my own personal knowledge?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, I cannot state it.

Q. Do you know of any one person that voted that was under age?—A. I do not.

Q. Then you don't know, sir, that anybody has voted under age?—A. I do not.

Q. Or given a fraudulent vote in any way?—A. I was not an active participant, as I stated in the beginning.

Q. Do you know of any person who does know it?—A. There were several gentlemen who attended the polls at James Island who told me so. I think that the chairman of the county committee could give you the names of those that were active.

Q. At what time did this controversy to which you have referred begin in regard to the wages of labor?—A. I think it began in the month of August.

Q. Of this year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not until this August?—A. There were some riots and strikes, I think, in the month of June, during the planting season.

Q. Never before this year?—A. Nothing of this character that I remember of before this year.

Q. And those you think proceeded from the combination of the laborers, under the direction of certain leaders to whom you have referred?—A. I am satisfied of that.

Q. And this controversy in regard to wages and the regulations as to labor excited the minds of nearly the whole laboring population?—A. They did to a great extent in the counties of Beaufort and Colleton, bordering upon the rivers Combahee and Ashlapoo.

Q. Wherever the population was large?—A. Yes, sir; wherever the plantations were large.

Q. It is the same controversy that has arisen in regard to wages and labor elsewhere, in all parts of the world?—A. I cannot characterize it as the same thing at all, sir. There was not the same political connection.

Q. Do you know that there have been strikes in Massachusetts and that the mills of a whole city were stopped this year?—A. There is a difference between those and these.

Q. But I am not asking you in regard to the difference. You know that there has been a difference in regard to wages and labor in England and elsewhere. Is not this the same, and proceeding from the same causes as the others?—A. I do not think there is the slightest similarity.

Q. Please state the difference.—A. I think that those things originate with the laborers; I think that those strikes that occurred here this year were produced by influences from outside; that is, within my experience and information, they were really things brought about by influence operating upon labor from without. Those labor-unions and so forth are things that are formed within the body of the laboring population, and grow out of the constant attrition between capital and labor.

Q. Then your theory is that the whole political question was applied to labor and wages in this section?—A. Yes, sir.

A. Now, in regard to the influence of the preachers; in what manner are the preachers appointed, and in what manner are the societies supported?—A. The societies are voluntary, sir; I don't think they have any general ecclesiastical association outside of the limits of the State. There are differences among them. They have sometimes Methodist churches and sometimes Baptist churches.

Q. Well, suppose in a precinct like Christ Church, or Four-Mile Church; the colored people want a minister; in what way do they go to work to get one?—A. Whether they are appointed by the parent church, some way off, or whether they appoint them themselves, I do not know.

Q. They are the offshoot, then, of some pre-existing church?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. Do they pay him themselves?—A. They are supported entirely by the communicants.

Q. Do these preachers take an active part in politics?—A. In very many instances they do.

Q. The statement was made here this morning that one of these preachers was a democrat; is it a common thing for them to be democrats?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it Mr. Cain you spoke of as being the strongest man among the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. He owns and publishes the Missionary Record.

Q. What is his given name?—A. I think it is R. H.—R. H. Cain.

Q. Have you been attentive to the course of events here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have spoken of meetings called to debate political questions, and of arguments addressed to the colored people, and of various appeals made to their interests and the interests of the State; now, have you known any other appeals made to them with a view of controlling their votes through their interests?—A. I know of it in the same way that I have stated I have known of a great many things here.

Q. Well, what methods have been taken to affect their opinions and control their action in that regard?—A. I think the same influences that were generally reported being used at the North wherever they—

Q. Describe them as they are here.—A. I don't think that any organized action has ever been taken.

Q. What attempt whatever has been made to do that?—A. I think, in several instances, that I have heard of persons who have employed a large number of laborers notifying them in reference to this election that they would cease to employ them if they voted with the other side, without dictating to them who they should vote for.

Q. To what extent has it been practiced?—A. I don't think it has been practiced to any large extent.

Q. What proportion of employers have adopted that method or means of controlling them?—A. I think it a very small number.

Q. Do you know of any meetings of citizens of this city or county where action has been taken and resolutions have been passed upon this subject?—A. I don't remember; I think that one of the ward-meetings in Charleston, what is called here the preference policy, was advocated.

Q. What was the preference policy?—A. It was that in the giving employment to laborers they would prefer those who voted on their side to those who voted against them; that was the way it was called, and the way it was advocated.

Q. To what extent has that been practiced?—A. That is what I have just spoken of.

Q. Do you know of only one instance where a public meeting has adopted a resolution of that kind?—A. I do not recall but one, and that was a ward-meeting in Charleston. I believe that the executive committee of this county, when applied to in reference to adopting it as a part of their programme, declined to do so, and left it as a matter with individuals themselves.

Q. Do you know of instances of certificates having been given?—A. Yes, sir; I have known of some.

Q. What is the effect of that certificate business?—A. I think it is to give the legitimate weight of influence and property and employment to the defense of the property interests of the country against those people that are trying to break it down.

Q. That is, that a man who bears a certificate that he voted the democratic ticket, and is a democrat, is entitled to employment?—A. Is entitled to more favor or preference.

Q. Now in regard to the democratic press of the city. Do you know that there has been any discussion upon this question?—A. O, undoubtedly, sir.

Q. What is the ground they took?—A. The same ground—that the property interest of the community should seek that mode of protecting itself against the effort to destroy it.

Q. Then the property interest is hostile to the labor interest?—A. The non-property interest, as organized under the radical leadership, was arrayed in open hostility against the property interest.

Q. The property interests claimed, when they hired a man, that they should have so many hours good work out of him, and they claimed also some influence upon his political opinions and political action?—A. I don't think they have ever asserted that in this city.

Q. I am speaking of where the preference system is applied to a man. If his political opinions and political action agree with the opinions of the employer, then he is hired; that is the case under the preference system?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the opinions of the laborer and his action don't conform to the opinions and actions of the employer, then he is not hired?—A. Provided he is able to dispense with him.

Q. What is the effect of this system?—A. The effect was to discourage those who had organized the laborers against the property interests. I don't desire to have myself stated as indorsing it as legitimate.

Q. You have spoken of these colored republicans being armed; do you know whether the democrats were accustomed to take arms to political meetings or not?—A. They did in the beginning of the campaign, sir, to a certain extent.

Q. What kind of arms?—A. Well, I suppose that they had pistols to a certain extent.

Q. Muskets?—A. On one or two occasions that I know of they did carry rifles.

Q. To a certain extent. Now how many revolvers and muskets to a man?—A. I don't know. I don't think that any had more than one.

Q. Now that was done in the beginning. When did it cease to be done?—A. Well, it ceased to be done in this county when this arrangement was made by the chairman of the two county committees.

Q. Were there not arms carried to this meeting at Strawberry?—A. There were, sir, to the extent of about fifteen or twenty, that I know of.

Q. By the white men, the democrats?—A. By the white men; the democrats under my charge.

Q. Were there arms on the other side?—A. There were, sir.

Q. Well, now, the meeting that followed that; was that Biggin?—A. Biggin preceded the Strawberry.

Q. There were arms at the Biggin meeting?—A. I was not there.

Q. The meeting in Saint James Parish?—A. That I don't know anything about.

Q. Do you know whether it is the custom of the white men generally to take their arms when they go out to attend these meetings?—A. No arms that I know of, sir, were carried to any of these meetings where they had joint discussions.

Q. Do you know that they were not carried?—A. I don't know that they were not carried, because I was only present at this Strawberry meeting.

Q. Well, sir, the case that you state is just this: The first difficulty with the colored people was in regard to wages, and, as you say, that was caused by political considerations?—A. It was produced between one set of colored people and another set of colored people. There was no conflict between the laborer and the employer. The conflict that occurred was between a certain class of negroes who were molesting other negroes.

Q. But the question of how much was paid by the employer and how much would satisfy the laborer makes a question exclusively between them?—A. There is no such statement. The larger portion of the laborers were willing to take the prices where there was no intimidation.

Q. The price that the planter wanted to pay was 50 cents for a task, and the price that some of the laborers wanted was 60 cents a task. Now the question was between the laborer and the employer. Was the old price satisfactory without any demand for more?—A. It was satisfactory, sir.

Q. The laborers themselves demanded 60 cents, and would not work without it?—A. That is not the fact.

Q. You did not testify that they wanted 60 cents?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not testify that they threw down their tools all at a given moment, or nearly so?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. You did not say that word had come to them?—A. That was not with reference to the labor question. I was telling you that that was the influence of the Union League before the inauguration of negro suffrage.

Q. What did they stop for?—A. Well, now, nine out of ten of them did not know what they stopped for themselves.

Q. What was your theory of their stopping?—A. That was very frequently the case.

Q. Well, what was it for? There must have been some cause for it.—A. They had constant disturbances at that time; that was a year before the inauguration of negro suffrage; and constant trouble and disturbances on the subject of contracts, and the exercise of this influence over them operated in that way.

Q. The contracts related to wages?—A. Yes, sir; there was a great dominion asserted over them.

Q. So that all those related to contracts upon the subject of wages?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, does not that show that there was a controversy between the employer and the laborer in regard to wages?—A. It does not show that. It shows that a set of interlopers and intermeddlers were keeping up a dissatisfied condition between the laborers and their employers.

Q. Now, did not their throwing down their tools have reference to labor?—A. Not always, sir; in many instances it was a mystery to the employer what it was for.

Q. You have stated that there was a principle of preference established here; that it was avowed by individual employers to a greater or less extent; that it was advocated in meetings; that resolutions were passed upon that subject; that newspapers advocated it, and that the community acted upon it?—A. I said that the principle of preference had been, to a very limited extent, adopted by some individuals.

Q. You have testified that it was adopted by resolution in one of the ward-meetings?—A. As far as I remember.

Q. Do you know that it has not been adopted in any other meeting?—A. I cannot say.

Q. It has been advocated in the columns of the democratic press of this city and county?—A. I have stated that, sir.

Q. You have stated that certificates have been given?—A. In some instances.

Q. Signed by influential names?—A. Signed by those who knew the men.

Q. You have also stated that that was a recognition to some extent of the preference policy?—A. That was a letter of recommendation to the laborer.

Q. It was supposed to recommend these men for employment upon the ground that their political opinions and actions were of a certain character?—A. That they were not hostile to the employers.

Q. Then you have stated that at the first meeting there were arms carried?—A. I said there were about fifty men who were with me at Strawberry, and that they had, all told, not more than fifteen rifles. I was not at Biggin. Biggin was a republican meeting, and not a joint discussion.

Q. Arms have been carried by democrats to other meetings?—A. I don't know that. I desire to say with reference particularly to the Strawberry meeting that arms were carried there avowedly and distinctly to protect the colored democrats against threats which had been uttered generally throughout the neighborhood, which discouraged them from going to the polls. I desire to say that that action, so far as I am concerned, was taken in fulfillment of a public pledge which I individually made at a public meeting in Charleston when the democratic nominations were first ratified after the convention in Columbia, and I there stated, and it is a matter which you can find in the report of the proceedings of that meeting, that at previous elections there had been no effort to contest the election with the republicans; that when the colored people intended to vote the democratic ticket they had been intimidated and threatened, and I spoke for my political associates and said that we intended in this election to dispute with the radical leaders in this State the control which they had held with the colored voters for eight years, and that we intended to resist the system of intimidation of colored people who wished to vote as they please, and might wish to vote the democratic ticket; that if they threatened bloodshed we would not be discouraged by that; but that we would be prepared to resist them and give that protection to these voters if it costs us our lives.

Q. And you swear you took those arms to democratic meetings for this purpose?—A. I took them for the purpose of protecting the colored democrats who had been reported to me as having been threatened throughout that country.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. I understood you to say awhile ago that in reference to this Strawberry meeting you went there on a boat; you took some arms, and while you were landing you saw Mr. Bowen, their leader, surrounded by a large number of negroes; he went up to the church, and when he took the stand to address them, he said something about arms, when he was speaking, and thereupon you said that you were not the aggressors in that respect; that you took arms there because they had taken arms previously?—A. I said that the first arms that have appeared on this hill to-day are in the hands of your followers, and we had notice that all of your followers were summoned to this meeting to come with their arms, and that the threat had been given out throughout the country that the colored democrats would be prevented from attending the meeting. He admitted that the first arms that appeared on that hill that day were in the hands of his own men, and he went on to say that he discouraged it.

Q. You did not mean to say that any regular system has been adopted here in reference to the preference policy?—A. No, sir; it had only been exercised in individual instances to a limited extent.

Q. Well, sir, has that same system or plan been adopted by the individuals of the republican party as well as democrats; do they not employ those who are in affiliation with them in political-sentiment?—A. O, very distinctly, sir.

Q. Mr. Banks asked you about some certificate. There may be some misunderstanding about this certificate business. These certificates were not given under the order of any combination or association of men as having adopted the preference policy?—A. No, sir; I stated that I believed it to be matter of fact that such certificates had been issued. I did not state it in connection with any organization at all.

Q. As to the press having adopted such a policy, was it not confined to but one paper?—A. No, sir; the New York Herald advocated that we should exercise that policy to the fullest extent.

Q. Was it recommended by the press of the city or State generally?—A. I mean to say that the persons having employment to give discriminated between those who were arrayed against them and those who were not arrayed against them, and preferred the former; and that the Charleston News and Courier distinctly advocated the preference policy in the employment of labor, and the New York Herald carried it further, indeed, than the Charleston paper.

Q. As far as your observation goes, the same policy was adopted on the other side?—A. I don't think they would let a democrat have a silver of wages on the republican side, particularly a democratic negro.

Q. Do you know of an employer saying to his hands or employes that if they did not vote with him, being a democrat, he would discharge them?—A. I do not, sir. I don't mean to say by that that there is no such instance.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Saturday, December 23, 1876.

S. V. GREGORY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I am aged 28.

Q. What is your residence?—A. Christ's Church Parish.

Q. You were United States deputy supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at the Four-Mile Church precinct, in Christ's Church Parish, on last election-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go to the polls in the morning?—A. I started about half past 5 o'clock.

Q. And you got to the polls at what time?—A. At 6 o'clock, sir.

Q. How many negroes did you find there?—A. I suppose about forty were there at the time I got there.

Q. Did you see any of the negroes with arms, or doing anything with guns?—A. While I was going to the polls in the morning I saw quite a number going up there with arms, and when I got to the polls I saw them secreting their arms in the woods around the house where the polls were held.

Q. How many of them?—A. I counted twelve at that time.

Q. Did you remain during the day inside the building?—A. When I got into the building the managers there objected to my remaining. They said that I had no right to stay within the polling precinct; that I must stay outside.

Q. The republican managers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any cases of minors voting?—A. There were some minors to my knowledge voted at the polls.

Q. Negro boys?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of what age?—A. Well, I should think they were not more than from fifteen to eighteen years of age. A great many of them had grown up with me.

Q. Did you challenge them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were their votes admitted?—A. They were admitted, sir.

Q. Was there much confusion about the polls?—A. There were quite a number of women assembled there with clubs, and they were wrangling.

Q. Were there many whites there during the day?—A. No more than sixteen whites at any one time.

Q. How many negroes at any one time?—A. Well, sir; there were 454 colored votes polled there, and these people remained there during the day as near as I could see. I didn't see any of them going away; certainly most of them remained there.

Q. Were the democratic negroes permitted to vote?—A. Well, they were threatened there a good many times. I saw one case where a man went up to vote. They knew he voted the ticket, but he jumped in a buggy and got away, and one man said he would kill him if he could get hold of him; that was the only case that I saw; but I heard numerous threats made against the democratic party during the day, that if they saw any negro voting the democratic ticket they would kill him.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many negroes voted the democratic ticket there that day?—A. As far as I could compute, there some seventeen voted at that poll; there were sixteen white votes and about seventeen colored votes.

Q. Do you know whether there was a democratic club in that precinct or not?—A. Not at that precinct. There was one four miles from there, at Mount Pleasant.

Q. Did you ever hear more than seventeen negro democrats in that precinct say that they would vote the democratic ticket or wished to vote it, or do you know how many democrats were there?—A. As far as I could count them up, or as they would tell us what they were, there were more than fifty or sixty, I judge, in that place. They said they would vote the ticket. They lived on the neighboring places.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who was this one negro that tried to vote the democratic ticket?—A. His name was Joseph Pinckney.

Q. He did vote it?—A. He did vote it.

Q. They did not kill him?—A. Well, sir; he got away. He jumped into a buggy which he had charge of, and he got away in that way. As soon as he put his vote in he jumped in the buggy and got off.

Q. How was it about those fifty men that promised you they would vote it?—A. They didn't promise me individually; they said that they were going to vote it, but they didn't know whether they would be allowed to vote it.

Q. How did it come that they made that remark to you; did you hear it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did it come that they made it to you?—A. There were about fifty that made that remark, who declared it to me at different times.

Q. For what reason did they come and make such a statement as that to you?—A. I was around on that plantation, and I worked a good many of them there.

Q. Had you talked to them about the situation?—A. I had.

Q. What did you tell them?—A. Well, I showed them the position as near as I could, and they told me that they were willing to vote with the democratic party provided they were allowed to do it.

Q. You heard what the other witness said about the preference system; now was it said to these that if they voted satisfactorily they would be employed, and if not, they would not be employed by you?—A. I made no distinction at all, sir.

Q. Had anybody else any connection with them in regard to that?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Do you know whether there was a general talk by employers with regard to the subject of political opinions?—A. Some were rabid enough to talk in that way.

Q. You do not know whether the negroes intended to vote or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. It depends upon what they said to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In regard to these seven minors, who were they?—A. One was named Jack Mathews.

Q. What do you know with regard to his age?—A. I have been on that plantation for three years, as superintendent there, and when I come there he was a small boy.

Q. Will you swear that he is not twenty-one?—A. I will swear that he is not twenty years old.

Q. Who was the next?—A. March Green.

Q. What do you know of his age?—A. I have known him ever since he was a baby. I have known him fifteen or sixteen years.

Q. Who was the next one?—A. I have not got the record of the whole list that voted there, but there were seven from the list that I made. There was no man competent enough to keep the polling-list at the time, and I kept it for them. I wrote up the books and everything else.

Q. What do you know of those five other voters that you have sworn voted fraudulently?—A. I had information from their parents. I believe the whole seven were under age.

Q. What do you know of the other five; do you know when they were born, and how long ago it was?—A. I could not state that; I don't know when they were born.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Were these boys just small boys?—A. They were just small boys; they could not possibly be of age.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Were they infants?—A. They were nothing but striplings; they had not done growing.

Q. Was not the oath administered to them?—A. Yes, sir; and they took it.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Is it common in this country for black people, especially those associated together on the same farm or plantation, to talk together and say who they will vote for, and so on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just as it is among white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, when you hear a company of white men talk as to politics, you form an opinion as to how they will vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so you formed your opinion in that way as to the number of colored men in this precinct who would have voted with the democratic party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You used no intimidation or threats over these negroes, whom you employed, to get them to vote according to your preference?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. When you hear a white man in Christ Church Parish say that he can do a certain thing, can you come to the city of Charleston and swear that he would have done it if he had not been prevented by somebody else?—A. I could not swear that.

Q. Have you been to any political meetings this year?—A. No, sir; I have not been to one political meeting—that is, I have been to the meetings of the clubs.

Q. You spoke about twelve of these negroes having arms; do you know of any white men having arms?—A. I could not tell, sir; these sixteen men came there afterward.

Q. You saw the arms of the negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it has been the custom of the democrats to carry arms to these meetings, or not?—A. I have heard about it, but I have never seen it.

Q. What did you hear?—A. Well, I have heard of the Cainhoy affair; that is the only thing I could glean any information from.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. You saw no arms in the hands of white men at that poll that day?—A. None at all, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 23, 1876.

WILLIAM R. WHEELLOCK sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Fifty-four.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I reside in Christ Church Parish, about three-quarters of a mile from Four-Mile Church precinct.

Q. Were you at the polls in the precinct on election-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. About half past six.

Q. What time did you go away?—A. I left there about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I went home during noon-time to dinner.

Q. Just tell us whether the negroes at that poll were quiet or otherwise during the day.—

A. I saw a number of negroes with arms and guns; there was hardly one there without a club, or a knife, or some old bayonet, or something of that kind.

Q. Did many of them have clubs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there few or many negroes there?—A. From three to four hundred during the day all the time.

Q. Did you hear any threatening at all of democratic negro voters?—A. I did. I heard a number of them say if any negro voted the democratic ticket they would kill him.

Q. Did you hear any cursing?—A. I did.

Q. Loud talk?—A. A great deal of it.

Q. Were negro women about?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. I should say twenty that were prominent. There were more than that there, but the others were peaceable and quiet, and the fifteen or twenty were noisy and violent. They were armed with knives, or bayonets, or clubs.

Q. What kind of knives?—A. What you would call a butcher-knife. One woman in particular, that I knew, had a large butcher-knife stuck in her apron-belt.

Q. What were they doing?—A. Parading the road there and making a good deal of loud talk.

Q. Did they say anything at all about negro democrats?—A. Yes, sir; they said if they knew any negro who voted the democratic ticket that they would kill him, or that they would pound him, and different expressions.

Q. There were other negro women there that were quiet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any minors voting there?—A. I know one, sir.

Q. Who was he?—A. His name is Orphelus Grant. He goes by two or three different names, but that is what he is called more than by any other; sometimes he is called Jenkins, sometimes he is called Rankin.

Q. What was his age?—A. Eighteen.

Q. How do you know?—A. I know that when I went on to the place he was a boy eight years old, and it has been ten years since I went there.

Q. Do you know many negroes who had expressed their intention of voting the democratic ticket prior to the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Quite a number—at least twenty-five that I know of particularly.

Q. Well, did they vote it?—A. I should judge not; there could not have been more than sixteen that voted the democratic ticket at that precinct.

Q. Do you know why?—A. Well, they said they were afraid to vote it.

Q. Was this afterwards?—A. Yes, sir; they said so afterwards; and a great many of them said before that they were afraid to vote it openly.

Q. Since the election did any of them tell you they were afraid?—A. Yes, sir; three of them told me so this morning. They promised me last evening that they would come here before this committee; but they dared not come. They told me that they thought it would not be safe for them to go back on the place again. One of them told me that he would come if I said so, but that he would never go back to the place again. I told him he had better stay where he was. I spoke of those three for the reason that their testimony would have been important, because all three of them were assaulted by the negroes at different times.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did you see it?—A. No, sir; I only have their word for it.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. Do you know of any influence prior to the election being used by republican negroes to prevent democratic negroes from voting?—A. I have often heard them threaten if they did vote, what would be done to them. They would threaten to whip, to pound, or to kill them, and so on; there would be different expressions.

Q. What is your business?—A. I have charge of a plantation called Woodland, in that parish, and conduct that—settling the estate of my former partner, Alexander Knox. I was with him six years. I have been North for the last three years, and they sent for me last May, at the time of his death, and I came down here to settle the estate, and have been conducting the business since.

Q. I will just ask you, sir, whether these negroes are an intelligent or a very ignorant class of people?—A. Well, the majority of them are an intelligent set of laborers.

Q. I am speaking now of their intelligence, not of their capacity to work?—A. Well, none of them are capable of reading or writing at all. They cannot write their names, or read, and I don't know of but one or two on that plantation that could do so.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You are not a native of this State?—A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. Where were you born?—A. In Massachusetts.

Q. How long have you lived in this State?—A. It has been ten years since I first came. I staid here six years, and then went away, and was gone three years, and a little more. It was in the spring of 1867 when I came here.

Q. How many negroes have you had employed on the Woodland plantation?—A. We have settled on that place, men and women together, about one hundred and fifty; there are not as many as that there now, but when I was here formerly they had that many.

Q. How many have you there now?—A. During the busy season, in the summer, there are a hundred and fifty, because we plant a number of vegetables, and employ a great many laborers.

Q. Have you been a democrat ever since you have been in this State?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to the republican party?—A. I do.

Q. You voted the democratic ticket at the last election?—A. I did.

Q. How long have you been with that party?—A. I think that I voted the democratic ticket a year ago—the State democratic ticket.

Q. Have you belonged to the republican party up to two years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You talked to the negroes on your place, and advised them as to what you thought other good citizens ought to do in regard to the government of the State—how they ought to vote?—A. I did in a measure. I didn't make myself conspicuous. Often of evenings, when they would be in the store, they would come up to me and ask me how I was going to vote, and I would tell them.

Q. You made no threats, used no intimidation?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. You never said that you would discharge them if they would not vote with you?—A. Never at all, sir.

Q. You gave them the privilege of voting just as they pleased?—A. I distinctly told them so in all my conversations with them, that they should vote the ticket that they thought was best; but I told them what my opinion was and why I held it.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. About this boy, Orphelus Grant, what means had you of knowing that he was eight years of age ten years ago?—A. His father told me; he lived on the place at the time, and since I have been here this summer his sister told me that he was not twenty-one.

Q. You would not swear that this boy was a minor?—A. I was not present at his birth. I have been told so by his father and by his sister.

Q. But you would not swear of your own knowledge?—A. No, sir; I cannot swear any plainer than that.

Q. Now, these twenty-five men who expressed an intention of voting the democratic ticket did not do it?—A. No, sir; not all of them.

Q. How many voted?—A. I only know three of my personal knowledge that I saw vote that ticket.

Q. How do you know that the others did not vote?—A. From the fact that there were only thirty-one democratic votes polled at that precinct, and of them there were sixteen white and fifteen colored.

Q. Well, but other persons might not have voted; did you see every man that voted put his vote in the box?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then it is a matter of mathematics that enabled you to know that they didn't vote; you cannot tell, of your own knowledge, how the record was made up. You did not see these sixteen white men vote the democratic ticket; therefore you do not know that they voted it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you swear that these twenty-five men did not all vote the democratic ticket? You say some of them voted. Now, can you swear, from your own knowledge, that all of them did not vote it?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. You have no doubt in your own mind that they did not vote it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no doubt but that those sixteen white men did vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were well known as democrats in that district?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Had they arms?—A. I saw none.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 23, 1876.

H. D. ELLIOTT sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Twenty-eight.

Q. Your residence?—A. Colleton County.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. Five years.

Q. What is the place of your birth?—A. Charleston, S. C.

Q. What is your business?—A. At present superintendent of a plantation.

Q. How many negroes are working on your plantation?—A. Twenty-five hands, including a few women. I think there are four women, making twenty-one men.

Q. Will you state, sir, any matters which you know in connection with those labor strikes of which Major Barker spoke in your hearing?—A. I suppose Major Barker was speaking with reference to the Cooper River, instead of Combhee River; there were two strikes this year. One happened in June. I know nothing of that at all of my personal knowledge.

Q. When was the other strike?—A. It commenced the latter part of August. I can't name the day.

Q. What occurred?—A. It was a strike started by the laborers for the purpose of having their wages increased. The price which has always been paid in harvest time was one dollar an acre for cutting rice; they wanted one dollar and a half; that demand was not made by all the laborers; there were some who were willing to work at the other price—the original price—and did work at that price until they were driven out of the field by force by the strikers.

Q. Were many of them willing to work at the old price?—A. I saw on one occasion at least thirty driven out of the field while they were working at the old prices.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Who drove them out?—A. A gang of strikers one hundred and fifty strong came and drove them out.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Q. Was the contest in your county one between the workmen and their employes, or was it between another class of people, who didn't desire them to work, and the landed proprietors?—A. The contest in regard to wages or physical strength?

Q. I meant in regard to labor.—A. It was entirely between the laborers. A portion of the laborers demanded more money from the employers. Some of the laborers were willing to work at the original prices, but were prevented from doing so.

Q. What was the proportion; were there more laborers who wanted work at the old prices than those who were opposed to working at those prices and wanted it in advance; take the aggregate number of laborers?—A. I presume that there were naturally more who desired an increase of wages.

Q. Now state what you saw at the last strike?—A. I saw, as I stated just now, about thirty laborers driven out of the field by about one hundred and fifty strikers; three of the men who were most badly beaten came immediately up to where myself and some gentlemen were, and said that they desired to take out warrants against those parties for beating them.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Three of those men who were beaten?—A. Three of them who were beaten. They went to the nearest trial-justice, took out warrants of arrest against those parties for assault and battery, and the trial-justice said that he would send down a deputy sheriff the next day to serve the warrants. This occurred on Monday, I think, the 26th of August, but I will not be certain about the date. On Wednesday the deputy sheriff came down and made an attempt to arrest one of the parties for whom he had a warrant. He was resisted by one of the parties whom he tried to arrest. He only had one man with him as a posse at that time, and he retired to the store, three miles off, where there were some more men assembled, so that he could get a posse to carry out his arrest. In a very short time, before he had hardly got up to the store, a crowd of negroes, numbering some two or three hundred, surrounded the store, and not only threatened his life, but the life of the constable whom he had with him. The number of negroes increased from that time on until they reached in the afternoon the number of probably three or four hundred.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What was the number in the morning, when he came back to the store with his posse?—A. Two or three hundred followed him from the plantation, where he was trying to serve these warrants—a distance of three miles from the store. There were no negroes at the store when he got there except the employes.

Q. The negroes increased from what number?—A. I can't tell what was the first number. Some of these things I do not know of my own personal knowledge. I am just stating these things to connect everything. At the time the deputy sheriff tried to arrest this man I was at the railroad, telegraphing to the governor for assistance to quell these riots, and I did not reach the store until eleven o'clock. The next day in that store there were thirty-five white men, all told, assembled for a posse in case the sheriff needed our services. We staid in that store the whole night, the lives of these men being threatened if they would come out, and the negroes threatening not only to burn the store, but all the buildings adjacent and all the houses on the river, if those men could not be had to satisfy their revenge.

Q. You do not know what day this warrant was served?—A. I could tell by referring to my memorandum.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did they keep you in the house ?—A. Yes, sir ; because we did not care to bring on a collision by coming out.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran) :

Q. How were you rescued finally ?—A. We were finally released by the influence of Congressman Robert Smalls, who had gone up to Walterborough to a political meeting. I sent up a messenger to him, notifying him of the state of affairs there, and telling him I was satisfied if he came down that matters could be quieted, as we wanted to avoid any collision.

Q. Did he come down ?—A. He came down at daylight in the morning. He came up to me and stated to me that we had stood a great deal more than he ever would have stood.

Q. Mr. Smalls is a colored man, I believe ?—A. Yes, sir ; he is a colored man.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. He came down to relieve you ?—A. He persuaded the crowd that they were acting entirely illegally, and that they had better disperse and go to their homes.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran) :

Q. How many hours were you detained there ?—A. Twenty-four hours.

Q. They were quite violent during the night ?—A. They were violent at all times, even after Smalls arrived. Some of them did not want to respect him.

Q. How many negroes were around there do you suppose ?—A. I don't suppose that at any time there were less than two hundred, or at any one time greater than four hundred.

Q. Who seemed to be the controlling men among them—the leading spirits ?—A. In regard to name ?

Q. In regard to name first.—A. You could merely judge of the leaders by their gesticulations ; there was no organized plan.

Q. Who were the ringleaders ?—A. I would name Jack Wine Glass for one.

Q. What was his politics ?—A. He was a republican.

Q. Is he at all prominent in politics there ?—A. No, not at all.

Q. Who else ?—A. James Osborne I should say was another prominent character.

Q. What were his politics, if you know ?—A. He is a republican, I think.

Q. To the best of your knowledge and belief what was the origin of those strikes—by whom were they gotten up ?—A. To the best of my belief they were prompted by the political leaders for the purpose of engendering difficulties between the white and the colored men.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You said when the sheriff went down to arrest those parties who had driven your hands out of the field, you went to the railroad station and telegraphed Governor Chamberlain to send a force down to quell the riots ?—A. Yes, sir ; I telegraphed him the state of affairs there, and I telegraphed besides Lieutenant-Governor Gleaves.

Q. Did you receive any answer ?—A. Not from Chamberlain.

Q. Did you receive any answer at all ?—A. I did from Gleaves.

Q. What did he say ?—A. He said that he could not come.

Adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. Tuesday, December 26.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 26, 1876.

ISAAC B. RIVERS (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran) :

Question. Where do you reside ?—Answer. I reside in Charleston.

Q. How long have you lived here ?—A. I arrived here on the 18th of February, 1865, and I have not been out of the city since.

Q. What State were you born in ?—A. I was born here in Charleston County, on Edisto Island.

Q. How old are you ?—A. I am now, sir, twenty-nine years old.

Q. Were you at the colored democratic meeting which has been spoken of by Mr. Barnwell, in September, in Charleston ?—A. I don't know what particular one he might have spoken about, but I have spoken to two or three democratic meetings, sir, the first one in the same hall, up-stairs.

Q. Did you speak at the meeting which preceded the riot ?—A. I spoke at a meeting in King street, on the 6th of September, at the corner of George and King streets, in the hall known as Archer's Hall, on that night.

Q. Was there any other colored man spoke there ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who ?—A. Jenkins, Sawyer, Riley, and myself.

Q. Well, just state what occurred at that meeting, what threats, if any, you heard, and what occurred after the meeting.—A. I heard nothing prior to the organization of the meeting. After it was organized I went there and found my friends ready, and they received me with great enthusiasm. Unfortunately I was called upon to address the meeting as one of the first speakers. After the meeting adjourned I started to come home, and, as I came out of the hall, (it was in the night-time, and not exactly a bright one, rather a very dark one,) I heard the remark, "Rivers is coming now. Here is the damned democrat son of a bitch. He ought to be killed." I immediately returned to the hall and informed my friends that there was something looked very unpleasant outside, and I asked that they should protect me or see me home. I did not feel myself safe in going home.

Q. You told the white men this?—A. Yes, sir; all white men. It was a democratic meeting. They saw me home, or rather attempted to see me home, and, on our way to my residence, we were attacked by this crowd. Before the attack was made the crowd advanced pretty heavily right upon us, and when I say heavily I mean a good crowd, say two or three hundred men, and the cry was raised, "Kill that son of a bitch." A rock or stone, or something of that kind, was hurled into the crowd; I suppose aimed at me, but struck the man just behind me, a white man, who, in return, fired back at the crowd. I knew that I was the bone of contention, and I said to the white men that were with me, "Gentlemen, you better see me in the citadel or some place near by, because danger seems ahead." I was just a little above the citadel at the time, and a general fusillading or firing began right off on both sides. I then succeeded by the aid of some gentlemen in being carried into the citadel. There I remained until morning. What took place after I was escorted there I could not positively say, unless you take secondary evidence.

Q. How many people did you say there were in this crowd?—A. I suppose about three hundred.

Q. Negroes?—A. All of them to a man, and republicans.

Q. Why did they make an attack on you?—A. Because I had identified myself with the democratic party.

Q. Did you hear any threats made prior to this time or after this time against you for being a democrat, and, if so, what?—A. As I before stated, this was done on the 6th of September, but on the Friday night prior to that, in ward eight, I was attacked and most inhumanly outraged by republicans. It might have been by that very crowd, but they were republicans, anyhow.

Q. By republican negroes?—A. Yes, they were colored republicans.

Q. Well, what did they do to you?—A. Well, sir, there were more than four hundred in that crowd. As I came out of the hall to come home—

Q. You had been speaking in the hall?—A. I had not spoken that night.

Q. But you had been in a hall where there had been democratic speaking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, go on.—A. As the meeting adjourned I walked out of the hall to go home, and on arriving at the door coming into the street I was collared rudely by some one in the crowd; and at that time the cry came from all about, "Kill him! kill him!" and I called upon the police for heaven's sake to keep the crowd back, or allow me to defend myself if I could do so. At this time the crowd became so turbulent that the police had to abandon me, and I was knocked down, and the first thing I knew of myself at all I realized myself the next morning in the house of somebody on the corner of Cumming and Spring streets.

Q. What else was done?—A. What else was done after that I don't know. I was struck with a rock and I fell down helplessly. I had just crossed one street; whether or not it was Smith street I could not say. But I was going across the street, which I found out next morning to be Cumming street, when I was struck and fell.

Q. What more occurred to you, if anything?—A. I am still subject to social ostracism daily. I have never had any violence offered to me since.

Q. Have you been threatened?—A. O, I have been threatened times without number.

Q. Since the election?—A. Since and prior.

Q. By colored men?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. What were the threats?—A. That men like me should be put out of the way; that I had no right, as they claimed, to join the democratic party or affiliate with them in any capacity, particularly in a struggle like this. Some of them went far enough to say this: "He ought to be killed, and it will be done." I did not care about talk, so that they did not put it into execution.

Q. Do you really feel safe, or do you fear that some violence may be done you?—A. Why up to the present time I am fearful while walking in the street. I would say that, up to last night, just going out from my home to get something—for I could not take part in the celebration or jubilee Christmas holiday, or whatever you may call it—I was fearful of personal injury.

Q. You remained indoors yesterday?—A. I remained partly indoors.

Q. I wish you would state whether the negroes of Charleston County were allowed a free choice as to how they would vote in this last election?—A. Why, no, sir. I will give you an illustration of that: The colored people here were made to believe—and I say this authoritatively, because I was, prior to this, affiliated with the republicans and had been one of the big guns, as it is termed, in the political circle, taking the stump right around here for them, and I knew the doctrine they used to preach, though I never tolerated that thing myself; but they taught that the colored man must support the republican party cateless of the men that were put up for office, and if they deviated from that policy they should suffer even death and worse than death if anything could be done worse.

Q. If I understand you correctly, you have in times past been a prominent republican among your race here?—A. I was one of their stump-speakers during their campaign.

Q. What prevailed upon you to change your views?—A. Well, sir, after the nomination of General Hampton, or rather prior to that, I have said in conversations with Governor Chamberlain—I informed Governor Chamberlain to that effect, I believe, in May last, when he came down here. I was taking the political stump right through the different islands here, John's, and Edisto, and Wadmelaw. At Wadmelaw I remarked to him, "Governor, if the independent republican party goes down in this country, I cannot support the regulars. I must go over to the democrats." He expressed his unwillingness for me to do so, but said it was unquestionably a right of mine, and I could take my choice if I desired, which I did. Soon after I was informed that there were two parties here, one the independent republican, and the other the regular republicans. Soon after that, as I learned that the independent republicans must go down, I attended their last meeting, and when they called on me to give my views, I responded telling them that it was the last time I would make a republican speech: that I would go over to the democratic party; that I could not support the class of men that the regular republican party desired me to support; that I had done that long enough.

Q. Do you know of any influence having been exerted by republican stump-orators or others to frighten the negro women into influencing their husbands by threats, and so on, to vote the republican ticket?—A. I don't know of any influence being exercised by any leading men upon the negro women to urge their husbands, but I do know that they have done it.

Q. Do you know whether republican orators appealed to the fears and prejudices and superstitions of the negroes?—A. Yes, sir; that is one of their hobbies.

Q. What did they say, if anything?—A. On most all occasions one of the strongest points of their arguments is that part, that if the democratic party gets into power they will put them into slavery. They brought up before them the picture of slavery, with their wives being sold, and their daughters carried to the work-house, and things of that kind. People devoid of intelligence fell an easy victim to such arguments.

Q. How have those negroes who have voted the republican ticket been treated by their colored brethren on the other side?—A. Why, sir, I want to say that I could answer that question by saying that even in the places of worship the men who were known to affiliate with democrats cannot enter with any peace nor safety. And my reason for saying this I would as soon as not state. On one occasion I was asked by one of the better class of republicans, a brother of my church, to go around and take part with him in what is customary in colored people, sitting up with the dead. I went, but as I arrived at the place where the deceased was laid out, every one of the family, and part of the women in the place, the moment that I entered got up and went out. They were not going to stay in a place where a negro democrat was; and I suppose that is the way all the rest have been treated. Since the election I don't believe that I have met on the street two colored women that have not accosted me with "That democratic negro, he ought to be killed," or something like that, and that has been the case from the day of election up to this time.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Are you a preacher?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to a democratic club in this city?—A. After I joined the democratic party I formed a club. It was at one of those club-meetings where some of the difficulty I told you of occurred.

Q. Were there other colored democratic members of the club?—A. O, yes, sir; there were a goodly number of them.

Q. Did they stick to the club until the election?—A. They did. At a meeting of the colored central democratic club which we had in the city the week prior to election, in the Queen Street Hall, we numbered about 875 members.

Q. Did they remain in it until the election?—A. They remained there. A week prior to the election we called a meeting, and all answered to their names and participated in the meeting. Every man who joined the club gave his reason for joining, and we never put an oath to any man. He would simply say, "I will stand by this side of the house."

Q. They stuck to it up to the election, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they after?—A. I have no doubt, sir, but they did.

Q. Do you know that any of them were deterred from voting by threats of their friends, such as you have experienced yourself?—A. Well, I believe they were subjected to a similar experience, because I saw a great deal of it on the day of election. It did not terminate seriously; and when I say seriously I mean this: that I know a republican to have said to a democrat, "You negroes ain't going to vote that ticket;" and they replied, "Yes, I am." And the reply was, "If you do, we are going to do so and so; it ought to be done." But it did not prevent him voting it. In Charleston we were prepared that every colored man who desired to vote the democratic ticket should do so.

Q. I understand you to say they were told that something would be done to them by the opposite party if they did vote the democratic ticket?—A. O, certainly; that was the report the morning of the election; so much so, that some white men came to me, I being badged up with Hampton regalia, and said, "Rivers, are you not afraid of going down there?" and my remark was, "I am an American citizen, and if I die in the attempt, I will go and exercise that right."

Q. But you were insulted?—A. O, there is no question about it, right at the poll; but they did not lay a hand on me that day at the poll to undertake to prevent me by force. They tried argument, and what they considered reason.

Q. Do you know that your club would have been much larger and you would have had a much larger vote if it had not been for these violent threats and intimidations?—A. I believe that, for this reason: that there were colored men who congratulated me, and were astonished at the amount of nerve I possessed in going out with the democrats and making the speeches I have made in this county and city in the face of the violent opposition I have encountered daily and hourly.

Q. Have you ever had the chance of going to school?—A. Well, I have a little.

Q. You can read and write?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What do you say your age is?—A. I am 29 years old.

Q. How long have you been a voter and how many years have you voted?—A. I believe it was in 1868 I cast my first vote.

Q. You were a republican up to the present year?—A. I was.

Q. What made you a republican in 1868?—A. When I was emancipated I was told and led to believe that it was the republican party that freed me, and, if I should vote at all, to vote for the perpetuation of that party, and I did so.

Q. Who did you vote for at that time?—A. I worked principally for Grant and Colfax.

Q. Where did you live at that time?—A. At that time I was working with some colored people.

Q. What were you doing?—A. In the city here, I used to work with a ship-carpenter.

Q. Did the white men take part?—A. They did not at that time. They had no strength then.

Q. When did the white people begin to take part?—A. It was in 1870.

Q. Did they exert themselves to influence the colored men to vote with them?—A. I do not know whether they did or not.

Q. Did they ever deprive them of employment?—A. I do not know, sir; no attempt was made to influence me in that way, and I was as conspicuous as any other colored man around here, except those who held office.

Q. This was in 1870, and you were working with colored men?—A. I was not working with them, I was an officer of the court of common pleas.

Q. Did the white people never attempt to influence the colored men to vote their ticket otherwise than by arguments?—A. Well, I could not say positively about that, because I refused in the outset to say anything that came to me second-hand. I never, of my own knowledge—

Q. When did you begin to make speeches?—A. O, I began that, sir, in 1870.

Q. You have been a prominent speaker, what was considered a big gun among them?—A. Yes, sir; they called it so.

Q. Have you been a candidate for office at any time?—A. I never was.

Q. What do you call the social ostracism to which you were subjected?—A. Well, my race, when I would associate with them in a social way, would ostracise me; they would avoid having anything to do with me; and in doing that they would utter words of disapprobation of my being with them, calling me vile names.

Q. They would not receive you in their company because you were a democrat?—A. No, sir.

Q. They would not allow you to come to their church in peace?—A. I could go to the church at great mortification of feeling; as to their actions and carrying on in my presence, they would seek in every way possible to humiliate me.

Q. Did they not have a right to choose their own friends?—A. I have been one of their friends.

Q. They had a right to choose their friends besides you.—A. I did not question that.

Q. Well, now, about sitting up with the dead. Don't the friends of a deceased person generally invite those that they want to sit up with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider it an injury not to be allowed to sit up with them?—A. I would state here that prior to this thing, while I was not a preacher, that I am one of these religious men that meet at these places and sing psalms and so on. I would sometimes offer up a prayer in the church, and I was known as such.

Q. What sort of women were these that generally accosted you as being a democrat negro, and so on?—A. I confine it to colored persons. I took this to be the reason for it; whenever they do not do it, that they either don't know me or that they think themselves too much of ladies to disgrace themselves by talking to me on the street.

Q. You were kindly received by the white people?—A. I was. They are the only friends I have politically.

Q. The masses of the colored people—you were not well received by them, I suppose.—A. I would answer that, except those that are really vindictive and in violent opposition to them, the colored people generally received great kindness from the whites.

Q. The moment a republican became outspoken in his opinions, then he was well received?—A. I could not say yes to that, for the reason that I was known as a republican prior to being in the democratic party, and I have yet to know one democrat in town that knows me that said anything ill of me. To the contrary, they have praised me, knowing what limited chances I have had to obtain what intelligence I possess.

Q. When you were with the whites and after you had left the colored people, might not the colored people be disposed to include you with the whites, because you had left them and you were where they could not go?—A. Yes, they could go there.

Q. It seems to me, from your statement and the way of expressing yourself, that you are a man of considerable intelligence. Now, generally the colored people cannot understand these questions as well as you.—A. I would answer, without being considered an egotist, that I must concur that they do not.

Q. It is not to be expected of them that they should understand these questions as well as you do. Take, for example, their apprehension about being put into slavery. They might very honestly have such fears?—A. I don't justify that apprehensive feeling, when I have myself on more than one occasion addressed open meetings of democratic negroes and explained it.

Q. But these other people could not understand this question as you do. Now, might not that be the reason for their dislike of your position as a democrat, without having against you any political feeling or animosity. If they had been as intelligent as you, they would have been with the democratic party perhaps; but not being intelligent, they would adhere to what they think their own interests?—A. There are colored men still there, good speakers, in an intelligent point of view better informed than I am, and yet they are with the republicans.

Q. They were afraid of being put back into slavery by some possibility, and they did not want to associate with you, who would be an instrument of their misfortune if it should come?—A. Perhaps they so considered it.

Q. Well, now, have you ever known the white people to use any improper influence of any kind, either by discharging from employment or promising employment, or giving money, or making promises of any kind, to influence the colored people?—A. I don't know that personally; I have heard these things.

Q. What is your best knowledge and belief in regard to that?—A. Well, my best knowledge and belief is that a man—I cannot speak on that subject except as a supposition.

Q. Let me ask you if the colored people have been in all this time since 1868 perfectly free to express their opinions, to hold meetings, and to vote for themselves, without any interference on the part of other people? Do you know whether that is so or not?—A. I don't know it personally.

Q. You don't know that they had this privilege?—A. Certainly; I know that they had the privilege of speaking, and holding meetings, and exercising their political judgment, and expressing their sentiments without molestation from any other political meeting or political ideas, from the fact that I have been with them, and at all the meetings which I have attended I have not been molested.

Q. Do you know that the white people have interfered with them?—A. I don't know it directly, as I remarked.

Q. You don't know that you have ever interfered with them, and you don't know that they have not had their right to free speech and free opinion and free thought interfered with? You don't know of anything to prevent that of your own knowledge?—A. I do not, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Do you know that in all the meetings which you addressed when you belonged to the republican party, and in all meetings which you attended when you belonged to that party, the colored people were allowed a free right to be heard?—A. Free right and free expression, as I remarked. I was one of their big guns, and I was never disturbed in any of my speeches, except from the republicans when they got a little too happy themselves.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. I understood you to say that while you were a republican you had no difficulty in expressing your opinions, and you saw no difficulty on the part of other colored people holding their meetings and expressing their opinions?—A. That is what I said, sir.

Q. But when you joined the democratic party you found great difficulty in speaking your opinions, and other colored men also were deterred from holding meetings and expressing opinions as democrats?—A. That was attempted. While we were republicans certainly nobody molested us. The democrats did not do it; republicans ain't going to do it; but since we have become democrats, none of the people that joined that side of the house could meet without a rifle-club or a squad of white men to protect us from violence.

Q. Have you ever seen any unkindness manifested by the white people against the colored people because they were republicans and differed with the whites?—A. No, sir. I have already answered that question.

Q. What has been the feeling, so far as your observation has gone, of the colored republicans against the white people who were democrats?—A. To answer that I will have to say that the line in this campaign was drawn very tight. The chances were magnified into very great importance by the politicians, so much so, that the colored people were urged to stand by the republicans, and whatever they did, do it in behalf of the party; that if the democratic party was successful, then freedom would go along with the incoming of that party; and it became so fearful that the colored people were decidedly more turbulent in this crisis with the whites than the whites were with them. They would pick difficulties.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. The democrats have not manifested any of this feeling at all?—A. I say that the chances were so great that both parties considered it a life-and-death struggle.

Q. Then the democrats have committed as much violence as republicans have in this death-struggle?—A. To my knowledge, I could not say that.

Q. Have they committed any violence in this death-struggle?—A. To my knowledge, I can say that the colored people have committed most of the violence, because I was witness of most of it myself.

Q. Have the democrats committed any violence at all?—A. They have not, to my knowledge.

— CHARLESTON, S. C., December 26, 1876.

J. B. BISSELL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I am forty years old.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I live in Charleston, sir. I am planting in Colleton. My residence is between the two places.

Q. How long have you resided in South Carolina?—A. Well, pretty much all my life, sir. I was born in Alabama, but I have been living here now twenty-six years.

Q. Were you in Colleton County just prior to the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what period of time were you there?—A. Well, I used to go up most every week on Wednesday and come in on Saturday night.

Q. You have a plantation there?—A. I have eight plantations in that county.

Q. How many negroes do you employ?—A. About eight hundred negroes.

Q. Will you state, if you please, whether there was any intimidation of democratic negroes by republican negroes in your county; and state the facts within your knowledge bearing upon that matter?—A. Well, I can only state generally what took place just previous to the election. Previous to the election the negroes in that section of the country were outspoken that they would not allow a democratic negro to vote at the polls. That was just about the rice-harvest time, just previous to the election.

Q. What threats, if any, were used toward the colored people?—A. They used threats that if any negroes joined the democratic club which we had formed there that they would murder them. These clubs were formed just previous to the election.

Q. Was there any violence used, so far as you know, toward any negroes who proposed to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir. I know that there was violence used toward a number of them. We had in our precinct about seventy-five negroes who joined the democratic club, and there was violence used toward a great many of them, and threats made against all of them. More than half of them have been whipped.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Those who joined the club?—A. Those who professed democratic principles. The republican negroes went so far as to say that those who worked for me as democrats would be whipped, and they did whip them, and I have got proof of it here—the negroes themselves who were whipped.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How many of your men were whipped?—A. Well, I could not say exactly, but I should judge not less than twenty to twenty-five. You see, the whole of this club were not men that were working for me. Some were my own and some were others', but about twenty or twenty-five of mine were whipped.

Q. Were any of them badly whipped?—A. I have never seen a slave in slavery times whipped as badly as some of these men were whipped. I have a likeness of one here, which was taken just after he was whipped. I did intend to send it to Frank Leslie's, to show the condition of affairs here. [The witness produced and submitted to the committee the photograph of the colored man referred to.] This man is here now.

Q. Just state how the man whose likeness you have produced was beaten.—A. Well, sir, he was whipped by women and men, and he tells me that the men had wires on the end of their whips. I supposed so from the way his face was cut up. He was almost blind.

Q. Was he cut in many places?—A. He was cut all over his body, but his eyes, as you see from the likeness, were nearly closed.

Q. Was he bloody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just describe his wounds.—A. Well, sir, his left arm (I think it was his left arm) was almost broken. He had been beat with clubs. He was beaten up until I think it was dislocated, and his face was cut up, and his left eye, my brother, a physician, told me he would lose. He has recovered from it, however. His body and his chest were all gashed up. As I remarked, never in slavery times did a slave get such a whipping.

Q. He was cut with a lash all over his body?—A. Yes; from his head down to his feet.

Q. Was he bloody about the body?—A. He was bleeding on his chest and on his arm, and he had very little use of his arm at the time. He said the woman beat him on his arm.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How long after he was whipped did you see him?—A. He came to me the next day. I was there the day he was whipped, and I came down on the cars and did not know that he was going to be whipped, but the next day he came to see me.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. I understand you to say that you know of a great many such cases?—A. Yes; I can bring you a great number, if you wish. Numbers of them had to swim a deeper river than the Charleston to get out of the way.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What river is that?—A. The Combahee.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. If it had not been for these threats, this whipping, and the intimidation used by the colored republicans, would there or would there not have been a much larger vote cast for the democratic ticket?—A. We would have had five times as many votes had it not been for this intimidation. They were afraid of their own color, they being in a majority of almost ten to one in Colleton. It required a great deal of moral courage for a negro to come out and assert he was a democrat.

Q. At what polls do you mean that you would have had five times that number of negro votes?—A. I mean within a radius of ten miles of Ashepoo and Blue House polls.

Q. How many negro democratic votes, or about how many, were given in those two polls?—A. I think not over sixty or seventy at Blue House, and I do not think over twenty at Ashepoo. I am only guessing at this, but I know that we would have got five times as many at each place except for the intimidation. We did not expect to beat at all. I can tell you that the intimidation in this section of the country has been the cause of breaking me up, and I know that I work more hands than any man in South Carolina. I have lost from forty to fifty thousand dollars, because the negroes were not allowed to work for me. Those who were democrats were not allowed to work for me because they were democrats, and they were working for a democrat. The republican negroes were banded together to prevent any democratic negroes from working. They would not allow the democratic negroes to work, and they would not work themselves. I employed a great number of hands. I paid out about $85,000 a year in wages to laborers.

Q. Have these strikes by the negroes a political significance?—A. Yes, sir; they had. A month just previous to the election it was impossible to get a single official in that county to act in the arrest of any of these rioters, simply because they were all office-seekers, all running for office, and there was no justice done. You could not get a thing done. I appealed to Chamberlain in the matter.

Q. Did he aid you?—A. No, sir; he did not. I telegraphed him to send me United States troops.

Q. If I correctly understand you, the contest between the colored people and the employers was not so much one of labor as of political significance?—A. The negroes were perfectly satisfied with the wages we were giving. These very negroes got $1.50 for a half a day's work; they got through about eleven o'clock. It had nothing to do with wages, because they got through and had no trouble with it. These strikers came into my field when they whipped these negroes, and mashed down immense quantities of rice.

Q. How long have you been planting in Colleton County?—A. Since about five or six years previous to the war.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What was the occasion of your paying these negroes $1.50 a day for a half-day's work?—A. In our low country we work entirely upon what is called task-work—that is, not by day's labor, as they do at the North; therefore they would get through with their task by eleven o'clock in the day, and we gave them so much a task—$1.50 a task.

Q. What is a task?—A. Cutting one acre of rice.

Q. Do all your hands get $1.50 for a half-day's work?—A. Many of them get $2—that is, they could do it all by one o'clock. We call it a day's labor, but very seldom you find one of the hands in the field after one o'clock.

Q. How many do you have who could do it?—A. All of them could do it. They could make $3 a day; they could do two tasks. An up-country negro could not do that. In the low country before the war the overseer would have to ride long distances in pine-lands from one place to another, so that the plan of forming gangs and working tasks was formed, in order that the overseer might get around.

Q. What was the cause of this strike, which occasioned a loss of forty or fifty thousand dollars on your part?—A. Well, I think it was caused from politics.

Q. What was the strike itself; did all your hands join the strikers?—A. No, sir; more than half of them wanted to work, but the majority of the negroes in that section would not let them work. The strike was a general one.

Q. How long did it continue?—A. Three weeks, I should say it was, sir.

Q. What terminated it?—A. Because we gradually got through.

Q. The strike did not cease until you had got your work done, and then there was no more work for these people?—A. The strike only ceased during the election; they worked up to that time.

Q. There was no abandonment of the strike?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there nothing said about wages in regard to this matter?—A. We originally gave a dollar a task—that is, from the end of the war up to this time. This year we commenced with a dollar, and they demanded a dollar and a half, and we gave in to them. No sooner did we give in to them than they demanded two dollars.

Q. That was the cause of the strike on their part?—A. I do not think so, sir.

Q. You did not give them two dollars?—A. We did give them two dollars, and they would not work for it. We would not have given them two dollars, only we were compelled to do it or lose all—that is, they were willing to work, but they were not allowed to work by what they called the majority.

Q. What was the pretext or pretense that they should not work, having been paid two dollars a day?—A. They seemed to be acting under instructions.

Q. I want to know what the pretext was.—A. They struck on the dollar and a half, and we gave it, and then they demanded two dollars, which we finally had to give.

Q. Were you willing to, and did you, employ republicans?—A. I employed more republicans than democrats.

Q. You employed all of your people without distinction?—A. Yes, sir; I employed them without distinction.

Q. And paid them the prices they asked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, they would not work. Now, what was the pretext upon which they refused to go to work for two dollars a task?—A. They refused upon the same ground they did upon the dollar and a half.

Q. When did they strike the second time?—A. The last strike was when we were very nearly through. I did not give them two dollars until they were very nearly through. I did work not a great many at two dollars, but I wanted to save my crop.

Q. How many did you work at two dollars a day?—A. Very few; I could not say exactly how many hands I worked. If I was pushed to-day I would give it, but if I was not pushed I would not give it.

Q. Was there one hand that refused to work for two dollars?—A. I do not know of any.

Q. How do you come to say that these strikes had nothing to do with the wages?—A. I say this: Why would they intimidate the few democrats that I brought down to do the work? I could have worked just as many hands as I wanted to at a dollar and a half, but they were not allowed to work by the republican negroes.

Q. What reason have you for saying that this had nothing to do with wages, when they were willing to work for a dollar and a half until they asked more, and then were not willing to work when you would not pay them the two dollars?—A. I will tell you why: Hundreds of negroes told me that they were perfectly willing to work for a dollar and a half, but they were not allowed to work.

Q. But they did not work?—A. I do not say that they would not work, but that we did gradually work through. I told you first that we gave them a dollar, and then they wanted a dollar and a half, which we gave way to; then they demanded two dollars, and I refused to give way on that to all on my place, but I gave it to some; and the majority of the negroes through that country said, "You shall not work for that amount."

Q. You were willing to employ as many as would complete your work and not any more, and they interfered with you upon that?—A. They interfered, and said the negroes should not work.

Q. You have never known one man who refused to work if paid two dollars a task?—A. They were willing to work.

Q. If they were willing to work, and you were not willing to employ them for the wages they demanded, it was a question of wages between them?—A. Not between us, because I gave them the wages which they demanded.

Q. If you gave a part of them two dollars and were not willing to give the others two dollars, it was still a question of wages.—A. I could not get along on a plantation making distinctions. It would be impossible to work one man for two dollars and give another a dollar and a half.

Q. How many did you pay two dollars to?—A. I paid two dollars on the Beaufort side—I suppose a hundred hands for about two weeks.

Q. That is as long as you wanted them?—A. On that side of the river I got through, but I lost a great deal of my crop, because they were not allowed to work at a dollar and a half. Just as soon as the gang would go into the field and commence work these fellows would come in there and whip them out.

Q. They were not willing to allow them to work at a dollar and a half, but they were willing to allow them to work at two dollars; but you were not willing to pay them that amount?—A. I do not think it was a question of wages.

Q. You say that if it had not been for the intimidation of which you spoke that there would have been five times as many democratic votes?—A. That is my opinion, sir.

Q. Upon what do you found it?—A. I say it because numbers of republican negroes openly said in my store that if those negroes joined the democratic club and attempted to vote the democratic ticket they would be killed.

Q. You do not know that they interfered with them?—A. I know it for this reason, that the democratic negroes were afraid all the time of being killed or hurt.

Q. You do not know that any one of those negro men was a democrat and did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. An avowed democrat voted his ticket. I think that those who joined and had moral courage enough to come out did vote the democratic ticket, but I believe the intimidation prevented others from joining.

Q. What reason have you for assuming that there was one democratic vote more in this precinct of Ashepoo than those twenty who voted?—A. I only assume this; that the negroes themselves have told me that they would join the club, but were afraid to do it.

Q. They told you that they would have joined the club, but that they were afraid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they tell you that they would vote the democratic ticket?—A. I did not ask them that.

Q. Did five times as many of these men tell you that they would vote it?—A. I only give you an idea of my own of those that were prevented from joining.

Q. You say that a negro in your employ says that he would join the club if he was not afraid, and then you swear that you knew that he would have voted. The only ground that you have for that assumption is that these negroes told you that they would have joined if they had not been afraid. Now, I will ask you, have you ever had anything to do with politics?—A. No, sir; and God forbid that I ever should.

Q. Then you do not know that a man engaged in any election thinks that he is going to get more votes than he really does?—A. I think a great many of them get deceived.

Q. And you have been deceived in just this manner?—A. I have never asked a negro man to vote the democratic ticket, and of course I did not expect anything, and therefore was not deceived.

Q. In regard to this man who was beaten, did he work for you?—A. Only for a week or so.

Q. Did he work for you when he was beaten?—A. I did not see him whipped. I saw the marks upon him, but I did not see him beaten.

Q. Well, how do you know, then, it was because he was a democrat?—A. I knew he was a democrat when I employed him.

Q. How do you know he was beaten for that?—A. Only from what he told me himself.

Q. How do you know that he had not quarreled with some of those men?—A. I knew he had not, because he did not belong to that section of the country at all.

Q. It is not impossible for negroes to quarrel who do not belong in the same section?—A. No, sir.

Q. This loss of forty or fifty thousand dollars which you have experienced this year was caused by this strike?—A. It was caused by the negroes not being allowed to work for me that I wanted to.

Q. Was it because the negroes refused to work?—A. It was not that they did not want to work, but because they were not allowed to work.

Q. Is it because they did not work?—A. Of course. If the rice is wasting and they are not allowed to work, how could—

Q. How do you know that they were not allowed to work?—A. I know it from what I have seen.

Q. What did you see to interfere with their working?—A. Because right on my plantation I met one of the leading negroes, and I said to him, "Why are you not working today?" He said, "Because they will not allow us to work." I said, "What is the reason?" He said, "The strikers will not let us work." I said, "What do they want? Do they want an increase of wages?" He said, "We do not know what they do want, but we are not allowed to work at any price."

Q. You say all the information you have is that they told you that they were not allowed to work?—A. They told me they were not allowed to work. I got it from the negroes themselves.

Q. Have you seen any person interfered with?—A. I have seen them interfering with gangs, ordering them to stop work.

Q. How large a gang?—A. A gang of from 100 to 150—not men altogether—some women with them.

Q. You have seen that with your own eyes, and you know that these gangs did interfere personally?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen them marching through a field and all the laborers ordered out.

Q. I want to ask you this question: After these people were driven out of the field, or prevented from working, by this gang of 100 or 150, would they stop work?—A. A gang of 150 of these negroes would gather together and march on a place where there were a hundred hands at work, and order them out of the field. If they did not come out they would whip them out, and, of course, having a double quantity of men, they would overpower the others. No sooner would this lot be whipped out than they would take the gang and march on the next field.

Q. Now, I want to know how many were in these gangs?—A. They averaged from a hundred to a hundred and fifty.

Q. How many was in the number that was prevented from working?—A. Sometimes there were from 75 to 100 in the field. The gang that came in to prevent the workers always outnumbered the working gang. They were the strongest gang.

Q. Now, you say that there was no question of wages; that it was politics; that it had nothing to do with their wages?—A. I have never heard that.

Q. Did you ever make any declaration to these people that unless they voted the democratic ticket they would not be employed?—A. I have never spoken to my men on politics in my life.

Q. Has that been done as a general thing?—A. I do not know of a man in our country who has sought to induce a republican negro to vote the democratic ticket by the use of such means.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say that you have had great difficulty with your laborers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You employed about eight hundred hands?—A. Yes, sir; on different plantations.

Q. You have made agreements with some of these hands to work for certain prices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they have been willing to work for those prices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they have gone into the field and commenced work, and other parties, republicans, have come and overpowered them—come into the field and whipped them—and said that they should not work at the price you had agreed upon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in consequence of this intimidation and violence you think you have lost from $40,000 to $50,000 in the last year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You claim the right, however, to employ whatever negroes you please to do your work?—A. Yes, sir; but I made no distinction, because I needed the labor. I never asked their politics.

Q. If you knew of a republican planter in the county, you would not think it a ground of objection to him if he preferred to employ republicans instead of democrats?—A. Not at all, sir; he has a right to do as he pleases. I have not had anything to do with but one election, and I swore off and have not had anything to do with an election since. I have never asked a negro to vote the democratic ticket, nor would I. I consider that they have just as much right to vote as they please as I have.

Q. You think these strikes were occasioned by this intimidation?—A. Well, I think the cause of strikes was by the action of republicans. The republicans had all the offices in our county; there was not a democrat holding office. I think the object was to cause a disturbance previous to the election. As regards the republican office-holders, I will say right here that there is not a republican in the county I ever had a quarrel with. I have nothing against them except as to the management of the county. There has never been a difference between us.

TONEY COKER (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About forty-six years old.

Q. Were you born in Charleston County?—A. I was born about ten miles from Walterborough, in the State of South Carolina. I never been out of the State but two months, to Georgia. I have always lived here.

Q. Where have you been working, and where were you working prior to the election?—A. I was working in Colleton County, about eight miles from Walterborough.

Q. Did anybody whip you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just before the election?—A. Just before the election I was whipped, about fifteen miles from home.

Q. Will you just state in your own way what you were doing, and who whipped you, and all the circumstances attendant upon it?—A. I was whipped by strikers. I know some of the people personally, and some of them I don't know. I was whipped fifteen miles from home, cutting rice for Dr. Bissell on the Cypress plantation. I was cutting rice there, and getting at the rate of $2 a day. The raiders came in and asked me what I was doing there, and I told them I was trying to make a living.

Q. A gang of negroes, was it?—A. Yes, sir; I call them raiders.

Q. What did they do to you?—A. They said to me, "You damn democrat son of a bitch, what is you doing here?" "Well," I says, "I am trying to make a living. I hain't got a shoe to my foot." "Well," they says, "I'll give you a living presently," and then they jumped on me and whipped me.

Q. What did they whip you with?—A. With raw cowhide whips. About fifteen of them whipped me at one time.

Q. Did they all have cowhides?—A. Some had sticks and some had raw cowhides. Them that didn't have cowhides struck me with sticks.

Q. How many lashes did they give you?—A. About three hundred lashes, I think.

Q. Did they strip you?—A. No, sir; they cut my coat off me.

Q. What with?—A. With the whips and sticks. They cut my coat all to smash. Tom Hamilton came up then, and they got off of me.

Q. Is he a negro?—A. Yes, sir. After they had whipped me they were fixing to knock me in the head and throw me in the canal, when Tom came up. One man named Jeffrey Barnwell came and says, "Just knock the son of a bitch in the head and throw him in the canal now."

Q. While they were all beating you, did they say anything about politics at all?—A. Yes, sir; they were talking politics all the time. They were low country colored people, and I couldn't understand them well, anyhow. They said, "He was at the meeting on Tuesday night." One man says, "I saw the Spanish son of a bitch at the meeting that night."

Q. Was it a democratic meeting they referred to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did they whip you?—A. Well, sir, the doctor had sent up to get us to cut rice. As the colored people down there wouldn't let any of the rest of them work, he sent up for all the democrats to go down. Well, I went, and my son went, and three more from up there went, and four white men. They was all democrats but two, and the two of us that wasn't democrats they didn't whip.

Q. Why did they whip you?—A. Well, they say, "I saw you the other night at that meeting, you Spanish son of a bitch, and I am going to give it to you." Tom Hamilton took me away from them, and told them that if they killed that man they would have two to kill.

Q. Tell us how you were hurt and when you got away from them.—A. They had whipped me till they cut the coat off me, and they had beat me with a stick till I could hardly raise my right arm, and it hurts me even now. Some of them had wires in their whips.

Q. How was your face; were you beaten upon your face?—A. O, yes, sir; I was in a bad fix with my face. I was cut over my eye and under my eye. They had knocked the skin off my head in two or three places.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Were your eyes closed from being beaten?—A. Yes, sir; my left eye was entirely closed for about two weeks.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Were you clubbed about the body?—A. I wasn't cut about the body. They cut me in the breast, though.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What was it done with?—A. Done with a whip.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Were you beaten about the body?—A. Yes, sir; I was beaten with a stick mostly about the body. I hasn't got over it yet with this arm. They like to broke it with a club.

Q. Were you a democrat or a republican?—A. I was a democrat, sir.

Q. How many persons were there, how many colored men, in this crowd?—A. I think there was a hundred and seventy, men and women.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Was this in the cypress swamp?—A. It was on the cypress causeway.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. You said one hundred and seventy men and women were there. Now, how many women were there?—A. I couldn't tell. The women was beating me and the men was whipping me, so that I couldn't tell. I think it was fifteen who was whipping me at one time.

Q. You have said that you have not yet got fully over that beating?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long was it before you could work?—A. Well, sir; I have never done a lick of work until after the election.

Q. I want you to tell me about those strikes among the colored people. Were the colored people not satisfied with the wages they were getting?—A. Well, sir, I cannot tell anything. The fuss commenced about checks, and they stopped with the checks and paid them new money, silver, they say. I didn't see any checks. I was paid every night for what I done.

Q. Were the negroes willing to work for $1.50 a task if those men had allowed them to?—A. I can't tell how the rest managed, but they wouldn't let me work.

Q. Were there any negroes working for $1.50 a task?—A. I was willing to work for 50 cents a day, but we tried to get as much wages as we could.

Q. Were there many democratic negroes beaten there that you know of?—A. I won't say anything because I don't know anything about that.

Q. You never saw any other people whipped?—A. I never saw it. Four of us was beaten. My son, in running away, like to have got drowned in the river.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You knew these men were whipped?—A. Yes, sir; the same day.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane) :

Q. How much were you getting at this time?—A. I was getting two dollars a day. We could cut two acres by three o'clock in the day.

Q. How about the others?—A. They was getting the same thing, sir. We had just commenced to cut with the scythe. We cut with the reap hook till the scythe came, and then after that came we got about two dollars a day.

Q. Was this crowd of negroes that beat you composed of democrats or republicans?—A. They were republicans. They said that no damn democrats should come down there to work; that they didn't get enough to cut that rice, and that no damn democrat should come in there to cut; that they planted the rice and they would cut it. They wouldn't work themselves, and they wouldn't let any of us work.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You said you would work for fifty cents a day?—A. Yes, sir; I was poor, and I would work for anything. I would take more if I could get it.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane) :

Q. Was there a picture taken of you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was this taken?—A. It was taken the day after I was beaten.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did you remain there and work after you were beaten?—A. O, no, sir; I had to go back home.

Q. Where is your home?—A. In Hendersonville, about fifteen miles from the plantation where I was working.

Q. Did you earn any money down there?—A. Yes, sir; they paid me every night.

Q. And you would have remained?—A. O, I would have remained, sir. I could have made money.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. When was this that you were whipped?—A. I think I was whipped about the 18th of September.

Q. You state that there were four others whipped at the same time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the names of the other men that were whipped?—A. It was Alonzo Elliott, and a boy by the name of Moses Desseaux. They didn't whip these men as much as my son. They told them they were radical, and they wouldn't whip them much.

Q. Did these men come from the same place?—A. Yes, sir. We five came down from the same neighborhood together. They whipped four, and one got away. Pompey Burns got away.

Q. All belonged in the same neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir; we all came from Walterborough, Colleton County.

Q. How came you to go down there to work?—A. We sent word to the doctor that we was hard up, and that we would like to work some, if he had anything to do.

Q. Did you know that there was any strike there?—A. We heard about a strike in the spring, but we didn't know that they had struck for higher wages.

Q. What month in the spring was it?—A. In June.

Q. When you went down, what was the condition of things at this Cypress plantation?—A. I found that the crop was all being ruined, and would be lost entirely if it wasn't harvested right away.

Q. They had not been at work then, during this strike?—A. The plantation people was at work, but when the strikers came on them they had to cut out and get home.

Q. They never commenced working much until you got down there?—A. Some of them had never done much at all, till the rice had commenced wasting in the field; and the doctor had to do something to get up his harvest.

Q. When you went to work there they came to you in the field. What time in the day was it?—A. About twelve o'clock.

Q. And there were a hundred and seventy of them?—A. I think so, altogether; half-grown boys and girls, and women and men.

Q. What was said about checks?—A. Nothing was said at all at that time, because they were paying the money every night. I was perfectly satisfied with the money that I was making.

Q. You got two dollars a day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you worked?—A. I went there Tuesday, and they commenced on me Friday about twelve o'clock, and I came to town Saturday.

Q. How long did you work each day?—A. Well, it depended upon circumstances. Some days a man can do his day's work in half a day. Some days it will take you a little longer, say till about three o'clock. Some days, again, you know we don't feel exposed to work all day, and the sun is hot, and we go back in the cool of the day and the sun is down.

Q. Who was at the work that day besides the five that you spoke of, how many people; a large number?—A. I think there was thirty of us, altogether.

Q. Where did this hundred and seventy people that came there belong?—A. Some came from Ashepoo.

Q. They lived in that neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir; some five or six miles from there.

Q. Where did they meet?—A. When they came to me, I don't know where they met; but they got their head man, Jack Wineglass. He 'peared like he was general or colonel, or something, as he came riding there.

Q. He was the head man?—A. It must be, because he was on horseback. He's the man that threatened the doctor's life.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. What did he say about the doctor?—A. He says, "By God, doctor, seven years ain't too long for me. I'll get you, sir. Seven years from to-day ain't too long." Says he, "I got the paper in my pocket, sir, for not a lick of work to be done on your place, hire or no hire." He didn't say where he got it from. I don't know whether he got it from Chamberlain, Schaffer, or Perry.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What did he say about your cutting the rice?—A. He asked what business I had down there. I told him I came to make a living in an honest way. He says, "Who sent you here?" I says, "I came myself." He says, "What are you cutting rice for?" I says, "For money. I am getting two dollars a day."

Q. And they said that they had planted it, and it should not be cut?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they say anything more about it?—A. I couldn't hardly say they did. I was all beat. The whole of them said it.

Q. The difficulty was you were cutting the rice that they had planted?—A. Yes, sir; they said that they wouldn't cut it, and that nobody shouldn't cut it.

Q. You were working for how much a task?—A. We were cutting for a dollar an acre. We were cutting two acres a day—four of us two acres a day.

Q. Did the other people there get a dollar an acre?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the reason that these other people did not work? Did they say why they were not at work?—A. They said that they wouldn't cut it, and wouldn't let anybody else cut it.

Q. You said before that they said that they did not get enough for cutting?—A. They said so, but I don't know what they were getting.

Q. They said they had got an order to stop it?—A. Yes, sir; they said they had the papers in their pockets to whip them.

Q. Wineglass said that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did others say that?—A. Yes, sir; others talked about it.

Q. How long have you been a democrat?—A. Ever since 1865; all my life; and I glory in it.

Q. Did you ever have any trouble before?—A. I never had any trouble. I had heard threats, though.

Q. Did you ever sit for a photograph before?—A. No, sir. Since that they have cut up my cart, and shot my hogs down. I am a peaceable man till they get me up.

Q. You have voted the democratic ticket every year since 1865?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And never have been whipped before?—A. No, sir.

Q. And not interfered with, with the exception that they have threatened you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of this crowd of a hundred and seventy were talking at one time?—A. Every one said something. They looked like they were glorious to catch me there to whip me.

Q. That talk or threat about voting the democratic ticket did not alarm you?—A. O, no, sir; because I had always voted the democratic ticket before.

Q. Did you ever work on Dr. Bissell's plantation before?—A. I never worked there, bu

I used to go there to buy rations, and go back to my place on Mr. Beecher's plantation, where I was working then.

Q. Did you know any of those one hundred and seventy people that were in this crowd?—
A. O, Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they come from?—A. Some came from Ashepoo, and some came from tolerable close to me.

Q. They were people that had been working around that plantation there?—A. Some of them had never been there to work, but they just accompanied to make up this thing.

Q. Were they all republicans?—A. I don't think they were all republicans.

Q. They were all colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The most of the laboring people are colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not all republicans?—A. I couldn't tell, sir; they might have been one out of eleven was a democrat.

Q. The greater part of the working people were opposed to any stranger coming there to cut that rice?—A. They whipped some on the plantation; on that same Cypress plantation.

Q. Some of whom on that plantation?—A. Some of the same people that lived on that plantation.

Q. Well, then, it had nothing to do with your politics, nothing to do with your having voted the democratic ticket; it was because you were cutting the rice that they planted; your being a democrat made it so much the worse, but they would not have touched you if you had not been at work?—A. I don't know whether they would have whipped me or not, but they threatened me mighty hard; they had threatened me before, but they didn't beat me.

Q. If you had had any occasion to go down the road that day from Hendersonville to Ashepoo, or any other place, you would not have been afraid to go?—A. No, sir; I wouldn't have been afraid, but I didn't know what they might do; they was powerful against the democrats.

Q. You have been in that neighborhood and have voted the democratic ticket for eight years, and had never been whipped before?—A. Yes, sir; I voted the democratic ticket.

Q. You would not have been afraid of three hundred lashes from these people if you wanted to go down to Ashepoo?—A. No, sir; I wouldn't be afraid to go now.

Q. Have you ever seen any of these people since?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen Wineglass.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. He said that if he had got down from his mule he would have given me more.

Q. They did not beat you election-day?—A. If the soldiers had not come down, in five minutes more there would have been the worst kind of a fuss.

Q. Where did they come from?—A. From down here or somewheres.

Q. What was the name of the precinct?—A. Bluehouse.

Q. You have not been beaten since then?—A. No, sir; I never went back to Cypress plantation; if I had somebody would have been killed; they would have killed me or they would have driven me to kill somebody; they just cut up my cart, and shot down my hogs, and did everything to me.

Q. You never heard anything more about these strikes than what you have told me?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the hands working on all the plantations?—A. Yes, sir; and every now and then they would come in and drive them off.

Q. Were they driven off from all the plantations around at the same time?—A. Yes, sir; at the same time.

Q. You were cutting rice at a dollar an acre, and it took you till three o'clock to cut two acres, and you got your pay at night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they pay you in?—A. Money.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What did they whip you for down on the Cypress plantation? What did you understand it was for?—A. Well, I can't tell; they called me a "damn democrat son of a bitch."

Q. Did you think it was because you were a democrat that they whipped you?—A. Yes, sir; it was because I was a democrat.

Q. When Wineglass came up on his mule and said to you that if he had been there he would have whipped you more, why was it; because you were a democrat?—A. Yes, sir; because I was a democrat.

Q. You say that they killed your hogs, cut up your wagons, and injured your property. What did they do that for?—A. They didn't like me because I was a democrat.

Q. Did you vote at the election?—A. Yes, sir; and I voted an open ticket, too.

Q. Did they see it?—A. They said, "The damn democrat; he always was a democrat, and we'll have to let him alone and let him do what he intends."

Q. Were these one hundred and seventy people who came there along with the men that whipped you going about generally finding democrats to whip?—A. Yes, sir; going about raiding upon democrats and those hands in the fields, saying that they wouldn't work, and they shouldn't work.

Q. These men did not own the rice?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were employed for certain prices, and you were employed for a certain price?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were you treated in the neighborhood where you lived?—A. O, very well, sir.

Q. Were other colored democrats in the neighborhood treated as you were treated?—A. Yes, sir; I was always treated as well as I could expect. They made no distinction in the neighborhood where I lived. They were all treated alike; some of the colored people, though, had a natural grudge against me because I always was a democrat.

Q. Because you were dyed in the wool?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. I want to ask you whether there were any threats used against colored democrats in that section of the country?—A. O, yes, sir; all the democrats there was to be whipped at the polls. Them that was democrats was to be whipped at the polls after the election if they voted the democratic ticket.

Q. This man Wineglass that you have spoken of was a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a prominent member of the republican party?—A. Yes, sir; it 'peared to me so when he came up there on a mule and made that remark; that he had a paper in his pocket; that he had got orders not to work.

Q. Did any democrat strike you in that crowd?—A. No democrat struck me.

Q. Was there any democratic colored man in that neighborhood that was opposed to your working, or anybody else working, for any price that you or they pleased?—A. No, sir; not at all. No democrat opposed it.

Q. You did not know of one democrat that opposed the people working for whatever they pleased?—A. No, sir. They could work for five cents, or ten cents, or fifty cents, or anything they pleased without the democrats interfering.

Q. Then the class that were opposing you were republican negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, there was a democratic club up in that section?—A. Yes, sir; there was a democratic club meeting the Tuesday night before I came down.

Q. Were any threats thrown out against those clubs?—A. Yes, sir. The boys said, "We'll try the democrats awhile, and if they don't suit us, we'll go back to the radicals again."

Q. Did the negroes threaten what they would do with any man that would vote the democratic ticket?—A. They said they was to be whipped. They said two or three days before that any man that joined the democrat club and voted the democrat ticket will be whipped; if they put any democrat ticket in, they will be killed dead. The soldiers came down there to the polls and said they come to see democrats and republicans vote alike. Five minutes longer, and there would have been the worst kind of a riot.

Q. Negroes generally are not as brave as you are?—A. One hundred and seventy men can overpower any one. I can't fight the whole world.

Q. They are generally timid; easily frightened?—A. The rest of them run from the one hundred and seventy; but I wouldn't run. I staid right there to see what they was going to do; and they knocked me down. I hold up the scythe to keep off their licks; but they struck me down.

Q. Owing to the threats and violence that were used by these republican negroes, were there many negroes that would have voted the democratic ticket that were prevented from voting it?—A. I suppose there were lots that would have voted the democratic ticket; but there were lots that were whipped, and they wouldn't vote it at all. They said there was no law.

Q. Who said that; the republicans?—A. The people said there was no protection for them if they voted the democrat ticket.

Q. You would be afraid to go back to this region again?—A. Yes, sir. I would be killed.

Q. You are a man of family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many children have you?—A. Six. I have one daughter who ain't behaving herself well, and we never owns her; but, counting all, we have six.

Q. You are living with your family?—A. Yes, sir. I have been living with them twenty five years.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who was this Tom Hamilton of whom you spoke? Where did he belong?—A. He belonged at Ashpoo.

Q. What was his business?—A. He was coming down to Cypress there.

Q. How came they to stop when he came up?—A. I suppose Tom Hamilton, being a radical, they listened to what he said.

Q. I understood you to say just now to Mr. Jones that they said they would not have any democrat, nor anybody else, come and cut that rice at that price?—A. They run radical and all out at the time.

Q. It made no difference? It was the price that they cared about?—A. Yes, sir. They had run the people off before, and the doctor went up to get the democrats.

Q. Why did they call you a "Spanish son of a bitch"?—A. Because I am half Spanish.

Q. You live by yourself?—A. I have a little farm of my own.

Q. You are not dependent upon them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you speak Spanish?—A. No, sir. My mother was a colored woman and my father was a Spaulard.

RICHARD COKER (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

—Question. You are a son of Tony Coker?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-two, the last 4th of October.

Q. Do you live in Colleton County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the time your father was whipped?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time in the day was it?—A. About two o'clock. It was about two o'clock, and when the crowd of colored people came they whipped him and then said, "You damn democrat son of a bitch, you shun't work here any more." I asked what was the reason? They said, "Well, we don't intend to let any damn democrat son of a bitch work here. You must go off from here and go home." So I went home and lied up for about a week.

Q. What did they whip you with?—A. They whipped me with a cowhide and they beat me with sticks across the head.

Q. Did they beat you badly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you get away?—A. I didn't get away. I never got away till Thomas Hamilton took me away from them.

Q. How many lashes did they give you?—A. About twenty-five.

Q. Who were the persons that whipped you—democrats or republicans?—A. Republicans.

Q. What were they saying while they whipped you?—A. They says, "You damn democrat son of a bitch, you shun't work," and I told them that I thought every man was free and had a right to work where he pleases.

Q. Did any democrat strike you?—A. No, sir; no democrat struck me at all.

Q. Did any democrat aid them or encourage them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see a man there named Wineglass?—A. Yes, sir; I saw a man there named Jack Wineglass.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives on Mr. Warren's place in Colleton County.

Q. Is he a leader of the republican party there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he walking or riding?—A. Riding, sir.

Q. What was he saying?—A. Well, sir, he didn't say anything, but just told them to go ahead when they was whipping; to go on.

Q. What was he riding?—A. He was riding a mule.

Q. How many were there of you working in the field at the time of the whipping?—A. There were three white men and five colored men working with me.

Q. How many were there working on the plantation?—A. Well, sir, there was a good many. I think about thirty on the plantation.

Q. Who else did they whip besides you and your father?—A. They whipped a man by the name of Alonzo Elliott.

Q. What were his politics; was he a democrat?—A. Yes, sir; he was a democrat.

Q. Who else did they whip?—A. They whipped Tobe Desseaux.

Q. Was he a democrat?—A. He wasn't.

Q. What was he?—A. He was a radical.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Well, did they hurt you badly?—A. Yes, sir; they hurted me badly. I went home and lied up a weeks afterward.

Q. These other colored men were whipped for working with you, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your father badly beaten?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was he hurt?—A. Well, he was hurted too, sir. He had a lick on his shoulder, and he went home and lied up and got well afore he could ever get about.

Q. How long?—A. Well, he lied up about two weeks afore he could get to go about at all.

Q. Did you hear any threats before the election about what they would do to negroes that voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the threats?—A. Well, sir, the threats was that if I voted the democrat ticket they would kill me, and I told them I had a right to vote for who I please.

Q. Do you know of other democratic negroes being threatened?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any of these men that whipped you that day threaten you afterward?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You said that they beat the men that were with you because they were working with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know that?—A. Well, sir, they said that they would beat any democrat that went into the field to work.

Q. But they were not democrats; they were republicans?—A. One was.

Q. They whipped him because he was a republican?—A. They whipped him because he went into the field to work with us.

Q. How do you know that?—A. That he went into the field?

Q. No; but that they whipped him for that reason?—A. Because when they came in the field they whipped him. They didn't give him as much as they did me. Just as soon as they found out what he was, they stopped it, and they gave me more than they did him.

Q. Did they know you were a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you voted?—A. No, sir; I hadn't voted then.

Q. What was the reason they would not have you at work there in the field; did you hear them say anything about that?—A. Because I was a democrat.

Q. Did they say that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear them say anything about their having planted the rice?—A. Yes, sir; they said the rice was theirs.

Q. And that nobody should go there to work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they drove you off?—A. Yes, sir; they drove me off.

Q. Did they say anything about the price—the money you got for your work?—A. No, sir; they didn't say anything to me about no price.

Q. Did they to your father?—A. They never said nothing to him about no price.

Q. Didn't they say that the price was not enough?—A. When they came they asked me what I was working for, and I told them I was working for what I could get. They says, "We has a rule to work at;" and I told them, "I didn't know you have a rule to work at."

Q. Did they tell you what the rule was?—A. They told me that their rule was a dollar and a half a day, and I told them I was working for what I could make.

Q. Well, what did you get?—A. I received two dollars a day.

Q. How much did you cut?—A. I cut two acres.

Q. Then you got a dollar for each acre?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said their price was a dollar and a half. Do you mean a dollar and a half an acre, or dollar and a half a day?—A. Their price was a dollar and a half a task.

Q. They didn't want you in the field because you got more than they did; did they?—A. I don't know, but that's what they said, sir.

Q. They would not complain of your getting more than they did?—A. No, sir; they didn't complain, but they told me I shouldn't work there, "You damn democrat son of a bitch." I told them I thought every man was free and should work where he please. I was satisfied with fifty cents a day myself.

Q. How long had these thirty hands that were there been working in the field?—A. Well, sir, they were working there; I hadn't long got there. I went down there Monday and set into work, and worked, I think, until Thursday at two o'clock. When I went down there part of them was at work.

Q. Had you heard anything about a strike on the plantation before that?—A. They said that they had stopped striking.

Q. Had they gone to work?—A. The strikers?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; they hadn't gone.

Q. Well, then, the strike had not stopped?—A. It hadn't stopped then.

Q. Well, what did they strike for?—A. They said that they struck for higher wages.

Q. Well, how much did they get when they were at work before they struck?—A. Fifty cents a day.

Q. Fifty cents a day, and they struck for higher wages?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got two dollars a day?—A. I got two dollars a day.

Q. How did you know that they got fifty cents a day?—A. They said so themselves.

Q. Did they say so at the time of the whipping?—A. They said, "I have been working for fifty cents a day, but I am striking now for higher wages."

Q. How much did they strike for?—A. A dollar and a half a day.

Q. Did they get it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they go to work?—A. Yes, sir; they went to work afterward.

Q. How long did they work?—A. They worked until the harvest was up.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of these people that were in the crowd that whipped you and your father worked?—A. So they said, but I don't know whether they worked or not.

Q. Was the trouble was about the price?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you do not know, only what they told you, how much they had; and they told you they worked for fifty cents?—A. Yes, sir; they told me that, and that they were striking for higher wages.

Q. Were these full-grown men?—A. Yes, sir; womens, mens, and some childrens.

Q. Did full-grown men work for fifty cents a day in that neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got two dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How would it be that they would work for fifty cents a day and you got two dollars?—A. That was before the strike; that is what they told me when they had me up whipping me.

Q. Who was the leader of the strikers?—A. That same man what I was telling you about.

- Q. Wineglass was the leader?—A. Him and a man by the name of Joe Butler.
 Q. Who was Hamilton?—A. He was the man who took them away from me.
 Q. Where did he belong?—A. He came from Ashepoo.
 Q. Did you vote this year?—A. Yes, sir; I voted.
 Q. Did you vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Where did they whip you?—A. They whipped me all about.
 Q. At what place?—A. At Combahee Ferry.
 Q. Who whipped you?—A. Some strikers done it.
 Q. How many were there there?—A. There were about ten whipped me.
 Q. What day was that?—A. That was on the 19th of September.
 Q. That was the day your father was whipped?—A. The same day, sir.
 Q. You had not voted then?—A. No, sir; I hadn't voted then.

By Mr. JONES:

- Q. You said a while ago that they whipped you for voting?—A. I didn't mean to say that.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. Well, did anybody trouble you when you were voting?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Were there any colored democrats that voted?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did they have any trouble?—A. Not there, sir.
 Q. You had trouble when you came into the field that these men sowed?—A. Yes.
 Q. When you were out of that you had no trouble?—A. They never bothered me when I was out, and they said I must keep away from the field, and if I didn't they would kill me.
 Q. Have you been into that neighborhood since?—A. No, sir; I haven't been there since.
 Q. Do you go about the town where you live?—A. Yes, sir, I go about; it is not in the same place; it is about ten or fifteen miles farther.
 Q. Nobody disturbs you?—A. Nobody disturbs me, because I am right there with the white people; there ain't no colored people where I stay.

By Mr. JONES:

- Q. You say these people who came upon you in the field began to curse, calling you a damn democratic son of a bitch?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did they say anything to you about the wages? Did they whip you because you were cutting rice for a different price from that for which they had been cutting, or did they whip you because you were a democrat?—A. They whipped me because I was a democrat. I went to a democratic meeting the night before that.
 Q. You say there was one republican with you, and they whipped him until they found out he was a republican, and then they stopped, and that they kept on whipping the democrats?—A. Yes sir.
 Q. They did not whip you because of your cutting the rice at a different price?—A. No, sir; they whipped me because I was a democrat.
 Q. Well, now you say it was on the day of election?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Did they abuse you when you went to vote?—A. Yes, sir; that same Wineglass come up, and he was talking about the same striking affair, and then my father says, "Ah, Wineglass, you are the cause of my getting so bruised up," and Wineglass says, "They ought to have given you more than what they did."
 Q. You left that neighborhood then and went back home?—A. Yes, sir; I couldn't work there.
 Q. Had you lived in town?—A. No, sir; I lived right in the country.
 Q. Are there more white or colored people around where you live?—A. More white.
 Q. You are protected there and you are not afraid?—A. No, sir; they are all very civil people where I am—all white people. I am living right among them.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Coghane):

- Q. There were some soldiers at the polls?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. They kept pretty good order?—A. Yes, sir; they kept good order.
 Q. And the colored men voted there without being troubled when the soldiers were there?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. But you have said that before election you heard these same people that had abused you, and whipped you, say to other colored men, that they would whip them if they would vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I heard them say so.
 Q. And they threatened you if you voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. The soldiers being at the polls kept order?—A. Yes, sir. The colored republicans had great clubs at the polls with nails driven into them, and some had old pieces of swords on the end of them, and some had hatchets on long handles.
 Q. Did they have any bayonets put on sticks?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did you see any guns about the polls?—A. Some of them had guns.
 Q. What kind—single or double barreled guns?—A. Muskets.
 Q. How many colored people were there at that poll that you voted at?—A. Well, sir, I seen about eight hundred.

Q. How many white people were there about there?—A. About two hundred white people.

Q. And about eight hundred negroes?—A. I mean in all during the whole day.

Q. Six hundred colored people and two hundred white people?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. How many soldiers came there?—A. I think it was four, sir; there was so many people there that I didn't take particular notice of them, but I knew they were there.

Q. What did these men say to you when they found you were in the field cutting rice?—A. These strikers?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, sir, they told me to "Come out of there, you damn democrat son of a bitch."

Q. Did they say anything about the work you were doing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say?—A. When they first came up they came right in, and I had my scythe on my shoulder. They came in whooping and hollering when they first made the charge, and they said, "Come out of here, you damn democrat son of a bitch. Come out of here; come out of here; come out of here;" and they just put it to me.

Q. Did they say who the rice belonged to?—A. They said that it belonged to them.

Q. And that nobody should cut it?—A. They said it was their rice, and that no damn democrat son of a bitch shouldn't touch it.

Q. Well, what did they say to this man that was a radical—Desseau?—A. Well, sir, we were right together, but they carried me off.

Q. What did they say to him?—A. They asked him what he was, and he told them he was a radical.

Q. Did they let him work?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did they do?—A. After he told them he was a radical, they asked him if he came with us, and he told them yes; he came with us.

Q. Did they let him work?—A. He didn't work there. They were willing for him to work; but he said he couldn't work there, because he didn't know what they might do to him.

Q. What did they say to yourself?—A. They said that fifty cents a day was not enough.

Q. What did you say to them about yourself?—A. I told them I didn't care what they could work for; I had to work for what I could make.

Q. How much were you making?—A. Two dollars a day.

Q. Was the reason that they would not work because they did not think fifty cents a day was enough?—A. I suppose so, sir.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 23, 1876.

ALEXANDER LEWIS (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane):

Question. How old are you?—Answer. I was born in 1852, and I am now twenty-four years old.

Q. Were you born in South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your business?—A. I was having wood cut and paying my own hands.

Q. What county do you reside in?—A. Georgetown.

Q. Are you a democrat or a republican?—A. A democrat.

Q. What part, if any, did you take in the late campaign in your county?—A. Well, sir, I went around and tried to get all my colored friends to join with me in trying to get an honest government.

Q. You went around over Georgetown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make speeches to the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you travel pretty well over the county?—A. Right smart, sir.

Q. Do you know of any intimidation having been used by republican negroes over their brethren who desired to vote the democratic vote?—A. Well, sir, I can say this much: I was on the Santee River, after I came out of the canvass, and Mr. Frazier being chairman of the committee desired for me to go on Santee and distribute tickets for him.

Q. What were you doing on Santee River?—A. Distributing democratic tickets.

Q. How long before the election?—A. The very day they came to the poll to vote.

Q. Well, now, do you know of any intimidation having been used by republican negroes over their brethren who desired to vote the democratic ticket?—A. My own master has a still, and he had right smart of hands working. They were turpentine hands, and they said that they desired to vote the democratic ticket. There was a right smart on the farm, and the rest of the colored hands said if they voted the democrat ticket they would take them and whip them, and turn them out of the church, and I sot up a right smart of the night and talked with them, and they said if there was nothing in the way they would vote the democratic ticket.

Q. What threats did you hear during the whole time you were canvassing?—A. I went on down that night. I told them to go with me; that I would fix a way for them to vote if they wanted to vote for an honest government. I had borrowed a cart from Mr. Reed, and I took them in the cart. We rode some of the way and walked the balance.

Q. How many did you have with you?—A. I had two with me, and the rest came on behind.

Q. How many came on behind?—A. There was two more came on behind.

Q. When did you get to the polls?—A. I got to the polls about an hour, I suppose, before day. I hadn't a watch, but I got within half a mile of the polls about an hour before day, and I stopped and built a fire and camped till daylight.

Q. What was the name of the place?—A. They called it the Santee poll. Shortly after I stopped and made up my fire there was four men came up—all four with guns—and they desired to find out who all we was going to vote for, and what was my business. I told them that I had come there for the purpose of distributing tickets.

Q. Did you tell them you were going to distribute democratic tickets?—A. Yes, sir. There was one short man that was in the crowd—I don't know his name—who said that any man that voted the democratic ticket at the poll that day would be murdered.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Were those colored men that told you this?—A. Yes, sir; all four colored men. So one out of the four that came up said that they ought to let every man do as they desired to do. They had some considerable talk, and they started to the polls with their guns. I started and got to the polls just before they opened and these men had put away their guns.

Q. Did the four men go with you to the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what occurred?—A. These six men that I had carried from the Six-Mile House in my cart and carried up to the poll were told by some of the republicans to vote, and they said that they didn't desire to vote at that time, but they would wait a little longer. I hadn't any democratic tickets along with me, and there was another man, by the name of Ned Lawrence, went on ahead of me who had the tickets, and I took them off from the poll—and borrowed tickets from a man by the name of Middleton, who lived on the Santee, and we all four voted together. After we voted we came out into the road and there was some considerable crowd around then, and they asked them if they voted the right way, and these men told them yes, that they voted the right way that they knowed how. And they asked them what way they voted, and they told them that they voted like them, just like the rest of the colored people, and then they said all right, and then I went on down to a little branch that was near the polls, and as soon as I got down there, after leaving these other men, I saw Chester Davis, Hamilton Davis, and Rufe Black, and Sammy Withers, and Oakes Withers come up within a hundred yards of the polls with guns.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. They were all colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did they do?—A. They left their guns on the other side of the branch and they went into the road to the man that had the republican tickets, and he told them that he had the right tickets, and they said, "We wants the right tickets," and he said, "The democratic tickets are here;" and he pointed me out as the man that had the democratic tickets, and Chester and Hamilton then came to me and said, "You came here to-day and you used to own a master, and your master used to own you and more slaves, and you came here to-day to vote the democratic ticket and to distribute democrat tickets;" and I told them something about the republican party that happened in town that was not right, and that I ought to follow the bent of my mind and not let a man dictate to me. After Hamilton Davis and me had a few words together I left them, and a young man came to me that I had with me, named William Munlaw, and told me that they were getting some hickory poles, and if we staid there until six o'clock that they were going to whip us with these hickory poles, and he said that he had given a democrat ticket to one man and another man took it out of his hand and tore it up and gave him a republican ticket.

Q. Was any violence used; did you hear any curses?—A. Yes, sir; there was a man named Bush had a whole crowd around him, and he said, "If any man votes the democrat ticket, he won't leave the mustard-ground."

Q. Well, did you see any clubs in the hands of individuals?—A. Every man that was there from Santee had a club.

Q. How many negroes was there?—A. Great Lord, I couldn't tell you.

Q. About how many?—A. Sometimes a man came up and he would cast his ballot and go right off; but there was about seventy-five or eighty around the polls all the time I was there.

Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks?—A. No, sir; I never seen any bayonets.

Q. See any knives?—A. No, sir; I never seen any knives.

Q. See any swords?—A. No, sir; I never seen any swords.

Q. Did you see any guns?—A. About the polls?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. Did anybody strike anybody?—A. No, sir; not while I was there.

Q. Did you hear any threats?—A. Yes, sir; they said if they could find any man who voted the democratic ticket they should not leave there alive.

Q. Did that have any effect on anybody that intended to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Well, I will tell you that I had a democratic ticket and I could not hold it in my hand, and there were three or four that had democrat tickets and we couldn't hold them in our hands or couldn't take them out of our pockets. We started from that poll about ten o'clock, and two men followed us and tried to pick a fuss with us, and so I told the boys that they had better go on home.

Q. Were any negroes prevented at your poll from voting by any violence that was used, threats, or anything of that kind?—A. I know that there was about a dozen or more with full intention not to vote for the democrats—they said they were going to vote for Bill Jones—they driv a buggy, and they stopped up the branch; and they said, "Not a man votes here to-day but he casts a vote for Bruce Williams and Boley and Gibson."

Q. Will you tell us what Bill Jones was, and how many wanted to vote for him?—A. Bill Jones was the name of a republican, but he was working for the white people all the time.

Q. Well, during your canvass of the county of Georgetown did you see any evidence of violence on the part of the negroes there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any threats made?—A. Yes, sir; one day, by the ignorant part of the people, but not by the sensible part. We heard some threats made by S. B. Gibson, that was school commissioner up there.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What did he say?—A. He got up on the stand and made a speech to the colored people about the white people coming around and begging their way in, as they had once, and was whipping the skin off their back, and was wearing the bloody shirt, and so on; and he went on so ridiculous that the most of the people had to go off from him.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. Can you repeat the speech that was made on that occasion?—A. Well, I couldn't understand him.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What was he?—A. He was a republican.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. What seemed to be the general line of argument that he adopted?—A. He was telling the people about the bloody shirts, when they had a owner, and now the white people come around to beg their way in, to put them back into slavery again.

Q. Did you hear any threats made by anybody during your canvass?—A. One man on Pedee, whose name was Gospel Green. He and the white people had a meeting called there at Pedee stand, and there was some threats made there on that day. Gospel Green came up there in a white gentleman's buggy, and he hitched up his horse, and he said that "Any damn nigger from Pedee way that votes the democratic ticket here, and we can find him out, we'll strip and tar and burn him."

Q. Well, did you hear any other threats made?—A. No, sir; not from the time he was going on.

Q. Do you know anything more that you would like to communicate?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at Santee all day?—A. No, sir; they made me leave about ten o'clock. The people was so down on democrats there that no man didn't stand a chance. They had hands full of sticks and piles of them lying on the road.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did you say you had voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the name of the poll at which you voted?—A. The name of the poll was Santee poll.

Q. Did you vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any trouble about it?—A. No, sir; because I sneaked my ticket in.

Q. Were any republicans there who wanted to vote the democratic ticket and did not have a chance?—A. Well, I goes to an old man down to the branch and I gin him a democratic ticket, and they tore it out of his hand and gin him a republican ticket.

Q. Did you see anybody struck that day?—A. Not during the time I was there.

Q. Did you see anybody killed?—A. Not during the time I was there.

Q. Did you hear anybody complain that he wanted to vote and could not?—A. Well, I heard a man that gin in his affidavit at Georgetown. He said that he went down there—his name was Manning—and he voted, and they got after him with sticks, and they run him away.

Q. You heard of that?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of it out of the very man's mouth what voted.

Q. Will you be kind enough to let me look at that paper you showed me outside in the hall?

[Witness handed paper to Mr. Banks.]

Mr. BANKS. For the information of the committee I will read this paper It is as follows :

" FIRE-INSURANCE AGENCY, REPRESENTING $30,000,000 CAPITAL,
" OFFICE OF S. S. FRASER, COMMISSION MERCHANT,
" Georgetown, S. C., November 11, 1876.

" This will certify that the bearer, Alex. Lewis, is a good worker in the democratic cause and gave us valuable assistance in the late canvass.

" S. S. FRASER,
" Chairman Democratic Executive Committee."

Q. What was this given to you for?—A. Because I wanted to get a place to cut some wood on Mr. Reed's land, after the voting was over, and Mr. Fraser said he would recommend me to Mr. Reed, and he did so.

Q. Well, did you get the wood-land?—A. Yes, sir; I got a small piece.

Q. Well, this was given you to help you to get what you wanted, was it not?—A. No, sir; it never ain't got me anything yet. Mr. Reed said he tried to get somebody to go on that piece of land on shares, and he told me he was glad of the opportunity of meeting somebody that wanted to cut green wood, but he told me that I couldn't get it by that paper.

Q. Did you ask for this paper?—A. No, sir; I never asked him for it. He said he would give me a note, and he said Mr. Reed, he supposed, would let me have a piece of land, but he didn't know. So I took that land and cut it on shares, but that paper never carried me any further.

Q. Did you ever show it to anybody else?—A. Yes, sir; I showed it to some gentlemen out here to-day.

Q. What did they say about it?—A. One gentleman said it was a very good recommendation, and he give it back to me, and I put it in my pocket.

Q. Do you want to keep it?—A. Yes, sir; I would like to keep it, 'cause I would like to keep one from my old master who used to own me.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. The paper which you have just produced is not in the handwriting of Mr. Fraser?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. That is just a recommendation from one gentleman to another?—A. No, sir; he only give me this, he say, merely to take to Mr. Reed.

Q. It is just a private recommendation from one gentleman to another?—A. He never told me that it was private.

Q. There is no general system of recommendation like that in this country that you know of?—A. I never seen any of them before.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 27, 1876.

JAMES H. ROBERSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live in Saint Andrew's Parish, on Simmons's farm.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am now only preparing to plant. I have been railroading for the Savannah and Charleston Railroad Company for the last eight or nine years; but I was discharged from there recently.

Q. When were you discharged?—A. I received my discharge on the 16th day of October, previous to the election.

Q. What is your age?—A. As near as I can give you, I will be thirty-eight on or about the 5th day of April approaching.

Q. What precinct do you vote at?—A. I vote at the Red Top Church, in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the election in this State this year?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Are you a republican?—A. I am a republican by principle.

Q. Did you hold any position?—A. I was precinct chairman for the republican party in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. What was the character of the election as regards order and decorum?—A. Very good. I was there from the dawn of day until, I suppose, between the hours of seven and eight, or eight and nine o'clock. So far as that part was concerned, I had the papers, and I was interested in the election, and I staid right about the polls. I didn't come away from the polls.

There was loud talking, &c., going on, and at one time I did hear a controversy between two men. I understood that they were quarrelling about a check or something, and I told them not to make any noise around the door, and they went away.

Q. Were there any people armed there, and, if so, how many, and what were the arms?
—A. There were no persons armed, except in this way: I saw no ammunition. I saw persons with home-pieces, such as they carry to shoot bears with. There were no guns there at all. In fact I went with Mr. J. D. Murphy to the door and asked him to show me anything of that kind, if he saw it.

Q. Did you see revolvers?—A. There was only two pistols that I saw there in the course of the day. Murphy had one, and I had one. I had mine out and showed it to him, to let him see that it could not possibly be used, because it was broken.

Q. Who was Mr. Murphy?—A. He was an interested party on the democratic part there; as spectator only.

Q. Were there people there who had clubs, and, if so, what sort of clubs were they?—A. I saw no clubs except what the people termed walking-sticks. They cut walking-sticks, such as you see people come in from the country walking with.

Q. Where were they cut?—A. In the woods.

Q. What sort of sticks did these people cut?—A. Sticks about an inch through just the length for a man to walk with.

Q. Were there any women about there?—A. There were.

Q. Were they armed in any way?—A. There was not one on the ground armed in any way that I saw.

Q. You felt interested as chairman of the committee to see what was going on?—A. I did, sir; and also pledged myself to keep order in every way.

Q. In regard to this controversy that you heard between two men, of which you have spoken, will you tell us who those men were?—A. One of the parties I was not acquainted with; they all lived up there, and I have often seen him before; his name was James Grant. April Small was another man, a man that belongs to our company.

Q. What is your company?—A. The militia company.

Q. Was the militia company on parade that day?—A. They wasn't; they came there as citizens.

Q. Tell us about this dispute between Small and the man you did not know, and what time in the morning it was.—A. It was between eight and nine o'clock. I heard them talking, and I went up to where they was and told them if anything occurred in the way of violence, or riot, that our work would be of no avail, and that our attempt would be lost for nothing, that all our energies would be for nothing. They were quarrelling about a check, and I begged them to disperse from the place, and they did.

Q. What was the check about?—A. I didn't see it. I don't know anything about them kind of checks. I heard them say "phosphate-checks." I never seen one of them, and I don't know anything about it. I heard Small saying, "You accused me of stealing that phosphate-check," and I don't know anything more about it.

Q. Did they go away?—A. They went off at my command.

Q. Did you see any trouble, or do you know of any trouble, of your own knowledge, between those two men afterwards at any time in the day?—A. I didn't, sir. Mr. Murphy, Captain Latham, and others, said to me that they heard that they had beat James Grant, and asked me if it was so; and I says, "Mr. Murphy, if it is so, it is beyond my knowledge."

Q. There was no quarrel or fight between them on the ground at the poll?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. At this poll was there more disturbance or less disturbance and confusion than occurs ordinarily at polls?—A. We all concluded that it was the most peaceable election we had ever seen since the war was over.

Q. Do you know whether anybody was prevented from voting by violence; did you hear any complaint of that kind?—A. There was no one prevented from voting as they chose. They went in and voted just as they chose. Of course, there was talk among both parties. Some republicans said democrats shouldn't vote; some democrats said republicans shouldn't vote; but, nevertheless, they went in and voted.

Q. Was the conversation you heard outside of the building very violent?—A. It was just as usually occurs at such places.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How many republican negroes were there at that poll during the day?—A. That is a question I could not possibly answer.

Q. Well, give us an idea.—A. There was on the ground, I suppose, between three hundred and twenty or thirty head of persons.

Q. About how many republican negroes?—A. Between three hundred and twenty and three hundred and thirty, I think. I don't know whether they were all republicans or not; they were negroes though, sir.

Q. You were chairman of the precinct?—A. I am chairman of the precinct in that parish.

Q. You had a pretty good idea of who the men were?—A. I knew them, but I have never been in the habit of mingling with them.

Q. It was your duty to organize and know the voters?—A. I was just appointed by the parish people as chairman just before the election a few days.

Q. What were your duties as chairman?—A. I had the commitment of republican tickets in my charge.

Q. You were appointed chairman for the purpose of running the republican tickets and giving them out?—A. I was appointed chairman for the purpose of attending the meetings.

Q. And also for the purpose of issuing republican tickets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many negroes voted the democratic ticket there that day?—A. I can't tell you, sir.

Q. Give us an idea.—A. It is more than I dare say, because, as a general thing, they say one thing and do another. I can't give you an idea.

Q. Were there more than thirteen democratic votes polled that day in that precinct?—A. I really don't know; I didn't count the votes.

Q. Will you swear that there were more than thirteen democratic votes at that poll that day?—A. I won't swear to it, because I don't know.

Q. Were there more than nine negroes that voted the ticket?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Were there more than fifteen democrats at the polls at any time during the day?—A. I don't know, because I am not acquainted with it.

Q. You know how many votes there were polled?—A. I disremember the correct number; it was not over three hundred.

Q. How many republican majority were there?—A. I disremember, sir.

Q. Do you not know that there were not over from thirteen to twenty votes polled for the democrats there that day?—A. I saw that in the paper, sir.

Q. But you are satisfied that is correct?—A. That is correct, to my opinion.

Q. Do you not know that there were 297 republican votes polled there that day?—A. I only know from what I saw in the paper, sir.

Q. Well, do you think that is correct?—A. According to the count of the managers' box, it is. I don't know anything about it.

Q. What democrat did you hear say that a republican should not vote the republican ticket? Can you give us the name of a single person that said that?—A. I never had an opportunity to take notice of it, sir. My attention was directed to other things, and I never noticed.

Q. Did you see any bayonets stuck on sticks?—A. I don't remember. I think I did see one follow with one on a stick that way.

Q. Did you see any clubs with nails driven into the end of them and sticking out?—A. I didn't see one.

Q. Do you say there were none there?—A. I only say I didn't see one.

Q. Do you know whether there were any others or not?—A. I don't know.

Q. You did hear the crowd saying that men should not vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. Didn't you say awhile ago that democrats said republicans should not vote, and republicans said democrats should not vote?—A. It was only in a social way, just as a joke.

Q. You regarded that as a joke?—A. I didn't say anything of that nature. I didn't see them with their sticks in their hands, sir; they went and put them down.

Q. Some of them had guns, you said?—A. I seen one gun, sir.

Q. Did they carry them when they were talking about people not voting?—A. O, no, sir; when the people got up to the place where they were voting, they laid them down until they were going away, and then they took them up and carried them off.

Q. Where did they lay their arms?—A. Some they carried over to the store and laid there; some in other places. I didn't see a dozen, sir.

Q. Did you see this man that had the bayonet joking about democrats not being allowed to vote?—A. I didn't, to my knowledge, sir.

Q. You could not identify any one that talked in that way?—A. I just regarded it as a social talk and didn't take any notice of it.

Q. When you heard this talk you thought it was a sort of social, pleasant, conversation?—A. I did.

Q. Do you know Brown that works for Captain Latham?—A. I am not acquainted with him; I saw him on that day and was told that he was the Brown.

Q. Did you hear any of those ladies and gentlemen about the polls approach him in a social way and say, "Come out, you son of a bitch, and I will knock your brains out?"—A. No, sir; I saw him leave the room, and I saw him up stairs sitting in the window.

Q. Did you hear any pleasant social remarks by the people below to him?—A. I spoke to him from below.

Q. Were there other parties that spoke to him?—A. I never heard them, sir; they might have spoken to him; but I didn't hear it.

Q. Did you see a negro woman level a gun through the window at Captain Latham who was inside the building?—A. No, sir; I really didn't; and I don't think anybody else saw it.

Q. Did you hear any cursing that day?—A. I did.

Q. Any yelling or hollering?—A. I did.

Q. Blowing of horns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Beating of drums?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Marching and countermarching of militia companies?—A. O, no, sir; they were beating a drum.

Q. How many white men were there at the polls during the day altogether?—A. Well, I can't tell you exactly; there was not many, however.

Q. Not over five?—A. They seemed like there was somewhere in the neighborhood of five or six, or seven. I saw Mr. Latham, Captain Ramsey, Mr. Murphy, and Mr. Saint Clair, and another stout gray-bearded gentleman that they told me belonged to Brick Church, somewhere, and a young man that had a cane in his hands—a white gentleman.

Q. Who was he?—A. I don't know, sir. He had a double-barrel shot-gun, and he was in company with a colored man that worked up there somewhere. They told me his name, though I never paid any attention to it. Those are all that I remember, and if there was any more I disremember them.

Q. Do you know a man named Peter Lucas?—A. I Don't know him.

Q. Did you see him whipped that day?—A. I heard of it; but I didn't see him.

Q. You didn't see Grant whipped?—A. No, sir; I didn't. I couldn't see more than the rest; Mr. Murphy and all of us was there, and we didn't see it; we heard about it.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You have lived but a short time in that parish?—A. O, no, sir; I have been in the parish for the last eight or nine years.

Q. You said you knew very few persons;—A. In that neighborhood I know very few people.

Q. What do you mean when you say you were chairman of the managers; do you mean chairman of the managers of the election?—A. I will explain to you what I mean. In the parish they have a man who is termed precinct chairman, who interests himself in regard to the republican party, on any call for a meeting, for instance, when there is any business to attend to.

Q. You mean to say that you are chairman of the republican committee?—A. No, sir; I was precinct chairman for the parish, to give out notice of any call for a meeting, or an election that there was going to be, to notify the people what would be their duty.

Q. You were in the red-top house all day?—A. I was sometimes in the house and sometimes out of doors. Sometimes I would get tired and sit down awhile, and then get up and walk around and interest myself in that way.

Q. You heard some confusion, much noise, &c.?—A. I said I heard hollering—hurrahing for the republican party; persons would come up to vote, and they would go to meet them, that belonged to the republican party, and they would holler and so on.

Q. Many things might have occurred that day that you didn't know anything about?—

A. Many things might have occurred in the shape of words which I didn't know of.

Q. You didn't see, then, men hurt?—A. No, sir; I heard of it; it was away from the polls and out of our sight.

HENRY DRAYTON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. I guess about twenty-nine years old.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have been living there, now, sir, about six years.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. Do you own your own land?—A. Not yet, sir.

Q. You are working on a plantation?—A. Yes, sir; a little farm there.

Q. Where do you vote?—A. I vote at the red-top church in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. Were you there at the last presidential election?—A. I was, sir.

Q. Did you hold any office, or have any particular duty to perform?—A. I was appointed a deputy United States marshal.

Q. Let me ask you, then, if you were about there all day?—A. All day, sir.

Q. What time did you arrive?—A. I arrived there a little before six o'clock in the morning.

Q. How late did you stay?—A. I staid there untill after eight o'clock that night, sir; after the ballot-box was closed.

Q. Did you come away from there during that time?—A. No, sir; I was there all day.

Q. Did you take notice of what was going on?—A. I did, sir.

Q. State to the gentlemen of the committee how it was during the day, regarding order and peace; whether there was any riot or general disturbance.—A. It was quite noisy all day until about half past nine or ten o'clock in the day. I heard a little contradiction between Smalls and James Grant, something that he was saying about the stealing of a phosphate check. I didn't even wait for any further conversation from them, seeing they was very near the poll. I went up to them and I said, "Gentlemen, I want you to understand that I am appointed here as marshal, to see Justice and peace around this poll to-day, and I ask you not to have any disturbance or fuss around this poll, and those that haven't any business here must disperse and go home;" and then they walked off, and I went and turned my back and stood upon the step. Afterward I heard that there was some trouble.

Q. Was there anything said about voting between Grant and Small?—A. Not a word that I heard on that day; nothing except what Captain Latham said to me, that they was after Grant about his voting. I said, "No, that was not what the fellow was after."

Q. In regard to the general behavior of the people in and out, tell us how it was.—A. Well, they were quite quiet, only when they came up some of them was talking and talking, and saying some was a democrat and some a republican.

Q. Was any man prevented from voting on either side?—A. Not a living man, sir.

Q. Did you observe that the people were armed?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. What did you see?—A. The first thing in the morning, after the people gathered there pretty thick, I saw one or two men that had their guns—I believe one double-barrel gun and an old musket—and I said to them same two men, as I thought it was part of my business, that they must carry their guns away just as quick as they could; and I seen one man deposit his gun in the hands of another man till he was done voting. After he was done voting he took his gun and went off down the road.

Q. Was there any militia company about there during the day on parade?—A. No, sir; no parade at all.

Q. Do you know anything about the militia company in that neighborhood?—A. I am an officer in that militia.

Q. What is your rank as an officer?—A. Second lieutenant.

Q. Was there any order for them to parade that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you didn't parade?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any music, drums, or anything of that sort?—A. I believe there was some boys with an old drum out there, but it didn't make any disturbance; the people were not paying any attention to it at all, sir.

Q. How long have you been a voter?—A. The first time I voted was about eight years ago.

Q. You have been at other elections besides this?—A. I have, sir.

Q. Will you tell the committee how this compared, in the behavior of the people, as to order or disorder, with what you have seen before?—A. In my judgment, sir, this has been the quietest election we have ever had, as far as I have ever seen.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How long have you lived in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. Six years, sir.

Q. Do you live in the Red-Top Church precinct?—A. No, sir; I don't live there.

Q. What precinct do you live in?—A. I don't know how to divide that, sir.

Q. Do you live in town?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you live near to any other voting-precinct?—A. That is the nearest, excepting Charleston.

Q. How far away from the Red-Top Church Parish do you live?—A. About six miles, as near as my judgment goes.

Q. Where have you voted heretofore?—A. I have voted once before at the Brick Church, in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. How far is that away from your house?—A. My house, I believe, is seven or eight miles farther.

Q. Where did you vote after that?—A. I think I voted at the Brick Church once or twice after that.

Q. Where else did you vote?—A. I voted at the Red-Top Church, sir.

Q. How many times do you think you voted there?—A. I don't remember just now.

Q. Did you vote there at all except the last time?—A. No, sir; I don't know as I ever voted there before.

Q. You say that you are second lieutenant of a militia company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was it that your militia company got to Red-Top Church?—A. Well, the militia company never came there as I know of.

Q. Do you say that your militia company was not there on the day of election?—A. Well, sir, the men came there.

Q. Do you say that they didn't come there with guns and marching?—A. I do say so, sir.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. I am certain.

Q. Were you inside or outside the church?—A. I was outside the church.

Q. All the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you inside at all?—A. I believe I was inside once or twice.

Q. How many guns did you see there that day?—A. In my judgment, sir, I seen two.

Q. Not more than two?—A. No, sir.

Q. In your judgment, there were no more than two guns there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Robertson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Roberson swore a few moments ago that there were twelve guns there. Do you say that there were not more than two guns there?—A. I don't say but what I seen.

- Q. You do not know how many more there were there?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you hear any cursing there?—A. Well, a few words of it, sir.
- Q. What did they say when they were cursing?—A. I don't remember that I heard any particular cursing about any particular thing, only in the morning, about ten o'clock, I heard them as they was talking about this phosphate check.
- Q. Did you hear any cursing of democratic negroes?—A. I didn't hear one word of it.
- Q. Do you say there was no cursing of them there?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether there was any or not?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you know Brown, a negro, that works for Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you hear a man come to the door and say, "Come out, you son of a bitch, and I will knock your brains out?"—A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you say a man didn't say that?—A. I don't say he didn't say so; I didn't see him.
- Q. Do you say that no democratic negroes were threatened there?—A. Not as I heard, sir.
- Q. You don't say there were no such threats?—A. I didn't hear any of them.
- Q. Didn't you hear the colored people saying that the democrats should not vote the ticket?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Mr. Robertson says he heard it. Do you say no such thing occurred?—A. I only say I didn't hear it.
- Q. How many men had clubs about that poll?—A. Well, I believe, as near as I can recollect, everybody had something in their hands—a gun or something.
- Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks?—A. No, sir; but I seen sticks and things.
- Q. Did you see any big sticks?—A. I didn't see any big sticks.
- Q. Were they just little switches?—A. I don't suppose they were, sir; they were as large as my thumb, and maybe a little larger.
- Q. Did they have strings through them, and the strings wrapped around their hands?—A. No, sir. In general the people over there have sticks as large as my thumb, and you can go into any of their houses and find them at any time.
- Q. When you say that the sticks were as large as your thumb, do you mean lengthways or through your thumb?—A. As large around as my thumb.
- Q. You are a republican?—A. I am, sir.
- Q. And a member of a militia company?—A. I am, sir.
- Q. Do you know a man by the name of Billy Brown?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you and Billy friends?—A. No, sir; not particularly.
- Q. Is he in the militia company?—A. I believe so, sir.
- Q. Was Billy about there that day?—A. Well, I declare I disremember whether Billy was there or not.
- Q. Did you see Brown when he was run up in the garret by some of those negroes?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you know that he was up in the loft of the church there all day?—A. I saw him up there one time of the day myself, but I don't know what scared him up there.
- Q. Did you have any arms with you?—A. I didn't, sir; I only had a small pistol in my pocket.
- Q. What kind of a pistol?—A. A small revolver.
- Q. Robertson says his was broken and would not shoot; was yours?—A. Mine would shoot if I tried to shoot.
- Q. Did you see anybody else with a pistol?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How many women were there about there?—A. Well, I guess there was nine or ten of them, or more.
- Q. Did you see a man beaten?—A. No, sir; I heard about it.
- Q. Did you see Lucas stripped and whipped?—A. No, sir; I heard about it.
- Q. Do you know Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. He was there all day, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was his business at the polls?—A. He was supervisor.
- Q. How long was Brown kept in the church-loft there, do you know?—A. I didn't notice how long he was kept up there.
- Q. Did you see any sticks with nails driven in the end of them?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Were there any there?—A. Not in my knowledge.
- Q. Did you see any?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Then you do not know whether there were any there or not?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What year were you born in?—A. I don't know, sir; I never had the account of my age.
- Q. Who did you vote for the first time for President?—A. I believe it was Mr. Grant.
- Q. Was it the first or second time he was a candidate?—A. The first time, I think.
- Q. Did you ever vote before that for any officer?—A. No, sir, I don't think so; not as I remember.
- Q. How many republican votes were polled at Red-Top Church that day?—A. As near as I can remember: I think there were three hundred.

By Mr. JONES :

- Q. You say you know Captain Latham ?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. How long have you known him ?—A. About two or three years, sir.
 Q. Do you think he is a truthful man ?—A. I never had any dealings with him, sir.
 Q. You know nothing to the contrary ?—A. No.

JAMES H. ROBERTSON (colored) recalled :

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. You said you were discharged by the railroad company ?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you say you had been employed by the company ?—A. I suppose about eight or nine years.

Q. Why were you discharged ?—A. Well, sir, Mr. Boyleston and Mr. Gadsden told me that if I could not support the democratic party they would have to put some one else in my place.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran) :

Q. Who was he ?—A. The superintendent of the Charleston & Savannah Railroad. Mr. Boyleston was the general freight agent. Mr. Boyleston told me that I must go to work to get up a club to support the democratic party. I told him I would answer him better in a short time. I went down to the railroad afterwards, and Mr. Elmore approached me with a paper and said he wanted to enroll my name on the list, and I would not consent to it; and afterwards I asked him if that was the method he had adopted. He said the railroad company had nothing to do with it; that he was the master-mechanic, and that was his policy, and he intended to do that way.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You left the company ?—A. Mr. Gadsden came the next day and told me that if I was not going to do that he would discharge me, and they did discharge me that night. On the next day Mr. Gadsden sent word for me to come back and take my situation again. I staid there a few days, and these gentlemen came to me and told me again that I ought to vote the democratic ticket, and I told them I could not, and they discharged me the second time.

Q. Had you any trouble with them before ?—A. Never, since I had been in their employ, up to that time. They told me I was a good man and they hated to let me go, but that if I could not do their way they would have to let me go.

Q. You said you heard a conversation between Small and some person you did not know in the morning ?—A. Yes, sir; I was told his name was Grant.

Q. In that conversation, so far as you heard, was anything said about voting ?—A. No, sir; they were not talking about voting. There was a crowd, and I seen that it was going to get into a big disturbance near the door, and I commanded them to go away, and they went away. I knew it would be a big disturbance if they started it at the door.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochran) :

Q. What was it the railroad official said when you asked him if that was the policy ?—A. I asked the master-mechanic, when he told me that I had to sign my name to vote that way—I asked him in the evening, after the hands had knocked off, if that was the policy. He says, "Not with the company. The company have nothing to do with it; but I, as the master-mechanic of the railroad, am going to discharge all men who don't vote with the democratic party."

Q. How many men have the railroad company in their employ; do you know ?—A. No, sir; I have not been there since election.

Q. Are there not plenty of republicans employed there now by the company ?—A. That is a question that I cannot answer.

Q. Do you know of anybody else being discharged ?—A. I know that there was others discharged; not that I know that they spoke particular; to them. They never asked anybody else but me to get up a club.

Q. Do you know of anybody else being discharged for political reasons ?—A. I know of others that were quiet, because they said that they would be discharged. Jeffrey Riley was discharged for that reason. He was discharged for keeping his mouth.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, that he was discharged on that account ?—A. No, sir; only what I heard him say.

Q. Do you know now of any other instance of a man being discharged for political reasons ?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Did you hear of anybody else being discharged for political reasons ?—A. I heard them say, but I do not know.

Q. Who ?—A. John Rivers.

Q. Who else ?—A. No one else, to my knowledge.

Q. Then you have not heard of anybody being discharged except the two persons that you have mentioned ?—A. They were not discharged, but they would have been discharged, they said.

Q. Well, now, how many republicans were employed there when you left?—A. I don't know that there were a great many.

Q. About how many?—A. I may be wrong, but there might be probably eighteen or twenty, more or less.

Q. Did you ever hear any expression of opinion by these men as to their political preferences?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any of them were republicans?—A. I do not know that one of them was a republican, except one.

Q. Who was he?—A. That was a man by the name of Joe Thompson, who was not afraid to proclaim his opinion. He had his fingers mashed off, and he knew that they could not discharge him. If they discharged him he would try and sue for his fingers. He was employed there in their machine-shops.

Q. Do you know of any other negro that is a republican in the employ of the railroad company?—A. I will tell you what I do know, that there is plenty of negroes there that would tell you that they were strong republicans, and yet they would go to the gentlemen and tell them they were democrats. That is the reason why I told you I can't tell you how many republicans there were there.

Q. Then you have not much confidence in what they tell you?—A. There is a great many of them I do not, sir.

Q. Well, then, you wouldn't place any confidence in what Rivers or the other man told you about the reason they left there?—A. I wouldn't vouch for what they said; I wouldn't say that I wouldn't place any confidence in what any person said, because I have my doubts on every side. They came out and voted the republican ticket, and we knew that.

Q. Did any others vote the republican ticket?—A. Those around me had to do it slyly, sir. They were afraid of it. I know I was going to be discharged as soon as I voted the republican ticket.

SAMUEL FISHBURNE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. On Mrs. Mills's plantation, in Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-four years of age.

Q. How long have you lived in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. I was born and raised there.

Q. What is your business?—A. Planting.

Q. Where do you vote?—A. At Red-Top Church precinct.

Q. Were you there at the last presidential election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. I got there in the morning about half past six o'clock.

Q. Were you there all day?—A. Yes, sir; all day, until the polls closed.

Q. Will you tell the gentlemen of the committee if you saw any disturbance there during the day, and if so, what it was?—A. A little disturbance commenced in the morning about half past nine o'clock. This was a light talking. After that they went up the road. The marshal asked them to go up the road from the polls. Mr. Jeems Grant accused Abram Small of stealing a phosphate check. So when they went up the road Grant said to Abram Small, "You have taken my phosphate check," and Small said, "No, sir; I have no phosphate check that belongs to you," and with that Grant drew his revolver to shoot Small.

Q. Where was this?—A. It was a mile from the polls.

Q. Where were they when you first heard the conversation? Had they gone off this distance from the polls?—A. Yes, sir; and then after that, as I aforesaid, Grant drew his pistol to shoot Small, and the cap snapped, and Small did not have anything but a little cane stick about an inch large. After that Small threw him down. After that the boys ran up and whipped Small off of Grant.

Q. What happened when these men went in?—A. When these men went in some of the other men went in and parted them. That is all I saw of the row. As for there being any row around the polls, they did not have any at all.

Q. Did you see any military company at the polls?—A. No, sir; there was no such thing.

Q. Did you belong to the militia company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody who belonged to the militia company who had a musket?—A. Yes, sir; but they laid them all to one side of the drays before they went up to vote. There was an old dray there with some hay on it, and they laid them under that.

Q. How many muskets were there there?—A. I saw two of them.

Q. How many times have you voted?—A. Once; this is the first time.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. Cochrane:)

Q. How long have you lived in Saint Andrew's parish?—A. I was born there, sir.

Q. What year were you born in?—A. I do not know. I cannot read or write, but my old missus told me I was 24 years old. I do not know anything about when I was born.

Q. What month in the year were you born in?—A. My mother told me I was born in May.

Q. How long has it been since you saw your old mistress?—A. I saw my old missus just before I voted. I went to her and I asked her if I is old enough to vote, and she told me "Yes, you are twenty-four by the book what I keep your age on."

Q. Who is your old mistress?—A. Mrs. Mills; she lives at the corner of Ball and Rutledge streets.

Q. How long before the election was it you asked her this?—A. About a month.

Q. Was that the first time you had ever talked with her about your age?—A. O, no, sir; I generally go around there to see her; and I asked her afore this, and she told me.

Q. When had you asked your old mistress how old you were?—A. A year before that.

Q. Did she tell you the same thing then—that you were old enough to vote then?—A. Yes, sir; but they had done voted then.

Q. Before the election you asked your mistress how old you were; if you were old enough to vote, and she said you were twenty-four. Is that right?—A. No, sir; the last election which passed before this election, I went there on Saturday and said, "Missus, can you tell me how old I is?" and she said "Yes." Then they was done voting a year before that for governor; and she says, "You are twenty-two years old." A month before this election I went there again and asked her, and she told me I was twenty-four.

Q. You knew that you were old enough to vote before you went to her?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you go to her again for?—A. Because I wanted to be certain if some person questioned me at the polls. They questioned so much at the polls, and they did not allow you to vote until you is twenty-one years of age. After the election was done passed, and another election was coming, I says I will get what age I is at from her, so I can be sure of it.

Q. She told you a year or two before that you were twenty-two years of age, did she not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that was old enough to vote, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then why did you go to her when you knew that she had told you that you were twenty-two years old, and that you were old enough to vote?—A. Well, when a man be working with a hoe, a hoe knocks everything out of him. You have got to work so hard with a hoe that it knocks everything out of you.

Q. Did the hoe knock out of your mind the fact that you had gone to see your mistress a year before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you say you had forgotten; did you forget that you had been to see your mistress a year before?—A. I did not forget that I had been to see my missus a year before. But I had forgot that I had asked my missus about my age.

Q. Well, then, how do you come to remember it now?—A. Well, because she says it is twice I have told you your age, and I ain't have to work half so hard since she told me, as I did before I went to her.

Q. If you had been hoeing you probably would have forgotten it again?—A. I would have forgotten that I was twenty-four.

Q. If you had been working with the hoe since you went to see your old mistress you would probably have forgotten that you went to ask her your age?—A. O, no, sir.

Q. After you went to see her the last time?—A. Yes, sir; because a man forgets a good deal in a year; but I, took my sister to my old missus to set it down.

Q. Did you ever vote before this election?—A. No, sir; I just done told you already I had never voted before this election.

Q. Did they swear you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many negroes were about the polis there that day?—A. I really couldn't tell, because I can't count.

Q. About how many?—A. I could not tell.

Q. Were there five hundred?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Six hundred?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Seven hundred?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. A thousand?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. How many white men were there?—A. The only white man there that I was acquainted with was—because I had been working with him—was Mr. Saint Clair. There was some more besides him.

Q. How many besides him; were there fifty?—A. I don't know.

Q. Were there a hundred?—A. I couldn't tell.

Q. Five hundred?—A. No, sir; there couldn't be five hundred, for there ain't that much white men on the place.

Q. Were there two hundred?—A. I couldn't tell.

Q. How many men were there there?—A. I don't know.

Q. Fifty?—A. I don't know.

Q. One hundred?—A. I don't know.

Q. Five hundred?—A. I don't know.

Q. How many clubs were there about there?—A. I ain't seen any clubs. I saw some little sticks.

Q. How many little sticks?—A. I don't know.

Q. Fifty?—A. I really couldn't tell.

Q. One hundred?—A. I really couldn't tell.

- Q. Five hundred?—A. I really couldn't tell.
- Q. How many guns?—A. I tell you I saw some guns laying up beside the bushes as I was going to vote. There was only two that I seen with my eyes.
- Q. How many people were in this crowd that were after Grant?—A. I do not know.
- Q. Fifty?—A. I don't know.
- Q. One hundred?—A. I don't know.
- Q. Five hundred?—A. I don't know.
- Q. You are not able to say whether there was fifty or a hundred?—A. I don't know.
- Q. You did not see anybody hurt Grant?—A. I seen a crowd. They were after Small.
- Q. You did not see anybody after Grant?—A. No, sir; they were after Small. I seen one man in the crowd named Grant that had a pistol, and it was a five-shooter.
- Q. Was it a revolver?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. It had five chambers in it?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You paid particular attention to it?—A. Yes, sir; I took particular attention when I saw it drawn, but I did not count it. I seen Grant the day before that day, and he was shooting at a squirrel with the pistol.
- Q. Did you count how many balls were in it at that time?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many feet long was the pistol?—A. I don't know about the feet.
- Q. What would be the weight of the ball that it would shoot?—A. I really couldn't tell.
- Q. Would it shoot an ounce ball?—A. I don't know anything about an ounce ball. I told you all I know about it.
- Q. Did you see any blood on Grant?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you see any wounds on Grant?—A. No, sir; I was not there after the pistol was drawn. After it was drawn I came away.
- Q. Did you see anything of Grant after he drew the pistol?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Then, just as soon as he drew the pistol you immediately turned and went away?—A. After he drew the pistol and the pistol snapped, I turned and went right away from the place.
- Q. And you did not look at it any more?—A. No, sir; because people had went in to part them.
- Q. Who have you talked with about this matter; have you talked with Mr. Robeson?—A. No, sir; I did not have anything to say to Mr. Robeson.
- Q. Were you not out in the hall talking with him a few moments ago?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you talk to Mr. Drayton?—A. No, sir. I never seen him until I come in here.
- Q. Who did you talk to about this?—A. Nobody; I never spoke to anybody.
- Q. Never told anybody that you had seen this trouble?—A. This morning?
- Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you ever tell anybody that you had seen this trouble between Small and Grant?—A. Not until they asked me.
- Q. Did anybody ask you anything about it?—A. No, sir.
- Q. And you never mentioned a word of what you said here to any person?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Well, then, how did they come to bring you here, if nobody knew that you knew anything about it?—A. I never mentioned it to anybody, except to the gentlemen that had a right to ask me.
- Q. You said that you had not spoken about this to anybody?—A. No, sir; not out in the street.
- Q. You said you had never spoken about it to anybody; now, who did you speak to?—A. I spoke to that gentleman, (pointing to Mr. Banks.)
- Q. Did you speak to any person else about it?—A. Yes, sir; I spoke to the lawyer.
- Q. What lawyer?—A. Lawyer Stone.
- Q. When did you speak to him about it?—A. Yesterday.
- Q. Who is Lawyer Stone?—A. I don't know him, but he is a lawyer; I know his name is Lawyer Stone.
- Q. Where did you speak to him about it?—A. At his office.
- Q. Did you tell him in his office what you have told us here?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who told you to go to Lawyer Stone's office?—A. I had a summons down there.
- Q. You were summoned to go there, and you went there and told this story?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you see Rebecca Bennett there about the scene of this trouble between Small and Grant?—A. No, sir; I did not see her.
- Q. You know Rebecca Bennett, do you not?—A. No, sir.
- Q. This was a mile from the polls where this trouble occurred. How did you come to go away from the polls at all?—A. I was going out into the road to get some water, and when I was coming back I met them out in the road and heard that talking, and I walked a little way up by the bridge, and I stopped, and after I stopped they were as far from me as the corner of that house, (about thirty feet.)
- Q. You walked a mile to get a drink of water?—A. Yes, sir; the spring is a mile from the church.
- Q. Did you go alone?—A. Yes, sir; just me alone.
- Q. How long were you away from the church?—A. About a half hour.
- Q. Half an hour? Then you waited and saw this trouble and walked two miles—a mile there and a mile back?—A. It wasn't two miles.

- Q. You walked a mile to the spring and saw this trouble and came back, and you were only away from the polls a half hour?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You do not know what occurred at the polls while you were away?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Then, nothing occurred at the polls while you were away?—A. No, sir.
- Q. There were no guns there while you were away?—A. No, sir.
- Q. There were no threats made while you were away?—A. Not to my knowing.
- Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Well, did you go away from the polls any other time that day?—A. No, sir; not until the polls closed. From the time I went to the spring until I came back, I staid there until the polls closed.
- Q. Did you have a club or stick?—A. No, sir; nothing in my hand.
- Q. Did you see any bayonets and sticks there?—A. No, sir; I did not see none.
- Q. Did any women have anything in their hands?—A. No, sir. If they did I did not see it.
- Q. You did not hear any women say anything at the polls?—A. To my knowing they was all quiet.
- Q. Did you have any preaching or praying in the woods that day?—A. No, sir; no preaching or praying.
- Q. Were the colored ladies generally sitting down or walking about?—A. Yes, sir; some walked about and some sit down.
- Q. And they were very orderly and quiet?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And the men were very orderly and quiet?—A. Yes, sir; only as they were passing along, that was all I saw.
- Q. Did you see Peter Lucas there?—A. If I saw him I wouldn't know him.
- Q. You heard about his being whipped?—A. I heard about it during the day.
- Q. About his being whipped with switches?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. But you did not see any of them?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

- Q. Do you remember when the war closed?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How long have you been working for yourself?—A. Since the first year of the Union.
- Q. What union?—A. The peace declared.
- Q. How long has that been?—A. I don't know, sir.
- Q. Do you remember when you were a slave?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you remember when you were set free?—A. No, sir; I was a good-sized boy. I was about four feet high.
- Q. How old were you in the first year of the Union, as you call it?—A. I don't remember anything about it.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. You remember about Grant and Small, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You say you cannot count?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. When you see a crowd of people you cannot tell how many there are in it?—A. No sir.

APRIL SMALL (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Question. How old are you?—Answer. Twenty-seven.
- Q. Where do you live?—A. I live on Mrs. Mills's plantation, about a mile from John's Island ferry.
- Q. Where is Mrs. Mills's plantation?—A. In Saint Andrews Parish, across the new bridge.
- Q. What is your business?—A. Farming.
- Q. Were you at the polls at Red-Top church precinct on last election-day?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. At what time did you get there?—A. I got there that morning about 6 o'clock, just before the box opened.
- Q. Do you know a man by the name of James Grant?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you see him there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Was there any difficulty between you and him?—A. Yes, sir; there was.
- Q. Will you please tell the gentlemen of the committee about it just as it occurred?—A. Me and James Grant come into a fuss about he accusing of me of stealing a phosphate check from him, and I wouldn't say nothing to him until I got through putting my vote in the ballot-box. About an hour after, I went up the road about a mile from the polls and I asked him how about his accusing me about the check, and before he gave me any satisfaction he hauled out his pistol and made fire at me and the cap snapped and the same time as the cap snapped I had a small walking-stick in my hand and I struck him in the head with it.
- Q. How large was the stick?—A. It was a small oak stick about an inch thick. Then me and him got into a fight, and we bind one another and I threw him down and at the same time his crowd ran up and grabbed me; then my party of boys had to run up for to help me; then at the same time this man, Peter Lucas, he was one of James Grant's party, and he came up and stroke me across my shoulders with a club about an inch thick; after he stroked me with the club I went at him, and me and him got into a fuss.

Q. At the same place?—A. No, sir; at the next place.

Q. What happened after Lucas struck you?—A. When Lucas stroke me where Grant was?

Q. Yes?—A. After the fuss between me and Grant we parted and I went off.

Q. Where did you go to?—A. I went off up to the polls, and me and Grant did not have any more fuss, and me and Peter Lucas got into a fuss about his stroking me.

Q. Where did you see Lucas afterward?—A. I never seen Lucas for about an hour and a half after me and Grant got through. When I seen him I was gwine up the road home, and I and him had a fuss.

Q. Well, what happened when you met Lucas?—A. Then we started a fight right there in the road and the folks came up again and parted us. And after the folks parted us I went on home. That is all I know about it.

Q. Was there any trouble between Grant and you about politics?—A. No, sir; nothing like that.

Q. Was there anything said about politics in the morning when you first had the conversation near the polls?—A. No, sir; nothing like that.

Q. Are you a republican or democrat?—A. A republican, sir.

Q. Was there anything said about politics at the time you had the fight with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was about the phosphate check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is a phosphate check?—A. After you cut a pit they give you a check, it might be for $1 or 75 cents, and you keep that check until pay-day and you turn it in and get the money.

Q. When he accused you of stealing his check, were there more than one?—A. There wasn't but one. He had it in his pocket, and he said I was the one that stole it from him.

Q. At the time you had this fight was there anything said about politics between you?—A. No, sir; we had nothing to do with politics at that time.

Q. Did all the colored people carry sticks or clubs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any other affair that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go back to the polls and stay there?—A. After I and Grant had a fuss, and Peter Lucas?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I went on home.

Q. What time was it that you and Lucas had this trouble?—A. Between 2 and 3 o'clock.

Q. Do you belong to the militia company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the militia company parading that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. There was no order for a meeting of the company that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any of the militia company there with muskets?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any muskets or arms on the ground?—A. No, sir; I did not see any, but some folks that stood close around there had a few old guns, but they did not carry them to the polls.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You are a field-hand working on the plantation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you are twenty-seven years old?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know your age?—A. My father had my age, and when he died he left it with my folks, and he wrote me a note and told my age.

Q. Do you know what year you were born in?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you read and write?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Saint Andrews Parish?—A. As far as I can remember, for ten years.

Q. Were you a slave?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long has it been since you were emancipated?—A. I could not tell you how many years.

Q. How long has it been since the war closed?—A. I think it is thirteen years since Charleston was taken.

Q. Are you a married man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw Grant at the polls when you went there, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him.

Q. About what time in the morning?—A. When I got there it was about 6 o'clock, and as soon as I got there I met him there.

Q. Grant had some phosphate checks in his pocket, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, if I understand you, he accused you of stealing some of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did he come to accuse you of that?—A. I don't know; we were all around him there.

Q. How many people were around him?—A. A good many.

Q. Well, how did he come to accuse you of stealing his checks?—A. God knows, sir. He says I was the one who took his check out of his pocket because I had been around him when he have his check. The crowd was around him, too; but he says there was no one taken his check but me.

Q. You and the crowd were around Grant at the polls, and he asked you if you had taken his check, and he said there was nobody else to take his check but you?—A. Yes, sir; and we were all around him.

Q. You were playing with him, were you?—A. No, sir; I was standing around there while the rest were playing with him.

Q. Pushing him and playing, that way?—A. Yes, sir; like young folks.

Q. Having a little sport; a little fun?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in this innocent fun that they were having Grant lost some of his checks?—A. Yes, sir; he dropped his checks some way or another.

Q. There was some little innocent scuffling around there in a playful way?—A. No, sir; there was no scuffling.

Q. Well, they were moving around, playing with Grant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The negroes were in a pretty playful mood that morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Grant went down the road about a mile?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not go near him or did not have any trouble with him at the polls?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you went and voted and then Grant had gone away when you came out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you started down the road to inquire why it was that he said you had stolen his checks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was down the road about a mile?—A. He was not a mile down the road then, but after I caught up to him we walked down the road together.

Q. How far did he run before you came up to him?—A. He didn't run.

Q. How far did you run?—A. I didn't run neither; we two walked.

Q. How far did you run before you came up to him?—A. I couldn't tell how far he was, sir.

Q. How many of these playful colored people who had been at the church in the morning were with you?—A. I could not tell how many, because I didn't count them.

Q. Give us an idea of about how many.—A. I couldn't tell, indeed, sir, how many.

Q. Do you think there were as many as 50 playful negroes who were with you on that occasion?—A. I couldn't tell you how many.

Q. Do you suppose there were 100 who were talking and who walked down the road with you?—A. No, sir; there was no one with me.

Q. I thought you said you carried your crowd with you?—A. No one went with me; they never come until the fuss was started.

Q. They followed you down from the church?—A. Yes, sir; they came down to see the fuss.

Q. Well, how many followed you down from the polls?—A. I couldn't tell you how many; it was a large crowd.

Q. Do you think there were a hundred?—A. No, sir; there was not a hundred.

Q. Were there 50 or 75?—A. There was a pretty big crowd, but I wouldn't like to say how many was in the crowd.

Q. How far were you ahead of the crowd?—A. When we came back from the fuss?

Q. Yes.—A. We all came back together, sir.

Q. You spoke of having a little stick in your hand.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any of these other gentlemen who came after you have little wands or sticks also?—A. No, sir; I did not see any.

Q. How far did you walk with Grant before you had any trouble?—A. We walked about a quarter of a mile from the house before I and him had any talking, and we got exactly about a mile from the church, then I and him had a fuss.

Q. Then you walked a quarter of a mile?—A. We were walking as far could get away from the church.

Q. You were walking as far as you could get him away from the polls?—A. Yes, sir; so that we could have a talk.

Q. After you got off with him there what did you do?—A. I was talking to him and he would not give me any satisfaction. I says to him, Grant, you are gwine away and you ain't give me any satisfaction about my stealing your check, and then he wheeled right around to me and said, "Damn you, I will give you satisfaction with this pistol."

Q. How big was this pistol?—A. It was a large pistol.

Q. How many feet long was the pistol?—A. About the length of my hand.

Q. About how many inches long?—A. I could not tell how many inches.

Q. Was it a foot long?—A. I could not tell you whether it was or not.

Q. How long is a foot?—A. A foot is twelve inches.

- Q. Was it twelve inches?—A. No, sir; it was some seven or eight inches.
- Q. It was a five-barreled revolver?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did it have caps on?—A. Yes, sir; I can testify to that positively, and when he pulled fire at me the cap snapped.
- Q. What did you do then?—A. Then I took my stick and struck him right on the head.
- Q. Did you hit him hard?—A. Yes, sir; I hit him hard enough to knock him down.
- Q. Then what did you do when you knocked him down?—A. I jumped on him.
- Q. Jumped on him with your feet?—A. No, sir; I jumped on him with my hands.
- Q. Then what did you do?—A. Then his crowd ran up and jumped on me; and when my party saw his crowd come up they came up and jumped on his crowd.
- Q. How many men were in Grant's crowd?—A. About twenty, I suppose.
- Q. Were they negroes?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Was Peter Lucas there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Well, give us the name of another man in Grant's crowd.—A. Jeems Simmons was there.
- Q. Who else?—A. Billy Brown.
- Q. What Brown is that? Is that the Brown that is employed by Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who else?—A. Well, I could not call all the other names.
- Q. You cannot give us any other names than those of Lucas, Simmons, and Brown?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you know any of the other men?—A. No, sir; I did not know the others' names.
- Q. Well, then, what did the crowd do when they come up?—A. They all jumped right on and started to beat me.
- Q. What with?—A. With their hands.
- Q. Who struck you?—A. I don't know which one struck me, except Peter Lucas; I am certain of him.
- Q. Well, who else struck you?—A. I don't know who else struck me. I am certain of Peter Lucas, because I was looking at him when he struck me.
- Q. You say you hit Grant and knocked him down and jumped on him, and while you two were down on the ground then Grant's crowd came up?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did not you state a few moments ago that you struck him with your club and caught him around the waist and he caught you around the waist and you threw him down?—A. No, sir; I says after he made fire on me I struck him with my club and knocked him down.
- Q. You did not say that in your examination-in-chief?—A. I did not tell you that.
- Q. How many times was Grant struck with a club?—A. I couldn't tell how many times.
- Q. How many times did you strike him with a club?—A. I didn't strike him but one time.
- Q. Did anybody else hit him with a club?—A. Not to my knowing.
- Q. Did anybody cut him?—A. Not to my knowing.
- Q. What became of his pistol?—A. I don't know nothing about that, sir.
- Q. Did he keep his pistol in his hand all the time?—A. When I and he got into the fuss he had his pistol in his hands until the crowd come, and what became of it after that I don't know.
- Q. You do not know whether he was cut or not?—A. I never know anything about it until I heard about it.
- Q. Do you know Rebecca Bennett?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you see Rebecca Bennett throw herself down on top of this man Grant?—A. I didn't see her.
- Q. You do not know whether she begged the crowd not to do it?—A. No, sir; I don't know nothing about it.
- Q. How many said "Kill the democratic son of a bitch"?—A. I don't know anything about that.
- Q. How many times did you say that?—A. I didn't say that, because I had nothing to do about that, sir.
- Q. What ticket did Grant vote?—A. I couldn't tell you what ticket he voted; I don't know whether he voted the democrat or republican ticket.
- Q. Were you in the church when he voted?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What ticket did the colored people tell you he voted?—A. They didn't tell me what ticket he voted.
- Q. Do you mean to say that the colored people did not tell you what ticket he voted?—A. No, sir; because I had nothing to do with it; all I had to do was to put my ticket in, and I have nothing else to do with anybody else's business.
- Q. But you followed Grant down the road?—A. Yes, because he called me a disgraced name; he called me a thief.
- Q. When you got through with this fuss you went back to the polls?—A. Yes, sir; me and the crowd went back.

Q. Did you carry the stick back?—A. No, sir; after the fuss was over I threw it away.

Q. Well, then, you met Lucas in the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was that?—A. Between 2 and 3 o'clock.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. Then I asked him what he stroke me for, and he said I stroke me because I stroke Grant, and he intended to take up for Grant because they lived on the same place. After he told me he intended to stroke me, he pulled off his jacket and went right in; after he had thrown his jacket off I throwed off mine, and then we went right in to fight, I and him; I hit him and he hit me.

Q. Where did you hit him?—A. I hit him right on the breast.

Q. Where else?—A. I couldn't tell where, because I hit him all about and he hit me all about.

Q. How many persons were there near you and Lucas when you got into the fight?—A. Some ten or twelve persons.

Q. Lucas was alone?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whom did he have with him?—A. The same folks that was with him afore were with him; Sam Black was there with us.

Q. Who is Sam Black?—A. He is a preacher.

Q. What ticket did he vote?—A. I don't know that; I didn't pay no attention to notice who was voting; all I know about it is that I voted the republican ticket, and I intend to die on that.

Q. Were you at Mr. Stone's office?—A. I was up there yesterday.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Stone what you have told here?—A. Yes, sir; I gave him the testimony.

Q. Mr. Stone is a lawyer here in town?—A. I don't know whether he is a lawyer or not; but I have been up there.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What became of Grant after you and he had the difficulty?—A. I don't know, sir, what became of him; I didn't see any more of him.

Q. Did not you and Grant have a difficulty because Grant was a democrat and you were a republican?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear Grant say anything about his difficulty in voting?—A. No, sir; I didn't have nothing to do with him about his ticket, because I didn't have nothing to do with no man.

Q. How long were you away from the polls during the time you were having this fuss?—A. I couldn't tell how long, because I didn't have no watch to tell how long it was by.

Q. How many democrats voted there that day?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Do you know how many republicans voted?—A. No, sir; I don't know how much.

Q. Do you know Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir, I know him; he is carrying on the phosphate works.

Q. He is a pretty clever man?—A. I don't know whether he is a clever man or a bad man.

Q. What is he, a democrat or a republican?—A. I don't know what he is; I know he is a white man; I have nothing to do with no ticket, black or white, or blue or green, or any other color.

Q. You have lived on this plantation some time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Captain Latham has been there a good while?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You never heard anybody say what he was?—A. No, sir.

Q. None of the colored people?—A. No, sir; all I know about him is that I saw him at the poll there that day.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Were all the other republicans in that precinct as ready to die as you are for the ticket?—A. I couldn't tell you about anybody else; I can only tell you about myself.

Q. Would you want to kill a man because he did not agree with you in politics?—A. No, sir; I have no need to kill any man, because, as I say, every man to his own principle.

Q. You do not feel as kindly towards a democratic colored man as a republican colored man?—A. I have got nothing to do with no man, sir.

Q. If Grant had been a republican like you, would this trouble have occurred between you and him?—A. We didn't have no fuss about a democratic affair.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Suppose a republican had called you a thief, would you have been satisfied with it?—A. If he had called me a thief, me and him would have got into a fuss just the same as Grant.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

- Q. Do you know James H. Roberson?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Is he a republican or a democrat?—A. I don't know, sir.
 Q. Do you know Mr. Drayton?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Is he a democrat or a republican?—A. I don't know, sir.
 Q. Among the three hundred negroes who voted the republican ticket on election-day at Red-Top church, you do not know one?—A. No, sir.
 Q. How tall are you?—A. I couldn't tell you how tall I is; I don't know for sure.
 Q. Do you know how much you weigh?—A. The last time I was weighed I weighed 170 pounds.
 Q. How long ago was that?—A. That was in July.
 Q. You are about six feet high?—A. I don't know, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. Have you ever had a revolver?—A. No, sir.
 Q. How many colored people in your vicinity have pistols?—A. I couldn't tell?
 Q. Is it a common thing for them to have pistols?—A. I don't know, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

- Q. You belong to the militia company?—A. Yes, sir.
 PRINCE ALBERT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live at No. 5 Kirkland Lane, in this city.
 Q. What is your business?—A. My business is laboring business; mostly any kind of business I can get. Sometimes I wait. For the last two years I was employed in laboring business.
 Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-one years old the 10th of May coming.
 Q. Where did you work last?—A. I worked last at the corner of George street and Saint Michael's alley.
 Q. Whom did you work for?—A. Willis Williman.
 Q. When did you leave there?—A. The first Saturday night in October.
 Q. How came you to leave?—A. The last Saturday night in September the boss employer of Mr. Williman came to me and said: "Who are you going to support this time; are you going on our side or are you going to support the republican party?" I said "No." He said, "Why can't you come with us this time and let us have a good Government, and run these Yankee carpet-baggers out, so that we can work and have plenty of money?" I said to him, "I can't do it, sir." He replied, "Why can't you do it? The republicans give you nothing at all." I said to him then, "I think if I was to forget what the republican party have already given me I would be not only ungrateful to man, but ungrateful to God." He says, "I am very sorry that I have to part with you, but you must make up your mind between now and the time the roll comes around; you must either make up your mind to do one thing or the other, either vote with us or don't go to the polls at all." I told him then I couldn't promise him to do either one nor the other; that I would have to take the consequences, no matter what they might be. He says then, "I am very sorry that you will have to go." I told him then I thought it was very hard that I would have to be discharged on the occasion of my political principles; "but," says I, "Boss, it seems to me like your party tries to take the power out of the hand of God Almighty instead of the power out of the hand of man. God has given me the liberty, and I am going to exercise it to the best of my judgment." He said, "Well, let all the past differences be set aside." I told him then, "I can't set it aside, because that is what we have to regard and look upon as an example." Then he said, "Well, you will have to go to-night. Come to work Monday." That was the last Saturday night in September. Well, the first Saturday night in October was the night they was to discharge me, so I went off that Saturday night, and on Monday morning I came back, and after that we went in and worked till Saturday night. Saturday night he called all of us and told all of us we was discharged that wasn't willing to vote. We was to sign our names, and those that didn't sign their names had to go. About fifteen of us didn't sign our names. Some of them are working there now; there was five which wouldn't go with us. We all was out of employment till after the election.
 Q. Did you try to get employment anywhere?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Did you try often?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. What luck did you have?—A. I didn't have luck; but one day in the afternoon I got five hours' work from Mr. Pringle.
 Q. What was said to you when you asked for employment?—A. They asked me to turn right in and work.
 Q. Not at that time, but when you went out for work; when you tried and did not get work what was said to you?—A. A great many colored people said nobody can work except democrat niggers.

Q. When you asked men for work, what did they say to you?—A. I never asked but two; one was Mr. Walker. He said, "Did you vote the democrat ticket, too?" I said "Yes, I have already voted it." He said, "We can't give any work to those who have voted against us." That was on the Commercial Press. The other man was Mr. Huger. He didn't give me any work. I went to him and he said, "Prince, are you out of employment, too?" I said, "Yes." He said, "Why?" I said, "Because I can't take sides with Mr. Wilkinson." "Well, now," said he, "see here Prince; I have voted the republican ticket twice; why can't you vote with us this time?" I said, "I can't do so. You can change your suffrage at any time, but it won't do for me to change my suffrage in that direction all the time." He said, "Well, you know me. We were all raised together; and you can't expect to get employment from the republican party." I said, "The most of the republican party is black men." Then he said, "I can't give any one employment that don't vote for us." Then he got up and went right away. He had to give some receipt for cotton-bales.

Q. Did you go back to the place where you were discharged from work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you go?—A. On the third Saturday evening in October, as near as I can remember. I was discharged about five weeks before the election, and the second Saturday night after the election I went around there, and my object in going around—

Q. What did you do when you got there?—A. I went there not so much to get employment as to get my final discharge. The people said that no one that was discharged by them couldn't get no work unless they got their final discharge from the boss that they was working with. I said to them, "I heard, boss, no one can get employment unless they get their final discharge," and they said, "Yes, but the election is over now, and if you feel like working I will give you a dollar and a half, and fifteen cents an hour for overwork, provided you take an oath to vote with us. All those that are working with us now have promised me already that they are going to vote with us in time to come. That is the reason I give them work again; and if you want work I will give you a dollar and a half a day and fifteen cents for over-time in the night."

Q. What did you tell him?—A. I says, "I can't do that, neither, sir. It is my liberty, and I am going to exercise it to the best of my ability." I said, "If you can't give me employment for less than that, I will take the will for the deed."

Q. What you mean by a final discharge is a recommendation, or character certificate?—A. I wanted a final discharge, and if he felt disposed to give me a recommendation, he might do so. He said to me then: "Any time you want a recommendation I will give it to you, and your discharge." I told him, "Well, I will call around for it to-morrow." He said, "I will let you have it now if you want it." So he give it to me, and I said, "I am very much obliged to you, sir." He signed that recommendation for me in order for me to go around to my friends and get work.

Q. Did he say anything to you about his obligations as to employing men?—A. He never told me nothing at all about his particular obligations, except so far as he stated that he was compelled to do so according to his obligations.

Q. Tell us what he said to you as to his own duty?—A. He said that "any man that don't vote on our side we has to discharge them, and we is compelled to do it."

Q. Did he tell you how he was compelled?—A. He never told me how he was compelled. He told me that the party that he belongs to, according to that party he was compelled to discharge all that he had in his employ that didn't vote with him.

Q. Did he say how he was compelled?—A. No, sir, he never told me how he was compelled.

Q. Did he tell you that he had taken an oath?—A. No, sir; but he wanted me to take an oath to go with that party.

Q. Have you had employment since?—A. I had one day's employment on the rallying committee of the republican party, and five hours' work by Mr. Michael Pringle.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRAN:)

Q. How long had you worked for Mr. Williman?—A. I worked for him from the 1st of July to the last of September.

Q. What were you doing there?—A. I was doing a little of everything; sorting all the market-cotton, and working on the press. I was there right steady all the time, and Mr. Williman wasn't there all the time.

Q. Who owns the press?—A. Mr. Barnwell and some others; I can't tell you who all owns it.

Q. Then Mr. Williman is an agent?—A. Yes, sir; and superintendent.

Q. How many negroes are employed there altogether?—A. Between thirty and thirty-five.

Q. Did Mr. Williman tell you when he got to talking with you about how the State had been governed by a lot of thieves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you these people were stealing the public money?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that business men and business interests would be broken up and destroyed unless there was good government in South Carolina; that the governor that controlled it then was not fit to control it? Did he not tell you if all the business was broken up there would be no employment for anybody, white or black?—A. No, sir; he never said white nor black. He said the democrats gives employment, and unless we came on their side and deserted the carpet-baggers we never would get good government.

Q. He did not compel you to vote anyway? He left it to your own free choice?—A. He didn't compel me, because he couldn't.

Q. He did not try to?—A. He tried to use compelling on me by trying to persuade me.

Q. But he only tried to persuade you by arguing with you?—A. O, he tried to persuade me that way, of course.

Q. Well, now, how many men were discharged with you?—A. As near as I can guess, about fifteen.

Q. How many men of those who were discharged are now back at work?—A. I can't tell particular; about five or six of them went back, and they are there now. They was discharged the same night with me; but those men are employed back there now because they can't do without them.

Q. Do you say that Mr. Williman wanted you to take an oath?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you to hold up your hand and be sworn?—A. He said this to me: "There's a list coming around here and I want all that is employed by us to take the oath, and those that don't we'll discharge them."

Q. Are those the words he used?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say any more than that?—A. He said a great deal more than that, but I don't recollect it.

Q. You were employed by the republican rallying-committee on the day of the election?—A. After I was discharged.

Q. How much did the rallying-committee pay you a day?—A. The rallying-committee didn't pay me anything, not yet, but they made a promise to pay.

Q. How much?—A. Two dollars. I didn't do that for the money, but I did it to secure my rights.

Q. But you got them to promise you $2?—A. I didn't ask them to do it; they made me that promise. If a man promises to do anything for me, and if he don't do it, he just makes a falsehood of his own self.

Q. How many days did you work for the rallying-committee?—A. One.

Q. Did you ever go to them and tell them that you did not want them to pay you, that you did it for love?—A. No, sir; I never told anyone that I didn't want any money, but I would tell the opposite party that I didn't want no money.

Q. Were you ever a member of the Union League?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever take an oath to support the republican party?—A. I swore the last time.

Q. When did you take an oath that you would support the republican party?—A. About three months ago.

Q. Who did you take the oath before?—A. Before Lieutenant-Governor Gleaves.

Q. And you swore before him that you would support the republican party?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Where was the oath administered to you?—A. Down in Archdale street, across town, in our ward meeting.

Q. How many other negroes took the oath there?—A. So many that I couldn't commence to tell you; over six hundred, white and colored.

Q. How many white men?—A. More than I can remember. I aint got no particular remembrance of it.

Q. How many negroes?—A. Over six hundred. It is more than that, because they have had to take that oath every meeting that they called. Every meeting that was called was open for new members every night till the election.

Q. And then they had to take an oath to support the republican party?—A. O, yes, sir. They were not compelled, but they were asked.

Q. What was the oath; what did you swear?—A. The oath was this: "You do solemnly swear to protect and defend the constitution of the republican party, so help you God;" and I forget; there was some other things, such as don't give out no secretness of this club, but something or 'nother of that kind; I couldn't give it exactly, but it is something just that way.

Q. It was, in substance, that you would vote the republican ticket and do all you could to support the republican cause?—A. Yes, sir; that was as I understood it.

Q. You understood from the oath that when you took it you would be bound to vote the republican ticket, and you would be bound to do whatever you could for the republican cause?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that there were a great many negroes that were sworn in the same way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Every negro that came to the club would have to sign this oath?—A. I didn't say that they would have to sign this oath, but they signed the constitution.

Q. Did most of the negroes in Charleston belong to these clubs?—A. The majority of them did.

Q. Did all of these republican clubs have the same kind of an oath?—A. It is very likely that all had the same oath. I never visited all the ward meetings. I visited wards 2, 3 and 4, and they all had the same oath.

Q. There was also a provision in the oath that you would not betray any of the secrets of the club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under this oath that you took you would have felt yourself bound to vote for any person who might have been nominated on the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It did not make any difference who it was?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Was not that part of the oath?—A. Yes, sir; all the nominees of the republican party. We made up our minds to vote the straight ticket and all the names on that ticket.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRAN:)

Q. You say that the lieutenant-governor was there?—A. Yes, sir; he administered the oath.

Q. How many negro men were there connected with your club?—A. I can't remember exactly, but according to the number which was registered there in the ward, it run up between six hundred and seven hundred.

Q. And every one of those six or seven hundred men took the same oath that you did?—A. Yes, sir; he took the same oath in my presence every time that I was there.

Q. They would not allow any one to belong to the club unless he took that oath?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were these meetings held in secret?—A. No, sir; they were public meetings. Anybody could come, but if they didn't feel a desire to take any part with us, he was requested to go out. He could come in as a visitor, but when the time came for particular business we asked him to go out. When we got through initiating new members, then we opened the door and they came in again.

Q. What was the initiation?—A. Only to take that oath.

Q. What was the nature of the business what was done in these clubs?—A. Why, the business that was done in this club was only to state who the officers, &c., should be whom you got to vote for, and to not let any member go out on the street and have any public discussion about what took place in the club.

Q. You were not allowed to tell outside that you took the oath?—A. You could speak about taking the oath, but you wasn't to tell what the oath was.

Q. Who was the president of your club?—A. The president was Aaron Williams.

Q. Was he a white or a colored man?—A. He was a white man.

Q. What was his business?—A. I don't know his business.

Q. Is he in office?—A. No, sir; he didn't occupy any position in this city.

Q. Have you worked any since you were discharged, except the day that you worked for the rallying committee?—A. I worked five hours one afternoon.

Q. Who was that for?—A. That was for a Mr. Michael, on the Southern wharf where the Dictator, the Florida boat, lands.

Q. Is Mr. Michael a democrat?—A. I don't know whether he is a democrat or republican.

Q. Do you know of a great many republican negroes in Charleston working for democrats?—A. Yes, sir; there are a great many working for them now.

Q. You never heard any oath administered to these men since the election? You never saw any white men administer it?—A. You never took an oath, but they wanted you to take an oath.

Q. That one man?—A. Those three that I went to.

Q. Did they want you to take it?—A. No, sir; they only spoke to me concerning it; but my employer did, and I said to him that he couldn't get my vote if he was to give me five thousand dollars cash in my hand and twenty dollars a day. He said, "No intimidation; no intimidation."

Q. You would not violate this oath that you took in this club if a man came to you and gave you a hundred dollars a day?—A. Not for a thousand dollars a day. According to the oath they couldn't do anything to you; but at the same time to be truthful as a truthful man I wouldn't take two thousand dollars a day.

Q. In other words, in taking this oath that the lieutenant-governor had administered to you, you felt as a matter of conscience that you could not vote anything but the republican ticket without violating your oath and violating your conscience?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Mr. Williman, with whom you worked, was a democrat?—A. I can't say he is a democrat, but according to his expressions towards me I announce him a democrat.

Q. He gave you when you left, though, a recommendation as a good republican?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, do you know that it is the custom among democrats here to employ only those persons who will vote with them; is there any such custom as that?—A. O, yes, sir; I know it is.

Q. You said a while ago that you knew a great many democrats who employ a great many republicans.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You express your republican sentiments pretty strong everywhere you go?—A. If I am in my house with an individual by myself, of course I suggest the matter.

Q. Suppose you were to go out to look for hands, which would you prefer to employ, republicans or democrats?—A. I would do according to what I thought best; I would employ both.

Q. Do you not think a man has a right to employ anybody he pleases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you not think that you had a right to employ anybody you please to work for you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you pleased to employ a republican you would not think a democrat had any right to object, would you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not concede the same right to every other man?—A. Of course they have the same right; but, as I said afore, I would employ both.

Q. But suppose you would only want one hand, would you give the preference to a republican?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would not your oath in that society require that?—A. My oath doesn't come upon my business relations.

Q. Suppose when you went into that society and took that oath you swore to stand by your party and support all its candidates, you had come out and employed democrats to work for you, what do you think your society people would have said to you?—A. That was the principle of that society. That club took an oath to support all the nominees on the republican ticket.

Q. When you took that oath were your doors open?—A. When the oath was administered to the new members they always closed the doors and asked all who was in there who wasn't members to go out.

Q. Then it was a secret business when you came to take the oath?—A. Yes, sir. If you was a member of any other ward meeting, of course you could remain there. That's how it was.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. How long was this oath to bind you?—A. I am under the impression that it was just for this campaign.

By Mr. JONES.

Q. What was the name of that society?—A. Well, we called it the Hayes and Wheeler Unknown Club. That meant that they was to tell nothing at all about our secrets to the opposite party.

Q. When were you at Mr. Stone's? Were you there yesterday or to-day?—A. Yes, sir; I was there about half past 11 o'clock to-day.

LAZARUS DRAYTON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live on the sea-shore.

Q. In what parish?—A. Christ Church, at Four Mile precinct.

Q. What is your business?—A. Farm-laborer.

Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-four years old on the 4th of this last July gone.

Q. Were you at the polls in that parish on last election day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hold any office or have anything to do with the election?—A. I was a manager, sir.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. I went there about half-past 4 o'clock in the morning.

Q. Did you stay all day?—A. Yes, sir; that was my business.

Q. Will you please to tell the committee what transpired there during the day relating to the order or disorder of the people; how did the people behave themselves there during the day?—A. Very good, both republican and democrat; better than they ever did at that precinct before.

Q. Did anybody bear arms?—A. Not one that day.

Q. How many colored people were there?—A. There were four hundred and fifty-four colored people, and thirty-one white; and sixteen of them voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Four hundred and fifty-four colored people there all day?—A. They didn't continue there all day. There was four hundred and eighty-five votes polled there that day, republican and democrat.

Q. Just state what occurred there during the day?—A. There was no violence between the two parties. There was a little cross-talk in our own party, but it soon stopped; there was no harm done, no striking nor no threatening. Some of the rest of them got after one man who tried to cut our ticket, and made a little talk, but there was nothing done.

Q. Was anybody prevented from voting just as he pleased?—A. None at all, sir.

Q. Was there any complaint made by anybody to you as a manager, that men could not vote as they pleased?—A. Not one, sir.

Q. Were there any women there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. I don't know exactly, sir; they came passing backwards and forwards, and some staid there nearly all day.

Q. Had they any arms or clubs of any kind?—A. None at all.

Q. Were the white men armed?—A. If they were I never see them, sir.

Q. Did any colored men vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; there was fifteen.

Q. Did they vote openly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did other men see them?—A. Yes, sir; other men see them, and knew their names, too.

Q. And nobody interfered with the democrats, white or black, in regard to the votes they cast?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (MR. COCHRANE:)

Q. You were a manager at the poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your duty required you to keep in the house, did it not?—A. Yes, sir; right in the house.

Q. You staid in the house all day, did you?—A. Very near, except any particular business took me out.

Q. Well, how long were you out at one time?—A. I couldn't stay out at the highest over fifteen minutes.

Q. Take all the time that you were out all day and how much would it make?—A. Well, about three-quarters of an hour, I guess.

Q. You were attending to your duties during the time you were in the house?—A. Yes, sir; I was attending to my duties.

Q. Then the greater part of the day you do not know what was going on outside?—A. I know whatever was done right there at the house.

Q. If you were inside the house attending to your duties, you do not know what men might have been doing that were out of your sight?—A. I wouldn't swear to it.

Q. What kind of a building was it that the voting took place in?—A. It was a school-house, sir.

Q. Then when you say that you saw no disorder and heard no threats, you speak of the time you were out?—A. Taking all the time together.

Q. That was the time when you would have an opportunity of knowing what was going on outside?—A. The position of the people was fixed towards the swamp. Two roads comes right up to the house, and I voted the men right in the front door, and staid in the house and kept them from crowding me, and I stood at the door in order that I might see right through there and see what happened at the house.

Q. You stood at the door for the purpose of seeing what was happening outside?—A. No, not for that purpose. I stood at the door for the purpose of seeing the voting. I didn't tend to the box, I was right to the door.

Q. I understand that; but there were a great many people at the side and back of the house, were there not?—A. There was a swamp at the rear of the house.

Q. Was there not some ground between the school-house and the swamp?—A. A little space of ground where the people would go out to do their business.

Q. Give us the names of the colored men who voted the democratic ticket.—A. I can't remember all their names now, but they voted there and voted publicly.

Q. If you were a manager of that election and if you saw all of the negroes who voted the democratic ticket, and they voted an open ticket so that every one might know what they voted, I want you to name to me the negroes who voted the democratic ticket.—A. I can't remember them all, sir.

Q. Can you not give me the name of a single negro who voted the democratic ticket?—A. One man was named Brown, one was named Gardling Edwards. I knew the rest of them, but I have forgotten them all.

Q. Can you give me the name of any man who voted the democratic ticket at those polls except Brown and Edwards?—A. No, sir; I can't. I don't remember them now.

Q. Did you belong to any colored club out there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you belong to a colored club in Charleston?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you belong to a colored club any place?—A. No way. I belong to the church.

Q. Were you at the office of Mr. Stone, the lawyer, in the city here?—A. Yes, sir; I was there.

Q. Who notified you to go there?—A. The clerk.

Q. Mr. Stone's clerk?—A. The clerk of the court told me that there was a gentleman hunting for me to give me the summons, and he told me that that was the place to go to get it. He told me the marshal was hunting for me.

Q. Did you see Mr. Stone there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a talk with Mr. Stone?—A. I gave him my advice; all I knew about it.

Q. What did Mr. Stone tell you about what you would be asked when you came here?—A. He didn't tell me nothing about it.

Q. What year were you born in?—A. In 1842.

Q. What month?—A. July the 4th.

Q. Did you talk with Mr. Stone about what year you were born in?—A. No, sir; I had no reason to tell him about what year I was born in.

Q. Did he ask you how old you were?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. Have you got a record of your birth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is the record of your birth?—A. I keep it in the Bible of my father.

Q. Did you see any of the negroes about the polls with clubs or sticks?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any with clubs. Of course I see some carry sticks backwards and forwards, but no more than usual.

Q. Well, sir, how many of them had sticks; half of them?—A. Sometimes you might meet a few. None of the old men had any, but some of the young men might have had a few sticks.

Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks?—A. I never seen none.

Q. Did you say there were not any bayonets or sticks there?—A. No, sir; I would swear to it.

Q. Did the negroes have guns about the polls?—A. Not one that I see there that day.

Q. Did they have any in the evening?—A. Not till after six o'clock.

Q. How long after the polls closed did you see these guns?—A. Maybe some four or five hours.

Q. Were they not there at 4 or 5 or 6 o'clock?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were not the men there with guns just after the polls closed?—A. As soon as the polls closed my attention was taken up in counting the votes.

FRANK RICHARDSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Saint Andrews Parish.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. About ten years. I moved into Saint Andrews Parish in 1865.

Q. At what precinct do you vote?—A. I vote at the Red-Top church.

Q. What is the Red-Top church?—A. It is a building with a red top.

Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-two years of age.

Q. What is your business?—A. Planting, sir.

Q. Had you any office or special duty to perform at the last election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you please to state to the committee what you know about any fracas or quarrel or trouble that occurred at the Red-Top church poll during that day?—A. I was there at the time when April Small and Grant had some trouble.

Q. What time did you get to the polls?—A. At the time the polls opened.

Q. What time did this trouble occur between Grant and Small?—A. Early in the day.

Q. Tell us what it was.—A. As far as I knew about it, Grant was accusing Small of stealing a check from him, and they had a contradiction of that till they got to fussing, and after that Drayton told them they must go off; and so they went off, talking, and talking, and talking; after that they commenced to talk very loud, and he thought they would have a fuss, and he said that was no place to have a fuss, and so they went away.

Q. What was Drayton?—A. I believe he was deputy marshal there at the poll.

Q. What else do you know about it?—A. After they got away from the poll they got on to short talking, and afterward Grant drew a revolver on Small.

Q. Did you see this?—A. Yes, sir; I see that myself, sir.

Q. How far did they have to go away?—A. As near as I can guess, about three-quarters of a mile; then when Grant drew his revolver on Small Small closed on Grant, and in the time when he first closed on him then the row commenced.

Q. Was either Grant or Small thrown?—A. Both of them binded and went down, and then the crowd collected quite big; after the crowd gathered there one crowd was standing for Small and the other one was standing for Grant, and they commenced to mix up, and had a general row.

Q. At the time that this difficulty began, near the polls, was there anything said about any other subject besides the check?—A. No other subject, sir.

Q. Nothing said about politics?—A. Nothing on political affairs at all.

Q. Nothing said about "you are a democrat, or a republican?"—A. No, sir.

Q. How was it when they met three-quarters of a mile from the poll; were there no politics talked there?—A. No, sir; it was about the check.

Q. Were you at the polling during the whole day?—A. I was at the polls twice that day.

Q. How much of the time were you away, do you think?—A. I was away about an hour.

Q. What was the behavior of the voters at that poll?—A. The people didn't have no fuss at all round about the poll, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody assaulted because he was going to vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any people there with arms—muskets, guns, clubs, or sticks?—A. I saw them with walking-sticks.

Q. What do you call a walking-stick?—A. A common stick about the size of my thumb. Some of them mens has got to walk with a stick as a balance, like.

Q. Were there any women there?—A. A few womens was there. They had some biscuits to sell to the men.

Q. Was there any military company there?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. When your attention was first attracted to Grant and Small they were talking together at the polls about this check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Drayton came up to them and told them to move on, not to crowd up the place there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then they walked away together, three-quarters of a mile down the road from the poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go with them?—A. I didn't go till I hear the lamentation of the row, and after that some of the boys says, "Them boys is going to have a row there;" and of course Grant and Small both being friends of mine I didn't want for to see any fuss.

Q. Where were you when you heard the lamentation first?—A. I was off from the poll, where those womens were selling some biscuit.

Q. Near to the poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far had Grant and Small gone by this time?—A. They just went a piece down the road.

Q. How far; half a mile?—A. No, sir.

Q. A quarter of a mile?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they out of sight?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many people were with you when you went down?—A. Several of us went together.

Q. How many were there when the fight commenced?—A. It was hard to tell.

Q. A great many were there?—A. Not when they first commenced talking, but after the fuss commenced they gathered there.

Q. Small says that there was a large crowd followed him down, and they were there when the fight commenced; now is he right about it?—A. There was a very large crowd.

Q. Were there fifty people?—A. I couldn't tell.

Q. Were a hundred people there when the fight commenced?—A. It would be hard work to tell that without I was to count it.

Q. You and Small have been talking about this in the hall?—A. About what, sir.

Q. About what Small was going to testify to before the committee?—A. No, sir; he didn't.

Q. Did you and he have any talk at all out there in the room?—A. No, sir; I had no talk with Small, sir.

Q. Did you have any talk with anybody?—A. Of course those men sitting around the fire and myself talked together.

Q. You had no talk at all as to what other witnesses and yourself were to swear to?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say that Grant drew the pistol, and just as he drew the pistol Small ran in and closed with him, and they both went down together; now, who was on top?—A. Of course Small was; he is a stronger man than Grant, and I suppose somehow or 'nother he tripped Grant up.

Q. Is not Grant considered a pretty strongman out there?—A. No, sir; not more than commonly.

Q. Do you know how tall he is?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know how much he weighs?—A. No, sir; I don't know.

Q. Well, Small fell on top when they tussled together?—A. I was so dissatisfied about the row that I don't know who was on top.

Q. Did you have a stick in your hand?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you have in your hands?—A. I had my hands in my pocket, sir.

Q. Did you have a knife?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have a razor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which one of the crowd was it that cut Grant?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Which one was it that struck him on the head?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Which one of them was it that beat him with a club when he was down?—A. I don't know. It was hard work to tell them.

Q. You did not see Small hit at all?—A. No, sir; I never see him hit.

Q. Did Small have a club in his hand?—A. He had a stick, but not a club.

Q. Did you see him hit Grant with a stick?—A. No, sir; I never see them hit; I see them when they binded.

Q. You saw the revolver and then you saw Small run in and catch him, and Grant got hold of him and they had a struggle, and they went down together, but you did not see any blows struck by anybody?—A. It was hard to tell in that crowd who stroke.

Q. Did you see Small strike anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many men were in the Grant crowd, as you call it?—A. It was hard whiles to tell.

Q. About how many men were there?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Were there five?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Were there five hundred?—A. I couldn't tell, sir.

Q. Were there a thousand there?—A. I couldn't give you an idea unless I counted them. I know there were mens there.

Q. Can you give us the name of any man that was in what you call Grant's crowd?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Brown up in the loft of the church?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he up there at all?—A. I don't know nothing about it, sir.

Q. Did you see any guns about that place during the day?—A. No, sir. One old man did have a gun there, but Roberson told him that he mustn't bring the gun on the ground because he violated the law; and he left the gun agin the cart where the womens sold biscuit till he voted, and then he took it and went on home.

Q. Are you a member of a militia company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the militia company there during the day?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any heavy clubs at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any knives?—A. No, sir.

Q. Pistols?—A. No, sir.

Q. Stones?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any women?—A. There were a few womens there, sir.

Q. How many?—A. I don't know how much there was.

Q. Did they have any sticks?—A. No, sir; they had nothing but what they had to sell in their baskets.

Q. Had they any knives?—A. No, sir; I aint seed them with any, sir; I aint seed them with anything but biscuits and apples.

Q. Did you hear anybody swearing about there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not hear an oath during the whole day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any threats of any kind?—A. No, sir; I heard no threats.

Q. Did you hear anybody saying anything about democrats or republicans, or about democratic tickets or republican tickets?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or how was this or that man going to vote?—A. No, sir; I never heard no such things as them. I 'tended to my own business.

Q. You did not hear a word said on either side?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see republican negroes trying to give tickets to any other negroes?—A. I don't know what you mean. No, sir.

Q. It was peaceful and quiet there at the poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No loud talking at all?—A. Yes, sir; joking and going on.

Q. It was the quietest election you ever had there, was it?—A. No, sir; I can't say it was the quietest.

Q. Was it as quiet as any other election?—A. Yes, sir; the same as usual.

Q. Is it usual for you to have the same kind of actions there always as you had this time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Peter Lucas at all that day?—A. Yes, sir; I seen him.

Q. Were you with Small when he and Lucas had the fight?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see that fight?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Lucas whipped by any negroes?—A. No, sir, I never seen him.

Q. Where did you see Lucas?—A. I seen Lucas at the polls.

Q. You did not see him after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I seen him just after he went away from the poll and when he came back.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Was it before or after the fight?—A. The first time I seen him was before the fight with Grant.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. When did you see him the second time?—A. The second time was after the fight with Grant.

Q. How long afterward?—A. I really couldn't tell.

Q. You did not see him down at the fight?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see Brown down at the fight?—A. No, sir; there was such a crowd there that I couldn't see him.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did you ever take an oath before this time?—A. I was before a trial-justice one time, sir.

Q. You know the nature of an oath?—A. A man takes an oath to speak the truth.

Q. Well, sir, do you not know that Grant was cursed there that day and beaten because he was a democrat?—A. No, sir; I don't know that.

Q. Did you hear anybody call him a "damn democrat son of a bitch"?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear that.

Q. Did not politics at the voting at the Red-Top church run pretty high?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear much noise and loud talking?—A. No, sir; they went on right peaceable the same as they always did.

Q. You did not hear Grant abused at all because he was a democrat?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw all the fuss between Grant and Small?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which got the best of it?—A. I couldn't tell sir.

Q. Who had the most friends?—A. That was hard for I to tell, sir.

Q. How many were in Small's crowd?—A. I really couldn't tell.

Q. Were there a hundred—or fifty?—A. Many times a man gets into a row and he don't know one thing from 'nother, and that's the way with me.

Q. Are you a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is Grant?—A. I don't know, sir, what he is.

Q. Did they say to you that he was a democrat?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you never hear him say to anybody else that he was a democrat?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what Small is?—A. Yes, sir; I know what he is.

Q. What is he?—A. He is a republican, sir.

Q. You never heard any excitement there that day about democrats and republicans at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you vote?—A. Yes, sir; I voted.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Did you ever belong to any republican club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever take an oath to support the republican ticket?—A. No, sir; I never taken an oath; it was just my feeling. I know I can't be a democrat, because I'm too black to be one.

Q. Did you ever take an oath or make any pledge that you would vote the republican ticket straight?—A. No, sir; but I took an oath at the polls, of course.

Q. Did you ever take an oath before you went to the polls?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did Lucas come back to the poll after his fight with Small?—A. Yes, sir; Lucas was coming from his house towards the poll when I left, but I didn't stay there till he left poll; I went on about my business.

Q. You saw him when he was coming from the house?—A. I saw him when he was coming from his house down the road.

Q. Was he hurt?—A. No, sir; he didn't had the fuss then.

CHARLES H. SIMONTON sworn and examined :

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I am forty-seven.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I reside in Charleston.

Q. How long have you resided in Charleston?—A. I was born and raised here; I have resided here all my life.

Q. What position did you hold during the late campaign?—A. I was chairman of the county democratic committee.

Q. Will you now state, if you please, the manner of conducting the campaign by the democracy under your leadership; whether there was any intimidation by the colored men of their colored brethren, and any other matter which you may think important in the premises?—A. Well, sir, as soon as I was appointed the chairman of the executive committee, being well aware of the enormous majority in color against us in this county, I saw that the only possible chance for the democratic party was by a policy of conciliation, to endeavor to win over the men to our side. I was very much encouraged in the conclusion to which I had arrived by the fact that there were already in Charleston a large number of colored people whom we know as free people, who had always been free, the descendants of free persons, who were strongly in sympathy with the democratic party, and whose aid I certainly could calculate upon in carrying out this purpose which had been devised. I made every effort, therefore, to reach the colored people in their strongholds, their societies and associations, and at one time I feel perfectly satisfied that I met with considerable success.' I found, however, that after we had made a considerable impression that influences were brought to bear upon the colored people both through their religious societies and their civil societies which it was exceedingly difficult to meet. They were threatened with ostracism in both of these classes of associations. The men whom I had working for me belonging to the church were debarred the privilege of the church and deprived of the right of communion, and in several cases expelled from the church, and in civil societies the same means were wielded. I then thought that possibly they might be persuaded by means of argument, listening to the expression of our kind feeling towards them. I desired to satisfy them that the great apprehension which seemed to exist in their minds that the democratic party was determined to deprive them of their privileges, and especially of their freedom, could be answered. In order to carry out that purpose I sought an interview with the chairman of the republican executive committee of this county and proposed to him that in all of the appointments which he had previously made for discussions by one party in this county we should be allowed to join, and that these discussions, instead of being ex parte, should be joint discussions. My relations with the chairman of that committee, Mr. Bowen, are of somewhat a pleasant character. He is the sheriff of this county, and I am a practicing lawyer here, and our official relations had always been pleasant. We had a frank, full conversation in regard to this matter, and in it we agreed that the joint discussion should go on; that I should be informed as to every meeting which the republicans were to have, and that at all those meetings I would be allowed to attend with such speakers as I thought proper, and the time should be divided. Both of us concurred in the propriety of this rule, that those meetings should be attended by none but unarmed men. Owing to the fact that the white population of this county is exceedingly sparse, Mr. Bowen also concurred in the suggestion that I made to him, that I should send up with our speakers several white persons from the city, who should be, as it were, their supporters in the audience, applaud them when the time came, and call attention to the strong points; but both of us concurred in the agreement that neither of these gentlemen that went up should go with any arms at all. Under this agreement these joint discussions were held. We attended five, I think. The first joint discussion was, I believe, at Mount Pleasant, across from the city of Charleston, and the discussion was allowed owing to the personal influence of Mr. Bowen over the large mass of colored people who had gathered together. We had another discussion at the Red-Top church. Owing to the same influence of Mr. Bowen our speakers got a hearing. Another discussion was had up on John's Island, but there the spirit of opposition which had developed itself in the first two discussions became exceedingly violent. There were armed colored people about the speaking-place, and although no actual violence was offered to our speakers, there were a great many threats of violence, a good deal of open denunciation of the democratic party, and declarations that colored men should not belong to it at all; that no colored man who was true to his race would join it. Our next discussion was on Edisto Island. We went up with several white speakers and one or two colored speakers, with a band of music. A very large concourse of negroes assembled, and although there was some tumult when the democrats commenced to speak, yet Bowen was able to suppress it; but as soon as our colored speakers sought a hearing the negroes became very outrageous indeed and would not listen to them; just abandoned the stand. I had strictly enforced the agreement that had been made between Bowen and myself with regard to no armed men going; and the next place that they met was at Calnhoy, which resulted in a very disastrous collision with the white men, who had unfortunately gone there unarmed.

Q. How many white men were killed there?—A. Seven or eight, I think, and some fifteen wounded.

Q. What was done with the bodies, if anything?—A. Well, I did not see them myself. I understood that the bodies were mutilated in a very savage way. In consequence of this unfortunate result of the Calnhoy meeting I made up my mind to stop these joint discussions, feeling that it was impossible to restrain the violence of the colored people, although I had the utmost confidence in Mr. Bowen's willingness that the discussions should go on, and therefore the next day the discussion which was to have come off at James Island was countermanded by me. Before countermanding it I sought an interview with Mr. Bowen himself in order to give him the conclusion at which I had arrived, and Bowen earnestly urged me to see every democrat that I possibly could and prevent them from going over to James Island. He said that he found himself perfectly powerless to carry out the contract that he had made with me, and that if they went there it would be at the imminent risk of their lives. At the same time that I saw Bowen I met a man by the name of Thompson who is now one of the county commissioners elected by the republican party, and was then a candidate himself; a man who represents the black element among the republicans.

Q. Is he a negro?—A. He is a negro; he is contradistinguished from the colored mulatto element, that which is a mixture of white—Thompson is the representative of the black people. While I was discussing with Bowen and suggesting to him that although the times were very much disturbed before, and the Cainhoy massacre was producing an immediately bad effect, that we might at some future day not far distant renew these joint discussions and carry them on in the up part of the country, Thompson came forward in a most excited manner and said to me, "I tell you, sir, that you must discontinue these joint discussions altogether. Our people are not going to endure it any more. It is impossible for you to have democrats and republicans mixed up together, or white men attempting to make colored democrats." That experience was enough for me, and I concluded that we would have no more, and so reported to the committee and received their sanction to the conclusion at which I arrived—that we would have no more joint discussions at all, and we had none. Being deprived of this means of reaching the minds of the negroes, I then addressed myself to seeing if I could not personally bring some influence to bear upon the leaders in the various parts of the county. Charleston County, under the old system existing before the war, was divided into eight parishes. Each parish was a separate election district, sent its own members to the house of representatives and its own senators to the senate, and it still keeps up that political division; and among these old parishes, as we call them, are found leaders of the voters. Well, I think that I was in personal communication with the leaders in every one of these parishes, having personal interviews with the large majority of them. I found that they were very kindly disposed—at first—very kindly.

Q. Were these all among the colored people?—A. Yes; I doubt whether there was any break in the whites. I found they were very kindly disposed at first. They thought that we were contending only for honest government in the State; that we were trying to see if they would not assist us in driving away from the strongholds of power men who had settled among us, as we thought, simply for office, and they were very kindly disposed, indeed. I received promises of support from nearly every man that I talked to, and those promises were kept up until the Sunday before the election. I do not know what influence was used on that day; that is, I do not know of my own knowledge what influence was used. I do know that the very strongest efforts were made in every pulpit and county, and on Sunday evening and Monday nearly every one of these men either communicated to me in person or sent me a message that he did not dare to carry out these promises; that it was as much as his life was worth.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Were these committee-men?—A. They were leaders in the precinct.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Well, sir, proceed.—A. Well, sir; the result of the election proved that the apprehensions were correct, because they voted in a solid mass against us. The votes of this county were almost altogether upon the line of freemen on one side and freedmen on the other. Those who had been emancipated by the war went against us almost in a solid body and those whose condition was not altered by the war voted with us. At every poll from which I heard during that day there was no difficulty at all, and white men and men who had been free voted the democratic ticket; there was no trouble about it. But in every instance in which a freedman attempted to vote he was resisted and prevented, and either did not vote at all or voted the republican ticket. We had as a candidate upon our ticket the clerk of the court, a gentleman of the name of Jack Williman, who had been associated with the republican party when he was nominated by our convention. He is personally a warm friend of mine, and I was exceedingly anxious for his election, and I saw in his behalf a large number of colored people from John's Island, Wadmclaw Island, and Edisto Island, who were his earnest friends and supporters, but supporting no other part of our ticket at all. I furnished them with tickets with Williman's name upon them, and gave them every facility that possibly could be furnished them for supporting Williman, and not one of those men voted for him, because Williman got precisely the same vote through all those portions of the county (which are very strong portions of the county) as the other men upon the ticket, not excluding the most objectionable democrats. Not one of those men who were desirous to vote for him was allowed to do so.

Q. The ticket which you furnished was a straight republican ticket except that it had his name on it?—A. Yes, sir. He was elected by the republican party before.

Q. What in your judgment would have been the result of the election if there had been no intimidation and the negroes had been allowed to vote as they saw fit, and according to their own judgment?—A. I think, sir, that if this extraordinary influence to which I have referred had not been brought to bear upon the colored people that the worst result for us would have been a majority in favor of the republican party of about from 2,000 to 2,500 votes in the county. I am satisfied that if we could have gone among them from the beginning and not been driven off by these discussions that we would have carried the county.

Q. Do you know many democratic negroes who voted the democratic ticket prior to the election and who were prevented at this election?—A. I can tell you this: I had in my possession lists of democratic colored clubs all over the county. There were three democratic clubs on John's Island, numbering in one club about forty-five, in another about sixty, and in another possibly about fifty, say one hundred and fifty in all. Well, they were in constant communication with me. I had no agency in getting up the clubs at all, but they had volunteered their services and had come over, and they saw me every day. Well, we got out of those clubs of one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty men 6 votes. There was a democratic club at the Red-Top church in Saint Andrews Parish, which at one time numbered over sixty-five. I don't think that we got 3 votes at the Red-Top church on the day of election. I know that the president of one of my clubs in Saint Andrews Parish was assaulted the Sunday before election and badly out up, and we had to vote him in Charleston.

Q. Who was that?—A. A man named Parker. We had in the parish of Christ church, where this little village of Mount Pleasant is situated, nearly seventy-five active men, co-operating with the democratic party—all colored men, and of those seventy-five we did not get twenty votes on the day of election. In Saint Thomas and Saint Dennis as far back as the month of June, I had a very active and lively democratic club that was increasing in its membership, but after the Cainhoy affair every man resigned and voted the republican ticket. In Saint James Santee, the outlying parish in this county, round a little village called McLellansville, we had a majority of voters who were avowed democrats. I had the parish thoroughly canvassed.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Do you remember how many voters there were in that parish?—A. I will not be positive, but I think there are from six to seven hundred, and we did not get a vote on the day of election.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE) :

Q. How many did you get in that parish?—A. We got white votes almost entirely. We did not get colored votes of any consequence.

Q. You think you had a majority of the colored men in that parish before the election?—A. I know we had. The kindest relations existed between the planters and employes in that county, and the planters every one of them made themselves very active indeed, and the most favorable results were expected. You may form some idea of our opinion of our strength among the colored people when I tell you that we were on the eve of making an arrangement with Mr. Bowen, who is exceedingly strong in the county, (and we believe that he would have carried it out,) by which almost the entire colored vote of the county outside of Charleston would have gone for us.

Q. I want to ask you whether you know of any system having been adopted by the whites to discharge colored men in their employ unless they agreed to vote the democratic ticket?—A. The matter was brought up in the committee of which I was a member. It had been suggested by one or two persons, and I think one of our newspapers, that no man should be employed unless he was a democrat. The question was propounded to us by the owner of a very large wharf-property, who employed a large number of negroes and who wanted from the committee an expression of their opinion with regard to that policy, and the committee, after a very full discussion, refused to countenance any policy of that kind.

Q. Do you know whether any such policy was adopted to any extent?—A. I think that such policy was inaugurated partially. Some gentlemen who employed negroes determined to employ none but negroes who promised to vote with them; but I am satisfied that it was not carried out to any extent at all. It was the result of individual action upon the part of some persons. I know that a large number of gentlemen adopted this policy; they endeavored to persuade their house-servants—their men-servants—to vote with us; and for that purpose I appointed a special committee of gentlemen outside of my own committee to thoroughly canvass the city and persuade men-servants who were with gentlemen to vote with us. In that case there was nothing more than persuasion. In that case the gentlemen would promise to go to the poll with the men-servants. In a great many instances there were refusals. In my own house there was a man between whom and myself there has existed the kindest of feelings, and he was spoken to on the day of the election. I think it was the most piteous scene I ever saw in my life. This servant is a thorough gentleman; his manners are just as good as those of any man you ever saw, and my wife said to him: "Colonel Simonton is a candidate for the senate, and you have been here so long with us that I take it for granted you will vote for him." Well, he hesitated, and then she turned to one of us and said: "Francis feels a little uneasy about voting. Go with him to the polls. I am satisfied that he will vote for us." The negro stood in the middle of the floor and the tears rolled down his cheeks as he replied: "Mrs. Simonton, I would die for master; I would give my wife and children up for him, but I dare not go out of this gate; it would be at the cost of my life;" and he burst in a flood of tears. I think, sir, that the policy that you speak of did not address itself at all to the sympathies of our community. I doubt whether you could have obtained anything like unity throughout our whole community in that way, and the best proof of it is that a body of men, numbering about seven hundred, that are called cotton-press men—longshore-men—who do all the stevedore-work and the manual labor about the wharves, who are as devoted a body of republicans as you ever saw, and who voted unanimously the republican ticket, are at this moment in the employment of the same persons who employed them before the elections, and their vote is as well known as my own in the community. I had an opportunity myself of advising a gentleman who has charge of Mr. Adger's wharves with reference to this same policy. Mr. Adger has four large wharves, and he does as much business as any-cotton factor in the city. This chief wharfinger came to me to consult me as to retaining a colored man who is an ardent republican. I asked him if he had anything to do with the King-street riot. He said no. I asked, "Is he a loud-mouthed politician, discussing on the wharf openly?" He said, "No; but he is an open and avowed republican, a bitter opponent of the democratic party;" and I advised him not to discharge him.

Q. I will ask you at this point if there were any republicans, loud-mouthed republicans, who were talking constantly and losing their time, who were discharged?—A. In some instances men were discharged who were connected openly with the riots that I have spoken of—men who openly and constantly express their sympathy with the people who were engaged in those riots and defended them. They were discharged not because they were republicans, but because we supposed they were endangering the peace of the community. I do not think if those riots had not taken place that you would have ever heard of any man's discharge because of his political sentiments.

Q. Do you know of any oath or any obligation having been taken or entered into by white men to discharge negroes from their employ save those who would vote the democratic ticket?—A. I know of none at all, and I do not believe that any ever existed. I believe that in individual instances men may have discharged their employes of either class for differing with them in politics.

Q. But you do not know and have not heard of obligations of any kind having been taken by white men to discharge any negro in their employ who might not have voted the democratic ticket?—A. No; this is the first time I have heard the thing suggested.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you know the population of Charleston and Charleston County?—A. It is very hard to tell, our census has been taken so badly.

Q. What is about the population?—A. I think it is about 45,000.

Q. What was the vote at the last election?—A. The entire vote was about 22,000; that is the entire vote of the county.

Q. I refer to the entire vote of Charleston and Charleston County.—A. I don't think it is more than 60,000, 65,000 probably, but that is only an estimate.

Q. Well, sir, what was the whole vote at the last election, city and county?—A. Between 21,000 and 22,000.

Q. Was not the republican vote about 15,000 and the democratic vote about 8,000?—A. Somewhere in that neighborhood, sir. I have no head for figures, and cannot remember them at all.

Q. Do you remember what the vote was two years ago, the entire vote?—A. I am afraid to answer that, sir. I think the proper vote of the county is about 17,000. I can furnish all that, because I have it among my papers at my office.

Q. Your attention had not been called to the extraordinary large vote according to the population at the last election?—A. O, yes, sir; I have always been satisfied that our vote was four or five thousand beyond its legitimate number.

Q. What led you to form that opinion?—A. The vast increase of the vote in the city over two years ago. I think that the legitimate vote of Charleston was thrown before 11 o'clock on the day of election, and that every other vote that went into the box after 11 o'clock was illegitimate. It is impossible to stop repeating in a population like ours.

Q. Why do you think it is impossible to stop the repeating?—A. Well, sir, if you have had much experience with colored men, you will know that you cannot tell one colored man from another, especially if you see him for the first time. You cannot tell a negro man from a negro woman if they are dressed in the same clothing.

Q. You think that is the reason chiefly?—A. That is one reason, and a very good reason. We have no check on that at all. There is no registration in this State to fix the residence of the voter, and then it is a class of population that floats from one ward to another.

Q. They are not required to vote in the same ward?—A. No, sir, they are not required to vote in the ward of their residence at all.

Q. Do you know of any boats passing repeatedly that day from Charleston here to the islands and up the river landings in the same county?—A. Early in the morning a very large number of voters, or rather a very large number of men who could vote, passed from Charleston and went over in Christ Church Parish across Cooper River. A large number came from the direction of James and John's Island in Saint Andrew's, on Ashley River, and if you were to examine the vote down in the last poll in this city at the Union Star Engine House in ward 2 you would find that an enormous vote was polled there early in the morning.

Q. Do you remember anything about the vote in regard to the number that was polled in that ward or the number of the residents in the ward?—A. I can furnish it; it is by no means the largest ward in the city. It is that portion of the city lying south of Queen street, where the Mills House was.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You have made no examination of what would be, in your judgment, the legal vote as compared with the vote that was actually given?—A. I compared the votes that had been cast in the county from 1868 to the present time as they were compiled by the newspaper, and came to the conclusion that 17,000 was the legitimate vote of the county.

Q. What would be the actual voting strength in comparison to the voting population of the county?—A. I cannot answer that with any positive certainty, sir; my conjecture would be about one-sixth.

Q. In regard to the practice of the people on the subject of employment, you spoke of some individual cases where references might have been given. Do you know of any public meetings in this city that have been held on that subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the county?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any other counties in this low country?—A. No, sir; I do not know anything of my own knowledge. There is an association here of working-men composed of white people and when you first spoke I thought possibly that they might have passed some resolution, but I don't remember it at all sir.

C. RICHARDSON MILES sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Forty-seven.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am a practicing lawyer in the city of Charleston, and have been practicing here for more than twenty years.

Q. Are you a resident of South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir; I have always lived here.

Q. Did you occupy any official position during the late campaign?—A. I was a member of the county executive committee.

Q. As a member of such committee did you become familiar with all matters connected with the canvass?—A. Quite so. I devoted my entire time to the canvass.

disposition continued, and manifested itself in a voluntary formation of democratic clubs among the colored people. There were a few, quite a small number, of colored men of position and influence here who had always voted with the conservative or democratic people in all our elections, and who had, at first, perhaps, met with some harshness from their own race, but who had been accepted as democrats and had ceased to have any annoyance on that ground. But it was very much wider spread than that. There was a very large number of colored men who had voted for their republicanism who were now anxious to affiliate with us, and who were now ready to enroll themselves in the democratic clubs, but the first requirement was that they should be assured of physical protection. They expressed extreme apprehension, especially out of the city, if they should enroll themselves in these democratic clubs; they were afraid of being maltreated.

Q. By whom?—A. By the colored republicans; their own republican party, and race, unless we could give them that assurance of protection. That matter was called very specially to my attention; so much so that I was the member of the committee that prepared and submitted to the committee an announcement to the colored people pledging our personal honor that we would give them all the protection that was in our power if they associated themselves with us. I think that Colonel Simonton has described much more fully than I could do the effect of that throughout the county. I think that what broke down or checked for the first time that disposition on the part of the colored people to enroll themselves (for it was growing and swelling as you always find those things; it was extending from the leading men to the subordinates, and they were getting a certain pride in the matter of membership in these clubs) was this: The first thing that militated against them was the proclamation of the governor ordering all organizations called rifle clubs to disperse, and treating as violators of law any bearing of arms publicly. I think from that time that the colored people lost heart and faith in the ability of the democrats to give them protection, because I think it is a matter capable of the most perfect demonstration that the order of the governor and the President, harsh as we considered it to be, was implicitly and absolutely obeyed. There was no violation of it in spirit or letter, and we therefore felt, and we recognized that these people felt, that they had not the same protection that they had before, because the militia of the State was composed exclusively of colored men. They retained their arms and carried them to the public meetings. I have myself been at a public meeting when the white men present had no arms visible and where the colored men marched up under arms. When the proposition was made to disarm them Bowen himself said they should march off the grounds. We said, "No; let them stay." We were afraid of no violence when we were in pursuit of a peaceable object.

I attended several of the joint discussions. There were several that my friend Colonel Simonton did not mention. I attended one at Strawberry, one at Wadmelow Island, and one at Charleston; I attended more than one, certainly two, in Saint Andrew's Parish, and perhaps others. Some of those were joint discussions, and some were invited by the democrats, no republicans participating. I can speak from my own observation and experience there that for the first time in this canvass the white people of the State had the ear and were gaining the confidence of the colored voters.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. For the first time since the war?—A. Yes, sir; since 1868. We were beginning to get more of their confidence, and this simple argument involved the whole thing: "You are obliged to live here, and we are obliged to live here; it is our interest to be friends; it is disastrous to be at enmity with each other." The argument which we at first met with was the apprehension that if the democrats succeeded they would be restored to slavery.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Just at that point I desire to ask you whether that line of argument was adopted to any extent by the negro orators and white orators upon the stump, the argument that if the colored people voted the democratic ticket they would be put back into slavery?—A. That did not prevail with the more intelligent men as speakers. While the mass of the colored people had the strong conviction that they would be put back into slavery if the democrats got into power, the more intelligent of them understood that their freedom was not dependent upon party; that it was guaranteed to them by the Constitution; that it could never be taken away; and they varied that. But I have myself heard them say that although it was true, as we said, that they could not be reduced to slavery, still, if the democrats got into power, they would make laws which would make their situation worse than if they were in slavery. One of their great bug-bears was that nobody could go anywhere or sell an egg without a ticket. I have heard that among the country people—the men and women. I have heard these men say, "We understand that if Mr. Hampton is governor nobody will get any work from white people; we don't know what is going to become of us." It was very strong in its influence.

Q. Do you know whether any appeal was made by republican orators to the negro women?—A. Not of my own knowledge. I never was present when any such appeal was made, but I have found at some of these islands a state of savagery. Wadmelaw is perhaps the nearest approach to savagery that I have ever experienced. It is true I was treated with civility; there was nothing like rudeness to me. Many of them came to me afterward and stated to me that they realized that what had been stated to them by the democrats was true, and that they had never heard any of them talk before, and showed themselves anxious to affiliate with us, and to form societies at these islands. I did encounter some violence among the women, but it was from the deep-seated conviction—one which was perfectly ineradicable—that there could not be such a thing as a negro democrat. He might be a traitor to his race, but a negro democrat was impossible. They did, in my hearing, use very harsh expressions at the idea of trying to persuade their husbands to become democrats, and so on.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. The negro women have rather an extraordinary influence over their husbands?—A. Yes, sir, I think they have; the sex generally has; and yet that is consistent with harsh treatment, sometimes, on the part of the husbands. They were more deeply imbued with the idea of race than the men were; that was the impression made upon me. If I were to describe in a single sentence what were the elements that controlled the negroes of Charleston County in voting with the republican party, I would say that it was the churches and the women.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :) :

Q. Those were the potent influences?—A. Yes, sir; those were the potent influences to the unreasoning minds of the race. I prepared a protest against the election in Charleston County, and I could read a sentence or two from that which would cover the ground on which we disputed the validity of the election. This protest is drawn as an indictment would be, and is as comprehensive as possible, and includes in itself all the precincts which we expected to have evidence about. It is as follows :

“That the said election held on said day is illegal and null and void, because—

“I. The whole of the said county of Charleston was so controlled by systematic intimidation and terrorism that no free opportunity was given to the qualified voters thereof to vote for the candidates they desired.

“II. At certain of the voting-precincts or polling-places in the said county, to wit: Wappetaw Church and Four-Mile Church, in the parish of Christ Church; Muster-House and New Hope Church, in the parish of Saint Thomas and Saint Dennis; Club-House, Red-Top Church, Cut Bridge, and Baptist Church, in the parish of Saint Andrew's; Pineville and Saint Stephen's Depot, in the parish of Saint Stephen's; Dartart's Creek, Thirty-Two-Mile House, and Board Church, in the parish of Saint James Santee; Black Oak, Strawberry, and Calamus Pond, in the parish of Saint John's Berkeley; Four-Mile House, Whaley's Church, Mount Holly, Sumnerville, and Hickory Bend, in the parish of Saint James Goose Creek; Calvary Church, Wright's Store, Andell's Store, Campbell's Church, Rushland, Camp-ground, and Enterprise, in the parish of Saint John's Colleton, armed and organized bodies of men, with muskets and bayonets, and in military discipline, paraded and formed around the polls, threatening and menacing with violence and death any voter who dared to vote the democratic ticket, on which tickets these petitioners were named as candidates for the aforesaid offices, and that the said armed bodies of men voted with arms in their hands, and so continued until the close of the election, by means of all which no fair election could be had, and the result of the election was thereby changed.

“That at the said precincts qualified voters who voted the democratic ticket, or expressed a desire or intention to do so, were beaten and cut and injured and threatened with violence and death, whereby large numbers who desired to vote said ticket were prevented from so doing, and the result of said election thereby changed.

“That at the aforesaid precincts, and also at the following, to wit, the Union Star Engine-house, ward No. 2; Inspection and Washington streets, ward No. 3; Hope Engine-house, ward No. 4; United Engine-house, ward No. 5; Washington Engine-house, ward No. 6; Niagara Engine-house, ward No. 8, large numbers of qualified voters who desired to vote said democratic ticket had said ticket taken away from them and other tickets forced into their hands, and were compelled by threats of violence to vote such tickets against their will and intention, whereby the result of said election was changed.

“That there were present at the aforesaid voting-precincts large numbers of persons claiming to be deputy sheriffs, and wearing badges so designating them, (such pretended deputy sheriffs having been appointed by the sheriff of the county in direct violation of law, and being without any lawful office or authority,) who, pretending to act under color of such office, did, by intimidation and threats of violence, prevent and stop many persons from voting the said democratic ticket, by which unlawful violence and intimidation of said pretended deputy sheriffs the result of the election was changed.

"That gross and unparalleled fraud was practiced in the casting of the vote of said county, large numbers of persons under age having been allowed by the managers to vote at every precinct, and many voters having illegally and fraudulently voted repeatedly at the different voting-precincts, the total vote in said county purporting to have been cast at said election amounting to 4,000, or more than there are qualified voters resident in said county, and that such fraud and repeating and voting of minors and other unqualified voters was practiced by the republican party, which was opposed to the democratic party, the supporters of these petitioners, by which fraud and repeating and illegal votes the result of the election was changed.

"That in and for the county of Charleston, exclusive of the city limits, there were but thirty-nine voting precincts, instead of forty, as prescribed by law.

"That in consequence of the aforesaid fraud, violence, and intimidation, no legal or proper election could be had in said county. Wherefore these petitioners protest against said election, and pray that said election be declared null and void."

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What paper is that?—A. The Charleston News and Courier, of issue the 14th of November, 1876.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. The statements which you have read from the paper, if I understand you correctly, are read from a copy of a paper which you filed with the board of county-canvassers, after the election?—A. Yes, sir; based upon affidavits, many of which I took from known and reliable witnesses. I was appointed one of a committee composed of George Lamb Buist and Rudolph Siegling, besides myself, to draft this paper.

Q. Are you satisfied of the correctness of that statement, at this time?—A. In the main, I am. I do not know that I can establish each one of those precincts. As I have stated, I have drawn that on the plan of an indictment, but I have no doubt of the truth of those general statements.

Q. Are you satisfied that those deputy sheriffs of whom you have spoken served to decrease the democratic vote and increase the republican vote?—A. I have the most decided impression on that point. Perhaps it may be well to state that that is a hobby with me—opposition to those deputy sheriffs—for I have been at it every election that we have had since 1868; I have always opposed it.

Q. State what effect they had.—A. They acted as party-rallyers, while they worked clothed with a badge which gave them a certain official authority. They were partisan, and violently partisan.

Q. Were there any democrats appointed?—A. No, sir. At the last election in Charleston that was prevented by the commissioners of elections. In the municipal election the commissioners of election were charged with the entire duty of preserving the peace, and our commissioners therefore controlled the sheriffs; while in the general election our commissioners of election have no such power.

Q. Was there anything in the law which authorized the appointment of these deputy sheriffs?—A. In my judgment, there was nothing; they were appointed in open violation of law.

Q. By whom were they appointed?—A. By the sheriff of the county.

Q. Who is the sheriff?—A. Mr. Bowen, who was the candidate for re-election, and also a candidate for presidential elector.

Q. And a prominent republican?—A. The head of the republican executive committee of the county.

Q. Were they all appointed from one party?—A. All from one party.

Q. And that the republican party?—A. Yes, sir; and I think I may say all colored people, or nearly so.

Q. In the article which you have read you speak of the general system of intimidation, of which you complain. Will you explain what you mean by that?—A. I think that in the city of Charleston the intimidation was more moral than it was physical, although it was mingled. I think that the outbreak of the terror was inspired by violence, and existed more in the country than it did in the city. The violence of the 6th of September grew out of an attack on democratic colored men who undertook to speak at a democratic meeting. I would say that the influence here in the city was much more subtle than that—the pressure of race, and the feeling that they would be outcasts from their race if they dared to call themselves democrats.

Q. I will ask you now whether you know of any system having been adopted by the whites of discharging from their employment negroes who would not vote or pledge themselves to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I can add but very little to what the chairman of the committee testified in my hearing on that subject.

Q. You have heard the testimony of Colonel Simonton?—A. Yes, sir; it is entirely correct upon that subject. I would state in reference to the matter just spoken of, that I was one of the committee who prepared a report in which we called attention to the laws of the United States for discharging men for political opinions, and the result was a resolution of the executive committee that we decline to give any such advice as that; that the employment of labor was a matter of individual and personal judgment; that the grounds upon which they would employ or would not employ must be left to individuals entirely. I would state that there was a good deal of talk and a good deal in the newspapers about it, but the old adage, "Much cry, and little wool," would apply. For instance, there was a butcher's parade in which they carried transparencies upon which were inscribed, "None but democrats buy meat from democratic butchers." That working-association of which Colonel Simonton spoke was composed of working-men who were enrolled to get employment, and they thought that in hard times those who were working with the democratic party, and making sacrifices, should have the preference in the employment of labor; but as a political movement it was not general, and I think as a personal movement it was not near so general as some of the newspapers might have led people to suppose. There are two leading papers here; one of them advocated it, and the other did not; and I would state that those of our people who did do it were very careful to endeavor to rest it upon a politico-economical principle and not a political ground, that the struggle we were making was for a good government, and if we could not get a good government no man was able to say that he could carry on his business, and therefore, unless they would aid us to get a good government, we were unable to give them employment, or to give them any assurance of employment. I know that a great many republicans were willing to say, "Don't vote for bad men," and that appeal was made to a very large class of republicans who had gone with us in the previous election, but on this occasion the line of race was drawn so strictly that we could make no impression.

Q. Do you know of any oath or obligation having been taken by the white citizens to discharge colored men who did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. I never heard of that thing until you asked the question this evening.

Q. Then you are satisfied that no such action was adopted to any great extent, even by individuals?—A. O, yes, sir. I do not think it was materially adopted.

Q. Were the citizens informed of what action your committee had taken in reference to that matter?—A. I cannot say that they were informed by any official publication, because we had no official application to us on the subject. I will not be quite sure, however; I do not recollect whether we published it or not.

Mr. SIMONTON. We did not publish it in the newspaper because we did not want to give it too much importance, but it was communicated to a large number who were employing hands.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. If the negroes had not been intimidated or molested, but had been permitted to vote according to their own best judgment in the last election, what, in your opinion, would have been the result in this county?—A. We carried the city, as it was, by a small majority. I believe that the result would have been that we would have carried the city by, say, 2,500 majority, and we would have diminished the vote in the county very considerably, so that probably the entire republican majority of the county would have been brought down to about 2,500.

Q. Suppose you had been allowed to go out among the colored people—when I say "you" I mean the democratic speakers—and freely speak to them, without threats or violence having been used, from the commencement of the campaign to the conclusion of it, what effect would that have had, in your opinion?—A. It would have had a very decided effect, I should judge, from the professions that were made. It would have given us a large accession of voters.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You said something about rifle clubs a while ago. How are those clubs constituted; by what authority?—A. In the city of Charleston the larger number of the rifle clubs were the revival of old militia organizations which had existed before the war; the Washington Light Infantry, for instance.

Q. Were they not organizations under some law of the State?—A. No; they were voluntary associations, for target practice, and so on.

Q. Were they recognized by the governor?—A. O, yes, in very memorable ways.

Q. Do you know of his ever having been an honorary member of any of them?—A. I do not remember of that. I was going on to say they were all of them old militia companies; some originated in 1869, when we were in a disturbed condition here and the police were very inefficient and ineffective. After the emergency passed away we grafted upon that formation a social feature. The Germans here had a club of that sort, and had a Schützenfest every year, and we were invited to them yearly.

Q. Well, they had no political significance?—A. With the exception of one of those clubs, they were composed mostly of our best citizens; but they were not formed with that design. On one occasion, on the 28th of June, they paraded under the command of General Hampton, and Governor Chamberlain was himself their guest, and passed in the procession, saluting General Hampton as the commanding officer, and took part in the supper and festival, and so on. After the proclamation of the President and the governor they disbanded; and I will state that the distinction was very marked, that they were not used in the way of any political purpose, except incidentally that the members were members of one political party.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You said that the resolution of the city or county committee in regard to the question of labor or employment was not published in the newspaper?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. What was the precise or substantial form in which the opinion of the committee was expressed?—A. It was substantially that the committee considered that the subject of the employment of labor was one upon which they did not feel called upon to express any opinion, as it was a matter entirely for individuals.

Q. It was left then with the people who employed laborers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what action they have taken upon it?—A. I think there were some instances in which persons who employed labor did give the preference to those who voted with them or did not vote at all.

Q. Do you concur in the opinion that was expressed before that there was no action of public bodies here in this county or in other counties?—A. I had the same doubt that my friend had about that workingman's association, but I do not know that they ever passed any resolutions. Unquestionably their object was to get employment themselves.

Q. So far as the county and city were concerned you did not express any opinion?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think the rifle clubs were regarded by the colored people as protectors of their rights?—A. By the democratic ones they were, but not by the republicans.

Q. There could have been no colored democrats except those that became so from being colored republicans?—A. That is true in the main, sir.

Q. Then the rifle clubs would have been a protection only as they had abandoned their own party and gone over to the democracy?—A. After we had given a personal pledge to protect the colored democrats from violence, when all the white men who had arms were disbanded, we felt that we were less able to afford protection than we had been before.

Q. Then the dissolution of the rifle clubs was the principal reason that you were unable to get recruits from the republican party?—A. O, by no means, sir; I believe, if there had been no rifle clubs or no disbanding of the rifle clubs, that the pressure of race would have been sufficient to control them. I only brought it in as an evidence, as they thought, that we had less capacity to redeem our promises than we had before.

Adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, Dec. 23, 1876, at 10 o'clock a. m.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 23, 1876.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m.; all the members present.

Mr. BANKS. I submit the following paper, as having been handed to me by Prince Albert, a witness called at my instance yesterday:

"To whom it may concern:

"I hereby recommend Prince Albert as a good republican, and reliable and faithful press-hand, and think any republican will do well to employ him.

"Respectfully,

"WILLIS W. WILLIMAN."

I also submit in evidence a report of the secretary of the state, dated Columbia, S. C., November 23, 1875, printed at Columbia, S. C., by the Republican Printing Company, State printers, 1876, with a view to having exhibit D printed, it being a statement of the population of the State by counties, according to the census of 1875, and exhibit H, showing the population of the principal cities, towns, and villages in the State.

The CHAIRMAN. No ruling will be made upon the admission of this document. It will be laid over for examination and future decision.

CHARLES F. NORTH (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I live in Christ Church Parish.

Q. What precinct?—A. Four-Mile Church precinct.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Well, sir, it is about twenty or twenty-five years probably, and since I know myself I have been there. I will be forty the 8th of next May.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a carpenter by trade.

Q. Do you follow that trade?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a polling-place in Four-Mile Church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is where you vote?—A. That is where I vote, sir.

Q. Have you any office or special duty or position in regard to elections in that precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at that polling-place at the last presidential election?—A. I was sworn in as the clerk of the board of managers and acted as such.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. I was there before the hour of 6, but I was sworn in at that hour. I was there about 4 o'clock.

Q. Did you stay all day?—A. I staid until 2 o'clock in the night, when we had done sealed up the ballot-box.

Q. Did you go away during the day?—A. No, sir; I never went a foot outside of the building from the time I went in until night.

Q. Will you have the kindness to tell the gentlemen of the committee what the condition of the election was in regard to order or disorder; whether there was any fighting or quarreling so far as you know of your own knowledge?—A. Well, sir, there was nothing as I know of the sort. They had fixed the windows of the school-house where I was with some bars, so that the voters could come and vote through the bars, and not crowd at the door. The door was about two feet and a half or three feet wide; I sat at the door as clerk, and could see what was going on inside and what was going on outside. I saw no disturbance whatever with white nor colored; all that I ever heard in regard to disturbance was from a man who got up and said that he was entitled to vote, but he didn't give his right name; and that was the only thing I heard that day.

Q. Did the man vote?—A. The man voted; he gave in his right name.

Q. Did you see any armed men about there?—A. No, sir; no such thing like that.

Q. Was there any loud, boisterous talking, or loud noises, such as shouting, or anything that was calculated to alarm people?—A. Nothing to disturb us inside the inclosure, sir; nothing at all.

Q. Were any men there with muskets?—A. They was not on that ground.

Q. Did you see any revolvers or pistols drawn?—A. No, sir; there was none.

Q. Or men armed with clubs or sticks?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any, and I looked about just as strictly as the United States deputy that was there, for he and me was together partly in the morning before the poll was open. All the instructions that was given was given by a young man by the name of Johnson and myself, when we arrived on the ground.

Q. Was there any question made about men not being allowed to vote?—A. There was. There was one young man came up there to vote, and there was a gentleman inside the inclosure where I was, as supervisor, and he challenged that man; and that is the only one that I knew of.

Q. Did he vote or not?—A. He did not vote; there was not a man with his name recorded on the list.

Q. Was it the democratic supervisor or the republican that made the objection?—A. The democratic supervisor.

Q. The law was that unless a man's name was on the list he could not vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored people were there there?—A. At that poll I don't really know. It ought to be in that precinct in the neighborhood of 150, white and colored.

Q. Do you remember that during the day of election there was any colored man who wanted to vote the democratic ticket that was not allowed, that was frightened away, or that was interfered with?—A. No, sir; I don't think any such thing occurred there that day. I know nothing of that kind occurred.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You were clerk?—A. I was, sir.

Q. What were your duties as clerk?—A. I was to register the names of voters, and if any challenges were made to file them, so that when they were called for they could be produced.

Q. How many votes were polled at that precinct during the day?—A. I think there was about four hundred and fifty something.

Q. How many of those votes were democratic?—A. As near as my memory serves me, I think there was thirty-one.

Q. Of those thirty-one, how many were colored men?—A. Ah, that is what I can't tell. They folded their votes and put them in the box in such a way that no living man can tell.

Q. How many colored men were there about the polls at any one time during the day?—A. Well, sir, I didn't take particular notice how much. There were a crowd; but I did not notice, sir.

Q. There was a large crowd?—A. Yes, sir; the inhabitants round about there.

Q. How many white men did you see about the polls?—A. I saw about eight or ten as near as I can say at the present time.

Q. Did you see any women about there?—A. I have not seen any women there more than those that lived there.

Q. Did you see any women at the polls?—A. O, no, sir; not at the polls. I was inside and I was right in front of where they came up to vote.

- Q. And of course you could not see everything?—A. O, no, sir; not everything.
- Q. Was it any part of your duty as clerk to keep the peace?—A. O, yes, sir; I think so. As I was sworn in I think that I had as much right to keep the peace as the managers who were originally appointed.
- Q. Were you sworn to keep the peace?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You say that part of your oath was to keep the peace?—A. He did not administer that to me; he only swore me as clerk.
- Q. Then it was not part of your oath that you should keep the peace?—A. I don't want to implicate myself; I don't distinctly remember that the peace were really used to me in the oath. It might have been, but I don't remember distinctly.
- Q. What is your best recollection on the subject?—A. My recollection is that I was sworn in as clerk of the election to do the duty pertaining to clerk. I really don't remember all the oath, to give it verbatim, but it might have been in it.
- Q. What is your best recollection about it?—A. My recollection is that I was sworn to do the duty of a clerk in regards to the laws of the election.
- Q. There were United States marshals there?—A. There was one there: F. M. Johnson, assistant marshal.
- Q. A colored man?—A. No, sir; a white man.
- Q. Any other United States marshals?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Any United States supervisors?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Well, it was their duty to keep the peace, and not your duty as clerk?—A. I don't know, sir. His duty, of course is different from mine. I should think it was his duty to keep the peace.
- Q. How far away from the door did you sit?—A. The table was just about three feet from the door.
- Q. How far were you from the door?—A. I was just on the outside of the table from the door; I will allow it to have been five feet. The table was about two feet in width.
- Q. Did you take down the names of all the voters?—A. I did, sir.
- Q. And you did not leave your place during the day?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you know Mr. Porcher?—A. Yes, sir; he is a white man.
- Q. What was his place on the election-board?—A. He was a manager, sir; a democratic manager.
- Q. Was he in the polling-place during the day?—A. Yes, sir; inside.
- Q. Do you know Mr. John S. Horlbeck?—A. Yes, sir; he is a white man.
- Q. Did you see him about the polls, outside, during the day?—A. I did, sir.
- Q. Have you a militia company in your precinct?—A. No, sir; not at that precinct.
- Q. Are you a member of any militia company?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Are you a member of any club?—A. None, sir.
- Q. Of any organization among the colored people?—A. O, yes, sir; I belong to such as religious societies.
- Q. Anything else?—A. Nothing more than religious societies in that section of the country.
- Q. In any other section of the country?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you belong to any secret society among the colored people?—A. No, sir, I do not.
- Q. What do you work at?—A. Carpentering.
- Q. Whom do you work for?—A. O, gracious, it's trouble for me to tell. I will work for anybody who will give me a job.
- Q. Who are you working for now?—A. Nobody.
- Q. Who did you work for last?—A. I worked just a week before the election for Dr. Pells, on Sullivan's Island.
- Q. Is he a republican or a democrat?—A. I suppose he is a democrat.
- Q. Do you swear that there were no guns near around that poll that day?—A. I do, really.
- Q. Then, if any other colored men who were republicans have said that they saw some guns there, they tell that which is not true?—A. I really think that that is so.
- Q. Do you swear that there were no guns, or do you say that you did not see any guns?—A. I didn't see any guns.
- Q. When you speak about no guns, no arms, and no violence, you are speaking about what you saw and heard, and you were sitting five feet from the door, inside of the polling-place, attending to your duties as clerk?—A. That is correct, sir.
- By Mr. BANKS:
- Q. You say you were clerk of the board?—A. I was, sir.
- Q. If you saw any disturbance would you think yourself authorized to say to the people, "You must not make trouble?"—A. O, certainly, sir.
- Q. If you saw any fighting you would think you were authorized to separate the combatants?—A. As being sworn so, I would do so. I would do so even otherwise, because I am so well known.

Q. If anybody tried to prevent any other man from voting who had a right to vote, you would have felt that you had a right to prevent that trouble?—A. Certainly I would.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :)

Q. But you would consider that your duties required you to sit at the table and keep the count of the votes; to sit there, to take any challenges, and file them, and to make a registry of the voters; and your duty would not require you to leave the table and go circulating around outside the poll for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any difficulty or not?—A. O no, sir; that is right.

CHARLES SMALL (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. Four miles from Mount Pleasant.

Q. In what parish?—A. Christ Church.

Q. In what precinct?—A. Four-mile-church precinct, sir.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-eight.

Q. What is your business?—A. I have no particular business. I plant, work at carpentering, drive teams, or anything that I can make my living at.

Q. Were you at the election the last 7th of November in your precinct?—A. Yes, sir; right there.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. They came to me, sir, because I lived right on the spot.

Q. Were you about there very early in the morning?—A. Very early; I was up about 5 o'clock in the morning.

Q. Were you there all day?—A. All day right there, sir.

Q. Did you hold any office of any kind in regard to the election?—A. No, sir; not exactly. I was appointed, but I begged to be excused.

Q. What did they appoint you?—A. As a marshal.

Q. What reason had you for asking to be excused?—A. Well, sir, because my horse was away and I am a man that is crippled in the leg, and I did not like to be running about among the people, having to stand upon my feet so steady all day. If my horse was there, I would have rode him and took the appointment.

Q. Will you have the kindness to tell the gentlemen of the committee whether you saw any disturbance there during that day, and what occurred generally; what was the character of the assembly, and so forth?—A. I was up before the polls opened in the morning, and I was there until the polls closed. I was right there, and I never heard a word of any cross question, nor no quarreling, nor no intimidation whatever. I must say that it was one of the most peaceable elections that we have ever had before.

Q. Were there any armed men there?—A. I never seen one near; neither pistol, gun, nor knife, whatsoever.

Q. Did you see any clubs or sticks?—A. I never seen none of them, nor nothing like it.

Q. Were any colored men prevented from voting as democrats?—A. No, sir; I never seen one.

Q. Would you have known it if there had been an effort among the colored people there to prevent colored men from voting if they wanted to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir. Some men did vote the democratic ticket. They never had no fuss. I know two or three men that voted the democratic ticket, and they came up and voted and did not have any fuss.

Q. Can you name them?—A. William Horlbeck, a colored man, and another one who was wagoner for a gentleman now dead; Edward Gadlen voted. They did not have any fuss with them.

Q. Could you tell about how many colored people there were there during the day?—A. Well, no, sir, I could not.

Q. Do you know whether there were any women there or not?—A. Yes, sir; they passed through there frequently.

Q. What were they doing?—A. Well, sir, I could not tell you exactly what they was doing.

Q. Did they manifest any violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Interfere with the men in any way?—A. No, sir; why, sir, at every meeting the women was there.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :)

Q. What year were you born in?—A. I cannot exactly remember that. I know the 10th of this coming February makes me forty-nine; so my old boss tells me.

Q. Who was your old boss?—A. John L. Narrell.

Q. How long was it ago that he gave you the account?—A. About ten years ago.

Q. What account did he give you?—A. From the account that he gave me this coming February I knowed would make me forty-nine.

Q. What did he say to you about your age?—A. At that time?

Q. Yes.—A. He told me I was about thirty-two at that time.

Q. Were you appointed a deputy marshal?—A. I was.

Q. Who appointed you?—A. I was appointed by the precinct chairman.

Q. You were recognized as a leading republican there in that section; you are a prominent man in your party?—A. Well, sir, I tried to be so.

Q. Who do you work for?—A. I work for anybody that pays me.

Q. Who were you working for about election times?—A. I was working for myself.

Q. On whose place?—A. On my own place.

Q. You have a place of your own?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many acres have you?—A. I have got a small farm of about one acre.

Q. You were working for yourself about election time?—A. Well, I did not work, but I was at home there looking round about; the election was right before my door.

Q. Who did you work for?—A. Do you mean after the election?

Q. Whether before or after the election.—A. The last person I did any work for was Mr. John S. Horlbeck.

Q. He is a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you work for him?—A. I worked for him, I think, about six weeks.

Q. When was that?—A. Some time last year, betwixt last December and last November.

Q. Did you work for anybody since then?—A. I have not picked up my tools to work for anybody since then; if I did it slips my memory; I was planting and working for myself.

Q. Did the negroes about the poll that day have clubs and sticks in their hands?—

A. No, sir; I did not see any one with clubs and sticks in their hands.

Q. Do you say that none of the negroes had sticks?—A. If they did I did not see it.

Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks?—A. No, sir; I never.

Q. Do you say that there were no bayonets on sticks?—A. I say that if there were, I did not see none, and I was there from 5 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the evening.

Q. Did you hear anybody say, "We want to see any negro vote a democratic ticket here to-day?"—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you say that that was not said?—A. Well, sir, I could not hear everything that was said.

Q. How many negroes were there at any one time at the polls?—A. I am unprepared to answer that question.

Q. Did you see a woman pull a man off the platform and examine his ticket?—A. I never seen it.

Q. As soon as the polls closed did you see the negroes come in with guns?—A. After the polls closed I went home; I and a United States marshal. We went home to my house and staid there till after 10 o'clock.

Q. Did you see any negroes with guns there when the polls closed?—A. I am certain of it, sir, I never seen one.

Q. Do you say they did not have guns there?—A. I am compelled to say that I did not see it.

Q. Do you know that they had guns concealed there?—A. No, sir; I don't know it.

Q. Do not you know that there was a wagon-load of hay there and the guns put under the hay?—A. You are the only man that I heard speak of it. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Do you know of the negroes having their guns concealed in the woods?—A. No, sir; I do not know.

Q. Do you know of the negroes assembling the next morning and marching down to Mount Pleasant with their guns, around the ballot-box?—A. I do not know of it; I did not see it.

Q. Mr. Horlbeck swears in this way: "When the polls opened I heard a negro man say, 'We want to see any negro vote the democratic ticket here.'"—A. Which Mr. Horlbeck, sir?

Q. Mr. John G. Horlbeck. Mr. Horlbeck swears this: "During the day I heard some threats. In one instance I saw a woman pull a man off the platform and examine his ticket. Just after the polls closed the negroes commenced appearing with guns, and said, 'I am going to take charge of this place to-night.'" Now that is what Mr. Horlbeck swears to. Is that true, or do you say that it is not true?—A. I cannot say it is true, because I never seen it.

Q. Will you say that that is not true?—A. I am almost as ready to say that it is true as that it is not true, because I never seen it.

Q. That is all you will swear?—A. No, sir; I cannot swear that I never seen it.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What party do you belong to?—A. I belong to the republican party.

Q. Do you belong to any society?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any club?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was an oath ever administered to you as a republican to do so and so in the party?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were there any colored democrats in your neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir; we live side and side. We are just as friendly as can be, sir. I had a relative of mine, a democrat, dine with me last Christmas.

Q. Was there not a good deal of hard feeling out there against colored democrats?—A. No, sir; I never hear no quarreling among them there.

Q. Do you hear democratic negroes out there express their sentiments and call themselves democrats?—A. Yes, sir, they do, as the same man I spoke to you about just now has come out plain as a democrat.

Q. Do you know of any colored women who are democrats?—A. No, sir.

Q. They are all republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they not very abusive toward the black men who are democrats?—A. Not to my knowing, sir.

Q. Have you not observed that among them?—A. I did not see any hard feeling among the democrats or republicans, or anybody quarreling.

Q. Is Mr. Horlbeck a truthful man?—A. Well, I don't have much to do with him.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Were you at Mr. Stone's office—the lawyer in town here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Stone at all?—A. No, sir; I came right from home, and right here.

Q. Did you get any word from Mr. Stone?—A. No, sir; I never knew that I was summoned until I came down here this morning in the boat.

Q. You have spoken of two negroes who voted the democratic ticket, one of them was named William Horlbeck and the other was Edward Gadlen; were you standing near at the time they voted the ticket?—A. No, sir; I was not standing near; but William Horlbeck took his democratic ticket and said in plain words: "I will do all I can for Hampton to-day."

Q. Were you standing near these two men when they voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I was not ten feet off.

Q. Did you see them putting their tickets in the box?—A. I seen them. Mr. Horlbeck given them the ticket, and they folded it up and went right to the step and put it in.

Q. Did you see them take a democratic ticket, fold it up, and put it into the box, and did you know that the ticket that they put into the box was a democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I seen Mr. Horlbeck go up to them and they took it and folded it up and went direct to the box, and from their open lips I know it was a democratic ticket.

Q. Could you tell a democratic ticket when it was folded from a republican ticket?—A. I believe that we could from the tickets we had there.

Q. If a man approached with a democratic ticket folded you could tell it from a republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; because it was a smaller ticket.

Q. Which was the smaller ticket?—A. I believe that the republican ticket was the smaller.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Do you own your own land?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you work on it when you have nothing else to do?—A. When I have nothing else to do.

Q. The chairman asked you something about your age; about the year you were born?—A. I might have made a mistake about it.

Q. When you know a thing of your own knowledge might you make a mistake about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you do not know a thing and are pressed for information about it, you might make a mistake?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know Mr. Horlbeck?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not see those occurrences of which he spoke?—A. No, sir.

Q. These men that voted the democratic ticket met with no forcible opposition or resistance?—A. By no means, they did not.

Q. They voted just the same as republicans?—A. Yes, sir, and was just as merry as could be afterwards. This man I was telling you about hooked hands with me after he voted. He was a relative of mine.

Q. Did you see anybody here, except when you spoke to me, to whom you spoke about your testimony?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody spoke to you at your own home?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no instructions in regard to it, and you did not know what you were to testify to when you came into this room?—A. No, sir.

Q. What you have said here is what you know of your own knowledge, and is true?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Did the democrats and republicans hold a love-feast together after the election, in the woods?—A. I don't know about that; I did not see it.

Q. You do not read or write?—A. No, sir.

JAMES BRENNAN sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Summerville.

Q. How far is that from here?—A. Twenty-two miles.

Q. What is your profession or business calling?—A. I am a newspaper correspondent. I am not now, but that is my regular business.

Q. How long have you lived in Summerville?—A. I have been living there four years.

Q. How long in South Carolina?—A. I have been in South Carolina since 1870.

Q. Were you at Columbia during the period when the democratic State convention was held in that city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend the convention?—A. I was in the convention at one time.

Q. Will you please state what was done there?—A. They transacted business sufficient to put a general ticket in the field; a State ticket. I was present in the convention when they nominated the candidate for governor.

Q. Was the convention secret or public?—A. It was secret; they sat with closed doors.

Q. At what time?—A. They organized first, and after that nearly all the proceedings were with closed doors until they nominated the governor, which was done publicly.

Q. Were any reporters present in the convention?—A. I think not, because all the reporters were excluded.

Q. What was the object, if you know, of the secret session or of the closing of the doors?—A. It would be impossible for me to tell.

Q. Was there at that time, or about that time, a torch-light procession and mass-meeting?—A. Yes, sir; the night the nomination was made.

Q. Were you present at the mass-meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who took part in the proceedings?—A. Well, there were several parties there.

Q. Name any one there?—A. Colonel Haskell, chairman of the democratic executive committee; a Mr. Kennedy, and General Furgeson, of Mississippi, and some others; but those were all I heard. General Butler and General Geary spoke afterward.

Q. Will you please to give to the committee a statement of the speech of General Furgeson?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COCHRANE) objected to the witness answering the question, because the people of South Carolina should not be held responsible for what was said by people not natives of the State.

Mr. BANKS. I ask that Mr. Brennan, the witness who is present, shall be permitted to state what was the character of General Furgeson's speech, made at the general mass-meeting of the citizens of this State on the night when General Hampton was nominated for governor. What I desire him to state is this—if he knows it to be so—whether or not General Furgeson, in his speech at Columbia on the occasion stated, undertook to explain to the people of South Carolina the principal features of what he called the "Mississippi plan," or what might be called the Mississippi plan of election, as to the way and the manner of overcoming large majorities without murder and without the shedding of blood; and whether or not in general terms he suggested the outline that he had given as a proper example for the people of South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE,) The majority of the committee exclude the proposed evidence upon the ground that the plan adopted in Mississippi is not a matter which this committee have any right to investigate, and is wholly immaterial to the inquiry that this committee is required to make. The fullest and freest latitude will be allowed to the minority to prove how the canvass in South Carolina was conducted, but we decline to go into the manner in which the campaign was conducted—a previous campaign—in Mississippi.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Then I will ask you whether or not General Furgeson made a speech in this city?—A. I only know it from a report in the newspapers.

Q. Can you state the general character of that speech?

Mr. JONES. I object to the witness answering this question, because he has already stated that he did not hear the speech made.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You will know the speech if you saw it again in the newspaper?—A. Yes, sir. The speech was not a very remarkable one; it was rather a moderate one.

Q. Here is the paper; will you look at it and see if that is the speech?

WITNESS, (referring to the newspaper.) A. All I can say is that I read that speech before.

By Mr. BANKS :

I now offer this paper as evidence of the fact that General Furgeson made a speech in this city during the canvass of the State, and I ask that it may be received as evidence of that fact.

Mr. JONES. I submit whether it is proper to file a paper here, purporting to contain a speech made by Mr. Furgeson, of Mississippi, or Mr. Snooks, of New York or Boston, or any other man in America from any other place in America.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Do you know the political character of the News and Courier printed in this city ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a leading democratic journal of this city ?—A. I consider it one of the leading democratic journals of the South.

Q. And it is formally or informally the democratic organ of the State ?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :) :

Q. I will ask you if you heard General Furgeson make this speech ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, that he made such a speech in Charleston ?—A. I do not.

Q. You merely say then that you saw this speech in the News and Courier, purporting to have been delivered by General Furgeson ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which, in substance, was the same as a speech which you had heard General Furgeson make in Columbia ?

Mr. BANKS. I did not ask him that.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :) :

Q. Was the speech as you read it in the newspaper the same in substance as the one made at Columbia ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Do you know whether or not General Furgeson spoke at other places than at Columbia and Charleston ?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :) :

Q. And do you not know of your own knowledge that he spoke at Charleston ?—A. No, sir.

Mr. BANKS. I offer this paper, the News and Courier, printed at Charleston, August 26, 1876, as proof of the proceedings of a democratic mass-meeting held in Charleston on the 25th of August, at which Hon. Charles H. Simonton presided, assisted by seventy-five or six vice-presidents, and at which General Furgeson, of Mississippi, was one of the speakers.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The majority of the committee exclude the newspaper offered because it is not competent evidence of the fact that there was a mass-meeting, that General Furgeson addressed that meeting, and that Colonel Simonton presided over it. Any statement which General Furgeson may have made as to the manner in which the campaign was conducted in Mississippi is excluded upon the same grounds as those given when the offer was before made. The majority do not object to the proving by competent evidence that there was a mass-meeting, that Colonel Simonton and vice-presidents presided thereat, and that General Furgeson made a speech thereat, nor would the majority object to any competent proof as to the action taken by said mass-meeting or any other democratic meeting, whether by resolution or otherwise.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. What State are you from, sir ?—A. I am a native of Ireland.

Q. You say you have been a correspondent of newspapers ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are a republican ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been in the United States ?—A. Since 1852.

Q. Are you a naturalized citizen ?—A. Yes, sir, and have been for over twenty years.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :) :

Q. You have said that the convention sat at Columbia with closed doors, until the time when the governor was nominated ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were present when Governor Hampton was nominated ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would state whether any newspaper reporters at all were admitted at the time the doors were closed.—A. I think not.

Q. Do you know of any democratic newspaper-correspondents desiring admission and being excluded?—A. Well, every newspaper-correspondent, of course, desired admission, but they were all excluded.

Q. Do you know of the correspondent of the News and Courier having been there and having been excluded?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Do you say that that convention was held as a secret convention?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know that?—A. Because everybody was turned out, and nobody was permitted in.

Q. Were you in when the announcement was made that there was to be a secret session?—A. I know the fact from the reporters coming out, and the doors being closed and nobody being allowed in.

Q. You did not hear the announcement made that there was to be a secret session?—A. When General Hampton was nominated I was there. There was no other candidate, and I think for that reason the doors were opened; but there was a discussion, and some man made a motion to go into secret session and all of the discussions of the convention were had in private; there were none had in public. If you will send for the correspondent of the News, Mr. Moroceaux, he will corroborate this statement.

Q. Do you say that nobody was admitted except the delegates?—A. I do not mean to say that at all; but the public was excluded, the doors were closed, and you could not get in. It was the same as at other private meetings when they go into secret session. I was with the reporters.

Q. Were you in the convention when it first assembled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was public then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard no announcement while you were in the house that a secret session was to be held?—A. No, sir; I heard no announcement, but everybody knew it and nobody questioned the matter; everybody knew it was a secret session. I can give you the names of half a dozen witnesses that will tell you they were in the house and had to go out.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. I understood you to say that you were there, and went out?—A. O, yes; that was when General Hampton was nominated that I was there.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Of course you do not know what they did in secret session?—A. O, no, sir.

Q. You do not know whether they went into caucus to talk over who the candidate should be?—A. I know nothing about that.

Q. But you do know that when they came to nominate the governor people were present at that time?—A. O, yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You were present when the balloting took place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no other business transacted at that time?—A. It was very near dark, and no other business was transacted that evening.

JACOB MOULTRIE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Red-Top church, Saint Andrew's Parish.

Q. What is your age?—A. About thirty-four, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Saint Andrew's Parish?—A. Over ten years, sir.

Q. What is your business?—A. School-teacher, sir.

Q. Were you present at the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any office there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. Manager, sir.

Q. Are you a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you get to the polls in the morning?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did you stay all day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you be kind enough to state to the committee whether there was any disturbance there during the day; and, if so, who made it, men or women, republicans or democrats; and what sort of a disturbance it was?—A. No, sir; there was no disturbance at the poll, at all, all day.

Q. There was no quarrelling about politics—about a man's being a democrat or a republican?—A. Not in my presence at the poll.

Q. Was it generally a peaceful assembly of people?—A. Yes, sir. I was manager there, and I think that everything went on the peaceablest out of all I been to.

Q. Did you know anything about a disturbance between Small and Grant?—A. No, sir; I never knew anything about it—the way of it.

Q. Was there any military company about there during the day?—A. No, sir; I never seen any about there all day. I was inside, and never had a chance to come out.

Q. Do you belong to the military company in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any parade?—A. The captain of the company ordered them not to take out any arms that day.

Q. Were there any men or women, republicans or democrats, armed that day with shot-guns or pistols, there at that poll?—A. No, sir; not in my presence. I never seen any such thing.

Q. Any clubs or sticks that were unusual for men to carry?—A. Not in the presence of the poll, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Were you a manager of election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were in the house all day, and did not go out?—A. No, sir.

Q. You staid in the house attending to your duties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many negroes were there in that church at any time during the day; was it pretty full?—A. In the morning, when they first met, it was full, but after they commenced to persuade them they went away.

Q. There were a good many crowding in there the morning of that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You voted at a table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many negroes were there crowded around the table there, do you suppose—a hundred?—A. I don't think there was.

Q. Seventy-five?—A. Well, by the door, and what was inside, there might be that number.

Q. Did you see any sticks in the hands of anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you swear that none of those men inside of the church had sticks?—A. No, sir; no one never had a stick in the church that day. If they had any sticks they left them by the doors. They didn't bring them by the ballot-box.

Q. Were you there when Brown ran up into the attic or loft of the church?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him when he went up there.

Q. You know he was up there?—A. Mr. Latham told me so, but I didn't see him.

Q. Do you not know when he went through the trap-door?—A. No, sir; I was 'tending to my business. I didn't have time to see him.

Q. Well, if you did not have time to see him, you did not have time to see any clubs?—

A. I was there 'tending to my business, as a manager.

Q. You went there to look all around you, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you not know that Brown was threatened and went up into the loft?—

A. If he was threatened he was threatened outside where I couldn't see.

Q. You only say you did not see it?—A. That is all.

Q. Did you see a negro woman pointing a gun at Captain Latham, through the window?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you say that a negro woman did not do that?—A. No, sir.

Q. All you say is that you did not see it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many negro women were there about there?—A. I couldn't say positively, sir.

Q. Were there a hundred?—A. I saw a good many around there.

Q. Did they have sticks?—A. I heard they had sticks.

Q. Well, did you hear that anybody had guns there?—A. There was a few mens that went there in the morning about 5 o'clock.

Q. Those people with guns staid there during the day?—A. As fast as they voted they went away.

Q. They might have been outside of the church and you not have seen them?—A. I didn't see them again after they had voted; I can't tell whether they were outside or not.

Q. All you know is what you saw and heard inside the church?—A. That's all, sir.

Q. You belong to the militia company?—A. Not the one that been out; I belong to the one on the Bureau's place.

Q. There was one up there that day?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What do you mean by "the one that been out"?—A. The one that was reported to have been out.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. What company was that?—A. Captain Marigault's company.

Q. Did they have their guns with them outside the church?—A. Not as I see; as far as I could see out of the door I didn't see any of the guns; but I can't tell if they had any.

Q. You were attending to your duties as manager and it gave you all you could do there that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many negroes were there about the polls that day?—A. I couldn't say, sir.

Q. There were three or four hundred about there during the day?—A. No, sir; as fast as they voted they went home.

Q. Captain Latham says they were there.—A. No, sir; they was not that many.

Q. Do you know Captain Latham?—A. I am well acquainted with him. He was to the box that day with me.

Q. He was pretty badly scared?—A. I don't know. He didn't seem so. He told me that he was satisfied—that he didn't have no dread of nothing.

Q. When did he tell you that?—A. To the box.

Q. How did he come to tell you that he "didn't have no dread of nothing"?—A. He told me that when the box was closed; he told me that he was well pleased at how the election went along.

Q. You have said that Captain Latham, when you and he were standing at the box, "didn't have no dread of nothing."—A. I didn't state what time it was, so I tell you now, when the box was closed he said everything was done all right.

Q. Did he say to you that he "didn't have no dread of nothing"?—A. No, sir; he told me that he was satisfied.

Q. Then he did not say to you that he "didn't have no dread of nothing"?—A. The way how he spoke to me was that he didn't have no dread of anything. He told that he was satisfied.

Q. Did he tell you that he "didn't have no dread of anything"?—A. He didn't tell me that he had no dread, but the way he spoke—

Q. Then when you told me a few moments ago that "Captain Latham said he had no dread of nothing" you did not tell me what was true?—A. I was correct so far as that when the box was closed he was satisfied.

Q. Did you not say a few minutes ago that Captain Latham told you that Brown was threatened and had gone up into the loft?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Captain Latham tell you at all that Brown had gone up into the loft?—A. Yes, sir; he told me so.

Q. Did he tell you the reason why he went up into the loft?—A. No, sir; but he told me he was up there.

Q. Did he not tell you why he was up there?—A. No, sir; he didn't tell me.

Q. Did he not tell you that he was going to stay up there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you not know that Captain Latham had to be taken home by one of the deputy marshals, or United States supervisors; that he was scared, and had to be taken home by them?—A. No, sir; I don't know nothing about it.

Q. Did you not know that Captain Latham asked a colored man, who was either United States deputy marshal or United States supervisor, to accompany him home, stating to him that he was afraid to go to his house that night after the polls closed, unless he had somebody to go home with him?—A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Do you not know that Brown was threatened and went up into the loft there?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long was Brown up in the loft?—A. I couldn't tell how long he was up there.

Q. Do you know that Lucas was whipped that day?—A. I heard about it afterwards.

Q. Do you not know that Grant was whipped that day?—A. I heard about it.

Q. Do you not know that the negroes said, "We'll kill any damn democrat son of a bitch that votes at these polls to-day"?—A. No, sir; not in my presence.

Q. Do you not know that Captain Latham asked you and the other colored managers to keep those people away from the table, that democrats could not vote there?—A. No, sir; he never asked me no such thing, 'cause everybody voted as he liked when he came to the box.

Q. You cannot tell what was done outside?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any bayonets on sticks there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see a man with a club with nails driven into the end of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you say that no man had a club like that there?—A. No, sir; not in my presence in the church there.

Q. Do you know whether he had it out of the church?—A. That is more than I can say.

Q. How long have you been voting?—A. Since Governor—what's his name—was first elected; I think about eight years ago.

Q. Do you recollect that it is eight years?—A. It might have been more or less, sir.

Q. How old do you say you are?—A. About thirty-four.

Q. What year were you born in?—A. Well, I can't tell exactly right now, sir.

Q. Well, suppose you are thirty-four years of age, what year would you have been born in?—A. Well, I couldn't tell exactly now, but I have got my age at home.

Q. But you know you are thirty-four now, and yet you cannot calculate back as to what year you were born in without referring to your book at home?—A. No, sir; not without that.

Q. You are a school-teacher, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say that you did see guns there in the morning?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You say every man voted as he liked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No complaint was made to you by anybody that a man could not vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. And Captain Latham said when everything was finished that he was satisfied with the manner in which things had been done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The chairman asked you some questions about whether he said he had no dread of anything. Did you understand that he used those words himself, or was that the impression that you got?—A. It was the impression that I got that he was satisfied.

Q. What studies do your scholars follow?—A. I teach a second-grade school.

Q. How many scholars have you?—A. Forty-seven.

Q. What do they study generally?—A. Geography, grammar, reading, spelling,

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. And arithmetic?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you a question or two now. What was the exact language that Captain Latham used to you when the polls closed?—A. Well, when the poll was closed and everything was very quiet, then the managers staid there to see everything finished up, and Mr. Latham said he was well satisfied with the way the box went on that day.

Q. Your understanding was that he did not find fault with the officers of the election; or, in other words, that he was satisfied with the way the box went on?—A. Yes, sir; that's my understanding.

Q. And so far as they were concerned he announced himself satisfied?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was all he said?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did he make any complaint at any time during the day?—A. He didn't make no complaint to me, only in the morning when he first been there, at 6 o'clock, he said that he thought the people were rushing too much towards the box.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. There were a good many negroes crowding around the box, and he complained about so many being around there?—A. Yes, sir.

ARCHIE MANIGAULT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About thirty.

Q. Do you live at Red-Top church precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. About six years, now.

Q. What is your business?—A. Farming.

Q. Do you belong to the militia company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any office in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. Captain.

Q. Were you at the polls on election-day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. I got there about half past 6 o'clock in the morning.

Q. Did you stay there all day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you have the kindness to state to the committee whether you saw any disturbance there?—A. Not at the polls.

Q. Or about there?—A. Yes, sir; I saw something about there. It was a fuss about three-quarters of a mile from the poll. I saw no fuss right about the voting-place.

Q. Were there any armed men about there—either white or colored republicans or democrats?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the militia company, of which you are captain, turn out that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they have orders not to turn out?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you give them any orders not to turn out?—A. Yes, sir; I told my men not to turn out on that day.

Q. Does the law allow any military parade on election-day?—A. No, sir; it does not allow it.

Q. Were any colored men prevented from voting just as they pleased, so far as you know, that day?—A. No, sir; they voted just as they pleased.

Q. Were there any colored democrats who voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody quarreled with them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or swore at them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or fought them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, now, about the disturbance that occurred three-quarters of a mile off, was it between Grant and Small?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what you saw, if you please.—A. Grant accused Small about a check that he said he stole, and Small attacked Grant in the road about a quarter of an hour after he had done voting, and he told him to give him satisfaction for accusing him of stealing the check; and Grant drew a pistol and snapped it twice on him; and Small knocked him down with a stick that he had in his hand, and Lucas and a crowd of mens rushed together where the fight was, and the rest of the party of boys that went up with him they went there to assist Small for fear Lucas would crowd on him for Jeemes Grant. After we got there and they commenced to fight, the marshal went there to put a stop to it; but I didn't go there right off where the fight was. I thought the marshal had stopped the fuss, and some one called on me to tell me it was best to put a voice in there to stop the fuss. So I went up and hollered after them and told them to stop this fuss, and for all the mens and womens to leave and go back down the road, and get through voting and go back home; and they all fell back from where the fuss was, and voted and went home.

Q. Was there any woman there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was she?—A. I don't know who she was. She sitting on the ground at the time I went up there and told these men to go off.

Q. Was there anything said about politics in this fight?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether Grant was a democrat or a republican?—A. No, sir; I don't know what he was.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Are you the captain of this militia company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You drilled Small and the rest of these fellows?—A. Not on that day.

Q. But you drilled them on other days?—A. Yes, sir; on other days.

Q. You say you and your crowd were down there. Who was your crowd that went to take care of Small and see that Lucas did not hurt him?—A. One part of the company mens was there, and the rest of them was up to the Brick Church.

Q. Well, who was your crowd?—A. I don't know, sir; because the whole parish was there.

Q. A great many people were there?—A. Everybody turned out on that day to vote, sir.

Q. It created such an excitement that nearly the whole parish was around this fight?—A. No, sir; because part of them was at the polls.

Q. Well, the only man that you were afraid would hit Small was Lucas?—A. I didn't know what side Lucas was on.

Q. Did you not say that you and your crowd went there to keep Lucas from hitting Small?—A. Lucas and Grant stays one place. Well, then, the rest of the boys what stays with me went up with Small.

Q. They stay at another place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then how many of you and the boys went up with Small?—A. I couldn't tell, sir.

Q. About fifty?—A. There was about fifty or sixty; along there.

Q. Were you with them?—A. Yes, sir, I was along with them.

Q. Then you and fifty or sixty men, with Small, all went up together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, how far up the road did you go before you met Grant?—A. We met Grant at the Red Top Church.

Q. He was there, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he walked up with you?—A. From the church he went up the road.

Q. Did he go up the road with you?—A. Yes, sir; he went up, too, with me and the fellows to the forks of the road, which is about three-quarters of a mile off.

Q. Then you and Small and about sixty other colored men of your crowd, and Grant, all went up the road together to the forks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, how far did Grant run when he got to the forks?—A. Well, the men run across the corn-field and out into the road again.

Q. And how far did you run?—A. I didn't run at all.

Q. Well, now far did the crowd run?—A. The crowd what went to assist Small they run right out in the road together; they run about half an acre, and run right along the road.

Q. And Small cut across and then cut back again and took another turn to the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was with Lucas?—A. I didn't know none of the boys upon that side. I aint acquainted with them.

Q. You cannot give the name of a single man who was with Lucas?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did Lucas do?—A. I don't know what he did do after he got into the crowd.

Q. Well, you did not see him do anything?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him do anything.

Q. Well, did you see any person else do anything to Grant and Small?—A. No, sir; I didn't see anyone else do anything.

Q. You say Grant pulled a pistol and snapped it twice at Small, and then Grant struck him with a stick?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he knock him down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did he hit him?—A. Across the top of his head.

Q. When Grant was down what did he say?—A. Well, Grant jumped up and he run out in the road again; that was the time he came out on the road again.

Q. Then Small ran after him and knocked him down again on the bank, did he?—A. I guess he knocked him down. I couldn't tell how he fell on the ground. When I went up there the woman was lying on top of him.

Q. Who cut Grant with a razor?—A. I don't know.

Q. Who did you hit that day?—A. I never hit a man.

Q. How big was the club you had?—A. I never toted a stick.

Q. This woman that you spoke about was Rebecca Bennet, was it not?—A. I heard that name called, but I wasn't acquainted with her.

Q. What became of the pistol; did Grant have it in his hand when he was running?—A. I couldn't tell whereabouts he dropped it; but he dropped it.

Q. Then when he was running you didn't see the pistol any more?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you saw Small running after him, and you said to the crowd "Stop this, and come away," and they immediately stopped it and came away?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say you saw this woman lying upon Grant?—A. Yes, sir; sitting right on him; covering him all up.

Q. What did she say when she was doing that?—A. She was whooping and hollering when I came up there; so I came right up and told them to leave.

Q. What were they doing, trying to get at the man?—A. Yes, sir; they all was mixed up with sticks there.

Q. What were they saying; were they not cursing him for a damn son of a bitch, and saying "Kill him, kill him"?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what did they say?—A. The marshal, Dick Rivers, told them to stop with the fuss, and they was pulling one another round together.

Q. What were they saying; were they not cursing him and abusing him for a democrat?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you leave the spot when Becky was on Grant?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know what occurred?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. How long were you away from the polls during that day?—A. I wasn't from the poll over half an hour, when I was gone to make them men stop. I was out in the road all day, laying there and sitting on the cart.

Q. How long were you away from the polls?—A. After I got through voting in the morning I wasn't back at the polls at all.

Q. Then you went there in the morning and voted and went away, way off on the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were not near the place all day?—A. No, sir; I didn't went back to the poll.

Q. You had tickets?—A. No, sir; I hadn't no tickets.

Q. You were a member of the rallying-committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. What position did you occupy?—A. I occupied no position at all.

Q. Well, you are one of the leading republican men up there. You are captain of the company?—A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. Who do you work for?—A. I am working for myself.

Q. Did you work for anybody else?—A. Yes, sir; when I worked out.

Q. Well, who did you work for last?—A. I worked up to the Drayton Phosphate Company.

Q. For Captain Latham?—A. No, sir; I never worked there.

Q. Well, what phosphate company?—A. Yates's.

Q. Is Yates a democrat or a republican?—A. I don't know what he is; I never heard him explain.

Q. Is he not generally known through the community?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what do they say about him; that he is a democrat or a republican?—A. I heard some of the men said that he was a democrat.

Q. Do you know Captain Latham?—A. No, sir; I not acquainted with Captain Latham.

Q. Well, you know who he is?—A. I heard about him.

Q. Well, what is he, a democrat or a republican?—A. A democrat.

Q. Do you know whether Small is a republican or not?—A. I know Small is a republican.

Q. Do you know a negro called Brown that works for Captain Latham?—A. Yes, sir.

W. H. HUGER (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. What is your profession?—Answer. I am a physician, practicing in the city of Charleston.

Q. What is your age?—A. I am fifty.

Q. How long have you practiced here?—A. I have been practicing here for twenty-seven years.

Q. Were you at any polls in the city of Charleston during the election?—A. I spent the day at ward 2. I was there before the opening of the polls, and remained there almost continuously until they closed.

Q. Did you see any officers there known as deputy sheriffs?—A. Yes, sir; there were a great many of them.

Q. How were they designated?—A. They had badges of a particular character. They were spoken of as sheriff's deputies.

Q. All with badges?—A. There were some green badges and some white badges. The green badges were the sheriffs and the white were the deputy marshals, I think; but I cannot state positively which was which.

Q. Were those badges exposed to view?—A. Yes, sir; pinned on their coats, right in front, where everybody could see them.

Q. What did these deputy sheriffs do during the day?—A. Well, sir, they were running about, apparently bringing up the men to vote and giving those republican tickets whom they could influence, distributing them generally.

Q. Were these deputy sheriffs white men?—A. No, sir; they were colored; some of them mulattoes; most of them black.

Q. Did you see any of them taking tickets from any of the voters?—A. On two occasions I saw them take tickets from the hands of the men in the line and give them other tickets.

Q. State whether or not these men were active in working for the republican ticket.—A. They were very active, sir; they were rushing about incessantly, and bringing people up and voting them.

Q. What was the effect of having this class of men at the polls?—A. The effect that was produced, in my opinion, was that it made people vote who did not dare to stay at home and not vote.

Q. Did they go to houses and bring colored men from their houses to the polls?—A. I do not know that they did. I met a colored man and he told me that he would have to go, because they would come and make him go if he did not go himself.

Q. Did they disappear and be away sometimes half an hour or an hour, and then return with voters?—A. O, yes, sir; there is no question of that.

Q. Did you see any one at the polls that day who is employed at the custom-house?—A. I did, sir; a man by the name of Minturn. He appeared to be very active.

Q. What did he say or do?—A. I saw him go up to a man by the name of John Hancock, a plasterer by trade. Hancock was in the line, going up to vote, and Minturn come up to him and told him that if he voted that ticket he would turn him out.

Q. Turn him out of where?—A. That is all he said; "I will turn you out; I'll allow no man to live on me that votes that democratic ticket."

Q. Do you know whether Hancock was employed at the custom-house?—A. I do not, sir; I do not think he was. This man Minturn came up to me later in the day, and said that this man was living with him, and that that was what he meant when he said he would turn him out. Hancock is a plasterer by trade; I do not know anything about his being employed in the custom-house. I made an affidavit of the fact I have stated, and took it up to the marshal's office, and there I met Mr. Poigneer, who made a note of what I said, and told me he would have Minturn arrested, and that if he did not give bonds he would have him put up. Later in the day Minturn told me that he was very sorry that I had made an affidavit against him, because the marshal was going to drop it, and it did not do him any harm. I went around there to the marshal's office, and Marshal Wallace said as soon as he came up he would send for us; but we heard no more of it.

Q. Was Minturn a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say he was working hard all day at the polls?—A. Yes, sir; he was very active, bringing them up, and so on.

Q. What was his manner?—A. He was very much excited when he was talking to to this man Hancock. When he spoke to me, he spoke pleasantly enough; he advised me to drop this thing, assuring me that it would do him no harm.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 28, 1876.

PATRICK PHILIP TOALE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Thirty-five, sir.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In this city, sir.

Q. How long have you resided here?—A. Since 1864, I think, just a few days after the evacuation.

Q. What is your business?—A. Milling; I have a planing-mill and lumber-yard.

Q. Where is your mill?—A. On the west side of Charleston, sir; on the Ashley River, right opposite here.

Q. Have you an office?—A. Yes, sir; I have two stores, or salesrooms, in Haynestreet, Nos. 20 and 22. We make doors, sashes, and blinds, and everything connected with buildings, besides building buildings.

Q. From what State did you come here?—A. From New York State, sir.

Q. Were you born there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I was born in Ireland.

Q. How long did you reside in New York State?—A. Well I have been there since 1846. I was about three years old when I came over. I am not quite thirty-five, but will be that age the early part of next year.

Q. Were you in the Army?—A. I was, sir; in the Federal Army.

Q. How long did you serve?—A. One year, sir.

Q. In what brigade?—A. Well, sir, I was in two or three brigades. I was in the Sixty-fourth New York, Colonel John Cochrane's regiment. Major Schaler, of New York, was our lieutenant-colonel. We were known as the "Chasseurs."

Q. What are your politics? Have you been voting any stated ticket or not?—A. I have voted generally a split ticket until this last election.

Q. When Governor Chamberlain ran before, whom did you vote for?—A. I voted for Green. Green was a reform republican. Before that I had voted for Moses.

Q. Were you at the polls on election-day?—A. I was there part of the time.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I was there probably an hour or so in the morning and about two or three hours in the afternoon.

Q. Please state what poll you voted at?—A. I voted at the first precinct, ward 4, I think.

Q. Now state what occurred, if anything.—A. Well, sir, we were running the mill that day, and I told my hands, as I generally did, to make it as short a time as possible in voting; that I was going to vote about eight or nine o'clock, and if they wanted to vote they could come along and vote with me. Some of them did, and some of them staid behind. There was one of our men who was arrested after he voted.

Q. Was he a white or colored man?—A. He was a colored man named John Hall.

Q. What did you employ him at?—A. At laboring work in the yard.

Q. Now detail to us all the circumstances of the arrest; what was said by him and all the circumstances attendant upon the case.—A. When we got in line to vote, this man Hall stuck very close to me and looked very much frightened, and on my looking around to see the cause of it, I saw several colored men opposite to him, near him, making gestures and looking at him, and so on. Seeing that he was somewhat alarmed, I told him to stand still and not be afraid. After he voted, he was taken possession of by those deputy constables or sheriffs.

Q. Did he vote the democratic ticket?—A. Well, I couldn't say that; I suppose he did. He was accused of voting the same ticket that I did, which was the democratic ticket. He was accused before and afterward of voting the democratic ticket.

Q. After he had voted what occurred?—A. He was taken possession of and was going to be arrested by those black deputy sheriffs. I got between them and tried to reason with them about the folly of arresting him.

Q. What did they say and what did other colored men say, if anything?—A. Well, they said that he voted the democratic ticket, and that he did so under my request. They made an attempt to take him out of the line, however, before he got to the ballot-box, those same men did. You see you had to stand off the length of this room [twenty-five feet] from the ballot-box.

Q. What else did they say about his voting the democratic ticket?—A. They got very violent. They were all armed with clubs and sticks, and so on; and the white men there said he should not be arrested. The majority of the blacks, seeing a few take hold of him, were encouraged to interfere, and there would have been a general fight if I had not begged them to stand back and let the man be arrested. Before that, however, the deputy United States marshal told these constables to stand back and let the man alone; that if he did vote the democratic ticket they had no right to arrest him. Those deputy sheriffs took him away from the marshals altogether, and just at that period a fight was very imminent, and I begged the marshals to let him go and let him be arrested to quiet the crowd and keep off a fight. I did it for peace sake. Of course I got cursed just as much as he did.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What did they do with him?—A. They took him to the city jail.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What was the charge against him?—A. That he was under age. They accused him of being only eleven or twelve years of age. So they took him to jail, and from there he was sent before the United States commissioner.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. You followed him down, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I went with him.

Q. What occurred before the commissioner?—A. Well, the commissioner held some whispered conversation there with the attorney-general of the State; this man Stone. Later on the attorney-general called the commissioner out of the room where we were, into the hall, and had some conversation with him out there, I suppose, and he came in and looked at us two or three times, and the commissioner finally came in and asked this man some question in regard to his name and age, and so on, and asked me if I would be responsible for him; that is, to have him whenever the Commissioner would call for him; and I told him I would. After giving that verbal guarantee they let him go and reminded me that they would hold me responsible for the man.

Q. Have they called on him to answer since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he twelve years old?—A. Well, he was doing a man's work and receiving a man's wages. I considered him a man. I hire him for a man, and pay him for a man.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you think he is twenty-one years old?—A. I think he is over twenty-one.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. Has he whiskers?—A. Yes, sir; he has some hair on his upper lip.

Q. This man alleged that he was only twelve years of age?—A. Eleven, I think.

Q. That was the deputy sheriff?—A. Yes, sir. During all that time there were threats made by those surrounding him, and he was pointed out to the crowd.

Q. What effect did this action of the deputy sheriff's in this case, and the general course which they pursued during the day, have upon the negro voters, that you know?—A. We had to send this man and one other colored man who voted the democratic ticket down back of the mill under a guard. We had to beg the white men on the place to take them down.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Why?—A. We were afraid they would be torn to pieces. Some evenings later I let them go to go home, and kept my eye on them as far as I could.

Q. From what you saw at the polls of the action of these deputy marshals and others advocating the interests of the republican party, would you consider it safe for a colored man to vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; I would not. I do not suppose there would have been a colored man in Charleston who would have voted the democratic ticket that day if there had not been whites at their back. The supposition was that I voted it, and I was cursed, myself, for voting it. I was among them when they acted in this manner.

Q. What was the action of the deputy sheriffs whom you saw during the hour that you were at the polls in the morning and the two hours that you were there during the afternoon? And I ask this without reference to the case you have given.—A. Well, the deputy sheriffs were interfering—bringing these men up to vote the republican ticket. That seemed to be their duty. They were all armed with clubs of some kind or another—either a rough-hewn piece of stick, or something else. They were anything but peacemakers.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you know of any other case similar to this that occurred?—A. One other of my hands was telling me that he came very near being beaten. He was pushed away from the polls. There was nothing more that came under my observation. There was not a colored man in this town, as far as my knowledge goes, that would dare to proclaim his democracy openly.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. I will ask you whether you threatened to discharge any of your men if they did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; some of our men voted the democratic ticket, and some voted the republican ticket. Some of them were rallyers for the republican ticket.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Thursday, December 28, 1876.

JAMES HALL (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Twenty-one.

Q. When were you twenty-one?—A. I was twenty-one last year gone.

Q. You are the man who worked for Mr. Toale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were arrested at the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, just tell us briefly what occurred about there.—A. I went to the polls that morning before I set in at my work, and when I got there to the polls I asked a man that was standing there what ticket that was, and he told me it was a Chamberlain ticket, and I went back again and voted.

Q. What ticket did you vote?—A. I voted the republican ticket. I asked a colored man what ticket he was keeping, and he said a republican ticket; and then I went away from the poll, and I went back at 7 o'clock and at 8 o'clock I voted the democratic ticket, and after I had done vote one man done challenged my vote.

Q. What did the deputy sheriffs say to you?—A. They told me to go on home, and there was four or five colored men around me and they said, "He can't go on home till he is arrested."

Q. Did any of the colored men have clubs?—A. Yes, sir; they had clubs around me.

Q. Did they curse any?—A. Yes, sir; they cursed, and they wanted to fight after they found the police wasn't going to arrest me.

Q. Did they threaten you?—A. No, sir; they didn't say any more than that they wanted me arrested.

Q. Were you arrested?—A. Yes, sir, I was arrested.

Q. By whom?—A. Well, I don't know, sir.

Q. Were they colored men that arrested you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. One or two?—A. One.

Q. Where were you taken to?—A. To the down-town guard-house.

Q. Then where were you taken?—A. Then from the guard-house on down to the marshal's office.

Q. Did Mr. Toale go with you?—A. Yes, sir; he went on down with me.

Q. Well, did they put you back in jail or did they discharge you?—A. They discharged me.

Q. Have they called on you to answer since?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who told you you were twenty-one years of age?—A. My mother, sir.

Q. Is your mother living?—A. She is living, sir.

Q. When did she say you were twenty-one?—A. Last year gone.

REUBEN EVANS (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. Where do you reside?—A. I live down on King street, in Charleston.

Q. What is your age?—A. Well, I don't exactly know my age, but I am rising of fifty-odd, sir.

Q. What is your business?—A. Well, I generally whitewash, plaster, and paint, sir; and, of course, do anything I can to make a living at.

Q. How long have you lived in Charleston?—A. I have been here nearly five years, now, sir.

Q. What ticket did you vote on election-day?—A. I voted the democratic ticket.

Q. What polls did you vote at?—A. I voted at the down-town polls; I forget the name of it.

Q. In what ward?—A. Ward 2, I believe, sir.

Q. Well, what occurred to you after you voted?—A. There was nothing occurred to me after I voted on that day at all. The day that the fracas was taken on Broad street, I was painting for Mr. Upperhard. I started from there down town, and just before I got to Queen street I met some three or four men, and they says, "Yonder is Evans." Says he, "He votes the democratic ticket." Says he, "Damn him; let's kill him." And one of 'em throwed a brick, or something, in a minute and knocked my hat off, and one of 'em knocked at me with a stick, and I up with my hand and warded it off, and the stick broke across my arm. Then up came two or three young men and says, "Ole man what's the matter here? You are about to be murdered." Says I, "Yes." Says he, "It looks like you voted the democratic ticket." Says I, "Yes." "Well," says he, "You are in a bad fix." Says he, "Come on; I'll see you home;" and he seen me down the street.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did they see you home?—A. They went part of the way home with me, and I thanked them and went home.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Was this before you voted or after?—A. It was the day after election.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. That fracas then was in the month of November?—A. Yes, sir; it was the day after election.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. This was the evening that they had the fuss on Broad street.—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Are you afraid to go about now, being a democrat?—A. Some of them is very mean, but I ain't afraid of anybody coming right up afore me.

Q. They do not come before you now?—A. That was the only time that they ever come afore me, 'cause I ain't afraid of them—none of 'em. I'm just as good as a common man, if I is old.

C. C. BOWEN sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In Charleston.

Q. How long have you been here?—A. Since 1856, with a short interval.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-two.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. Do you hold any office now in connection with the State government here?—A. Yes, sir; I am sheriff of this county.

Q. Have you any official connection with the political parties, democratic or republican?—A. I was chairman of the republican executive committee of this county in the last campaign, and hold that position now.

Q. Did you take any part in the recent presidential campaign in this city and county? And, if so, please state what.—A. Yes, sir; I canvassed the county pretty thoroughly.

Q. In what way?—A. Well, I called meetings and spoke at a good many of them myself; at some of the meetings I sent other parties.

Q. Were these meetings with which you were connected in this way the principle republican political meetings of this county and city?—A. Those meetings were called by myself, as county chairman of the republican party.

Q. And were prominent meetings?—A. Yes, sir; they were advertised in some of the papers and the days upon which they would be held, naming the persons who would be there to speak.

Q. Well, sir, will you please name them in their order, and give us as succinctly and as clearly as you can the general outline of what occurred at them?—A. The first meeting that was called was at Biggin Church, I think a day or two after the democratic convention had nominated General Hampton. The meeting had been called prior to that, but it took place at that time. I spoke at that meeting.

Q. Was there a large attendance?—A. Well, yes, rather large.

Q. What number of people were there do you suppose?—A. Well, I should suppose between three and four hundred.

Q. Exclusively republicans?—A. Nearly all. There were a few democrats, but they did not take any part; they came there, and sat in their buggies most of them, and looked on. Nothing was said or done. That was the first meeting at which I had ever seen any of them even present. At that meeting there was nothing unusual more than the presence of these persons—I suppose twenty or twenty-five. The next meeting that was held was at Strawberry Ferry, in the same place, about ten miles below Biggin Church. These are both in one parish, but those are the names of the localities.

Q. When was this Strawberry meeting?—A. I can not recollect the date, but I suppose it was a week or ten days after the meeting at Biggin Church.

Q. Well, sir, what occurred? Give us a narration, if you please, as to speakers.—A. I think about three days before that meeting took place it had been advertised, and it was generally known that there was going to be a meeting. I was waited upon by a gentleman who lived up there, on the democratic side, to know if I would agree to a joint discussion.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Who was that gentleman?—A. A gentleman by the name of Calcoch. He asked to have the democrats given half of the time. After some preliminary remarks, I agreed that they should have half of the time.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did you know that he was a democrat?—A. O, yes. There was nothing said about the number of speakers or anything of the kind. When the time came I left the city on the Northeastern Railroad. The cars stopped within, I suppose, four or five miles of the place. The usual way of going there is by railroad. I left by the train that morning. After I got on the train I noticed in the News and Courier that a steamer had left, going to Strawberry Ferry with a number of democrats on board. That was the first intimation that I had of anybody going from here. I got off at the station. There were a few men assembled there. I soon found out from appearances and what I heard that there was a great deal of excitement there. I started from the station and went on down to the place, a conveyance being in waiting, and I met men all along the road more or less excited.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What was the distance from the station?—A. Between four and five miles.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. Were these men that you met colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What happened with regard to these men?—A. Well, as I say, there was a great deal of excitement. Before I got to the ferry where the meeting was to take place I met, I suppose, some dozen or fifteen women; they were in the road, greatly excited about what they had heard of somebody that was to be killed that day. They had heard it from some one and there was considerable excitement about it. I quieted them as well as I could and advised them to go home, saying that I did not think there was going to be any trouble. They evidently believed the report. As I was on my way to the place of meeting I saw the steamer that I spoke of that had left Charleston that morning coming up the river below. I went on to the place across the river and I suppose there were between three and four hundred men assembled there, mostly at that time colored, with a few whites.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. Assembled on the shore?—A. Yes, sir; and they were very much excited; so much so that I was surprised. A few minutes after that the steamer anchored in the river, and they commenced disembarking those that were on board, and I soon found out what a good deal of the excitement meant. They had one hundred and fifty men aboard the steamer, and they all came up there armed with Winchester rifles. They stopped, I suppose, about two or three hundred yards from the meeting, where they landed, and sent up a committee to make arrangements in regard to the speaking. Two gentlemen—Mr. Calcock and another gentleman—came to me to make arrangements in regard to the number of speakers and the time. I told Mr. Calcock that I felt it my duty under the circumstances not to call the meeting to order; that I didn't think it was safe; that I found so much excitement among the people that I did not think it prudent to undertake to hold a meeting; that I found from talk that threats had been made through the country; that the colored people were very much excited, and thoroughly aroused, and believed that the democratic party meant mischief, and it was hard work to persuade them to believe anything else. These repeated conversations that they had had with the democrats up there tended to make them believe there was going to be difficulty. After a considerable talk I finally consented to go on, upon an agreement that each party was to control its own men. I then went up on the stand. The democrats had not then come to the place of meeting; they were below, waiting. I told the people that the democrats had come there for the purpose of taking part in the meeting; that I had been assured that no difficulty should occur, and that I would expect them to be patient and hear both sides of the question, and to take no offense at anything which might be said, which was acquiesced in by them; at least they promised to take my advice. I then arranged the colored people on one side of the stand, and the party from the steamer, about one hundred and fifty in line, marched up to the stand and took position on the other side. I suppose there were one hundred and fifty; in fact I knew there were; I counted them as they passed the stand in two lines. They appeared to be under the charge of Mr. Barker, from the city, and in fact from that time he seemed to take control of their side of the meeting. Mr. Calcock was there, but took no further part. A few moments later a company of horsemen from Mount Pleasant, over here, came up. They had ridden around by land, about fifty-five miles, the night before. I suppose there were thirty or forty of them. A few moments later another company made its appearance. They were from Summerville, on the South Carolina Railroad. They had gone across the country. That made up the sum-total of the meeting on both sides.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. How large was the last party?—A. They said there were fifty in that Summerville party. I did not count them; I heard some of themselves state the number as being fifty.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What was the distance from Summerville?—A. Well, I should suppose it was fifty miles from there; probably farther. A few moments after that the meeting commenced, and I think the arrangement was that each speaker was to have half an hour and the republicans should have the close. We had the opening and close. Afterward, at other meetings, I gave them the opening. Well, there was a great deal of angry talk at the meetings. We got through with a great deal of difficulty.

Q. Who were the speakers?—A. The first speaker on our side was a man by the name of Henry Thompson, a colored man. The next speaker, who was on the democratic side, was Mr. J. W. Barnwell, a young man there. The next speaker was myself. I will state here that we did not have a great many speakers. Major Barker spoke next. The next speaker was a man by the name of Hunter, a colored man. The next speaker was a man from Mississippi named Ferguson.

Q. What was his given name?—A. I have forgotten now.

Q. Was he a democrat?—A. Yes, sir; red hot.

Q. Was that the last?—A. No; I closed.

Q. Well, sir, was there any excitement during this speaking?—A. Well, yes, considerable excitement. There was, as I said, a good deal of angry talk, and a good many things said that I thought should not have been said.

Q. What were they?—A. Well, insults.

Q. What were the statements?—A. In the first place, all of the democrats except Ferguson started out on the line that the colored people were being told that if they did not continue to vote the republican ticket they would be kept in slavery. They started out upon that, and that was their general talk, together with denunciation of republicans generally in unmeasured terms, and that there was no truth in the statement made by anybody who told them that. That was their general line of argument. It appeared there had been a strike attempted some three or four days before that among those working for the rice-planters, and Mr. Barker was very bitter in regard to that, and denounced leading republicans for causing the strike.

Q. In what part of the State were the rice-plantations to which you refer situated?—A. On Cooper River. He was denouncing certain men named as being the cause of the strike, and afterward admitted when he got through his speech that he had been mistaken; that he had heard this and he supposed it was true. He abused most all the republicans and called them liars and thieves, and it created considerable excitement; that is, talk, noise.

Q. Did you make any reply to this?—A. I had the close; Major Ferguson's speech was upon an entirely different plan.

Q. What was his speech?—A. He had come down, as he said, to instruct the white people, he did not call them democrats, in what he called the Mississippi plan of carrying the State. He repeated a great many times that they were going to do it peaceably if they could and if not they were going to do it forcibly—they were going to do it anyhow; that this state of things could not exist any longer.

Q. Did he give any outline of what the plan was?—A. Well, a sort of a general one. He only had half an hour to speak, and a man could not go into details in that time. He made, I think, a very violent and bitter speech; in other words, he and all the balance of them argued from a proposition that did not exist.

Q. What was the proposition?—A. Well, first, in regard to the slavery proposition. I certainly had never told the colored people that they would be put back into slavery, and I told these men if they had ever come out to the meetings they could have saved themselves all that trouble; that it was imaginary.

Q. Did this speech produce any marked excitement?—A. Well, there was a good deal of talk and a good deal of noise. When he insisted that they were going to do these things the colored people would reply that they would not, and that it could not be done here, and that it was such men as he that caused a great deal of the difficulty in making remarks of that kind. One remark that he made, I recollect, was that they could not expect the white people to employ them if they continued to vote against the interest of the white man. That was the last meeting held for some time.

Q. What, in a word, was the act or spirit of the meeting at its close? With what demonstration, if any, did it break up?—A. Well, I thought that the feeling was rather better; it was, though, the most inflammable material I ever saw at a meeting; the least disturbance would have caused a riot that no one could have controlled.

Q. Is that all you have to say in regard to that?—A. Yes, sir; there were not any other meetings held until some time after that; not until after the republicans had held their convention; the regular calls were issued for meetings at different places over the county, which took place every day.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. The meetings were called by the republicans.—A. All these meetings were called by the republicans; I can give you the place and date of these meetings if you desire; the next meeting was held over at Mount Pleasant, on the 6th of October; on Saturday, the 7th of October, we had another meeting at Strawberry; on the 9th, at Red Top Church over in Saint Andrew's Parish; at a place called Whaley's Church we had a meeting on the 10th; on the 11th at John's Island; on the 12th at Wadmelow Island; on the 13th again on the lower end of John's Island. John's Island is about twenty-four or twenty-five miles long; on the 14th, on Edisto Island; that is an island farther below, next to Saint Helena Sound; the 15th was Sunday; on the 16th we held a meeting at Cain-hoy. There were other meetings, but that was the last one I attended at which there was any joint discussion.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Well, sir, proceed.—A. After this there was a meeting every day until the campaign closed. I had called these meetings myself, and there had been no arrangements for joint discussion or anything of that kind. The morning that I got ready to go to Mount Pleasant, when I got down to the bay to go across to Mount Pleasant, I was approached by a gentleman on the democratic side and asked if I was going to allow a joint discussion, and I told him no. That was the morning of the 6th.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Who was the gentleman?—A. A gentleman by the name of Walker.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives over at Mount Pleasant. I told him no, and gave as a reason the manner in which we had been treated at Strawberry Ferry before that; that I did not think we had been treated fairly there, either at the meeting or after the meeting was over; that we had been insulted, and that at all those meetings there was liable to be a difficulty. I told him I regarded it as an inducement to trouble that should be avoided. After some complaints on his part, and promising to keep order, I agreed that they should have half of the time, and I sent over to the meeting and made arrangements. We got along at that meeting without any trouble, though, as I say, provocations were offered several times; in other words; the lie was passed very freely from some of the democrats to the republican speakers on two or three occasions.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Was it not returned?—A. No, sir; that is, it was not returned this way: that the statement that they complained of was not true. One man after the meeting was over, came to me and apologized, but the mischief had been done, because, as I say, that kind of talk was liable to start fight in a minute, and it was with the utmost difficulty that we could keep down fight. At that meeting there were no arms on either side that I knew of except pistols. I presume the most of them, and especially on the democratic side, had pistols.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You saw the pistols, of course?—A. O, yes, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did they carry them openly?—A. A good many had them under their coats, but you could see them sometimes. Why, some of them had two strapped on to them.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Was there any attempt to conceal them?—A. No; further than sometimes a man's coat would blow up and the pistols would show in the belt running around his body. At the first Strawberry meeting Mr Baker had two strapped on him, one on each side, in a leather case.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Is there a law in this State against carrying concealed weapons?—A. I do not think there is; I have never heard of it, if there is.

Mr. JONES. I thought it might be that he carried them in that way to avoid the charge of carrying concealed weapons.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. How was it with the republicans?—A. Some of them had pistols.

Q. Do you know what proportion of them?—A. Well, I could not state; I would have to guess at that.

Q. Was the arming more general on one side than the other; and, if so, on which side?—A. Yes; the democrats were in a condition to arm themselves to a greater extent than the others were. One thing I forgot to mention in regard to that first Strawberry meeting. Mr. Calcock, who came to ask my consent three days before the meeting took place, went right from my office to a hardware store to buy twenty-four army revolvers.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Did you go with him?—A. No, sir; but he told me so. I would like to make this statement to show you how I know this.

Q. Do you know whether he got these twenty-four army revolvers or not?—A. I do not think he did; that is, he did not at that place. He might have got them afterward. I do not know anything about that. The statement I wished to make in connect-with that is, that a friend of mine, who was in the office at the time, came in a few minutes afterward and said that he saw him trying to purchase these weapons. When I went to the meeting I charged him with it, and he admitted that it was true.

Q. Did he give you any reason for having gone there to get them?—A. No, sir; not at all. About that time it was a matter of impossibility to buy a pistol here in any store in the town, from the fact that they had all been taken up. It is safe to say that nearly every man that had the money had a pistol, and at these meetings where we went each man had from one to three. I have seen plenty of them with three pistols.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who was the man that told you he had met Calcock at the store?—A. H. H. Hunter. The next day after the Mount Pleasant meeting I went to Strawberry Ferry again. When I got there I found that the democrats had sent a boat again to the ferry. They got there before I did at that time, and insisted on a joint discussion.

Q. Was there any agreement to that effect?—A. O, no; there had been no agreement then. Nothing had been said by any one.

Q. How many were there?—A. I suppose there were about seventy-five on that trip.

Q. Did you assent to the joint discussion?—A. After a good deal of talk I did, but I remonstrated about their coming in that way to this meeting without notice and demanding half of the time, but said as they had come to that meeting I would consent to it for that time. That meeting was more quiet than the first one at that place, but the men that were there were all armed with pistols. They left their rifles on board the boat on that occasion.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How do you know that they had rifles on the steamer?—A. I came back on the steamer and saw them. I will say in connection with that, that there was one objection that I had at that meeting to a joint discussion—that I did not get there until very late, and that I would have to go back to meet the train, and I stated that, and that I should have to deprive them of the time that had been given me; and then they consented to bring us back on the steamer and to give us two hours more. We came back on the steamer and I saw the rifles on board the boat. That meeting was held on the democratic side under the charge of Mr. Miles and Mr. Barnwell. Mr. Barker was not at that meeting.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What occurred?—A. That meeting was more quiet than the first one. Nothing happened serious. I went to the next meeting at Red-Top church by myself; when I say by myself I mean to say that the democrats did not put in an appearance. We held a meeting there and came home without any trouble at all. The meeting for Whaley's church the following day was not attended by any one, as it rained. When I returned from that meeting at Red-Top church I found this note in my office from Colonel Simonton, in regard to joint discussions:

"CHARLESTON, S. C., October 9, 1876.

"DEAR SIR: The democratic executive committee have been informed that your committee have appointed certain days for canvassing this county on the stump. They have instructed me to propose to you that both parties unite in holding their meetings at the places and times you have selected, and that there be a joint discussion of the questions at issue between them.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"CHARLES H. SIMONTON,

"Chairman Democratic Executive Committee.

"HON. C. C. BOWEN,

"Chairman of Republican Executive Committee."

That note was written on the 9th, the day of the meeting at Red-Top church. They did not go there. To that I sent the following answer:

"CHARLESTON, S. C., October 10, 1876.

"DEAR SIR: Your note of this date, saying that the democratic executive committee have been informed that a series of republican meetings have been called for the purpose of canvassing this county, and proposing to me that both parties unite in holding their meetings at the times and places I have selected, and that there be joint discussions of the questions at issue, has been received.

"I have no objection to such an arrangement as the one you suggest, provided that such meeting can be held without the presence or attendance of armed bodies of men.

"I would, therefore, suggest a conference with yourself, or some other representative of your committee, with a view to an arrangement of preliminaries.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"C. C. BOWEN,

"Chairman Union Republican Party, Charleston County.

"Colonel C. H. SIMONTON,

"Chairman Democratic Executive Committee, Charleston, S. C."

To which he sent the following on the 10th :

"CHARLESTON, S. C., October 10, 1876.

"DEAR SIR: I have your reply to my communication of yesterday.

"Owing to pressing engagements, I requested Mr. Buist to see you to-day, but he did not find you.

"As your time is so much engaged, please appoint an hour and place when and where I can see you, and it will afford me pleasure to do so.

"Yours, respectfully,

"CHARLES H. SIMONTON,

"Chairman Democratic Executive Committee.

"Hon. C. C. BOWEN,

"Chairman of Republican Executive Committee."

That is the correspondence in regard to the joint discussions which then took place. These other joint discussions had been held merely as I say by these parties coming there and demanding them. I sent word to him, and met him that night. I did not send any other note. I went down to Colonel Simonton's office here on Broad street, and had an interview with him. There was no one there but himself and myself, and we talked over the situation generally and agreed that we would have joint discussions at all the places where I had called meetings. It was also agreed that the men should not go there armed, and we talked of another class of people here in the city, and it was agreed between Colonel Simonton and myself that under no circumstances should any of those men be allowed to go to any of these meetings. Probably I had better make it more explicit, so that you can understand it. There was an organization which had been formed here in the city called the Butler Guard, and composed of some very bad men, and when I say bad men I mean roughs—irresponsible parties, half-grown boys of sixteen, eighteen, or twenty years of age, who were not responsible to anybody and could not be controlled by any one. The first meeting that we held after this correspondence was on John's Island, on the 11th of October.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. That was where the Butler Guards should not go?—A. It was agreed that they should not go to any of the meetings.

Q. But that was the first meeting?—A. Yes, sir. The democrats sent down to John's Island I suppose about thirty men besides their speakers. The speakers on the democratic side on that occasion were M. P. O'Connor, Henry E. Young, Joseph W. Barnwell, and R. G. Tharin. I gave them the opening of the meeting. The republicans had the close.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :) :

Q. Who were the republican speakers there?—A. A man by the name of Ford, a colored man, Cyrus Guilliard, a colored man, and myself. The democrats had half of the time, and admitted that they had not made any converts.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What was the character of the meeting?—A. The meeting was very quiet.

Q. Any of the speakers interrupted on either side?—A. Well, no more than to ask questions. The democratic speakers always had a way when they got up to speak of offering to answer any questions that were asked, and it was construed by everybody into an invitation to ask them.

Q. No offense was given or taken in this discussion?—A. None that I ever knew or heard of. That meeting broke up at about nearly dark. The democratic party came on to town and did not get here till some time during the night. I went further—towards Wadmelaw Island, where the meeting was to be held the next day. The meeting the next day was called to order about half past 11 o'clock, and I kept the meeting together until 4 o'clock waiting for the democrats to come there. One speaker I forgot on the republican side was Mackey. Perhaps it would be well to give it here.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You kept the meeting waiting until 4 o'clock; did you have no speaking?—A. O, yes, sir; anybody that wanted to speak could go on; the meeting was not dissolved. At Wadmelaw we had the same republican speakers. It was a very disagreeable day, and I had come to the conclusion that they would not be there. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon I learned that the steamer had landed about three miles off from the meeting, and as soon as they could get there—it took them half an hour—they came up, 75 of them, accompanied by two speakers. Mr. Miles was one of the speakers and Mr. Alley was the other. When they got on the ground I told them that we had been speaking, and asked them who they would name to speak. Mr. Miles named Mr. Alley, and he spoke as long as he wanted—about half an hour—and stopped. I informed Mr. Miles that I did not think it was worth while to put up any speakers on our side; that he could follow Mr. Alley himself. Mr. Miles made the next speech, in fact the closing speech. There was nothing said afterward. That meeting was a quiet one. I heard no complaints in regard to that. Their party left and came back to town that night on the steamer. I staid on John's Island for the purpose of going to the meeting the next day, which was to be held on the lower end of the island. John's Island is a good deal in the shape of a horseshoe, and Wadmelow is right inside the horseshoe bend.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What population has John's Island?—A. There are about a thousand voters' on the island. I staid on Wadmelow, as I said, for the purpose of going over to the lower end of John's Island the next day. The democrats sent a party down to that island on another steamer. The democrats came back every night; they were afraid to stay in the country on account of fever. The steamer left here early in the morning, about daylight, so I understand.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Who were the democratic speakers at that meeting?—A. They only had one speaker.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Bacot. He is a law partner of the Mr. Walker that I spoke about a little while ago.

Q. Who were the republican speakers?—A. The republican speakers were the same as the day before, except Mackey. He came back to Charleston that day.

Q. How many democrats were there?—A. About thirty at that meeting. They were under the charge of Mr. Bacot.

Q. Was that a quiet meeting?—A. Yes, sir; there was no trouble at all. That party came back to Charleston that night, and I left there and went to Edisto—I suppose four or five miles by water. A boat with another party was sent down to that meeting from here. That was Saturday.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. They came in a steamer again?—A. Yes, sir; and there were from seventy-five to one hundred of them at that meeting. They brought the German band. I suppose there were about six hundred people present at that meeting; there might have been over that number; counting the democrats, probably there were between six and seven hundred, say. All the democrats at any of these meetings were those that went from here. On John's Island there was not one. There was but one on Wadmelow Island, and at the second meeting on John's Island there was one colored man who announced himself as a democrat.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who were the speakers?

The WITNESS. On Edisto?

Mr. BANKS. Yes.

A. Julian Mitchell was the first speaker. Mr. J. W. Barnwell was the second democratic speaker, and was in charge of that party. I think Mr. Miles was there—yes, I know he was there, and Mr. Augustine Smith. Those were the men that spoke. They had a colored man that they wanted to speak, by the name of Martin R. Delaney, whom they introduced. In fact he had been carried down there, I understand, to rather carry Edisto Island. He did not speak.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Why did he not speak?—A. Well, the people would not hear him. They declined to hear him; when he was introduced they all left the place, and went, I suppose, two hundred yards, out of hearing.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who were the republicans?—A. The same speakers, with probably one or two local speakers, that lived there on the island. I made the closing speech at all those meetings. The people there declined to hear Delaney. He got up after he was introduced, and before he had a chance to say anything they all left; said they did not want to hear him; and Mr. Barnwell came to me and wanted me to use my influence to get them to listen to Delaney. I got up on the stand and urged them to listen to Delaney, and if they didn't agree with what he said they could make up their minds accordingly, but it was with a good deal of difficulty that I could get them to come back. They said that they could listen to what the democrats had to say, but they were not going to listen to one of their own race.

Q. They did come back?—A. They finally came back. I asked Delaney if he wanted to go on. He said no, that he felt that he had been insulted by his own people, as he called them, and he did not want to make a speech. He made a few remarks of that kind and stopped. It then came my time to make the closing speech. It was then nearly 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. How was that meeting?—A. That was a very quiet meeting.

Q. Nothing especial occurred?—A. Some of the men that were present were very angry, but they were very easily controlled; that is, they would make remarks about colored men making democratic speeches. They thought they had sold themselves. That was the language they used. I made a speech, telling them how they could get the colored men to vote the democratic ticket.

Q. What was your suggestion?—A. I don't know as it is worth while to refer to it. I made the statement that the democratic party was trying to get in a few short weeks what it had cost me eleven long years to get, that was, the confidence of the colored people. Mr. Miles wanted to know, "Won't you tell us how you do it?" I said, "Yes, I got it by kind treatment. You can get these votes in the same way."

Q. Did they see it?—A. I think a good many of them agreed with me. The colored people here are not going to change so rapidly.

Q. Well, sir, what occurred next after that?—A. Well, the meeting broke up, and there was no disturbance. I recollect the democrats gave three cheers for the republicans after the meeting adjourned; that is, Barnwell, who was in charge of the democrats, asked the democratic party to give three cheers for the republicans. Then he turned around and asked the colored people if they would not give three cheers for the democrats, and they did it.

Q. Were there any converts to the democratic party?—A. They admitted that they had made none.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. The republican cheer was not as loud?—A. No, I do not say that; but there was not so much feeling in it as if somebody had proposed three cheers for Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. What was the next meeting?—A. The next meeting was the Cainhoy meeting, on Monday the 16th, which terminated in a riot; and that was the last of the joint discussions in the county. I got left on Edisto Island through a misunderstanding, and did not get home until late the next day, on Sunday, at nearly dark. When I got home I did not get up very early the next morning, as I had been out all the week and was pretty tired, and I did not know what the arrangement was for Cainhoy. That morning I went with the others, but the first intimation of the time of starting I saw in the newspapers, which fixed it at 9 o'clock. When I saw it I knew that I could not get ready to go at 9, and I sent word to Major Buist, who was in charge of the boat, that I could not go by 9 o'clock, but that if he would wait half an hour I would go with him; and he sent back word that he would keep the boat for me. They went from the Market wharf down here. I got down there as soon as I could, and I saw a large crowd aboard, about, I suppose, 250. There was on the wharf a considerable crowd of republicans; I suppose about 100.

Q. Who were the men on the boats?—A. They were democrats; and among that crowd, as I found out afterward, there were a great many of these Butler guards that I spoke of. The crowd was on the boat when I got on the wharf. They would not let the republicans on the wharf get aboard of the boat, and they wanted me to get them on, and Major Buist asked me if I wanted them, and I declined to have them.

Q. For what reason?—A. In the first place the boat was crowded, and in the next place there was no use in the world of their going up there. That was the reason I objected to their going. There were on the boat, maybe, a dozen or fifteen republicans who had got aboard before I got down there, and I took on the boat with me three or four men. I was the last one that got on.

Q. Were the three or four you took with you republicans?—A. Yes, sir; the democrats had the band along with them. As soon as we got on the boat the lines were cast off and we started up the river. I had not been on the boat but a few moments before I discovered a portion of the very party that I had objected to in the arrangement with Colonel Simonton as a class, as I before said, of roughs; and I noticed another thing in a very few moments after that, and that was the absence of the old leaders that had been sent to any of those meetings. There was no one in charge of the party that appeared to have any responsibility, or seemed to know anything about it. There were but two speakers along.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. M. P. O'Connor and a gentleman of the name of Ficklin. There was another who I was about to forget to mention, Mr. St. Julian Jewey.

Q. Who were the republican speakers?—A. A colored man by the name of McKinley, Cyrus Guillaud—

Q. Colored?—A. Yes; and myself.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Come to the meeting now, if you please.—A. When we were going up the river I noticed that the parties were very ugly in the general talk that they made—cursing, and so on. About half way up they commenced practicing with their pistols, discharging them at any object they saw, and when we got to the wharf, about fifteen miles above here, there was a considerable crowd of people there to meet us, white and black. I think nearly all the democrats in the parish were there. There were but 74 democrats in the whole parish. There were a great many wagons and carts, and all the old vehicles in the parish there, to convey the crowd to the place of meeting, which was about three miles from the landing. As soon as the boat landed there were a good many congratulations between the democrats that went up from here on the boat and those who lived there. I got ashore, and the precinct chairman on the republican side was there with a buggy, and I got into the buggy as soon as I could and rode out, leaving the party at the wharf. The band had commenced to play, and I left them shaking hands, and so on. I got to the place of meeting probably twenty-five minutes, at the outside, before the democrats and the others came up. When I got to the meeting-ground I found about 400 colored people assembled there, and I suppose there were 10 or 12 whites. Most of them had gone down to the landing, but there were that many there. They had prepared a stand. I waited until the democrats came up. O'Connor and myself had had an understanding on the boat, in which it was agreed that each of the speakers should have twenty-five minutes. They came up in about twenty or twenty-five minutes after I got there, and I asked Mr. O'Connor if he was ready, and he said he was, and I got upon the stand and announced to the people that the discussion was going to be a joint one, and that I wished them to pay particular attention to what both sides said and judge for themselves who was right. I then asked them whom they wanted to preside over the meeting. It was usual to elect somebody chairman, and they nominated a colored man by the name of Stewart. He was elected without opposition as chairman. Stewart took his place, and as the democrats were present, and they had a democratic precinct chairman present, I invited him up. It was agreed that he should introduce the democratic speakers and that Stewart should introduce the republican speakers. Mr. Jewey was the first democratic speaker. That meeting was unusually quiet up to that time. Mr. Jewey spoke his twenty-five minutes and got down, and the most of the time you could have heard a pin fall. It had been the most quiet meeting I had seen; that is, there was no interruption. Mr. McKinley, a colored man, was the next, and the first republican speaker. He had been speaking. I suppose, a minute, and had not spoken more than a dozen or twenty words, when I heard some one sing out, "Look out! Look out!" I will have to describe to you the locality so that you will understand it. The stand was a long table, say ten feet long, set out under an oak tree, and behind it a long bench; and the speakers spoke from this table. When they got up they were facing the east. The colored people, say, occupied one side of the stand, and the democrats the other. There was an old house to the left of the stand about ten or fifteen steps away. That house had been built before the war for a carriage-house; that is, when people came there to the church they would drive in there out of the way. The colored people occupied that end of the stand, and the space between this old building and the stand was all blocked up, as it was on the end of the stand where they were located; and the democrats occupied the other end of the stand. This voice came from somebody that I could not see, but in or about the old building. I was sitting on the end of the bench nearest to the building, when McKinley looked around that way and, pointing over the heads of the crowd, says, "Those men have got guns and are going to shoot." The crowd then commenced to break away from the end of the stand nearest the old building, and in, I suppose, half a minute, the space was cleared, when I saw ten or a dozen men standing inside that old building with guns in their hands. Their actions indicated mischief.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

What did they do? Just tell us.—A. The first I saw of them after the space was cleared was, with their guns raised, in the attitude of waiting for somebody to shoot at. [The witness here illustrated the attitude of the parties with the guns.]

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. It was in a natural position for firing?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. But the muzzles of the guns were depressed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these white or colored men?—A. White men. They were some of those very men that went up on the boat; the very men that I had objected to going to Colonel Simonton.

Q. Give their names, please.—A. Well, I could not do that. I could point them out; those that are alive. I could take their own statement and point out their names, but it would be with some circumstantial evidence. They were standing in the position I have indicated when this space was cleared and I stepped to the other end and put my hand on Mr. O'Connor's shoulders, and said, "Those are your men there with guns. You must stop them at once," and Mr. O'Connor called out to them, "What are you doing with those guns?" They were then just as plain to our sight as that fire is there. [About fifteen feet.] They made no reply to Mr. O'Connor at all, but commenced backing off toward the rear end of the old building, but in the same position that I had first seen them. They went out the rear end of the building and commenced forming a line as they went out the door, and it might have been a minute before the first shot was fired. As soon as they got out and got into a reasonable line the first shot was fired. I saw an old colored man, standing about ten feet from where the first gun was fired, fall, and I suppose, in ten or fifteen seconds after that I saw the man that fired the shot fall. The firing then became pretty general, that is, in the rear of this old building. They discharged those guns, and as soon as these men discharged these muskets they threw them down and commenced using their pistols. They commenced getting away from there pretty soon after that.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Who, did?—A. The men who commenced with the pistols. The fight up to that time was all between the colored people and these ten or a dozen men. The main body of the democrats had not taken part in it. Some one came to me and asked me if I could not stop the firing, and I replied that if some one would go with me to protect me from a fire in the rear that I would go and try, because the democrats all had their pistols in their hands. Mr. Walker said he would go with me, and turned around and said to his party, "I am going out here with Mr. Bowen and I do not want any shots fired. I stepped out and he stepped behind me, and I give him credit for keeping pretty close up. It was a mutual protection. I stepped out as he stepped in behind, and we stepped close together, like soldiers stepping out.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Well, you went over to the colored people, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well?—A. I tried to stop them. They were very much excited and not disposed at first to listen to anything. I would take hold of a man's gun and get the butt of it down on the ground and go to somebody else, and probably the man I had just left would get back into a firing position again.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did they have guns?—A. Not all of them. There were probably forty of these old muskets there. I do not think there were more than that. There might have been three or four shot-guns among them. I rather suppose the most of them were loaded with small shot; some of these were loaded with buck-shot. Well, I succeeded in a little while in quieting down the firing, except once in a while a random shot, and thought I was going to succeed entirely, when Mr. Walker left me and went back to his party.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Why did he go? Did he say?—A. Yes, sir; I think he has stated it. He published a whole lot of stuff in the newspaper. I say this much: If he had staid with me the fight would have stopped there, and one man that was killed afterward would not have been killed; but that is mere opinion. As soon as he got back to his party they commenced using their pistols. That renewed the fight all along, and the democrats began to retreat. They fell back to the church, a little way from the stand, and took shelter in the vestry-room of the church, and commenced discharging their pistols. Some of them took shelter behind the grave-yard fence, and a good many of them commenced making down toward the boat. When the democrats commenced using their pistols from the vestry-room of the church the colored people charged on it and the church. With the exception of two men that were killed all the rest were of the party that had created the difficulty. The first man that was killed was an old colored man, maybe seventy-five years old, and perhaps the most inoffensive man on the ground, and the other was an old man named Simmons. I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind that he did not have any weapon, and had gone there out of curiosity. All the others that were killed, I am satisfied, were the men who had created the disturbance—the men whom I saw in the building with the guns. I think there were five of those killed; in fact, I am certain of it.

Q. How many were killed besides these two?—A. Five.

Q. Were they all white men?—A. Yes, sir; all white that were killed, except one.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Six white men and one colored man killed? Is that right?—A. I think so.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Were all the white men that were killed democrats?—A. I feel satisfied in my own mind that they were.

Q. What occurred after this?—A. Well, the democrats left there and went toward the boat. I quieted the colored people as soon as I could, and advised them to go home. There was a great deal of excitement; in fact, after the first shot was fired they were pretty wild.

Q. Did they go home when you told them?—A. Yes, sir; they were afraid that the democrats were going to the boat for guns and ammunition, and would come back. They got that into their heads, and there was a disposition on the part of the colored men to go home and get their guns; and I was apprehensive of a second difficulty after the first one had been stopped; and so I advised them to go home, but not to come back, and it turned out that they took my advice. There was no further difficulty there.

Q. What was done with the dead bodies?—A. They were brought down the next day.

Adjourned to meet to-morrow, (Friday,) December 29, 1876, at 10 o'clock a. m.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Friday, December 29, 1876.

The subcommittee met at 10 o'clock a. m. All the members present.

C. C. BOWEN, examination resumed.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. When you concluded last night you had arrived at a point in your testimony in which you had described the Cainhoy riot and stated that you had advised the negroes to go home, and that they had taken your advice, and had gone home and remained there. You will please proceed from that point.—Answer. I was stating that portion of the democrats who had gone up on the steamer to Cainhoy remained up there at the village and the steamer came back. I will state for your information that the place called Cainhoy is a little village on the banks of the Wando. That is the village, and the meeting was about three miles from there; two other steamers were sent back up there that night with a portion of two or three rifle clubs. Next day one or both of the boats—one I know—returned to Charleston, bringing some of the persons that had been killed. How many they brought is all hearsay. I think they brought one or two wounded men. I am satisfied that the bodies were all brought down in the next two days, except the colored man, who was buried there. I know that from the fact that the coroner held an inquest here over the bodies. I got back here to the city Monday night, the 16th, about 11 o'clock. A meeting had been called for James Island, the next day, the 17th. On the morning of the 17th I sent for Colonel Simonton and told him that I must withdraw my consent for any more joint discussions; that a serious riot had been created the day before by men sent by his party to Cainhoy, and I did not feel willing to take any further responsibility; but I offered to accompany any of his speakers to the meeting that was to be held that day, or to any other meeting that was to be held afterwards throughout the county, and give them the same hearing that I had myself; they to go with me without any outside support; that is, that no one should go with them. I declined any further joint discussions if he was going to send companies as he had been sending them. These men that had been sent to these meetings were part of different detachments, as it were, from the rifle clubs here in the city, and a riot was liable to happen at almost any time. He went away to consider the proposition, and came back in about an hour afterward and declined it, and there the joint discussions broke up. I will say this much, that I said to Colonel Simonton that he and his speakers would be just as safe as I would be myself; in other words, that there would be no difficulty so far as they were concerned; but that the presence of a large body of men was calculated to create a disturbance. Other meetings were held though throughout the county by the republicans; some smaller meetings attended probably by the democrats.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Was there any disturbance at these meetings?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing occurred to disturb them?—A. No, sir; everything was peaceable and quiet.

Q. You say it was the habit of these rifle clubs to attend some one day and some another day?—A. They made details every day from different rifle clubs. As I have stated at some of the meetings there were thirty, at some seventy-five, but at this Cainhoy meeting there were at least one hundred and fifty.

Q. Have you anything further to say in regard to the meeting?—A. The usual practice was to send somebody in charge of these men, except to the meeting at Cainhoy; no one seemed to be in charge there. There were two speakers, as I have said, along, but neither one of them had previously had charge of such meetings or appeared to have any control over the men after they got there. When Barnwell, Miles, and Barker went to the other meetings they always kept their men in perfect order.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. M. P. O'Connor was not a leading democrat?—A. No, sir; so far as that purpose was concerned he did not have any more control over them than a woman would.

He was stumping for himself, being a candidate for Congress. Barker was nominated first, but got out of the way, and M. P. O'Connor was put on the ticket.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. You have spoken of the democratic clubs of colored men which are said to have been in existence in these different precincts?—A. The colored democratic clubs in this county existed on paper. What I mean by that is that they did not have them. I know of one place in particular where they claimed to have had forty men; this place over here at Red Top church. On the 25th of October a short piece appeared in the News and Courier, headed "Sheriff Bowen as an intimidator," in which they went on to state that the democrats had a club consisting of forty colored men over there, and that I had broken it up. I wrote a note to the editors calling their attention to it, saying that it was a mistake, telling them in plain words that they never had the club there, and all the colored men they had in that parish that would vote the democratic ticket would not exceed three, and that the parties who had represented the club had been fooling them. They declined to believe that, and it was afterwards published in another paper I think on the 27th or 28th of October.

Q. How many votes did they get?—A. I do not know; I do not think they got more than three or four; they did not have them there. I know this: they were stopping everybody they could get hold of, and a great many promised them, and they would come to me afterward and tell me what they had promised the other side; but I knew they were not going to vote that ticket.

Q. Let me ask you if this affair at Cainhoj and the proposed meeting at James Island occurred before or after the proclamation of Governor Chamberlain and the President of the United States against the rifle clubs?—A. They occurred after. It was after the clubs went up to Cainhoj that I made application to the United States marshal.

Q. Were the rifle clubs in existence at the time of the meeting at Cainhoj?—A. I have said they were. They went there that night with rifles; do not misunderstand me. The parties that went to these different meetings did not carry their rifles, but as I said yesterday they had their pistols. But that night, after the riot at Cainhoj was over, they went there and carried their rifles and staid there some time. As to the matter of breaking them up they have never disbanded yet.

Q. Do you know whether any vote was taken to suspend operations or suspend meetings?—A. No, sir; I do not. I know that they carried their arms home from different armories; but a good many times they brought them out again when occasion offered or required.

Q. You say that the colored democratic clubs did not exist, and that the rifle clubs did exist?—A. Yes, sir; I knew about how many colored men would vote the democratic ticket outside the city. It is very easy to get at. I know nearly all of them, and could have told before the election very nearly.

Q. In regard to the vote of the city and county of Charleston, and with regard to the general management of political parties, I wish to ask you what, if any, measures were publicly adopted by the democratic party to influence and control against their will the action of the voters of this city and county?—A. Well, I will have to state that my information—

Q. I do not inquire as to particular individuals. Give us public information.—A. One plan they adopted was that they would not employ any one. Another was that they would not go on the bonds of any of the officers.

Q. Do you know whether any public effort was made by anybody to prevent officers of this State or the United States from getting bondsmen or to compel persons to withdraw their bonds in such cases after they had been given?—A. I know that the democrats were forbidden by their party from going on anybody's bond that was a republican office-holder, State and General Government.

Q. Do you know of threats publicly made by the democratic party to compel persons to withdraw their bonds?—A. That is what I mean when I say forbidden. Parties who had been on the bonds of republican office-holders withdrew their names. Resolutions were passed at different meetings here in the city, denouncing them, and calling on them to withdraw and they did withdraw. That has been going on before and since the election. This applies to public officers, national, State, and county.

Q. If you know that any person has been disabled from holding office in that manner you will please to state a case, or if you do not you may say so.—A. I know of one who has been appointed to a public office who has been unable to get bonds for this reason, and he has not yet been able to enter upon his office. I allude to Mr. William Birney, who was appointed by the President to the position of postmaster in this city. After his bond had been made up and sent to Washington, persons who had signed it were induced to come off the bond because Birney was looked upon as a radical. A new blank was furnished him and a second bond was made out, and a great many of those who had signed his bond first declined to sign it again on account of ostracism and threats by the democrats, and he has not succeeded in making the third bond though the appointment is open to him any time he qualifies.

Q. Do you know of any other instance?—A. I know of several instances of county officers.

Q. Do you mean that they have been unable to take their offices?—A. Well, no; they have made bonds and parties have come off, and they have substituted others. I do not know of my own knowledge of a case where they have been deprived of holding office except the one that I have mentioned. I will state this, that the result of that plan of policy is that a great many county officers are holding office with hardly any bond at all; that is to say without sufficient bond, or in other words, straw-bail.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that these offices cannot be filled by other persons because of the difficulty in obtaining bonds?—A. O, a new appointee on the republican side would share the same fate. There would be no change of condition in that regard. They say this: That it is their determination to keep the republicans from holding office, but not having the approval of bonds, they do not succeed very well.

Q. Have you anything further to say upon this subject?—A. No, sir; I do not know of anything else.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. I desire to put in evidence resolutions upon this subject adopted at a meeting in ward 8 in the city of Charleston, September 8, 1876, as they appear in the News and Courier issued September 9, 1876.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) There is no objection to that.

The resolutions, and so much of the article referred to as to which there was no objection, were then read, as follows:

"THE DEMOCRATIC MEETING IN WARD 8—FREE SPEECH SECURED AND PEACE PRESERVED.

"The secretary here stated that he had been handed a set of resolutions by a resident of the ward, which he would read, and hoped that the meeting would give it their unanimous support. He then placed before the meeting the following

"RESOLUTIONS:

"Let us know who are the rich men in this city and State, be they democrats "nominally" or "black-hearted republicans," who for money are aiding radical republican officials in waging war against our race and property, and who are responsible for every riot that occurs in our political campaign.

"Resolved, That this meeting, in behalf of the honest white voting population of South Carolina, ask the democratic papers of Charleston to arrange and publish in their columns an honest and exact directory of all the bonded officials in this State, their names, nativity, politics, office, official bond; the name of the bondsman, his nativity, politics, business, place of business, and the amount for which he bonds himself, and the consideration received by him, if the latter information is obtainable.

"Resolved, That it is the honest conviction of this meeting, and we believe of every honest citizen of the South, that no true and honorable democrat could sign his name as the bondsman and guarantee of any radical republican official in this State, he having been a resident in South Carolina since R. K. Scott was elected governor by the said republican party in 1868."

"The resolutions were then placed before the meeting, and adopted unanimously."

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What, if any, effort or public concerted action has been made by the democrats of this city to control the votes of men, either by the use of money or in regard to the employment of individuals, within your knowledge?—A. I have heard of a great many men being discharged on account of politics.

Q. I speak now of resolutions of public meetings and speeches of leading orators.—

A. I have heard and read resolutions passed at the different meetings.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) Would it not be well to introduce the resolutions themselves?

Mr. BANKS. I will do so.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Do you know the character of the News and Courier?—A. It is the principal organ of the democratic party of this State.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Was not that paper considered the organ of Governor Chamberlain, when he was governor last? Did it not support him?—A. No, sir. After Governor Chamberlain was elected the first time the News came over to his support as long as they could use him. When they failed in that they went back again. They said some very flattering things about Governor Chamberlain, however.

Mr. BANKS. I offer the following editorial in the News and Courier issued September 12, 1876, to be taken in connection with the resolution before offered.

Mr. JONES. I object to this as evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that this technically is evidence, but shall not object to its admission, though I do not desire to be understood as waiving objection hereafter to the introduction of newspaper articles.

The editorial was then read as follows:

"DEMOCRATIC BONDSMEN OF RADICAL OFFICE-HOLDERS.

"Any citizen of Charleston who now becomes a bondsman for a radical official is a worse foe to the cause of good government than if he boldly voted the rascally radical ticket at every election. In voting with the radicals he would do no more than any negro who will pass muster as of full age can do equally well, and more frequently; but in becoming, in these days, a surety upon the official bond of a radical appointee, the responsible citizen brings property and position to the rescue of such fellows as Birney, and gives to the public enemy the means of securing office-holders who will faithfully do their dirty work and hinder the success of the democracy.

"For eight years there had been no strict division of political parties in South Carolina. In 1870 the democrats generally voted for the Union reform candidate for governor, who was a republican. Two years later there were two radical candidates in the field, and democratic ballots were cast for both of them. In 1874, the democrats, with few exceptions, voted the independent republican ticket. There was, therefore, no political reason, from 1868 to 1876, why democrats should not, if so inclined and if their personal interest lay in that direction, go upon the official bonds of State and Federal officials. No political principle was compromised by such a course; and, while any act that made it practicable for incompetent or unprincipled persons to hold public office cannot be justified, the doing of that act was not, under the circumstances, such a breach of faith as would call for public reprobation. But since the meeting of the State democratic convention and the nomination of Hampton and Simpson the conditions are changed. What was excusable a few months ago is, if done to-day, an offense against the community.

"The democratic canvass in South Carolina is broad in its aspect and liberal in its punishment of the radical rioters. Nothing short of that will satisfy them. Until that is done, they will not abate a tittle of their vigilance; and until then, executive proclamations, so far as they contemplate the disarming of the whites and the disbanding of their forces, will be no more regarded than so many sheets of blank paper."

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Do you know whether there was any discussion upon the subject of employment and the preference of one class of laborers to others in these democratic meetings?—A. I know that there were public meetings held, and preference was intended to be given to those who voted the democratic ticket over those who voted the radical ticket, as it was called.

Q. I will ask you if in your communications with Mr. Simonton, who is, as I understand, the chairman of the democratic committee, anything was proposed by you or between you with reference to the action of the democratic and republican parties upon the subject of the general peace of the city at the time of these riots of which we were speaking?—A. They had an organization here known as the Hunkidori Club. They were a band of rather rough, obstreperous people. The democrats claimed that they belonged to the republican party. I claimed and proved that it was a democratic organization and organized by democrats, and that was what the conversation was about. The question was who could or would control them. It was a day or two after the last riot. I insisted with Colonel Simonton and the others that it was their business to control them, as they had organized them. They had been organized by the democratic party to carry this State in the municipal election which took place a year ago. The same party created a riot here under the democratic league. It is alleged that the Hunkidories created the riot. I wrote a letter to Colonel Simonton, which led to a committee being appointed on both sides as a committee of conference, composed of eight or nine members on each side, toward preserving the peace of this city. That was, I think, two or three days after the riot.

Q. What riot was that?—A. The 6th of September.

Q. What resulted from this action?—A. It was admitted on the part of the democrats that they had certain rough men that they could not control. The same was also admitted on the other side. The mayor issued a proclamation forbidding all armed men except the militia from parading in the street with their guns, or at any meeting in the city. The general commanding the militia issued a like order. The militia companies are organizations chartered by the legislature. At that time the rifle clubs had charge of the city and patrolled the streets every night.

Q. In what way did they patrol the streets, if you please?—A. Some were mounted and some were on foot, with guns with bayonets fixed. There was a great deal of shouting at times going on at night. The result of that interview was that the rifle clubs were withdrawn from the streets and peace and quietness prevailed, the police taking charge of the city.

Q. Have you anything further upon this subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was said in substance at a session of this committee held in the Charleston Hotel, in the room of the chairman, one night this week, by Colonel Simonton, who was the chairman of the democratic executive committee, that he had at one time undertaken to make an arrangement with you by which the democrats would have received perhaps a majority, or, at any rate, a large number of colored votes. I want to know if you know of any such attempted arrangement.—A. I will say, in answer to that question, that they never made any arrangement with me, though they held out all kinds of inducements that were ever thought of by any set of people to get the vote. I am speaking now of the men on the committee. I had no conversation with Colonel Simonton in regard to the subject.

Q. It was a remark made by Colonel Simonton. I will read it: "It was agreed that joint discussion should go on, and I should be notified of republican meetings when they should be held, and that we should be allowed to attend with such speakers as we thought proper, and both agreed that no armed men should be present. The white population being very sparse in this section where the meetings were to be held, it was agreed that persons might be permitted to go up with us to applaud the speakers." I want to know if those men were to go for that purpose merely?—A. We did not have any such understanding as that. I used to say to the democratic speakers, and to Colonel Simonton principally, a good many times, commenting upon the use of carrying these men around the county, for instance, in this way: that they were already democrats and would vote the democratic ticket, and that any amount of speaking would do them no good. They wanted to put it on the ground, on one occasion, that it was to protect the speakers. I say this much, that there never was a day in this county but when any democrat could have gone out with me and never been insulted, but when they carried a crowd along with them they would get into a controversy, and by the time two or three words had passed the lie would be given and a pistol-shot would follow. When the thing got started that way no one could control it.

Q. Was there any question between you and him that democrats should be carried up for that purpose?—A. O, no, sir. I do not know really what those crowds were carried to those meetings for. I presume that they wanted somebody to talk to, to give them some consolation, for they had none where they went. What I mean to say is this, that at those places on the island all the vote that they could hope to get was the white vote, which was naturally democratic. For instance, on Edisto there are eighty democrat votes cast by white men; on Wadmalaw seventeen or eighteen; on John's Island probably thirty. Now take John's Island; there are not more than thirty whites on the island, and yet there are a thousand votes there. To go down there to make speeches was like making speeches to a pine-tree. I suppose it was to cheer them up that they carried them along.

Q. You have said that they were solicited to take some action with regard to the republican ticket which would give them an advantage; what was it?—A. I had a conference with a portion of the democratic executive committee in which they wanted to know what I would do for them—that is, the democratic party—upon condition that they would not nominate a sheriff, (I was a candidate for sheriff in this county,) what would I do toward the support or help of the democratic party in the campaign if they would agree not to nominate any one against me. I told them "nothing," and I explained it in these words: "You could not beat me for sheriff if you were to try." Some other proposition was made, I forget the exact language used now, in regard to the election of the county ticket for general officers and members of the legislature. One gentleman wanted to know if I would not cooperate with them and give them ten members of the legislature in this county, that is, ten men that they would select themselves. I declined to do that. I did not want to have anything to do with it. Sixteen members of the legislature and one senator were elected from this county at the last election. As I say, I declined to have anything to do with the proposition; but I did name over the set of men that I would be willing to support; men that were looked upon as good men here in the community, conservative men; men who were not bitter. The difference between us was that they wanted men that were very bitter. They wanted to name men that could not be supported on the republican side. I told them in plain words that I could not undertake to give them my reasons why it would not succeed. I knew I could not influence my friends to vote for the kind of men that they wanted. That is what I mean, and in that conversation came up this proposition: One of the gentlemen of the committee remarked that my constituents could not read very well and that I could send democratic tickets to these places and they would vote them. I declined to do that, and stated that I did not get what popularity I had with the colored people in that way, and that no one who practiced that could keep their confidence. The gentlemen on that committee were Mr. George H. Walter, a gentleman by the name of Jewey, of the firm of Jewey & Bee, Mr. De Lion, (Mr. De Lion was the one who made the proposition about deceiving the people in regard to the ticket,) and one of the Smythes, was present on that committee. I think it was J. Adger Smythe. That ended the conference.

Q. It has been stated that the vote of this county was some 4,000 and something above the legitimate and legal vote which the county could cast; I want to know if you have examined this subject and what you can say with regard to the result of the election, the number of votes that were cast, and the strength of the combined vote of the republican and democratic parties?—A. I recollect something being said about that soon after the election was over. I did not trace it very far. I looked up the number of votes returned—I think 23,000—and I then looked up the census returns for 1875 and found out that the vote did not come up to the males reported in the census the year before as being 21 years of age.

Q. Do you know anything about the taking of the census, so far as the city and county was concerned, for 1875?—A. I do not know anything about it except that it was taken.

Q. Do you know anything about the character of the man who took the census?—A. The gentleman who took the census is regarded as a reliable and worthy man; Mr. George W. Clark was the man.

Q. Has it ever been impugned in any way as being an imperfect work?—A. I have never heard of its being, sir. So far as that idea is concerned, I will state this of my own knowledge, there is very little difference between the democratic and republican vote here. It is very close. I know the first municipal election we had after the reconstruction acts were passed was under a registration where nearly every voter in the city registered. Party lines were just as closely drawn then as they were in the past election. The republicans carried the city by just 17 votes. What I want to impress upon you is, that that was done under full registration. In the past election I do not remember who carried the city, but it was not probably more than 30 votes either way. Under the election law any person in the county could come here and vote.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. The first meeting which was called, if I correctly understood you, was at Biggin Church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A day or two after Hampton's nomination?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did a joint discussion take place there?—A. No, sir.

Q. And no violence took place at that meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. The next meeting was at Strawberry Ferry, about ten miles below Biggin church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Calcock a member of the democratic county executive committee?—A. I do not think he had anything to do with the executive committee, but was, I think, the precinct chairman of Strawberry Ferry.

Q. In what parish is Strawberry Ferry?—A. Well, there are no parishes now. The parish line used to be Saint Johns Berkley.

Q. How many negro voters are at Strawberry Ferry?—A. I think the vote is somewhere in the neighborhood, probably a little short, of four hundred.

Q. About how many white voters are there there?—A. Well, this time they voted one hundred and fourteen, I think. Now, I will not be certain, but it is somewhere in that neighborhood, I think.

Q. Do you know whether all of those white men resided there that voted there?—A. I do not.

Q. The negro population largely preponderates at that point?—A. O, yes.

Q. There was nothing said by Mr. Calcock to you as to the number of speakers who would go down?—A. No.

Q. Nor was there anything said to you whether any other than speakers should go down?—A. I will state in regard to that, if I had been informed (that was the first meeting) that they were going to carry a crowd from the city I should probably have objected.

Q. But there was nothing said between you on the subject?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. Nor was there any agreements that any further notice would be given to you as to who would go to the meeting, or anything of that kind?—A. O, no. He merely came down to know if I was going to have the meeting at Strawberry Ferry such a day. He first told me who he was, and then that he had come down to ascertain if I would agree to a joint discussion. It was agreed that we should have a joint discussion, but there was nothing said about who would go to the meeting.

Q. Did you see Mr. Calcock again until the Strawberry meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you got off the train at the station to go to the Strawberry meeting, if I correctly understand you, you saw colored men assembled at the depot greatly excited?—A. A few of them there.

Q. And as you rode along the road from the station you found knots of men?—A. I overtook others, some of them going to the meeting, and maybe one or two going the other way.

Q. All whom you saw seemed however to be laboring under an excitement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You found about fifteen women on the road?—A. Somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q. Who were also considerably excited?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored men did you find at the place of meeting when you got there?—

A. I should suppose about three hundred or three hundred and fifty.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Some of them had their guns.

Q. About what proportion of those colored men had arms?—A. Well, there may have been fifty of them. I do not think there were over that.

Q. What kind of arms had they?—A. Well, most of them were old-fashioned muskets.

Q. Some shot-guns?—A. Yes, some of them had shot-guns. I noticed two or three shot-guns.

Q. How long was it after you came to the place of meeting that you discovered the steamer approaching?—A. Well, I suppose it was fifteen minutes; in fact, I saw the steamer coming up the river before I got there, but it was about fifteen minutes before she became visible from the spot I was at.

Q. Were any of these men whom you met upon the road armed?—A. Yes, once in a while one of them had his old musket or shot-gun; very few of them, however.

Q. You say there were about one hundred and fifty men on board the steamer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They came in the boats from the steamer which had anchored in the stream close to the shore and stopped at the shore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were armed with rifles?—A. Yes, sir; Winchester rifles.

Q. All of them?—A. Well, Major Barker was in charge of them. He did not have any rifle. He had two pistols. I do not think there were more than half a dozen in the whole party who wore without rifles, and they were the men who were the leaders or who had the party in charge.

Q. Major Barker says there were about fifty guns?—A. I do not know what he means by "about." He can put his own construction on that. I counted the line when it passed up the hill and came up under the oak-trees. I was standing on the stand we were going to speak from, and they marched up by in two ranks, and I counted them.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How many men did you count?—A. One hundred and fifty odd; there were not more than 153.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Did you particularly observe and count the guns which they had?—A. No, sir, I did not; but the most of them were armed.

Q. The democrats took a position on one side of the stand and the negroes were at the other side of the stand, and, although there was some talk, no violence at all was used by either party?—A. No, sir; no violence.

Q. And the meeting adjourned in a better spirit than that which was evinced when you first came upon the ground?—A. Yes, sir; I think it did.

Q. Did you go home with them that night?—A. I did.

Q. They took you on the boat?—A. Well, I will make this statement in regard to that: I had the closing speech, and Ferguson, or some of them, I forget who the speaker next to me was—but anyhow they had crowded me a good deal in regard to time; that is the time I would have left over to get to the depot. If I had gone to the depot I would not have had but ten minutes to speak. I reminded them of that and said therefore "I shall take my own time," and Major Barker said, "Well, it won't do to leave you here to night;" so I said, "I cannot get to the depot to-night, and therefore it is no use to hurry." He then said, "Well, we will take you home on the boat;" so I then finished and came on home with them.

Q. The body of those men stopped on the shore, and sent a committee up to you, of which Mr. Calcock was a member, and afterward the men marched up when you and the committee had agreed as to the preliminaries, and so on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any colored men speak or offer to speak at that meeting on the democratic side?—A. I think not. I do not think they had any at that meeting.

Q. How many colored men spoke on your side?—A. I think there were three. There seemed to be a very bitter feeling between Barker and Thompson.

Q. Thompson was a negro?—A. Yes; Barker characterized him as a "foreign nigger."

Q. And the democrats at the meeting I suppose criticised pretty severely those high in office in South Carolina?—A. Well, yes; that was the line of argument that they adopted.

Q. And also spoke about what they alleged to have been circulated: that the negroes would be put back into slavery if they voted the democratic ticket?—A. They started out upon that. They asserted that the negroes had been told that unless they voted the republican ticket they would be put back into slavery.

Q. You say Major Barker was very bitter against leading republicans?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. He made bitter remarks.

Q. Did he speak of Governor Chamberlain?—A. O, no; he wasn't anywhere in sight. He had not been nominated at that time.

Q. Did he speak of any of the State officers?—A. Yes; I think he did in a general way.

Q. Well, against whom were his bitter remarks particularly directed?—A. Republican office-holders. He charged me with being a conspirator; that is, inasmuch as I had advised the colored people not to work for certain prices on the river. I did not consider that it had anything to do with politics. I asked him to put up his witnesses. I assured him that it was not so, and then he said he was very glad to learn that it was not so.

Q. Mr. Ferguson, you say, made a very bitter and violent speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the language that he used about carrying the State?—A. Well, that the white people had stood this radical rule as long as they were going to, and that it had to change. One expression of his I recollect was, "By the eternal God, it shall change;" and then he went on to state about their being native citizens, born and raised here, and that the carpet-baggers had taken possession of the soil, and then he went on to unfold what his purpose was here; that he came from Mississippi to show how they had carried that State.

Q. He did not give any detailed statement of the plan they had adopted in Mississippi?—A. Well, no, he didn't have time to go into that; he only had half an hour, and they stopped him when his time was up. I recollect he named Cassius M. Clay as one of the parties who had introduced the plan in Mississippi.

Q. There has been something said about this plan. Just state what he said it was.—A. Well, first that the colored people could not expect to live on the land of the democrats as long as the colored people voted against them at the election. That was one. Then that they could not expect the democrats to furnish them with employment if they persisted in voting against them. He said nothing about violence, except the manner in which he talked; that these things first must be changed, and second that they should be changed, and that they could change them. I know what he meant, but I am not going to give my version of that.

Q. He spoke in a very earnest and determined manner?—A. Yes, sir; very determined.

Q. He criticised pretty severely the class of men whom he styled carpet-baggers?—

A. As a general thing he did. These here in South Carolina he did not know anything about. I told him when I got up to speak that he was a carpet-bagging here from Mississippi.

Q. Well, did he tell the people in his speech about the pecculation and plundering of these men whom he called carpet-baggers who had come down into his State of Mississippi?—A. He spoke about their doing it in Mississippi, and said something about Alabama.

Q. He spoke of the business interests of the people of Mississippi having suffered greatly from the government which they had had?—A. Well, in a general way I think he did.

Q. Did he tell the colored people there that unless that class of men would be driven out of the South the white men would be broken up, and that they would have no means to employ them at all?—A. I don't think he put it in that way. He put it in this way: That the democrats must have control of the State, and that there was no way of getting out of it except by the help of the colored vote, and that they must have it, and that they would have it. That is about the way he put it.

Q. Well, there was no blow struck at that meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, the next meeting was held on the 6th of October, at Mount Pleasant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a peaceable, quiet meeting?—A. With the exception of the talk. As I say, the lie was passed once or twice. I made a statement in regard to a reformer here in the legislature, a man who had been elected as a reformer, a leading man in the place, and I stated that although the democrats were talking about reform yet they did not want it; that that was an instrument that any one could play upon, and that they had been playing upon it for some time, and I cited this case; that this gentleman who had been elected two or three years before as a great reformer had drawn his pay, although he never went to the legislature a day, and that he not only drew his pay but drew his mileage, and some man said it was a lie.

Q. Who was that man?—A. It was George A. Trenholm. He is dead now.

Q. I asked who the man was that remarked that it was a lie.—A. It was Mr. Walker.

Q. Who was Mr. Walker?—A. He is a democrat.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives at Mount Pleasant. He was the man who insisted on my dividing time with him.

Q. What business is he engaged in?—A. He is a lawyer. One other man made the same remark.

- Q. Who was that?—A. A man by the name of Kimball.
- Q. Where does he reside?—A. He resides at Mount Pleasant.
- Q. What is his business?—A. Farmer.
- Q. They had both known the gentleman about whom you made the assertion?—A. They both knew him.
- Q. Was there anything else said?—A. I don't know that anything else was said.
- Q. Then, with the exception of these two, men there was nothing further objectionable said?—A. Nothing. I knew it was true. I had the certificate to prove it.
- Q. Did any negro try to speak at that meeting on the democratic side?—A. Yes; there was one, but I have forgotten his name. They put up one, and there was considerable objection to it on the part of the colored men. They did not want to hear him. From the commencement of the campaign it was the hardest thing in the world to get the colored men to stand and listen to a colored man who was a democrat speak; and it was with the greatest difficulty that they would be permitted to speak at all; it was the general report when a colored man showed himself to speak on that side, "Well, how much did you get? You have sold yourself; we don't want to hear you."
- Q. Next day, the 7th of October, there was another meeting at Strawberry Ferry?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were there any guns at Mount Pleasant in possession of the white men?—A. No, sir. No guns in the possession of anybody, either white or black.
- Q. How about Strawberry Ferry at the second meeting?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who had them?—A. Both parties had guns. The democrats left their guns on that occasion on board the boat.
- Q. Did the boat anchor out in the stream?—A. No, sir; she pulled up to the wharf within about three hundred yards where the meeting was.
- Q. Did you know that they had their guns until after the meeting was over when you went on board the boat?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Well, had the negroes guns there on that occasion?—A. I suppose maybe there might have been a dozen or so of these old muskets.
- Q. Do you recollect of any of the speakers having remonstrated with you on that occasion, and stated to you that some of the negroes there had guns, while the agreement was that no one should be armed?—A. Not at that meeting; that was at the first meeting. I complained very bitterly of their coming there armed, when Mr. Barker and Mr. Barnwell jumped up, and pointed toward the colored men that had their old muskets, and said, "These men are armed too." I said, "That is not what I am talking about; it is wrong in both of you coming here with arms."
- Q. You do not remember of any remonstrance having been made at the second Strawberry Ferry meeting?—A. No, sir; when the meeting was called to order I saw some ten or a dozen men with guns, and I requested them to carry them to a house two or three hundred yards away. The democrats said, "O, no; it does not make any difference;" but I remonstrated with them about that kind of thing, and some of them went and put them away.
- Q. On the 9th of October you had a meeting at the Red-Top church?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That was a quiet meeting?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That was not a joint discussion?—A. No, sir.
- Q. On the 10th a meeting was fixed for Whaley's church, which was not held?—A. That was broken up on account of the rain.
- Q. On the 11th of October a meeting was held on John's Island?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That was a quiet, orderly meeting?—A. Well, yes, sir.
- Q. Had the white men arms?—A. Yes, sir; pistols; nothing but pistols.
- Q. Had the negroes their guns?—A. Probably a hundred or more.
- Q. Was there any remonstrance made by the democrats about their having these guns?—A. No, sir; the guns were stacked out one side from the meeting, and a guard put over them. There was no remonstrance at all on the part of any one.
- Q. That was a quiet, peaceable meeting?—A. Yes, with this exception, as I said yesterday, I think, when the democratic speakers, as a general thing, got up to talk they would insist upon the colored people asking questions.
- Q. But what I mean is that there was no violence?—A. O, no, sir; there was no violence.
- Q. Was that the meeting at which Delaney, the colored speaker, desired to speak?—A. No, sir.
- Q. The next meeting you had was at Wadmelow Island?—A. Yes; the next day.
- Q. Had the white men arms there?—A. Nothing but their pistols.
- Q. Had the negroes arms?—A. No, sir; I saw no guns with them.
- Q. Was that the place where Delaney wanted to speak?—A. No, sir; Delaney wanted to speak the Saturday after that, at Edisto.
- Q. On the 13th of October there was a meeting at John's Island?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did the white men have guns?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did the negroes have guns?—A. Yes, sir; twenty or twenty-five guns.
- Q. On the 14th you had a meeting at Edisto Island?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the meeting that Delaney the colored man, wanted to speak at?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where the negroes withdrew themselves and refused to hear him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any guns in the hands of the negroes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any in the hands of the whites?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any violence at the meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. The 15th was Sunday; and on the day of the 16th of October came the Cainhoj meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the only meeting at which there were white men with guns was the first Strawberry Ferry meeting? Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the second Strawberry Ferry meeting they had guns, but did not bring them out or exhibit them to view?—A. That is right.

Q. And at all the meetings, from the first Strawberry meeting down to the Cainhoj meeting, there had been no act of violence upon the part of the whites?—A. No, sir; nor the colored people either.

Q. Did the democrats take any guns up to the Cainhoj meeting?—A. I do not think they did. I did not see any.

Q. You saw no guns on board the boat going up?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did those ten or twelve men whom you have spoken about as having been in this house get these guns that they had?—A. They were set up in the corner of the house. They belonged to the colored people. They had been in the habit, since the war, of coming through the woods to the meetings, and they would bring their guns along with them for hunting purposes. The whites have done it many times. These were old muskets, muzzle-loaders, that I suppose they had bought for two or three dollars apiece.

Q. Do you know of other arms having been concealed in the ravine near the place?—A. No; I have heard of that, but I do not believe it. There were colored men who had their guns setting up twenty, thirty, or fifty yards from the place against the trees.

Q. About how many colored men had guns?—A. I think about forty; not over that.

Q. When you heard the exclamation "Look out! Look out!" you say you turned and saw ten or twelve men with muskets in their hands, with the muzzles depressed toward the ground and the butt of the musket resting under the shoulder, in the arm-pit?—A. Let me correct you, because I was in a position where I could have seen. I said when the exclamation was made, McKinley, who was standing on the table, turned, and pointing over toward the open door, made the remark that "Those men"—pointing in that way—"have got guns and are going to shoot," and jumped off the stand. The crowd which then blocked up the end of the stand, and which kept me from seeing the men in this building, commenced breaking away, and then I saw these men there in the position which you spoke of.

Q. They did not raise them, but if I correctly understand you, when Mr. O'Connor halloed out "What are you doing with those guns?" they backed some distance, until they got outside of the building?—A. Yes, sir; went backwards and sideways.

Q. Retreating out at the side of the building?—A. Yes, sir; to the far end of it.

Q. Did you see the first shot fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who fired it?—A. I could not tell you that.

Q. Well, now at that time when they were backing did you see any other guns in the hands of anybody?—A. No, sir; those were the first guns that I saw; I did not know that there was a gun on the place until I saw them in the hands of those men.

Q. You cannot give the name of the person who fired the first shot?—A. I can give you my impression, if you want it.

Q. Could you swear positively that you know the man who fired the first shot?—A. No, I do not know; all I know about it is that I saw where he stood; saw from the smoke of his gun, and heard the report of it.

Q. Well, you saw smoke and heard the report of a gun, and it came somewhere from the immediate position in which these men were standing with these muskets?—A. O, it came from those men. I was looking at that man just as I am looking at you; the building is forty-five feet long, and I was not more than fifty feet from that man when he fired that gun, and I saw him; I saw him bring it up to his shoulder and fire it; that was the first shot fired at the meeting.

Q. You did not see or hear a colored man fire a pistol before that shot was fired?—A. No, sir; I have heard it, but it is not true.

Q. How many white men were killed altogether in that affair?—A. You will not think me impertinent when I make the suggestion that they ought not properly to be called white men, that they were loafers. I think there were six that were killed. One of them was an old man.

Q. He was killed in the vestry-room of the church?—A. I do not know. I was not there. I have understood that he was found outside. He must have been killed when the fight was nearly over.

Q. Do you know anything of the bodies of the men who were killed having been mutilated?—A. Only what I have heard. The colored people were exasperated, and I will describe it in this way: I have read of mobs in the city of New York, or in other large cities, where persons have been knocked down and trampled to death in the excitement. Now you can imagine from that the condition of a man who had suffered from mob-violence. After that colored man was killed they were a perfect mob; they were infuriated; they felt that they had been outraged, and it took some time to control them so as to stop them. They wanted to go down and burn the boat. I say here now, and I have been borne out by democrats, that if I had been killed at that meeting I don't believe a man would have got away from there.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Did you know any of the men whom you saw with the twelve guns when you looked around there; did you recognize any of the men from having seen them before?—A. No, sir; I do not think I could. There has been no grand jury in this county since that thing happened. When the next grand jury is formed they will all be brought up. They are all known.

Q. Did you recognize neither one of these twelve men as having been on the boat going up?—A. Only in this way, that there is a marked difference between a man who lives in the country and of these roughs that lays around these engine-houses here in town. A great many of that class of people went up on the boat. I had cautioned Mr. O'Connor in regard to them. I knew from their dress and actions that they were a portion of that party. That is all the way I could identify them.

Q. You suppose that they were the same men who went on the boat, but you did not recognize them as men whom you had positively seen on the boat?—A. From their general appearance I am satisfied that they were the men, and Mr. Sanders will state the same. They came from the city.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. If I understand you correctly, when you and Mr. Walker went up to the negroes, who were firing their volleys, you were unable to stop them shooting entirely; they would still once in a while fire a shot?—A. Yes, sir; but I do not know about the volleys. They came from the democrats, I imagine.

Q. Well, there were a great many shots fired?—A. O, a great many; what probably might have been called during the war considerable of a skirmish. When Walker was with me there were no shots fired from the main body of the democrats, and I stated yesterday that if he had remained with me that would have kept them from using their pistols, and that we would have succeeded in stopping it and have saved the life of the old man.

Q. That is a matter of opinion. It had not at that time quieted down; there were random shots being fired during that whole time?—A. When I first got up to them I succeeded pretty well in stopping them.

Q. Was it stopped entirely when Walker left?—A. I think it was.

Q. Did you not state in your examination-in-chief that you were not wholly able to stop the firing, that they were still firing random shots, and you thought if he had remained you would have stopped it entirely?—A. That is what I say.

Q. The democrats retreated soon after that to the vestry-room of this church?—A. Most of them fell back to that when I left them.

Q. The negroes followed after them?—A. Yes, sir; I saw one or two men who persisted in coming out and discharging their pistols toward a portion of the colored men.

Q. Yes; but the negroes followed after these retreating white men.—A. Well, I stated it in this way, that when Walker left and went back to this party who had taken shelter in the vestry room and behind the grave-yard fence, they commenced firing their pistols; then the negroes advanced on them and drove them out.

Q. Then the negroes did advance upon them?—A. They did.

Q. And this old man was killed at that time?—A. He must have been, because he was found there.

Q. How many negroes were wounded?—A. I know of one; I do not know of any more of my own knowledge.

Q. How many white men?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. A great many?—A. Five or six, probably; as I said, probably the most of their guns were loaded with small shot.

Q. Some of them were loaded with bullets, were they not?—A. They may have been.

Q. Some with buck-shot?—A. Some of them, probably; a good many that were wounded were wounded in the legs with small shot.

Q. How many white men did you say were there altogether?—A. I suppose at the meeting altogether there were fully three hundred; two hundred and fifty, fully, went from here, and they had probably fifty more from that parish.

Q. How many negroes were there?—A. At least four hundred.

Q. You say that you offered Colonel Simonton to accompany his speakers to any meeting that you had called, provided no one went with them.—A. Well, no party of democrats; no one except the democratic speakers.

Q. Why did he decline that; did he say?—A. Well, he did not say, but I suppose that it was because he was satisfied it would not do any good.

Q. Did he not tell you that he would not consent to allow democratic speakers to go to these meetings with no one to protect them?—A. No; because I told him that there was not the slightest doubt about my being able to protect any two or three men in going to these meetings and saying what they pleased.

Q. He said nothing on the subject to you?—A. No, sir. The men that they were sending were no protection.

Q. You say in your testimony that the democrats claimed to have a club at Red-Top church of forty men, but that they never had any such club there. Do you know that fact of your own knowledge?—A. Yes; I would be a poor organizer if I did not know how many they had.

Q. You know of your own knowledge that there were not forty men joined the democratic club then?—A. O, they may have had forty men there any night when they had a democratic club there, but when it came to voting it was another thing.

Q. You do not know of any men having signed a paper?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know that there were not forty men who signed a paper agreeing to vote the democratic ticket, and called themselves a democratic club?—A. I am satisfied of that. I do not know what Mr. Latham did in his own private house. When it was claimed that they had forty men, I told them just the men they had, three, and you will find that published in the newspapers.

Q. You knew the negroes would not vote the democratic ticket?—A. I knew a good many of them would vote it.

Q. You knew just how the negroes all over this country would vote?—A. Yes, sir; pretty well.

Q. You could tell just before the election just how many would have voted the democratic ticket?—A. O, no; I do not say that, but I made a pretty good estimate.

Q. You say the Cainhoy trouble occurred after the proclamation of the President and Governor Chamberlain, ordering rifle clubs to disband?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection of it. I am satisfied that is true.

Q. Do I understand you to say that these rifle clubs never did disband?—A. I am satisfied they did not.

Q. Do you know of any rifle club in Charleston which kept up its organization and had its armory as it did before the proclamation of the governor and President?—A. I stated that after the proclamation they carried their guns home from the armories, but that when occasion required they went and got them.

Q. In other words, if a man owned a gun he took it to his house?—A. From the armory.

Q. If the gun belonged to him he had a right to take it to his house?—A. I will answer that by saying that he had a right to leave it there.

Q. They were known as rifle clubs throughout the city?—A. They were certainly known as rifle clubs throughout the city.

Q. After the proclamation did these men march through the streets and parade, and keep up the organization that they had kept up before?—A. I do not know that they did.

Q. Do you not know that every rifle club in the city gave up its organization; that the members took their guns out of the armory, and ceased to hold any further meetings in the armories as clubs?—A. No; I do not know that. On the contrary, I know that they did not do it, and that they were called together time and again afterward by their officers.

Q. Give us a case in which they were called together that you know of.—A. For instance, when they sent men to these meetings, the officers would call on men of such and such a club, and they would go on the boat, and go to the meeting.

Q. But I am speaking about the proclamation of the President and governor which just immediately preceded the Cainhoy affair.—A. After that I do know that to all intents and purposes they kept up their organizations as they did before, and called on their men, and the men responded time and again.

Q. Do you know of any rifle clubs, after the proclamation of the President and Governor Chamberlain, having met at their armories?—A. O, they met every night, nearly.

Q. Give us an instance of the company, and of the night when they met.—A. I can do that. They met at the same places; but they did not have their guns.

Q. Now, sir, these clubs which went up to Cainhoy committed no act of violence that you know of, did they?—A. I do not know of any.

Q. You did not hear of any?—A. No, sir.

Q. They did not kill any negro?—A. No, sir.

Q. But they brought down the dead bodies, or some of them, of the white men who had been slain there?—A. Yes, sir; that is, came down on the boat, and the negroes appeared and took the dead body of the colored man at the same time.

Q. They appeared at the same time, did they?—A. Well, Major Buist was in command of the rifle club that went up first, and he in his report spoke of meeting the colored people and letting them go there and get the body of the colored man. I have his statement for it. They met them at a house some distance from there.

Q. Did they meet the rifle clubs?—A. The rifle clubs went to this house where there were some ten or a dozen colored people assembled, and informed them that there was a colored man lying dead on the ground at this place and that they could send and get him.

Q. And no act of violence occurred between them?—A. No, sir; not so far as I heard.

Q. Do you know of Governor Chamberlain's having been made an honorary member of any of these rifle clubs here in this city?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that he was not?—A. If he was, he was in bad company.

Q. This postmaster of whom you spoke, Mr. Birney, has been acting as postmaster here, has he?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. Who is acting?—A. A gentleman by the name of Boseman.

Q. You spoke of rifle clubs having patrolled the streets of Charleston. Was that immediately after the September riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any act of violence having been committed by any of these men belonging to these rifle clubs while they were acting as patrols?—A. Not of my own knowledge. I know of my own knowledge that they patrolled the streets, though.

Q. You say that one man of the subcommittee of the executive committee wanted to know if you would not coalesce and give them ten members of the legislature in the county. Who was that man?—A. I think it was Mr. De Lion. I know Mr. Jervey advised him that he had better let it alone.

Q. At this time you agreed that if they would support men that you would name you would agree to support them also?—A. I would like to have it put in this way: I offered to have certain men nominated in the convention. I knew that they could be nominated if they would support them.

Q. Then this convention was prior to the nomination of members of the legislature, and other county officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is the Mr. Clark who took the census?—A. I do not know what he does here now; he used to be a commission merchant.

Q. What is he, a democrat or a republican?—A. A republican.

Q. Is he a southern man?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long has he been here?—A. Since the war. He does not hold any position.

Q. How long have you resided in South Carolina?—A. With the exception of probably eighteen months' or two years' absence, since 1866.

Q. Where were you during the absence of the eighteen months or two years to which you refer?—A. Well, at several places—Georgia, Texas, Louisiana, and Alabama. That is, I went to Texas and I had to pass through these States to get there.

Q. What political positions have you held since you came to South Carolina? Commence with the first and give them.—A. The first position in connection with politics that I held was as member of the constitutional convention that met here under the reconstruction acts. I was elected from this city at that time. The city was an election district of itself under the old law.

Q. What was your next position?—A. I was elected in the spring of 1868 member of Congress to fill the unexpired term in that Congress.

Q. Did you take your seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you serve?—A. Served out the term.

Q. What other political positions?—A. I was re-elected for two years to Congress.

Q. Did you serve that term?—A. Yes, sir; clear through.

Q. What was the next position?—A. Member of the legislature, I think, for one session.

Q. What other position after that?—A. Sheriff.

Q. When were you elected sheriff first?—A. Four years ago.

Q. Were you re-elected?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When, on the 7th of November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You held the position of sheriff four years?—A. That is constitutional, at any rate.

Q. Were you ever in either army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which army?—A. The confederate.

Q. In what branch of the confederate army?—A. When I first went into it, it was known as the partisan rangers, under a special act of the confederate congress, but they were afterward changed to cavalry and regularly mustered in.

Q. When did you enlist in the army?—A. In 1862.

Q. Where did you enlist?—A. In Savannah, Ga.

Q. How long did you serve in the army?—A. Well, you may say that I served until the war closed. I was here when Charleston went up.

Q. At what place when Charleston went up?—A. In the street.

Q. Did you serve in the field in the army up until the time Charleston was burned? Were you in active service during that time?—A. I was notified by a conscript officer that I was a soldier in 1862. I was informed then that I could select a place for myself or they would select one for me. I selected the place. I went in the confederate army as a private. At an election held some time after that I was elected a third lieutenant. I came to the conclusion that I might as well have a position as carry a musket on my shoulder. Afterward the other officers in the army resigned and I was promoted as captain of the company here in Charleston and held that position until the war closed. We were ordered away from Savannah in the last days of 1862. We arrived here the 2d or 3d day of January, 1863, and were encamped here in the city. Some time in the following June of 1863 we were ordered to Georgetown. I went to Georgetown and there we had a difficulty between the officers. It was, you may say, a continual quarrel between the superior officers and myself. They wanted to appoint officers in the company. It grew out of that. When I was third lieutenant they kept the company for three months without any officers except myself. The majority of the company tried to appoint officers, but it could not be done without my consent and I would not give that. They wanted to give the positions to the sons of rich men here and I would not give up to it.

Q. What was the name of the company?—A. Company D, Twenty-first Georgia Battalion. On a good many occasions charges were preferred against me for different things, and in Georgetown I was tried on some of the charges preferred.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Well, what were they?—A. Well, I will have to refer you to the record now. There are so many that I could not tell. There were a great many trifling charges against me.

Q. What was the result of that trial?—A. I think they said I was guilty of what they charged me with.

Q. What was the result?—A. The result was that I left there.

Q. And came from there where?—A. From there to Charleston, from Charleston to Columbia, from Columbia to Augusta, and then back to Charleston.

Q. Were you in prison at all?—A. Yes.

Q. In what place?—A. The Charleston jail.

Q. For what length of time?—A. I suppose about ten months.

Q. How long was it before the destruction of a portion of the city that you were released from prison? I am speaking of the bombardment.—A. The day the United States troops came in here.

Q. Were you in prison when the United States troops came in here?—A. I was out.

Q. How long had you been out?—A. I had been out for a week or more. I want to state that the parties who state to the contrary lie. The party who discharged me is right here in the city. I have been here amenable to the laws of the State ever since. I came here to Charleston and had an interview with General Jordan. While I was in General Jordan's office he asked me some questions and wanted to know when I left Georgetown. He wanted to know where I had been. I told him, and he said it was strange. He reached up and pulled down from a pigeon-hole a telegram from Georgia. It read this way, directed to the chief of police in Augusta, Georgia: "Arrest C. C. Bowen and place him in close confinement. Bowen is charged with assassinating Major White." General Jordan showed me that in his office. I said: "Well, I am here, ready to answer; what are you going to do?" He says: "I don't know." I walked out of General Jordan's office and went around to Major Gear's office, who was then provost-marshal, and told him I had seen this telegram in General Jordan's office, and that I was there for the purpose of surrendering myself. I staid there from about 11 o'clock in the day until dinner-time, which was about 2 o'clock. I then said to Captain Gear, "I am boarding at the Pavilion Hotel; if the order comes, do not send for me; I will come back." Crossing down King street I met a detective, who told me that the order had been sent and that if there was anything wrong I had better get out of the way, and I said: "No, I will now surrender to you; I have been looking for this thing." I saw Mr. Sommer, a lawyer, and put my case in his hands and told him that I was in Columbia at the time that this thing had occurred that I was charged with—the 7th of March—and that he would find my name registered there in the registry of the hotel; and he telegraphed up there and satisfied himself that that was correct. He sent word on to Georgetown for them to bring up their witnesses. They never brought them. I was detained at police headquarters for ten days, and was finally committed to the jail by the then mayor. He committed me to jail upon a charge of assault and battery with intent to kill. I demanded a trial, but there was no chance of getting it, and my lawyers, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Sommer, tried to bring up the case by habeas corpus, which did not succeed. The next thing they tried was to get it before a military commission. The next thing they arrested a man that admitted that he had done the shooting but that I had told him to do it. That was all they could ever find. I have been here ever since that time. I have never dodged anything I could.

Q. Who was the officer who was killed?—A. A man by the name of White.

Q. What position did he hold?—A. He was major in the battalion in which I had served.

Q. Was there anything said about this killing before this military court at all?—

A. The charges that I spoke of were preferred by White when he was alive.

Q. What were these charges?—A. O, they brought a great many trifling charges against me—some for conduct in becoming an officer and a gentleman. I had on several occasions asked for a leave of absence, and failed to get it for a long time. Others could get what I could not. I finally succeeded in getting a leave of absence for ten days. Everybody knew that that would not last me until I could get where I wanted to go. I took it though. When it got out I set down and extended it myself, and they took offense at it, and discharged me for it. I was very glad of it.

Q. Were there any other charges than that?—A. O, lots of them.

Q. What were they?—A. Forgery, bigamy, and so on, and I can remember I had an orderly sergeant in my company. I recollect that they charged him with being Mephistopheles and alleged that I was under his influence. It was a common report in that battalion, and it was known by everybody here that if we had ever gone into battle that at least two or three of the rifles in the battalion would have been aimed at Major White. He was one of those overbearing, domineering men that never considered the men under him; putting a ball and chain on his men was a common amusement for him. It was a wonder that he lived as long as he did. I will say this under oath, that I had nothing to do with the killing.

Q. How long after the major preferred these charges against you and you were dismissed from the service by this court-martial was it that he was killed?—A. I suppose six months; it might not have been that long—from four to six months.

Q. Where was he killed?—A. He is said to have been killed on Waccamaw Neck, Georgetown.

Q. Was he assassinated?—A. I will tell you what I have heard about it. I was not there. The quarters that they had were houses that had been occupied by the colored people, who had been sent away from there. He was sitting in one of these houses one night and somebody discharged a rifle, the bullet from which went through the weather-board and struck him in the knee, from which wound he afterward died.

Q. How long after the shooting was it that you were arrested?—A. I suppose may be ten days.

Q. Had White died at this time?—A. No, sir; he did not die until some time after that.

Q. Then he was not dead when the information was made against you?—A. When this dispatch that I had assassinated him was written he was not dead. He lived a month afterwards.

Q. You said in the first place that you were committed on the charge of assault and battery with intent to kill. At the time you were so committed White was not dead?—A. No, sir. The man whom they said afterwards that they had arrested undoubtedly did the shooting. It was in evidence that he had been induced to make the statement that he did it; that he was going to clear himself. That is a matter of record in the courts here. He afterwards made an affidavit and sent it down here while I was in jail. Colonel Simms was then the judge-advocate and testified to it afterwards here in court that when he came to examine the papers in the charges sent down against me, he found an affidavit purporting to have been made by this same man Grimes. The regiment was sent to Virginia and Grimes had been left in jail, and he weakened. Then he made another affidavit that the story he had told in regard to me was not true.

Q. Were you tried for this alleged offense before you were discharged from custody?—A. No, sir; I had no chance of getting a trial.

Q. How long after you were discharged from custody did the trial take place?—A. Several years.

Q. How many years?—A. The trial was a year ago last June. Since I have been sheriff. A certain party trumped up the charge with the intention of holding it over me, and when they got that far I forced them to a trial.

Q. You were tried for what?—A. I was tried for murder, and they undertook to use this man Grimes against me.

Q. Did he appear as a witness?—A. O, yes; they brought him here and I insisted on his being kept in jail; they succeeded in getting him away and would not allow him to be tried afterwards.

Q. Did you appear as a witness?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he allege that you had been the instigator of the affair?—A. Yes, sir; he made four different statements. These parties were my political enemies. They went after Grimes in Georgia, and put him in jail and got an affidavit out of him and let him out of jail when they found they could not do anything with me without getting Grimes's head in also; and he went off with their connivance.

Q. Did he swear on the trial that you had employed him to do the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the jury white or colored?—A. It was colored. The verdict was given without their leaving the box. The solicitor himself admitted that he had no cause. The judge was a democrat by the name of Shaw. The trial took place in Georgetown County, and the first proposition made by my enemies was that the court would continue the case until some special term after the next regular term. I saw that they wanted to hold it over me. I employed counsel and insisted on a trial, and I finally got the time fixed for a trial.

Q. Is the judge who tried the case living yet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he instruct the jury to find a verdict for you?—A. He did; the solicitor says, "Well, I submit the case without argument;" and my counsel says, "No;" and the solicitor then got up and says, "Your honor, I'll admit that we have no case;" and the judge then instructed the jury to find a verdict of acquittal.

Q. By whom had the judge been appointed?—A. He had been elected by the legislature.

Q. By a democratic or republican legislature?—A. We have not had any democratic legislature since reconstruction.

Q. What business did you then engage in between the time that you left the Army and the time of your arrest?—A. I did not engage in any; it was some eight or ten days before my arrest, and in that time I went from Georgetown to Charleston, from Charleston to Columbia, from Columbia to Augusta, and back here again.

Q. How long was it from the time the charges were preferred until the commission passed upon them and made the order of dismissal?—A. The charges were first preferred along in the fall of the year, some time in October probably; there was no trial; they could not make things suit them; there was no trial until sometime in the middle of the winter.

Q. About three months?—A. Well, it was more than that; I forget now, but I think it was in the latter part of December that the trial took place; the charges were preferred in October.

Q. Well, when did the court give their decision?—A. Well, sometime in February I think it was.

Q. Then did you remain in camp or did you leave immediately?—A. No, sir; I remained until the promulgation, which was in February.

Q. How long did you remain in camp after that?—A. Well, a few days.

Q. Then did you immediately start on this trip?—A. Yes, sir; I know it was alleged that the shooting took place on the night of the 7th of March, and that night I had been in Columbia and was stopping at the Nickerson Hotel.

Q. How far is Columbia from the place where this affair took place?—A. Between two and three hundred miles.

Q. What business had you been engaged in in Georgia?—A. Well, a good many kinds of business. When I was fourteen years old I went to learn a carpenter's trade. I staid two years and I came to the conclusion that did not suit me. I had no one to take care of me; I had no home and no friends. I then went and staid four years to learn the bricklayer's trade. I learned that and afterward worked as journeyman. I made an arrangement with Mr. Metcalf, in Augusta, Georgia, to work for him for $2 a day, and he would insure me work every day for a year. I staid with him, I think, until 1855 or 1856, or somewhere along there—until he had built a great many buildings. I then went to carrying on the business myself, of course in a small way. I had no capital. I then went in the country to different small towns and worked at my trade. I followed that trade until, I think it was, 1856 or 1857, I came here and staid a while. I had some friends living here then; when I say I came here and staid a while, I mean maybe a month. I left here and went to Texas, looking about to see what I could find to suit me to do. I came back here. I then went to Georgia and went to farming; I was in that position when the war broke out, and I was offered an opportunity of choosing for myself and I made the choice. I will say this much in answer to all these charges, that I have seen the day that I could be taken by the hands of these men here, and if I liked it could be done now. Why, I have been offered in this last election all the way from a wife to $50,000. As bad as they say I am, I can get in their boat in half an hour from now.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. In the first place, in reference to this Cainhoy meeting, you say that none of the leaders were at that meeting but Mr. M. P. O'Conner, who seemed to be the chief man, and you observe that you went over and applied to him when the difficulty took place and he ordered these men to stop?—A. Yes. He made the remark, "What are you doing with those guns?" He would have stopped it if he could.

Q. And so would the democratic party if they could?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. I do not understand you to say that the democrats were responsible for or desired this thing at Cainhoy?—A. O, no, sir.

Q. These rifle clubs, which you have spoken of, were not illegal organizations?—A. They were volunteer companies.

Q. Were they constituted under charters?—A. I think not; I may be mistaken.

Q. Is there not one called the Bowen rifle club?—A. No; that was a militia company that was chartered. There is a difference between the militia companies and the rifle clubs. Under the new constitution we provided for militia. Every man within certain ages, black and white, was ordered to be enrolled as militia. The whites did not want to enroll with the blacks, and hence, when the blacks commenced organizing militia companies, the whites had to do militia duties or pay a fine, and they commenced organizing what they called militia companies, but they were never any part of the militia of this State.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. In case the officers of the rifle clubs should call them out, how long would it take them to rally them on the street?—A. That is a matter of opinion. I suppose they could get them, under ordinary circumstances, in two or three hours.

Q. Is what is called their disbandment anything more than a suspension?—A. I do not regard it as amounting to that.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you know that they could get them out at all if they should call them to-night?—A. O, I do not know that they could.

JOSEPH H. MORGAN (colored) sworn and examined.

Mr. BANKS, (to the committee.) I call this witness to testify in regard to the meeting at Military Hall preceding the 6th of September.

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I was born in 1843, and am thirty-three years old.

Q. What is your business?—A. My business is common laborer on the bay, at job-work.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Number 18 Clifford street, in this city.

Q. Have you a family?—A. I have, sir.

Q. Will you tell me if you were, about the 6th of September, or, at any rate, before the outbreak of that date occurred, at a democratic meeting at a hall where Rivers and Jenkins, and some other colored democrats made speeches?—A. It was on the Wednesday night, the 6th of September, on George street, in a hall called Archer's Hall.

Q. Who was speaking at the moment you got there?—A. When I got in the hall Jenkins had concluded making his speech.

Q. What was the condition of things at that moment?—A. The people were in a state of confusion. There was what you might call an interruption in the meeting.

Q. In what way, whether by noise or fighting, was the disturbance manifested?—A. It was manifested by the chairman saying to put out of doors those republicans who caused the disturbance.

Q. Do you know who the chairman was?—A. The chairman was J. R. Jenkins.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Was he a colored man?—A. Yes, he is a colored man.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. How many called upon the chairman to put out these republicans?—A. Well, sir, there was a number of voices singing out, "Mr. Chairman, put out those republicans; those are the ones that causes the disturbance." I don't know the correct number of them that said that.

Q. Did the chairman make any reply?—A. Yes, sir; there was an attempt made once, but the colored men that were there changed their opinion, saying that they were democrats and they were let alone. But I personally got up on the bench and said: "Gentlemen, I am a republican, but I am here peaceably, and I desire to go out if you all think that I am disturbing the meeting, but I won't change my opinion."

Q. What did you learn as to the cause of this tumult and in what way did you learn it?—A. I went in the meeting, and Rivers was speaking, and the meeting was in a state of confusion; men were in a state of excitement. There was a request made to put out the republicans because they was the cause of the interruption, and so I asked a young fellow what was the cause of the interruption and he said to me—

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) That is not evidence.

Mr. BANKS. Well, I will ask him what was the cause of the disorder. (To the witness.) You may answer that.—A. Jenkins's remarks was the cause of the disorder in the meeting.

Q. Will you state to the committee, in your own way, what occurred that you saw yourself after this?—A. I will state that I was in the hall, and as the meeting was about to adjourn there was a resolution passed that white democrats will see the colored democrats home to their houses, and they attempted to do so by guarding Jenkins, Sawyer, Rivers, and Stepney Riley, and others, who were colored democrat men, home. As they came out of the hall, right in front of the hall, in George street, a row commenced. Some colored men went to see Jenkins, but they were prohibited by Jenkins's friends, who had him under their protection. The white men prevented them from speaking to him, and they went on their way to King street, and when they got up there I heard the report of a revolver fired. I was then at the corner of George and King, one block from the place where the report of the revolver was heard. I anticipated that there would be a row; and I went peaceably to the meeting, and so I went on home; as I had no arms, and wasn't prepared for no row, I went on home.

Q. Do you know anything further about this matter?—A. When I got at the corner of Clifford and King street I heard a great running of a horse, and I looked around and saw a police coming down.

Q. Was he moving rapidly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you see further?—A. I didn't see anything then till about half past 11 or 12, when there was a grand row right in the middle of the street near my house.

Q. What time was this when the police came riding down?—A. I went home at half past 10 or 11 o'clock, as far as my memory serves. After I seen the police I went home and went in my house and fastened up all about, and twelve of these men came hollering and running and shouting down the street, and of course I was up stairs and I looked out and seen it. I seen a great crowd of men cursing after each other.

Q. How long did it continue?—A. It didn't continue long. The excitement appeared to be more general on King street.

Q. Was the excitement on King street before or after this?—A. It was before. It appeared like they was running after some party. That is all I know about the whole matter.

Q. Have you been summoned?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (MR. COCHRANE:)

Q. When you got into the hall first Jenkins had concluded his speech?—A. He have, sir.

Q. Was he sitting down?—A. He was presiding over the meeting as chairman and sitting down.

Q. And Rivers was speaking?—A. No, sir; Sawyer was speaking.

Q. Jenkins was a colored democrat?—A. He is.

Q. Sawyer was a colored democrat?—A. He is.

Q. And Rivers was a colored democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard no part of Jenkins's speech yourself?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Sawyer was speaking when you got there; and he concluded his speech, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Rivers commenced speaking?—A. No, sir; Rivers didn't speak, because there was too much confusion.

Q. Well, did he try to speak?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You said in your examination-in-chief "Rivers was speaking when I went in." Did you mean that Rivers was speaking or that Sawyer was speaking?—A. I think I stated distinctly that Sawyer was speaking.

Q. If you said Rivers was speaking you made a mistake.—A. Yes, sir; I made a mistake, I think.

Q. When you went into the meeting, then, Sawyer was speaking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did Sawyer speak?—A. It might have been twenty or twenty-five minutes.

Q. How many people were in the meeting?—A. It was crowded, sir; I am not able to give the number.

Q. Mostly colored people?—A. I think, if my memory serves me right, there was about fifteen or twenty altogether.

Q. Might there not have been a greater number than that?—A. When I say about fifteen or twenty colored, I mean those who were in the meeting like myself, and not including the democrats.

Q. I am speaking about all the colored people.—A. Well, there might have been some thirty or thirty-five.

Q. Were there not more than fifteen colored democrats?—A. Well, I am unable to say whether there was, but I can state this: that the democrats were all placed in the bar.

Q. Were there not fifty or sixty democrats there?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Thirty democrats?—A. I am not able to say.

Q. Did anybody strike you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody lay a hand on you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody offered any violence to you?—A. No one, sir.

Q. Anybody offer to put you out?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you of your own choice got up on the chair and stated that you were a republican, and that you would stick to your principles and if they wanted you to go out you would go out peaceably?—A. That is correct.

Q. You saw no blows struck in the hall?—A. None, sir; only the desire.

Q. Only you heard voices crying to put out those men that had created the disturbance?—A. That is it, sir.

Q. Now when you all went down stairs how many colored men were there on the street outside the hall?—A. We didn't have to go down stairs, for you remember that hall is a down-stairs room.

Q. Well, when you went out of the hall, how many colored men were standing on the street in front of the hall?—A. Well, there was a great many standing around and there was a large crowd of white and colored mixed up.

Q. Well, how many colored men?—A. I am really not able to say.

Q. Was there a large crowd of colored men?—A. Not very many, I suppose.

Q. Were there not two or three hundred scattered about there?—A. O, no, sir; there wasn't that number.

Q. How many, then?—A. I see five colored men, but only waiting like; they couldn't get into the hall by reason of the hall being too full. Then I saw three opposite the hall by the gas-light, but there was some more men near King street, but I didn't give them much thought, 'cause I never go into a crowd.

Q. Well, there was a crowd of people there?—A. Yes, sir; a large number of white and colored men.

Q. How many white men were there there?—A. I am not able to tell the direct number.

Q. Could you give us an estimate of the number?—A. I rather think, according to my dull judgment, there was some fifty or seventy-five, or along there.

Q. How many colored men altogether were there about there?

The WITNESS. Do you mean when the meeting adjourned?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. As I say, I saw five waiting, and three on the other side by the lamp, and there was some colored men mixed up with the white men by King street as you went into the hall; I will say thirty-five colored men.

Q. How many colored men were there on the corner of King street in the crowd?—A. I am unable to tell that, from the fact that I didn't go up there.

Q. Well, there was a large crowd there?—A. Apparently so, in the night.

Q. Well, as soon as Rivers and Jenkins and Sawyer went out, guarded by the white men, those colored men came up toward where Rivers, Jenkins, and the others were; is that correct?—A. They did so.

Q. And what did they say?—A. I haven't been able to hear what they said, but the fact is, I haven't gone into the crowd.

Q. They pressed through to where Jenkins was?—A. It wasn't no pressing, because the colored men was in the middle.

Q. And the white men were around these men, and you observed some colored men start to get through to Jenkins?—A. They did so.

Q. And the white men would not permit them to get through and went on up King street, taking these colored men inside the square that they had formed?—A. Well, they did, sir.

Q. As soon as you saw these things occurring you were satisfied that there was going to be a row, and you got frightened, and as you had not a pistol with you or any other arms, you did the best you could, which was to go home?—A. Yes, sir; I felt in my mind that there would be a row.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say that the colored democrats were inside the bar at the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, this fuss occurred outside the bar?—A. Yes, sir; the fuss was outside.

---

CHARLESTON, S. C., Friday, December 29, 1876.

DONAS WASHINGTON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I am now living at No. 6 George street.

Q. What is your business?—A. Longshore-man. I am not doing any work now, but still I belong to that society.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am now rising my fifty-third year.

Q. How long have you lived in Charleston?—A. I have been living in Charleston now just two years.

Q. Well, sir, will you state to the committee if you were at Archer's Hall in September at the time the riot or fracas occurred in King street?—A. I was there, sir.

Q. State when you went there and what you saw.—A. When I went to the hall—I really couldn't tell the time, it was in the evening—Sawyer, a colored man, was speaking, and after he got through with his speech, this colored man Jenkins made a remark to the audience. He was the presider; his remark was that they should turn off every female that was cooking for the democratic members, because they took all of the first out from the coffee and steak and whatsoever was given out to cook and give it to their husbands, because their husbands supported the republican party.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. What occurred after this remark?—A. After he made that remark in the house some cross-questions commenced right there. One man, I don't really remember whether it was a white man or a colored man, in the crowd, made a reply, "That's a lie." They commenced then from one to the other, going on talking, but I stood right still till one of the white gentlemen make answer: "Put these republican mens out, for they are making a disturbment in the house." I walked out in the street as soon as I heard that word mentioned. I walked a little ways off, and I heard the fuss beginning to get hotter and hotter, and I kept right on home. I never stopped again at all.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did you stay there?—A. I staid there, and I don't know anything more after that HENRY CUTHBERT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. What is your name?—Answer. Henry Cuthbert, but they call me Saul.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am about thirty-three. I was born July 9, 1844.

Q. What is your business?—A. Member of the longshore-men's institution.

Q. What does a longshore-man do?—A. Store cotton on the banks of the river from the different plantations.

Q. Have you lived in Charleston long?—A. I was born and raised here.

Q. Will you state whether you were at Archer's Hall about the time of the riot in King street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a democratic meeting there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what time it was?—A. I believe it was on Wednesday or Thursday; I forget which, but I know it was on the 6th of the month.

Q. Tell us what you saw?—A. Well, sir, I had been to the Military hall at a republican meeting, and was going home with a company of young men, five or six of us, and we all stopped into the democrat meeting.

Q. What did you see?—A. At the time we went in Jenkins was residing as the chairman of the meeting, and John Sawyer, a colored man, was speaking. Jenkins vacated his chair, and said to the community he would make a move, if he could get a second, that all the colored females which was cooking should be discharged, because they fed their husbands from the cook-pot; and them mens, instead of being a democrat, they sticks up to the republicans, and if them females was discharged, they couldn't feed their husbands, and they would vote the democrat ticket. At that time some one said he was a liar; how did he know it? Then they commenced raising of the chairs and different things in there, and put out the lights.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Who began it?—A. I couldn't say who it was. About that time I run out in the street.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What happened then?—A. Well, sir, I couldn't tell you what happened, because I went on home. I couldn't go up King street, because there was such a row there right in front of the hall, and I went up a little street called Saint Philip street. That is all I know about it.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. When this remark was made by Jenkins there was a good deal of disturbance by the republicans who did not believe what he said?—A. That is so, sir.

Q. And they commenced blowing out the lights?—A. Yes, sir; I don't know whether it was a republican said to Jenkins, "You are a liar," but everybody sprung upon their feet, and the chairs commenced raising, and the light to the steps was put out, and I run down stairs.

Q. Was there a great deal of noise and disturbance after he made that remark?—A. O, Lord, sir; you couldn't hear nothing but "Put him out," "God damn him," "He's a liar," "Put him out," and all those things.

Q. And the scene was a very disorderly and violent one after that?—A. It seemed so, while I stood there, sir. I don't know how long it remained that way.

Q. You and your friends had been to a republican meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you came up there you knew there was a democratic meeting there, and you thought you would all go in ?—A. Yes, sir ; we thought we would go in to see what was going on.

Q. You knew that that was a democratic meeting ?—A. I did, sir.

Q. When you got down into the street how many colored men were there about that you saw ?

The WITNESS. In the street ?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I don't believe there was ten persons in the street when I jumped out of the hall ; if they was, I was in so much excitement that I didn't notice them.

Q. Did you see colored men outside ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you went on home ?—A. Yes, sir ; I didn't stop for anything.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You and your friends, the five or six colored republicans, stopped in, and you stood near the door ?—A. I stood near the door.

Q. You did not get far into the hall ?—A. The hall was crowded. \

Q. When the lie was given to Jenkins it went from where you were standing ?—A. No, sir ; it went from further up, near the speaker's stand.

Q. How did you hear ?—A. Well, whilst everybody stopped to hear what the resolution was Jenkins had to make some one said, " You are a liar ! How do you know it ?"

Q. Then there was a great deal of confusion and noise ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those around you were mostly republicans ?—A. I couldn't say that it was all republicans.

Q. Did you see any but republicans ? Did you see one single colored democrat around you ?—A. Not to my knowing.

Q. Then the light was near you at the door ?—A. The light was on the right of us ; we was more to the left.

Q. That light was blown out, and after that you went out and went home ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. How near to you and your friends was the light that was put out ?—A. About four or five yards off, sir.

Q. Did your people put it out ?—A. I could swear that none of us that went in there together put it out, because we were all standing there together.

Q. Was there more than one light put out, do you know ?—A. Well, as soon as the light that was at the step was put out we came out.

THOMAS LEWIS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. How old are you ?—Answer. Fifty, sir.

Q. Where do you live ?—A. Right in Charleston, here.

Q. How long have you lived here ?—A. All my life, sir ; I was born and raised here.

Q. What is your business ?—A. Cook, sir.

Q. What we want to know is whether you were at a meeting at Archer's Hall in George street about the time of the riot in King street ?—A. I was, sir.

Q. Do you know what day it was ?—A. It was the night of the 6th or 8th. I have forgotten the exact day.

Q. Well, was it the same night as the King-street riot ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what you saw and heard when you went into the hall ?—A. I got to the hall at half-past 6 o'clock. I went in there just to see and hear what I could, and I heard the first person that spoke in the hall, who was Mr. Sawyer. His remark was " Damn the republicans !" Then in the mean time as he spoke so some one, I don't know who it was, on the back part of the room, made an answer, " You are a liar yourself ;" and the person who made the remark said, " Yes, and you will beg the republicans for bread again ;" and he took his word back then immediately.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :)

Q. What did he say ?—A. Well, sir, he was making all the remarks in the body of the democrats.

Q. What do you mean by his taking his word back ?—A. He said he didn't mean it for any insult ; but his intention was to go and stump for Wade Hampton, and no other man, and he said if Tilden and Hendricks was not elected he would leave Charleston. They hooted at him, and crowded him down, and he stopped his arguing and sat down. Then Mr. Jenkins got up ; he said to all democrats who hire men-servants and their wives, if they don't vote to suit you discharge them, and to discharge the womens at the same time, because if you keep the women and give them a pint of rice to cook s he certainly will take the first out of the pot and save it for their husbands. He said th at he calculated to work to keep all republicans out of situations.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Out of employment, or out of political office ?—A. Out of employment. Well, his speech was very small. It was not anything of account ; but then came up Mr. Rivers—we call him here General Hatch—and he rebuked Mr. Bowen for all the “sons of bitches” that he could appreciate in bad language. It was uncommon language ; and so he rebuked Governor Chamberlain in the same way, and said that General Grant is nothing but a damn hound and a damn swindler and a damn thief.

Q. How long did he speak ?—A. He spoke for an hour ; but I wouldn't like to say all his remarks, though I can't.

Q. Well, what happened after his speech ?—A. After his speech then the row commenced, and he was guarded home by a thousand white men, else he would have been killed that night, certain, because I had a pistol and I was going to blow his brains out myself, as he was coming out of the door, but a policeman stopped me.

Q. What happened then ?—A. Then he was gallanted home by those white mens. I seen where they shot this man up the street, right by the Citadel green, and he was shot by his own friends.

Q. Who was shot ?—A. A policeman was shot by Mr. Barnwell, one of his own friends.

Q. You saw it ?—A. Yes, sir ; I saw it. I was right there and I saw him fall, and I helped to pick him up.

Q. What else did you see, if anything ?—A. After I helped him up I went off and went home. There was fifteen of us tried to get at Rivers, and we couldn't do it ; the crowd was too heavy for us.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :)

Q. This man Rivers used very bad language about Mr. Bowen ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Governor Chamberlain ?—A. Yes, sir ; and even General Grant—uncommon and imprudent language, the awfullest language that he could use.

Q. He stated that they stole public money, and all such declarations as that, and you colored people did not propose to stand it any longer ?—A. No, sir ; we didn't propose to stand it any longer ; we had been standing it long enough.

Q. You proposed to get up and blow his brains out, and if he were to get up again, and called Mr. Bowen, or Governor Chamberlain, or General Grant thieves, that you will go after him and kill him if you can ?—A. Yes, sir ; I will if I possibly can.

Q. And your purpose in following Rivers up the street was to kill him if you could ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the white men had not been there around him, you would have killed him ?—A. Yes, sir ; he would have been a dead man.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did you talk with these fifteen other men about what you were going to do ?—A. Yes, sir. John Mitchell was one of them. He is a constable ; and he will be here to make his statement. He's gone to bring some person to the jail now.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :)

Q. You fifteen men understood each other pretty well ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you talked it over and you came to the agreement that any one of you would kill Rivers if you could ?—A. Yes, sir ; if we could.

Q. Did you have arms ?—I did, sir.

Q. Did the other men have pistols also ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the understanding was that any one of you would kill him if you could ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did you see any other man shot that night ?—A. Yes, sir ; young Mr. Buckner He is the man that Mr. Barnwell shot that night.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. From what you know of the sentiments of republicans here of your own color, do you think that they entertain the same feelings that you do ?—A. I am certain of it, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE :)

Q. John Mitchell was one of your party, and he made this agreement with you ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you all agreed together to kill him ?—A. Yes, sir, certainly ; to kill him for his argument.

GEORGE I. CUNNINGHAM sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. Are you the mayor of the city ?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you elected mayor for the first time, if you please ?—A. I was elected in 1873 for two years. I was again elected in 1875, and am now serving my second term.

Q. What is your business or profession apart from your office?—A. I am a butcher.

Q. How long have you resided in Charleston?—A. I have resided here nearly twenty-three years.

Q. Are you a native of the State?—A. No, sir; I am a native of Monroe County, Tennessee.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-one.

Q. I will ask you if you were called upon at any time during last autumn to make a public statement in regard to the condition of the city, so far as it concerned the public peace; and if so, what were the facts which called your attention to that subject, and what official action you took in regard to it?—A. I do not know that there was any party that called on me as to any statement of the condition of the city. But an editorial in the News and Courier on the day before, the 9th of October, caused me to publish a card on the 10th. This is a portion of it, [reading from the newspaper:] "To this hour the rifle clubs are the only effective custodian of the peace in Charleston," and then it goes on in that way for some time. That caused the card of the 10th. The city was not in the hands of the rifle clubs, but they were patrolling the city—that is, the cavalry—and giving us a good deal of trouble. The rifle clubs were meeting at their headquarters every day and night regularly.

Q. Were the rifle clubs legal organizations, created by the authority of the city or of the State?—A. Not by the city. I have understood that they are not legal bodies at all. That I know nothing about myself.

Q. You never were officially informed that they had any authority in the city of Charleston to perform any of the functions of government?—A. O, not any right at all.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. They had no right to assume police duties?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Was it true that they did assume any authority of that nature; and, if so, will you please to state to the committee what you as mayor of the city know was done?—A. The rifle clubs met at their armories. One armory was at the corner of Broad street and the bay. They met there regularly. They never interfered with police duties until these political meetings. For instance, it was thought that there would be a riot, and they came out, marched around, and gave us a good deal of trouble by threats, or one way or the other. Really, if they had kept off the streets we would not have had any trouble at all.

Q. To what period do you refer as to their action in assuming this authority to patrol the street?—A. Well, on the 25th of August at the Tilden and Hendricks and Hampton ratification meeting on the Citadel green. Up to that time we had never had any trouble at all in the city. It was announced in the morning papers that Colonel Davis would that evening detail a hundred men to patrol the city and keep order that night. As I stated, we never had any trouble before that at all. On the next morning in an editorial it was stated that Colonel Davis had detailed a hundred men, and it gave that as a reason for the good order that was kept on the night of the 25th at the meeting. That was really the commencement of the trouble. Here is what the paper says after the meeting on the next day, [reading from a newspaper:] "Of the mounted men Colonel Davis made a detail of one hundred to patrol the city thoroughly, and in consequence the streets were never more quiet than during the continuance of the meeting."

Q. Was it a fact that he did patrol the streets that way, and that the peace of the city was owing to that patrol?—A. O, not at all.

Q. How long did they continue the practice of patrolling the streets in that way?—A. Up to the time of the President's proclamation. I do not remember the date. This is what the News and Courier contained on Friday, August 25, with reference to the torch-light procession that took place that night:

"A PRUDENT PRECAUTION.—Some apprehension having been expressed that the presence in the torch-light procession to-night of so many of the citizens of Charleston will leave the houses in remote parts of the city unprotected from thieves and vagabonds, we are authorized to state that during the continuance of the procession and meeting, every portion of the city will be thoroughly patrolled by mounted men, who will be detailed for that purpose. Everybody can, therefore, take part in the demonstration."

Q. What was the effect, and especially the effect that the city was patrolled on the 25th of August, upon the people of the city?—A. These parties patrolling the city and these speeches on the Citadel green made by General Ferguson and others upon the carrying of this State, was something new and created a great deal of excitement in this city.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Did you hear the speeches, Mr. Mayor: Do you know that these speeches were made?—A. Only as I read them in the newspapers.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. I will ask you this question, Mr. Mayor: Did these processions of the rifle clubs continue to the 25th of August?—A. They were continued until the President's proclamation.

Q. What were the circumstances, as well as you comprehended them, if it was your duty to understand them, that led to the excitement from the 25th of August up to the early part of September, and which culminated in what is called the riot of the 6th of September?—A. Well, this patrol of the city was one of the causes, and the violent speeches that were made at the meeting. On the night of the riot I was called at that time—

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr COCHRANE.) We only want what you know.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Will you state whether these things had such an effect upon the public mind as to bring them to your attention as mayor of the city, and what action you thought it necessary to take in respect to them?—A. I did not take any action. I spoke to these gentlemen and told them I thought it was getting up a good deal of unnecessary excitement.

Q. Whom did you speak to?—A. I do not remember the names, but to a great many.

Q. The citizens?—A. Yes, sir; leading men of the democratic party.

Q. Well, did you make any public declaration?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does this card which you have referred to contain any of those facts that you have spoken of?—A. That card was in reply to the editorial that was published on the 9th, saying that the city was in the hands of rifle clubs, which was not the case.

Q. As a matter of theory they were not in possession of the city?—A. Not in control of the city.

Q. But as a matter of fact they were in control of the city?—A. They did patrol the city and gave us a great deal of trouble.

Q. What do you know of the condition of the city from the 25th of August to the 6th of September?—A. The city was perfectly quiet up to that time, except what I have stated about the rifle clubs. They were in position to resist the civil authorities. In fact I was told by General Connor that if there was any disturbance in the city they would put it down; that they intended to protect themselves; it was to that effect. He told me that the sooner a collision came on the better it would be; that he thought that if it could not be kept off, then the sooner the better.

Q. Anything further, sir?—A. Well, there was a good deal of talk. The general tone of conversation and sentiment was that the rifle clubs were going to see that we had order in the city.

Q. They assumed that to themselves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they assume authority by your request?—A. Not at all.

Q. Or under your permission as mayor of the city?—A. Against my wishes.

Q. Was your opinion expressed to them?—A. My opinion has been very decided all the time that there would have been no trouble at all if it had not been for the rifle clubs. I am satisfied that there would not have been a death occurred in the city during this campaign if it had not been for the rifle clubs.

Q. What opinion did you express in regard to what General Connor said?—A. I was not at all pleased; I was positive in my own mind that they caused all of the trouble.

Q. Did you make it known in any way?—A. Yes. The colored people in Charleston were absolutely under control. There was no danger of an outbreak at all, and the only danger that there would be of an outbreak would be by the rifle clubs.

Q. I ask you in general terms if you gave to those people that talked to you about the purpose of the rifle clubs any intimation of your opinion?—A. I gave them that opinion, sir.

Q. Did they have any right to assume that they were acting with your consent or with your authority?—A. None whatever. I always spoke to them that way when I spoke to them at all.

Q. Was there anything in the condition of the city which required them or any other class of people to undertake the government of the city so far as the public peace was concerned?—A. No, sir; there was no occasion for it at all. If there had been any circumstance that I thought would have required a larger force than I could have commanded, I would have asked for them. The police force was plenty large enough to keep order if the organizations were not armed.

Q. Then the assumption that the city was legally within the hands of the rifle clubs was not correct?—A. No, sir; it was not correct.

Q. And there was no necessity for their co-operation in the keeping of the public peace?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there at all times between the 25th of August and the 6th of September sufficient police-force to protect any public meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any discrimination between public meetings?—A. None at all, sir. When notice of a public meeting would be given at the guard-house we would send a guard to protect the meeting. When we knew it, we would send a squad of policemen to the democratic meetings, and when we sent a squad of policemen we never had any trouble. Unfortunately on the 6th of September our attention was not called to the meeting, and we never knew anything about it. If there had been any call made for the meeting we should have had a squad of police there.

Q. What was the number of members of the rifle clubs?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Is there any public record or registry of them?—A. That I know not. They are in companies.

Q. And you, as mayor of the city, have no knowledge of their numbers or their purposes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is it in fact a secret military organization so far as the city government is concerned?—A. It is a military organization so far as outside appearances are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) But Mr. Banks means, is it a secret organization? The WITNESS. Well, no; I would not think so.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Are their purposes and duties known with regard to what they assume to do in advance of their announcement?—A. They have their officers, and I suppose they understand and direct them.

Q. I ask if you have any means of knowing, as mayor of the city, the number of companies, the number of men, the names of the officers of these companies, the character of the constitution, and the purposes for which they are formed, or the duties which they intend or find it necessary to assume from time to time?—A. No, sir; I have no means of knowing.

Q. Is it or is it not, so far as the city government is concerned, a secret organization?—A. I would not consider it a secret organization, because they come out and parade sometimes and are not secret, but I have no means of knowing their numbers or any of the internal workings of their companies.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did you ever attempt to know?—A. No, sir; I did not.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Have you any official means of knowing or do they make any reports to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do they make any reports to any officer of the city government?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. When you say that it is not a secret organization, you mean that occasionally, from time to time, when they are ready they come out and show themselves?—A. Well, before the President's proclamation they were frequently on the streets, and in fact every night pretty much they had a number of men on the streets patrolling, and they did not appear to be in any way secret at all.

Q. I suppose you know that men that get up a riot may not make public everything they do, but have you any means of knowing in advance any of the demonstrations that are made for such purposes as that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any means of knowing what these men are doing any more than you have of knowing what men are doing who are conspiring against the public peace?—A. I have no means of knowing.

Q. Then, so far as you are concerned, it is an organization outside of the knowledge of the city authorities?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you cannot tell the number of men of which they are composed?—A. No, sir; there are a good many of them.

Q. Is there any law of the State that allows people to form a military company and arm themselves?—A. I do not know about that, sir.

Q. What was your object in the publication of a card to which I have referred, contained in the News and Courier of October 10?—A. My object was to state to the citizens generally that they were not keeping the city in order, and that they had no legal authority at all to interfere with anybody in the city.

Q. Had you made any call for them and given any permission to them to assume this duty?—A. None at all; it was entirely against my views.

Q. Was their purpose or object made known to you in doing this—the thought which inspired them to do this thing?—A. Well, no, sir.

Q. I will ask you if since the proclamation of the governor of the State or of the President of the United States concerning these rifle clubs, they have appeared, or any portion of them?—A. Since that they have met in their armories; for instance, as I say, at the corner of Broad and the bay there is a large room, a very large hall, and they met there regularly after that; there are other places in the city that I know of that they did meet.

Q. It was your duty to know?—A. I did know; I saw them frequently.

Q. Did they have arms at these places?—A. They had arms.

Q. What were their arms?—A. Well, they were rifles.

Q. And they are still in that condition?—A. No, sir; I think they have now disbanded and taken their guns home to their houses; I do not think they have meetings now since the election; but on the 8th, the day after the election, we had a little difficulty here, and in the course of three-quarters of an hour there were probably a thousand men in arms.

Q. What called them out at that time?—A. Well, there was a difficulty in front of the News and Courier office. There were probably a hundred shots firing there, and then up at the corner of Broad street there were some shots fired there, and I suppose in three-quarters of an hour there were a thousand men in arms.

Q. Did they form in companies at all?—A. In regular companies with their arms and with officers.

Q. Have you any reason to believe at the present time that if a similar occurrence should happen they would not appear as readily and in as strong force as they did then?—A. My impression is that they would.

Q. Have you any doubt about it?—A. Well, I have not much doubt about that. The only thing that would prevent it would be fear of the President of the United States.

Q. Independent of the proclamation of the governor of the State and the President of the United States, did they keep up their organization and make their appearance from time to time at their own pleasure from August until after the presidential election?—A. They appeared on the streets up to the time of the President's proclamation, but after that they kept in their armories, that is, their building and halls, until the day after the presidential election and then they appeared on the streets. I will make one statement. In the city of Charleston we have never had any difficulty in keeping order at all. The principal reason of the democratic party voting for me at the last election (I was elected by the democratic party) was on account of the order that we had had the first two years. I got the republican nomination, but was really elected by the democratic party. The News and Courier and the leading citizens here supported me at the last election, and the principal cause of their supporting me was upon the order we had had here for the two years previous that I was mayor. The police force was quite large enough to put down disorders if we did not have armed organizations; and I will state here, very frankly, that if I had had a police force large enough, I should certainly have kept them off the streets, but the organization was too powerful for me to attempt to do anything with them with the police force. Any organization that was not armed would be no trouble at all.

Q. I will ask you whether or not, from the history you have detailed, if you have any knowledge of the ultimate purposes or the immediate purpose of the organization of these rifle clubs; have you so far considered it as to have come to a determination in your own mind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state what that is?

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The opinion of the witness or any conclusion or determination which he may have arrived at is wholly immaterial, and is excluded. The witness has given the facts within his knowledge in detail. His determination would not be evidence.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What is the strength of the police force of the city?—A. Ninety-six privates.

Q. How many officers?—A. There are about seventeen altogether.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You are a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have always voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were elected in 1873?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was elected in 1875?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many republican votes are there in Charleston?—A. Well, I do not know how many votes there are exactly.

Q. About how many republican votes have you?—A. I do not know the census exactly, something over six thousand.

Q. How many votes did you have in 1875?—A. In 1875 I had 6,700. When I say 6,700 I mean that I think it was about that.

Q. What was the vote of your competitor?—A. About five thousand.

Q. Who was your competitor?—A. General Wugener.

Q. A republican?—A. No, sir; he was running on the conservative ticket.

Q. When did these rifle clubs of which you have spoken commence to patrol the city?—A. The first that I heard of them was through the editorial of the 25th of August.

Q. That was at a democratic ratification meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did they continue to patrol the city?—A. Up to the time of the President's proclamation.

Q. Which was of what date?—A. I think that was on the 18th.

Q. The 18th of what month?—A. The 18th of October.

Q. Then from the 25th of August to the 18th of October these rifle clubs would march through the city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have said that they patrolled the city?—A. I do not say that the rifle clubs patrolled the city. They had cavalry.

Q. Were those men connected with the rifle clubs proper of the city of Charleston?—A. Well, Colonel Davis was the head of this organization and I know that when the rifle clubs go out he is one of the commanders of them.

Q. But do you know that these men who rode upon horses were members of any of these rifle clubs here?—A. I know that they reported to them. I know that they went to Major Buist where he was quartered at the Stonewall engine-house and reported from all over the city.

Q. What did they report?—A. What they reported I do not know.

Q. Who did they report to?—A. They reported to different officers; for instance, Major Buist would have command to-night.

Q. Can you give us the name of any officer to whom they reported at any time?—A. My understanding is—

Q. But you do not know of your own knowledge?—A. I do know that Major Barker had command on several occasions of a portion of the military; that is, of the four lower wards.

Q. But do you know to whom they reported, of your own knowledge?—A. Only from hearsay.

Q. Were they upon the streets during the day-time?—A. Sometimes I have seen them on the streets in the day-time.

Q. How often from the 25th of August to the 15th of October did you see them upon the streets in the day-time?—A. That I do not know.

Q. About how often?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Well, do you suppose you saw them a dozen different times in the day-time on the streets during these dates that I have mentioned?

The WITNESS. You mean the cavalrymen?

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) I mean the rifle clubs of which you have spoken.

The WITNESS. I do not remember how many times; I do not think it was a great many.

Q. Well, did they remain upon the streets all day?—A. O, no.

Q. What would occasion their presence upon the street?—A. I do not really think there was any occasion for them to come upon the streets at all.

Q. What I mean by that is, would there be a political meeting or something of the kind which would call them out?—A. Sometimes whenever they had a political meeting they would go there as armed organizations. I remember one meeting at ward 8. They apprehended some danger, and when I went up there I met a very large body of armed men—the Butler Guards who were named in honor of General Butler of Edgefield—and as I looked at them I thought, as mayor of the city, it was not a very pleasant sight.

Q. Did they insult you at all?—A. Well, they were insulting.

Q. What did they say?—A. Well, they would say that I was a damn radical son of a bitch.

Q. Do you say that at the date to which you refer that any member of that armed rifle club called you a radical son of a bitch?—A. I cannot name the man that did it.

Q. Do you know the man that did it?—A. Well, I do not know that I do.

Q. Do you know that any one called you that that night?—A. I heard it as I was driving past in a buggy.

Q. You heard them call you a damn radical son of a bitch?—A. They called the mayor a damn radical son of a bitch.

Q. They did not see you?—A. Well, yes, they saw me.

Q. Did more than one man say it?—A. I did not hear it but one time.

Q. Did ever any other member of any other rifle club on any other occasion call you that?

The WITNESS. When they were in line?

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) Yes; when they were patrolling?—A. I do not know that I was ever close enough to hear, except that night.

Q. Then that night was the only time when you were ever insulted?—A. Yes, sir; I paid no attention to it then.

Q. Well, now, would they stay out on the streets all night?—A. Well, they would stay out until after 12 o'clock, and I think a portion of them would stay out all night.

Q. I want to ask you this: whether from the 25th of August to the 15th of October there was a regular organization of these clubs which patrolled the city at night and all night, or whether these rifle clubs merely went to political meetings, or went to other places during the campaign?—A. They rode all over the city.

Q. Where did they ride, or did they just ride aimlessly?—A. They rode through the back streets and all over the streets. They had their regular patrol-duty to perform.

Q. Well, how long would that patrol last?—A. On a great many occasions they would ride past my house during the night. On two occasions they woke me up at night.

Q. Of your own knowledge how many nights do you know of them being out?—A. Well, sir, I would say regularly from the 6th of September to the time of the proclamation of the governor.

Q. Were not political meetings very frequent during that time?—A. Yes, sir; frequent.

Q. A good many democratic meetings?—A. Yes, sir; a good many.

Q. At night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These organizations would attend those meetings?—A. Not altogether.

Q. Would they sometimes attend the democratic meetings?—A. Sometimes; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge of any act of violence having been committed by any of these rifle clubs from the 25th of August to the 15th of October?—A. Well, I did not see it.

Q. Was a single member of these rifle clubs ever arrested and brought before you charged with an act of violence against any citizen here from the 25th of August until the 15th of October?—A. Well, I have had a great many of the members of the rifle clubs before me and fined them, and punished them, but not as an organization. I have taken their pistols from them, and things of that kind.

Q. How many of these members of rifle clubs were brought before you between those dates?—A. In the police-court every morning we have a good many cases. Sometimes we have some members of the rifle clubs there.

Q. Can you give us an estimate of the number?—A. That would be very hard to do.

Q. Do you know that any of them was a member of a rifle club?—A. Well, I would have to refer to the books to see.

Q. With what were they charged?—A. With firing pistols on the streets; sometimes for that and sometimes for being drunk.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. As a member of the rifle club?—A. He was brought in as an individual.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE) :

Q. Was there ever a member of any of these rifle clubs arrested and brought before you to answer a charge of assault and battery upon a citizen?—A. I cannot state that I knew the charge they were brought there on.

Q. Do you recollect the fact that any of these men were brought before you upon a charge of assault and battery?—A. I do not remember that.

Q. Do you remember that any of them were ever brought before you for shooting a citizen?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember of any of them ever having been brought before you for cutting or stabbing a citizen?—A. Not that I remember of.

Q. Do you remember that any of these men whom you saw were brought before you to answer having been charged with shooting guns or committing breaches of the peace while members of any rifle-club organization?—A. Well, yes; they were brought in for shooting pistols. There have been cases of that kind.

Q. As members of a rifle-club organization?—A. They were not brought in because they were members of the rifle club, but they were brought in as individuals.

Q. Did not some of the best citizens of Charleston belong to these rifle clubs?—A. Most of the white people belonged to the rifle club.

Q. Do not most of the best citizens?—A. I do not know what you call the best citizens.

Q. I mean your most prominent white men here are all members?—A. Some of them belong and some do not.

Q. Do not the great majority of them belong?—A. The great majority of the young men do.

Q. As I understand you there was no disturbance; the city was peaceable and quiet until the riot of the 6th of September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, sir, I want to ask you this question: how many negroes had you on your police-force?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Give us an estimate of the number.—A. The police-force consisted of about equal proportions of whites and blacks. The officers are whites and blacks equally. I aim to keep them about that. Just a few months before the election we had a great many policemen on, and as a man would drop off we would not fill the vacancy, as the appropriation was insufficient. A good many white men would quit the police-force and the vacancy was never filled, and I suppose in that way there were a few more blacks than whites.

Q. Were there not, during all this election-cavass that you had here, a great preponderance of blacks on the police-force?—A. There were more colored and blacks than whites.

Q. Were not the whites on the force comparatively few?—A. O, no; I do not think so.

Q. Well, give us an estimate of the proportion, as near as you can judge.—A. Some that you would call black men are as white as I am. During the recent campaign I do not know how many.

Q. How many did you have during the campaign altogether?—A. We had not ninety men.

Q. Did you have fifty?—A. O, yes, we had more than that; somewhere between eighty and ninety men.

Q. Are you sure that you had more than sixty police-officers during the canvass?—A. O, yes.

Q. If you are sure of that fact tell me how many were colored men.—A. I could tell you that to-morrow.

Q. Well, did you have twenty white men on the force?—A. More than that.

Q. Twenty-five?—A. More than that.

Q. Thirty?—A. Well, yes, we had more than thirty.

Q. Do you think you had as many as forty?—A. To the best of my knowledge there were on the police-force ten or twelve more colored men than white. That may be wrong. It is a mere opinion.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) Can you produce before the committee to-morrow a correct statement of the number of officers that you had?

The WITNESS. O, yes sir.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) I will be obliged to you if you will do so.

Q. Did you have men on the police-force that voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir, we had some.

Q. Give me the name of a man.—A. A man by the name of Cook. I cannot give you his first name.

Q. Do you know of any other man?—A. I do not know that I can give you the names now, but I can do so to-morrow. I have understood that they have it, but I know that Cook did, because he told me so.

Q. Then Cook is the only man on the force that you know of your own knowledge that voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any democrats on the police-force now?—A. Yes, sir, some. I said to some of the citizens, "Gentlemen, if you are dissatisfied with the police-force, name a number of men, and I will appoint them."

Q. Whom did you say that to?—A. William A. Courtney.

Q. Whom else did you say that to?—A. I do not know the members of the committee now, but I said, "If you are afraid of the police-force, if you have not got confidence in the force, I will discharge a number of the men and you can pick out men who vote your own ticket and I will appoint them."

Q. Did they complain to you that they were dissatisfied with the organization of the police?—A. Not before the election. The only complaint that I ever heard was after the election.

Q. Was this offer of yours to appoint other policemen made after the election?—A. Yes; there was never anything said about it before.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Mayor, do you say that Mr. Connor told you that the sooner a collision was brought on the better?—A. I do.

Q. What else did he say in that connection?—A. General Connor did not appear to be in a very good humor, and that was all he said.

Q. Was he not angry at you?—A. That I do not know; he might have been.

Q. Did you not know that he was complaining to you of the manner in which you were conducting yourself as mayor of the city?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. Well, what was he angry at?—A. O, he appeared to be a little cross.

Q. What was he cross at?—A. Nothing, except that he thought things were not going right.

Q. Do you not know that he complained to you that your police-officers were not keeping the peace; that they were affiliating with the negroes in this town, and did he not in that connection say to you that unless that thing was stopped there would be a collision?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Will you say that he did not say that to you?—A. I will say that he did not say that before the election.

Q. Will you say that he did not say that to you on the day of that conversation to which you have referred?—A. I have talked with General Connor a great many times since the 25th of last August.

Q. Then you are not prepared to say just when he told you that?—A. No; because I think he told me that more than once. I am certain he told me that in the station-house one night.

Q. And you do not recollect the exact date of that conversation; whether before the election or not?—A. No, sir. I do not.

Q. You say there was no danger of an outbreak from the colored men?—A. I do not think so.

Q. You had them in perfect control?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me read to you, Mr. Mayor, a portion of what Thomas Lewis, a colored republican, testified to to-day before the committee: "Rivers was guarded home by a thousand white men, else he would have been killed that night. I had a pistol myself and stood at the door to kill him. I would have blown his brains out but for a colored policeman that stopped me. A policeman was afterward shot. I went with a crowd of fifteen of us trying to get at Rivers; but we could not do it, the crowd was too great. Fifteen in our crowd went up the street after the crowd to kill Rivers for his argument. We all agreed together that we would kill him, if we could. All had pistols and intended to use them. If the white men had not protected him, Rivers would certainly have been killed that night." Were you aware of that state of facts existing?—A. Well, no; and I am not aware of it yet. I do not know anything of that kind.

Q. If you had known that that state of facts existed, you would have taken a different view from what you have expressed?—A. Well, no, sir; I do not think that there was any danger of anything of that kind.

Q. You do not believe that at all?—A. No, sir; I do not believe that at all.

Q. Even though a republican negro appears before the committee and swears that that was the case?—A. No, sir; I do not believe that at all.

Q. You stated, I believe, in answer to a question by Mr. Jones, that you had never made any effort to ascertain the number of men in these rifle clubs?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never made any effort to discover their plans?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never made any effort to ascertain what was being done in their meetings?—A. No, sir.

Q. After the proclamation of the President do you know of any rifle clubs having appeared upon the streets?—A. No, sir, except on the 8th.

Q. That was the day of the riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will just ask you, was it not necessary before the riot could be stopped and before the peace of your city could be secured, that United States troops should be ordered to keep the peace?—A. When the United States troops arrived at the station-house the riot was all over. There was no riot then at all.

Q. Did you know that United States troops were called upon?—A. They were.

Q. And that they did undertake to and did keep the peace in this city?—A. What we wanted them to do was to keep the rifle clubs down, whether they were white or black.

Q. You felt it necessary to call upon the military to keep the peace of the city?—A. I did not do it that day.

Q. Did you not deem it necessary, and were you not very glad that they were called out, and did you not so state to General Hunt?—A. O, certainly I did.

Q. That you were wholly unable to keep the peace in your city?—A. No, sir; I did not say that. The only thing that prevented me from keeping the peace in the city was the rifle clubs, and nothing else did it but that.

Q. Was there any act of violence in that riot of the 8th of October by the rifle clubs?—A. No; I do not know that there was.

Q. Was not the riot a riot which originated and was carried on among colored people and whites?—A. Well, yes.

Q. Were not the colored people with their clubs and with their guns out upon the public streets here marching in bands?—A. After the riot commenced.

Q. And did you not say to General Hunt in an interview which you had with him that you were utterly unable to keep the peace in the city, and that you were glad the military were here?—A. I said this to General Hunt: "You keep the military organizations off the street and I can keep order." General Hunt came to me and wanted to know what I wanted him to do. I said "I want you to keep these military organizations off the street; if you will do that I will keep peace in the city."

Q. Did you not say that, unless the military aided you, you could not keep the peace of the city?—A. No, sir; not in that connection.

Q. Could you have kept peace in the city at that time and under all the circumstances if the military had not aided you?—A. Yes; I could keep the peace.

Q. Why, then, did you have the military called upon?—A. To put down the rifle clubs in case there would be any difficulty.

Q. Colored and white?—A. The rifle clubs came out first, and after that the militia came out.

Q. You called upon the soldiers to put down both the white and black rifle clubs?—A. When they all arrived there, there were a great many colored people under arms as militia and otherwise, and I went up King street and had them all go home.

Q. Do you say that after the President's proclamation the clubs assembled in their armories with arms?—A. I saw them there myself.

Q. When?—A. I cannot give you the date.

Q. How many times?—A. I went to the post-office every evening and I saw them there for weeks.

Q. Men with guns in their hands?—A. They had guns.

Q. You saw the guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Drilling in the armories?—A. Drilling in the armory.

Q. How many times did you see them?—A. The armories were always lit up, and I suppose they were always there after dark.

Q. Mr. Bowen testified this evening that they took their arms to their houses after the President's proclamation. Is he correct in that, or are you correct in saying that the guns were retained by them in the places where they drilled?—A. I saw them at the corner of Broad and the bay.

Q. How was that; it continued for weeks?—A. I do not know how long it continued, but for some time.

Q. How many men did you see there?—A. It would be hard for me to say the number of men; there was quite a lot up there. There was not a whole company; I cannot say how many.

Q. There was great terror throughout the city after the riot of the 6th of September, and business was practically suspended?—A. Yes, sir; business was at a standstill.

Q. Bodies of armed negroes were on the streets?—A. Well, I have seen some men on the streets.

Q. Armed negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A great many negroes in crowds with clubs in their hands, and so on?—A. Well, I did not see a great many; I saw some; I saw men going along the streets with walking-sticks.

Q. Did you see any negroes going along the streets with guns?—A. Well, yes. After my proclamation there were no negroes on the streets only on the night of the 8th; up to that time there were no negroes on the streets with guns. After my proclamation there were no guns on the streets.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. When were these rifle clubs first established or instituted?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Do you not know that it was a long time prior to the last election?—A. I do not know that.

Q. When was the first time that your attention was called to the existence of these rifle clubs; has it not been several years?—Well, I have not been mixed up with them. Before the war they had companies here.

Q. I allude to these rifle clubs of which we have been speaking; have they not been in existence several years?—A. Well, that I cannot say; I really do not know how long they have been in existence; some have been in existence for some time.

Q. Well you do not know but what they have been in existence for several years?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. They could not have been formed then for carrying the last election by fraud?—A. Well, I do not say that as to all. There was the Butler Guards.

Q. If they had been insurrectionary or rebellious institutions, would it not have been in your power as mayor of the city to suppress them?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you believed them disorderly or rebellious, why did you not issue your proclamation for their disbanding or suppression?—A. I did, and they laughed at me.

Q. Because, I suppose, they knew that they were legal bodies by charter and you had no power?—A. I suppose so, sir.

Q. In regard to these Butler Guards, do you not know that that was an old company formed many years ago and named after General Butler who lost his life in Mexico?—A. My understanding was that it was got up a few months ago in honor of General Butler of Edgemoor.

Q. Do you not know that they have been in existence for more than a year?—A. I never heard of them until this campaign commenced.

Q. Well, these rifle clubs were not confined to white people; were there no black rifle clubs?—A. The colored people have some militia companies here. They are not called rifle clubs; they are called militia.

Q. Were there not some rifle clubs composed of colored people?—A. The militia companies.

Q. Well, they were upon the same principle as the rifle clubs?—A. I never understood that they were on the same principle, because my understanding was that the militiamen was a legal organization and that the rifle clubs was not legal organizations.

Q. Do you not know the fact that Governor Chamberlain was invited here to some rifle-club parades and was present at them?—A. He was here on the 28th of June.

Q. Well, did he not witness their parade?—A. Well, yes; some of them.

Q. He must have recognized them as an authorized body?—A. I do not know how he looked upon them.

Q. You remember that he was here?—A. Yea, sir; I remember that he was here and witnessed the parade of a portion of these companies.

Q. Do you not know the fact that the members of the rifle clubs and the citizens here who belonged to them assume and proclaim that they were kept up for the purpose of defending themselves if the occasion should arise—if their homes and their lives required it?—A. I know that they proclaimed that.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Do you know that men who were members of the rifle clubs have been brought before your court charged with offenses against the peace?—A. Only ordinary offenses; that is, probably for getting drunk, or firing a pistol, or something of that kind, but they were not arrested as members of that organization.

Q. Have men who were members of these rifle club organizations been brought before you charged with offenses against the peace?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the class of men that you describe as roughs?—A. Well, men that drink whisky and are at any time willing to get into a row, cutting, and shooting, and knocking down.

Q. Disturbers of the peace and dangerous men when in an excited condition?—A. Yes, sir; as there are in all cities.

Q. And to some extent some of these rifle clubs are composed of that class of men?—A. The Butler Guards, a portion of them, are considered pretty rough men.

Q. As rough as any you have in the city?—A. Well, just; I believe so.

Q. Have you ever regarded it as a duty on your part, as mayor, to interfere with these organizations?—A. Well, I thought it was my duty, and tried to keep them off the streets, but it was utterly out of my power. I felt that it was my duty.

Q. Why did you not do that, sir?—A. I did not have the strength and power to do it.

Q. Had you any reason to believe that they would have resisted you if you had exerted your power?—A. I do not think there is any doubt of that.

Q. Was that the reason that you did not undertake to suppress them?—A. If they had got into a fight and if the rifle clubs were kept off the streets I could have put it down, but a thing of that kind would have brought on a collision into which a thousand men might have been brought in a very short time.

Q. In the absence of an armed force here would you, as mayor, have been able to keep the peace of the city?—A. Yes, sir; keep the rifle clubs away, and I would have kept the peace of the city.

Q. It was the possibility of danger from these rifle clubs that made the necessity for the presence of the United States troops?—A. That is what I thought.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Do you know of any case where these rifle clubs, or any of them, interfered with a policeman in the discharge of his duty?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any case where these clubs as organizations have made an attack upon persons, either white or black, with violence?—A. Well, no.

Q. Do you know of any case where these rifle clubs as organizations ever committed a breach of the public peace?—A. Nothing outside of their going on the streets in the manner I have spoken of. I do not know of any citizens that they ever knocked down or shot, or anything of that kind.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Have the police-officers of your city ever reported to you any threats from members of rifle clubs?—A. They have made threats to me.

Q. State what they are.—A. I have had several meetings with gentlemen; and a portion of them at the meetings would say that if the police attempted to make any arrest of members they would shoot them down; they would not put up with it at all. I met a party of gentlemen in the Hibernia Hall one night, and one of them told me that if the policemen were to attempt to arrest one of them they would shoot them down.

Q. Were they members of the rifle clubs, any of them?—A. There were a good many of the rifle clubs there. I do not know whether this man was a member of a rifle club or not.

Q. Do you know that he was not?—A. No, sir; I do not know that he was.

Q. Have the police-officers ever reported any threats to you as made by men who belonged to the rifle clubs against them?—A. Yes, sir; they have.

Q. Do you know or do you not know that the members of rifle clubs have driven the police from their duty at any time?—A. I know that at the corner of Cumming and George streets, a policeman was driven away from his place there by members of a rifle club.

Q. I will ask you again if the police-officers of the city made to you any report of interference with them in the performance of their duties or any threats made to them by the members of the rifle clubs?—A. None except this special case that I have just spoken of.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How did that case come to your knowledge?—A. The case was reported by the policeman. He knew one or two of the men, and they were arrested, and we had an investigation, and we punished one or two of them for it.

Q. What were the facts?—A. The facts were that this policeman was on duty at the corner of Cumming and George streets, and these men went around there and run him off his post. He was a black policeman.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Did they have their rifles with them?—A. Well, they had pistols with them; I do not know about rifles.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Well, were they acting under the orders of their captain or were they just mere strugglers?—A. There was a body of them located at the engine-house there, and these were some half dozen men that had gone to the corner of the street.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. At this time they were not acting as a club?—A. There were six men.

Q. They had not their guns with them, and they were not acting as an organized body at the time?—A. Well, no, I suppose not.

JOHN A. MITCHELL (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. I was born in 1842, and am thirty-four, sir.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Twenty-seven East Bay street.

Q. What is your business?—A. My business was as constable. I is not constable now, though.

Q. What have you done since?—A. Nothing else since the war.

Q. Were you present at a meeting in Archer's Hall at the time the public disturbance, or row, or riot, occurred in King street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state to the committee, in your own way, what time you went to the hall and what you saw and heard there?—A. I went to the hall about half past 7 o'clock. It was a democratic political meeting. The doors were open and it was free for every one to come in that wished to come. When I went in the speaking had just commenced; there was a young man speaking by the name of Rivers; they generally called him Hatch. The hall was pretty full. Rivers was going on with his rebuking the present Government from the top to the bottom of it.

Q. Did he speak strongly and severely?—A. He did, sir.

Q. Do you remember anything he said?—A. Not particular.

Q. Were you there when he finished?—A. I went out and came back again. When I came back again Jenkins was on the stand and had just commenced. Jenkins was abusing the present Government, and in the winding up of his speech he commenced upon the colored men of the city, saying that the colored radicals could afford to stand on the corners if their wives was in democrats' kitchens cooking and stealing their victuals and feeding them with at night when they came home. After he made those remarks the crowd of republicans commenced to get slack and went outside, and about 10 o'clock or half past 10 the meeting adjourned.

Q. What time did you go out?—A. We went out just after Jenkins finished his speech.

Q. Tell us what happened.—A. When we went out we stood out there on the corners waiting for them to come out. Rivers came out just then and Sawyer came out, and so when Jenkins came down he came down with several white gentlemen along with them, and two or three of the men said, "I would like to know whose wives those were Jenkins was alluding at." Jenkins then refused to give any answer, whilst the white gentlemen kept him back, and would not let us get to him, and would not let him give us any satisfaction at all; and then Jenkins said whatever he said he could prove. Then they said, "Whose wives are you talking about?" and Jenkins said, "The most of you." With that the crowd moved up King street on the left-hand side, and we followed them up, saying that we wanted Jenkins to give us an answer, whose wives he was meaning.

Q. How many were with you on your side?—A. Twenty or thirty blacks and three or four hundred whites. When we got near Calhoun street one white gentleman fired a pistol and said, "Go back; don't follow us no further." We said we wasn't after no fuss at all; we just wanted Jenkins to give us satisfaction, and we would have it. One gentleman took out a revolver and fired it twice.

Q. Did you see him?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him. —

Q. Did you know who it was?—A. I couldn't tell, because the crowd was too thick.

Q. Well, what happened then?—A. Well, then, when the revolver was fired the crowd gathered from all the meetings that night; there must have been five or six meetings—republican and democratic. The crowd gathered and the shots continued, one shot after the other, till the crowd got up near Radcliffe street. There was rocks fired, and when the pistols commenced the colored people scattered off, and the policemen came in and drove them off; but the white people kept up said firing. When the police came, one said they would fire upon them. They would stand right around the corner, and just as the colored people came to the corner would fire away.

Q. What happened then?—A. When they commenced to fire the colored people made a sort of a stand; they could not get anywheres to run. The white people were firing from the windows; then the policemen came down and began to scatter away other people and we all left the streets.

Q. What became of the white people? Did they go any other way?—A. No, sir; we left them on the streets while the police was dispersing the crowds.

Q. Did you see any more after this time that the police told the colored people to go away?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any more.

Q. At the time you came out of the hall, and these colored people stood at the door and asked Jenkins, when he came out, whose wives he referred to, had the colored people arms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Of no kind?—A. Of no kind.

Q. Did they make any threats to kill Jenkins?—A. None at all; I never heard such threats used.

Q. Did you know any of them that were there?—A. I knew several of them that were there.

Q. Whom did you know?—A. I can name Mr. Furst; he was there, but he is very sick now.

Q. After they first came out what did they say to Jenkins?—A. They called him in a pious way; they called him "Jenkins." He never made no answer. They called him again; he said, "What do you want?" He then said, "If you want anything, come to me," and the white gentlemen said "Go back."

Q. Did any of the colored people there make any threat?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they have any arms?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. Did any one of them fire a pistol?—A. Not as I know of.

Q. Would you have seen it or heard it if they had fired a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that they made any move to kill Jenkins?—A. I didn't see it if they did.

Q. Did they make any move to fight him?—A. I didn't see it, sir.

Q. Did you yourself want to injure him?—A. I didn't, sir, for I knew Jenkins personally.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of Lewis?—A. I don't, sir.

Q. You would have known it if these people intended to do Jenkins any harm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these fifteen or twenty men went away together?—A. Yes, sir, they went away together, the biggest part of the men at the hall, when Jenkins commenced; but about fifteen or twenty men staid there.

Q. They stated that they wanted to know whose wives he meant; they did nothing that was inconsistent with the action of orderly men?—A. Yes, sir; when I was returning home with a friend of mine we met, I suppose, a hundred and fifty men belonging to the rifle clubs going to the row at double-quick. By that time the row was over. When we seen them going we jumped into a building.

Q. Did you hear any shooting?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You are a constable?—A. I was, sir. I am out of my situation about ten days now.

Q. Who were you a constable for?—A. I was first constable for Mr. William Mer-sham.

Q. You were constable for a trial-justice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you swear that you did not know Thomas Lewis, a colored man?—A. I do, sir.

Q. Do you not know that you were there with him that night at the door?—A. I don't know whether I was or not.

Q. You will not swear that you were not?—A. I don't swear it.

Q. Do you swear that you did not have a pistol in your pocket that night?—A. I do solemnly swear.

Q. Did you not tell Mr. Lewis that you would kill Jenkins if you got a chance?—A. I swear I did not.

Q. Are you a member of a negro club in Charleston?—A. I don't know, sir; I am a member of the State's militia.

Q. What State's?—A. The State of South Carolina.

Q. How long have you been a member of the militia?—A. About two years.

Q. Did you say you did not belong to any colored club in town here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take an oath at any time during the campaign?—A. No, sir.

- Q. Are you sure about that?—A. I is, sir.
- Q. Who have you talked with about this thing?—A. No one, as I know of.
- Q. Have you talked with any person at all about what you were to swear to here?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You are positively sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You were pious that night?—A. Yes, sir; I always is.
- Q. You say you are thirty-four years of ago?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And since the war you have not done any work?—A. I have done work when it was to be attended to.
- Q. You were a constable that night?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Then you were not working before that?—A. I was working in the right cause, where all good citizens should be working.
- Q. You were one of the republican workers?—A. I don't know what you mean.
- Q. What did you mean by saying a moment ago that you were working in a good cause?—A. That is in the republican cause.
- Q. Then you did work in the republican cause?—A. When I work in a good cause I think my vote is work.
- Q. And you think voting is working?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. But you have not done anything in that cause for how long?—A. I always did vote there.
- Q. How long since did you stop constabling?—A. About ten days.
- Q. Then you were a constable on the night of this riot?—A. I was a marshal then, the same thing as a constable.
- Q. What do you mean by a constable?—A. Employed by the county.
- Q. By whom were you appointed?—A. By the county-commissioners.
- Q. Did you make any arrests that night?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you as a constable carry any weapon?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Never carried a pistol?—A. I has carried them when I go out of the city; but when I went out I always had to borrow one then; I never carry them in the city.
- Q. Did you ever go out of the city?—A. I have, sir.
- Q. Frequently?—A. It has been some time since I have been out of the city.
- Q. When you were acting as constable did you not have to go out to make arrests?—A. Not often.
- Q. But when you did have to go out you would have to go and borrow a pistol?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. From whom?—A. Jim Williams.
- Q. Where did you find him?—A. He is a fisherman.
- Q. Where does he live?—A. I don't know.
- Q. How often did you borrow his pistol?—A. Once or twice.
- Q. Did you borrow anybody else's pistol?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Then you never had a pistol but once or twice, when you went into the country?—A. That is all, sir.
- Q. You say that there were fifteen of you there at that time?—A. Fifteen or twenty.
- Q. All colored men were pious about there?—A. From all appearances, sir.
- Q. Are you a married man?—A. I is, sir.
- Q. How long have you been married?—A. Four years the 18th of this February.
- Q. All these fifteen or twenty negroes followed this man Jenkins up King street?—A. He says, "Come on and I will give you an answer;" we didn't follow; but a great many of them lived up King street.
- Q. Did you go up King street after him?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you not say in your examination-in-chief that you went on after him?—A. Yes, sir; kept on behind him. We followed him as far as Calhoun street, because there was a meeting in ward 4.
- Q. How far is Calhoun street?—A. One block.
- Q. Do you say none of these men had pistols?—A. Not as I seen, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether they had them or not?—A. They didn't use them if they did.
- Q. How many white men did you see firing pistols; were there a hundred?—A. Not so many, I suppose.
- Q. How many?—A. Fifty or sixty, I suppose.
- Q. And they kept firing right into the crowd?—A. Yes, sir; right along.
- Q. How long did it continue?—A. The row continued about twenty-five or thirty minutes.
- Q. These fifty or sixty white men kept shooting their pistols right into the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many hundred negroes were killed?—A. They could not kill any, we ran off; there was nobody shot.
- Q. How many colored men were wounded?—A. Two or three.
- Q. And fifty or sixty white men fired pistols into the crowd for twenty-five minutes?—A. But the crowd was not standing right around there.

Q. Do you say that there was a negro killed?—A. One gentleman was killed.

Q. One white man?—A. That is what they say, sir.

Q. Who killed him?—A. That is pretty hard for me to say.

Q. Do you know?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know the white man you saw shot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him before?—A. I seen him when they had him arrested.

Q. Then all you know about that is what you saw after he was arrested?—A. I seen him then.

Q. You mean that you saw a white man arrested by the police and they said he did the shooting?—A. I didn't say I saw him, but I mean that the white men was shooting.

Q. You do not say that you saw any one individual shooting?—A. I saw several of them.

Q. Then your statement that you made a few minutes ago that you saw the white man fire the first shot is not correct?—A. It is, sir.

Q. Then you did see an individual white man fire the first shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you mean a few minutes ago by saying that you did not see any white men shoot and that the way you knew this white man shot was because the police arrested him and he said so?—A. You asked me did I know who he were; I told you I didn't know who he were; but I knew the one the police arrested, and they said he was the one that did the shooting.

Q. Was the man who was arrested the one whom you saw fire the first shot?—A. It is more than I dare say, sir.

Q. If you saw him you would know it?—A. It is pretty hard for me to tell in the night which is what.

Q. Just name the colored men that formed this company with you.—A. I could not name twenty men, although I am in company with them every day.

Q. Give me one name.—A. John Simmons.

Q. Who else?—Winnie Baptisté.

Q. Who else?—A. Sico Brown.

Q. How many more?—A. That is all I can remember now, except Robert Perry.

Q. Who were with you when you saw the rifle clubs coming in double-quick?—A. Edward Massieque.

Q. Was he with you down at the other hall?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they shoot?—A. Not as I know of, sir.

Q. Did you know whether they did or not?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You know that the white men shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you know that they shot from windows?—A. I do, sir.

Q. But you do not know whether the colored men shot or not?—A. I don't, sir.

Q. And you were in the crowd all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing?—A. Doing like the rest, seeing the fun.

Q. You thought it was fun and you wanted to see the whole thing?—A. Yes, sir; to see how far the thing was going.

Q. You were not satisfied to leave until the thing was over?—A. No, sir; I couldn't trust to leave.

Bvt.-Col. C. L. BEST, United States Army, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. What is your business?—Answer. I am a major in the First Artillery, United States Army.

Q. Are you in command of that portion of the Army at this point?—A. I am in temporary command of the troops at this post.

Q. During the late canvass who was in command here?—A. Col. H. J. Hunt, of the Fifth Artillery.

Q. Did Colonel Hunt make any official report in regard to the election and the Charleston riots?—A. He did, sir.

Q. Have you that report with you?—A. I have a copy.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What is it taken from?—A. Taken from the original.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You have a copy of the report taken from the original?—A. Yes, sir; it is in the post letter-book.

Q. What is that book?—A. It is a book containing the record of all official letters sent by the commanding officer of the post—official letters and reports

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Sent to or from the post?—A. Sent from the post.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. To the head of the War Department?—A. Yes, sir; or to other persons.

Q. Before a report is sent to the War Department by the commander of the post a copy is made in that book, and that becomes a part of the record of your office here?—A. O, certainly.

Q. Have you that book with you?—A. I have. [Producing the book referred to.]

Q. Does it contain a correct copy of the report made by General Hunt to which I have referred?—A. I have no doubt it does; but I would like to look at it a moment.

Q. Well, look at it, please, and see.—A. [The witness referring to the record.] I have no doubt it is a correct copy; but I would state that Colonel Hunt being in Washington sent his original report here to be copied in the book. It is customary to leave a space at the bottom of each report where the commander of the post signs his name.

Q. Was it copied?—A. It was copied.

Q. By whom?—A. By one of the clerks in the office.

Q. Do you know his name?—A. I could not give you his name; we have two or three clerks.

Q. Did you see the original report?—A. I heard it read by the adjutant in my presence. I was going on to add that this report is without Colonel Hunt's signature, the original having gone to the department headquarters.

Q. His signature was to the paper, however, of which that was a copy?—A. I have no doubt it was; I could not say positively, because the adjutant read Colonel Hunt's report to me.

Q. Would anything have been copied in that book that was not signed by General Hunt?—A. O, no, sir; not all; these books are kept with great accuracy.

Mr. BANKS. I object to the introduction of this paper, for the reason that it is not the original paper and does not contain the sign-manual of Colonel Hunt.

Mr. JONES. It is a part of the official record of the post, and ought to be admitted; it is just as much a copy of the original paper as the statutes of any State in printed form, which are recognized in courts of justice.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) I would say that there is no doubt at all about the admissibility of this evidence. The witness has testified that he is in command of this post; that all official letters and reports emanating from the commanding officer of this post to the War Department, or elsewhere, are copied entire in the book which he has produced, before being transferred to the War Department; that this is the record of his office; that only such papers are copied in such record as bear the signatures of the commanding officers; that Colonel Hunt made a report and sent it to Charleston for the purpose of having it copied in this book, and it was so copied before having been transmitted to the department commander; that the copy of that report was made by one of the clerks in his office; that the name of General Hunt was not added, although it appeared upon the original as the witness verily believes; that it is customary for the commanding officer to sign the book himself; but that this book contains a true and correct copy of the report which was made by Colonel Hunt. It seems to me that this is very competent as a record. And, further, I will say that we will admit this record and follow it up by the testimony of the young gentleman who made the copy as to the correctness of the copy made by himself.

Mr. BANKS. I would state my objections more at length. I object to its being received as evidence because it is not a copy of the original. The signature of the officer making the report is neither there, as it ought to be by his own hand to be a part of this record, nor is it even there by the hand of the clerk making the copy. We do not know that the paper was ever signed. It may be that the general habit of the office is that the paper would not be copied unless it was signed; but we do not know that it was ever signed, and it is not a copy because the signature is not there. If the signature were copied there by the clerk, I should not object to it. It would be better to call the clerk to prove the correctness of the copy before we proceed to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The Chair here states that he will call the clerk to prove the correctness of the copy and that the original was signed by General Hunt.

Lieut. E. R. HILLS, United States Army, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. What is your rank in the United States Army?—Answer. I am first lieutenant in the Fifth Artillery.

Q. Will you state whether you received any report from General Hunt upon the late election in this State and the Charleston riots?—A. I did, sir.

Q. For what purpose did you receive it?—A. I received it for the purpose of having it entered in the post letter-book.

Q. That is the book which Colonel Best this morning brought before the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the report signed by General Hunt himself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have it copied in the post letter-book?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?—A. By one of the clerks in my office named Bjorkland.

Q. Have you the original in your possession?—A. I have, sir.

Q. Please produce it.—A. [The witness producing the report and handing it to the chairman.] This is the report signed by General Hunt and which he sent to me for the purpose I have indicated. The marks upon the margin, "Rec'd," "1st," "Charleston, S. C., Dec. 17, 1876," were not there when I received the paper. I put those there by the general directions.

W. BJORKLAND sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. Are you a clerk in the post headquarters in Charleston?—Answer. Yes, sir. Q. [The report of General Hunt shown witness.] Did you make a copy of this report of General Hunt's in the post letter-book?—A. Yes, sir; I made a copy, sir.

Q. How did you make the copy?—A. Mr. Hofer, another clerk in the office, made a copy of the original, and I entered the report in the letter-book from his copy.

Q. Was the copy which you made in the letter-book a correct copy of the copy made by Mr. Hofer?—A. Yes, sir; it was compared afterwards and found to be correct.

---

CHARLESTON, S. C., Friday, December 29, 1876.

ANDREAS HOFER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Question. Are you a clerk in the post headquarters at Charleston?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. [The report of General Hunt handed witness.] Please look at that paper and say whether you made copy of it.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the copy which you made a true and correct copy?—A. It was a true and correct copy; it was compared and found to be correct.

Q. To whom did you hand that copy that it might be copied in the post letter-book?—A. I handed my own copy to Mr. Bjorkland.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

The original report of General Hunt signed by himself having been produced, the same is offered in evidence, and is as follows:

“WASHINGTON, D. C., November 27, 1876.

“ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, Atlanta, Ga.

“COLONEL: I have the honor to report for the information of the colonel commanding the department the operations of my command from the time it left Summerville, S. C., to aid the United States marshal in his duties connected with the election of Tuesday, November 7.

“Under specific instructions, I sent Captain Randolph, Fifth Artillery, and twenty men to Beaufort; Lieutenant Baldwin, Fifth Artillery, and ten men to John's Island; Lieutenant Edgerton, Second Artillery, and eight men to Adams Run; Lieutenant Jefferson, Fifth Artillery, with eight men to Walterborough; Lieut. T. R. Adams, Fifth Artillery, with ten men to Strawberry Ferry, and Lieutenant Sherman, First Artillery, with ten men to James Island, to be guided by the provisions of General Order No. 96 from headquarters of the Army. All these detachments, and the two foot batteries of my command, consisting of Frank's Battery, First Artillery, and Kinzie's Fifth Artillery, were put in motion so as to reach their respective destinations on the 6th instant, the day before the election. These detachments, except Sherman's, were taken from Randolph's Battery C, Fifth Artillery. They all returned as directed, on the 9th, to Charleston. From the reports of their officers it appears that no actual violence occurred at the polls requiring their interposition, but their presence in the vicinity was doubtless of service.

“Captain Randolph states that he found neither marshal nor deputy at Beaufort, and that it was reported to him that the United States supervisor was stopped on his way to the polling-place, and upon showing his papers to the negroes, who stopped him, had them taken from him and destroyed and was obliged to fly for his life.

“Lieutenant Adams reports that at Strawberry Ferry a company of colored men, about forty in number, were marched to the polls with arms, under a leader, said to be John Lowery, (colored,) though no riot or disturbance occurred.

“Lieutenant Baldwin states that no disturbance connected with the elections occurred on John's Island; that leading citizens informed him, and he believed this was due to the presence of the troops.

"Lieutenant Edgerton reports that no disturbance occurred at Adams Run, and that he has every reason to believe that the presence of the troops prevented a serious one taking place at the polls.

"Lieutenant Jefferson, immediately on his arrival at Walterborough, on the evening of the 6th, in a conference with the United States marshal, Commissioner Glover, the intendant of the town, and the leaders of both political parties, learned that while they had no apprehension of disorder at Walterborough they believed there would be trouble at Blue-house polls. Acting on this, he marched early next morning to that place, and says he has no doubt that their arrival prevented serious trouble. In the last three cases these officers report that the danger arose from the disposition of the republican negroes to interfere with those of their own color who desired to vote the democratic ticket.

"Lieutenant Sherman found a feverish and excited state of feeling existing at James Island, but the presence of his command restored confidence, and no disturbance occurred.

"Frank's and Kinzie's batteries reached Charleston on the afternoon of the 6th, and were stationed at the citadel, under the immediate command of Captain Frank. In the morning of the 7th a detachment under Lieutenant Clark, First Artillery, was stationed at Carolina Hall, in the lower part of the town, and another under Lieutenant Adams at the arsenal, (Charleston barracks.)

"From these three points aid could be readily sent to the deputy marshals if required. Frequent calls were made because of threatened disturbances, but on the arrival of the troops quiet was found to prevail or was soon restored. The troops were not actually used, I believe, in any case. The election, on the whole, in the city was remarkably quiet. I visited the voting-places where trouble was most expected, and found good order to prevail until toward evening, when one or two noisy and riotous bands of colored men were gathered at the polls, and these proceeded to parade the streets in a disorderly manner; but as a whole the city was quiet, and during the night peaceful.

"On the morning of the 8th nothing material occurred. Everything appeared on the surface to be as usual in the town, and I gave directions for the troops to return by the 3.10 p. m. train to their camp at Summerville unless I should send different orders. About 1 p. m. I called on United States Marshal Wallace, who stated that everything was quiet, except a report from Mount Pleasant that apprehension existed there from the presence of a company of armed negroes who had arrived as a guard for the poll-boxes. This report the marshal considered exaggerated, stated that the duties of the troops with regard to the elections were over, and that I could safely go to Summerville; that if disturbances did occur he would so telegraph. I then proceeded to the mayor's rooms at the guard-house or main police-station. He was not there, but on inquiring of the officer in charge and others of the police I was told the city was perfectly quiet. Opposite the police-station is the court-house, corner of Broad and Meeting, on both fronts of which, and at the city-hall opposite to it on Meeting street, there were large numbers of negroes assembled, and there were gatherings of the same class along the north side of Broad street extending toward the post-office. They were quite numerous opposite the News and Courier office, where the bulletin-board was exposed. I crossed Broad street from the station-house to the court-house, walked among the crowd there, and although nothing was done or said to which I could attach any importance in itself, yet the excitement and appearance of these men were such that I apprehended that mischief was brewing. I therefore followed down the street toward the post-office, observing the crowd closely, and returning to the city-hall in the same way became so thoroughly convinced that there would be trouble, although there was nothing in the conduct or manner of the whites about the bulletin-board that I could perceive to provoke it, that I took a street-car to the citadel, in order to stop the departure of the troops. When I reached the citadel they had just started for Summerville depot. I joined them, and Colonel Frank and Major Kinzie told me that everything was quiet in the upper part of the town. On the arrival of the troops at the depot I halted them, made arrangements with the superintendent to take them up at 7.10 p. m. or on the next morning if required, and sent the companies back to the citadel, while I proceeded down King street to Broad. As I was leaving the depot I met the surgeon, Dr. De Witt, who told me he was glad I had stopped the movement of the troops; that the appearances on the lower part of King street were bad; that there were knots of negroes walking down King street in an excited manner, pushing persons who were in the way, even ladies, off the side-walks. I continued down the streets, stopping at almost every business house whose owners I knew, and asking as to the condition of affairs. The replies from all were that everything was quiet and peaceful. Turning into Broad street, as I approached the station-house I perceived a commotion near the court-house, and asking of a policeman what it meant, he informed me that there was a fight going on near the Charleston Hotel. I hurried up to that point and found that the affair was over and the police taking off one or two prisoners. After sending off a dispatch from the hotel, I was returning toward Broad street when I perceived a commotion there, and upon inquiring, learned from a man running up Meeting street that there was a serious flight going on in Broad street, and that the negroes were firing into the News and Courier office. I sent for the troops to the citadel to hurry down, for I could now hear the firing and saw it was extending westwardly along Broad street. So soon as I reached the court-house, I found the firing was heavy near King street, and started toward it, when a policeman ran out of the station-house and asked me to come in there. Immediately three or four negroes on the north side came off the side-walk and told me to keep on if I desired, for that I "would be safe anywhere." I, however, at the request of the policeman, went to the station-house, where the officer in charge was getting out his men, and he appealed to me for assistance in such terms as led me to believe he felt himself too weak to control the riot. By this time a number of gentlemen, young and old, had arrived and offered their services to me. I informed the police officer that the troops were on their way, but if he desired the services of these citizens they were at his disposal. He said he would be glad to have them; they fell in with his force, and as I was giving some directions he interposed, saying in substance that the matter was in his hands. He then started off, when I almost immediately had complaints that the policemen were firing on and bayoneting quiet white people. The troops soon after arrived at the station-house, and additional armed white citizens also reported. Some one of the civil authorities, as I supposed, I do not remember who, then told me that it was essential that the latter should be sent back to their homes. I declined sending these armed men on the streets, but told him they would be placed where they would produce no bad effect, and directed them to take position behind the troops and to remain there, which direction they followed implicitly. In a few moments the expected notice was brought me by a policeman from the scene of conflict that the police force could not disperse the rioters, and asking me for aid. I then ordered Major Kinzie to take twenty men and clear the streets, using as little violence as possible, consistently with the execution of the order. This duty was promptly and well performed by Major Kinzie, who, after stopping the firing of the combatants, continued up King street as far as the citadel. A few blocks above Broad street he found parties of whites and negroes armed and on opposite sides of King street, whom he persuaded to disperse. There were no gatherings above the citadel, and he returned to the station-house. In one case he found a negro who attempted to shoot a white man, and therefore disarmed him, the man objecting to give up his musket, as it was State arms. The musket was brought to the citadel guard-house. It has been stated in a New York newspaper, on the alleged authority of a United States Senator, that the troops were preceded by the clubs. This was not so. Major Kinzie took only soldiers, and of his own battery, with him, the armed citizens, clubs or others, remaining quietly where they were placed by me. Threatening assemblages were reported to me as forming at several points below Broad street. This was confirmed by Judge Bryan, of the United States court, who passed through them on his way to the station-house. I sent parties of soldiers with policemen, by whom they were all dispersed.

"After the conflict had ceased, General James Connor proposed to the mayor that they should go through the streets together and direct all persons, white and black, to go to their homes. This proposition was accepted by the mayor, and proved effective. In the mean time information was received that at the commencement of the riot boats were started off to James Island for re-enforcements of negroes, and the mayor and General Connor took steps to prevent their landing.

"When all this had been done, I proposed sending patrols of soldiers through the streets at intervals during the night to prevent further assemblages and to insure the peace, to which the mayor objected decidedly, saying he wished no patrols of soldiers in the streets. I then ordered the troops back to the citadel, took a carriage, drove through the city and satisfied myself that all was quiet. There was no disturbance during the night.

"Early in the morning of the 9th, Major Berlin, of Charleston, who was acting as my aid, reported that on going to his office on the wharf, near the post-office, he found several hundred longshore-men assembled. They were being harangued by several persons, and appeared excited and "ugly." He therefore went to the station-house, reported the fact in my name, and asked that means should be taken to prevent evil consequences. He was answered that it was the usual hour for their assembling for work and that they could not be interfered with, upon which he reported the facts to me. We went together to the foot of Broad street. Although it was the hour at which the streets are usually full of drays and carts hauling cotton and stores from the depots, but one or two were to be seen, and the streets seemed deserted. On my arrival near the post-office, crowds of negroes, (longshore-men) were pouring into Broad street shouting 'No work to-day.' Several stevedores then reported to me that they could get no hands and that work at the wharves was stopped. I referred them to the mayor. It was reported to me at the same time that some of the negroes called out as they passed along the streets 'Now is the time to go for them, before they are out of bed,' and fears were expressed that more rioting was intended. From this time appearances grew worse, and the whites, seeing the condition of affairs, went for their arms. Fearing that another conflict was coming on, I sent for a detachment under an officer, which I stationed at the police guard-house, ordered the troops at the citadel to be kept ready for immediate service, and directed that Randolph's battery on its return that day from detachment service at the elections should remain in Charleston, instead of proceeding as ordered to Summerville.

"At midday the streets were quiet, but appearances very threatening; the white people were at their business, mostly armed. The negroes had withdrawn into the court-house or other buildings near their usual resorts. Occasionally persons were seen going, as I supposed, to their business places with their guns, and the mayor asked me to come to his room for a conference. There were several persons in the room, none of whom I know personally, but in the course of conversation I recognized them as the well-known leaders of the colored people. The mayor, after stating that affairs looked very serious, to which I assented, informed me that the rifle clubs were assembled at their armories near by. I asked him if he were sure of this, and he answered 'Yes, there goes a man now with his rifle; you can see him from the window.' I went to the window, saw the man, and also that the doors and shutters of the court-house opposite were being closed, the house itself being full of negroes. I stated that something should be done to avert the conflict, which, now that the whites as well as negroes were armed, could not fail to be bloody, and asked if the colored people could not be prevailed upon to go home quietly. The mayor replied to this that 'a negro had as good a right to be on the street armed as a white man.' I told him I had not come to discuss abstract rights, but that a bloody encounter was imminent, that my troops would necessarily be involved, and I therefore thought it my business to take every measure in my power to prevent the evil; that these colored people could be sent home without difficulty by those present in the room; that they ought to be sent away at once, for any fool or knave might at any moment start a riot which it would be impossible to control. To this last proposition an emphatic assent was given by many in the room. The mayor then stated that the colored people were afraid to separate, they were afraid of the whites. I replied that I did not think there would be danger in that, but that if that was the fear I would take such measures that I would guarantee their being able to disperse in safety. He replied that he wanted the whites to disperse first; and asked why I could not guarantee them against molestation from the blacks if they would do so. I had never said I could not so guarantee them, but as the question was asked me and with the evident concurrence of the leaders present, I answered, 'Because I have no control over the colored people, nor could I appeal to their reason or intelligence under the circumstances while, their leaders there present could without trouble send them to their homes.' On his again intimating that I should be able to guarantee the whites against the colored people, if I could guarantee the colored people against the whites, I told him the cases were different; that for months these negroes had been taught and firmly believed that if General Hampton was elected governor they would at once be remanded to slavery; that the dispatches now hourly coming in announcing majorities for Hampton were to their apprehensions actual sentences into slavery; that their excited fears, however unfounded in truth, were beyond my control, and I would not give any guarantee that I did not feel able to fulfill, especially in so grave a matter as this in which life and the safety of the city were at stake. The mayor then turned to a person evidently waiting for the purpose, and directed him to telegraph to Governor Chamberlain that the clubs were assembled, the whites armed, and the peace of the city in peril. I then stated to the mayor that I had not supposed I had been invited to a conference in order to provide a basis for such a dispatch. He said, 'Your name will not be used.' That, I answered, was of no consequence, but that I could not see that any effort had been made by him to avert the danger; that if the clubs were in their armories, as he asserted, and of which I knew nothing, that he knew their leaders; that there had been formerly arrangements made between the parties, and that he had taken no steps whatever to ascertain what could be done to avert bloodshed. He then, after a moment's reflection, sent for General Connor and Colonel Simonton, chairman of the democratic committee, and I left the building for a time to note the condition of affairs. On my return I found a committee of the principal gentlemen of the place in conference with the mayor, who then invited General Connor, Colonel Simonton, and myself to join them. It was proposed that I should co-operate with the mayor in preserving the peace of the town. Being called upon, I expressed my willingness to do so in every way I could, as I had already done. This was not satisfactory to those present, and the question arose who was to direct and be responsible. The mayor considered that he was to be, and the troops to act on his call. I stated that the troops could only act under the orders and on the responsibility of their own officers. The mayor asserted his sole responsibility and right to control, to which a gentleman answered that such was the case under ordinary circumstances, but these were extraordinary. The conference was without results; it left matters just where they had been. On its breaking up the mayor informed me that I would soon receive instructions from General Ruger. He was evidently under the impression that those would place the military at his disposal. Soon after I received the following telegraphic dispatch from General Ruger at Columbia dated 2.30 p. m.:

“Rumors here of further trouble in Charleston. Has any occurred, and if so, what was the cause. Report condition of things.”

“To which I replied as follows:

“5 p. m.—Telegram received. The town is in a very feverish and dangerous condition, but no fighting to-day. I hoped after the riot last night peace would prevail, but parties are very suspicious; have no confidence in each other. I gave all assistance I could last night, and it was the troops that settled the affair. Both parties being now armed and fearful of each other, I have held troops in readiness from an early hour. Have ordered Randolph's battery on its return from Beaufort to-night to stop here. A conference of the mayor and leading citizens has had no satisfactory results. I will do all I can to suppress riots and save life and property, but I cannot be responsible for results unless I have entire control.”

“Soon after sending this dispatch I received the following from General Ruger:

“Information has been made by the mayor of Charleston to the governor that there is danger of riot. The governor applies to me. Do what is necessary to preserve the peace.”

“And soon after the following:

“I have ordered Lorain's battery from Blackville to report to you in Charleston. I will send more if you need.”

“With these instructions, I was on my way to the mayor's office when I met a messenger from him requesting my presence. I found him again in consultation with some of the gentlemen with whom he had had a conference during the day. After finishing his conversation with them he asked if I had yet received any orders from General Ruger, to which I replied in the affirmative, and read to him, in presence of the other gentlemen, the one stating that the governor had applied to General Ruger and directing me to do what was necessary to preserve the peace. Without waiting for a reply, I informed him I was now ordered to preserve the peace, was responsible for its preservation, and assumed the duty; that I did not propose to interfere with the functions of the municipal authorities in the discharge of their ordinary duties for the protection of person or property; that I would allow no assemblages on the sidewalks that would obstruct them, or that might cause disturbance, whether of whites or blacks; that I would send patrols of troops through the streets night and day, to see if these orders were obeyed; that if any such assemblages refused to obey the police, or were too large for them to control, to report the fact to the first patrol that came along, or to send word to the citadel, and they would be dispersed by the troops. I added that I would expect all needful information that the mayor could give me, and would communicate to him all such information as I should obtain and that would be useful to him. To all this the mayor immediately and readily agreed, and repeatedly and emphatically expressed his acquiescence in the measures I proposed to adopt. I then told him I wished him to send word to the negroes that they were under the protection of the troops, to disperse to their homes and remain quiet, that I would see they were not attacked or molested. This he did, and his instructions were acted upon by them at once. I then requested General Connor, who was present, to send the white people to their homes also, with the assurance that the peace of the city would be maintained by the troops, which he immediately undertook to do. In a very short time the people were on the streets going quietly home. In an hour the town was perfectly quiet. I ordered the troops at the station-house to return to the citadel, patrols to be sent out during the night, and on my way to the telegraph-office received additional instructions from General Ruger to take control for the time being, in order to preserve the peace, and to so inform the mayor, which was repeated in an order I received while writing my report to him as follows:

“Charleston, 7.45 p. m., 9th November. Telegrams received. I had already seen the mayor and assumed control of the peace of the city. The mayor and myself in perfect accord. The city is all quiet, the people of all classes dispersing to their homes. I feel confident of maintaining security and quiet, as my measures are approved by all parties. Your telegram 7.35 just received; it changes nothing of the above. Randolph's battery arrived. I expect Lorain in the morning; should I require more, will telegraph. I don't think I will require more; confidence alone was wanting.”

“From this time until I left Charleston the city remained perfectly quiet. On the morning of the 10th I received orders to proceed to Columbia immediately on the arrival of Colonel Best in Charleston, which order was countermanded the same afternoon. On the 11th, Saturday, I received a dispatch from General Hancock, informing me that I was considered as in temporary command of South Carolina during the absence of General Ruger, who had been ordered to Florida; directed me to stop the concentration of such troops at Columbia and Charleston as had not yet commenced the movement, in case their local commanders thought their presence necessary to insure the peace, and stated that the Secretary of War desired me as the commanding officer of the troops to confer with Governor Chamberlain as to their distribution, to inform Colonel Black, commanding officer at Columbia, of this, and communicate it to General Ruger. I took the necessary steps to carry out these instructions. On this evening, Saturday 11, two hours after receiving General Hancock's dispatch, I was informed that reports were being actively circulated among the negroes that I was the real head of the white clubs and that General Connor was acting under my directions. To this I attached little importance except so far as it might lead them to distrust either my power or intention to protect them; and I believed the active patrolling of the streets by the troops and the impartial enforcement of my orders on all classes, which they could witness for themselves, would soon re-assure them. At the same time, about 7 p. m., I was further informed that a prominent Federal officer of Charleston, the collector of the port, had been heard to state to one or more leaders of the negroes that I would be sent away from Charleston within twenty-four hours, that this time it would be by the Secretary of War, and that I would be ordered West. As I had just received instructions from the Secretary through General Hancock to communicate, as commander of the troops in South Carolina, with the governor as to their distribution, I attached little importance to this. The same evening there appeared in a Charleston newspaper the following notice:

"The mayor requests us to state that the numerous reports to the effect that the city is under martial law are unfounded. In the consultation between himself and General Hunt it was simply agreed that in case the police-force were insufficient to quell a riot the troops should be called upon to assist."

"As the direct tendency of this notice was to impair the confidence of all classes in the assurance of protection that I had given, and as the paragraph was not in accordance with the facts or with the declared approval by the mayor of the measures I had taken based on orders from General Ruger, I prepared the following paragraph correcting what I supposed was a misunderstanding of the mayor's statement:

"The statement in the Republican of Saturday evening on the authority of the mayor is correct as to the fact that the city is not under martial law; but it is necessary that it should be clearly understood by all classes in the community that the preservation of good order and the peace of the city has been assumed by General Hunt. The ordinary municipal protection to property and person remains with the police, and is not interfered with. For the peace and quiet of the city, so far as protection is needed against riot or mob violence or any demonstration leading thereto, by any party or class, General Hunt is responsible, and will act at once with the troops on reliable information from any quarter or upon appearance of any unusual disorder. The municipal authorities have agreed to report promptly to him such appearances or violations of order, and are left undisturbed in the exercise of their ordinary duties."

"On my aid presenting this to the mayor, he denied any such understanding, stated that he had never seen or heard General Ruger's order, and even threatened if I took upon myself these duties he would disband his police. It now appeared to me evident that I could not rely on the pledged co-operation of the mayor, and that I would be compelled to publish the notice myself in order to maintain confidence in the city, when on the afternoon of Sunday, 12th, I received orders by telegraph from General Sherman to proceed at once to Washington and report to the Secretary of War. I therefore turned over the whole matter to Colonel Best at Charleston, notified Colonel Black, the next officer in rank in South Carolina, and left the same evening in obedience to my instructions.

"In the work of these few days I received the active, intelligent assistance of Major Carl Berlin, a citizen of Charleston, formerly on the staff of the artillery of the Army of the Potomac as my aid. His services in behalf of the peace and security of the city were very valuable.

"Respectfully submitted.

"HENRY J. HUNT.

"Colonel Fifth Artillery."

Adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, December 30, 1876, at 10 o'clock a. m.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Saturday, December 30, 1876.

The Subcommittee met at 10 o'clock a. m., all the members present.

THOMAS SMITH sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS :

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. No. 12 State street, Charleston.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-six the 17th of this month.

Q. What is your business?—A. I was driving a dray the week before the election. I was working for Mr. John Kinlock, at the corner of Queen and Meeting street.

Q. When were you employed there?—A. I was with him all the summer up to the election.

Q. How long a time was that?—A. I have been with him off and on three years, I suppose.

Q. Will you please tell the committee anything about your employment and about your quitting that is consistent with the facts?—A. Just about a week before the election he came to me and said, "I want you to vote our ticket this time." I told him I could not do it. He was not speaking to me particular, but he was speaking to a crowd of us, though he picked me out as to speak to me more personally than any of the rest of them. I told him I could not do it; that I was a republican; that I had served two years and eight months in the United States Army, and it was impossible for me to go back on the principle now; then he told me he would give me a certain time to consider over it before the election.

Q. What time; how much time?—A. Well, it was about a week before the election that he spoke and I worked with him up to the election. The day of the election there was no business done at all, and I went back there the next day and he told me he had no use for me, because he didn't want any one that didn't go the way he went.

Q. You went to work, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he told you that he did not want you any more?—A. That he didn't want me any more, sir; he says because I was too much of a republican politician to be with him. He didn't want no one that didn't vote the way he wanted them to vote. He wanted them to vote and support his ticket.

Q. Were there other workmen employed there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. There was eight of us at that time.

Q. Was this conversation between you and him in the presence of these people?—A. Yes, sir; we all was together.

Q. They heard the conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they discharged?—A. Yes, sir; but all of them wasn't discharged at the time I was. He discharged them one by one. Some of them worked after that, but they didn't work very long.

Q. Did they cease to work in a very little time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long a time?—A. I suppose it was about six weeks.

Q. Was there any complaint made against you at any time as to the manner in which you did your work?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or as to your conduct?—A. No, sir; I was always counted to be one of the best drymen he had.

Q. And so far as Mr. Kinlock was concerned he had nothing to complain of you, and you were not discharged on account of any complaint?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Were those eight men all discharged?—A. Yes, sir; off and on after the election.

Q. None of them are working there now?—A. Well, I couldn't tell you that now, because I don't know whether they went back to him or not.

Q. How many of them were discharged after the election?—A. Well, all of them were discharged the week after I was discharged. He didn't discharge them all at one day.

Q. When were the next discharged?—A. I don't know exactly the time.

Q. You do not know when the next were discharged?—A. Not exactly. I couldn't tell you the amount of time they was discharged in; but they was discharged.

Q. Do you belong to one of the colored clubs, or did you, in the last campaign?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What club?—A. I belongs to the club they called the Live-Oak, in ward 1.

Q. Were you an officer of the club?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Was it a republican club?—A. Yes, sir; a republican club.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. How many members had you?—A. I don't know how many we had. I suppose we had about 275, as near as I can get at it.

Q. Did these other eight men he employed belong to the clubs?—A. Some of them did; but they are not in the same ward as I am.

Q. Who is the president of your club?—A. Lieutenant Williams; lieutenant on the police-force.

Q. A colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Lieutenant-Governor Gleaves ever visit you?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge; he was never at my place.

Q. Did you ever attend a meeting where he was present?—A. No, sir. I never seen him. I don't know what kind of a looking man he is, sir.

Q. How many policemen belong to your club?—A. Well, I could not tell exactly how many there was.

Q. Was there a good many?—A. No, sir; some two or three of them belongs to it, though.

Q. Two or three besides the captain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Colored policemen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Kinloch told you when you went back after the election that you were too much of a republican politician for him, and he did not want you?—A. Yes, sir; too much of a politician, and he didn't want me.

AARON ADAMS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. I live at 28 Bophane street, between Market and Wentworth.

Q. What is your business?—A. I have no trade at all.

Q. Are you a laborer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am in my twenty-third year, I think.

Q. How long have you lived in Charleston?—A. I have been back here about five years. I was sold away from here.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I was born in the city here.

Q. Where were you employed about the time of election, before or after?—A. At Lesseme & Wells's.

Q. How long had you been employed by them?—A. A little over two weeks; about two weeks and two days.

Q. What were you doing?—A. Carrying beam-scales to reweigh cotton.

Q. Will you state to the committee anything that occurred about your employment with them?—A. Well, sir; all I have to say is that Mr. Wells came in the office, and said he wanted me to vote with him.

Q. He said that to you?—A. Yes, sir; I said, no, sir; I could not vote with him.

Q. What was the reason you could not vote with him?—A. Well, sir, I didn't thought that was the way for me to vote.

Q. Did he tell you how to vote or how he wanted you to vote?—A. He told me he wanted me to vote for Mr. Hampton.

Q. And you said you thought that was not the way for you to vote.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else?—A. He said he didn't see why I couldn't vote for an honest government and why we voted for thieves. I told him then that they never stole anything from me; I had nothing for them to steal from me.

Q. What was the final result of it?—A. After he found he couldn't get me to vote for him he went off, and he came back twice and the third time he said he had no further use for me.

Q. Well, did you leave?—A. Yes, sir; I left.

Q. When did you leave?—A. I left on the day of election.

Q. Have you worked for him since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has any complaint been made of your work at any time by anybody connected with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they complain of your conduct?—A. No, sir.

Q. State to the committee whether they were satisfied or dissatisfied with you.—A. I never heard them say anything, sir; the weigher said he liked me very well, and he thought I was a nice young man.

Q. Who was the weigher?—A. Mr. Simmons.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. You are a republican?—A. Yes, sir; that's what I claim to be.

Q. Did you belong to one of the colored clubs in Charleston?—A. No club or society at all, sir.

Q. Was it Mr. Wells who had these talks with you?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Wells.

Q. Was he one of the partners?—A. I think he is boss, sir; I think he is head of the firm.

Q. He did not discharge you, did he?—A. He told me he had no further use for me if I wouldn't vote for him.

Q. If you would not vote; but he did not tell you to leave?—A. He told me he had no further use for me.

Q. This was before the election?—A. This was on the day of election.

Q. He told you if you did not vote for his party he would not have any further use for you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever come back to offer your services to the firm?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not work at all on election-day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. In the sample-room.

Q. You never went back again to ask for work?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know, if you never went back, that he would not have taken you back again?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whom have you worked for since?—A. I have not been working anywheres particular. I have worked with Mr. George W. Williams two days since that.

- Q. What were you doing there?—A. I was piling cotton.
- Q. Is Mr. Williams a democrat?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.
- Q. Whom else did you work for?—A. I worked for a new company from Savannah now.
- Q. Who has charge of that company?—A. I don't know who is the boss now.
- Q. Who was the boss when you went there?—A. It was the firm of Loop, Hanneman & Co.
- Q. Were they democrats?—A. I suppose so, sir.
- Q. Whom else did you work for?—A. Well, I haven't been doing anything since then.
- Q. Did you work for any person since the election except for Williams, two days and Loop, Hanneman & Co. one day?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Are you sure?—A. I am sure of it, sir.
- Q. Then you have worked only three days since the election?—A. That is all, sir.
- Q. Why did you not work right along for Mr. Williams?—A. He wanted me to bring him a paper, and I had no one to give me a paper.
- Q. Did you go to Mr. Wells and ask him for a recommendation?—A. I didn't ask him.
- Q. Whom had you worked for before you went to Mr Wells?—A. Well, I worked in the custom-house awhile.
- Q. Who was the boss over you there?—A. Mr. Herring.
- Q. Is he a republican?—A. I don't know what he is, sir.
- Q. A colored man?—A. A white man; he was the superintendent of the custom-house.
- Q. Well, did you get a letter of recommendation from him?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you apply to him for any?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Why were you discharged from Mr. Williams's?—A. The day I went there for work he said I must bring a paper; so I worked and he never said anything more about the paper—for about two days, and the next day I went and he said he had no use for me.
- Q. Well, how about the firm of Loop, Hanneman, & Co.; why did you leave there?—A. Well, sir, I worked there one day and they said they wasn't going to work, and I worked around the wharf, and the next day I saw the scales going out.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. What was the paper that Mr. Williams wanted you to get?—A. I suppose what I was in politics. He asked me how I voted.
- Q. What did he say about the paper that he wanted you to get?—A. He said he didn't intend to give any of them work unless they voted for him.

THOMAS CYRUS WASHINGTON sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Question. Where do you live?—Answer. No. 18 Chapel street.
- Q. How long have you lived in Charleston?—A. I was born and raised here.
- Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-four, sir.
- Q. What is your occupation?—A. Drayman, sir.
- Q. Where did you work, if anywhere, about the time of the election, before or after?—A. Before the election I was working for a gentleman named Mr. Broderick.
- Q. What was his business?—A. Dray-business, sir; in fact, I was under his care; the teams was not his.
- Q. How long did you work with him?—A. I believe I was there some four or five months before the election.
- Q. How long did you work after the election?—A. I didn't work after the election.
- Q. When did you leave him?—A. I don't recollect on what day it was, but as regards the election, before.
- Q. How many days before?—A. About a week before.
- Q. Will you please tell the committee about your leaving his place. What was said to you by any one connected with Mr. Broderick, or by Mr. Broderick himself?—A. Just before the election I went down to the resin-yard with a load of resin, and there was a white gentleman down there by the name of Pregnon, and he was speaking to me concerning the late riot on King street, and him and me was talking some considerable time till he started to tell me, says he, "We expect to give you all hell in this coming campaign, and we are going to try to kill all the negroes out." So I told him, "Well, it didn't make no difference to me," that I was a man who calculates to stand by my manhood. I don't calculate to go against my principles to please no man.
- Q. What we want to know is what occurred about your discharge?—A. Yes, sir; I am coming to that. So I told him I calculated to sustain my manhood, and I didn't propose to do but just as I proposed; that if Mr. Broderick didn't like me I could go. So he told Mr. Broderick about the conversation he had with me.
- Q. Did Mr. Broderick tell you so?—A. Yes, sir; and I seen them myself in conversation. So he told me the next morning, when I went to work, that he had no further use for me unless I promised to support their party. Then I left, and that was all that transpired.

- Q. Was any complaint ever made of you?—A. None at all, sir.
 Q. You were never charged with neglect?—A. O, no, sir.
 Q. Nor dishonesty?—A. O, no, sir; I can prove my character in this city.
 Q. Did he give you any recommendation?—A. I didn't ask for any.
 Q. Were there any other persons, to your knowledge, discharged at that time?—A. There was two more discharged besides myself, two days afterward.
 Q. When?—A. The day before the election.
 Q. What for?—A. I don't know, of my own knowledge.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

- Q. You and this young man got into a discussion at the resin-yard about the riot?—
 A. Yes sir; about the King-street riot.
 Q. You got to arguing about it?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. You were discussing whom you thought were to blame?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. He would try to blame the negroes, and you tried to blame the whites?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. And you got a little excited and had quite a discussion about it?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. And both of you said things, I suppose, you would not have said if you had been quiet and cool?—A. I think I should have said it if I was cool, because I didn't say anything more than just exactly what was on my mind.
 Q. But you said things in that conversation that you would not have exactly said if you had been cool?—A. Well, yes, sir.
 Q. And he communicated this conversation to your employer?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. And your employer said he had not any further use for you?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Have you been employed since this time?—A. I have worked some catch-jobs down on the Baltimore steamer.
 Q. Have you been working at an occasional job through the city where you could get it sometimes?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Who did you work for the last time?—A. I worked down here at the Baltimore steamer for Mr. De Buyos.
 Q. What is he?—A. I suppose he is a democrat.
 Q. He never talked to you at all on politics?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Who did you work for after leaving there?—A. I have not worked anywhere.
 Q. Who did you work for before you worked for him?—A. I have not worked anywhere.

Q. How many days did you work there?—A. Sometimes I would make two days when the steamer would come and she was well loaded. I would get a good job then.

By Mr. BANKS:

- Q. Have you tried for work elsewhere?—A. I have, sir.
 Q. What was the reason you could not get it?—A. Well, a great many places they told me that unless I could bring tickets saying I had voted for the democratic ticket I could not get it.
 Q. How many places?—A. The Champion press, the State press, and Adger's wharf.

By Mr. JONES:

- Q. Did they not simply require of you a recommendation that you were a good hand?—
 A. No, sir; they required a recommendation to show that I have voted the democratic ticket and have supported the democratic party.
 Q. How do you know?—A. They told me that.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

- Q. Those were all the places at which you applied for work?—A. These were all.
 Q. Except at the Baltimore steamer then, you only made application at four places altogether?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. And you got work at one, and at the other three you did not?—A. That is all.
 Q. Who were the bosses?—A. The State press was Mr. Hanker.
 Q. Who was boss of the other press?—A. The foreman is hardly ever there. I forgot his name.
 Q. Were you a member of any colored club here during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; I was in the Hayes and Wheeler club.
 Q. Hayes and Wheeler Unknown club?—A. I don't think it was called Unknown club.
 Q. How many members were there?—A. Four or five hundred.
 Q. What ward is it in?—A. Ward 5.
 Q. Were there any colored police members in your club?—A. I don't know, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

- Q. Are you a prominent republican?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. And you express your opinions very freely?—A. I do, sir.
 Q. Do you exhort or speak ever?—A. No, sir; I never done that.
 Q. But you talk very freely?—A. Yes, sir; when they ask me my opinion, of course I makes it out.

CHARLESTON, S. C., December 30, 1876.

Hon. ROBERT SMALLS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. BANKS:

Question. You are a member of Congress, Mr. Smalls?—Answer. I am, sir.

Q. From what district?—A. The fifth congressional district.

Q. Are you a member-elect?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In the town of Beaufort, sir.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. I was born and have resided there all my life, with the exception of about eleven years' absence before the war in Charleston.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-eight the 5th of next April.

Q. Do you know anything about the labor strikes on the rice-plantations in Colleton County?—A. Yes, sir, in both Colleton and Beaufort.

Q. Tell us what you know of the strike, if you please, in Colleton County?—A. I went to Colleton County, to Walterborough, to attend a meeting. While attending the meeting, a gentleman came up from what is called Bluesville, which is about twenty miles off. He got up there about 12 o'clock at night with a letter from Captain Elliott—the captain of one of the democratic clubs—asking me to come down to Bluesville at once, stating that they had been penned up in a house for over twelve hours and not allowed to come out to get even a drink of water. At 1 o'clock the same night myself and Colonel Schaffer, the county treasurer of Walterborough, started for Bluesville in a buggy. Colonel Schaffer was then acting as sheriff, the sheriff being sick. Driving very rapidly, we arrived in Bluesville at a quarter past 4 o'clock. When I got there, I found between two and three hundred folks all sitting upon the road right in front of Mr. Bissell's store door and gate.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE):

Q. Colored men?—A. Colored men, boys, and women. As soon as I drove up the crowd, of course, left the gate and gathered around the buggy. I asked them "What's the matter here? What are you doing here?" They said they had struck for wages, and demanded a dollar and a half an acre for cutting rice; that they had been compelled to work; and they made threats of vengeance; they also stated that they wanted their pay in money and not in checks. I said "Let me see the checks that you are working for," and a large number of them pulled out a quantity of checks signed J. B. Bissell; "I promise to pay John Jones," or whoever the man was, "or bearer under contract — cents, payable on the 1st day of January, 1880." They said they wanted money and not that kind of a check, and that they could not spend it anywhere else except in Bissell's store. They also said they wanted Remley, that he had beaten one of the men and they intended to get satisfaction. I told them that they had no right to interfere with any man, and that if Mr. Remley had abused one of them their course was to go before a trial-justice and take out a warrant for his arrest; that they must not take the law into their own hands, and that if they did they would get themselves into a difficulty in which neither I nor any of their friends could assist them. I told them then to wait, that I would go and see Mr. Elliott, and that they must be perfectly peaceful until I returned to the yard. I then went into Mr. Bissell's yard and into the house, which was situated perhaps a hundred feet from the fence in the rear of the store. There I found Mr. Elliott, with between fifty and sixty white men all armed with sixteen or eighteen shooters; I think they were Winchesters.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You mean rifles that carried sixteen or eighteen cartridges?—A. Yes, sir; I told Mr. Elliott that I had received his letter and asked him what was the trouble. He said that the deputy sheriff was endeavoring to make an arrest of some parties for whipping their man in the field; that the deputy sheriff had called upon his club as a posse to assist in making the arrest, and that the people resisted the arrest and had driven them up into the store and had had them penned up there for the last twelve hours; that there were four men to be arrested; that they wanted to come out and could not come out, as the women were so violent they were afraid; that these women had sworn to take the life of Mr. Remley. I asked him then why they were more violent against Mr. Remley than any of the rest of the men. He said that the deputy could tell better than he could, and pointed me to the deputy, who was in their house, penned up with him, saying, "That is the man who has the warrant for their arrests." I then asked the sheriff what was the difficulty, and he said that he had a warrant for four colored men, and he had taken Mr. Remley along with him to assist in the arrest, and that the people were very violent against him, (Remley.) I asked him if Mr. Remley had struck any of the parties after they were arrested. He said that Mr. Remley and some of the prisoners did have some altercation. I asked him if he still had the warrant for these men's arrest, and he said he had. I told him then to come out with me and if these men were in the crowd I would assist him to make the arrest if he was afraid to do it himself. He said he was afraid of his life.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. Had he arrested these men previously, and had they broken away from him?—
A. It seems that they had. He said to me that he could not come out unless the club should come out with their arms to protect him. I told him that there was not a particle of danger; that he could come out and arrest every man down there. Then we opened the door and came out, and the club followed out, and they all took a seat in the piazza next to the road. The sheriff and myself went right into the road and into the crowd, and by that time Colonel Schaffer, who was outside, came up, and he called the names of four colored men, and they came out of the crowd, and Schaffer got a cart that was there, put them into it, and he and his deputy sheriff started for Walterborough.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Who was the deputy?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. It was not Remley?—A. No, sir. By that time there were two or three women there. One of them was the wife of the man who was said to have been beaten by Remley. She was very violent to Remley and I told her then she must stop with these threats; and I told the colored people if they had any complaint to make they must go to the trial-justice. Then I went back into the yard and told him he could come out into the road. He was afraid to come out, and I told him not to be afraid, that if any one interfered with him I would protect him, even if I had to call upon every man there who belonged to the State militia to do so. At this time the club were all in the yard ordering their horses and refreshing themselves generally. Then Mr. Remley and myself came right out into the road in the crowd. The crowd appeared to have grown to between five and six hundred. I then came out, and the same woman was rather violent in her language towards Mr. Remley. I spoke to the crowd and told them that Mr. Remley was a citizen and had all the rights that they had, and that they had no right to interfere with him; but that if he had outraged a citizen to go and get out a warrant for him; that I was called there for the protection of this crowd and I intended to give it.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Did they acquiesce in your appeal?—A. Yes, sir; and all the clubs, one by one and two by two, came out and rode off in different directions to their homes.

Q. Were they in carriages or mounted?—A. They were all on horseback.

Q. Did Remley leave?—A. No, sir; he staid there until after 12 o'clock. Very nearly all the men went before he did.

Q. Have you any knowledge or belief that a labor society was organized in this vicinity?—A. I have, sir; I have their constitution.

Q. Will you state what was done by this people?—A. I made it a point to attend one of their meetings on the Beaufort side of the Combahee River. The Combahee River is the dividing line, and the riot was just on that river, on one side or the other. They organized a society not to work for checks, nor to cut rice for less than a dollar and a half an acre, and further not to allow one of their race to work for checks or for less than a dollar and a half an acre.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. They went outside of the society, then, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What occurred at this meeting?—A. I spoke to them against that clause in their constitution in regard to not allowing any one to work for checks or to cut rice for less than a dollar and a half an acre. I then told them they had no right to interfere with men who might work for any price, that they had a right to organize as many societies as they pleased and fix the price at whatever price they chose, but that if anybody chose to work for ten cents a day they had no right to take the law into their own hands or to interfere with them in any way. After giving them this advice, about a quarter of 12 o'clock that day they all formed in line and marched away. I told them that inasmuch as they claimed the right to work for high wages other men had the right to work for smaller wages or for nothing, if they pleased; that other men were as free as they were.

Q. Did you return to Beaufort then?—A. Then every body left the meeting and I took the train and came on to Charleston.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Do you know of some colored men being able to cut two acres of rice in a day?—
A. I do not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know of women being able to do it?—A. I only know what I have heard them say themselves. I have never worked on a rice-plantation, or had anything to do with one.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Were these colored men at Bissell's Store a militia company?—A. No, sir; I did not see an arm in the hands of a single individual; they all had short clubs.

Q. You said a while ago in your examination-in-chief that if it was necessary to protect this man Remley you would summon the militia; was there a militia company on the ground?—A. I met men on the ground that belonged to the militia.

Q. Was there a militia company in that parish?—A. Yes, sir; that is the way I came to be sent for. When Captain Fuller's crowd was surrounded in a building about three weeks before, I went and released them in the same way.

Mr. BANKS. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the facts stated by Mr. Smalls in the beginning of his testimony, and which the reporter was directed not to take down, that the people told him that on the previous day Mr. Bissell had had the rifle clubs called out to drive these people back into the field and compel them to work, be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The witness having detailed his conversation with the white men within the building and having given what they said in reference to occurrences of the previous day, the Chair thinks it but fair that the statement of the colored people, although in his judgment hearsay, should be also admitted, and the same is admitted.

Mr. BANKS. I will not ask for this to be admitted as a charity, but claim it as a right, and I withdraw it on that ground.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The testimony will be admitted if desired by General Banks; the question is not one of charity at all.

Mr. BANKS. Never mind; I will not press it.

Q. (To the witness.) State what you know about the strikes in Buford County.—A. I will state that I was on my way to attend a political meeting in Barnwell County. While I was at the depot at Buford, Mr. Davenport, the telegraph-operator, handed me a telegram from Governor Chamberlain, also one from Attorney-General Stone, ordering me to Gardner's Corner, in Buford County, to disperse the rioters at that place, and stating if I could not do it without the militia of the State to order them out and disperse the rioters.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. In what capacity were you acting then?—A. I am major-general commanding the militia troops in this section of the State. All the militia troops in Charleston, Colleton, and Buford are under my command, five regiments; two in Charleston, one in Colleton, and two in Buford. Myself and Lieutenant-Governor Gleaves, who was on the train, got out at Sheldon Station and proceeded to Gardner's Corner. At Sheldon Mill, which is at Gardner's Corners, we found sixty-three armed white men, headed by Captain Elliott, in Mr. Fuller's store, and about a hundred colored men and women outside the gate in the road. We went up and asked them about the same questions: "What are you doing here?" And they replied, "These rebels here are trying to drive us into the field." I went into the yard, and Captain Elliott was sitting on the steps with his rifle in his hand at the back door of the store.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. Is this the same Captain Elliott?—A. The same one; but this affair took place before the affair at Colleton. I asked him what he was doing there, and he said he was summoned there as a posse to assist the sheriff in making arrests. I told him that I did not think it was necessary. I asked him if he was in charge of the men, and he said he was. I then handed him my telegram and said, "Read this; I have been ordered here by the governor to make all the arrests that are necessary, and to restore peace," and told him I could do so, and did not need the rifle clubs to assist me in doing it.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did he read the telegram?—A. He read the telegram, sir. By that time Mr. Sams, the sheriff, came up, and I asked him if he had summoned these men as a posse, and he said no, that he did not; that he could not make arrests with them. Then Mr. Elliott said that he was there to protect Mr. Fuller's property, which was the mill and the store. Then myself and Mr. Sams went out, got a horse, and rode down the road about two miles from Gardner's Corner towards Cambahee Ferry, and there we found in the road from two to three hundred colored men and women. In this crowd were the seven men that Mr. Sams had warrants issued for by Mr. Henry Fuller, as trial-justice. These men were charged with the whipping of one Bobien, who was accused of working for cheeks. I went into the crowd, and they seemed to be very furious when we went among them first. I spoke to them and told Mr. Sams to read the names. I told these seven men to answer to their names and hold up their hands as their names were called, and they held up their hands; and I told them to come out of the crowd, and they came out and went to Mr. Sams. Mr. Sams then took them up to Mr. Fuller's office, which was in the same store. Mr. Fuller having gone to Yamasee and the nearest trial-justice being fourteen miles distant in Buford, they were taken there. Mr. Sams told them to go right on there, and they went in by themselves. The next morning that they had a hearing, at which Bobien himself withdrew the charges against them, acknowledging that the whipping was the rule agreed upon in their society; and the trial-justice discharged them all. I have got a little ahead of my story. The whole crowd followed me up to Fuller's store, and I invited Mr. Calcock to speak to them and he refused to do so, but stood there and listened to both myself and Governor Gleaves addressing the crowd. When we got through the crowd disbanded and went home.

Q. Do you know whether or not these labor-societies were organized with reference to the laboring people alone?—A. All I know about it is what I have stated before and what they stated to me.

Q. You saw the constitution and read it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything in it about politics?—A. Nothing whatsoever, sir.

Q. Was there anything in it about the interests of the laborers?—A. It was altogether about the labor-subject. The constitution was written on a small piece of paper, and read this way: "We shall not cut rice for less than one dollar and a half an acre, nor we shall not work for a check."

Q. And it had no reference to political matters whatever?—A. Nothing that I know of. I never heard that it had before until I heard it in this committee-room to-day.

Q. Was there anything said about politics at the meeting at which you attended and spoke?—A. No, sir; it was completely upon the labor-question—the right to strike—and had no reference to interfering with any person as to his vote, or who would work for less than they did.

Q. And in your speech you did not refer to politics?—A. In no shape or form. The week after there was to be a political meeting at Eustace plantation, and I will say that I asked Mr. Fuller and Mr. Calcock if they would not come out and address the meeting. On that day the Charleston News and Courier sent a reporter from Charleston to report the meeting.

Q. Did you hear from Captain Elliott who it was that ordered him to come there and protect Mr. Fuller's property?—A. He said first that he was there on a posse to assist the sheriff; but when the sheriff said that he did not want them, he then said he was there to protect Mr. Fuller's property.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. He said that in the presence of the sheriff?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the date of this telegram from Governor Chamberlain?—A. Well, now, I am somewhat foxed upon that date. I received it on Wednesday. I was to attend a meeting at midway on Thursday, and it was as I was starting out to go.

Q. Do you recollect about the time it was?—A. It was early in August.

Q. This was about the first riot that occurred, growing out of the labor-strikes?—A. Yes, sir. There was another one before at Colleton, but it was while I was in Congress, in July.

Q. Do you know of any other one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Governor Chamberlain telegraph to you or order you to go to Bluerville?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you, at any time after this telegram which you have mentioned, receive any order from Governor Chamberlain directing you to go to any point and quell a riot?—A. Never, but that one time, sir.

Q. Do you remember Captain Elliott saying to you at Bluerville the time you went there that they had telegraphed Governor Chamberlain for aid?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect that he ever told me that. I have heard that outside though.

Q. There were quite a number of troubles arising out of this labor-organization?—A. A great many.

Q. And a good deal of violence upon the part of members of this organization as against others who worked in violation of the rules?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Did you at any time during the canvass call out the militia?—A. In no instance at all; but to the contrary have issued orders to all the captains not to turn out as militia under any circumstances during the campaign, and there has not been a parade of a single company in either Colleton or Buford since the campaign began.

Q. In August Governor Chamberlain was at a point when he was rather popular with the democrats, was he not?—A. Quite so, sir; he was so until General Hampton was nominated.

Q. What time was it that you went to Bluerville?—A. I cannot give you the date.

Q. What month was it in?—A. I think it was in August.

Q. Was it not September? Congress did not adjourn until August.—A. You are right, sir; it was in September.

Q. When you went to Gardner's Corners did not Captain Elliott say to you that they had come out as a posse to help the sheriff?—A. He stated, as I understood him, that he was there as a posse to assist the sheriff.

Q. Did he tell you that the sheriff had called upon him to come out?—A. Whether he said he was there as a posse or whether he said he was called out as a posse I could not say.

Q. Then you are not able to say that Captain Elliott said to you that the sheriff had called him out as a posse?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you do know that it was said in the presence of the sheriff, and that the sheriff said that he could not make any arrests with them, and thereupon Captain Elliott said he was there to protect the property of Mr. Fuller?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me ask you this question: Did I correctly understand you that Mr. Fuller, whose mill and store Captain Elliott said the members of the rifle club were there to protect, was the trial-justice who had issued the warrant for the arrest of these seven men who had been accused of whipping their fellow-workmen?—A. I state that positively.

Q. Then the excitement against Fuller was because he as trial-justice had issued a warrant?—A. That I do not know. Mr. Fuller was not there; he was nine miles from there sending telegrams to Beaufort and Charleston.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Do you know of any colored democrats belonging to these clubs of which you have spoken?—A. I do not, sir. I do not know of a single one.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Are there any colored democrats there?

The WITNESS. At Gardner's Corner?

Mr. BANKS. Yes.

A. Not to my knowledge, because every man that said he was a democrat has told me since that they were not democrats; that they were only fooling these men to get their money.

Q. According to the best of your recollection, did Captain Elliott say that he had been sent for to act as a posse to assist the sheriff?—A. To the best of my recollection, Captain Elliott said that he was there as a posse to assist the sheriff.

Q. You said to the chairman that you were in doubt as to whether he said he was called out by the sheriff; are you positive that he did not say that he was out at the order of the sheriff?—A. To the best of my recollection, he did not say that he was out by the order of the sheriff. He said he was there to assist, and the sheriff said he didn't want him.

Q. Has the sheriff said to you at any time that he did not order Mr. Elliott there?—A. The sheriff said to me at the very day of the meeting that he did not want them there, and that he did not order them there.

GEORGE RIVERS WALKER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. COCHRANE:)

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-nine.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. Do you practice in Charleston?—A. I am senior member of the firm of Walker & Bacot, practicing lawyers in Charleston.

Q. Are you a son of the English consul?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you practiced here?—A. I left Hartford in 1869, and have been practicing here since.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I was born in South Carolina. I was brought up in England and the North.

Q. Will you state, sir, whether you were at the meeting held at Cainho?—A. I was.

Q. Did you go up on the boat?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Will you just state what occurred in detail and in its regular order from the time you left the wharf here until after the riot?—A. At the wharf in Charleston I found a steamer engaged, as I understood, by the democratic party. It being a beautiful day, and on account of the free trip up the river, quite a number of boys (I lay stress on the word "boys," because the number of persons was large but the number of men was comparatively small) and young men were on board. The steamer waited at the wharf, and, in fact, put back, for Mr. Bowen, the leading republican of this county.

Q. How many were on board?—A. By my calculation, there were in all one hundred and fifty went up on that steamer, democrats and republicans.

Q. How many men were on board?—A. Judging from the number of men that staid up there to do picket duty, there could not have been more than sixty men at the most.

Q. And those were not, all told, more than one hundred and fifty?—A. I should think not. I would not like to be positive on this point, because my attention was not called to the matter, but that is my impression; and my impression is derived from the number that came down. Mr. Bowen came aboard and a large number of well-known negro bullies. My attention was called at the time to the bad character of bullies that were getting aboard with him. Everything, however, seemed to be perfectly peaceful. We went up the river, republicans and democrats, chatting together peaceably, without the slightest sign of any ill feeling. We arrived at Cain-hoy, and still everything was very peaceable. We got into the ambulance and rode up three miles to the brick church. When we reached the brick church Mr. Bowen and his party had preceded us and were already there. The meeting was called to order and some speaking occurred.

Q. Who spoke?—A. Mr. Jervey, the democratic candidate for solicitor.

Q. Was there a colored man in your party named Delany?—A. There was; a democratic colored speaker. He had been a major in the United States Army.

Q. What do you know, if anything, about a report that he was to speak there?—A. Major Delany was to speak at the meeting.

Q. Do you know whether the negroes at that place expected him to speak, from what they said at the time?—A. From what negroes said to me afterwards, I know it.

Q. Well, were those negroes who thus spoke to you persons who were upon the ground there?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it constantly spoken of among the negroes not to allow Delany to speak; and I know, also, as a matter of fact that the negroes not only at that meeting, but at several other preceding meetings which I had attended, seemed to be very hostile to any negro democrat speaking; the cry was that any white man had a right to be a democrat, "but no damned black man had."

Q. Did Mr. Jervey conclude his speech?—A. Mr. Jervey concluded his speech, and a colored man by the name of McKinley then got up to speak; he was what I would call a conservative republican; as soon as he began speaking there was a commotion in the crowd. There seemed to be an objection to him; evidently he was taken for a democrat. I heard him say in effect, if not in actual words, "Listen to me; I's your friend." Before I go any farther permit me to show you from a diagram the situation of the crowd. [The witness here drew a diagram of the grounds and indicated the position of the different parties, the buildings on the ground, &c.]

I have just given you a small diagram here of the situation. The horses were hitched on either side of the church and somewhat to the front; the speaker's stand was almost opposite the church. The old house was to the left of the stand about forty or fifty feet as you faced the church, and the vestry to the right. A road ran by the vestry and in front of the old house. When the speaking began I retired over to the church and was standing directly in front of the church when the attack began which I am about to narrate. The crowd was all around the stand. I was entirely out of the crowd, perhaps 200 feet away from them. I could just barely hear the speaker, but heard McKinley, over the murmurs of the crowd, cry out, "Listen to me, I's your friend," or words directly to that effect. The commotion continued; in a few moments I heard a shot. This commotion was by the old house chiefly, between the house and the stand. A little of the commotion might have been at the other end of the house, but it seemed to me to be chiefly at the stand. Some one near me called out, "A horse has broken loose;" and I looked over intently to see at what spot it had occurred, when I heard this pistol-shot. I will call your attention to the fact that some distance back of the old house there were some pine trees, and directly behind the house, and more toward the road, there was a pool of water or small swamp. In a moment, in a shorter time than I can describe, standing at the church where I could distinctly see, I saw the whites withdraw towards the vestry in great disorder. The negroes, on the contrary, fell back a few feet and appeared more quickly than I have told it here, in perfect skirmish order, every man with a musket—not an arm appearing the moment before. They evidently had their guns placed in the bushes about four feet apart, and every man seemed to know his position the very moment the signal was given; I allude to the firing of the pistol.

Q. You say they appeared with their muskets. What did they do?—A. They fired volley after volley into the flying white men. I walked from the church to the vestry, calling on the white men to rally; but they being totally unarmed, with the exception of a trifling number of pistols, (there was scarcely a man on the ground with anything but the smallest kind of a pistol, and the most of them being boys were without even that,) which, opposed to muskets in the hands of negroes behind pine trees, were utterly useless. When I reached the vestry I found a small body of men, say fifteen or twenty, rallying behind it, and in some order, but no better armed. Just before reaching the vestry I saw Abram Smith, now a member of the State legislature of South Carolina, on the stand, firing upon unarmed men who were flying to their horses hitched to the right of the church. As they ran he fired three shots from a revolver. I drew my pistol, aimed it a thim, but it would not go off. I was about to fire on him when a democrat at my right knocked my arm down and said, "Nobody is shot; don't kill him." I then called out to Smith, "If you fire again I will shoot you;" and he held up his hands and ran into the swamp. At that time I had seen no one killed. I will here state that, standing at the church door, had the old negro Lachicotte, fallen where I afterward saw his body, to the right of the meeting, it would have been a miracle if I had not seen it.

I will state, before I proceed further in my narrative, that intelligence was brought to me by a party of young men immediately upon my arrival on the ground that there were a number of guns hidden in a chimney in the old house. They came to me, accustomed to take my advice in other matters, for advice as to what they should do with regard to these guns. I instructed them to closely watch the guns, but not to touch them unless there was an attack or direct signs of treachery.

An ex-officer of an organization known as the Butler Guards was present with these young men and evidently had them under his command—when I say under his command I mean that they obeyed him—and the men on the ground informed me that he followed my advice rigidly and gave no order for the seizure of the guns, nor were they seized until the negroes were advancing upon the squad of white men on a bayonet charge. When I reached the vestry, coming from the church, I found Mr. Bowen among the men at the vestry. He seemed to be eager to go over to the republican negroes, and repeated two or three times "Will no one go with me and make peace?" After hearing him I at once volunteered. He accepted my offer, saying to me, "Stop the democrats firing." I turned around and called out in a very loud voice, "Gentlemen, cease firing, as Mr. Bowen and myself are going over to stop this row," or words to that effect. The democrats immediately ceased firing. I took Mr. Bowen's arm and we walked across the ground arm in arm. The negroes, seeing us, also stopped firing, and there was an absolute cessation of all hostilities.

When we had reached the negroes Mr. Bowen began speaking to them. Apparently he was endeavoring to stop the row. At this time Cyrus Guillard, a negro of a most incendiary character, rushed by, saying, "Mr. Bowen, we can't listen to you now," and urged the negroes to recommence firing on the whites; and I solemnly swear that, without a shot being fired by the whites, without the slightest cause for any hostility whatsoever, the negroes began refring on these unarmed men, volley after volley; and although I had gone among them as a messenger of peace, I heard suddenly behind me, "Shoot the son of a bitch." I jumped behind a pine tree, and three shots were immediately fired. I then, dodging from tree to tree, returned to the vestry, the whole party of negroes firing at me while doing so.

When I reached the vestry I said to the men there present "Men, all we can do now is to defend ourselves." At that moment I saw the present sergeant-at-arms to the other committee shot in the back and three or four others wounded. The negroes fired muskets loaded with buck-shot, duck-shot, nail-heads, and cut up pieces of lead-pipe, apparently. I was wounded in the leg.

It was impossible, however, we being in the cleared ground in front of the church, and for the most part so utterly unarmed, to resist the hail-storm which was poured into us; and we had to retire and leave our wounded to the mercies of the negroes. We went to Cainhoy, sent home most of the boys and some of the wounded, who had managed to get off the ground. I do not think there were more than twenty of us, there may have been thirty, who remained that night at Cainhoy to protect the village. I sent out two faithful colored men to bring in the wounded, providing a buggy for them. I performed both picket and hospital duty that night, and saw the mutilated dead and wounded brought in. Old Mr. Simmonds, a very old man, was lifted out of the buggy dead on one trip. His head was cut open with some instrument, such as an ax or hatchet; he was shot through the body, and every bone in his body apparently broken with the stocks of the muskets, for as they moved him the bones could be heard crushing against each other.

I am not certain about the names of all the others. King it was, however, who with other fatal wounds and cuts, had one which I distinctly remember. His arm seemed to have been cut into by an ax, one cut down in one slanting direction, and another in another direction, taking a slip out of the bone; the balance of the arm seemed to hang by the muscles alone, and this had evidently been twisted around, I suppose, for the purpose of giving pain. He died a few minutes after he was brought in. McNeil, or Daley, I forget which it was, had a number of cuts—five I think, I didn't count them—but I saw his head all cut open from an ax or hatchet. Daley was also cut up more or less. Both of these died within twenty-four hours. Most of them died that night; in fact, with the exception of Walter Graddock, I know of no wounded man who was left among them who escaped. Walter Graddock was a boy, a mere boy. He was most horribly backed up, and his eye was protruding most fearfully, as if it had been gouged out when we saw him next morning. I don't know whether he has lost his eye or not; I have not heard.

There was one other, I remember; his name was Pregnal. He was fearfully used, and, I understand, escaped because he was thought to be dead. He is here to-day, though, and can tell his own story. I saw him outside.

Q. When did the rifle clubs come from the city?—A. They went up the next morning.

Q. By whom was their presence requested?—A. By the poor fellows who were left there to do picket duty, and the women and children living in the village. We sent for them to come for God's sake, or the village would be destroyed and its inhabitants murdered. The next morning I went out into the country to the church again with the rifle clubs, and although, frankly, I and those of us who had witnessed these horrible sights the night before would gladly have attacked the negroes, the gentlemen controlling the rifle clubs forbade us, and would not allow us to do so, to our intense dissatisfaction.

Q. Will you state whether any arms were taken up by that party that went up to the meeting on the boat?—A. Not one, sir. The Hell-hole men from Hell-hole swamp joined us with no other arms save the cattle-whips which they usually rode with. The few citizens of Cainhoy were, to my own knowledge, utterly unarmed, entirely so, some of them carrying their little children on to the ground.

Q. How many white men were killed at Cainhoy?—A. I think there were six. I remember four.

Q. How many were wounded?—A. I suppose at least fifty; but, on account of the small character of the shot used, not more than ten or fifteen very seriously.

Q. Will you state how many negroes were killed?—A. One.

Q. Do you know how many were wounded?—A. There were no signs of any wounded. The thing was just a volley of shots, and the white men were running away.

Q. How many negroes were present?—A. Those with me estimated them at about three hundred. I do not think there were a less number than of the whites, but they were all men. At every other meeting I ever attended the negro women were present. The women and children were kept out of the way at this meeting, for some unknown reason.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. This was a republican meeting?—A. I think it was a joint discussion.

Q. But it was a meeting called by the republicans?—A. It might have been, but I was not one of the speakers; I simply went along, and I understood that it was for joint discussion. It probably was.

Q. What makes you think it was?—A. I think it was because my impression is that the democrats did not call their meetings to which the republicans were to be invited until afterward. I really ought not to say, because I do not know.

Q. Did the democrats call any meetings to which the republicans were invited?—A. I know in my own parish that the democratic meeting was to be held, and it was distinctly understood that Mr. Bowen was to be there, and my impression, therefore, is that the republicans were to be there.

Q. Did the democrats call any public meeting at which the republicans were invited to attend?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was it?—A. There was a small meeting in Mount Pleasant at which the republicans were invited, and they came and stoned the democrats before they left. There was another meeting at Wapitaw church to which the republicans came, put up their leading speakers, and we put up a colored democrat to answer, and the republicans immediately called off all their republican negroes.

Q. When was that meeting?—A. Sometime before Cainhoy.

Q. But this meeting at Cainhoy was a republican meeting?—A. I am under the impression that it was, though I do not know.

Q. Would there have been any difficulty there if the democrats had not gone there?—A. That would be a mere matter of opinion.

Q. Could these persons have been killed if they had not gone there?—A. I suppose if a man had kept away he would not have been killed. I understand that the democrats went there by invitation.

Q. Who told you that?—A. Mr. Bowen was on the boat. He was in conference in my presence with Mr. O'Connor, and we waited for him to come down to the boat as a matter of courtesy.

A. Do you say that they went there by his invitation?—A. When I use the word invitation I mean to say that I do not know who first suggested it, but what I mean is that whoever called the meeting—although I believe it was called by the republicans—both parties were there with the free consent and agreement of one or the other.

Q. It was a republican meeting, you say, and you say the democrats were there by invitation. Now, I want to know who it was that invited them to go there.—A. I can only answer that question by stating that my source of knowledge was from the fact—

Q. Well, do you know who invited the democrats to attend that meeting?—A. I know that Mr. Bowen was in conference with the democrats before they reached the ground, and it was an understood thing between the two parties.

Q. Do you know that Mr. Bowen invited them there?—A. I do not know of my own knowledge that Mr. Bowen invited the democrats to attend that meeting, but I do know that Mr. Bowen and Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Jervey, who represented the democrats, were all in conference on the boat and in perfect amity in regard to the matter of both parties being at the meeting; so I naturally presume that Mr. Bowen invited them.

Q. Would there have been any trouble at this republican meeting if the democrats who were there had not gone there?—A. I really do not know.

Q. But what is your impression about it?—A. My impression is that it takes two parties to make a fight.

Q. If you and the other parties had not gone there you would not have had any trouble at that meeting?—A. I suppose if we had kept away we would not have been hurt.

Q. And the meeting would have been a peaceful one so far as the democracy was concerned?—A. I cannot say that.

Q. Is it probable there would have been any disturbance if the negroes had been left to themselves?—A. The negro is a peaceable character when he is sober and left alone; but he is a dangerous character when he has whisky in him.

Q. If the negroes' adversaries or opponents had not been there the elements of difficulty or trouble would not have been there?—A. The political excitement in their minds might not have been as great, but—

Q. They would not have organized instantaneously into lines of infantry, in skirmishing order, to shoot each other, every man being armed at the instant?—A. I do not know whether they would have lined themselves to shoot each other, but I know that all around my own village they lined themselves almost every night during the campaign, while we were disarmed.

Q. It is a material fact in this inquiry whether this trouble occurred because of the collision of these two parties, and whether it would have occurred if the party that did not naturally belong to the meeting had remained away. Now I ask you again, and certainly it is a very simple question, would there have been this fearful riot and slaughter in which six men were killed and fifty or more wounded, if the democrats had not been there?—A. If the democrats had not been present undoubtedly they would not have been hurt, but whether the republicans would have quarreled among themselves or not would depend entirely upon the amount of whisky they would drink.

Q. You swear to that?—A. I cannot swear to presumption.

Q. Is it a presumption that what they did would depend entirely upon the amount of whisky they drank?—A. I swear that that is my judgment.

Q. If they had not drank whisky—and you do not know that they did—would this trouble have occurred if the democrats had not been present?—A. They are a very peaceable race, and it is very probable they would not have quarreled among themselves.

Q. Now, how came the democrats to go there? Do you say that they were invited; and, if you say so, will you please to state here on your oath to these gentlemen who invited them?—A. If I said invited I meant merely that it was commonly known that there was to be a joint discussion; how brought about I know not of my own knowledge; but that such was the case was confirmed in my own mind from the fact of our waiting for Mr. Bowen, of his coming aboard as our guest, and his amicable conference and arrangements as to the meeting with the gentlemen I have named.

Q. That is all quite consistent with the idea that there may have been an understanding on the day of the meeting, or the day before, that there was to be a joint discussion; but you have already said that that was called as a republican meeting.—A. I said that I believed so.

Q. There was no declaration made to the public that it was to be a joint discussion between negro republicans and white democrats?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you or do you not know that in the call for this republican meeting there was embraced an announcement to the public that it would be a joint discussion between colored republicans and white democrats?—A. My answer to that question is that I know nothing of the call for the meeting. The calls for the republican meetings were not generally made public so far as I am aware.

A. Now, I want to know if the democrats were invited there.—A. I certainly so understood it.

Q. How did you understand it and from whom did you understand it?—A. Simply from common rumor that there was to be a joint discussion. I do not know that they were invited any more than from what I have stated.

Q. Do you know that it was the desire of the republicans to have these white democrats attend their meetings; these rifle clubs, and the Butler Guards, and the most of the democratic party men who were so violently opposed to their principles as well as to their party?—A. At a meeting prior to this one Mr. Bowen, the republican leader, had consented, by agreement with me, to the democrats attending and speaking at his meeting in consideration of our allowing him and his party the same privilege at a meeting we proposed to hold at Wapitaw church. I presumed that this Cainhoy meeting was for joint discussion under some similar understanding.

Q. Is that all you know?—A. That is all I know.

Q. Where was this meeting of which you spoke, where Mr. Bowen agreed to do this?

A. At Christ church.

Q. He consented?—A. Yes, sir; he consented.

Q. Then there was a solicitation on your part?—A. In that instance there was a direct solicitation by me without authority at all. There were a few of us democrats present, and I asked Mr. Bowen if he would enter into such an agreement. He politely consented. His party were largely in the majority and he could easily have prevented it, but he freely consented; so I supposed he had no objection to such joint discussions.

Q. At this meeting at Cainhoj, did the republicans make any solicitation of the democrats that they should come there?—A. I know nothing of my own knowledge except from rumor and inference as to the arrangements of this meeting.

Q. You have said that the democrats were invited?—A. I so believed.

Q. You say you do not know anything except from rumor and inference that would lead you to suppose that the republicans solicited the democrats to go there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know that the democrats solicited this meeting?—A. I do not know how the union was brought about.

Q. Then you retract what you said about the democrats being invited to go there?—A. No, sir, I do not retract.

Q. Now, sir, do you not know that the democratic leaders called upon Mr. Bowen and on those negro republicans and did ask the privilege?—A. I do not know it.

Q. Do you know that it was not done?—A. I do not, sir; I knew nothing whatsoever of the meeting except from rumor that there was to be a joint discussion, until I went aboard the steamer and saw Mr. Bowen waited for, and saw him in friendly conference with our democratic leaders, and I supposed that we were therefore their guests.

Q. Do you not know that the consent of these republican negroes to the attendance of the democrats was given upon the express condition that there were to be no armed men brought there?—A. By general rumor I understood that at these joint discussions—not at this one only—we were to go unarmed; consequently none of the white men with me carried any arms, beyond such pistols as in the South we always carry.

Q. Now, do you know that this was a condition of this particular meeting?—A. I know that the Hell-hole men stated that they carried no arms, because they understood that there were to be no arms carried, and would not even carry their pistols.

Q. You do not know anything about a stipulation of that kind?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know anything of the meeting at Strawberry Ferry?—A. Nothing except what I have seen in the papers.

Q. Did you hear that there had been any trouble there?—A. I heard that the whites had carried their arms up at Strawberry Ferry to a meeting, prior to this rumored agreement, and had left their guns in the steamer until they saw the negroes appearing on the banks with their guns.

Q. Well, now, did you not know of there having been a difficulty about the question of arms at Strawberry; that it was the condition of the attendance of the democrats at Cainhoj that they should not bring armed men?—A. I do not know of any such condition as to Cainhoj especially. I knew that there was a general understanding that neither side were to carry arms—not armed men—and by that was meant muskets.

Q. Now, I want to ask you again if you understood, or if you did not understand, that there was a condition in that meeting that where the democrats were to go certain organizations should not go; for example, the Butler Guards?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the character of the Butler Guards; what is its organization?—A. I believe the Butler Guards was a purely local organization, for defense against the armed militia that Chamberlain and other republican leaders were surrounding us with, we being utterly unarmed.

Q. It was an armed military organization?—A. I do not know that you can call it an armed military organization. I believe that the Butler Guards was different from the Palmetto Guards or the Washington Light Infantry. The Butler Guards, it is my impression, were only formed for the election, and, as soon as the election was over, they were done away with. Chamberlain had surrounded us with his armed militia, and, as I understood it, there were different ward organizations for defense, and the Butler Guards were one of them.

Q. Were they one of the clubs called rifle clubs?—A. I do not know it.

Q. You spoke of their being armed against the State militia. Do you know that they were armed?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know that they were not armed?—A. I do not. I live in Christ Church, and these people live away up in the other end of the city, and I do not know anything about them.

Q. What is the State militia?—A. So far as I have seen it, the State militia is, as a rule, with the exception of a few companies here in the city, composed of the most ignorant negroes that can be found throughout South Carolina. They are most thoroughly armed, and in their ranks there is not to be found a single respectable white man, with very rare exceptions.

Q. Then it was an organization authorized by the laws of the State, was it not?—A. I believe it was. I have never examined the militia laws.

Q. Now, the Butler Guards was a part of that local force voluntarily organized for defense against the legal military organization of the State government?—A. My answer to that is this: I live in a little town in the country. That town has been threatened with being burned by the negroes over and over again in the last six months. The negro militia have assaulted white men over and over again. They have charged upon and attempted to kill me simply because I had a personal quarrel with one black man, and they have charged through the streets of Mount Pleasant with their bayonets fixed, charged upon unarmed white men and women simply because a white man had had a quarrel with a colored man. We had no means of defense. And down here even republican white men belong to these various military organizations, purely for purposes of defense.

Q. Now, I ask you again if this volunteer organization called the Butler Guards, that you have spoken of as being at Cainhoj as an organized body with a commander, was not part of that local force voluntarily organized for defense against the legally authorized militia force of the State government?—A. As I have stated, I know nothing positively of the organization of this particular corps, but I presume that it was, like others, for general defense, including massacre, if it should ever arise against the massacre of our wives and children by the armed legal negro militia. I do not mean to say that it was an organization against the militia, but I do not doubt that it would have been used against the militia had they attempted such massacres as were often threatened and always feared.

Q. I ask you again if this was an organization against anticipated massacres by the State militia?—A. I do not doubt that such a use of the organization—against such unlawful acts of this militia—was anticipated.

Q. Then it was an organization in preparation for resistance to the armed militia of the State in some anticipated movements that they might make?—A. I do not mean to say that we ever attempted or intended to be offensive to the militia in any way; unless we were compelled to defend our homes.

Q. Now I want to know if the republican meeting at Cainhoj was not composed principally, if not entirely, with very few exceptions, of colored republicans.—A. I believe there was but one white man in the republican party on the ground, Mr. C. C. Bowen. I believe the others were former negro soldiers from Cooper River, a very large number of whom, it is generally understood, were specially present; and there were a large number of a similar character from Daniel's Island, for the same purpose.

Q. Now, it is probable that the colored republicans would desire or consent to the attendance of such military organizations as the Butler Guards?—A. As the negro women constantly said, "Bowen is our Jesus; Bowen is our God," I doubt not they were perfectly willing to have any of Mr. Bowen's guests present.

Q. But do you believe that they desired the attendance of the Butler Guards?—A. Unquestionably, if Mr. Bowen consented to it.

Q. Do you not know that the organization known as the Butler Guards were excluded by express agreement?—A. I not only do not know it, but I do not believe it, because the Butler Guards have not been engaged in any hostilities of any character whatever, except what is alleged of this Cainhoj matter. I will state, also, that, so far as I can understand, there were no men from their corps in the city on the ground that day. The Butler Guards, as well as every other organization as military organizations at the time of the meeting at Cainhoj, had been disbanded, and their guns taken from their armories.

Q. By whom were they disbanded?—A. By General Grant's proclamation. He left us unarmed and the negroes armed.

Q. Do you remember the date of General Grant's proclamation?—A. I do not. I remember positively that such a proclamation had been issued, whether by Chamberlain or Grant, before that meeting.

Q. You say that those Butler Guards and organizations of that character were disbanded after the proclamation of Chamberlain?—A. They were disbanded as military organizations, as I understand, and were, for the most part, reformed as social bodies. The officers remained for the most part, I believe, the same; and naturally when a party of young men belonging to the original Butler Guards happened to be together in an emergency they would obey their officer, if the occasion should require.

Q. Do you know that a detachment of the Butler Guards were at Cainhoj under those circumstances?—A. Yes, sir; Lieutenant Duane told me that he himself, under the advice that I had given, commanded some of his former companions of the Butler Guards who were present to watch the guns and allow no one to touch them—none of the democratic party, I mean.

Q. Where were these guns?—A. In the chimney in the old house.

Q. Now, I understood you to say that there were at that meeting portions of nearly all of these organizations in the city, commonly called rifle clubs?—A. Not exactly that. There were men present, who had belonged to one or the other of these organizations, from almost every company. That they actually belonged to a rifle corps in esse at the time of the Cainhoj affair, I am not prepared to state. I call myself a rifleman, but I have not been inside of a club-room for a year.

Q. Do you not know that on the night after the election—the night of the 8th of November—at the riot, within half or three-quarters of an hour after the first alarm was given, a thousand men appeared in the streets, perfectly armed and in line, and under the command of officers who had authority over them?—A. I have no knowledge of it.

Q. What knowledge have you, if you please, concerning that fact?—A. I have no doubt at all that the people of this section, with the knowledge that the negroes vastly outnumber them, are too intelligent to be unarmed in such a troubled season as the present, and I have no doubt that the information I have received through newspapers, (I was not present in Charleston myself,) that there was a general rush to arms upon the rumor of a negro insurrection, is unquestionably true.

Q. Was not that organization that appeared under these circumstances in such force proof that the organization of the rifle clubs still existed, if an emergency required them to appear with arms and with commanders, and with a knowledge of what was to be their duty upon an alarm?—A. It would be easier to answer your question by stating to you, perfectly frankly, that I have no doubt at all that while we have obeyed the law in its technicalities, so far as disbanding is concerned, that the social organizations which still exist would unquestionably be again used for defense, and again and again, (not against the American Government, because our people are so utterly loyal that I could not suspect anything of the kind, but against negro insurrection,) without a moment's hesitation.

Q. Then these organizations have an existence more or less perfect, which may be brought into life upon a sudden alarm?—A. I do not say that it does exist in such a manner as that every man would run to his gun in a moment if necessary.

Q. Is it not probable that these very same organizations were there at Cainhoj, and that they went there to take part in that meeting?—A. I do not believe, considering the disturbed state of the country, that any sane man would have sent out from Charleston a number of gentlemen to speak at a negro meeting without some kind of an escort, and I have no doubt at all that there were from these social organizations at least two detachments, sent for the purpose of acting simply as an escort—for purposes of protection if necessary.

Q. In what manner could this escort protect the gentlemen who were on board the steamer?—A. As it was understood that neither party was to go armed, these gentlemen going along would have acted as an escort in case of any suddenly riotous conduct; nothing like such a massacre by armed men being expected.

Q. But they were without any arms?—A. I believe, sir, that three-fourths of the men there were without any arms.

Q. I ask you now, with regard to these skeleton rifle clubs, or the members who were there, if they were there for purposes of protection?—A. Simply for moral protection.

Q. But you have said that no company of gentlemen would think of going to Cainhoj or any other place to a meeting such as they saw there unless they took with them such a detachment for protection?—A. I think my language was that I did not think that any gentleman could send out a speaker to a meeting like that without an escort; and I go further, and say that the leaders who did it were perfectly insane to send them without an armed escort. I do not know that any detachment was sent out.

Q. I want to know if these detachments that were sent there for protection, and without which it would have been insane to have gone to this meeting, were there without any arms at all?—A. I state that I presume that for a sort of moral protection two detachments were sent. I say moral, because I understand from general rumor that they were expressly forbidden to carry arms; and I say that it would be insane to send men to speak at such a meeting without such moral protection; and I add that it was equally insane to have sent them without arms at all.

Q. Well, now, will you please tell me if you think the people who had got up this meeting for their own purpose could have anticipated their attendance without any formal notice of these two detachments that were going there for the protection of the gentlemen that accompanied them?—A. Unquestionably they did, because I have understood that at every meeting there was some such detachment; and, moreover, as you ask me as to my belief, I have no shadow of doubt in my own mind that they not only anticipated but prepared for it, and that it was a prepared massacre for the purpose of intimidating the democrats in that country.

Q. How many democrats were there in that country?—A. At the beginning of the campaign I went out into Christ Church Parish and was listened to kindly by hundreds and hundreds of negroes, and had every reason to believe that the parish would give a large democratic vote. After Cainhoj, with the exception of two or three negroes in the village, there was scarcely a negro democrat to be found in the parish.

Q. Well, now I ask you again how you know there were democrats in the parish, and how many democrats you know of your own knowledge to have been there—not what you suppose may have existed, but the democrats that you know did live in that parish, and how you know that they were democrats?—A. I have rarely if ever asked a negro how he intended to vote, and therefore I can only presume as to the number who would be likely to vote the democratic ticket. I remember a few years ago that no white man, no democrat, could speak in many of the country districts, and the favorable and kind reception that I and others met with in the last campaign prior to the Cainhoy massacre is the ground of my belief that there had been a great change in the political feelings of the negroes.

Q. Now, have you such faith in the veracity of the negroes, taken as a race, that when they intimated to you that they were going to vote the democratic ticket you can come here and swear that they are democrats or were democrats?—A. My experience with the average negro is that a congressional committee's per diem will so affect their veracity as to make their average testimony worthless.

Q. Then if they intimate to you that they are going to vote the democratic ticket you have no assurance that would enable you to come here and say they were democrats?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. You have said that you believe that this was a conspiracy deliberately planned to massacre the white democrats, with a view to intimidating and controlling the votes in that parish?—A. Not in that parish only, but in the surrounding country.

Q. Now, how many democrats were there in that parish that would lead these people to such atrocious acts as that?—A. My reply is that I do not know the exact number of democrats. I can only state that the feeling of the negroes to the democratic speaker, as exhibited, was so different from what it had been heretofore, that there was great cause for us to anticipate great success and for the republican leaders to fear equal disaster.

Q. Now, tell me if you think these negroes in this parish secretly planned a conspiracy by which they, with arms which they had provided, and having made a condition with the democrats to come without arms, had entrapped them there into this place of meeting with a view to massacre them?—A. I must say, sir, under oath that I cannot believe otherwise. I stood off away from the crowd, and I know not how the row began, but everything bore such an appearance of a determination to punish us that I cannot think otherwise.

Q. Now, I want to know if you are willing to say to this committee, under oath, that these men called a republican meeting; that they either invited or consented that the democrats of this city should attend, more or less of them, upon condition that they should not be armed, agreeing themselves to have no arms; that they had then attended in large numbers; that they had, as you say, excluded their women from attendance; that they had brought their men there in large numbers, and all of them fully armed, with their military arrangements preconceived, and when the democrats appeared there utterly unarmed, as you say, that they poured into their flying ranks such a volley of buck-shot and nails as to cut them to pieces—I want to know if you say that all that was deliberately prepared?—A. I wish to do the man justice. Mr. Bowen is generally believed in this section to have been the prime mover in that massacre. I have no cause whatsoever to believe that he had anything to do with it, and the fact is, when he went over with me among the negroes he tried to stop it. I have not intended to accuse him of having instigated it; I merely state that I know not who instigated it, although I believe there was a preconcerted massacre at Cainhoy, and I have so stated in my evidence at the inquest, and I cannot see how any man standing at a distance can say otherwise.

Q. Preconcerted by whom?—A. My belief is that there was a deep intention to stir up ill-will between the blacks and whites, so much as to prevent this tremendous rush to Hampton which appeared to be going on in the State. I was brought up out of this country; I studied my profession in Massachusetts. There I acquired a profession and a respect for republicans—bona fide republicanism. I have with one exception voted the republican ticket in every campaign, and that exception was in the Seymour and Blair campaign. I voted then for Seymour and Blair, and voted the democratic ticket at this last election. With the exception of those two I have voted the republican ticket at every election. I have always been regarded, I believe, as an exceedingly conservative man until this last election. When Hampton was nominated I was a strong Chamberlain man, and for long after Chamberlain was nominated. When this campaign began I would more readily have voted for Mr. Chamberlain than for Mr. Hampton, and it was only after the treatment that I found the whites were receiving here at the hands of the negroes and the negro leaders that I felt it my duty as an honest man to support Hampton, and that I entered so fervently into this campaign.

Q. Now, having described the character of this atrocious massacre, and having assigned to Mr. Bowen the position of a leader, I will ask you is it possible that Mr. Bowen could have known anything of this conspiracy?—A. You are asking me a question I do not like to answer.

Q. I would like to know if you think it possible that he could have been guilty of such a conspiracy?—A. I would rather give him the benefit of the doubt, and think him not guilty.

Q. I am not asking about his guilt or innocence or his complicity; but do you believe and are you willing to state here, as you have stated your character as a sincere and conservative man, that Mr. Bowen, who, as you say, is the leader of these men, could have been ignorant of such an atrocious conspiracy and massacre of the whites as that at Cainho?—A. I sometimes think he is, and sometimes think he is not. I truly cannot say. I have reasons to believe that he was perfectly ignorant, and yet I cannot see how it is possible. My only reason for saying I doubt it is because he tried to stop them firing.

Q. Do you mean to say that he solicited or consented to the attendance of these democrats there; that he accompanied them on the boat; that he was cheerful in his conversation with them, all the time being ignorant of this affair; or being acquainted with a possibility of this affair?—A. I have stated that, as to Mr. Bowen, I think he must have been ignorant.

Q. Who was there in this republican organization at that time that could have contrived such a conspiracy as this and have carried it out with such accuracy and such terrible execution as you have described? Are the negroes capable of such machinations as that?—A. The probability is that if any man concocted it he took very good care not to be present. There is strong reason for believing Bowen innocent. The fact is that when other riots occurred the prominent republicans were all out of the city; the mere presence of Mr. Bowen was evidence in his favor.

Q. Tell me if you think the body of the republican negroes at this meeting could have themselves been aware that such a massacre was to be executed there?—A. I do not believe that they all knew, but I believe a large part of them knew.

Q. How long before this meeting could this arrangement have been made? Have you any means of knowing that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. Mr. William Venning testified to me as a notary public the night of the riot, that when Mr. Bowen arrived on the ground he found the negroes with their arms, and that by his direction they were all armed, and that they were all swearing that they would not allow Delancy to speak, and at Mr. Bowen's subsequent direction they hid their guns. Mr. William Venning is a gentleman well known, living at Cainho. You can get his testimony.

Q. Well, then, notwithstanding Mr. Bowen had made a condition that his friends should not be armed, he found them armed, and he directed the negroes to hide their arms? Did he inform the democrats of that fact?—A. Not at all, sir. I do not think there was a democrat, from present appearances, who suspected there was an arm within a mile.

Q. Will you please to tell me how long before the meeting at Cainho it was publicly known that the democrats were to be there and were to take part in the general discussion?—A. I know nothing of that meeting, except that I heard the rumor while coming over in the boat. I even came over without my pistol. When I arrived I found out that there was going to be a meeting, and I sent word to my wife to that effect, and borrowed a pistol on the wharf, because I did not like to be without one, and jumped on the steamer and went to the meeting.

Q. Do you not know that there was not public notice given of the attendance of the white democrats at that meeting until the notice was given in the papers?—A. I do not know that any notice was given at all. My impression is I heard it in the steamer coming over from Christ Church. I may have heard it in the village, but I have no recollection when I heard it. I was not in the city of Charleston every day.

Q. Would you not naturally have known if the democratic leaders had had a conference with anybody with regard to this meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. I want to know if between the time when you knew and the time when the democrats had made up their minds to take a part in that discussion there was time then for the colored republicans to conceive, organize, and complete their arrangements for the massacre of the white democrats?—A. My knowing it has nothing to do with the question. I live out here in another part of the country, and the news might have reached Charleston three years before I should have found it out, and it would not have made any difference.

Q. Did not the republicans often come five, ten, or fifteen miles to meet, in a canvass like the late one?—A. It depends upon the man. A politician might go fifteen miles, and a farmer might object to going half a mile, sometimes.

Q. You have said when the signal was given. Now, what signal did you speak of?—A. By my own hearing, and by the universal testimony of all persons who saw the beginning of this row, there was, immediately after the beginning of the speech of McKinley, a pistol fired in the air. The flash was seen above the heads of the crowd. I did not see it myself, but I heard the report, and persons have told me that they saw the flash in the air. Who the man was that fired that pistol I could not say of my own knowledge.

Q. I do not doubt that the pistol was fired, and I do not care who the man was that
