

RECENT ELECTION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

TESTIMONY

TAKEN BY THE

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE RECENT ELECTION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

JANUARY 12, 1877.—Ordered to be printed.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 13, 1876.

The committee met at 3 p. m. All the members present.

The Chairman submitted the following papers, which will be found in the appendix:

1. Certified abstract of county canvassers' statements of votes cast at the general election held on the 7th of November, 1876.
2. Certified abstract of election returns by counties and precincts.
3. Certified copies of affidavits filed with the board of State canvassors.
4. Certified copy of record in the case of the State ex rel. R. M. Simms et al., vs. H. E. Hayne et al., board of State canvassors.

Mr. LAPHAM. Are any of those papers certified except the copies of the affidavits?

The CHAIRMAN. They are certified by the secretary of state.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Are the precinct returns footed?

The CHAIRMAN. They are.

Mr. LAWRENCE. How do the footings compare with the statement made by the State officers?

The CHAIRMAN. That I am not able to answer yet. The clerk can probably inform the committee.

The clerk announced that there were twenty-eight precinct returns missing from the records received from the secretary of state's office.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Those precincts are included in the county officers' returns from which the State officers made up their abstract.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be a matter for examination by the committee. I suppose that in some instances they are, and in some instances they are not. One of the objects in getting these papers before the committee is to see whether they are or not.

The Chairman laid before the committee the following communication, which it was unanimously agreed should be held conclusive as to the facts stated therein:

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 14, 1876.

Hon. MITTON SAYLER,

Chairman Congressional Committee, Columbia, S. C.:

SIR: Having learned that certain apparent inaccuracies exist in the managers' returns from Georgetown County, I desire as a resident in that county to make the following statement:

The poll reported as Brook Green is in Upper Waccaman precinct, and the poll reported as Bird Field is in Peedee precinct.

As no election was held at any other polling-places in either of these precincts, the change of name was simply owing to an inaccuracy on the part of the managers, who used the local designation of the polling-place instead of that proscribed by the statute.

Brook Green and Bird Field are the only points at which elections have ever been held in Upper Waccaman or Peedee precincts during the past ten years.

Very respectfully,

J. H. RAINEY,
Member of Congress.

It was also unanimously agreed that the precinct designated in the act establishing the voting precincts, as Red Store, is commonly known as Sandy Run, and was so returned; also, that the precinct called in the act Casey's is generally known as Granby, and was so returned.

The Chairman stated that it was agreed that the county commissioners' returns from Horry County did no injustice to either party, although certain precinct returns were missing.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that those papers laid before the committee are now in evidence?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; they are all duly certified, and are a part of our record.

The committee then proceeded to take testimony in regard to the missing precinct returns in the following order:

ELECTION RETURNS.

WILLIAM T. BLANTON sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. You live in Barnwell County, I believe?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What part?—A. I live eight miles west of Barnwell Court-house.

Q. Do you know a precinct called Robbins, in that county?—A. Yes.

Q. I believe you were United States supervisor of election there two years ago?—A. Yes, sir; I was supervisor of that box two years ago.

Q. So that you were acquainted with the voting there two years ago?—A. Yes, sir; it is some distance from where I live, however.

Q. You are now, and have been for some time, one of the commissioners of election?—A. I was, at this election only.

Q. You were one of the three county commissioners?—A. Yes.

Q. Was any return from managers of the Robbins precinct ever brought before the board of county commissioners, or received by them?—A. No, sir; none.

Q. Was any return from the precinct managers of Robbins precinct ever sent by the county commissioners (if I use the name correctly) to the secretary of state, or the State canvassers?—A. Not to my knowledge. So far as I know there was none.

Q. And none was ever returned by them to the secretary of state or the State canvassers?—A. I cannot state anything about that.

Q. Do you know of any?—A. No, sir; I do not, of my own knowledge.

Q. Did you make your return to the secretary of state from Barnwell County?—A. They were sent up by the chairman of the board, Mr. Knopf.

Q. Were those returns sealed up by the board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your presence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any returns from Robbins precinct included in those returns, which were sealed up to be sent to the secretary of state?—A. None at all.

Q. What means, if any, did you take to secure your returns which you did send—how did you do it?—A. If my memory serves me right, I think they were rolled up in this way, [illustrating.] and put in a pile, and a good thick piece of brown paper wrapped around it, and then wire wrapped around each end, as you pack up a piece of goods; then it was sealed with sealing-wax.

Q. And in that package, as I understand you, there was no return from Robbins precinct?—A. No return, sir.

Q. And you know of none ever having been made or sent up?—A. No, sir.

Q. All the other precincts, as I understand, were rolled up in that package?—A. No, sir; not all. There was one other that was not.

Mr. LAPHAM. What is the object of this inquiry?

Mr. ABBOTT. I want to show that the precinct return from Robbins was never sent either to the secretary of state or to the State canvassers by any authority whatever.

Q. You say there was one other precinct from which no return was sent. What was that?—A. Calman's Fair Church box, as it was called.

Q. Was there any election there?—A. I think not, sir. Anyhow, the box was returned empty. It was not opened, but they said it was empty.

Q. And you understood there was no election there?—A. Yes.

Q. With the exception of those two precincts, were all the other precincts included in that package?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you were supervisor of election at Robbins precinct two years ago?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us about the number of votes polled at that precinct at that election?—

A. There were 366 votes polled there, all told.

Q. Did you ascertain that that was the fair result of the voting at that precinct?—A. I heard the men say that both parties voted their full strength. I recollect that they sent out after some few laborers that were somewhere in the neighborhood and brought them in in the afternoon.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. Did you attend all the meetings of the county board of canvassers ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if there had been any return from Calnan's precinct you would have known the fact ?—A. Yes.

Q. And if there had been any from Robbins you would have known it ?—A. Yes, sir ; that is if they came before the board. I do not know what was done outside. Nothing came before the board from those precincts except the empty box.

Q. Who sent that up ?—A. One of the managers. The Calnan's Fair Church box was presented to the board and they said it was empty.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Do you remember the names of the managers at Robbins ?—A. [Referring to memorandum.] I have them here ; William Bush, Daniel Mixson, and Dr. Wallace Bailey. Those are the three that were appointed there this year.

Q. Who were your associates on the county board ?—A. A. Knopf and Mr. Genierotte ; I don't remember his first name.

Q. Before you sent the returns from Barnwell County to the secretary of state, did you not see the returns from Robbins precinct ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear of one ?—A. I did not hear of one till some time the next week. I heard that it was sent up here ; that is, that the box was sent up here to Columbia. But I did not know anything about it before. I didn't know of any return.

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. You mean you did not hear of it until the next week after the election ?—A. Yes, sir ; after the board had made a canvass of the votes.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. After your board had made your return for the county ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what or about what the vote was at Calnan's ?—A. No, sir ; I don't remember exactly. I suppose some two hundred or two hundred and fifty, though I speak at random.

Q. Do you remember on what day you made your returns to the secretary of state ?—A. The election came off on Tuesday, the 7th of November ; the Friday afterwards we received the boxes and commenced canvassing the votes. We got through on Saturday of the same week.

Q. When were they returned to the secretary of state ?—A. They were delivered up to the chairman, Mr. Knopf, to bring them up to Columbia, and I understood that he came up on the Sunday night afterwards, but I don't know. They were delivered to him on Saturday.

Q. You heard nothing of the return from the managers at Robbins up to the Saturday ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you learn how many votes were cast or said to have been cast at Robbins precinct ?—A. No, sir ; not until I saw it in the papers sometime afterwards.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Voters in this State are entitled, I believe, to vote anywhere in the county ?—A. I think so.

Q. They are not bound to vote in the precinct in which they reside ?—A. I don't think they are ; I think they are at liberty to go anywhere in the county.

Q. How far was Calnan's Fair church polling-place from Robbins polling-place ?—A. I do not know exactly. I should say some ten miles, more or less.

Q. Was it adjoining ?—A. I think so.

Q. If no vote was cast at Calnan's Fair church, then many of those who would have been entitled to vote there would be likely to go to Robbins polling-place, would they not ?—A. Well, I think—I do not speak from my own knowledge, but I think the biggest part of them went down to Rod Oak ; some went to Williston ; I was there myself.

Q. So far as any might have gone from Calnan's Fair church to Robbins, that would increase the number of voters at Robbins this year over the number two years ago ?—A. Yes ; if they all went there, of course it is likely it would, but I understood that the most of them went to Rod Oak.

Q. Was not Isaac W. Allen one of the managers at Robbins this year ?—A. I think not.

Q. Who were the United States supervisors ?—A. I don't know, sir ; I have heard the names, but I cannot speak from my own knowledge.

Q. Was not the return of the election, so far as related to presidential electors, made to S. E. Polnyer, the United States supervisor for the district of South Carolina, by one or both of the supervisors for Robbins precinct ?—A. I do not know anything about that. There was nothing came before the board from the Robbins box.

Q. Do you know why no vote was taken at Robbins precinct ?—A. Not of my own knowledge ; I only heard.

Q. Do you know of any facts which would enable the committee to learn the reason ?—

A. Nothing that came under my own knowledge; only a report that I heard. Nothing came under my own knowledge, only that Robbins was not returned to the board.

(At the suggestion of the chairman, it was agreed by the committee that in this investigation the ordinary rules of evidence shall be followed, unless in cases where they are departed from by general consent.)

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. I understood you to say that the ordinary vote at Fair church precinct was about two hundred and over?—A. I do not know the number, but I suppose it could not go beyond that.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Which was the nearest voting-place to Cainan's Fair church precinct?—A. Most of the voters I think went to Red Oak.

Q. Was that the nearest point?—A. I think it was one of the nearest. Red Oak, Williston, and Robbins were the three nearest to each other; one north, one south, and the other nearly east.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Which direction is Robbins?—A. South.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 13, 1876.

JOHNSON HAGOOD sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. You live in Barnwell County?—Answer. Yes, sir; within a mile of the village of Barnwell Court-House.

Q. You were one of the candidates at the last election?—A. I was a candidate on the State ticket for comptroller-general.

Q. You are familiar with Barnwell County, and have been for a long time?—A. I was born there and have lived there all my life.

Q. Did you appear before the State board of canvassers when any canvass was made of the precincts from that county?—A. I was the chairman of the democratic committee during the canvass. I was with the board of State canvassers a part of the time while they were canvassing, but did not stay there until they got through. They were engaged until 1 o'clock at night, and I went home about 11 o'clock.

Q. What date was that?—A. The 7th of November was the day of the election, and Mr. Blanton has correctly stated the time here; it was two days afterwards.

Q. Were you present when the State canvassers undertook to canvass the precinct returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. I have forgotten the date, but that can be supplied very readily. They took up the counties in the State in alphabetical order. Barnwell was about the third or fourth. There was some agreement between the parties on both sides that only so many persons should be present at the canvassing—I think eight from each party, and one from each county as it was called. When Barnwell County was about to be called, I was notified by the managers on the democratic side to attend, and I came in just as they were finishing Beaufort, and they took up Barnwell a few minutes afterwards.

Q. State what was produced there as the returns from Barnwell.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Do you mean in canvassing the vote for electors or for State officers?

The WITNESS. They all were voted for upon one ticket. We had but one box.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. But did the State board of canvassers canvass the votes for electors?—A. Yes. That was the time I was called in, when they were engaged on the electors. Afterwards they took up the State officers, but I was not called back any more.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. This that you testify to was at the canvassing of the vote for electors?—A. Yes, sir; the first time.

Q. What did you find in reference to the precinct returns?—A. When Barnwell was called an assistant was put at the table, and he put on the table a large package which was broken—no seals—the ends exposed and wrapped around with a twine or string of some sort—an unsealed package. I immediately called the attention of the managing counsel on the democratic side to the fact that the package was unsealed, while the law required it to be delivered there sealed, and I knew it had been delivered sealed, because I had seen the certificate of its delivery that Mr. Knopf had received.

Q. What was done then?—A. The secretary of state proceeded to examine the papers and arrange them for counting or canvassing. He asked some of the persons around how many precincts there were in Barnwell. They referred to the statute, and some one said fifteen. He arranged a portion of the papers, and went on to count them, "One, two, three," &c., until he counted fifteen, and I think he remarked—I am a little doubtful about this—but I think he said, "O, hell!" or some equivalent words. They then commenced to count, and he counted in the same monotonous official tone all the way through, and when he came to Robbins he called it out as he called all the rest, and called out the figures, thirteen hundred and odd, I think, for every republican candidate, and none for the democratic candidates.

Q. Was that paper which he read produced from among the returns?—A. It was in the package produced on the table; it looked to be the same sized paper, and seemed to have all the appearances of an official paper.

Q. What was done further?—A. I called the attention of the counsel again to the fact, and he asked who signed the paper. The secretary of state looked at it and said who signed it—Bill Bush and a Mixon, I think Dave. He was asked by the democratic counsel if the paper was in the original package handed to him. He said no, but it was handed to him by one of the commissioners. Then, again, being asked which of the commissioners, he said Mr. Gonnerot. Objection was made, of course, and the result was that they made what they called a note of it, a memorandum.

Q. Do you know whether it was counted in the tabulation of the counties as they went on?—A. The vote of Robbins has not been counted for any of the county officers or in the gubernatorial count.

Q. Do you know whether it was counted for presidential electors?—A. I know nothing of that; but I know the fact that the county officers have received certificates from the board of State canvassers, and received their commissions.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to testimony in regard to county officers.

Q. You are familiar with the different parts of Barnwell County; can you tell us about how many votes were cast at the last election at Robbins precinct?—A. I cannot.

Q. Have you any means of knowing the usual voting capacity of Robbins precinct?—A. Yes, sir; I have the means of knowing its present voting population.

Q. What was it?—A. During this canvass I had a very accurate census made of the voting population of the whole district by townships, white and black.

Q. What was the voting power of Robbins precinct?

Mr. LAPHAM. That is mere hearsay.

The WITNESS. Of course, I did not take the census individually. I had it done by agents, but I have every reason to believe that it was extremely accurate. There were seven thousand voters or more in the county.

Q. That census was taken for the purpose of ascertaining the number of voters?—A. Yes, sir; and for the purposes of this election. The voters were taken and their names were taken, so that individuals might be known.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. What was the number of voters at the last preceding election?—A. That I cannot tell you. I have never taken part in any election before this.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. What in your judgment was the number of voters in that district?

Mr. LAPHAM objected on the ground that the witness had not shown any knowledge on the subject.

The WITNESS. I cannot say without referring to the census.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Your means of knowledge comes from the exact enumeration that you have had made?—A. Entirely so.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. Do I understand you to say that, as chairman of the democratic executive committee of that county, you employed agents for the purpose of making an accurate list of all the voters in that county, with the view of ascertaining the polling strength of that county?—A. Yes. I had the name of every white and black man qualified to vote in the county.

Q. And the object of that enumeration was to ascertain the voting strength of the county?—A. Precisely so; for the purposes of the election, and to know whom to operate upon.

Q. And those agents so employed made returns to you?—A. Yes, sir; which returns were consolidated, and the whites kept in manuscript and the blacks printed for use.

Q. Those agents made their examination so extensive as to enumerate whites and blacks separately?—A. Yes, sir; the census was taken in this way; I had a democratic club of whites in every town, and each precinct or township club made a census and passed upon the qualified voters—the blacks. They were instructed that every name that they reported to me would not be objected to at the polls. They were to report only the names of persons that their neighbors, knowing the people, knew were qualified to vote, and no man in the census I had made was challenged at the polls. Our challengers were instructed not to challenge any man whose name appeared on the census, as they had already been passed upon by the township clubs in the towns where they lived.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. How did that poll thus made out by your agents compare with the census of 1875?—

A. I think it came within a hundred or two of it. I think mine was a hundred, or something like that, more than the census in the aggregate, but there was a decided difference in the distribution; there were more whites in my census than in the State census, and fewer blacks.

Mr. Abbott offered in evidence in this connection the State census of 1875, showing in Barnwell County 7,317 voters.

Q. Do you recollect the vote cast in that county, not including Robbins precinct?—A. [Referring to a memorandum.] Hampton received 2,000 white votes and 906 colored votes, making 3,956. Chamberlain received 9 white votes and 2,769 colored votes, making 2,778, and there were 2 scattering votes, making a total of 6,736.

Q. Does that include Robbins precinct?—A. No, sir; nor Calnan's Fair church.

Q. Including Robbins precinct, that would make how many?—A. I understood there were some few over thirteen hundred at Robbins.

Q. That would make over eight thousand votes in Barnwell County including Robbins?—A. Yes, sir; I can give you the statistics of the two previous gubernatorial elections. In 1874, at the Chamberlain and Green election, where both the candidates were republican, but there was a contest between them, and the democrats voted to some extent for Green, the total vote was 6,117. In 1868 the total vote was 5,073. I think there was no opposition at that election. The whites voted 2,073 and the blacks 3,000, making 5,073.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know what the total vote for the republican electors and the democratic electors was in Barnwell County, excluding Robbins precinct and Calnan's Fair church?—

A. No, sir; this memorandum that I have read from here I made just after the election for my own information, and I did not take any but the vote for governor. There is a discrepancy, I suppose, for I know that Hampton ran ahead of his ticket, and it may be that it is less. I do not know; I have not compared.

Q. You voted yourself, this year?—A. Yes.

Q. At what precinct?—A. In the village of Barnwell.

Q. Is that precinct on the river?—A. No, sir; it is in the center of the district, about sixteen miles from the Savannah River, and the same distance from the Edisto.

Q. Does Barnwell County lie on the river opposite the State of Georgia?—A. It lies on the Savannah River, opposite Georgia.

Q. Have you any knowledge of voters coming across from Georgia and voting in Barnwell County?—A. None whatever, sir. Of course I speak of my personal knowledge. There may possibly have been such a thing, but I know nothing of it. I heard before the election that there was some talk of men coming from Georgia to help us to vote, and I would have sent word to them, if I had known who they were, not to come; but not knowing who they were, and having only just a vague rumor—I had twenty-two white and seventeen colored clubs, and I instructed them two days before the election that if any such men come across the river they were to send them back and beg them to go home; that we had the county, and I wanted nothing unfair in any respect.

Q. Then it was understood that there were persons in Georgia who were ready to aid in that way?—A. There was merely that rumor, sir. I never know where it came from; I heard it vaguely. It was a rumor coming from irresponsible persons. I heard it on the South Carolina Railroad, I think from a conductor, and perhaps from others. But it was a rumor that I could not locate, and I knew no way to stop it, except by the instructions I have stated.

Q. Can you give me the vote in some of the precincts along the river, and the vote in 1874 in the same precincts?—A. I cannot, sir. As I said before, I have never taken part in an election in my county, or anywhere else, until this year.

Q. Is there any record from which you can get that?—A. I presume there is, but I do not know where to find it. It can be found, I presume. The records must have been preserved. That memorandum that I read from was made from a newspaper, about the time of the election.

Q. Which was the nearest precinct to the polling-place of Calnan's Fair church?—A. I think Mr. Blanton has correctly stated it. He lives nearer that portion of the county than I do, and these precincts are connected by cross-roads. I think that Millet's, which he did not mention, is probably as near as the three he did mention—Robbins, Red Oak, and Williston. The vote at Millet's was larger than usual, and I was told by the managers that it was because a portion of the Robbins men came there.

Q. By the law of this State, voters can vote at any precinct in the county, I believe?—A. Yes; and it is the practice to mass the voters, more or less. It has been the practice of the republican party to mass its voters, and I dare say the democrats did the same.

Q. That practice of massing might account for a larger vote in Robbins this year than before?—A. Yes; there was such a practice; but Blockville and Allendale were the only two points at which they were massed, I think. Those are on opposite sides of the river, on railroads.

Q. And this practice of massing, in connection with the fact that there was no voting done at Calnan's Fair church precinct, might come from an enlarged vote at Robbins?—A. It could account for but a slight increase. I have no doubt that a portion of the voters went to Robbins to vote, but they also went to Williston and to Red Oak, certainly, and I think to Mallet's.

Q. They might have gone from other precincts to Robbins?—A. Of course they might, they can vote where they please.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Have you any means of telling, from your returns that you have described to us, whether there was any larger number of votes cast at those precincts on the Savannah River than the number of votes you found to be there?—A. They all voted full.

Q. Was there anything additional beyond what you found to be there?—A. All the other boxes in the county voted their full vote, and an enlarged vote, except the Robbins and Calnan's precincts, which did not vote at all. But if you will observe, there is an increase of six or seven hundred votes above what has ever been voted in the county before, and that increase was generally distributed.

Q. That increase is no more in the precincts on the Savannah River than elsewhere?—A. No more than on the South Carolina Railroad side or the Edisto.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know the reason why the return was not made from Robbins to the county canvassers?—A. I received a dispatch from one of the managers of election the night of the election telling me why. That is my only means of knowing.

Q. Have you that dispatch?—A. No, sir. Perhaps the statement may have been verbal; but I think it was written, and I throw it down in the room in the headquarters where we were. He stated briefly the reason. I can give you what he said, if you wish.

Q. I did not know but that you might have known some fact yourself.—A. No, sir; I was thirty miles off, at the center of the county. But I do not think there is any dispute about the facts. They were universally known, and they were embodied in this dispatch very briefly.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Will you give the precincts in your county which border on Georgia?—A. Robbins, I think, is the nearest to the city of Augusta. The next is Millet's, and the next Allendale. Baldock is fully fifteen miles from the river. Mallet's is within half a mile of the river-swamp. Allendale is seven or eight miles from the river.

WILLIAM T. BLANTON recalled and further examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Which did you state was our precinct in Barnwell County?—Answer. Williston, on the South Carolina Railroad.

Q. How far is that from Blackville?—A. I do not remember; some eight or ten miles, probably nine, more or less.

Q. Do they adjoin?—A. It is the next precinct.

Q. I observe that the name of Mr. Hurley, one of the candidates for elector, is blank at that precinct. According to your return, no votes appear to have been cast for him as an elector?—A. I do not know anything about that. I do not remember anything about it.

Q. You were not aware of the fact that any of the electors were omitted from the list, were you?—A. He was on the republican side, was he?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir. I think there was a candidate omitted; but I do not remember anything about the number of votes.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were the tickets for electors all full?

Mr. COCHRANE. I submit that the return will show that.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. I now call your attention to the fact that for Hurley, one of the republican electors, the Blackville precinct is returned blank. You know something about that, do you not?—A. I remember to have heard it spoken of, but at this time I cannot recollect.

Q. Don't you know it is a mistake? Don't you know that he was voted for the same as the others?—A. Yes; but I think that was an error of the managers, if my memory serves me right. I had forgotten that altogether.

Mr. PHILIPS objected to Mr. Lapham's mode of examination as leading.

The WITNESS. I can't tell you anything from my own knowledge about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness has stated that he has no personal knowledge in regard to the matter, and no definite recollection.

Mr. LAPHAM. He does remember the fact that Hurley was left blank.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Do the county canvassers see the tickets?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. The ballot-boxes were returned to you as county canvassers?—A. They were returned.

Q. And you had the ballot box from Blackville?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you look into that box to see whether there were any votes for Hurley?—A. We did not. We did not look into any of the boxes.

Q. You did not examine them to see whether that was an error, reporting Hurley blank?—A. No, sir; we did not look at the votes.

Q. You did not look to see whether Hurley's name was on the electoral ballots?—A. No, sir; we did not open any boxes except those where the managers had put the returns inside. Those we opened and took out their reports, and locked the boxes up.

Q. At Blackville, according to the report which you make, the name of Hurley, one of the republican electors, is blank, no votes appearing to have been cast for him. Now, I ask whether you looked at the ballots in that box to see whether that was an error or not?—A. We did not.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. What did you look at?—A. We only looked at the regular returns of the managers.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. And you made a statement according to their returns?—A. Yes, sir; according to their returns.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. There was no inquiry made by the board of county canvassers with reference to that discrepancy that you remember?—A. No, sir; but I remember hearing it spoken of.

Q. Did you not understand at the time that it was a mistake?

Mr. Phillips objected to the question as calling, not for a fact, but for the understanding of the witness.

Mr. Lapham said that it called for the understanding of the witness as a canvassing officer, and insisted upon the question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. He was not a canvassing officer except of the managers' returns.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. You did not at the time of the canvass understand that it was a clerical error?—A. I think it was, sir, on the part of the managers; that is my impression. To tell you exactly how it was I could not at this time, but I think there was some defect in it on the part of the managers.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. If the managers discovered that it was a clerical error why didn't they supply it in the return?—A. I may be mistaken; it might have been the board that discovered it.

Q. The board did not examine the tickets, did they?—A. They did not.

Q. How could you tell, then, whether it was a clerical error or not?—A. Only by the managers' returns.

Q. But the managers' returns did not show that Hurley got any votes at all, did they?—

A. I don't remember exactly how it was, but it was something right there. I cannot explain it, but it strikes me it was omitted by them, though I may be mistaken in that.

Q. It was omitted by the managers for what reason?—A. Ah, I cannot tell you that.

By Mr. PHILLIPS :

Q. At the time the county commissioners aggregated the precinct returns before you, and when this precinct now in controversy was before you, was there any information whatever before your board about any mistake having been made by the managers in the return from Blackville—was there any fact or evidence before you about any such mistake?—A. I think there was something said about it.

Q. There was something said about there being a blank return?—A. Yes, sir; in Hurley's case.

Q. But was there any evidence of any sort before you to show that there was a mistake?—A. I think there was.

Q. What was it?—A. I can't tell you exactly, only that it was omitted in some way. I think that the managers omitted it, but I cannot tell you the exact particulars at this time.

Q. Were there any affidavits before you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any witness examined about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, when you state that the impression was that it was a mistake, you mean that there was a mere rumor to that effect?—A. Well, sir, I can't remember distinctly, but it strikes me we discovered it in the returns.

Q. You discovered that there was no return for this elector from that precinct?—A. I think that was it.

Q. But my question is, was there any evidence before you to show how that blank occurred?—A. I do not think it.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. All you know about it was the fact that on the managers' return from Blackville the name of one of the electors was omitted.—A. I think that is it.

Q. And you did not inquire of the managers, or any other human being, about it?—A. No, sir; we could not.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. You do not know whether the voters voted for Hurley there or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor you did not hear whether they did or not?—A. No, sir; we did not. We acted under the counsel of Judge Muher; he was our counsel.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Who is he?—A. He is a lawyer at Barnwell Court-House.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. We want to know on which side he is in politics.—A. He voted the democratic ticket.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. You acted under his advice on this question?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That included the omission of Hurley's name, didn't it?—A. I think it did, but I can't remember.

Q. Now, don't you remember that one or more of the managers from Blackville were there before the county canvassers?—A. They delivered the box.

Q. Don't you remember that they spoke of this as a mistake?—A. No, sir; I think we discovered it in the returns.

Q. Were they not there at the time you discovered it?—A. No, sir; I do not think they were.

Q. Are you sure that they were not there at the time you discovered the omission of the votes for Hurley?—A. I do not think they were there.

Q. You took the advice of the gentleman you have named as to what you should do in regard to that omission?—A. I do not know that we did take his advice as to that case. He was present all through as our counsel on points of law.

Q. He was a democrat, and is one now?—A. Yes, sir. It was, however, only on points of law that he counseled us.

Q. And you voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You had two republican associates, had you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you three—two republicans and one democrat—selected this gentleman as your counselor in matters of law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whether he gave you any counsel in regard to that Blackville return you do not know?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Are either of your associates here?—A. Mr. Knopf is here, and I think you can get at that point from him.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. Is not this the only mistake you discovered, that there was no vote returned for Hurley from that precinct?—A. I think that was not counted; but I can't tell you the particulars at this time from memory.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 13, 1876.

GUSTAVUS M. WALKER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. You reside in Columbia, and are cashier of one of the banks here?—Answer. Yes, sir; of the Union Bank.

Q. How long have you been here?—A. Since 1867.

Q. On the night of the canvass of the counties by the State board of canvassers by taking the precincts from the different counties, were you present on behalf of the democrats?—A. I was present on behalf of the democratic executive committee.

Q. How far did the State canvassers progress in canvassing the counties by precincts?—A. They canvassed six counties.

Q. The first six in alphabetical order on the list?—A. Yes.

Q. That embraced from Abbeville to Charleston Counties, inclusive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you keep a record of the result of the canvass by precincts as it was given by the canvassers?—A. Yes, sir; I took it down at the time and then turned the papers over to the democratic executive committee.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. You took down the figures of the managers' returns as called out?—A. Yes, sir; and the precinct returns as announced.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. And you made a record of those figures yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you that record now with you?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you please produce it?

Mr. Lapham objected to the record as incompetent evidence.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You made that record at the time from the figures given by the State canvassers?—A. Yes, sir; there were three persons taking down the figures, and all took them at the same time.

Mr. Lapham renewed his objection and the chairman overruled it.

Q. Give us the results of that canvass of votes for each county.—A. I have not made the aggregate for the whole six counties. I have only got each county aggregated by precincts. They are as follows: Abbeville County: Bowen, 3,245; Winsmith, 3,251; Barker, 3,557; McGowan, 3,565; Johnston, 3,254; Harrington, 3,557; Hurley, 3,252; Ingram, 3,557; Nash, 3,253; Wallace, 3,556; Cook, 3,253; Erwin, 3,556; Myers, 3,252; Aldrich, 3,556. There are some precincts from which there were no returns.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. You have not got votes from all the precincts?—A. No, sir; I have not; nor did the State board of canvassers receive them. I have got all that they got. In Aiken County Bowen's figures were, 2,215; Winsmith, 2,215; Barker, 2,663; McGowan, 2,665; Johnston, 2,215; Harrington, 2,665; Hurley, 2,215; Ingram, 2,665; Nash, 2,214; Wallace, 2,665; Cook, 2,214; Erwin, 2,665; Myers, 2,215; Aldrich, 2,215.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Are there any vacant precincts there?—A. Yes, sir; two, Windsor and Silverton.

Q. But those that you have read are all the returns that the board gave as having been received at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the only two vacant precincts in Aiken County were Silverton and Windsor?—A. Yes.

Q. What precincts were missing in Abbeville?—A. Calhoun Mills and Magnolia. In Anderson County the figures were: Bowen, 1,188; Winsmith, 1,189; Barker, 4,003; McGowan, 4,004; Johnston, 1,140; Harrington, 3,913; Hurley, 1,139; Ingram, 3,913; Nash, 1,190; Wallace, 4,003; Cook, 1,139; Erwin, 3,913; Myers, 1,139; Aldrich, 3,913.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Were there any precincts in that county not given?—A. No, sir; they are all full; Barnwell County: Bowen, 2,835; Winsmith, 2,835; Barker, 3,895; McGowan, 3,895; Johnston, 2,835; Harrington, 3,894; Hurley, 2,140; Ingram, 3,894; Nash, 2,836; Wallace, 3,394; Cook, 2,837; Erwin, 3,894; Myers, 2,835; Aldrich, 3,854.

Q. Are there any vacant precincts there?—A. Yes, two; at least there is only one that no polling was done at—Cainan's Fair Church. But this Robbins's box was left out as being an illegal box. It was not returned properly to the board of State canvassers.

Q. And they excluded it?—A. Yes, sir; they excluded it. Beaufort County: Bowen, 6,753; Winsmith, 6,750; Barker, 2,637; McGowan, 1,937; Johnston, 5,722; Harrington, 1,909; Hurley, 6,440; Ingram, 1,909; Nash, 6,440; Wallace, 1,909; Cook, 6,440; Erwin, 1,868; Myers, 6,753; Aldrich, 1,939.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. How many precincts are left out there?—A. Well, I hardly know how to answer that question. Some appear to have been left out here; but the votes were cast for "Hayes and Wheeler" and "Tilden and Hendricks."

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Were those precincts that you have given announced as the result of the managers return by the State board?—A. Yes, sir; they were so announced. These precincts are not included in the aggregates given.

Q. But they were announced to you by the State board under the head of Hayes and Wheeler and Tilden and Hendricks?—A. Yes, sir; but they are not counted as votes for the electors.

Q. Which precincts are those?—A. Black Creek and Gray's Hill.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Then the State board excluded all votes that were cast directly for Hayes and Wheeler or Tilden and Hendricks?—A. I do not know about that. In calling out the votes, when they came to that precinct they said, "Here the electors are not voted for;" but Hayes and Wheeler got so many, and Tilden and Hendricks got so many. At Black Creek, Hayes and Wheeler received ten votes each, and Tilden and Hendricks four votes each. At Gray's Hill, Hayes and Wheeler received 472, and Tilden and Hendricks nine votes each.

Q. Are those the only two vacant precincts?—A. The only two where there were no electors voted for.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Sheldon is included in that count?—A. Yes, sir. In Charleston County, Bowon received 14,952; Winsmith, 14,969; Barker, 8,653; McGowan, 8,657; Johnston, 14,965; Harrington, 8,657; Hurley, 14,960; Ingram, 8,659; Nash, 14,655; Wallace, 8,658; Cook, 14,966; Erwin, 8,611; Myers, 14,964; Aldrich, 8,624.

Q. Were there any blank precincts in that county?—A. Yes, two—Dutart's Creek and Robbins. They are blank as to every elector. My memorandum says, "No names given, but only the figures."

Q. You have not given the figures from those two precincts?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You have not got the figures?—A. No, sir.

Q. There were no figures called?—A. No, sir; the board said there were no names given, only the figures, and they did not call the figures because there were no names.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You have all the figures that they called off?—A. Yes, sir; at the Cross-roads—63 republican and 105 democratic votes were reported by the State canvassers; but they didn't give the names.

Q. Those numbers do not enter into your additions here?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that you give in this addition only what was reported by the State canvassers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the State canvassers put Robbins into the report?—A. When we were making up these precinct returns they entered it on their returns, or at least I put it on mine, as a memorandum, but in putting it on their list of counties that vote was not included in the managers' returns. That is my understanding.

Q. When they gave you those precinct returns, and when you got Barnwell County complete, was Robbins included in the addition of the managers' returns from that county?—A. No, sir. If that box from Robbins had been counted, the return for the County would have been larger; but it was not taken into the count at all by the State canvassers, or by the county commissioners either.

Q. Tell us whether they called that or undertook to include it?—A. In making up these precinct returns they did call the vote for each of the electors, but the only persons voted for were the republicans, as appears on my return here; but it was not included in the county commissioners' returns.

Q. How about the managers; did they include it?—A. No, sir; they did not include it. It was left out entirely, because it was not properly received at their office. It was objected to at the time by General Hagood.

Q. And upon the objection it was not put in with the managers' returns for the county?—A. No, sir.

Q. In those papers which you give us you give the vote for each persons and each precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. And these papers are the originals, made by you at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are correct?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

The papers were put in evidence, as follows:

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Who employed you to go there?—A. A subcommittee of the democratic executive committee.

Q. Who was the individual?—A. Mr. LeConte came there and asked me if I would not go and check the clerk of the board; that they wanted an accountant there.

Q. Who was with you?—A. Several members of the executive committee were there.

Q. Did any one keep a list except yourself?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Scoffin, the clerk of the democratic State committee.

Q. Did any one keep a list except yourself?—A. Mr. Alexander was there; he kept a list.

Q. What Mr. Alexander?—A. I do not know his given name. He is from Washington City.

Q. Have you seen him since?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen him since.

The CHAIRMAN. It is our Mr. Alexander.

Mr. LAPHAM. Was he here?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; he was.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. On whose behalf was he acting?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. In whose behalf did he claim to be acting?—A. I do not know, sir. I have no acquaintance with him at all. I just met him in the office.

Q. He kept a list and you kept a list?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you and he compare your lists?—A. I have compared with him this last time since he returned here.

Q. Not before?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you make that comparison?—A. This morning.

Q. Where?—A. At his room, at the Columbia Hotel.

Q. How did you take this list?—A. By drawing off a blank, and as the chairman of the board of State canvassers would call out the name and the figures I would enter them.

Q. And you simply made a memorandum as they called off the names and figures?—A. Yes.

Q. You simply kept a tally?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever compare it afterward with the manager's returns?—A. No, sir.

Q. And never have done so since?—A. No, sir. As soon as I got through with those lists I turned them over to Colonel Haskell, and they were in his possession until I got them yesterday.

Q. Who is Colonel Haskell?—A. Chairman of the democratic executive committee of this State.

Q. He is a son-in-law of General Hampton, is he not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never compared your list with the managers' returns to see if it was correct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did it all depend upon whether you heard correctly and took down correctly the figures as they were called out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never made a comparison with any list?—A. No, sir; except Mr. Alexander's.

Q. With any list in the secretary's office, I mean?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you make your footings?—A. Yesterday.

Q. When were those lists returned to you?—A. They were returned to me yesterday.

Q. You have not seen them since the night they were made?—A. No, sir.

Q. What time on that night was Charleston County finished?—A. I can hardly answer that question. We were engaged there a couple of days.

Q. Charleston County was the last. Do you remember what hour it was when you finished Charleston?—A. No, sir; I do not. I think it was after dark. It may have been ten or eleven o'clock.

Q. Was it not midnight?—A. I say it might have been ten or eleven o'clock.

Q. You have no knowledge of what was the vote cast, if any was cast at any of those precincts which are blank on your memorandum?—A. No, sir; because the vote was not read out.

Q. You do not know whether they were in the returns or not?—A. No, sir. There were certain cases where the returns said "for Hayes and Wheeler" so many votes and "for Tilden and Hendricks" so many votes.

Q. Did you take a list of all those votes?—A. Yes; I think I have got them all as they were called.

Q. Were the numbers of that class of votes given in all cases?—A. As they were called out I took them down.

Q. But are you certain that they were all called out?—A. I do not know, sir. I was sitting away from the parties who were calling out.

Q. How far?—A. I suppose about ten feet.

Q. At another table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there persons between you and the persons who were calling off?—A. Yes; the clerk of the board was between me and the chairman.

Q. You were sitting at one table and the canvassers at another?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was more or less talking in the room, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And although you think you heard correctly and took the numbers correctly, I presume you would not be willing to testify that you are sure of that?—A. O, there may be mistakes, sir. We are all liable to mistakes. I may have misunderstood when a figure was called. I know that appears to have been the case in one instance when I compared with Mr. Alexander; a case in Abbeville County. He has Barker as having received 309 and McGowan 311, and I have it just the reverse. I have read my figures though as I took them down. The error may have occurred in this way: the chairman of the board of State canvassers may have alternated the names.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any such confusion in the hall as would interfere with the distinct calling of the number?—A. I do not think so; I think they all kept very quiet.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. The clerk of the board sat between you and the managers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the figures which were called out taken down by the clerk?—A. The chairman of the board would call out the precinct; the names of the candidates and the number of votes, and we would all take them down at the same time, and one or the other would respond to the chairman's call to let him know if we were ready for the next name.

Q. Was there any secrecy about the count?—A. I cannot say that there was. There was a certain number admitted on each side.

Q. There was no objection made to your being there?—A. No, sir; none to my being there.

Q. Did they know that you were there on behalf of the executive committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They did not object to your being there?—A. No. Before the admission they passed a resolution to admit only five from each side, but that was objected to by the democratic committee, and they then increased the number to eight. The reason given was the smallness of the secretary of state's office, and that he did not wish to have so large a number present as to retard the work.

Q. You say that when you were ready one of you would respond?—A. Yes, sir; usually his own clerk would respond.

Q. How near to the clerk did you sit?—A. I was not more than three feet from the clerk.

Q. From the clerk who made the response?—A. Yes.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You were employed as an experienced accountant to go there and keep tally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went there and were known to be the accountant employed by the democratic committee for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir; I think that was generally known.

Q. Did you intend and try in every way to obtain the exact figures?—A. I did, sir; that was what I was there for.

Q. If you had misunderstood anything would you have requested them to repeat?—A. O, several times I did so; as did one or two of the others who did not understand.

Q. That is, if you had any question in your mind about a figure it was repeated and made certain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How certain are you that you have given us exactly what was called out from the board of canvassers; how certain do you feel that you have got their figures correctly?—A. O, I feel perfectly certain that my figures are correct. If there is anything wrong it is the fault of the ear; but I think I have got all the figures correctly.

Q. You say that two or three times you had occasion to ask for a repetition of the figures so as to make them certain?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How long did this mode of counting occupy, including these six counties?—A. It took two or three days.

Q. Which was it, two or three?—A. It was so long ago, and I did not charge my memory with it, that I cannot testify to that point particularly. I know it was so tedious that the chairman of the board declined to proceed any further in that way.

Q. Did he say that it would be impossible to go through counting the precincts in that way within the time fixed by law?—A. He may have said that, but I do not recollect. I know he said this: that he was going beyond the orders of the court in canvassing the precincts, and that following out the orders of the court he would only canvass the counties after he got through with Charleston County.

Q. I was going to ask you whether it was not because of the order of the supreme court that that course was taken?—A. Well, he took that as an excuse for going on with the counties afterward; at least, that was what was assumed by the opposition, that he took shelter behind the order of the court when he found these irregularities occurring in the precinct returns.

Q. If the county canvassers in the statements which they sent up included precinct returns which were not present at the office of the secretary of state, then the county canvassers' statements would give the vote of each county more accurately than it could be obtained by this manner of counting the precinct returns?

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is a matter of opinion.

Q. Do you know whether the precinct returns were coming in during the time they were counting, and even after they ceased this mode of counting?—A. Yes, sir; I know of one county after we commenced counting; I mean a full set of returns from one county.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that one of these six counties?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you not know as a matter of fact that where some of the precincts were out at the time of this count the secretary of state or some other officer did send out and get in the precinct returns?—A. I do not know, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Was that return that came in after the count began the county canvassers' return?—A. Yes, sir; from Kershaw County. It came through the county commissioners in regular form.

Q. I understood you to say that you were cashier of one of the banks here, and had been since 1867.—A. No, sir; I said I had been residing here since 1867.

Q. How long have you been cashier of a bank?—A. Since July, 1872.

Q. And your business is to keep all the accounts; or you have supervision of all the accounts of the bank.—A. Yes sir.

Q. Previous to being a cashier, what was your business?—A. Book-keeper in a banking-house in this city—the house of E. J. Scott & Son.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-four last April.

Q. And your business has been that of cashier in a banking-house for how long?—A. Since the fall of 1868. Previous to that I was chief clerk in the State treasurer's office for eighteen months.

Q. Where also, I suppose, your business was to keep books.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The cashier of a bank does not keep books at all, does he?

The WITNESS. Well, sir, our bank is a small concern, and I do pretty much all the work.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Were you paid anything for your services in taking down these figures?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not employed, then, for your skill as a book-keeper, but for your fidelity as a democrat?—A. That is all, sir.

Q. Did you volunteer to go there?—A. No, sir; I went by request. Mr. Le Compte came to me and said, "Mr. Walker, we want to get some accountant to go there and check the figures, and we cannot get anybody better than yourself."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Judge Lapham put a question to you a moment ago as to whether you were employed on account of your skill as a book-keeper or because of your fidelity as a democrat, and you said only on that account. Now, what do you mean by that answer?—A. My fidelity as a man, not as a democrat.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you think you would have been employed by the gentlemen who requested you to go there for that purpose if you had been a republican?—A. I would have gone there and recorded the votes as read out correctly.

Q. I am not questioning that; but do you not know that it was because you were a democrat that they employed you?—A. Well, of course, they wanted somebody to go there for them.

Q. Do you not know that it was because you were a democrat that you were requested to go?—A. Well, sir, I suppose so; I do not suppose they would have gone to a republican.

Q. You were the cashier of what bank?—A. The Union Bank.

Q. Is your bank one of the banks enjoined from paying the drafts of the treasurer?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Did you not understand that you were employed to go there, not particularly as a democrat, but as an experienced accountant?—A. Yes, sir; that was my understanding. I went there more on that account than anything else—to keep a correct count of the votes.

D. FRANK BRADLEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Question. In what county do you reside?—Answer. Pickens.

Q. What is your voting-precinct?—A. Pickens Court-House.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-four.

Q. How long have you resided in Pickens County?—A. With the exception of about eighteen months before the war, when I resided in Florida, I have resided all my life in Pickens County. I was born there.

Q. Did you act as messenger to deliver the votes from your county to the secretary of state?—A. I did.

Q. Were you present before the board of county canvassers when those votes were put up in a package?—A. I was.

Q. How were they put up?—A. The precinct managers' returns you have reference to?

Q. I have reference to what was put into the package; how it was secured, and so on.—A. The poll-lists and tally-sheets and reports of the precinct managers were put together, each precinct separately, and wrapped up in a paper. There are nine precincts in my county and they were all done up in the same way. They were then put one on top of another, and put in one paper and sealed with sealing-wax, in which condition they were delivered to me for the purpose of delivering them to the secretary of state.

Q. Did you deliver that package to the secretary of state?—A. I did.

Q. How soon after it was delivered into your custody?—A. I received it on Saturday evening, (I do not remember the day of the month, but it was on Saturday after the election I believe,) and I delivered it to the secretary of state on Monday following about 10 o'clock.

Q. When you delivered it to him was it in the same condition in which you had received it, sealed with sealing-wax and unbroken?—A. Yes, sir; precisely.

Q. Unbroken?—A. Unbroken.

Q. And, if I understand you correctly, it contained all the precinct returns?—A. That was my understanding from the board of county commissioners. They informed me that they were all in there, and I was sent as a messenger to deliver them.

Q. And you were present when they were done up?—A. I was.

Q. And saw them labeled?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Whether in fact all the precinct returns were in fact embodied in the bundle you are not positive?—A. Well, I have the assurances of those gentlemen.

Q. But have you a personal knowledge; you do not know?—A. No, I cannot say of my personal knowledge; that was my opinion.

Q. But, as a matter of fact, you are unable to state whether it was there or not?—A. As a matter of fact, I cannot state positively whether it was or not. As a matter of opinion, though, it would be a different thing.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. You are satisfied that they were all there?—A. I am satisfied of it in my own mind.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. I understood you to say that you saw the whole nine precincts, the managers' returns, labeled, each one?—A. I saw them labeling the precincts.

Q. Was there any question then and there made as to the absence of any managers' returns?—A. No, sir; none at all.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Do you know a gentleman named John R. Gossett?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. At Easley's Station, in Pickens County.

Q. Was he one of the managers?—A. They call them commissioners of election; he was one of them.

Q. Was he present at the time you received the package?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. I understood you to say that you were there when they were rolled up and sealed up, and that you were assured that they were the whole of them; and that you heard no question made as to the absence of any single precinct return?—A. Yes, sir; that was my understanding.

Q. They all told you so?—A. Yes, sir. I was told that they were all there.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Did you get a receipt from the secretary of state when you delivered the package?—A. I did.

Q. Have you got that receipt?—A. I have. I also have the appointment as messenger. (The appointment and receipt were read in evidence, as follows:)

" PICKENS COURT-HOUSE, S. C.,

" November 10, 1876.

" We, the undersigned commissioners of election, as a board of county canvassers for Pickens County, do hereby authorize and appoint D. Frank Bradley as messenger to convey the reports of commissioners of election of the aforesaid county, and all papers pertaining thereto, to Columbia, to be delivered to his excellency D. H. Chamberlain, governor, Secretary of State H. E. Hayne, and Comptroller-General T. C. Dunn.

"JEREMIAH LOOPER.

"JOHN R. GOSSETT.

"ALONZO L. FOLGER."

"EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

"I, H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, do hereby certify that Mr. D. Frank Bradley has this day delivered to me the election returns of Pickens County, and that his actual expenses as messenger as stated by him amount to twenty-five ($25) dollars.

"Given under my hand and the seal of the State, at Columbia, this 14th day of November, A. D. 1876, and in the one hundred and first year of American Independence.

[SEAL OF THE STATE.]

"H. E. HAYNE,

"Secretary of State."

Q. Was any one present when you delivered this package to Mr. Hayne?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. John R. Gossett, one of the county commissioners.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Where do you say you reside in Pickens County?—A. Pickens Court-House.

Q. How far is that from Central Station?—A. I believe it is fourteen miles.

Q. How far from Hurds?—A. About nine miles.

Q. Were you in either of those precincts upon election-day?—A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. Do you know whether any election was held at either of those precincts?—A. From information I do.

Q. Of your own knowledge?—A. Well, as a publisher of a paper there I published the notice of the commissioners that an election would be held.

Q. That is not the question.—A. Well, sir, I was not present.

Q. Do you know whether any of the managers' returns were in the hands of the county canvassers from either of those precincts?—A. I do, sir. I saw them.

Q. Who were they signed by?—A. I presume they were signed by the managers.

Q. I do not want your presumption.—A. I can give you the names of the managers at Central Station. I remember them. They were signed by James Peak, James A. Gaines, and Aaron Boggs.

Q. Did you see their signatures to the return?—A. Well, I am not positive that I saw them.

Q. I am only asking for what you know.—A. My recollection is that I did see them. The reason I say so is they asked me to assist in tallying—

Q. I do not ask your reason. Did you see the return from your own precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you swear that you saw the return from your own precinct in the hands of the county canvassers?—A. In the hands of the general canvassers?

Q. I mean the county officers who make the canvass.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that return signed?—A. I think it was.

Q. By whom?—A. It was signed by W. T. Bowen and Mr. Hughes—I forget his initials.

Q. Do you state that as a matter of memory, or do you merely reason that it was so? Do you remember that you saw their signatures upon the return?—A. Well, I remember this—

Q. No. I want you to answer my question.—A. I saw the tally-sheet. I remember that.

Q. I am not talking about the tally-sheet.—A. Well, I would not swear positively that I saw the signatures of those men.

Q. Do you not know that the return from your precinct was not signed by the managers?—A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You never have heard so?—A. No, sir. I would not swear positively that it was or was not. I base what I say upon the fact of running over their tally-sheet the next day.

Q. I am not asking about tally-sheets; I am asking about precinct-returns.—A. Well, I would not swear positively as to that.

Q. Have you any recollection that you saw it at all?—A. Only as to the tally-sheets and the poll-lists.

Q. That is not the return—I mean the managers' return?—A. I do not know what you call a return.

Q. I mean the managers' return. Do you say you do not know what is meant by a return?—A. I suppose it is the certificate of the managers. I do not know whether I saw that or not.

Q. Was that tally-list signed by those managers?—A. I do not remember whether it was or was not.

Q. Is it not your best recollection that it was not?—A. I presume the tally-list was not signed by the managers.

Q. Have you no memory about it?—A. No positive memory.

Q. What is your best recollection?—A. I could not be positive. My presumption is that it was not signed—the tally-list.

Q. I do not ask for presumption. What is your recollection as to whether the tally-sheets bore the signatures of the managers?—A. Well, I do not think it did. It is not probable at all that it did.

Q. What is your recollection as to whether there was any election-return from the managers of your precinct—any return of the result of the election?—A. I saw the tally-sheet, as I told you, and the poll-list. I would like to know definitely what you mean by "return."

Q. The law provides that the managers shall make and sign a return of the result of the election and send that return with the poll-list, or tally-sheet, as you term it, and the ballot-box to the county canvassers.

Mr. EDEN. The poll-list and the tally-sheet are two distinct things.

Mr. LAPHAM. I differ with you. Now, the only question I want the witness to answer is, whether he has any recollection of the return of the canvass in his district having been made and signed by the managers.

The WITNESS. No, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Were you employed in any capacity by this board of canvassers; did you assist them at all in their duties?—A. Yes; I was asked to be present and assist in tallying and counting up.

Q. Your attention was therefore more particularly called to the products, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1876.

The committee met at 10 a. m.; all the members present.

G. M. WALKER recalled.

The WITNESS. I wish to make an explanation in regard to a point in my testimony given yesterday. In reply to a question by Judge Lawrence as to what time it took to canvass the returns of the six counties by precincts, I said it took two or three days. He asked me if the time was not two days, and I said I did not know; that I could not testify particularly upon that point; but since then I have thought the matter over, and I wish to state that when I said three days I had reference to the time spent in the whole canvass—to my whole time in the office there, which included not only the canvassing of the returns for electors, but also the canvassing of the returns for governor and lieutenant-governor. The time occupied in canvassing the returns for electors was not more than a half a day, with several intermissions.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Do you remember what time of day you began the count?—Answer. I went down there at one o'clock in the day on Friday, and I suppose it was a little before two when we commenced to count.

Q. Do you remember at what time you had completed the count of Charleston County, the last of these six?—A. That was in the evening, after eight o'clock, after the recess for supper, probably about ten o'clock, and then a few more counties were taken up after that.

Q. You are confident, however, that that was done during that evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say, then, that these six counties were completed, and other work was done during that evening?—A. Several more counties were canvassed by counties that evening.

By Judge LAWRENCE :

Q. Was that the evening of the first day?—A. The evening of the first day. The completion of the return of the electors by counties was reached the next day, about half past two.

Q. You began, you say, about two o'clock. Between that and the time of your adjournment, how much time did you take in the way of recess?—A. We must have got to work before two o'clock, because we adjourned a little after two for dinner, and came back at four, and worked until a little after six, and came back again at eight, and adjourned that evening at eleven or 11.30.

Q. So that in that time there were about four hours that you were not engaged at work?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do I understand that the six counties were finished by precincts on the evening of the first day?—A. Yes, sir; by 11.30 o'clock on the evening of the first day, with perhaps a half a dozen additional counties canvassed by counties—to Georgetown County.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Do I understand that you began with the vote of Abbeville and canvassed the electoral vote only?—A. Yes, sir; we began a little after one o'clock, I think.

Q. When was the State ticket of that county canvassed?—A. That was canvassed separately, I suppose immediately after we got through the electoral vote.

Q. You took the county and went through the canvass of the electoral vote and the State vote?—A. No, sir; we canvassed all the electoral votes first throughout the whole State.

Q. You only went through six counties by precincts?—A. Yes, sir; we completed the canvass of the balance by counties, not by precincts.

Q. I am speaking of a canvass of the managers' returns, about which you testified yesterday?—A. The State ticket we did not canvass by managers' returns; I do not think we did.

Q. Are you not mistaken?—A. I do not think I am.

Q. Do you not know that when you took up the first county in alphabetical order you went through the entire canvass of that county, according to the managers' returns?—A. Just for the electors. The State returns were on a separate piece of paper entirely.

Q. That may be so; but did you drop a county when you had canvassed the electoral vote alone, and then go back to the county again and canvass for the State ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is according to your recollection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you quite certain that that was so?—A. I am certain of it, sir.

Q. When did you finish Charleston?—A. It was commenced after our evening session.

Q. I mean when did you finish the entire canvass of the vote of Charleston County; when did you cease to do anything in the canvassing of that county?—A. After the commencement of our evening session, probably about nine or ten o'clock.

Q. I think you do not understand my question. There was some period when you stopped canvassing the managers' returns?—A. Yes.

Q. When was that?—A. That was on the evening of the first, about nine or ten o'clock.

Q. Then there was only one day spent on managers' returns?—A. Only one day.

Q. Did you say you were mistaken in saying yesterday that it took two or three days?—A. Yes.

Q. You now state that only a part of one day was devoted to canvassing returns?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. That is in connection with the electoral vote?

Mr. LAPHAM. No, sir; he does not limit it to any vote.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. I want to know how long you were engaged in canvassing the managers' returns for any vote whatever?—A. Well, we only canvassed the managers' returns for the electoral vote.

Q. And that was all done the first afternoon and evening?—A. Yes, sir, by not later than half past 11 o'clock. We did not canvass any managers' returns for the State election; we merely took the county canvassers.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You were not called to witness the canvass of any of the State returns?—A. Yes, sir; I was there to take a count of all the votes.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

JOHN L. YOUNG sworn and examined.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In the town of Union, Union County, South Carolina. I have resided there about thirty-six years; my age is fifty-six.

Q. What is your voting-precinct?—A. Union.

Q. Were you one of the managers at that precinct in the last election?—A. I was.

Q. Were you present before the board of county canvassers when they aggregated the vote for electors and others?—A. I was.

Q. Did you assist them in their labors in that direction?—A. I did.

Q. What did you do?—A. I helped to tabulate the vote. We got all the managers' returns before us, and got a large sheet of paper and put down the various names, and then took each precinct down the left-hand column, and carried the figures along in the different columns, and when we got them all down we added them up.

Q. How many precincts are there in Union County?—A. Fifteen.

Q. Who were the county canvassers?—A. James H. Goss, F. M. Farr, and Charles McJunkin.

Q. How soon after the election did the board count the returns?—A. It was a few days after—within the time that the law prescribed; I do not remember whether it was one, two, or three days.

Q. Where did they meet?—A. In the probate office at Union court-house.

Q. State whether all the precinct managers' returns from the county were there before the board of canvassers.—A. They were.

Q. There is a precinct in your county known as Hughes's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also one known as Wilkinsville?—A. Yes.

Q. Were the returns from those precincts before the board?—A. They were.

Q. What time did you get through with your count?—A. It was after midnight. I recollect that our candles gave out about the time that we finished.

Q. Did the board of canvassers have a clerk?—A. Yes, sir; William Hill.

Q. What was done with the canvassers' returns and the managers' returns, the poll-lists and other papers pertaining to the election?—A. It is my recollection that about the time that we had finished this statement and made out the papers, the three duplicates as required by law, the light gave out, and it is my recollection that we agreed to adjourn, and Mr. Hill was to make up the bundle into a package. I did not have an envelope in the office large enough, and he was to make up the package and Mr. Byron was to bring it to the proper officer to receive it here. I do not recollect whether that was the secretary of state or the governor—whoever was the proper officer appointed by law. I did not see the package made up for the reason I have stated; it was so late we could not get into any stores to get candles, and our candles had given out, and we had done everything we could do except make up the package, and he was to get up next morning and do that by the time the train came down, so as to allow Mr. Byron, who was to be the messenger, to get off with the returns to Columbia.

Q. Mr. Byron was to act as messenger?—A. Yes; and he was also chairman of the precinct at Union.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. What was the aggregate vote on electors from all the managers' returns?—A. (Referring to a paper.) The whole number of votes cast by white persons was 2,113, the whole number of votes cast by colored persons was 2,159, making a total of 4,272.

Q. If there is no special difference between the votes of the different electors you may give only the vote for the head of each ticket.—A. The whole number of votes for Presidential electors was 4,272, of which Barker received 2,461, and the corresponding candidate on the republican side, Mr. Bowen, received 1,810.

Q. Was the vote the same for all the republican and for all the democratic electors as for the heads of the different tickets?—A. There may be a vote or two difference in some cases.

Q. That statement gives the aggregation of the managers' returns from every precinct in the county?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you see the return for the Wilkinsville precinct?—A. Yes, sir; it was before us on the table.

Q. Do you know of your knowledge whether it was signed by all the proper officers?—A. Not of my own knowledge; I do not recollect.

Q. You cannot state whether it was regular in form or not?—A. It is my recollection that all the papers were regular.

Q. You are not able to state whether that paper was regular in form or not, I suppose?—A. No, sir; I was not called on to examine the returns in that way. I was simply called on as an expert in making out tabular statements. The canvassers were supposed to look to that matter and see that everything was right and proper, and that was put before us as being one of the returns, and we tabulated it from the returns that were on the table.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. The county canvass of the county commissioners which you helped to make embraced the canvass of the votes by precincts, or did it state simply the aggregate?—A. The county canvassers, as I understood, were appointed to take up and tabulate all the precincts.

Q. But did they incorporate in their return the vote by precincts or simply the aggregate?—A. The aggregate.

Q. That did not give the precinct votes?—A. The aggregates, as taken from the precincts.

Q. They compute from the precinct returns and report the aggregate vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The aggregate return by the county canvass was the number you have given, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. And it included Wilkinsville?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is the same number that is set forth in the State canvass, is it not?—A. I have not seen the State canvass.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether the Wilkinsville managers' return was ever sent here?—A. No, sir; I do not know that fact. I cannot state that as a fact.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 11, 1876.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In the town of Beaufort, Beaufort County. I have lived there all my life, with the exception that I was absent during the war.

Q. Were you present at the time the votes were canvassed by the county commissioners?—

A. Yes, sir; at the time the managers' returns were canvassed by them.

Q. You were there during all the time that the votes were canvassed?—A. Except during a short interval.

Q. Were you there when the result was obtained?—A. Yes, sir, I was there, and I took down the votes from nearly all the precincts as announced from the managers' returns.

Q. Turn on your memorandum to Beach Branch, and see if you can tell us whether there were managers' returns from that precinct.—A. I have no recollection of Beach Branch specially; but the managers' returns from the various precincts were taken up by the board of canvassers and the returns called off, and I took them down as they were called.

Q. Have you the result of Beach Branch?—A. I have the result of Beach Branch. It is the first precinct on my list.

Q. The first one that was called?—A. They did not take them up alphabetically, but I arranged them so.

Q. Give us the result for presidential electors at Beach Branch.—A. I took only the vote for highest elector on each ticket. For the highest democratic elector the vote was 74, and for the highest republican 21.

Q. And that, I understand you to say, was taken from the managers' returns as they were called off?—A. They called off the managers' returns. The commissioners did not consider themselves bound by the managers' returns, and their return differed in several material respects from the managers' return.

Q. But they called off from the managers' return?—A. They did. There was no difference at that precinct.

Q. Were those papers, so far as you know, sent to the secretary of state?

Mr. LAPHAM objected to the question on the ground that it assumed that the witness had some knowledge on the subject.

The WITNESS. I know this about it. I found it very difficult to keep posted as to the meetings of the board of county commissioners. They met first of all on the night of Friday succeeding the day of the election. They met at 8 o'clock in the evening, and I had a notice, I suppose, of about twenty minutes.

Q. State only what you know about the returns being sent in to the secretary of state.—

A. Well, what I was stating would lead up to that; but I can state it in another form. I saw the secretary on the morning of the Sunday succeeding the election, and he told me that he was then making up the returns—

Mr. LAPHAM objected to the witness stating what had been told him.

The WITNESS. That is all the information I have about this subject specially. I know that the chairman of the board came to Columbia with the proper papers.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You do not know about their all being properly put in the package?—A. Not of my own knowledge; nothing but what I heard from the president of the board.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. When did you make the statement to which you have been testifying here?—A. At the time the votes were called off.

Q. You were not present during the whole of the canvass?—A. I was not present at the commencement of it. That is what I was about to state just now, that I did not have sufficient notice. I went there and had to go away for a time.

Q. Have you got the canvass of the managers' returns as the county commissioners finally settled it?—A. I have it according to the tabulated statement made out by them at the meeting, and when they closed the canvass I compared with them, and my statement that I now have corresponds exactly with theirs.

Q. They made a report of the aggregates?—A. They made a report of the aggregates only.

Q. Have you that?—A. I have not. I do not know what they reported.

Q. Then you have not a copy of the aggregate as they report it in their returns?—A. No, sir, not according to their report; but they told me that it was exactly as the tabulated statement made it out.

Q. What is the aggregate as you have it from the statement made there?

Mr. ABBOTT. I understand the witness to say that he compared his statement with the county canvassers' returns, and that it was the same.

Mr. LAPHAM. He said exactly the reverse.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the witness state it again.

The WITNESS. They made out a tabular statement, according to precincts and the officers voted for, corresponding pretty much to this.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. But they made their returns in gross?—A. In gross, I presume, of course. I have never seen it.

Q. You have not a copy of that return?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. What is the aggregate, as you have it, from the tabular statement? Give the aggregate for one elector on each side.—A. The aggregate, as I have it, is for the highest republican elector 7,574, and for the highest democratic elector 2,250.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. This is the aggregate as made by the county canvassers?—A. Yes, sir; as made by them.

Q. The vote you have given is the highest vote for any of the electors?—A. Yes, sir; on either side.

Q. There were a few of the electors who had a small number of votes less?—A. I am not sure about that. I only took down the highest on each side.

Q. Was the county commissioners' statement which was forwarded to the secretary of state signed by all the proper officers?—A. I was not present, sir, when they were signed.

Q. Was there any controversy among the county commissioners or any disagreement in summing up the result?—A. Not in summing it up. There was a good deal of discussion as to what they should enter upon their tabular statement. For instance, they undertook to change the managers' returns where they thought there were clerical errors.

Q. They finally all agreed in making up their statements?—A. So far as I know they did, sir; that is, in adding up the columns. There was a good deal of discussion as to what the vote at several of the precincts should be announced. At several precincts there were electors whose names were omitted from the managers' returns; but the board of county canvassers in all cases opened the boxes and examined the ballots.

Q. And corrected any clerical omissions in the managers' returns by the ballots themselves?—A. Yes, sir; they made changes to what they considered to be the correct figures. At one of the precincts, for instance, the name of one of the republican electors was omitted entirely; — Johnston was omitted entirely. That was at the Brick Church precinct. Johnston's name was omitted, and Barker, one of the democratic electors, had a vote given him of 716. The canvassers opened that box and counted the ballots, and, upon finding, as they said, the ballots really cast for Johnston, they gave him 719 and gave Barker only 16.

Q. Just as the ballots were in the box?—A. As the ballots were then found to be in the box. I have a memorandum of that statement.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you say here, in answer to Judge Lapham, that those aggregates that you obtained were compared by you with the aggregates of the county commissioners?—A. I did, sir; they were compared with their tabular statement.

Q. And their aggregate statement?—A. When they were going to make up their return, I compared with them, and where we differed we added up the columns anew until we found them to be correct.

Q. So that your aggregates were compared with theirs?—A. Yes, sir. Three or four precincts were canvassed at the meetings of the board when I was not present, and I took from the clerk of the board his statement of the vote at those precincts. I compared my statement with theirs, after they had closed the canvass, before they made up their statement.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You speak of having been absent from the county; how long were you absent?—A. During the war that town was in possession of the United States troops, and I was absent in the Southern army.

Q. In what part?—A. I was in the army of Northern Virginia until January, 1863, and at Vicksburgh until the surrender; then in the department of Alabama, Mississippi, and East Louisiana until July, 1864, when I went to Atlanta and joined General Hood's army, and remained in that army until the battle of Bentonville.

Mr. Abbott objected to going into the history of the witness, unless the design was to affect his testimony by proof of his character, and the examination ended here.

Adjourned.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

The committee met at 10 a. m., all the members present.

ROBERT R. HEMPHILL sworn examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Abbeville, in Abbeville County.

Q. You have resided there how long?—A. I was born in that county, and I have resided there latterly until 1870.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-six.

Q. Your business?—A. I am a lawyer and editor of a newspaper.

Q. What has been the politics of your paper?—A. It was started as an independent journal.

Q. During the last election you were for Hampton, I believe?—A. Yes, sir; I supported Governor Hampton, and was myself elected to the legislature on that ticket.

Q. Are you familiar with the Magnolia poll?—A. I know the place and the neighborhood.

Q. How far is it from Abbeville?—A. Between six and eight miles.

Q. Is the town of Abbeville one of the nearest polling-places to Magnolia?—A. Abbeville, I think, is the nearest.

Q. Do you know whether any poll was held at Magnolia at the late election?—A. There was no poll held there. I know that from parties who lived in that neighborhood coming in to vote at Abbeville Court-House.

Q. Do you know of any large number of voters coming from the Magnolia precinct to Abbeville?—A. Yes, sir; I know that they did come from that neighborhood.

Q. How large a number?—A. They came in a crowd toward the middle of the day. I counted 250 myself.

Q. Those that you counted you knew, or were satisfied, were from the Magnolia district?—A. I knew where they resided, and knew that it was in that neighborhood.

Q. Describe the manner in which the people came; whether they came in a large body, and whether noisily, or otherwise?—A. They came in a large body. They were headed by a colored preacher; Calter, I think, is his name, and they were shouting and seemed to be jubilant.

Q. In which direction did they come?—A. They came in on the Lowndesville road, the main street of the town.

Q. Did they have anything with them?—A. They had their walking-canes.

Q. What sort of walking-canes?—A. Common sticks, cut in the woods.

Q. What were they shouting about?—A. They were hurraing for Chamberlain and Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. Did they all vote at the same time?—A. They passed by the court-house. I stood on the main street and saw them pass the court-house, and they went on over to the school-house.

Q. That is called Abbeville No. 2?—A. Yes, sir; Abbeville No. 2—the African church. They went over in that direction.

Q. Did they vote there?—A. I never saw any of them vote. I didn't go there myself; I voted at No. 1.

Q. How far apart were those two precincts?—A. In a direct line, about three hundred yards.

Q. You published in your paper, I believe, the result of the vote at Abbeville No. 2?—A. Yes, sir. I published that from a copy of the statement made by the clerk of the board of canvassers.

Q. I read from the paper the vote at Abbeville No. 2: Bowen, 432, and 10 for the corresponding candidate on the other side. What has been the usual vote at that precinct at previous elections?—A. Do you want the aggregate?

Q. Yes. I want to see how this compares with the former vote.—A. In 1874, the total vote at Abbeville No. 2 was 99, and in 1876 it was four hundred and odd.

Q. What was it in 1870?—A. I do not know what it was in 1870, but in 1874 it was 99 at the African church, or Abbeville No. 2, as it is called now. That really was not an advertised polling-place until the last election.

Q. What was the vote in 1872?—A. Three hundred and forty-nine.

Q. Can you give the division of the vote by parties?—A. Really, there was no party at that election. Green and Chamberlain were the candidates. In 1874 the vote was 91 for Chamberlain and 8 for Green, and in 1872 I put it down as white and colored, 16 white and 33 colored votes. I did not divide the vote between the parties.

Q. Are you a member of the rifle club there?—A. I organized the first rifle club in the up-country, and I was solicitor for it until disbanded.

Q. You were at the head of it?—A. I was at the head of it until the second election of officers; I then became solicitor for it.

Q. When was it organized?—A. I think it was on the 26th of May, 1875, that I organized the Abbeville Rifle Club with the consent of Governor Chamberlain.

Q. Have you his consent in writing?—A. I have not got it here, but I have it in writing.

Q. Can you give it to us?—A. I can get it for you from home.

Q. Was the governor a member of your rifle club?—A. He treated us so kindly about the organization that we elected him an honorary member and he accepted it.

Q. Have you that acceptance?—A. Yes; I can produce it as soon as I can hear from home.

Mr. LAPHAM. Is this going into the State election, Judge Abbott?

Mr. ABBOTT. No, sir. I suppose it affects all the elections, if it affects any.

Q. When did you cease your drilling?—A. We had discontinued our drilling before Governor Chamberlain issued a proclamation in regard to it. We only had business-meetings once a month.

Q. How was the club made up?—A. It was made up of the clerks and boys about town, and some printers. There were only two soldiers in it, myself and another. I had been through the war on the confederate side, and the orderly sergeant had been in a Pennsylvania regiment from Reading.

Q. Was he the teacher of a colored school?—A. Yes, sir. There was no political significance in the matter at all. Our probate judge was an honorary member of the club, and his clerk was our ensign.

Q. The probate judge was also a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the clerk?—A. Really, I do not know what his politics were. He is an Austrian. I held appointments under Governors Scott, Moses, and Chamberlain. I was trial-justice there for five years.

Q. You received that appointment under all three?—A. It was continued under them all.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. How does the vote which you have given correspond with that which appears in the returns as made up in the office of the secretary of state?—A. I have never had the privilege of seeing the returns there. I took this from the report of the clerk of the board of county canvassers.

Q. Then you do not know what the vote was in 1876?—A. Yes, I could tell you what it was. I took it from that copy given me by the clerk of the board.

Q. You do not know from any official paper?—A. No, sir; not officially, except that I know that the board of canvassers certified to this statement of it.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. What was Magnolia called formerly?—A. There were two precincts out there. One was called Reilly's and the other Warren.

Q. So that there was never a voting-place before by the name of Magnolia?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear or see anybody interfere with those two hundred and fifty people that you counted who came into town hurrahing, as you have described?—A. I never saw any interference with them, except that we gave them some tickets to vote.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Did the colored men interfere with anybody else?—A. No; they just cursed us.

Q. They did what?—A. They cursed and rammed around there. They didn't do anything that frightened us, though. The women did worse than the men.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. What did they do?—A. Well, they would jump up in their dances and abuse the colored men of our party; pull up their dresses and shake their feet at them; rather a lewd exhibition.

Q. What was the general effect of that operation?—A. Well, it didn't have any particular effect that I know.

Q. Did they make any threats?—A. No; I did not hear them make any threats.

Q. I mean the women?—A. Well, I heard one colored woman swear that her husband should not stay with her any more; that she would never sleep with a d—d democrat.

Q. There were no other threats than that?—A. No; they didn't threaten to kill anybody that I heard.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. You say you have held appointments under Scott and Chamberlain?—A. Yes, sir; I was just continued under Chamberlain; I voted for Scott as against Carpenter.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. The office which you held corresponds to justice of the peace in the other States?—A. Yes.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Is there a rifle club in your precinct now?—A. No, sir; we disbanded some time ago.

Q. When did you disband?—A. As soon as Chamberlain issued his proclamation we telegraphed to him—

Q. Where are your arms?—A. Our arms are private. They still belong to the different members of the club.

Q. Then you still retain your arms?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Does each arm belong to each individual member?—Yes, sir.

Q. They do not belong to the State or to any organized body?—A. No, sir; we bought them ourselves, condemned Springfield rifles. I might add for the information of the committee that I was elected coroner on the republican ticket in 1874.

Q. As a republican or democrat?—A. I suppose it was on my personal popularity.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. You say you have served under Chamberlain, Scott, and Moses?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Were you ever called on to officiate during your term as coroner?—A. Yes, sir; three or four times.

Q. In the cases of white or colored men?—A. I was called to officiate in the case of two white men and several colored men, perhaps three.

Q. Do you remember the cause of death in those cases?—A. One of the white men, Tolbert, was killed on account of a personal difficulty about a load of plank. The other white man was accidentally shot at a wedding party. One of the colored boys was drinking, and fell on the road-side and froze to death. Another colored man got into a personal difficulty about his wife, and was stabbed by a man of his own color. Then I held an inquest on a man named Nash, who got into a personal difficulty with some white men and boys, and got shot.

Q. When was that?—A. It was in 1871, I think; about the 6th or 12th of February.

Q. What years did you hold the office of coroner?—A. I acted in that case as coroner; the coroner was unwell and could not come.

Q. What were the years in which you were coroner?—A. I held the office of coroner from 1872 to 1874.

Q. My question was, whether during your term of office you were called upon to officiate as coroner?—A. Well, I held an inquest on Tolbert, the white man that was killed about a load of plank, when I was coroner. I generally acted as coroner, because the coroner was a feeble man.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. The cases you have stated are all the cases in which you acted as coroner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were cases arising from personal difficulties, and having no political significance?—A. Those are all I can now recollect.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. There have not been any political riots in Abbeville?—A. There has not been a man killed in Abbeville—

Q. There has been no political riot there, has there?—A. No, sir; none.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You were going to state no men had been killed there?—A. There have been no men killed there since 1870, that I know of.

Q. And no riot?—A. No riot.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 15, 1876:

JAMES M. BRAWLEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Chester; Chetter County. I was born and raised there. I have resided out of the county for some time, but that is my home. I am thirty years of age.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am county auditor.

Q. Did you hold any official position during the last election?—A. Yes; clerk of the board of commissioners of election.

Q. Were you present when the board of canvassers of the county canvassed the vote?—Yes, sir.

Q. How many precincts are there in your county?—A. Eleven.

Q. Were all of the precinct managers' reports or certificates before the board of county canvassers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a precinct in your county known as Boyd's Store?—A. There is.

Q. Was the managers' return from that precinct before your board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you assist the board in your capacity of clerk; what were your duties?—A. They first took the managers' returns, and examined them, in the first place, to see that they were thoroughly according to law, signed, &c., and then the vote for each man was called out, and then I took down the vote, as clerk.

Q. You therefore took down the vote at Boyd's Store precinct as called out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect what that vote was?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us the highest vote for electors on both sides?—A. The highest republican elector received 204 votes, and the highest democratic 209.

Q. After the votes had been counted and the certificate of returns made up by the county canvassers, what was done with the election papers?—A. The board appointed me a messenger to carry the papers to Columbia.

Q. Was there a package of them made up in your presence?—A. Yes, sir; in the presence of the entire board and myself.

Q. Were the managers' returns from all the precincts placed in that package?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the bundle fastened in any way?—A. It was tied with a string, a heavy twine; there was no other fastening.

Q. Was it sealed?—A. No; not sealed.

Q. Was that package handed immediately to you?—A. No, sir; not at once.

Q. Who retained it?—A. The chairman of the board.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Yocum.

Q. Until when did he retain it?—A. A few hours; he placed it in his safe.

Q. Was he a democrat or a republican?—A. A republican.

Q. You say he placed it in his safe?—A. I think he did. I am sure I saw him do it.

Q. And a few hours afterward he handed it to you?—A. Yes, sir; the board adjourned until that time to receive a protest or contest of election, and at that time they convened again and handed me this package.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What about that protest?—A. I say they waited to receive some papers that were necessary to accompany the returns.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Did those papers accompany it?—A. Yes, sir; there was a notice of protest.

Q. That protest was presented when the board again met, and it accompanied the papers that were sent up?—A. Yes, sir; the protest was by the democrats.

Q. When that protest was received was the bundle then handed to you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you deliver that bundle to the secretary of state?—A. I did.

Q. When?—A. On the third day after the election.

Q. How long after you got it?—A. I got it that night and I delivered it the next morning. The election was on Tuesday, and I delivered it Friday morning.

Q. Did you deliver the bundle in the same condition as when you received it?—A. Precisely.

Q. [Showing witness a paper.] Is that a correct copy of the returns from your precinct?—A. Yes; that is correct. I see the difference is only four there; I thought it was five. The figures are 4 and 8, instead of 4 and 9, as I thought.

Q. This paper shows the highest democrat to have received 208 votes, and the highest republican 204?—A. Yes, sir; it was a general vote; I think all the presidential electors on each side received the same.

Q. Do you know whether these signatures to the paper are the signatures of the officials?—A. Yes, sir; those are the signatures.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How many protests were made or filed?—A. Only one, I think.

Q. By whom was that made?—A. By a committee of democrats.

Q. It was a democratic protest, then?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that carried to the secretary of state separately or was it put in the bundle?—A. It was not in the bundle of returns at all, but it was in a package rolled up in connection with that; the two were rolled in a paper; they were not together; these returns were tied with a single string; they were distinct and separate.

Q. But they were sent together?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know in whose handwriting it is?—A. Do you mean the signatures?

Q. I mean the whole writing.—A. No, sir; I do not know the body of the writing.

Q. Do you know the handwriting in the certificate?—A. Yes, sir. The handwriting of the certificate is that of W. A. Walker, one of the commissioners of election.

Q. A republican or a democrat?—A. He is a democrat.

Q. Whose is the other signature?—A. Mr. Yocums; he is county treasurer and also chairman of the board.

Q. He was not one of the managers of the precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Neither of these gentlemen is a manager of the precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know by whom that copy was made?—A. No, sir; it is not my writing.

Q. Was it made by any member of the board of county canvassers?—A. I think not.

Q. Then it is not the handwriting of any member of the board, nor of the clerk?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know in whose writing it is, nor when, nor where it was made?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you know of any copies of the returns being made at the time of the canvass?—A. No, sir; none were made that I know of.

Q. You do not know that that is a copy?—A. I just know from the figures.

Q. But you do not know that it is a copy?—A. No; I do not know that it is a copy at all; I simply know the certificate and the handwriting of the gentleman.

Q. I think I understood you to say that there were no copies of managers' returns made or kept by the board of county canvassers?—A. No, sir; they were forwarded here.

Q. And no copies were made by the board?—A. No, sir; no copies were made by myself or the board.

Q. Have you the aggregate vote of the county?—A. No, I haven't it with me; I have it at home or in the treasurer's office.

Q. Can you state it from recollection; the vote for the respective parties?—A. I cannot. Do you mean each person voted for?

Q. Yes, or the vote for one on each side.—A. The difference between Governor Chamberlain's vote and Hampton's, was 300; that was Chamberlain's majority.

Q. What was the majority on the electors?—A. For the electors the vote was not so much.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. I think you want to make a correction of your testimony. You stated that at this precinct the figures were 200.—A. The figures were 208 instead of 200.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. You spoke about a protest being sent up; do you know what precinct that protest referred to?—A. It had reference to a precinct altogether different from this; Lowreysville and Chester precinct also. I have no official knowledge of it; I simply heard of it.

Q. You brought that protest with you and delivered it to the secretary of state?—A. Yes.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Did you ever see this paper before it was submitted to you here now?—A. No.

Q. You do not undertake to say, if I correctly understand you, that the board of county canvassers, or one of them, might not have made this paper out at the time of the canvass, and you not know it?—A. No, they might have done it.

Q. You simply say that you have no knowledge of it?—A. That I did not see it made.

Q. I find upon this the following certificate:

"SOUTH CAROLINA,

"County of Chester:

"The above is a statement of the returns of the managers of Boyd's-store precinct, taken from the manuscript retained by the board of commissioners of election for said county; the original of which was forwarded to the board of State canvassers, with all other papers relating to the election, as the law required.

"B. G. YOCUM,

"W. A. WALKER,

"Commissioners for Chester County.

"December 12, 1876."

Now, I do not understand you as saying that that certificate does not contain a true statement of facts?—A. It contains a thoroughly true statement, because this large blank on which I made out the sum total I left in the office of the treasurer, Mr. Yocum, who is also chairman of the board of commissioners.

Q. Mr. Yocum, the chairman of the board, is a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this is his signature?—A. Yes.

Mr. Lapham inquired from what source this paper had reached the committee. The chairman replied that it had been left with one of the clerks in his room in his absence, and that the person who brought it had informed the clerk that it had been sent by some gentleman connected with the State democratic executive committee.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The managers' return from this precinct might have been accidentally left out without your knowing it?—A. I do not see where or how it could have been left out, sir; but of course I could not swear to that.

Q. Can you state of your own knowledge that you saw Boyd's-store precinct returns in that package?—A. I saw it put in there.

Q. Are you sure?—A. I am very sure; whether it was afterward taken out I cannot say.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. The package was made up in your presence?—A. In my presence.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

JOHN R. GOSSETT sworn and examined.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Pickens County.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. I was born and reared there, and have resided there all the time, except during the war and about ten years when I was a boy, which I spent in Greenville. I am now in my forty-sixth year.

Q. Were you one of the board of canvassers for Pickens County?—A. I was.

Q. Who was chairman of the board?—A. Jeremiah Looper.

Q. How many precincts are there in that county?—A. Nine.

Q. Were all the precinct managers' returns from the various precincts before that board?—A. They were.

Q. How was the precinct named "J. J. Hurds," returned by the managers?—A. In the name of J. J. Hurds. The box that contained the tickets has marked upon it the name "Hurricane," which never had been changed, but the county canvassers received it of course as "J. J. Hurds."

Q. How was it returned?—A. It was returned as Hurricane, as I have told you, because the box had that old mark upon it. Hurricane and J. J. Hurds are the same place.

Q. Have you a precinct in your county known as Central Station?—A. We have.

Q. Were the managers' returns from that precinct before the board of canvassers?—A. They certainly were.

Q. After your board had concluded its labors, what was done with the poll-lists, managers' returns, &c.?—A. The returns by the managers for each of the precincts were folded up carefully and a slip of paper pasted around them, and on each return was written the name of the precinct; after that was done they were all bundled up in a package together and sealed up carefully and given to the messenger to bring to the secretary of state, and the messenger was Mr. Bradley.

Q. Among the managers' returns that were included in that package and handed to Bradley, were the returns from Central Station and J. J. Hurds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what the vote was at J. J. Hurds?—A. I do not distinctly; it was, I think, in the neighborhood of a hundred, but I won't be positive.

Q. How about Central Station?—A. The Central Station vote was perhaps in the neighborhood of 400—from three to four hundred. Hurds box, I remember, was nearly or quite unanimously democratic.

Q. I see by the certified copy of the return that the democratic electors seem to have received 134 votes each, and the republican electors one vote each.—A. Well, I know that it was unanimous, or nearly so, but I would not undertake to state positively from recollection what the vote was.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Were there no papers sent to the secretary of state from your county by a registered letter through the mail?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. You have no recollection of a registered letter containing a portion of the papers used in the canvass was sent to the secretary of state?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of such a thing. Two reports of the county canvassers which the law required to be made, were sent to him by mail, but not registered, at least there was no instruction to have them registered. If there were any registered papers sent I know nothing about it.

Q. You were not the chairman, I understand?—A. No, sir; I was not the chairman, but I say that I know nothing about it if there was such a thing sent.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, what was included in the papers that were sent by mail?—A. The poll-lists and the returns of the managers.

Q. What poll-lists?—A. The poll-lists of the various precincts.

Q. They were sent by mail?—A. No, sir; they were sent by messenger.

Q. What was sent by mail, I asked you?—A. The report of the county canvassers.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, what was embraced in the package that was sent by mail?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you inclose the package yourself?—A. I bound the papers up in the package myself.

Q. And directed them to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir; I directed them to the secretary of state.

Q. Do you know of more than one package being sent by mail from that county to the secretary of state, more than one package or letter?—A. No, sir; I do not know of but one letter, and that contained two of our reports; that was sent through the mail.

Q. In an envelope?—A. No; I think not. We got some envelopes and they proved to be too small, and we took two sheets of paper and inclosed the reports.

Q. Well, that formed an envelope, and it was sent as a letter?—A. Yes, sir; and postage paid on it.

Q. What did you say the vote at Central Station was, according to your recollection?—A. I told you that it was somewhere between three and four hundred, but I did not speak positively about it. My recollection does not serve me distinctly enough to give a positive statement of it.

Q. Do you remember what the vote in the county was on either side?—A. I think it was about 1,800 on an average, on the democratic side, and somewhere between 400 and 500 on the other side. That is my recollection of it, but it may have been a little more, perhaps.

Q. How were the three or four hundred votes at Central Station divided?—A. I think here were about fifty republican votes at Central Station and the balance would be democratic.

Q. About what was the democratic vote, according to your recollection?—A. I think it was somewhere over 300.

Q. How were these several precinct returns put into the package?—A. They were all put together and folded up carefully. Then a piece of paper was placed around the entire bundle and the name of the precinct indorsed on the back.

Q. That is the separate managers' returns; but how were they put into a package to be sent here?—A. They were all put together and a piece of paper bound around the whole bundle. The bundle was tied and sealed with sealing-wax.

Q. On the same day that that was done, was there a package sent by mail to the secretary of state?—A. If there was I do not know anything about it.

Q. Well, was the package containing your returns sent to the secretary of state?—A. On the same day that we gave that package to the messenger to start with, our two returns which the law requires were sent to the secretary of state by mail.

Q. Then there was a package sent by mail on the same day that you delivered the package to Bradley, the messenger?—A. Yes, sir; it went off on the same train with him.

Q. Which package, you say, only contained the county canvassers' returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say it was not a registered package, not sent as a registered letter?—A. No, sir; that was sent in that way. It was without our authority.

Q. Did you send it?—A. I gave it to the postmaster myself.

Q. Do you remember what the postage on it was?—A. I do not.

Q. Nor who paid it?—A. I paid it myself.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

A. L. COBB sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In the city of Greenville, Greenville County; I have lived there since 1854; I am county treasurer of that county at the present time.

Q. Appointed by Chamberlain, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position did you occupy in reference to the canvassing of the vote; were you one of the county canvassers?—A. I was one of the commissioners of election.

Q. You were not a manager, but a commissioner to canvass the precinct returns?—A. We made up the general return from the different managers.

Q. When you made up that return had you before you returns from the different precincts in the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from all the different precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From Yergan's?—A. Well, I am perfectly satisfied that we had.

Q. What was done with the return from Yergan's when you got through canvassing?—A. I do not exactly recollect all the precincts in the county, but I know there is one called Yergan's.

Q. Taking that return with the rest, what did you do with it?—A. We got them all up, the other two commissioners and myself, into a room, and we examined the law as we understood it. We did not count over the votes; we had the managers' returns and the poll-lists, and we took their statement of it and made it into a general return; we consolidated the returns, and then they were sealed up by Mr. Schumate, the chairman.

Q. The managers' returns and the poll-lists were sealed up, as I understand?—A. Yes, sir; and our report too.

Q. What was done with the package?—A. That was brought here by me and turned over to the secretary of state without the seal being broken.

Q. That is all these different returns from the managers, and the poll-lists and your report were brought here sealed up and delivered by you in the same way that you received the package?—A. I did not put them up in the package.

Q. But they were sealed up in your presence?—A. Yes, sir; and I have no doubt they were sealed up correctly.

Q. The chairman, I believe, was a democrat, and the other two members of the board republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are one of them?—A. Yes, sir; we two republicans elected him chairman; we were satisfied with him.

Q. Now, give us the vote for the two highest electors in Yergan's precinct.—A. [Referring to a memorandum.] I have here a tabular statement of the votes at Yergan's; Barker got 149.

Q. Are the votes for the republican electors substantially the same all the way through?—A. I will state here that when we added up and made our returns, running all the way across, we did return McGowan's total in the county as 4,142, but when we got the summons the other day we ran over the figures again seven or eight times and we found the number was 4,132; so we had returned him ten more votes than he got in the county.

Q. Please to give me the number of votes for each of the democratic electors at Yergan's.—A. Mr. Barker got 149; McGowan, 140; Harrington, 149; Ingram, 149; they all got the same.

Q. Now the republican votes in the same box?—A. Bowen, 53; Winsmith, 53; Johnston, 53; Hurley, 53; Nash, 53; Cook, 53.

Q. Was there any error made in adding up the vote for McGowan?—A. Yes, sir; in running across this line here we made a mistake and put it on our report as 4,142, but when we were summoned the other day we went over the figures and we found a mistake of ten votes; it should have been 4,132; that was a mistake in addition.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What was the whole republican vote as the county canvassers made it?—A. We returned Bowen 1,771, but on looking it over the other day we found it should have been 1,772.

Q. What was the democratic vote?—A. McGowan got 4,132; Barker got 4,130.

Q. Give us the vote for the rest of the democratic electors.—A. Barker, 4,130; McGowan, 4,132; Harrington, 4,129; Ingram, 4,129; Wallace, 4,128; Erwin, 4,121; (we returned it 4,132;) Aldrich, 4,130.

Q. Give the republican vote, as you made it.—A. Bowen, 1,772; Winsmith, 1,735; Johnston, 1,776; Hurley; Nash, 1,770; Cook, 1,746; Myers, 1,773.

Q. Give the precincts which were included in that aggregate of votes which you have just stated.—A. Greenville, Yergan's, Charlesville, Ware's, Stokes's, Sullivan's Factory, Stone's, Burdett's, Batesville, Reedy River Church, Chick Springs, Double Springs, Mitchell's, Center's, Goodwin's, Bruton's, Hood's, Marietta.

Q. Is Stone's known also as Fairview?—A. No, sir; I don't think it is.

Q. You have no such precinct as Garrett's on your list?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor Gant's?—A. Well, Gant's is what we call Yergan's.

Q. They are the same place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the vote of Yergan's, as you have it, for the presidential electors?—A. Barker, 149; the republicans, 53.

Q. Then the return which was canvassed by you as Yergan's is the same as Gant's; the precinct is known by both names?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether the managers' return was dated at Gant's or at Yergan's?—A. Greenville County is laid off in townships, and Yergan's is in Gant's Township. I do not remember whether the return was dated at Gant's or at Yergan's.

Q. The law gives the name of Yergan's for the precinct, as I understand, and there is no such precinct as Gant's provided for by law?—A. No; but Gant's is the township and Yergan's is the precinct in the township.

Q. Do you remember what the vote in your county for each party was in 1874?—A. Chamberlain got 1,879 and Green 2,288.

Q. That was the full vote of that year, was it?—A. Yes, sir; 4,167.

Q. What was the total vote this year?—A. Six thousand and nine hundred.

Q. Where is that county situated?—A. It is the upper county in the State, adjoining the North Carolina line.

Q. Can you account for this largely-increased vote in any way?—A. Well, I suppose that there are more people there now.

Q. Do you not know that people came there from North Carolina?

(Mr. Phillips objected to the form of the question as leading.)

Mr. Lapham insisted upon the question, and Mr. Abbott requested the chairman to instruct the witness that he was to speak only from his personal knowledge.)

The CHAIRMAN. The witness will understand the question to call for his own personal knowledge; not what he has learned from other people, nor what he may happen to suspect or believe, but what he knows.

A. I do not know of anybody coming from North Carolina.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You did not see any one that you knew there from North Carolina?—A. There were a great many people who voted in the city of Greenville that I do not know.

Q. Where is your precinct?—A. In the city of Greenville.

Q. How near is that to the North Carolina line?—A. I suppose, thirty miles.

Q. And you say there were a great many who voted there that you did not know?—A. O, there are a great many people in the county that I do not know.

Q. I mean strangers at your precinct on election-day?—A. There was a powerful big vote at that box.

Q. I am inquiring now about the vote at your precinct, where you live?—A. At the precinct where I voted Hampton got 963 and the other party 826.

Q. Was that an increase over the vote of the previous year in that particular precinct?—

A. I think it was.

Q. A large or small increase?—A. I think it was a large one; I am sure it was.

Q. Were there strangers to you who voted at that precinct?—A. There have been two large cotton-factories put up there within two or three years.

Q. My question is whether persons voted there that you were not acquainted with?—A. O, yes; I was not acquainted with a third of them that voted there. I am not a very good hand to recollect people, and I expect I might have seen nearly all of them one time or another and not have known them.

Q. At what precincts was the large increase in the vote in your county?—A. I am not able to say.

Q. Can you not name any one except your own where there was a large increase?—A. I think there must have been a considerable increase in the Greenville precinct.

Q. That is your own precinct?—A. Yes.

Q. What other can you name where there was an increase?—A. I am not able to state the precincts; I just know there was an increase in the total vote of the county.

Q. But you are unable to specify the precincts where the vote is shown except your own?—A. Yes, sir; I do not know how much that has increased, either, though I noticed that it was larger than it was before.

Q. The increase in your precinct is not very large, is it?—A. I think it is four or five or six hundred.

Q. You spoke of two cotton factories being started in Greenville?—A. Well, they belong to the same company, but they are two different factories.

Q. When were they erected?—A. One of them was commenced last August a year ago; the other has been running a year or two. Probably it was running at the time of the other election; I am not clear about that.

Q. Do you know how many hands are employed in either of those factories?—A. No, sir; they are mostly women, but there are a good many men.

Q. How many males are employed about either of those factories?—A. I am not able to say. Forty or fifty, I suppose; I do not know how many.

Q. The number is not very large?—A. Well, I cannot say; I do not know how many men there are.

Q. But the number is not very large, is it?—A. I would not suppose there were more than fifty male persons employed—forty or fifty, and part of them are boys. The whole city of Greenville, however, has improved a good deal since the last election.

Q. The increase of the vote in Greenville would not have been caused by those two factories, would it?—A. No, sir; it is just guesswork with me. I do not mean that the city has increased that much in regular voters; I suppose it has increased about four or five hundred inhabitants.

Q. Do you not know that persons who are not residents and voters there voted on that day? Can you account for the vote in any other way?

The CHAIRMAN. The witness will confine himself to his personal knowledge in answering that question.

Mr. BANKS. I do not know that the witness needs instruction upon every question.

The CHAIRMAN. He has only had instruction in respect to one previous question, and he shall have instruction in this case.

Q. Can you account for this increase in the vote of Greenville simply by the increase in the population of permanent residents since 1874?—A. No, sir; it is not that. You asked me a while ago if I knew anybody that voted who did not live in that county. I recollect one man coming there from Charleston in this State, and voting for the presidential electors. I think the managers threw that vote out. At all events they had a contest about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That is the only instance you knew?—A. He voted for all except the county ticket. I do not know of my own knowledge that the vote was thrown out, but I heard it was.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. I believe I asked you to state what the relative vote was in 1874 and 1876. The increase in the vote in your county from 1874 to 1876 is mainly in the democratic vote, is it not?—A. I had this statement of the vote at the election this year, and I took the other from an old printed copy. I find that Chamberlain got 1,879 votes in 1874, and this year he got 1,728.

Q. Then the republican vote is not quite as large as it was before, and the increase is in the democratic vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the same connection you may give the democratic vote in 1874 and 1876.

Mr. PHILIPS. I object to the question on the ground that it assumed that there was a democratic vote in 1874.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What was the number of the opposition vote to the republican party in 1874?—A. In 1874 it was 2,288; in 1876 the democratic vote was 4,172, and the republican 1,728.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You spoke of strangers in Greenville the day of election; were they not a class of persons whom you knew not to be residents of that precinct?—A. I think they came from all over the county. A great many colored folks, and white folks too, came twenty or thirty miles from other precincts to vote there.

Q. I asked you whether they were not residents of Greenville, without reference to where they came from?—A. Speaking of locality, I cannot say as to that.

Q. You cannot say, then, but what all who voted there were residents of Greenville?—A. No, sir; I cannot say of my own knowledge.

Q. I understood you to answer that there was no increase in population there within the last few years that would account for the increased vote?—A. O, there is no increase in the population that would account for it.

Q. The population of the county has not grown within that time, has it?—A. I expect it has increased some.

Q. Has it increased to the extent of the increased vote?—A. I do not think it has. I am unable to say whether they went out to vote before or not; I do not know how many votes are in the county.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. The democrats did not turn out very freely at the election in 1874?—A. There was not near the excitement then that it was this time; but it was very excited then, too.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. The election of 1874 was an excited contest, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both parties struggled in the contest and did their very best?—A. Yes, sir; that is my idea about it.

(Mr. Phillips objected to Mr. Lapham's questions as leading, and not only leading but misleading.)

Mr. Lapham remarked that exactly similar questions had been put to the witness by the members of the committee on the other side.)

By Mr. JONES:

Q. You say you have resided in Greenville since 1864; did you ever in your life know all the voters in Greenville precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know half of them?—A. I do not suppose there is a man in the county that has lived there ten years whom I have not seen or had business with. I used to be foreman of the coach-factory there for several years, and I suppose I have seen every man in the county, but I am a bad hand to know a man again; if I saw one of you gentlemen to-morrow, I might not recognize you.

Q. But you do not know any man from North Carolina who voted there?—A. No.

(The chairman laid before the committee several additional copies of affidavits by officers of election, which were ordered to be made part of the record.)

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

HENRY D. ELLIOTT sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Colleton County, South Carolina.

Q. Were you at the last election in any official capacity as to any precinct in that county?—A. I was United States supervisor of election at Bennett's Point precinct.

Q. Was there any other supervisor with you?—A. There was; he was a republican; I was a democrat.

Q. Was there any election held at that polling-place?—A. There was not.

Q. Is it a new polling-place?—A. This was the first time that there was to be an election held there.

Q. If there was any reason, within your knowledge, why no election was held there, please state it.—A. The reason the poll was not held there was because the other supervisors of election, in conjunction with myself, decided that as only two managers of the election had qualified, no poll could be held there, according to the law under which we were acting, which required three managers of election to be qualified and their oaths deposited with the clerk of the county. In fact, only two had received their commissions.

Q. Did you and your republican associate join in that decision?—A. We did; we signed a paper to that effect.

Q. And no attempt was made to vote there at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. That decision was acquiesced in by your associate?—A. Entirely acquiesced in. The paper was signed by him willingly.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, where any of the voters that would naturally come to that precinct voted?—A. No, sir; I have heard that they voted elsewhere, but I cannot, of my own knowledge, say where they voted.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. To what precinct did this formerly belong?—A. It is on the peninsula. I am not able to say exactly which precinct it belonged to. It may have either belonged to Ashpoo or Jacksonborough. It is about the same distance from either one.

Q. You cannot say what portion of the voters residing in that precinct went to other precincts and voted?—A. No, sir; I cannot. They all may have gone, or none may have gone.

Q. Did you vote?—A. I did, at Ashpoo.

Q. Did you not see any others of the voters from your precinct there?—A. No; I was entirely a stranger there.

Q. You went and voted in an adjoining precinct, and for aught you know all may have gone?—A. For aught I know they may have all voted.

Q. You can't name any one that did not vote?—A. I cannot.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Can you name any one that did vote?—A. I cannot, except a few men that went with me. The democratic managers of election went along with me, and a few others.

Q. Do you know that they voted?—A. I know that they voted.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. There was no trouble or violence to prevent a poll from being held at Bennett's Point?—A. None at all, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

ROBERT FISHBURNE sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Walterborough, the county-seat of Colleton County.

Q. Have you lived there long?—A. I have lived in the county all my life.

Q. Are you familiar with that part of the county in which Bennett's Point voting-place is situated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have been familiar with it for what length of time?—A. Since 1866. I have planted in that neighborhood.

Q. Were you present at the time the county commissioners or county canvassers made up the list of votes from the different precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present all the time?—A. All the time; I never left at all.

Q. Did you make a list from the list made by the county canvassers of the different precincts?—A. I got them to give me a tabular statement with the signatures, and I retained that statement as county chairman.

Q. Were the managers' returns from the different precincts present or not?—A. The returns from every one except Bennett's Point and Rantowle's Station were present. There was some dispute about the counting of Rantowle's, and they refused to count it, and the county canvassers then counted the vote of that precinct.

Q. The managers' returns were present, then, from every precinct except Bennett's Point and Rantowle's, where the managers refused to count the votes owing to the disagreement?—A. The votes were marked in a certain way, and they disagreed, and that box was counted by the county canvassers and returned, as you will see by the list.

Q. This list you obtained from whom?—A. Yes, sir; the list with the official signature of A. C. Shaffer and the other county canvassers appointed by Governor Chamberlain, and attested by the clerk of the board. I obtained it from the clerk, J. D. Edwards. I witnessed the signatures myself.

Q. Can you recollect, without the aid of this list, the vote in any of the precincts?—A. I could approximate it in most of them, but I couldn't state it exactly.

Q. Do you know whether these precinct managers' returns were sent up with the returns to the secretary of state by A. C. Shaffer? Did you see them packed up?—A. I saw them. I cannot say how every one put in the package. It was a clerical duty which was left to the clerk of the board. He performed that duty, and we all understood that all the returns had been put in.

Q. As far as you know, then, they were all there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you are familiar with that part of the country in which Bennett's Point is situated. That a new polling-place, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; it has been changed since last election.

Q. Can you tell about the number of voters that ordinarily and naturally would be accommodated at the polling-place?—A. Less than one hundred, I am sure.

Q. Do you know of those who would naturally vote there, voting at any other poll?—A. As democratic chairman, I got a return from my clerk at each place. I saw a great many men from that poll-negroes that I knew—republicans mostly, who voted at the other precincts, and who told me that they had come from Bennett's Point on account of not being able to vote there. My clerk reported to me that there were forty-four that voted at Jacksonborough and twenty-one at Ashepoo. I had a special train that day, and these polls were on the railroad, and I moved from point to point very rapidly and passed each poll four or five times during the day.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Where is this county situated?—A. It is along the coast, between Beaufort and Charleston.

Q. Do you know of any one in the Bennett's Point precinct who did not vote by reason of the poll not being held there?—A. I do not know of any one.

Q. You know a large number who did vote?—A. Yes; I do know of a large number who voted at Jacksonborough and Ashepoo.

Q. They were reported to you by the democrats as forty-four at Jacksonborough and twenty-one at Ashepoo?—A. Those were republican voters; the democrats had no votes in that section of the country at all.

Q. That would make a total of sixty-six, and you think there were less than a hundred voters in the whole precinct?—A. Yes; about eighty, as far as we could make it out, and we canvassed the whole of that section.

Q. Were those you saw vote in addition to the forty-four and twenty-one?—A. No, sir; they were included in those numbers. I did not see them all vote myself, but that was the return to me. I did see some persons vote at each precinct.

Q. Did you see persons from that precinct vote at any other precinct than the two you have named?—A. No, sir; I did not. I could establish the fact, though, by other witnesses.

Q. Was there any other precinct to which they went?—A. Yes, sir; I have information in regard to Adam's Run precinct, where some of them in excess of the twenty-one and forty-four voted.

Q. That precinct was accessible to voters from Bennett's Point?—A. Yes.

Q. These three that you have mentioned are the nearest precincts to Bennett's Point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To which precinct did that formerly belong before it was made into a new precinct?—A. The people voted at different places. The poll where most of them voted was just across the Ashepoo River, at Stock's Causeway.

Q. That is still a voting-place, is it not?—A. No, sir; the legislature discontinued that precinct and created this one at Bennett's Point since the last preceding election.

Q. How long have you lived in the county?—A. I was born and raised there.

Q. Do you remember the whole vote in the county?—A. No, sir; I can only approximate it.

Q. You have the table. What is the vote as it appears there?—A. I think it is 7,168.

Q. How much is it for each party?—A. I have the table before me. Bowen's vote was 4,231 and Barker's 2,921.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. The county officers in making their statement included all the votes that were cast in the county?—A. Yes, sir. The Rantowle box was thrown out by the managers, but after telegraphing to the attorney-general it was counted by the county canvassers.

Q. Why was not the Rantowle box certified by the managers?—A. Because the voters wanted to scratch out one or two names on the tickets and substitute others, and in doing that they wrote in a scrawly hand right across the names of the candidates. They had a negro there that did not know how to write, and he wrote sometimes on the back and sometimes across the face of the tickets, and the managers wouldn't count the box—wouldn't have anything to do with it, but the county canvassers did count it, and gave every man his votes as they appeared.

Q. Do you know whether some of those returns may not have been accidentally misplaced and not sent up to the secretary of state? Have you any personal knowledge as to whether the managers' returns were all sent up or not?—A. I have not. I only state that I saw them in preparation. I did not see their return, but I could swear that that is the return of the managers, for I examined every one, and I saw it certified by the county canvassers themselves, and as regards the folding of the packages, &c., I saw them in preparation. That is about all.

By Mr. LAPHAM ;

Q. Is there a polling-place at Bell's Cross-Roads?—A. Yes.

Q. In what town?—A. It is only just a cross-roads—a few houses.

Q. Is there a polling-place at Swoke's Cross-Roads?—A. Yes.

Q. Does that adjoin Bell's Cross-Roads?—A. It is in the neighborhood of Bell's Cross-Roads. The managers' returns from those precincts were returned; I saw them myself.

Q. Do you know whether an election was held at Bell's Cross-Roads?—A. I saw the certified return by the managers, and saw them compiled in my presence. I know it in that way.

Q. Do you know about Ashepoo?—A. Yes, sir; I was present at Ashepoo during the election.

Q. And Iron's school-house?—A. I was not present there, but I saw the certified return of the managers, and saw the returns compiled.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. How about Preacher's Mill ?—A. I was not present at that, but I saw the returns compiled. The table gives at Bell's Cross-Roads 35 votes for the whole republican ticket and 105 for the whole democratic ticket; at Preacher's Mill, 100 each for the republican electors and 161 for each democratic elector; at Ashepoo, 437 for each republican and 97 for each democratic elector; at Iron's Cross-Roads school-house, 187 for each republican and 43 for each democrat, and there was no election held at Bennett's Point.

Q. Those are the correct figures, are they ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did the democratic vote this year in your county compare with that for Green in 1874 ?—A. It exceeded the Green vote some three or four hundred; certainly not above 400.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. How did the republican vote this year compare with the republican vote in 1874 ?—A. It was largely in excess.

Q. How much ?—A. I can only approximate it, but I should say upward of a thousand greater than in 1874.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. That county is on the sea-shore ?—A. Yes, sir. They ran three republican tickets at the last previous election, and this last election there were two republican and one democratic.

Q. But it is not a county bordering on any other State ?—A. No, sir; it is between Beaufort and Charleston.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

W. A. WALKER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question, Where do you live ?—Answer. Chester, S. C. I have lived there all my life.

Q. You hold some official position there ?—A. I am a practicing lawyer, and was a commissioner of election during the election.

Q. Had you all the managers' returns of the different precincts before you when you made up your tabulated account of the election in that county ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Boyd's store among them ?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with those manager's returns ?—A. The managers returned the poll-lists with the ballots in the boxes, and when the boxes were opened by the chairman of the board he took the poll-list out and we examined the poll-list and aggregated it, and they were returned to him, and he rolled them up in a bundle. I saw him do them up in a bundle myself and tie them with a string.

Q. Were the managers' returns with them ?—A. Yes, sir; all the papers that pertained to the election.

Q. What was done with them after they were rolled up ?—A. We gave them to him, and they were retained by him until the messenger was ready to leave that night, and he did go that night.

Q. Did you see him go ?—A. I saw him ready to start.

Q. Who was the messenger ?—A. The clerk was appointed the messenger. His name is James M. Brawley.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns sent by the board to the secretary of state ?—A. I am satisfied they were, because I saw them tied up in a bundle by the chairman of the commissioners himself, and he was to turn them over to the clerk when he got ready to leave.

Q. How was the bundle secured ?—A. Tied with a string.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Are you able to say positively that the Boyd's store managers' return was put up in that bundle? Can you say of your personal knowledge ?—A. I cannot be mistaken about it, because we canvassed that return.

Q. You did not put it up yourself ?—A. No, sir; I did not. He handled the papers himself.

Q. Are you able to say from your personal knowledge that it was there ?—A. That would be a very difficult question to answer. I am just as well satisfied of it as I am of anything in the world. I am certain of it—just as certain as I can be of anything.

Q. The point is whether you can say of your own personal knowledge that it was there ?—A. Well, of course my attention was not directed to that any more than to any other paper.

Q. And it may have been omitted ?—A. It couldn't have been omitted, because we made the return complete.

Q. You have no recollection of this particular return; have you ?—A. I have.

Q. I mean of seeing it put into the box ?—A. I cannot say that I saw it laid down right on the top of the others; but I saw the whole of them bundled up together.

■ Q. Where is Chester County?—A. It is due north from this. There is only one county between it and North Carolina.

Q. Was there an increased vote in that county at the last election?—A. We voted 4,421 votes altogether.

Q. What was the vote in 1874?—A. I do not exactly remember, but it was about the same, I think. I don't recollect it particularly.

Q. Are the figures you have given the vote in the whole county?—A. Yes, sir; 1,605 white votes and 2,831 colored.

Q. Do you remember how many of them were for the republican electoral ticket and how many for the democratic?—A. I cannot say. It strikes me the average majority on the electoral vote was 469 in favor of the republican party.

Q. The increase, then, was not very large over the vote of 1874?—A. I think not.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. And your county is very near North Carolina?—A. Yes, sir; there is only one county intervening.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How far is your county from North Carolina?—A. I suppose thirty-five or forty miles.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Thirty-five or forty miles from North Carolina?—A. It is twenty-one miles from our county-seat to the county-seat of York. York is a pretty large county. Our county is about eighteen by thirty-one miles.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. Is it true that a great many white men in the State, in your part of the country particularly, have not voted since the war until the last election?—A. I think so. Our vote was very largely increased in that way, I think.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 15, 1876.

WILLIAM HILL sworn and examined.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Question. In what county do you reside?—Answer. Union County, in the town of Union.

Q. I believe you were one of the board of county canvassers at the last election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns before the board of county canvassers?—A. Each box, with the ballots and the manager's returns, together with the poll-lists, was returned to the board of county canvassers.

Q. Were all the managers' returns there?—A. There are fifteen precincts, and there were fifteen returns.

Q. When the board had completed its labors what was done with those various managers' returns?—A. As each box was opened and the return of the managers of the precinct taken out it was examined by the board of canvassers and handed to me as their clerk, and I took down the face of the return on the tabular statement that I made. After the close of the session of the board I was directed to place together all the returns, poll-lists, and all but one copy of the return of the board of canvassers, (which was to be kept for the clerk of the court,) and I did as directed and placed all the papers together and handed them to the chairman.

Q. Among those papers were the precinct managers' returns from all the precincts?—A. From all, sir.

Q. In what sort of package were they done up?—A. They were all gathered together by me and handed to the chairman of the board, James H. Goss, and he placed them, I think, in a paper box.

Q. To whom were they delivered?—A. Mr. Goss delivered them to H. H. D. Byron, who represented the republican party as a supervisor on that board.

Q. They were given to him for delivery to the secretary of state?—A. He was coming to Columbia next day, and he was requested by the board to take charge of them and deliver them in Columbia.

Q. Have you a copy of the returns from the various precincts throughout the county?—A. I have the original tabular statement made from the return from all the boxes.

Q. Please refer to the precinct of Wilkensville.—A. This is the statement that I made as the managers' returns were handed to me. I took the figures from the face of the returns.

Q. And it is accurate?—A. It is accurate. It was examined by the board of canvassers and pronounced to be correct, and they made their report.

Q. Refer to Wilkensville and state what the vote was for the presidential electors.—A. The democratic electors all got the same vote, 1,636 each, and the republicans 142 each.

Q. Look at Glandiburg Mills and state the vote for Myers, a republican elector.—A. Myers received 126 at Glandiburg Mills; Nash, 13; and Cook, 13; the rest of the ticket received 12.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. What was the whole republican vote for the electors in the county?—A. Bowen received 1,810; Winsmith, 1,809; Johnston, 1,810; Hurley, 1,810; Nash, 1,811; Cook, 1,811; Myers, 1,810. All the democratic electors received 2,461 each.

Q. The Wilkensville precinct was included in that count?—A. It was included in the statement.

Q. To whom did you deliver the managers' returns?—A. I placed them all together, as directed by the board, and handed them to James H. Goss, chairman of the board.

Q. Do you know personally what he did with them?—A. I saw him get up out of his chair and hand them to H. H. D. Byron, with the request that he would take charge of them and deliver them in Columbia at the office where they belonged.

Q. You do not know whether Mr. Byron brought them to Columbia or not?—A. I do not; I never saw them after the whole board left the office.

Q. I did not ask you that. I asked you if you knew personally whether he brought them here?—A. I do not.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Mr. Byron was a United States supervisor and a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. It is possible that by accident or oversight the Wilkensville managers' returns might not have been included in the package, is it not?—A. When I gathered up the papers I counted the number of papers and handed them to Mr. Goss, the chairman.

Q. They were folded up?—A. They were all folded up like this, [illustrating.] The poll-lists appeared on three or four sheets of paper. Then there came a blank sheet, and the returns of the managers followed on three or four sheets of paper, and it was all folded up together. There were fourteen papers, fourteen returns, and fourteen poll-lists, and then there was one return and one poll-list together.

Q. Now, if fourteen of those papers are found in the office of the secretary of state, and Wilkensville is not among them, may it not be possible that by accident, without any design at all, that the Wilkensville managers' returns might not have been included, and that some other paper accidentally got into the package in place of it?—A. Well, sir, I do not think I left any of them out. I think they were all placed in. I did not desire to leave any of them out, and I counted them and handed them to Mr. Goss, the chairman of the board.

Adjourned.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16, 1876.

The committee met at 10 a. m.; all the members present.

I. I. FOX sworn and examined.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Question. You reside in Colleton County, in this State?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. I was born and raised there. I am thirty-six years old. I reside at Walterborough.

Q. Were you one of the election commissioners or county canvassers of Colleton County?—A. I was.

Q. How many precincts are there in your county?—A. I think there are twenty. You have here a tabular statement which we prepared as commissioners, which gives the true number.

Q. Were all the managers' returns from the various precincts in your county before the board?—A. All but two exceptions.

Q. Which returns were absent?—A. Bennett's Point, at which no election was held at all, and Rantowle's. There was no election made at that poll by the managers, for the reason, as they reported to us, that they could not agree. We had one of the managers before us who so testified. The tickets at that poll were scratched. One of the printed names was scratched out and another name written in pencil lengthwise across the ticket. The managers could not agree how those votes should be counted, and the ballots were sealed up and sent to us, and we, as commissioners of election, counted the ballots ourselves and made the return.

Q. You have only counted the precincts known as Bell's Cross-Roads, Snake's Cross-Roads, Preacher's Mill, Blue House, Ashpoo, Iron's Cross-Roads, school-house, and Bennett's Point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns from those various precincts which I have just named before your board duly returned by the managers?—A. All, with the exception of Bennett's Point, as I have stated.

Q. After the board had completed its duties, what was done with the managers' returns?—A. They were bound up and tied with a string—each one separately—all the returns and poll lists, and handed to Captain Shaffer, one of the commissioners of election and chairman of the board, who was appointed by the board as the messenger to take them to Columbia. He brought them to Columbia, and says he delivered them to H. E. Hayne, secretary of state, but he did not take a receipt for them.

Q. Was Shaffer a democrat or a republican?—A. A republican.

Q. Did you see the managers' returns wrapped in a bundle?—A. I did, sir. I wrapped the most of them up myself, and I afterward assisted Captain Shaffer to put those same returns into his satchel, and saw him start to Columbia with them. I was careful that he got every one.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Have you a statement of the aggregate vote for the presidential electors?—A. Yes, sir; I handed it to Mr. Fishburne yesterday, and he told me he left it with this committee.

Q. Does that correctly state the result of the county canvass?—A. It does.

Q. Which was the precinct where the managers had failed to agree about a return?—A. Rantowle's.

Q. There was a return, was there not?—A. No, sir; there was no return; there was a poll-list, but no return, because the managers did not count the votes.

Q. There was a poll-list establishing the number of votes for each party, but no formal return of the managers?—A. No return, sir.

Q. Were there any cases where there was no return of the electoral vote by the managers?—A. I am not sure, but I think the elector in each case was returned by the managers, with the exception of those two cases. I do not think that in every case the electoral vote was returned separately by the managers.

Q. Are you able to specify the precincts in which that was not so?—A. No, sir; I cannot. My impression, though, is that there was a return from each poll where there was a count and a return. I know there was a return of the electoral vote, but I know there was one poll, possibly Snyder's Cross-Roads, where the return of both was made together; no separate return of the electoral vote.

Q. At Rantowle's you gave in your canvass the number of votes shown by the poll-list to each party, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You assumed in your canvass that each party got the number of votes that the poll-list showed to have been cast for it?—A. Yes, sir; we counted the ballots and found they agreed with the poll-list, with the exception of five votes, which were found exposed outside. Those were rejected.

Q. But you arrived at the electoral vote in that way, by assuming that each party received the number of votes that the poll-list showed to have been cast for it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the other cases where there was no separate return of the electoral vote you assumed the same?—A. We did not count any ballots from any of the polls, with the exception of Rantowle's.

Q. But where the whole vote was together, no return being made of the electoral vote separately, you gave to each party the whole number of votes for the electoral ticket, as well as for the rest of the ticket?—A. Yes, sir; we simply aggregated the managers' return, except in that one case.

Q. Wherever there was a formal omission of the return of the electoral vote, you yet gave the vote of the party at that precinct to the electoral ticket?—A. There was a return, though not a separate return of the electoral vote, from Snyder's Cross-Roads.

Q. In what form?—A. It was written at the bottom of the return of the State officers.

Q. In what form; so many for Hayes and Wheeler, and so many for Tilden and Hendricks?—A. No, sir; we had no such cases as that in our county. It was a return by the electors, giving the names of each.

Q. I think you said you were not able to specify the precincts where there was no separate return of the electoral vote?—A. I am not very sure of it, but I think there was one precinct where the electoral vote was added at the bottom.

Q. Was there not more than one?—A. No, sir; not more than one—always excepting those two that I have mentioned, Bennett's Point and Rantowle's, where there was no return at all.

Q. There were two polls where there was no election held?—A. No, sir, one; Bennett's Point.

Q. Where did the electors of that precinct vote?—A. They voted at the two adjoining polls; Jacksonborough and Ashepoo.

Q. They were the precincts at which those people have always voted?—A. Yes, sir; Bennett's Point was a new precinct, created by law two years ago, and this was the first election that was to be held there, and very few persons attended.

Q. So the electors continued to vote at the former precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any elector who did not vote?—A. Not one, sir. We made strict inquiry, and they every one voted. There was sixty-one persons, we understood, at that poll, twenty-one of whom voted at Ashepoo, and forty at Jacksonborough.

Q. They simply voted at their former precincts, instead of at the new one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No votes were lost to either party, then, by the poll not being held at Bennett's Point?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Where is Captain Shaffer?—A. At Walterborough.

Q. Who made up the package of returns sent to the secretary of state?—A. The colored member of the board, Mr. Brock. He was an uneducated person, though he could read and write a little, and we put him to do most of that work. Part of it I assisted him in.

Q. How was the package secured?—A. Only tied with twine.

Q. Did you give special attention to the making up of the package yourself?—A. I did. We worked the entire night, and just after daylight Captain Shaffer came up with his buggy to the court-house, (the count was made in his office—in the treasurer's office.) He came up after daylight with his carpet-bag, and asked me to assist him. I assisted him to put the packages into it. I saw them put in, and he locked it and came back.

Q. Was there more than one package?—A. Yes, sir; they were all separate. The poll-lists and each of the returns were bound up in a bundle, or roll of paper, and tied with a string, and indorsed on the outside with the name of the precinct.

Q. How many packages did he take?—A. He had nineteen, because he had a poll-list from Rantowle's.

Q. The nineteen different returns were not secured together in one roll?—A. No, sir; each one was separate.

Q. Did you count the packages that were not put into the carpet-sack?—A. Yes, sir. I saw that they were all there.

Q. This business was transacted in the treasurer's office, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were other papers there, I suppose?—A. Not in the carpet-sack.

Q. No; but in the office, on the table and about?—A. Well, these returns. We sat at the table like this, [illustrating,] and there was a drawer under the table which was drawn out, and these packages were put in there as we finished each one. When we finished one poll, either I would tie it up, or this man Brock would tie it up, and put it in there:

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Was the drawer empty before any of the packages were put in?—A. Yes.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. One or more of these managers' returns might accidentally, without any design of doing anything wrong, have been left out of the carpet-sack?—A. It might have been, but it was not.

Q. You are sure you counted the packages as they were put in?—A. I know I did. I was very sure.

Q. Why did you count them?—A. I counted them to be sure that they were all put in, that they were all taken. I was the only democrat on the board; the other two were republicans, and I felt a great responsibility on me that everything should be correctly done, and I was especially particular.

Q. What time of night was it?—A. It was after daylight when they were put into the carpet-sack.

Q. What day was it?—A. If you would give me that tabular statement, I would find the date. I have no recollection of it.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. The election was on Tuesday?—A. Yes. I think all the returns did not get in for nearly a week. But the first day that we were permitted by law to make this count, we did so, and we finished the count that day. Commencing in the morning at 10 o'clock, we counted the entire day, excepting a short recess for refreshments, and finished at night, just before daylight.

Q. What day was that? Was it the Tuesday following the election?—A. I think it was. You will find from that tabular statement the date. We have a certificate upon that statement with the date.

Q. Do you mean the county commissioners' statement?—A. Yes, sir; the tabular statement from the returns.

Q. You refer to the paper which Mr. Fishburne produced yesterday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you looked in the drawer in the treasurer's office, or anywhere in the room, since, to see if any of the managers' returns were there?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. But you saw them all taken out at the time?—A. Yes, sir; I know that.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. There were other papers about the office, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; a few papers—other stationery; but all the papers pertaining to Captain Shaffer's office, as treasurer, had been removed as we commenced the count, and there was nothing like a managers' return left about the establishment.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. If I correctly understand you the only precinct in your county from which there was not a separate return for the electoral ticket, leaving out of view Rantowle's and Bennett's Point, was at a precinct known as Snyder's Cross-Roads?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the only case where there was a return of the electoral vote under the other vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In all other cases the electoral vote was returned separately?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, at Snyder's Cross-Roads there was a return for the electors by name, if I understand you?—A. Yes.

Q. But that return was upon the same paper which contained the names of the other officers voted for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the names of all the electors, the republican and democratic, given on that paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to Rantowle's, do I understand you to say that before making your return of that precinct you examined the ballots?—A. We counted the ballots in the box.

Q. Was the number of votes which you returned for the various electors correct, according to the ballots in the box?—A. It was.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. The abstract furnished by Mr. Fishburne does not give the date on which you closed your canvass?—A. I was under the impression that it did, but I see it does not.

Q. It was in fact on the Tuesday following the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the usual time—the time fixed by law?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Did your board in any case count votes for the electoral ticket, your count being predicated upon the return for other officers?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16, 1876.

B. B. SAMS sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In the town of Beaufort.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I was born there, but during the war I was away. I went back in 1866, and have been there ever since.

Q. Did you do anything at the time of the canvassing of the votes for Beaufort County?—A. Yes; I was secretary of the board of county canvassers.

Q. Can you tell us whether the precinct managers for presidential electors were before the board?—A. Yes, sir; they were all there.

Q. What was done with the precinct-managers' returns?—A. The returns for electors, governor, and the county officers generally were separated and put by themselves, rolled into one general bundle and wrapped in paper.

Q. What had you to do with putting them up in a bundle?—A. I had the arranging of them. I arranged them for the chairman of the board, and handed them over to him as soon as I got them arranged.

Q. Who rolled them into the bundle?—A. The chairman of the board of county canvassers.

Q. In your presence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you handed them to him?—A. As I handed them to him.

Q. State whether all the precinct-managers' returns were so arranged by you and so rolled up by the chairman.—A. They were.

Q. How were they secured?—A. They were wrapped up in large brown wrapping-paper and tied with twine.

Q. To whom were they delivered?—A. To the chairman of the board of county canvassers, who brought them to Columbia, or who was supposed to have brought them up; he left Beaufort with that intention.

Q. He was the republican member of the board?—A. He was the republican member of the board. He left for Columbia on Monday; this wrapping up was done on Sunday.

Q. What was his name?—A. F. E. Wilder.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Where was this canvass?—A. In the town of Beaufort, the county-seat.

Q. In what room?—A. The sheriff's room.

Q. Were there any cases where the managers' returns did not give the electoral vote separately?—A. No, sir; they were all separate.

Q. Do you say there was a separate electoral vote given for each precinct?—A. For each precinct.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. I am, because I put them into the box myself.

Q. A separate vote giving the names of the electors?—A. No, sir; they did not give the names of the electors; the managers after counting the tickets entered the names.

Q. I am inquiring about the returns?—A. O, yes; the returns gave the names of each elector.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. I am.

Q. There were no cases where the returns said simply "Hayes and Wheeler" so many, and "Tilden and Hendricks" so many?—A. No, sir; they were all counted for the electors.

Q. But I am speaking about the returns.—A. That is what I mean.

Q. Were there any cases where on the return it was stated in this way; so many votes for "Hayes and Wheeler," and so many for "Tilden and Hendricks"?—A. There were two instances.

Q. You have just said that there were none.—A. I did not understand you exactly.

Q. I mean that you shall understand me. Now I repeat the question, were there any cases where the managers did not return the names of the electors?—A. No, sir.

Q. The names of the managers were returned from every precinct?—A. From every precinct, written right down.

Q. And the number of votes which each elector had?—A. The number of votes which each elector had right opposite his name.

Q. Was there any case where the managers certified simply so many votes for "Hayes and Wheeler"?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. Or were they certified simply so many for "Tilden and Hendricks"?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. I am, sir; quite sure.

Q. And you are sure, if I understand you, that in every instance the managers' returns contained the return of the electoral vote, as well as the vote for the other candidates on the ticket?—A. Those were separate returns.

Q. There was such a return separate, undoubtedly, but are you sure that there was from every precinct such a return?—A. Yes, sir; I am.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. How many electors were voted for on each ticket generally in South Carolina?—A. Seven.

Q. Did the managers' returns have the names of every elector?—A. Seven on each side, sir; seven democrats, and seven republicans.

Q. That makes fourteen electors in all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The number of votes were put opposite to each name?—A. Yes, there was a printed form.

Q. So that the managers' return was complete?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the managers send up the poll-lists?—A. Yes, sir; the poll-lists, the return for the electors, return for governor, &c.

Q. I do not care about that. You say the returns for the electors were sent up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they send up the ballot-box with the votes?—A. Yes, sir; all these returns were put in the ballot-boxes, the apertures sealed, and they were sent to the board of county canvassers by the managers.

Q. Did you have occasion to consult the poll-lists with reference to the verification of the managers' returns at all?—A. Yes, sir. We looked over the poll-lists, and we found that they were correct.

Q. Did you have occasion to count the ballots?—A. Yes, sir; in several instances we did.

Q. In regard to the electors?—A. In regard to the electors.

Q. What was the result?—A. The result was that in some instances where they counted the votes the name was spelled wrong or an initial was wrong, and the commissioners then opened the box to ascertain how it was, and they took from the votes cast in the box, and put the names down correctly as they should have been.

Q. The name of the elector was incorrectly spelled in the managers' returns in such instances?—A. Yes, sir. On Saint Helena Island, by a mistake of the clerk of the board of managers, all the votes cast were put down to Barker—I think it was Barker—one of the democratic electors. That is a republican precinct; so the managers opened the box, and saw that the votes were intended for Cook, and so arranged them.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. The managers or the canvassers?—A. The county canvassers.

Q. Was that the only instance?—A. No, sir. There was also the case of Levy's Cross-Roads, on the Savannah River.

Q. What precinct was that you have just spoken of?—A. Saint Helena Island precinct.

Q. Can you give the aggregates of the votes for electors for both parties?—A. Yes, sir. I have got the original report here just as they were counted. Bowen, 7,553; Winsmith, 7,570; Johnston, 7,574; Hurley, 7,573; Nash, 7,573; Cook, 7,572; Myers, 7,573; Barker, 2,250; McGowan, 2,250; Harrington, 2,245; Ingram, 2,251; Wallace, 2,251; Erwin, 2,251; Aldrich, 2,249.

Q. Those figures give the aggregate count, including all the returns from all the precincts?—A. Yes, sir; from thirty precincts.

Q. What was the vote on presidential electors in Gray's Hill precinct?—A. Four hundred and seventy-two for each one of the republicans; none for the democrats.

Q. What was it at Black Creek?—A. Ten for the republicans and four for the democrats right through.

Q. What was the vote for the republican electors at Beach Branch precinct?—A. Republicans, 21; democrats, 74.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Can you furnish the committee an aggregate statement of the vote in each precinct of Beaufort County as it was given for electors at the last presidential election?—A. I can. I submit this paper, which contains such a statement, as part of my testimony:

Q. In the abstract just furnished by you there is one precinct put down as Gardner's corner; is there any other name for that?—A. Yes, sir; Sheldon. The old Gardner's corner is within a quarter of a mile of Sheldon's mills.

Q. That is the same as Sheldon?—A. The same as Sheldon.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. What was it known as?—A. Gardner's corner. It is also known as Sheldon mills, and then two miles from that is Sheldon on the Port Royal Railroad.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Where was the election held?—A. About a quarter of a mile from the old corner are all broken down, and it was held at Fuller's place, about a quarter of a mile from the old corner.

Q. That is the same place where the election has been held ever since 1863, is it not?—A. Just the same place.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. It is called Sheldon?—A. It is called Sheldon.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16, 1876.

CHARLES EDMONSTON sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Aiken Village, Aiken County; I have lived there since 1866.

Q. Do you occupy any official position?—A. I am county clerk.

Q. Were you one of the board of county canvassers at the last election?—A. I was one of the commissioners of election.

Q. Did you help to canvass the votes at the last election for Aiken County?—A. I did.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns of the electoral vote present from the precincts of Windsor and Silverton?—A. They were, sir; and counted.

Q. What was done with the precinct managers' returns after you got through your counties, including those two?—A. They were forwarded to the secretary of state at Columbia.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns present and counted by you?—A. They were, sir; the whole eleven precincts were handed in and counted by me, and the aggregate of their votes placed upon the returns which were handed to the secretary in my own handwriting.

Q. Who made up the package, bundle, or whatever you call it, of precinct managers' returns from the different precincts?—A. I handed the paper to the chairman of the commissioners and wrapped it up, and he was the messenger to Columbia.

Q. State whether all these precinct managers' returns were wrapped up in your presence?—A. Every one.

Q. How was the bundle or package secured if at all?—A. It was wrapped up in very large paper, and wrapped around this way [illustrating] and one or two large India-rubber straps put around the corner of the paper to make it fast.

Q. To whom were they handed?—A. To the chairman of the county canvassers, S. B. Spencer.

Q. Was he a republican or democrat?—A. He was a republican necessarily; he was chairman.

Q. Handed to him to be taken where?—A. To be brought here to the secretary of state.

Q. The chairman acted as messenger?—A. He did.

Q. Can you give us the vote for presidential electors at Windsor precinct?—A. I do not know that I could give the vote, but I could give you the vote for sheriff.

Q. State whether between the vote for sheriff or governor and the vote for presidential electors there was or was not a great difference?—A. A very trifling difference. There may have been a little choice in the county officers, but there was no cutting or scratching in the presidential vote. It was, generally speaking, a solid republican ticket—the party ticket on both sides.

Q. Can you give us, from any memoranda made by you at the time, the majority in Windsor precinct?—A. I can, sir. The democratic majority at Windsor was 314.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. For what officers?—A. I have here only the republican majorities at the several precincts, and the democratic majorities.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. What was the entire vote?—A. For sheriff the full democratic vote was 376, and the republican vote 54. Add 376 and 54 together and it will give you the entire vote at the precinct, 430. Three hundred and twenty-two was the democratic majority for sheriff, but the entire majority for the whole precinct was 314.

Q. What was the majority at Silverton?—A. It was 52 for the republicans on the entire ticket.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Have you any other papers than those memoranda made at the time of the canvass in regard to this subject of canvassing the vote ?—A. Yes, I have here the Aiken precinct vote.

Q. Those are the only papers you have ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. What is the Aiken Court-House vote for each party ?—A. Republican, 697; democratic, 376.

Q. From what did you take those figures ?—A. From the return.

Q. The return on file gives the republicans 707, and the democrats 371 ?—A. That is the Hayes and Tilden vote. I was speaking entirely of the precinct vote.

Q. Then 707 Hayes and 371 for Tilden is correct ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Can you give the electoral vote of the whole county for each party ?—A. That I cannot give. I have it not with me, but I have a copy of the returns filed in my office which could be sent on to the committee certified.

Q. Do you remember about what the majority on the electoral ticket was in that county ?—A. I cannot say; it could not have varied more than five or six.

Q. Do you remember what the republican majority, if any, was in the whole county ?—A. O, there was no republican majority; there was 742 democratic majority on the entire ticket.

Q. Are you quite sure of that ?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure.

Q. You mean taking the returns in the whole county, republican and democratic, there was a democratic majority of seven hundred and odd ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. You say you cannot give the vote of each party in Silverton ?—A. I cannot.

Q. Can you tell about how many votes there were in that precinct ?—A. I cannot tell, sir; I have not the papers with me.

Q. Were there any cases where the returns were not signed by the managers ?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Are you able to state whether it was so or not ?—A. They were signed, so far as I know, in all cases.

Q. Were there any cases where the managers did not make a return of the electoral vote separate from that of the other candidates ?—A. They were all returned in the same return.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any instance where the managers from any precinct failed to make a separate return of the electoral vote ?—A. No, sir; none that I know of. All the returns were made properly, so far as I know.

Q. Are you able to say that there was no such case ?—A. I give you the best of my belief and knowledge to that effect.

Q. You say the same in regard to the returns being signed, that they were all signed to the best of your knowledge ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any case where the managers' return only gave the general vote, so many for "Hayes and Wheeler," and so many for "Tilden and Hendricks," without giving the names of the electors.—A. I think they were all given by the electoral vote.

Q. Give the names of each elector.—A. Each elector of each party ?]

Q. That is, your present recollection ?—A. Yes, sir; and I am pretty certain that it is so.

Q. Who were the returns from Windsor signed by ?—A. They were signed by Galloway, Price, and I have forgotten the name of the other manager.

Q. By whom were the returns from Silverton signed ?—A. By Davis, Cooper, and I do not know the name of the other.

Q. You have no abstract of the vote in the various precincts here with you ?

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. The manager at Silverton, whose name you do not recollect, was colored, I believe ?—A. He was; and so was the one at Windsor.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Was the result of the vote, including all the voting-precincts, incorporated in the statement which was signed by county commissioners and returned to the secretary of state ?—A. Yes, sir; it was a copy taken from each precinct—the aggregate of each of the precincts.

Q. No precinct was excluded from the county returns ?—A. No precinct was excluded; that I am positive of.

Q. And no vote from any precinct ?—A. I do not understand what you mean by no vote. The returns of every precinct were made up and forwarded. No one precinct was left out.

Q. You included in your county statement, then, the vote of Jordan Mill precinct ?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what the vote there was ?—A. I think I have that. It was rather a ticket vote. It was 274 democratic and 124 republican.

Q. That is, each of the democratic electors received 274, and each of the republicans 124?—A. Yes, sir; I suspect so; for as I turn over the memorandum I see the majority is 150, and that would make the vote those figures.

Q. How was the vote of Silverton?—A. I have only got 52 republican majority at Silverton.

Q. Have you any recollection as to what the vote was in that precinct?—A. I can give you the vote for sheriff; it was 232 republican, 132 democratic; giving the republicans 50 majority.

Q. What do you say was the name of the man that carried the return to the secretary of state?—A. S. B. Spencer, chairman of the board.

Q. Where is he?—A. He is in Hamburg.

Q. He has not been examined so far as you know?—A. I do not know.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16, 1876.

J. ST. JULIEN YATES sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. You live at Aiken Court-House?—Answer. Yes, sir; I have lived there four years and a half.

Q. You were present at the canvassing of the votes before the county canvassers at the last election?—A. I was.

Q. During all the time of the canvassing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns all present at that canvass?—A. They were.

Q. You speak from your personal knowledge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was done with them?—A. We made out each return separately, and put all of them in a bundle together, and, if I am not mistaken, I think there was a piece of paper wrapped around them. I am not positive as to that; it was either a piece of paper or a large envelope, and one of these heavy, large, elastic bands placed around. I am not certain as to their being tied with a piece of string in addition to that, but I am positive about a large heavy rubber band being placed around the package.

Q. In what capacity did you act in reference to the count?—A. I assisted in the count.

Q. So that you helped to make the canvass?—A. I assisted in it.

Q. To whom were those packages delivered?—A. To S. B. Spencer, chairman of the board.

Q. For what purpose?—A. To come to Columbia and deliver them to H. E. Hayne.

Q. All the precinct managers' returns were present there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How certain are you that they were all inclosed in the package?—A. We looked them over together.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am a lawyer.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Have you a count of the vote in Aiken?—A. I have no memorandum.

Q. Did you take any part in canvassing the vote?—A. No, sir; I had nothing to do with the counting of the votes, with the exception of being present and seeing them counted and taking notes; as they would call them out I would take notes.

Q. You took no part in the canvass of the votes or in counting them?—A. No, sir; the others counted them; we had our different portions of the business.

Q. You took no memorandum of the vote, so as to be able to state the result in any precinct?—A. I did take a memorandum at the time; that was a part of my business; but I kept no duplicate, and cannot now speak positively as to the result at any precinct.

Q. You have not your memoranda with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember what the managers' count was on the vote of the presidential electors?—A. I cannot give you the exact figures; about 725 was our majority in Aiken.

Q. It varied for different officers?—A. I think Governor Hampton ran a little ahead.

Q. Do you remember what it was on the electors; are you able to state it from memory?—A. I cannot.

Q. It was less on electors?—A. Very little, extremely little. I think the electoral vote may have varied not over from three to five.

Q. Are you able to give the vote, or about the vote, in the precinct of Silverton?—A. I cannot.

Q. Or in Windsor?—A. I cannot.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any case where the managers' returns were not signed?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any case where they did not make a separate return of the electoral vote?—A. They were all made separately.

Q. Do you remember any instance where the managers' return was not made separately?—A. No, sir.

Q. And your recollection is that there was no return that was not signed by the managers?—A. I know of no return that was not signed by the managers.

Q. You refer now to the precinct returns?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Are you sure that Jordan's Mill precinct return was signed?—A. Well, if it was not, some mention would have been made of it at the time, I think. I do not know positively, but to the best of my recollection and belief it was signed.

Q. Whatever return there was from Jordan's Mill was put in the package to be sent by the messenger to the secretary of state?—A. All of the returns from the different precincts were called over and placed in that package.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16, 1876.

LOUIS LE COMPTE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am twenty-seven years of age; residence, Columbia, S. C.; occupation, practicing attorney.

Q. How long have you lived in this city?—A. Ever since 1868.

Q. Were you present at the time the canvass was made by the board of State canvassers of the vote for the electors for President and Vice-President?—A. I was constantly present.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I was present as one of a certain number selected on the part of the democratic party and admitted to the room. Eight gentlemen were admitted on either side.

Q. State when the canvassing of the vote for electors began.—A. The actual canvass began on Friday, the 17th.

Q. What time of day?—A. We went in there early in the morning, and the board adjourned immediately until some time after mid-day; I think about 1 o'clock. They did not begin the actual canvass until at least 1 o'clock, or some time afterward. I think we adjourned until 1, and began the actual count later.

Q. How long were the canvassers engaged in that count on that day? State the facts generally in regard to it.—A. We went on with the count until some hour in the evening, after dark, I think probably about half past 7, when an adjournment was had. Now that I think of it, I am not sure but that we had two adjournments—one for dinner and another later in the day. Certainly there was one adjournment of at least an hour or an hour and a half; with that exception we continued the count until about 11 o'clock at night.

Q. State the manner of the count in the beginning.—A. The board signified an intention to take up the officers separately; to begin with the electors and continue with that count until it was finished, and afterward to take up the State officials and then the county and circuit officers of the State. The first count was confined only to the electors.

Q. State the manner in which that count was conducted in the beginning.—A. When we first went in, the board was asked as to the construction of an order which had been made by the supreme court. They were asked as to their intention in proceeding with the count, and they said that while they would return to the supreme court only the figures as they appeared upon the statements of the county canvassers, they would at the same time scrutinize the returns of the managers, which were forwarded in the same batch of papers, and that if any discrepancies appeared they would make a note of them and call the attention of the supreme court to them. The return itself was to be made up on the basis of the county canvassers' returns, but these discrepancies were to be noted and the attention of the court called to them, and for that purpose they said they would take up the returns of the precinct managers.

Q. Did they do so?—A. They did then take up the returns of the precinct managers. They began with Abbeville County.

Q. How far did they proceed through the counties, making a comparison of the managers' returns with the statements of the county canvassers?—A. They proceeded until they had completed the county of Charleston.

Q. How many counties did that include?—A. Six counties.

Q. What time was that?—A. That was late at night; probably 10 o'clock—or between 9 and 10.

Q. What was done then?—A. The board then passed a formal resolution to discontinue the scrutiny of the managers' returns and to examine the county canvassers' returns alone.

Q. State whether any protest was made against that change of method in the count of the votes.—A. When the county of Beaufort was reached the chairman of the board asked whether there was any objection to a discontinuance of the scrutiny of the managers' returns, and General Connor, who was present in the same capacity that I was, arose and said that we would prefer that they should go on with the managers' returns. They then continued the managers' returns until they had completed the county of Charleston. At that point either the chairman himself upon his own motion put the resolution, or some one arose and made a motion, and the board passed the resolution to discontinue the examination of the managers' returns. Upon that General Conner arose and signified his objection to their proceeding in that way. It was then stated by the chairman of the board that they had passed a formal resolution. Upon that—my recollection is very distinct—we had some consultation, and a formal protest was made in writing. The consultation consumed several minutes; I do not think I can be mistaken about it. It was made in the first place verbally, and one of us suggested that it should be in writing, and General Conner went and wrote it.

Q. How long after that did the board continue in session, and how many other counties did they reckon in their count before adjournment?—A. It was very late then, and we continued for awhile upon the county canvassers' returns, and completed three or four counties, ending with Georgetown, I think. My recollection is not so distinct as to that.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Have you a copy of that protest to which you refer?—A. No, sir; no copy was retained. It was put in writing and handed in.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you remember when the canvassing of the vote for electors was completed by this board?—A. We went on next day with the State electors, and completed the count early in the evening of that day, which was Saturday.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. I understand you, then, that the board overruled the protest of General Conner?—A. Well, they passed this resolution, without waiting for an objection, and then they entered our objection and spoke about it for awhile, and it was announced that the resolution had been passed, and we then entered the protest.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Did you say that when the chairman inquired if there was objection no objection was made, and that then they discontinued considering the precinct returns?—A. No, sir. I said that in the course of the counting, when the county of Beaufort was reached, the chairman asked if there was objection, and objection was made, and they continued then with the precinct returns, and then the resolution to discontinue was passed after they had finished Charleston County.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you remember when the count of the entire vote was completed?—A. It was completed some time on Monday. I was not present when that was completed. I was absent on Sunday and went back for a while on Monday, and was present all day. I was in the room when it was completed, but only passing through.

Q. Please state who composed this board of State canvassers.—A. It was composed of the secretary of state, H. E. Hayne; Mr. E. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; F. L. Cordozo, State treasurer; William Stone, attorney-general; and Mr. Purvis, the adjutant and inspector general.

Q. State how many of those officers were candidates for re-election at the late election?—A. Three of the board: the secretary of state, Hayne; the treasurer, Cordozo; and the comptroller-general, Dunn.

Q. They were candidates for re-election to the same offices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And their names appeared upon the returns which they themselves were counting or canvassing. Upon which of the tickets were these gentlemen candidates?—A. Upon the republican ticket.

Q. Do you know Mr. G. M. Walker, of this city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his occupation?—A. Cashier of the Union Savings Bank.

Q. In what capacity was he present on that occasion?—A. There was some discussion as to the best accountant in the city, without respect to any other qualification. We agreed first upon a gentleman employed in the railroad-office, but it was impossible for him to go, and I then called upon Mr. Walker, and after a good deal of solicitation induced him to come down, simply in the capacity of a man who is ready at figures.

Q. Simply as an expert and nothing else?—A. As an expert.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you remember whether the board assigned as a reason for discontinuing the examination of the precinct managers' returns that they could not complete the canvass within the time fixed by law if they followed through in that way an examination of all returns in the State?—A. I have not a distinct recollection of the reason being formally assigned in that way. It certainly was said by the board that they were taking too long, or something of that sort, and the chairman turned to me several times and objected to going on.

Q. Was it said that they could not complete it within the time fixed by law?—A. I do not collect anything of that sort being stated.

Q. When did the time fixed by law, within which they must complete the canvass, expire?—A. I would have to answer that question by speaking of that the board themselves stated as to their time; ten days is the time fixed by law.

Q. Do you know how near the expiration of the ten days this Monday when they completed the canvass was? Was it not the last day?—A. They began on the 10th, and the act gave them ten days. The explanation I wish to make is this: Pending the proceedings in the courts, when we went to the board they asked us our opinion upon this point.

Q. I prefer that you answer the question I have put.—A. I beg pardon; I only gave that explanation by permission.

Q. Do you remember which member of the board stated that they would not have time, or that they were using too much time?—A. I think it was stated to me by the chairman, Mr. Hayne.

Q. Did you hear the resolution, or did you hear a resolution, to the effect that Mr. Hayne would take no part in the canvass in which he was interested, and so with the other officers who were candidates?—A. There was such a formal resolution read and reported to us.

Q. And the committees were notified of that?—A. Yes, sir; that those members would retire.

Q. That each candidate for re-election would take no part in the canvassing of the votes in which he was interested?—A. Yes, sir; that was the purport of the resolution.

Q. How many counties are there in the State?—A. Thirty-three.

Q. And you, in the length of time you have stated, from late on Friday night, had only gone through with the count of six counties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The order of the court was confined to a canvass of the county commissioners' returns?

(Mr. Cochrane objects to the question on the ground that the order of the court speaks for itself.)

Q. Was there anything said as to what was the effect of the order of the court in limiting the exercise of the powers of the canvassing officers?—A. There was something said when we first went in as to the construction of the order which should be adopted. The order spoke of the "statements" forwarded by the county canvassers, and the county canvassers had sent forward not only their own statements, but also statements which had been sent to them by the managers, and the question was raised exactly what was meant by the term. The settlement of the question was really waived, and they went on with all the returns, indicating, however, an intention to return to the court the county canvassers' returns.

Q. Then there was a difference of opinion as to the effect of the order upon their action?—A. There was some discussion as to what the effect was, and then the settlement was waived.

Q. I think you stated that when you entered on the examination in the mode you describe, beginning with Abbeville, the canvassers said they would examine the managers' returns, and that if they found discrepancies they would, in addition to returning to the court the canvass from the county returns under the order, call the attention of the court to those discrepancies?—A. Precisely.

Q. Not as a part of their return, but as an independent suggestion?—A. The purpose of that was to submit to the court to construe its own order, and if it construed it to include both, then to let it do so.

Q. In the six counties examined there was no change made from the county returns in the results?—A. A good many discrepancies were noted.

Q. But no change was made in the county returns in the results arrived at by the board. They did not alter the results?—A. They discovered discrepancies and made notes in the margin.

Q. But did they change the county returns?—A. They did not alter them beyond noting the discrepancies in the margin.

Q. They determined the result to which the county returns brought them, and then made a note of the discrepancies?—A. Their purpose was not to determine anything at all. Their idea was simply to get these figures and return them, without making any determination at all.

Q. They arrived at the result?—A. Yes, sir; they added up the figures according to the county returns, noting in the margin the discrepancies from the precinct returns.

Q. You were not there at the conclusion of the canvass?—A. I was there at the conclusion of the canvass of the vote for electors. I was absent on Monday for a while, and returned just as they were coming out from the canvass.

Q. But when they ceased to canvass you were not present?—A. I was in the ante-room and went back, I think, when they announced the vote. I was off duty at that time, but I went in as they announced the last result.

Q. How long were you there on Monday?—A. I was there twice. I was there in the morning about 11 o'clock, and I returned in the afternoon.

Q. How long were you there in the morning?—A. Only about half an hour; returned afterward.

Q. And when you returned they had got through?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE

Q. What time did the board finally adjourn?—A. It is hard for me to recollect the hour. I think it was some time in the afternoon. My recollection about Monday is less distinct because I was not attending to the matter on that day. It was only out of curiosity that I was there.

Q. You say the actual count commenced on Friday, the 17th of November?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The period for commencing the canvass was the 10th of November, was it?—A. Yes, sir; for the meeting of the State board.

Q. What was done between the 10th and the 17th?—A. On the 10th we appeared before the board and made some inquiries as to the course of procedure which they were to take in the canvass. They then adjourned for some time to consider those questions. They met again on Saturday, and some other discussions took place. They adjourned again on Monday. On Monday they were served with some notices of proceedings in the supreme court of a prohibitory character.

Q. Monday was the 13th?—A. Yes, sir. On Tuesday we appeared before the board, and we adjourned to go into the supreme court. Wednesday and Thursday those matters were still pending in the supreme court. On Wednesday, I think, we appeared before the board and requested that they should go on with the count in a ministerial way, and they passed a resolution that they would do nothing further until the supreme court had decided.

Q. The supreme court then made an order against the board before they had commenced any canvass?—A. They passed a rule for them to show cause why writs of prohibition and mandamus should not issue.

Q. Was that rule made by the court before they had taken any step in the way of counting?—A. Yes, sir; it was taken before they had made any actual count at all.

Q. And before any determination was made as to how they would proceed to count?—A. O, no, sir; they had made several formal determinations, and upon that the proceedings were based.

Q. What sort of determinations?—A. We had presented demands, and they had thereupon presented formal resolutions.

Q. Of what character?

Mr. LAPHAM. Those are matters of record.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Make the explanation that you desired to make before with regard to the ten days.—

A. It was with regard to the limitation of the time. At one of the sessions of the board (I think it was on Tuesday, when the board decided to go in to the supreme court and not to continue the count) they asked our opinion whether the days during which the proceedings continued in the courts would be included within the ten days fixed by law, or whether they would be excluded, and it was suggested upon our part they would be excluded; that it was analogous to other cases at law, and that, pending the prohibition of the court, the days were not to be counted, and the board, as we understood, assented to that.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. There is no provision in the statute which would exclude any time occupied by judicial proceedings, is there?—A. No, sir.

Q. If the board had delayed their final decision until a later period in the day on which they adjourned, and if they had been then interfered with in making a determination, would not the ten days fixed by the statute have expired before they could make any determination at all?—A. They did not propose to make a determination until Wednesday or Thursday following. They commenced on Friday, the 10th, but they made no determination on Monday, the 20th.

Q. On what day was it made, then?—A. What they called their determination was made, I think, on the Thursday morning following.

Q. I understood you to say that they adjourned finally on Monday, the 20th?—A. No, sir; they simply completed their count on Monday, the 20th, for the purpose of a return to the board, and they then again met in our presence, I think, on Thursday. They completed the count on Monday, and took two days for the clerical work of preparing their return.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. Please state how the result of the vote is certified, whether to the governor or to the secretary of state.—A. It is certified to the secretary of state.

Q. Then, under your law, the secretary of state issues the certificate to the electors?—A. I can remember no provision authorizing the governor to join in the matter in any shape or form. The secretary of state certifies to all the State officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The officers were certified, as appears from the record, on the 22d.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. On what day in the proceedings was an order for contempt issued against the State canvassers?—A. I was absent from the city when those proceedings were instituted.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Was there more than one occasion when Mr. Conner made a protest when you were there ?—A. Yes, sir ; he made a good many protests, especially in regard to the Robbins precinct box, and a written protest was made.

Q. Was that filed with the board ?—A. They were all read before the board and handed to the clerk.

Q. Without attempting to give details, state, in substance, what was the objection to Robbins precinct.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Does that appear by the protest that was filed ?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then I object.

The chair overruled the objection.

A. The objection to the Robbins box was that it never had been sent to the county canvassers, and had not come to the secretary of state through the legal channel, but had been brought by a wholly unauthorized person, and had no business to be in the batch of papers returned to the State canvassers.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. That it was not an official return ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. It was a question of irregularity ?—A. It was a question of the authenticity of the paper.

Q. There was no allegation in the vote itself ?—A. Yes, sir ; allegations of fraud were made. Explanations were asked for, and General Hagood arose and explained the manner in which it arose, and made direct allegations of fraud.

Q. It was on Friday, if I understand you, the first day of the count, that this question was asked, when you reached Beaufort County, whether that mode of canvassing should be continued further ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Conner, or some one in behalf of your committee, desired to have it continued ?—A. Precisely.

Q. And it was continued further until they concluded Charleston County ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the same evening ?—A. The same evening, Friday.

Q. Was it that evening that the board adopted the resolution to which you have referred ?—A. It was that evening, sir.

Q. Was it that evening that Mr. Conner filed the protest ?—A. It was immediately upon the adoption of the resolution, that same evening.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Mr. Conner appeared as counsel for the democratic candidates ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. After the board had completed the six counties, and proceeded to count the balance of the vote by the county commissioners' returns, was any request made by yourself, or any one else representing the democrats, for an opportunity to examine the precinct returns remaining ?—A. On Saturday evening General Gordon came before the board and requested them to permit him to make an examination of the precinct managers' returns, and, while not taking them out of the custody of the board, to bring in a sufficient clerical force to copy them. The board, after considering the matter for a while, decided that they could not permit that use to be made of the returns until the canvassing was finished, when they said they would be filed in the secretary of state's office and would be public documents. They refused the request pending the count.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16, 1876.

JOHN T. RHETT sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. State your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am 40 years of age, a lawyer by profession ; I reside in Columbia, and have lived here since I was twelve years old.

Q. Were you present at the time the canvassing of the votes cast at the last election was done by the board of State canvassers ? If so, in what capacity ?—A. I was, sir. Mr. Le Compte was associated with me, but from my being the senior, and for no other reason, I was more specially charged with that portion of the business on the democratic side than any other person. I made the arrangements with Mr. Hayne, after consultation with the other gentlemen, that there should be eight persons allowed to be present on either side. I was present from first to last, as I considered myself more specially in charge of that branch of the matter than any other of the attorneys.

Q. Please state in your own way what occurred.—A. I am not very good about dates, but I will give you them as well as I can. We went there on the 10th. On each successive day, the five lawyers who were first requested to act on behalf of the democratic party went there and made the point which you will see published in the record that you have here. After we got the proceedings filed in the supreme court the board of canvassers and the supreme court were sitting at the same time, and, of course, we could not all attend in both places at the same time, so I was requested to get Mr. LeCompte to go with me, and any other gentleman that I could get, and to be specially in charge of the proceedings on the democratic side before the board of canvassers, until they got through, and then to join the other lawyers in the supreme court, which sat in the same building. I did so. We went there, and it was on Friday, the 17th, I think, that we went into a canvass of the returns. The vote for presidential electors was first taken up.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Between the 10th and the 17th was there any counting done?—A. No, sir. We laid our points before the board, as you will see by this record, but there was no counting done. Mr. LeCompte overlooked the papers in the returns. I staid on the floor; Mr. LeCompte generally stood by Mr. Hayne, the chairman of the board, to see that he read the returns correctly. When the canvass was commenced I was under the impression that we were only going into the county canvassers' returns. When they began with the first county in the State, the chairman of the board said that they would look into the precinct managers'. I was somewhat surprised. I asked them for the order of the court, looked at it, and had some consultation with some of the lawyers, who called my attention to the word "state-ments" there, and they came to the conclusion that we could very well go on, and we said nothing further about it to the board. They went on with them for, I think, six counties, commencing at Abbeville and ending with Charleston. They found, as you will see, a good many discrepancies. Mr. Hayne, who was constantly leaving the board and talking to me, came over and asked me whether they had not better stop this thing; that he thought the order of the supreme court only required them to go into the county canvassers' returns. I laughed and said something, and he asked whether I would consent. I just shook my head and said, "No; there is the order; you must follow it through." They went on, and at the end of the six counties, I think, we adjourned for supper. I thought they were going very slowly; I thought they were taking much more time than was necessary, and said so to the board before they adjourned. I laughed at the chairman about these managers' returns that they stood so much on at first, and I said to him that he had his elephant on his hands. "Well," said he, "I am going to try to make short work of it when I come back." They came back, and, after going into the count of Beaufort, I think, (I would not have remembered it if I had not heard Mr. LeCompte.) they asked us whether we would have any objection to stop the managers' returns and go on with the county canvassers' returns. This was after supper. General Conner was in and out while the supreme court was in session, and in the evening he would join us before the board; so he was present at this time. I had spoken to him in the mean time, and I replied to the chairman: "You have gone on with the thing, and I think you had better go through with it; we stand on the order of the court." He said he did not construe the order in that way. Said I: "You construed it so at first." He said that would take so much time that they never could get through the returns. That was his principal reason. This was a side conversation. I told him I was convinced that we could do it easily, if we would only level ourselves down to the work—commence a little sooner, and sit a little later, and work a little more steadily. They went on through Beaufort and Charleston, and then the board had some talk with each other, and they passed the resolution which Mr. LeCompte has mentioned here, limiting themselves to the county canvassers' returns. Before that time, after speaking to me, Mr. Hayne went back as chairman of the board and openly asked the democrats whether they had any objection to discontinuing, and General Conner said they had. This inquiry was made by the chairman officially. His conversation with me was aloud, but not official. After they passed this resolution and started with the next county, General Conner first made a verbal protest, and either the chairman or some member of the board suggested that whatever was done should be done in writing. We talked it over, and General Conner sat down and wrote a protest and arose and read it to the board. My impression is that that protest was published in the daily papers, possibly in the Charleston Journal of Commerce, on the day next succeeding. At all events, my recollection is perfectly distinct as to the fact of his making the protest first verbally and then reducing it to writing and putting it on the table. The board then proceeded with the county canvassers' returns, leaving out the managers' returns, and finished the canvass of the vote for the presidential electors on Saturday, I think.

Q. What time on Friday did you begin the canvass?—A. I think about one o'clock; but I cannot pretend to remember as to hours of adjournment.

Q. What length of time did you ordinarily adjourn for meals?—A. I think about two hours, certainly an hour and a half. We adjourned for dinner and we adjourned for tea.

Q. How many precincts are there in Charleston County?—A. I cannot remember that I left that to Mr. Walker; but you can find it in the statute. After this, I think General Gordon, who was there, made the request spoken of by Mr. LeCompte, that the board would allow our side to have the managers' return. That request was made verbally, but he afterwards reduced it to writing. He asked them to let him have it so that he could look over it on Sunday. When they adjourned one of the last things they did was that the chairman asked me very particularly where General Gordon staid, so that they could get an answer to him; and I came down and saw General Gordon and told him to expect an answer from the board. Whether he got one or not I do not know. He did not get the returns; that I do know.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. According to your recollection, at what time was the canvass of the electoral vote completed?—A. I cannot pretend to say; I did not look at my watch.

Q. Was it before or after dinner?—A. I think it was before; but I would not put much faith in my impression on that point.

Q. It was Saturday before they completed the canvass of the electoral vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the persons representing the democrats there were asked by Mr. Hayne whether the order confined the board to the county canvassers' returns, the answer was, in substance, that he must construe the order himself, or act upon his own construction of it, you declined to give him an opinion on that subject by which he might be guided?—A. No, sir; I can't say that I remember anything of that sort.

Q. Did you express an opinion as to whether the order did limit them or not?—A. I expressed an opinion to my associates in private.

Q. Did you express any to Mr. Hayne or to the board?—A. I don't think I did; I don't think I was asked.

Q. I understood you to say that, in substance, it was stated to Mr. Hayne that the board must act on their own interpretation of the order of the court; that they must determine that for themselves?—A. I think you misunderstood me.

Q. Mr. Hayne asked the question whether the order did not confine them to the county commissioners' returns, did he not?—A. No, sir; I do not remember that he did; that conversation with me was a side conversation, not official.

Q. Well, he asked you?—A. No, sir; he did not ask me that.

Q. What was the question he asked you?—A. I have not said that he asked me any question.

Q. What was said by him about the effect of the order, as to whether it limited or did not limit them to the county canvassers' returns?—A. I made a remark about that myself.

Q. To whom?—A. To the lawyers who were associated with me in the matter.

Q. In the presence of the board?—A. Not in the presence of the board; aside.

Q. Was there anything said to the board by those representing the democrats there as to the construction of that order?—A. No, sir; certainly not by me. We said nothing officially. There was a good deal of talk all round.

Q. But the democrats there present did not say whether the order did or did not limit the board to the county canvassers' returns?—A. That may have been said; there was a good deal of conversation on the subject.

Q. You do not remember to have heard that said to the board?—A. No, sir; I do not remember anything being said officially to the board, if that is what you mean.

Q. Don't you know that the board were left to determine the construction to be given to this order themselves? In other words, was there any agreement there between those representing the republicans and those representing the democrats as to what the effect of the order was in limiting the board to the county canvassers' returns?—A. Well, sir, the board would necessarily have been left to themselves; they alone could judge; so I do not exactly understand you.

Q. I want to know whether that question came up there and was discussed before the board between those representing the respective parties?—A. No, sir; it was discussed between the board, and they said that they so construed the order, and that they intended to do it.

Q. To do what?—A. To go into the managers' returns; that they so construed the order.

Q. That was when they first began?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They subsequently made an opposite statement, I understand you?—A. Exactly opposite.

Q. That they had concluded that they were limited by that order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had there not in the mean time been anything said to them by either the democrats or the republicans there present as to the effect of the order?—A. Yes; a little joke. I told you that I laughed at Mr. Hayne about getting himself into a fix; getting an elephant on his hands.

Q. Was there nothing said aside from that joke?—A. No, sir; as soon as we got into the managers' returns—

Q. Was it not stated in the outset that whatever errors the managers' returns disclosed should be kept on a memorandum submitted to the board apart from the return to the order?—A. Yes, sir; separate, but to be sent up with them.

Q. They started with that intention?—A. Not to change the county returns, but simply to report the discrepancies, if any, between those and the managers' returns?—A. I don't know how far they construed their rights to extend.

Q. I am only asking whether it was not stated in the outset that they would make that classification of results, the county managers' returns by themselves, distinct, and the others by way of suggestion, if any variation was found?—A. Yes.

Q. There was no general canvass from the managers' returns. They only noted where they differed, if they did differ, from the county returns?—A. No, sir; it was a most thorough return.

Q. A full canvass from the managers' returns?—A. As far as they went, through the first six counties.

Q. Do you remember that there was a managers' return present and examined from every precinct in all those six counties?—A. No, sir; I remember very distinctly that there were several managers' returns missing, and some conversation occurred between the board and myself on the subject.

Q. That is, they were not found among the returns from the county?—A. They so said.

Q. Then there were missing returns in the first six counties they examined?—A. They so said.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. You did not express an opinion as to the proper interpretation of the rule of the court?—A. No sir.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. After this talk with the board about what was the proper construction of the order of the supreme court, the board did, as a matter of fact, proceed to canvass the managers' returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in those six counties they did canvass the managers' returns and made their estimate upon them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then they stopped?—A. Yes, sir. I will say in explanation, that I expressed to the attorneys, my associates, the opinion that they should not have gone into the canvass.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any real difficulty within the time that remained even supposing that the returns had to be made on the 20th, and the canvass closed, in canvassing all those returns in the way they had begun?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Would they have had time to do it?—A. O, plenty, plenty of time; more time than was necessary.

Mr. BANKS. That is a matter of opinion. You do not know it of your own knowledge?

The WITNESS. Well, sir, I know it of my own knowledge of the six counties and all the counties canvassed.

Mr. BANKS. You think you could have done it, but you don't know that they could have done it?

The WITNESS. I think they could.

Mr. PHILIPS. You know as a matter of fact that they did canvass the six counties in the time you have stated, and you base your judgment as to the remaining counties upon that?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. But you do not know that. It is really only a matter of opinion?

The WITNESS. It is only a matter of opinion, as I have said.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. State whether the board and all of you there present agreed that Sundays were to be excluded from the ten days allowed by law?—A. If you mean in a formal manner, I do not know that they did.

Q. I do not refer to a resolution of the board, but I ask whether they came to that conclusion?—A. We were asked whether we thought so, and we said no. Mr. Hayne came and sat down by me and asked me whether it was my opinion as a lawyer that Sunday was a dies non, and I told him I thought it ought to be excluded.

Q. State whether, by consent all round, Sunday was to be excluded from the count?—A. There was no formal consent. It was so understood by us.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Was there a general understanding to that effect?—A. It was generally so understood by us, but there was no formal binding of themselves to it. It was understood that Sunday was not to be counted.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. In what way was that understanding expressed?—A. I find some little difficulty in stating it. There was no formal resolution to that effect, but it was understood that Sunday was to be excluded.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. The democratic counsel and the State board talked a good deal about excluding Sunday?—A. A great deal. We were asked our opinion about it.

Q. From the conversations which you had with the members of the board on that subject, you formed the idea that Sunday was to be excluded?—A. I undoubtedly did.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. I ask you again, in what way was that understanding expressed?—A. By the various conversations that we had with the members of the board.

Q. In what way was that general understanding conveyed to the board? I will not press the question. It is difficult to answer, as you say.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. At what time did they commence counting those six counties?—A. I told you before that my memory is not very distinct as to the hour of the day, but I think it was about 1 o'clock on Friday, the 17th of November.

Q. What time was it when they completed the counting of the precinct returns for those six counties?—A. I can tell you only approximately; it was somewhere about 11 or 12 o'clock when we adjourned that night.

Q. What had been done up to that time?—A. I cannot tell you exactly.

Q. Had more than the six counties been counted?—A. Yes; I think there had been more than six counted.

Q. How many?—A. I cannot answer that question, sir. I had a clerk there whose business it was to keep count of that. If you will let me refer to memoranda I can tell you. I cannot pretend to state from memory the hours when we adjourned for dinner or supper, nor what we did, nor how far we went on one particular day.

Q. Well, they counted the six counties by the county commissioners' statements and the precinct returns; what I want to know is what time you got through with that work?—A. I know what you want to know, but I cannot remember.

Q. Was not a considerable portion of the time up to about 11 o'clock, the hour of adjournment, on Friday evening, taken up in counting the six counties in which the precinct returns were examined?—A. If you will say a considerable portion of that day I will say yes; but I cannot separate the work of the day from that of the night.

Q. That count was for seven officers only?—A. It was for the presidential electors, whatever the number is.

Q. Were there not more than fifty officers for whom the vote had to be canvassed before the final adjournment?—A. You can tell as well as I can. I never counted the officers; there was a good number of them.

Q. How many members of the house are there?—A. One hundred and twenty-four, I think.

Q. And how many State senators?—A. Thirty-three.

Q. How many other candidates for State offices were there?—A. I cannot recall all the officers without refreshing my memory.

Q. How many county officers were there to be canvassed by the State board?—A. They are all enumerated in that proceeding before the court. There were members of the legislature, clerk of the court, judge of probate, sheriff, county commissioners, and some school commissioners. That is all I can remember.

Q. Those were voted for in each county in the State?—A. Yes; but they were on one return. The presidential electors' return came up separately. All the rest of the officers came up on one return.

Q. Would this statement be correct, one hundred and twenty-four representatives, fifteen senators, and six State officers?—A. Counting the secretary of state and leaving out the governor and lieutenant-governor, there were six State officers.

Q. Were there ninety-six county commissioners?—A. Yes; three from each county.

Q. Five circuit solicitors?—A. Eight, I think.

Q. Thirty-two sheriffs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thirty-two clerks of court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thirty-two probate judges—

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Do you know all this of your own knowledge, or are you only guessing?—A. I know nothing in the world about it except the law, but no doubt it is so.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Thirty-two school commissioners?—A. One for each county.

Q. Now, the State board was required to canvass for all these officers within the time fixed by law?—A. Yes, sir; but they did not canvass for them separately, one after another, as you seem to think. They would read out each return, covering every officer in it. They did not take each one separately.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. I believe it was conceded in the supreme court, subsequently, that there was no difference between the county officers' returns and the managers' returns, so far as members of the legislature were concerned?—A. Yes, sir; it was admitted in open court, and has been admitted ever since.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. Mr. LoCompte spoke of several protests that were made during the proceedings before the board; were they argued?—A. They were the basis of our whole action, and you will find them as exhibits in the proceedings.

Q. Were they argued before the board?—A. Briefly; not elaborately argued.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Those protests were made previous to the 17th of November, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. PHILLIPS :

Q. They were made in writing and submitted to the board?—A. Yes, sir; for their ruling.

By Mr. BANKS :

Q. When were the demands that have been spoken of made?—A. The protests and the demands were one and the same thing.

Q. Did you say that they were argued elaborately?—A. No; I said they were not argued elaborately. They were argued when they wished to hear us.

COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, December 18, 1876.

GEORGE E. OSBORNE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age and residence?—Answer. I am thirty-two years of age, and I reside in the town of Williston, Barnwell County.

Q. Were you present at any time on the day of the last presidential election at the Blackville precinct?—A. I was there on the 7th day of November last, when the election was held for presidential electors and State and county officers.

Q. State what you know, if anything, of ballots having been cast by voters at that precinct for Timothy Hurley, one of the republican candidates for elector?—A. Well, sir; I know that. I, as county chairman of the republican party, issued republican tickets on that day, and I was present at the polls, and of my own knowledge I know there were none of the republican tickets scratched. I saw myself fifteen or twenty voters go up in a line with the tickets I had given them and deposit those ballots in the box.

Q. State whether the name of Timothy Hurley was on those tickets?—A. It was printed on the tickets that I gave them; there was no scratching of the republican ticket at all.

Q. Where did you vote yourself on that day?—A. At that poll.

Q. For what electors did you vote?—A. I voted for Mr. Hurley, and for Winsmith, Cook, Bowen, and the other republican electors.

Q. Were you present at the canvass by the managers?—A. I was not.

Q. Were you at the county canvass?—A. I was not.

Q. State anything further that you know in relation to the conduct of the election at that precinct?—A. I will state this much in connection with Hurley's vote: that the supervisors of the precincts came to my room to get envelopes and stamps to forward their returns to the chief supervisor here, and the republican supervisor at Blackville called my attention to the fact that Hurley's name was left out of the return, and I told him he had better go to Mr. Bellinger, the democratic supervisor—

Mr. ABBOTT. Is this testimony about what the witness was told by somebody?

The WITNESS. I give it only as what the supervisor stated to me.

Q. You don't know of your own personal knowledge?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. State anything you know of the conduct of the election at that poll, if there was anything peculiar about it?—A. Nothing that I know of my own knowledge, only what I have already stated, that I know there was a large republican vote polled there, and that they were all surprised after the canvass to find out that—

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly testimony.

Q. Were you at any other poll than that one that day?—A. Yes, sir; Midway.

Q. What time?—A. I went down on the 11 o'clock train, and reached there between 12 and 1 o'clock. I staid there until the train returned, about half past one. I was there about an hour, I suppose.

Q. State if you have any knowledge of any violence at any of the voting-places, or of any persons being deprived of the right to vote?

Mr. COCHRANE. I object. This matter has been referred to a subcommittee, and it is in no way responsive to any testimony which has been offered by the majority, and I object to going into the question of intimidation at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding was that the testimony offered at this time on the part of the republicans was to be only responsive to that of the democrats already on record.

By Mr. JONES:

Q. How long have you lived in Barnwell County?—A. Six years.

Q. Where were you born?—A. In Charleston, South Carolina.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. You say you were not present at this Blackville precinct all day?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long were you absent from that precinct?—A. I could not tell exactly the time between the trains. I think the train takes about an hour to run down to Midway, and it is about an hour before it gets back. I suppose about three hours altogether.

Q. You were absent, then, three hours?—A. Yes, sir; from 11 o'clock until some time after 3.

Q. You were not present when the ballots were counted by the precinct managers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor when the precinct managers' returns were canvassed by the county commissioners?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then how are you able to state that none of the republican tickets at that precinct were scratched?—A. I said to my own knowledge. I could not say that there were none scratched, but to my knowledge.

Q. You were absent three hours during the day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not see the ballots inspected after they were deposited in the box?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, so far as you have any personal knowledge, numbers of the ballots which you distributed there might have been changed by the electors?—A. They may have been, sir. As I stated, there were fifteen or twenty that I marched up and voted myself that I know were not changed.

Q. Had you any personal knowledge of any of those fifteen or twenty that you took up?—A. No, sir; of course no more than distributing the tickets.

Q. Then, the extent of your information is the distribution of the tickets, which were intact when distributed, containing the names of all the electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether they were afterwards changed or not, you cannot state of your own personal knowledge?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Be kind enough to give me the names of the several republican electors.—A. C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Timothy Hurley; I think it is Johnson Cook—I know it is Cook; Green—I don't know whether it is Samuel—I can't remember all the initials, because some of them I do not know. There were Cook, Green, and Myers, I think. It is Myers instead of Green; that is it.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure there was no elector by the name of Green?—A. Yes, sir; I am. I think so. I am not positive it is Myers from Colleton. I don't know the men positively.

Q. You are not able to swear positively that there was not an elector by the name of Green? What others were there?—A. There were seven of them. I cannot recollect all their names. There is Hurley, Cook, Winsmith, Bowen, Myers, Nash. The others I cannot think of.

ROBERT A. SISSON sworn and examined.

Question. What is your residence?—Answer. Blackville, Barnwell County.

Q. Your age?—A. Thirty-two.

Q. Occupation?—A. I am reading clerk of the State senate.

Q. Where were you on the 7th of November last, the day of the presidential election?—A. At Blackville.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I was there all day as one of the board of managers, conducting the election.

Q. State who were present when the tickets were canvassed by the board of managers of that precinct?—A. The tickets were counted. I kept the tally myself.

Q. State what you know, if anything, as to whether the name of Timothy Hurley was on the tickets which were cast at that precinct on that day.—A. Yes, sir; they were on all the republican tickets. I voted for him there myself, and so did every other republican who voted at that box.

Q. How many republican votes were cast?—A. 696 I think was the number of votes that the republican electors received; 695 or 696.

Q. How many votes did Hurley have?—A. Mr. Hurley had the same number of votes that the rest had, but the name was left off by mistake. I kept the tally, and my tally agreed with the democratic tally for everything, from governor down.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Mr. Hurley's name was left off where?—A. In the summing up the vote of that precinct.

Q. In the managers' return, you mean?—A. Yes, sir; the managers' return.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Was it left off in the tally?—A. No, sir; it was in the tally.

Q. Why was it left off on the managers' return?—A. Well, I think it was purely a mistake. I was absent just at that time, between that and five o'clock in the morning, and the democratic supervisor, Mr. Bellinger, made out the list for the two managers, and instead of writing seven names he just wrote six. I do not think he did it with any intention of fraud or anything of that kind. In the return that he made to the chief supervisor of elections the vote for Hurley is given the same as the rest, so that proves that he could have had no intention of leaving it out fraudulently.

Q. It was a mere accident?—A. Yes, sir; he is a gentleman who would not descend to any trick of that sort, although he was deeply interested in having Tilden elected. It was a pure mistake. If it had not been a mistake he never would have made a report to the chief supervisor of elections giving Hurley the vote; and I think if he were summoned he would testify the same way.

Q. You were not at the canvass, I suppose?—A. No, sir; I was not present at that time.

Q. Were the tickets that were used printed tickets?—A. They were printed tickets.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. By whom were they furnished for that poll?—A. By the State executive committee. They were furnished in regular form as they always are.

Q. They were all one print?—A. Yes, sir; we had only one regular ticket, a red ticket.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Have you a copy of the ticket?—A. No, sir; I have not.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Is there not one in the city?—A. I presume there is.

Q. See if you can get one.

[The witness produced one for Richland County, which he says is the same as that for Barnwell, but he was instructed to produce one for Barnwell County.]

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 18, 1876.

L. W. MIMMS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. Rosemary Township, Barnwell County.

Q. What election-precinct?—A. Robbins.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. I was United States deputy marshal at Robbins precinct.

Q. Where were you that day?—A. I was there at Robbins.

Q. What is your age?—A. I was born in 1849.

Q. What time did you go to Robbins that morning?—A. I arrived there about half after six o'clock. I suppose it was about that time of day.

Q. Where was the poll to be held?—A. In the railroad depot.

Q. When you reached there were there many people there?—A. Right smart of them was there when I got there.

Q. Who were they?—A. Pretty much all the white people that did come was there when I got there.

Q. You found them there when you got there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they?—A. They was around the depot and about there in the place.

Q. What time did they commence voting?—A. They commenced voting about the same time that I got there, or a little afterward.

Q. Was there any time that the voting was interrupted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time in the forenoon was it?—A. About twelve o'clock in the day, to my judgment.

Q. How was it interrupted?—A. About that time of day there was some firing commenced in the woods. I was on the north side of the depot, and the firing commenced on the south side.

Q. Firing in what direction?—A. Right toward the depot.

Q. The building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you seen any guns before you heard the firing?—A. No, sir; I never saw any at all. When the firing commenced I ran up on the railroad to see who it was. I heard balls striking the house, and I thought it was inside the depot, probably, and I ran up to command peace.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. You ran up where?—A. I ran up the railroad to keep the peace. At that time I discovered that the firing was done by some parties in the woods.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You ran up where?—A. I saw one man dodging behind a stump. I did not know who he was, but it was so rapid at that time that I ran back.

Q. What was so rapid?—A. The firing.

Q. Was he a white or a colored man that you saw?—A. A white man.

Q. Go on and tell the story in your own way.—A. In a few minutes all the white men was armed. They ran off about twenty yards from the depot in a little store. I asked them to please be peaceable, and I deputed fifteen of them to assist me in making the arrests of those rowdies in the woods.

Q. The men who were there at the poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you made that order or request, what occurred?—A. All of them refused; none heard to me at all.

Q. What did they say?—A. One said, "God damn it, wheel to the rear; they will fire on us back here."

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. What did you hear this one man say?—A. He said, "Wheel to the rear; they will fire on us in the rear." Their faces was towards the firing in the woods, a great many of them, and a great many of them was towards the colored voters.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What next occurred?—A. One of the white men standing there said to the rest of the democrats that was a short distance off, "All of you come here and go to that house yonder and get your guns and come here, and all you God damned republicans stand back," was his expression.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You heard that yourself?—A. Yes, sir; I was right there. That was after I had commanded peace.

Q. What did they do?—A. Some of them went—pretty much all of them—and they was yet a going when I left there. I found out that times was pretty dangerous there; I saw they would not hear to what I said, so I rode off about nine miles to the lieutenant of the Federal troops at Milletts.

Q. For what purpose did you go there?—A. I went there to tell them to come up there and assist me in keeping the peace.

Q. What was the result of that action?—A. He told me that he had an attachment to stay there, and he could not render me no assistance whatever at that time.

Q. What did you then do?—A. I then telegraphed to Captain McLaughlin, at Allendale, to send up some troops on the next train.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I came back to Robbins again.

Q. How long were you gone from Robbins?—A. I suppose it was not probably over two hours and a half at the outside. I rode, and I loped all the way there.

Q. You rode there in a gallop?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And rode back the same way?—A. Yes, sir; the same way.

Q. What time was it when you got back to Robbins?—A. I could not tell that; I had no time-piece with me.

Q. Did you find the white men there when you returned?—A. All the white men and colored men both had dispersed. The colored men had gone off between a quarter and a half mile, and was taking votes out there.

Q. The white people had disappeared?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice whether the colored people had the same ballot-box or another one?—A. Yes, sir; I particularly noticed that; they had another box.

Q. Do you know what became of the box they were using in the morning?—A. No, sir. They left it right there in the depot, I suppose.

Q. Did you see it?—A. No, sir; I only saw the managers, and they told me they left it there.

Q. Who left it there?—A. The managers.

Q. But what became of it; do you know?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Have you ever seen it since that?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Who were the managers? Give their names.—A. J. W. Allen and B. K. Motte were the managers when I got there, and William Bush.

Q. Do you remember who the tally-clerk was?—A. B. K. Motte was acting as clerk and supervisor both, I believe.

Q. Who were acting as managers where they were voting when you got back?—A. They were acting when I returned.

Q. The same persons; were they all there?—A. No, sir; the white managers were not there.

Q. How many white managers were there?—A. I don't know that. There was one there that morning by the name of Dr. Wallace.

Q. I speak of the officers of election.—A. J. W. Allen and William Bush, I say, and B. K. Motte.

Q. Who were acting in the morning when they began voting?—A. Mr. Allen and Mr. Motte, the supervisor, and Mr. Bush.

Q. The same persons, then, were acting when you got back?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a Mr. Morton there in the morning?—A. No, sir. If there was, I was not acquainted with him.

Q. Did you see anything more of the white people that day?—A. No, sir; only some of those that voted there in the morning came on behind me to Millett's, and repeated there again, claiming that the box at Robbins was destroyed and their votes with it, and that they had a right to another vote. That occurred under my observation.

Q. That you saw?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. White men or colored men?—A. White men.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How many of them?—A. I declare I don't know.

Q. How many of them followed you to Millett's?—A. That I don't know. They came on behind me; while I was waiting for an answer to my telegram they came up.

Q. How many white men did you see with arms at Robbins before you left?—A. I could not tell you exactly.

Q. About how many should you say there were?—A. I would suppose there were about forty; between forty and fifty.

Q. What kind of arms?—A. Some of them had a gun and a pistol both, and all of them had guns.

Q. What kind of guns?—A. Some was double-barrel guns; I don't know what sort the others was; single-barrel, but I don't know whether they were sixteen-shooters or not, exactly.

Q. Were they rifled guns?—A. They were single-barrel guns, but I can't tell whether they were rifles or not.

Q. These shots that were fired at the depot, what were they—bullets or shot?—A. They was bullets, and went clean through and through the depot. One ball burned the edge of my hat-brim. It just hit the edge of my brim, as I was passing around.

Q. You mean that it went through the building and then hit you?—A. Yes, sir; it went clear through. It struck the south side and went clear through the north side.

Q. Through both sides?—A. Yes, sir; through both sides.

Q. About how many votes had been cast at Robbins before the firing began?—A. I could not tell you exactly.

Q. About how many?—A. I could not tell you that either. I have no knowledge whatever of the votes that was polled. There was a large number of people there; a great many had voted and a great many had not voted.

Q. Can't you give an estimate of how many had voted? Your opinion is what I want.—A. I cannot give you an accurate account of how many was polled.

Q. Can you state whether a large or a small number had voted?—A. A large number had voted at that time.

Q. Had people voted and gone away to their homes?—A. Yes, sir; some few had.

Q. How long have you lived in Robbins Parish?—A. I was born in Barnwell County.

Q. How long have you lived in that precinct, in that town?—A. I never did live in the precinct, but I was appointed a marshal for that precinct that day.

Q. Well, you have always lived in that county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known the Robbins precinct?—A. I have known it for seven or eight years, I suppose.

Q. Have you voted at it all those years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the usual number of votes at that precinct?—A. I could not tell you that either.

Q. You can tell whether it is 50 or 100?—A. O, it is more than that.

Q. About how many?—A. I declare I could not tell exactly; but I reckon somewhere about, generally, four or five hundred; maybe more than that; I could not tell.

Q. Is it a republican or a democratic town?—A. Republican.

Q. A large majority?—A. Yes, sir; a large majority.

Q. Do you know the Calnan's Fair precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no election held there?—A. None at all.

Q. Did you see voters from Calnan's at Robbins?—A. Yes, sir; that is the precinct that I lived in.

Q. Do you know why an election was not held at Calnan's?—A. No, sir; not exactly.

- Q. You know there was none held there that day?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And the electors you advised to go to Robbins?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many did go there to your knowledge?—A. I don't know; I could not tell you.
- Q. Do you know that numbers went there?—A. Not from Calnan's, sir. I don't know all of them.
- Q. Do you know that a good many went there?—A. O, yes, sir; I know that a great many went there; pretty much all of them.
- Q. Did you stay at Robbins until the vote was counted in the evening?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You don't know what the result was?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What did you hear any of the men having arms say before you went away to Millett's?—A. I heard them tell the voters that morning if they didn't vote with them that they would make them vote with them.
- Q. What voters did they say that to?—A. The democratic voters said that to the republican voters.
- Q. To the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Give their language.—A. That if they didn't vote with them that they would make them vote with them.
- Q. Was that all that you heard said?—A. That was what I took account of.
- Q. How many guns in all were fired before you left, should you think?—A. Not less than ten and not over sixteen.
- Q. Could you not tell by the report whether they were shot-guns or rifles?—A. They were rifles.
- Q. What is your business? What do you do for a living?—A. I farm. I have been a farmer all the while, and teaching school awhile; teaching for two years and farming the balance. I am a farmer by trade.
- Q. Do you own or hire land?—A. I have land of my own.

By Mr. PHILIP'S:

- Q. How old do you say you are?—A. I was born in 1840, the last day of February.
- Q. You say you did not live in Robbins precinct?—A. No, sir; I live in the adjacent precinct, though, Calnan's Ferry.
- Q. Who appointed you deputy United States marshal?—A. Mr. Frank H. Eaton, the United States marshal.
- Q. Where does he live?—A. He is appointed for Barnwell County, I suppose. I don't know where his residence is.
- Q. When were you appointed deputy marshal?—A. On the 17th day of October.
- Q. Have you got your commission with you?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Show it.
- [Witnesses produces it.]
- Q. Who directed you to attend Robbins precinct?—A. I don't know exactly now, but they asked me to go up there.
- Q. Who asked you to go up there?—A. Some of the republicans in the county.
- Q. This man who appointed you deputy did not direct you specially to go to Robbins?—A. No, sir; only to attend anywhere in the county.
- Q. Why did you not attend in your own precinct? Was there any other person appointed there?—A. There was another marshal appointed in that same precinct.
- Q. Then there were two deputy marshals appointed in the precinct?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Was there any deputy appointed in Robbins?—A. None at all, sir.
- Q. What time of the day was it when this disturbance occurred at this depot?—A. I suppose about 12 o'clock in the day.
- Q. They had been voting, then, all the forenoon up to that time?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. About how many people were at that depot through the morning?—A. I cannot tell you that.
- Q. Some of the parties who had voted had left?—A. Some few of them, I suppose, had gone. I am not certain that there was over three of them. I am certain there was three gone, but I am not sure there was over that; I was acquainted with those three, and know that they left.
- Q. Did any of the colored men vote and leave?—A. Those three colored men that I speak of had voted and left.
- Q. Then you can call to mind only three voters who had left in the forenoon?—A. Only three.
- Q. All the others remained there?—A. I am not certain but there was more than that; I don't know. I am certain there was three gone, but there may have been more.
- Q. About how many white men were there that forenoon?—A. I could not tell you.
- Q. About how many colored men were there that forenoon?—A. I could not tell you that.
- Q. Can you approximate the number that were there that morning?—A. Yes, sir; I can about fifty whites, I would suppose; not over fifty-five.
- Q. About how many blacks were there before that disturbance?—A. There was a large number; I suppose there was some six or seven hundred of them. They was still coming in when I left there. I met a great many going there when I was going to Robbins.

Q. How many?—A. A good many. I did not stop. I was in a lope.

Q. You met some parties passing in the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they alone?—A. No, sir; I would meet four or five in a gang, and then I would go along and meet two or three more.

Q. Do you suppose you met as many as a dozen that morning going there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many?—A. I suppose there was about a dozen; I am not certain there was any more than that.

Q. You were in the depot at the time this firing occurred from without?—A. No, sir; I was outside of the depot.

Q. Who was with you at the time the firing occurred?—A. There were a large number of them all around me every side.

Q. Where were these white men that were there; were they inside or outside the depot?—A. No, sir; there was but a few in the depot, if I am not mistaken.

Q. How were the ballots handed in?—A. At the window.

Q. They handed ballots in at the window to the judges of the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The managers of that election, you say, were two black men and one white man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the names of the two black men?—A. One of them was named Allen, and the other one was named Bush, and the supervisor was named Motte. The white man's name was Dr. Wallace.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Who were the colored managers?—A. Allen and Bush. Motte was the supervisor.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. Who acted as managers at this box that was taken down in the woods?—A. Those colored men acted.

Q. Who was the third man?—A. Mr. Motte; he was supervisor and acting as clerk for all of them, being the best penman.

Q. Who acted as supervisor down at the other box?—A. He was; he was acting as clerk for the managers, and he was supervisor, too.

Q. Then he was acting both as clerk and supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both at the depot and down in the woods?—A. In the woods.

Q. Then there were two managers of election down in the woods besides this man?—A. Yes, sir; I call it woods; it was a little old school-house down right off the wood,—bushes grown up all around it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. There was no school kept there?—A. No, sir; there has been a school there in time past for the colored people.

Q. Not of late years?—A. Yes; there was a school taught there the year before last, I think.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. Who acted as clerk at the depot?—A. A. M. Turner.

Q. Was he colored or white?—A. White.

Q. How many supervisors were at that depot; there was another supervisor besides Motte, was there not, at the depot?—A. Yes, sir; I believe there was; Mr. Wood, I think, his name was. He was the conservative supervisor.

Q. Was he at the school-house?—A. No, sir.

Q. About how far is this school-house in the woods from that depot?—A. It is between a quarter and a half mile, I suppose. It is not very far, I know that.

Q. Is it surrounded by woods?—A. Yes, sir; there are woods all around it.

Q. What time in the day was it when you got back from this point where you went to send this telegram?—A. I had no time-piece, but it was in the afternoon, some time.

Q. Was it as late as 3 o'clock?—A. I don't know; I suppose it was about that time of day, I am not certain.

Q. You went from there to the depot and from there up to the school-house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How came you to go up to the school-house?—A. I saw some of them, and they told me they was taking votes down there.

Q. Whom did you see there?—A. I don't know. He was a colored man. I was not acquainted with him. I asked him where they had gone to, and he told me they had gone down to that school-house.

Q. When you got there, what were they doing?—A. They were voting.

Q. How long did they vote after you got there?—A. I staid there an hour, I reckon.

Q. Were they pretty well through when you left?—A. They was voting right on when I left.

Q. How many people did you see down at that school-house?—A. There was a good many of them.

Q. How many?—A. I could not tell; I don't know.

Q. Give us your best judgment of the number you saw at that school-house?—A. I could not tell. There was a large number.

Q. You can give some judgment about it as you did about those at the depot?—A. No, sir, I could not tell; only I know there was a large number of them there when I arrived.

Q. Have you no opinion about it?—A. No, sir; I could not tell. They was down there taking in votes when I got there, and when I got there, if I am not mistaken, the managers told me—

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Were there a thousand men there?—A. I don't know.

Q. Eight hundred?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose there was that many there, maybe over that; I cannot tell.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. What is your best judgment as to the number of men there?—A. I don't know, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were there more men there than there were around the depot?—A. Yes, sir; a great deal more men there, I suppose, than was around the depot. I know there was a great many more. They was a coming in, and all the others that was there before had gone up there.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. Were there any white men up there?—A. No, sir; I never saw a white man there. I met about twenty of them coming down toward Robbins when I was going there.

Q. Was any one distributing ballots there?—A. Yes, sir; they was distributing the republican ballots.

Q. Was there more than one distributing ballots?—A. Yes, sir, there was two or three; I was not acquainted with them, and, in fact, did not take much account of them.

Q. This place where you say no election was held is called Cainan's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many voters usually vote at that precinct?—A. Two years ago (I was a manager there at that time) there was 217 voted there, if I am not mistaken.

Q. And this Robbins precinct voted generally, you think, perhaps four or five hundred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know all the voters at Cainan's precinct, I suppose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know about all of them in that precinct?—A. No, sir; I am not acquainted with them all; I am acquainted with the larger portion of them. They move in and out.

Q. Can you state about how many men from Cainan's precinct you saw there that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see voters there from any other precinct?—A. Yes, sir; I saw some from Red Oak precinct that I was acquainted with.

Q. How many men did you see from Red Oak precinct?—A. I saw some eight or ten that I was acquainted with from Red Oak.

Q. Did you see any from any other precinct?—A. Yes, sir; some of them were from Millett's.

Q. How far off is that?—A. It is nine miles. The edge of the precinct is about four miles, but the voting-place is about nine.

Q. How many men from Millett's did you see?—A. There was some eight or nine that I saw there that I was acquainted with.

Q. Did you observe any trouble there that forenoon before you heard the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you see?—A. Only just that the republicans was in the majority, and it seemed that the democrats didn't like it much, and when the firing commenced I was in the act of sending down to the lieutenant to send some assistance to help to keep the box.

Q. Was there any attempt to take the box?—A. No, sir, no attempt whatever; but we was afraid of it.

Q. Were they going up and voting all the morning?—A. I saw no attempt whatever to take the box.

Q. Had you seen any arms that morning before this firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far off was this firing in the woods?—A. Between 75 and 100 yards, I reckon.

Q. You have stated that you did not see the men that fired in the woods?—A. Only one.

Q. That is as you went up the railroad?—A. Yes, sir; just as I jumped on the railroad.

Q. Did you recognize him?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say you heard not less than ten nor more than sixteen shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any arms there on any of the colored men?—A. None at all, sir; not as much as a pistol.

Q. Didn't you see any of them with a pistol at all?—A. No, sir; not a man.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Do you know of their having arms in the neighborhood?—A. Such as shot-guns?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; some of them have shot-guns in the neighborhood.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. By "neighborhood" you mean where they lived, I suppose. You do not mean that they had them there at the polling-place?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. What do you mean by the "neighborhood?" Did they have them in the neighborhood of the polling-places?—A. At their houses. You asked me did I know any of them in the neighborhood have any arms—pistols and shot-guns. There was a gentleman that lived on Mrs. Ashley's place I knew had a shot-gun; but he did not have it at the precinct.

Q. Did you know of others having arms?—A. Not at the precinct. In fact, I know that they did not have them.

Q. Near the precinct?—A. Yes, sir. I know of them having shot-guns; but I did not—

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. You had a pistol yourself, had you not?—A. No, sir; I had none. I went there without. I did try to borrow one, but could not get it.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. Did the colored men have sticks in their hands?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure. There might have been one or two that had sticks.

Q. How far off was this lieutenant to whom you applied for assistance camped from the Robbins depot?—A. Nine miles.

Q. Was that the place to which you went down to telegraph?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the nearest place, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You speak of conversations between the democrats and republicans there that morning about voting. Was that conversation between the white and the colored men any more than an ordinary solicitation to vote the democratic ticket? Did not the white men try to persuade the colored men to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir. This man seemed to be mad, and he told them if they did not vote with them, they would make them do it.

Q. Was he then holding an argument about how they should vote?—A. He was talking to a good many of them around.

Q. What time of day was it?—A. I reckon it was an hour or two hours before the firing commenced.

Q. Was there more than one white man engaged in that conversation?—A. The rest of them sat around there, but there was no one engaged in it but him.

Q. What was the name of that white man?—A. If I am not mistaken, his name is Wood.

Q. Do you know his Christian name?—A. No, sir. I took it that day, but I have not got it here.

Q. Have you got his name preserved anywhere?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I think it is at home somewhere. His name is Wood.

Q. Where does he live?—A. In that precinct.

Q. Where is his post-office?—A. Robbins.

Q. What aged man is he?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Have you no idea?—A. He was not an old man.

Q. Was he a young man or a middle-aged man? Can you form no idea about his age?—A. I declare I could not tell you. I suppose he might have been about thirty years old.

Q. Is he a man of family?—A. I don't know whether he has any family or not.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I just got acquainted with him that day. I would not have done so had he not said that to those parties. I told him that was intimidation, I thought, and I was going to see after it.

Q. Had you never seen him before that day?—A. No, sir. I don't think I ever saw him before. I was acquainted with his brother, but not with him.

Q. Where does his brother live?—A. About half or three-quarters of a mile from Robbins Station.

Q. What is his brother's name?—A. William Wood.

Q. Was he present at this conversation?—A. No, sir. He was a supervisor.

Q. Then a supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he hear this conversation?—A. No, sir. He was in the depot.

Q. Can you give me the name of any white man that heard that conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many white men were standing around him at that time?—A. Three or four, I think. They all collected together to hear his argument; nothing more than that.

Q. Was he having an argument with the colored men?—A. Yes, sir; with the colored men.

Q. How many?—A. A good many of them.

Q. How many were present?—A. O, I could not tell you. They were all around him, on every side, listening to him.

Q. How many colored men were participating in the conversation?—A. He was talking to the whole of them—the whole group.

Q. Were they talking about voting?—A. No, sir. They were just there listening to what he said.

- Q. Didn't you hear them say anything?—A. No, sir. He was just talking to them; they were listening.
- Q. How did he know how they were going to vote?—A. Because he had the democratic tickets in his hand.
- Q. What did they say?—A. No, sir. He refused to take the tickets.
- Q. What did they say? Didn't they say anything?—A. I took no account of what they said.
- Q. When you interferred did the conversation cease?—A. No, sir. This white man kept on talking. I never interferred with him at all.
- Q. You said something, did you not?—A. No, sir; I never said a word to him.
- Q. Did you not just state here that you went up there to stop him?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you not say that you asked him his name?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that I asked him his name.
- Q. Whom did you ask?—A. I asked these parties that he was talking to.
- Q. What did they tell you?—A. They said it was Smith.
- Q. What did you say then?—A. I said to them that I thought it was intimidating the voters and I was going to see after it.
- Q. Did you tell Mr. Wood that?—A. No, sir; I just told them.
- Q. You went off and left them?—A. Yes; he went off just before I did and then I left.
- Q. Where did he go, around in the county?—A. I don't know. I did not watch him any more.
- Q. Where did you go?—A. I don't know, sir; I went around among them. I went off to no place, but staid there among them.
- Q. You say you are a farmer and a school-teacher?—A. Yes, sir; I taught school two years, but I am a farmer.
- Q. When and where did you teach school?—A. In Rosemary Township, Barnwell County.
- Q. A public or private school?—A. Public.
- Q. What did you teach in that school?—A. Reading, writing, and spelling.
- Q. Was that a colored school?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You say you live on your own land?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How much land have you?—A. I have 65 acres.
- Q. How long have you owned it?—A. Well, I built on it in 1871; I made a bargain for it, I think, in 1870.
- Q. Is that a thickly-settled neighborhood that you live in?—A. Yes, sir; pretty tolerably thickly.
- Q. Is Robbins as thickly settled as your neighborhood?—A. Thicker.
- Q. How much?—A. Right smart thicker.
- Q. Is there any town there at Robbins?—A. No, sir; just a little place called Robbins Station. There is four or five houses there, and two or three stores.
- Q. The colored people through that neighborhood generally have arms, have they not?—A. No, sir; no arms more than shot-guns. I know one or two who have shot-guns, for I saw them hunting not very long ago.
- Q. Do you know whether they have pistols or not?—A. No, sir; I do not.
- Q. You do not live in that precinct?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How far do you live from Robbins?—A. About nine miles.
- Q. You do not go to Robbins very often?—A. Not very often. I was engaged in taking the census of that township last year. That makes me know as much about it as I do.
- Q. This white manager, Wallace, who was at the Robbins depot that morning, did he remain up to the time you left?—A. No, sir; he was gone.
- Q. What time did he leave?—A. I don't know, sir; I was not there. He went away between the time that I left and the time that I returned.
- Q. He was there up to the time of this firing, was he not, up to the time you left to go off to this station?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. When you came back he was gone?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. He was in the depot at the time this firing occurred and these white men were around about there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. When you came back from the station where you went to telegraph they said that the ballot-box had been left there that they were using that morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What sort of a box had they at this school-house in the woods; where did they get it?—A. It was some old box or another that they picked up; I don't know.
- Q. How was it constructed?—A. It had a hole made in the top with a little piece of wood with a nail driven down attached to it, so as to cover it, up and fixed on there.
- Q. What sort of a box was it?—A. I declare I don't know; I suppose about that length.
- Q. About two feet long?—A. Yes, sir; may be a little longer.
- Q. How deep?—A. About a foot deep, I reckon.
- Q. How broad?—A. About a foot and a half.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It was an ordinary pine box, such as those around grocery-stores?—A. Yes, sir; they got it somewhere there.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. How was this hole in the top of it made; was it a crack?—A. No, sir; it was cut.

Q. Cut with a knife?—A. Cut with a knife or something.

Q. How large was the hole cut with the knife?—A. About the same size of all the boxes, I reckon. It was a small hole about an inch and a half long and about a half inch broad, I suppose.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. How old did I understand you to say you were?—A. I did not tell what age I was. I said I was born in 1849.

Q. How old would that make you?—A. That makes me going on 27 years old.

Q. What month were you born in?—A. The last day of February.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. When and where did you receive your education?—A. I was learned what I do know by some white people that raised me, in Rosemary Township.

Q. Since the war or before?—A. Since.

Q. At the close of the war could you either read or write?—A. No, sir.

Q. All your learning you have obtained since?—A. Since the war, sir.

Q. Did you have to be examined before you taught school?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?—A. By the board of examiners in Barnwell County.

Q. Did they give you a certificate authorizing you to teach?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And under that you taught two seasons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Winters or summers?—A. I taught part of the winter and part of the summer time.

Q. In your own county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Give the names of the managers at Cainan's who were appointed, and who would have acted there if the election had been held.—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Can't you tell any of them?—A. No, sir. I did hear, but have forgotten now.

Q. Do you know who was the other supervisor there?

Q. Do you know Mr. George H. Betts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does he live?—A. About a mile and a half or two miles from Cainan's Fair.

Q. Was he not an officer?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. And you cannot give the names of either of the managers at the Cainan's precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any men came from Millett's to Robbins?—A. Yes, sir; some eight or ten came from there, to my certain knowledge.

Q. Don't you know of a larger party coming there in the afternoon?—A. No, sir; not from Millett's.

Q. Do you know whether people came there from anywhere except from Cainan's?—A. I say that some came from Millett's precinct there.

Q. Do you know of any coming from anywhere else?—A. Cainan's Fair Church.

Q. Do you know whether they came from any other place beside Cainan's Fair and Millett's?—A. Yes, sir; I know of two or three men that came from Red Oak.

Q. There were voters who came from Red Oak?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Two or three from Red Oak?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You know the fact that there were voters that came from Red Oak and voted?—A. Yes, sir; I was acquainted with two or three that came from there.

Q. And you know that people came from Millett's and voted there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from Cainan's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many came from other places?—A. No, sir; I do not. I cannot give an accurate account of any of those that came from either one of the precincts.

Q. What do you know as to whether the white people in that neighborhood were armed; not the people at the poll, but the white people who live in that vicinity?—A. I don't claim to know anything about the white people being armed in that vicinity.

Q. You don't know whether they have arms or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether there is a rifle-club there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is it composed of?—A. Mr. A. M. Turner is one.

Q. What class of men?—A. White.

Q. Do you know how many belong to it?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Who is the arch commander?—A. I don't know that.

Q. How long has that club been there?—A. I think it was organized some time in last July. I saw it in the Barnwell Sentinel.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Do you know anything about it except what you have heard or seen in the papers ?—
A. No, sir ; only I know they have a club ; I know they meet there.

Q. Did you ever see them meet ?—A. No, sir ; I never saw them and had nothing to do with them. I saw them going there. I never went where they convened, but I saw them going there on the day when they did.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Do you know whether they go on horses or on foot ?—A. Yes, they have horses.

Q. Those that were at the polls at Robbins, did they have horses ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those who followed you over to Milletts, were they on horses ?—A. Yes, sir ; they had horses.

Q. How soon did those men reach Milletts after you got there ?—A. I don't know, sir ; all I know about it is that they reached there before I left, while I was waiting for an answer to the telegraph I sent to Captain McLaughlan.

Q. They voted at Milletts ?—A. They did, sir.

Q. Assigning what reason ?—A. That they had voted at Robbins, and the box and votes was destroyed.

Q. They said that ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the colored people who had voted at Robbins in the morning voted again at this new box ?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you vote again ?—A. I did not vote until then.

Q. Whether they all voted again at that box you are unable to state ?—A. I cannot, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Is that rifle-club in existence now ?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. How long has it been since you know of its existence ; are you sure it is not in existence now ?—A. No, sir, I am not, but it was in existence until the election.

Q. You know that ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. Those men who came from Millett's and voted at Robbins, were they white or colored men ?—A. Colored.

Q. What time did they vote ?—A. In the morning.

Q. Did you see them there in the afternoon when you came back ?—A. No, sir ; I did not.

Q. They had left then ?—A. They had left when I reached there in the afternoon.

Q. These colored men that you speak of as having come from Milletts voted in the morning ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had left when you came back ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These white men that voted at Milletts, did you see them vote ?—A. I saw them vote.

Q. How came you to see them ?—A. I was there and saw them.

Q. What were you doing at the poll at Milletts ?—A. I was waiting for an answer to the telegram that I sent to Captain McLaughlan.

Q. How long were you at the polls ?—A. After this white man came there I wanted to take an account whether he was going to vote or not, because I knew he had voted at Robbins.

Q. Do you know every voter who had voted at Robbins that morning ?—A. No, sir.

Q. How came you to mark the white man so particularly ?—A. Because this white man was taking all the democratic negroes' names and the republican names down.

Q. How did he know who voted the republican ticket or the democratic ticket ?—A. I don't know, sir ; but he was taking them down.

Q. How do you know that he was ?—A. I was standing there.

Q. They voted by ballot, did they not ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then how could he tell whether they voted the republican or the democratic ticket ?—
A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Then how do you know that he was taking down the names ?—A. Because I saw him.

Q. State what you saw him doing ?—A. Every one that voted the republican ticket he put his name down "radical."

Q. Could he tell how they voted ?—A. I suppose so, by that.

Q. Did he look at the ballot ?—A. No, sir ; I never saw him unfold anybody's ballot.

Q. Then you merely saw him there sitting ?—A. Yes, sir ; taking down the names of all that voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Where was he sitting ?—A. Outside of the depot.

Q. Did you know any of those other white men that voted at Milletts ? What circumstances enabled you to identify the others besides this man ?—A. I saw them there and I recognized them.

Q. You saw them vote at Robbins ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What called your attention to them ?—A. I saw this man with them and I knew that they had voted.

Q. Had you ever seen them before?—A. I had seen this man, Mr. Roundtree.

Q. What enabled you to identify them?—A. Because they were voting there that morning.

Q. Did you identify all the white men that voted there that morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. How could you identify these men then?—A. Because I knew the face.

Q. Do you pretend to say that you could identify every white man that voted there that morning?—A. Yes, sir; if I saw you this evening I could tell you again.

Q. How many white men did you see that voted there that morning?—A. O, there was a good many of them.

Q. How many?—A. O, there was a good many. I could not tell you, but there was a large number that I could identify to this day.

Q. How many white men did you hear mention about the Robbins poll when they voted at Milletts?—A. Only this one man, Mr. Roundtree.

Q. You did not hear any of the others?—A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke of getting a certificate of qualification to teach school from the school managers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they colored or white?—A. White.

Q. What are their names?—A. Mr. Cassidy and Mr. MacMillan are two. I don't know the other's name. He was not there and never signed the certificate, but he was a member of the board.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. When you came back to Barnwell after having been at Milletts, I understand that you met a number of white men going to Robbins to vote?—A. After I had been to Milletts?

Q. Yes, after you had been to Milletts and was returning to Robbins?—A. Yes, sir; I met a lot of white men coming towards Milletts.

Q. You say you met a number of white men coming towards Robbins?—A. In the morning when I was going?

Q. No, when you had returned from Milletts?—A. No, sir; when I returned from Milletts I met a number of white men coming towards Milletts from Robbins.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 18, 1876.

WILLIAM I. ALLEN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. Five miles from Robbins Station, in Barnwell County.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-three on the 1st of January next.

Q. Your occupation?—A. Farmer.

Q. Do you own a farm?—A. No, sir; my father owns a tract of land.

Q. You work your father's farm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever been a teacher?—A. Not public; I have been a teacher of a private school.

Q. Who were the managers of the last election at Robbins precinct?—A. Myself, William Bush, and Mr. Wallace Bailey. The supervisor was B. K. Motte.

Q. Who were the marshals?—A. Only one, L. W. Mimms.

Q. Do you remember who the other supervisor was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Motte the democrat or the republican?—A. Republican.

Q. What time did you get to the precinct the day of the election?—A. About 6 o'clock, I suppose. I didn't have a time-piece.

Q. How many people had assembled when you reached there?—A. I suppose there was between three and four hundred.

Q. How long before the voting commenced?—A. About a quarter of an hour after I got there.

Q. Was there any disturbance during that day in the voting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time?—A. Between 11 and 12 o'clock; near noon.

Q. Up to that time had the voting continued without interruption?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many had voted?—A. I disremember exactly how many, but I think there was about two hundred and eighty that had voted. That is according to my recollection. The papers got destroyed.

Q. Can you judge how many democrats and how many republicans had voted?—A. Well, there was about forty whites, who had voted and we considered them democrats.

Q. And were the balance republican tickets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the disturbance?—A. Firing into the depot where we was managing.

Q. Firing into the building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which way does the railroad run?—A. East and West.

Q. Which way was the firing, across the railroad?—A. Yes, across the railroad.

Q. Was it from the north or from the south?—A. I think it was from the west.

Q. The west would be along the railroad?—A. From the south, then.

Q. How many guns were fired?—A. According to my recollection, I suppose there was about ten that fired right into the depot.

Q. Where did the balls go?—A. Right through the depot.

Q. Through both sides?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Above your heads?—A. Yes, sir; above our heads.

Q. Did you see where the balls went through the boards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabout was this firing; how many shots?—A. There was three right after one another just as fast as they could come, and then it continued again about three more, and again until there was about ten, according to my recollection.

Q. What was then done?—A. The people all ran away then. The colored and whites all left the house where they were holding the election.

Q. Did they go out of the building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it with the people outside?—A. Part of the democrats, they, I suppose, had arms in another house there.

Mr. PHILIPS. Do not state what you suppose; only what you know.

The WITNESS. They did have arms there.

Mr. PHILIPS. State what you saw.—A. Well, I saw that. I heard them, "Close up, democrats, and all you republicans stand back."

Q. What did you hear them say?—A. I heard them say out there, "Democrats, close up." I don't know who said it, because I was in the house.

Q. Did you see white people have arms there after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first see them have arms?—A. When I went out after the firing.

Q. Had you seen any before that?—No, sir; I had not seen any at all.

Q. In what direction did the white people who had procured arms go?—A. They went right off north from the station.

Q. Was there a building there?—A. Yes, sir; a depot.

Q. They went away from the depot?—Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any building in the direction in which they went?—A. No, sir, not in sight of the depot.

Q. How far did they go before you saw them with the arms?—A. They had the arms right at the depot.

Q. Do you know where they got them?—A. They got them out of a house right there.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Did you see them?—A. Yes, sir; there was some of them coming out of the house.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What kind of arms?—A. There was some double-barreled guns, and some rifles.

Q. You say you all left the building; now what further occurred?—A. We went off, the managers and others, and consulted what to do, and we considered that we would hold the election at another place a little distance from the place where we were shot in at.

Q. Who held that consultation?—A. Myself, William Bush, and Mr. Motta.

Q. What did the white people do?—A. I don't know; they went off and I don't know where they went.

Q. Do you mean that they left the locality?—A. They left the locality altogether.

Q. Did they go away together?—A. Yes, sir; they went off in a crowd.

Q. What did you do?—A. We held another box and persons came and voted.

Q. Where did you open that box?—A. Between a quarter and a half a mile from the house where we had the election.

Q. Was it at or near any building?—A. Yes, sir; an old school-house that had been taught.

Q. What became of the ballot-box that you used that forenoon?—A. We don't know what became of it. We left it in the depot.

Q. You left it there when you fled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen it since?—A. I have not.

Q. You don't know what became of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long did the voting continue at that point?—A. It continued until about 6 o'clock.

Q. From what points in the county did people come there and vote?

(Mr. Phillips objected to the question as leading and as assuming that voters did come from other places, and that the witness knows that they did so come. The chairman overruled the objection.)

A. Do you mean from what precincts?

Q. Any way you choose to answer it.—A. We supposed, sir—

Mr. PHILIPS. State what you know.—A. Well, there were other men that I knew was from other precincts.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What precincts?—A. Some from Millett's and some from Red Oak, which I knew by sight.

- Q. How about Cainan's?—A. And also from Cainan's.
- Q. How many votes were cast there that afternoon?—A. There was 1,317 votes.
- Q. Did any persons vote there more than once?—A. No, sir; not to my recollection.
- Q. There was no repeating?—A. No, sir; not at all.
- Q. Were the votes taken in the usual way, as you had been taking them in the forenoon up to the time of the interruption?—A. Do you mean did we swear them in the same way?
- Q. Yes—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Each elector was sworn?—A. Yes, sir; they were sworn.
- Q. What was done at the close of the voting by yourself and the other managers?—A. We taken the box on home. The votes were counted, and then we taken the box.
- Q. Was any return made there anything more than counting them?—A. Yes, sir. The returns were made out and signed.
- Q. Signed by whom?—A. By Supervisor B. K. Motte.
- Q. Did you assist in the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. State whether you signed the return.—A. Yes, sir; I signed it also.
- Q. Who was the other manager?—A. William Bush.
- Q. Did he sign?—A. Yes, sir; he signed.
- Q. After you had canvassed the votes and made the return what did you do with it?—A. We taken the box on home that night—to my house.
- Q. And the returns?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You took them to your house?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What time did you reach your house?—A. I suppose it was about 10 o'clock when I got home.
- Q. What was done with them after that?—A. The next day we started to Barnwell with them—the county-seat.
- Q. To take them to whom?—A. To the county officers.
- Q. What time did you go?—A. We left home, I suppose, about 11 o'clock.
- Q. What time did you reach Barnwell?—A. We didn't reach Barnwell until about 9 o'clock that night.
- Q. How far was it that you had to go?—A. It is about eighteen miles.
- Q. What day of the week was this?—A. That was on Friday, according to my recollection. It was three days after the election.
- Q. The box and the returns remained at your house how long?—A. The box and the returns remained two days. The reason we did not get to Barnwell early enough for them to take the box was that we were stopped on the way.
- Q. How were you stopped?—A. By an armed body of white men.
- Q. Where was that?—A. That was between my house and Salt Ketcher.
- Q. What occurred there?—A. The armed body of men asked where was we from.
- Q. How many of them were there?—A. I suppose about fifteen.
- Q. On horseback?—A. No, sir. Walking.
- Q. What arms had they?—A. Some had double-barreled guns, and some had rifles.
- Q. Did you notice whether they had any side-arms—any pistols?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Tell what occurred.—A. They asked us where we was from, and I told them that we was from Robbins and had the box and poll-list. They said to us, "You damned sons of bitches! If you don't turn back I will put a hole through you, and that damned quick!" and upon these remarks we turned back.
- Q. You managers turned back?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who was with you?—A. Bill Bush, one of the managers.
- Q. Mr. Motte was not with you?—A. No, sir; he was not.
- Q. Where did you go?—A. We went another road and went around and come up on the back of Barnwell Village, the county-seat.
- Q. How far out of your way did you have to go to reach Barnwell?—A. About ten miles.
- Q. Were you on foot?—A. No, sir; riding on horseback.
- Q. And in that way you reached Barnwell at what time?—A. About 9 o'clock.
- Q. Whom did you see when you arrived?—A. When I arrived there I saw Mr. Knopf, one of the county officers.
- Q. What is his first name?—A. A. Knopf, I think is his name. That was on Friday evening.
- Q. Did you see any others of the county officers?—A. Not that night.
- Q. What did you tell Knopf?
- Mr. PHILIPS objected to the statement of a mere conversation.
- Mr. LAPHAM insisted that it was an official communication between two election-officers and therefore admissible.
- Mr. PHILIPS withdrew his objection.
- Q. What did you inform Mr. Knopf?—A. I told him that we had the box of Robbins precinct and the returns.
- Q. Where was he?—A. He came outside of the house where they were canvassing the votes. It was at the place where they were canvassing.
- Q. What did he say, if anything, in reply?—A. He told us that he was afraid to take the box.

Mr. PHILIPS. That is objectionable.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not offer this as evidence of Knopf's fears, but only as evidence of the mode in which he declined to take the box.

(Objection withdrawn.)

The CHAIRMAN. I certainly shall object to any further detail of conversation between these gentlemen.

Q. What further was done at that time, if anything?—A. We returned with the box and poll-list to Blackville.

Q. Did you see either of the other county officers except Knopf?—A. Not that night.

Q. What did you then do?—A. Next morning we took the box and poll-list and started back to Barnwell.

Q. What time did you reach there?—A. I suppose it was about 9 o'clock when we got back there.

Q. What day of the week was that?—A. It was on Saturday morning.

Q. You got there about 9 o'clock Saturday morning?—A. I suppose about that hour.

Q. In the day-time or in the evening?—A. In the day-time.

Q. Whom did you see then?—A. I met Mr. Gennerette, one of the county commissioners, before we reached the village.

Q. Did you say anything to him?

The CHAIRMAN. That is entirely out of order. It is a conversation entirely outside of the commissioner's official business and when he was not acting in that capacity.

Mr. LAPHAM stated that he merely wished to prove the tender of the box on Saturday; and the Chairman ruled that that was admissible.

Q. When you met Gennerette what occurred? What was said and done?—A. He told us that the board of canvassers had adjourned.

Q. What did you tell him before he said that?—A. We told him that we had carried that box overnight, brought it to Mr. Knopf, and he did not receive it.

Q. What did you say about having it there again; did you tell him that you had it there with you?—A. Yes, sir; I told him that we had it that morning.

Q. And the return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he answered that the board had adjourned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you then do?—A. We returned to Blackville.

Q. Didn't you go into the building where they were canvassing?—A. We did not. We went back to Blackville.

Q. Taking the return and the box with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you do anything more with the view of having the vote canvassed?—A. After we got to Blackville we presented the poll-list to Mr. Knopf and Mr. Gennerette. Mr. Knopf refused.

Q. You met them together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you present anything but the poll-list?—A. Yes, sir; the returns.

Q. You there offered the returns to Gennerette and Knopf?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the ballot-box?—A. No, sir; I did not offer the box.

Q. And Knopf refused?—A. He refused to sign the returns after he got to Blackville also.

Q. Did any one sign them?—A. Mr. Gennerette did.

Q. He signed the county return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it signed by?—A. It was signed by Mr. Gennerette.

Q. Was it signed by any other of the county commissioners?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you do with it after that refusal; who took it?—A. Mr. Gennerette took it.

Q. You delivered it to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What office did he hold?—A. He was one of the county officers.

Q. All this that you have now stated occurred on Saturday morning?—A. Yes, sir; and on Friday night.

Q. The last of it was Saturday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who filled out the county return that Mr. Gennerette signed?—A. Of that precinct, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. B. K. Motte.

Q. The precinct return was drawn up by Motte?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who drew up the paper that Mr. Gennerette signed?—A. Mr. Motte. He was supervisor, and also acted as clerk.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. What paper was it that Gennerette signed?—A. The return of the election from Robbins.

Q. The return that you brought him?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. He signed the statement which you brought him of the canvass of the Robbins poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, what became of that?—A. I don't know what he did with it.

Q. You left it with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of the ballot-box?—A. It was left at Blackville.

Q. With whom?—A. Mr. Frank Miller.

Q. Who was he; was he an officer?—A. No, sir; he was running for sheriff in his campaign on the republican ticket.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you know where it is now?—A. No, sir; I don't know where it is now.

Q. Did you hear anything said before the firing into the depot, by way of disturbance or threat?—A. I didn't hear anything myself before the firing occurred.

Q. Was there any disturbance while you were voting that afternoon?—A. Not any.

Q. Did any democrats vote there that afternoon?—A. No, sir; not any.

Q. You say the white people there went away in a body; in which direction did they go?—A. They went north from the depot.

Q. Toward what place?—A. I don't know where they went after they left.

Q. Which way is Millett's from Robbins?—A. It is down.

Q. Is it in the same direction that they went away?—A. Pretty much the same direction—toward Millett's station.

Q. Now, how many votes are there at Robbins's precinct?—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. About how many?—A. I suppose between six and seven hundred.

Q. Do you know how many there are at Calnan's fair?—A. I think there is between three and four hundred.

Q. How many voters are there in the Red Oak precinct?—A. I don't know exactly.

Q. You know whether it is a large or a small precinct?—A. I think between four and five hundred at Red Oak generally.

Q. Do you know how many there are at Millett's?—A. No, sir; I don't know how many they generally poll there.

Q. Don't you know something about the number at Millett's?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is it a thickly settled or a scattered population about Millett's?—A. The village is very small, but the people are very thickly settled about there.

Q. Are there more or less at Millett's than at Red Oak?—A. There are more at Millett's, I think.

Q. About how many white people were there at Robbins's when this firing began, according to your best judgment?—A. There was about seventy-five, sir, according to the looks of them.

Q. How many were armed?—A. Nearly all of them were armed, sir.

Q. Were any of them republicans?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. You have stated your age?—A. Yes, sir; twenty-three years on the 1st of January next.

Q. You live in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir; about five miles from the station.

Q. You began voting there that morning between 6 and 7 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the clerk of the poll that morning at the depot?—A. I disremember his name. He was a young man. I heard his name called, but I don't know him.

Q. Was it Turner?—A. I think it was Dr. Turner.

Q. Two of the managers, yourself and Bush, were colored men? What was the white man's name?—A. Mr. Wallace Bailey.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. You and Bush were republicans, and Bailey a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Daniel Maxson?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say this firing began between 11 and 12 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir, about.

Q. There had been no disturbance up to that time?—A. None.

Q. And you think that about forty white men had voted and some 280 colored men up to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that when this firing began you all went out of the depot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did all three of the managers and the clerk go out together?—A. Yes, sir; pretty much together?

Q. And you left the box there on the table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know what became of that box?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you seen any arms there that morning before that disturbance?—A. No, sir; not any.

Q. Did you see any of the colored men have any arms?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long after you all went out of the depot was it before these white men went off to the north?—A. They went right away, sir.

Q. Did you leave for this other point at the time they left, or did you hold this consultation that you spoke of after they had gone?—A. We held it after they had gone.

Q. They went off and left you all there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far were you all from the depot at the time they left; were you right around it?—A. We had left the house about a quarter of a mile, I suppose.

Q. But did they leave?—A. They went right off, and we went behind them.

Q. They had gone north before you went off to this point down in the woods?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what point did you hold this consultation that you speak of?—A. Between north and west, I think.

Q. How far from the depot?—A. Between a quarter and a half mile.

Q. You concluded to continue the election at that point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hold it in that school-house?—A. Yes, sir, right in the school-house.

Q. Was that in the woods or on open ground?—A. An old field, right at the edge of the woods.

Q. Between a quarter and a half-mile from the depot?—A. Yes, sir, about that.

Q. This supervisor of election, Motte, was a colored man, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the other two managers, you and Bush, were colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Motte was a United States supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At this school-house, then, he acted both as United States supervisor, manager, and clerk?—A. No, sir; he did not act as manager. He acted as clerk and supervisor.

Q. And you two acted as managers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no third manager?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many men went down with you from the depot to the school-house in that crowd that went down all together?—A. Well, sir, I could not tell how many there was altogether that went from there or that came up.

Q. About how many?—A. I suppose, from the looks of the crowd, about six hundred.

Q. After you went into this school-house to hold the election you were not outside any more in the afternoon?—A. No, sir.

Q. All those men that went down were colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. You were not outside of the school-house that afternoon after you began the balloting again?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did these men who voted there deposit their ballots; did they come inside of the house or hand them in from the outside?—A. They handed them in from the door.

Q. The door was open?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a table in there?—A. Yes, sir; we had a table.

Q. Where did you get the table?—A. The old table was in the school-house.

Q. Was the table near the door?—A. Yes, sir; we set it near the door.

Q. How did the voters come up to vote; in front of the door or inside?—A. Right up in front of the door on the steps.

Q. Which of the managers sat next to the door?—A. William Bush.

Q. On which side of the table did he sit?—A. On the right-hand side, I think.

Q. Where did you sit?—A. Right behind him.

Q. Then he was between you and the door?—A. Yes, sir; he was sitting to one end of the table and I was right behind him at the other end.

Q. These voters came up, and what did they do with their ballots?—A. They put them in the box themselves.

Q. They did not hand them to either one of the managers?—A. No, sir.

Q. They put them in themselves and then passed on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know every man that voted there that day?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. They were all colored men?—A. All colored men.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge whether any of these men repeated or not?—A. No, sir; if they did, I didn't know anything about it.

Q. They could have done it without your knowing about it; you did not know all of them. You closed the balloting about 6 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get the ballot-box that you used there?—A. We got a box down there at the station.

Q. Was it a covered box?—A. It was partly covered, and we finished covering it and cut a hole in it.

Q. Did any one there that evening challenge any voter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who did?—A. The supervisor.

Q. The man who was acting as clerk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom did he challenge?—A. I don't remember the names of them.

Q. Were they men that were supposed to come from other precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many did he challenge?—A. I don't know how many he challenged.

Q. Was any vote rejected?—A. Yes, sir; some were rejected.

Q. On what ground?—A. That they were not old enough.

Q. How many of those?—A. I don't know. I don't think there was over five or six.

Q. There was no other objection made to them except that they were minors?—A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke about the amount of the vote at Cainan; what are your means of knowledge as to the voting population at that precinct?—A. Do you mean how do I know?

Q. Yes; how do you know the number of voters there?—A. Well, sir, I just heard how many there was there, and I supposed there was about that much in the neighborhood.

Q. You were never a judge at an election there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not live in that precinct?—A. I live just between the two precincts.

Q. How far do you live from Cainan's?—A. About six miles, and five miles from Robbins's.

Q. Did you ever examine the vote at Cainan's precinct at any time to see the number of voters?—A. I never have.

Q. You have never seen the vote announced there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never have made any canvass of that precinct to get the number of voters?—A. No, sir.

Q. How far is Red Oak polling-place from Robbins's?—A. I suppose it is about fourteen miles.

Q. What is your information about the number of voters at Red Oak? Were you ever present at a voting there, and did you count the voters?—A. No, sir; I never was present at a voting.

Q. You have not seen the number of votes given at that precinct?—A. No, sir; but according to the situation of the people I would suppose there was about the number I have said.

Q. What information have you as to the number of people at that precinct; is it from hearsay?—A. Generally, sir. Of course I have heard.

Q. How far off is Millett's?—A. About ten miles from my house.

Q. Have you ever examined the poll there, or seen a return from that precinct at any time before this?—A. No, sir; I never have.

Q. How far is Millett's from Robbins's?—A. I don't know how far it is from Robbins's.

Q. When they quit voting at that school-house that evening, what did you do?—A. I went home.

Q. After they quit voting?—A. Yes, sir; after they counted the votes.

Q. Where did you get dinner that day?—A. There was parties had provisions at the station selling.

Q. Did you get dinner before you left the station?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you take dinner?—A. I suppose about a quarter after twelve o'clock.

Q. Then you took dinner at that station before you went down to this school-house?—A. I just got a snack. I didn't stop at all. I took a piece of bread and meat in my hand.

Q. You went to this stand and got a snack before you went down?—A. Yes, sir; and I was passing right on by.

Q. Where did you get supper?—A. At home.

Q. After the voting, did you leave this school-house?—A. After we counted the votes.

Q. You did not leave before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was present when you counted the votes?—A. We managers, and the supervisor, and others:

Q. How many others were present?—A. I suppose that in the house there was about ten.

Q. How did you make the count?—A. In what way do you mean?

Q. How did you get at the ballots, and in what way did you make up the result?—A. I taken the ballots out of the box.

Q. How did you get them out of the box?—A. We pried the top off and counted them.

Q. You emptied them out on the table?—A. No, sir; took them out one by one.

Q. What did you do with them?—A. We counted them and placed them back in the box.

Q. As you counted them you laid them on the table, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large was this school-house?—A. About 16 by 18 feet, I should suppose; a very small school-house.

Q. What sort of light had you in there?—A. We had a caudle.

Q. One candle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you count those ballots when you took them out?—A. We counted them one by one.

Q. Your republican tickets, as I understand it, were the red ones?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you just assort the tickets out and count them, or count them one by one?—A. We counted them by tickets, and also it was noticed that there was not any democratic tickets in the whole lump, because we had no democratic tickets there.

Q. You counted the tickets then as republican tickets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What sort of poll-list had you?—A. We had a portion of the regular poll-list paper, but we hadn't enough, so we used other paper with it.

Q. You made a poll-list after you had exhausted the regular list?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time did the regular list give out?—A. I suppose it was about half past five o'clock when it gave out.

Q. Then the balance of the vote was taken upon a list that was made there?—A. Yes, sir; after we got down to Blackville there was some paper left there and we took it off'n that and put it on the regular poll-list.

Q. When was that?—A. That was the next Saturday morning.

Q. So the next Saturday morning you transferred that list onto a regular list?—A. We carried the whole of it that night down to Barnwell, and then we went back to Blackville, and after we got there we got some regular poll-list paper and put it on it before we started back to Barnwell next morning.

Q. Did you write out all the names on it?—A. Yes, sir; all that was on the blank paper.

Q. What did you do with the other piece of paper?—A. It was left at Blackville.

- Q. Whom did you leave it with?—A. With Miller; we left the box and all right there.
- Q. You opened the box at Miller's and put this in it, after copying it, and nailed the box up again?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What time did you get through that count that evening?—A. We got home about 10 o'clock.
- Q. How far from the station did you live?—A. About five miles.
- Q. Did you go on foot or on horseback?—A. On foot.
- Q. How long were you going from this school-house home?—A. About an hour, I suppose; perhaps not so long.
- Q. Do you walk five miles an hour?—A. Well, it was five miles from the station, and this place where we voted at was on towards my house, which would make it about 4½ miles from my house.
- Q. You got home by 10 o'clock; then you finished the count before 9 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many ballots were there?—A. One thousand three hundred and seventeen.
- Q. Were the names that were voted for all on one ticket?—A. Yes, sir; they were all on one ticket; one kind of ticket, you mean?
- Q. I mean the officers voted for were all on one ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many officers' names were on that ticket, do you recollect?—A. No, sir; I don't remember how many there was.
- Q. You counted all those ballots before 9 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How did you keep the count as you took it?—A. We kept it on blank paper.
- Q. Who kept the count?—A. Myself and the supervisor.
- Q. Who took the ballots out of the box?—A. Manager Bush.
- Q. Bush took them out of the box, and then what did he do?—A. He counted them.
- Q. You were keeping a tally and the supervisor was keeping a tally; now how did Bush announce the balloting?—A. He called them "republican;" and we counted also the number of votes that each member on the ticket got.
- Q. Did you do that at that time?—A. Yes, sir; that was the second time after they called it over. He first counted the tickets and then looked over afterwards to see the number of votes that each one got.
- Q. Then, in making up the return, how did you do?—A. We looked over the ticket and saw the names of the officers on each; there was none scratched.
- Q. Then you just made up the general result from the number of tickets?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You did not go through each ticket and call the name, going over the 1,300 tickets in that way?—A. Yes, sir; called the name of each man and put it down; put each officer on the ticket.
- Q. Did you go over the names of all the 1,300 ballots, or just go through one?—A. We noticed on the ballots, when we was counting them over, that there was not any scratched.
- Q. And then you took the names off one ballot and footed up the 1,300?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Was the return fixed up there, or after you went home?—A. Pretty much all was fixed up right there.
- Q. What was fixed up there?—A. Well, the count was fixed up there; all but a portion of this blank paper.
- Q. When did you fix up the returns for the managers to sign?—A. We fixed it right there.
- Q. Who wrote that?—A. The supervisor wrote it.
- Q. He wrote it and signed that there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What did you do with it?—A. Placed it in the box.
- Q. What did you do with the poll-list?—A. We put it all in the box.
- Q. Had you any nails and hammer there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who went with you that night home?—A. Myself and Bush, and Motte also.
- Q. Did you three all go together?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did they go to your house?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did they stay at your house that night?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did any one else stay there?—A. No, sir; no one else.
- Q. It was the next Friday morning that you started to Barnwell?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where did this box remain during the interval?—A. At my house.
- Q. Did Bush and Motte stay there all that time?—A. No, sir; Mr. Motte stayed there; Bush left.
- Q. Motte is the supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did he stay there all the time?—A. He stayed there two days after the election.
- Q. Did any one else come to see you in the mean time?—A. No, sir; no one else.
- Q. When did Motte leave?—A. He left on Thursday, I think it was.
- Q. Then, who started with you on Friday to Barnwell?—A. William Bush.
- Q. How were you carrying this box?—A. In a sack.
- Q. Where was it you met these men on Friday who turned you back?—A. Between Barnwell and my house.
- Q. How far from your house was it?—A. It was about two miles and a half from Barnwell; I don't know exactly how far from my house.
- Q. Did you know any of those men?—A. No, sir.

- Q. How many of them were there?—A. I suppose about fifteen.
- Q. They were on foot?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You told them at once that you had this box?—A. Yes, sir; from Robbins.
- Q. And you turned back after the conversation with them, and went around another way, and got to Barnwell at 9 o'clock at night?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where did you go immediately after you arrived there?—A. We went up to the house.
- Q. Did you meet any one after you got to Barnwell, before you met Knopf?—A. No, sir; not any one.
- Q. Where did you find him?—A. He was just outside of the house.
- Q. Was he outside when you rode up?—A. No, sir; he was inside when we first got up there, and he came out.
- Q. Did you send in for him?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How did he happen to come out when you arrived?—A. I don't know, sir.
- Q. Did you call for any one?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Were you still on horseback when he came out?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you knock at the door?—A. No, sir; we had just got to the house.
- Q. What house was that?—A. I don't know what the name of the house is.
- Q. Was it a private house?—A. A public house. It had different offices in there.
- Q. You had got up to the door?—A. Yes; we had got up to the steps, and he came out.
- Q. Did you ask for any one else after seeing him—for either of the other commissioners?—A. Yes; we asked was they in, and he said they was all in.
- Q. And he refused to take the box?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you send for the other commissioners then and ask them to come out?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You just turned off and went back to Blackville?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How far is that from Barnwell?—A. About ten miles.
- Q. You remained there until the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where did you stay at Blackville?—A. At Mr. Miller's.
- Q. He was the candidate for sheriff on the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Is he a colored or a white man?—A. A white man.
- Q. You staid at his house, and next morning you started back to Barnwell?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Then returned to Mr. Miller's and left this box with him?—A. Yes, sir; I left it down there.
- Q. How came you to leave it with Miller?—A. Well, I didn't think we would have any use for it any more, so we left it there.
- Q. You left that and the poll-list with him?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Why didn't the managers keep that box?—A. We didn't think there would be any use to keep it, so we just brought it to that house and left it there.
- By Mr. ABBOTT:
- Q. Do you know Daniel Maxson?—A. Yes, sir; I know him.
- Q. Did you ever go by the name of Daniel Maxson?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Who is he?—A. He is a gentleman who lives in Barnwell County.
- Q. Did he act that morning as one of the managers of election in the station-house?—A. Yes, sir; he acted as one of the managers.
- Q. You did not act that morning as one of the managers?—A. Not right at present.
- Q. You did not act at Robbins that morning as one of the managers?—A. Yes, sir; I acted there.
- Q. Who were the other managers; you say Maxson was one?—A. You asked me if I knew him.
- Q. Did you not tell me just now that he acted as one of the managers?—A. At the first part of the morning.
- Q. All through the morning did he not act as one of the managers of the election?—A. Yes, sir; in the first part.
- Q. Up to the firing he acted?—A. Yes, sir; up to the firing.
- Q. And you did not act?—A. Not at the present.
- Q. You did not act at all at the station as a manager until after the firing took place?—A. I did not act as a manager.
- Q. As a manager you had nothing to do with the election until after the firing took place?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You did not go into the building to interfere or act as a manager that morning?—A. Yes, sir; I was in the building.
- Q. Did you interfere or act as manager?—A. Yes, sir; I was acting as manager.
- Q. In the morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who else besides you?—A. Wallace Bailey and Mr. Bush.
- Q. And Daniel Maxson?—A. Yes, sir; he was.
- Q. Then there were four managers at the election?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you mean to say there were four managers?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How did you get your commission to act as manager?—A. Well, sir, I will tell you; I was appointed a manager at Cainan's Fair.
- Q. Were you appointed to act as a manager at Robbins Station that day?—A. No, sir.

- Q. Were you appointed as a manager there?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You never had any appointment then?—A. Never by the—
- Q. By anybody who could give an appointment?—A. No, sir; only by those men that were there.
- Q. What do you mean?—A. The managers that were there.
- Q. Do you mean to say that Bush, Maxson, and Bailey appointed you a fourth manager?—A. They swore me in.
- Q. Who?—A. Mr. Bush and the supervisor.
- Q. Did the three managers, Bush, Maxson, and Bailey, ever appoint you?—A. They never did. Bush or Bailey didn't have anything to do with it.
- Q. When did Motte, the supervisor, and Bush (who was the only manager appointed) swear you in?—A. Right there, that morning.
- Q. At the station?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. See if you understand me. Did you act as a fourth manager at Robbins Station on that morning?—A. Yes, sir; I did.
- Q. And you were sworn in by one manager and a supervisor that morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure of it.
- Q. And you were made fourth manager that morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Acting at the election?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you had no commission whatever as a manager for Robbins Station?—A. Not for Robbins Station.
- Q. Then at the school-house the only manager appointed at Robbins was Bill Bush, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you were not a manager at Robbins?—A. No, sir; no more than sworn by the supervisor—
- Q. When did you commence with Bill Bush to take votes at that school-house that afternoon, according to your best recollection?—A. I suppose it was about half past twelve o'clock.
- Q. When did the firing commence?—A. Between eleven and twelve o'clock.
- Q. Do you mean to say that the firing commenced before twelve o'clock?—A. Between eleven and twelve.
- Q. Before twelve?—A. It might have been about twelve.
- Q. Didn't it commence nearer one o'clock?—A. No, sir; I do not think it did.
- Q. How long did it continue?—A. Not more than ten minutes, I suppose.
- Q. How long was it after the firing commenced before you opened the poll at the school-house?—A. I don't suppose it was more than half an hour or three-quarters.
- Q. Now, was Bill Bush there from before one o'clock until the polls closed at the school-house?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Don't you know he went off home with Dr. Turner, and rode behind him, on horse-back?—A. No, sir; he did not.
- Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure.
- Q. What became of Mixson?—A. I know he left the school-house behind some man.
- Q. Who left the school-house?—A. Maxson.
- Q. But Bush did not?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Whom did Mixson go behind?—A. I don't know who it was.
- Q. Did you ask Mixson to stop?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the reason he would not stop?—A. He was afraid.
- Q. And Bill Bush staid the whole time?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you closed the polls at six o'clock, and between the time you opened and closed there you administered 1,317 oaths?—A. Just about, sir, as near as we could get at it.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

- Q. Motte was the United States supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Was he there during the whole of the election?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were any votes put into the ballot-box except those that were given by voters?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Was any change made in the votes in the box afterwards?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

- Q. When a voter came up to vote what was first done?—A. We told him to raise his right hand.
- Q. Then the first thing was that he was sworn?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Then what did he do after he was sworn?—A. After he was sworn he put his ticket in the box.
- Q. Did the voter put it in or did the manager?—A. The voter put it in.
- Q. Was it done so at the depot in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Each voter put in his own ballot?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. The manager did not take the ballots from the voters?—A. No, sir.
- Q. But each voter put in his own ballot?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Is that the way in which the voting is done in this State, or in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The way you voted that morning there?—A. Yes, sir; each voter put in his own ticket

Q. How long did Mixson stay in the afternoon at the school-house?—A. He went right off.

Q. When?—A. In fact, he went off with one of the white men, started off with one of them.

Q. Was he at the school-house at all?—A. No, sir; he was not at the school-house at all.

Q. He did not act at the school-house that afternoon; he went away with one of the white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had been appointed a manager at Calnan's Fair?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there being no election there, you went over to Robbins?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who suggested you should be sworn in there as a manager?—A. Mr. Bush.

Q. Was that before the voting commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any objection made to it there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the democratic manager there?—A. No, sir; he was not there when he first made the suggestion.

Q. Was he there when you were sworn in?—A. No, sir; I was sworn in by Bush and Motte, the supervisors.

Q. Then there was not a full board there at the time you were sworn in?—A. No, sir; only the supervisor and Bush.

Q. You took an oath to do what; to act as manager there?—A. To act as manager there.

Q. At that precinct?—A. Yes, sir; as assistant.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. You say you were one of the managers at the school-house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you administered over 1,300 oaths?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you administer some of them yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the oath that you administered?—A. No, sir; I did not administer any of the oaths; it was the chairman, Bill Bush.

Q. In your presence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the oath?—A. I disremember the words exactly.

Q. Give them to us as nearly as you can.—A. I think that the words was: "You do hereby swear that you have a right to vote at this place, and have not voted elsewhere." Those were the words as near as I can remember; we told him to hold up his right hand and he swore that he hadn't voted anywhere else, and that he had a right to vote at that place, or something to that effect.

Q. Bush did all the swearing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you met Mr. Gennerette did you have the ballot-box with you?—A. Yes, sir; I had it.

Q. You had it at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you show it to him?—A. No, sir; it was in the sack, and so I did not; he did not accept of it. He said he had no use for a ballot-box, and I just gave him the returns.

Q. Whom have you talked with since you came to Columbia?—A. No one at all, not concerning—

Q. These matters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen Mr. Corbin?—A. No, sir; I have not seen him.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. You were sworn in as assistant manager?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say the democratic manager was not then present?—A. No, sir.

Q. But he came at the time they began voting and took his seat?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know where Bush is now?—A. Yes, sir; he is sick.

Q. Not able to come here?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—A. No, not of my own knowledge.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge whether he is sick?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know Leslie?—A. I have seen him.

Q. Did you see him after that day between the time you took the votes up in the woods, at the school-house, and the time you went to Barnwell?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 18, 1876.

L. W. MIMMS recalled.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Question. You know Bush who was the manager of election ?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you see him last ?—A. I saw him last Saturday mornning.

Q. Where was he ?—A. He was in bed at his house, sick.

Q. What was the matter ?—A. Chills and fever.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. How did you know that he had chills and fever ?—A. That is what he told me.

Q. You don't know yourself whether he had the disease ?—A. I saw him sick.

Q. Do you know whether he had chills and fever ?—A. I know he was sick.

Q. Did you know that he had chills and fever ?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Of your own knowledge ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw it ?—A. Yes, sir ; I saw him.

Q. Are you a doctor ?—A. No, sir ; but I know that he was trembling then when I left him last Saturday.

Q. You are not a physician ?—A. No, sir ; but I have waited on a great many sick people, and I have such a knowledge of chills and fever that I can tell when a man has a chill.

Q. Was there a doctor attending him ?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JONES :

Q. He shook, anyhow, did he ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. He was sick ?—A. Yes, sir : he was sick, or he would have been here this morning.

Q. Do you know whether he had a physician ?—A. No, sir ; he didn't tell me anything about that.

Q. You did not ask him about that ?—A. No, sir.

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

B. K. MOTTE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age and your residence ?—Answer. I am twenty-three years of age, and reside in Barnwell. That is where I call my home now, but my real home is in Charleston.

Q. What office did you hold, if any, at the last presidential election ?—A. United States supervisor.

Q. At what place ?—A. Robbins precinct.

Q. State what occurred as to the election.—A. The polls were opened, I think, between 6 and half past 6 at Robbins, and the voting continued until between 11 and 12 o'clock, as near as I can recollect, and then the building in which we were voting was fired upon.

Q. By whom ?—A. I could not say, sir.

Q. Where did the firing come from ?—A. That depends upon the direction I was sitting in. I was sitting at the table—the window was on that end of the house—as if I was sitting with my face toward that window.

Q. Did it come from the east, west, north, or south ?—A. That depends upon the direction that I was sitting. It came from the east. It came from across the railroad.

Q. State whether any shots were fired into the building.—A. Yes, sir; the first shot that was fired came directly, or three shots came directly over my head. The ball passed through three wallings. It came from that side and through a little room we was in, and out on the other side of the depot.

Q. Were the three shots in succession, or all at once ?—A. Just one after another; it seemed from the succession in which it was fired as if it was fired from some gun that can be loaded very quick. It just came, bang! and then, in a second of time, another bang—just in that succession.

Q. Did you go out of the house then ?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. How long did you remain there ?—A. I remained there until the firing ceased; but not in the same room. It was in the depot we was voting, and there was a ticket-office, and then a large part, the freight-depot, and I ran from the ticket-office into the back part of the depot, where the cotton was, and remained between two bales of cotton until the firing ceased.

Q. How long did the firing continue ?—A. I could not say.

Q. About how many shots were fired ?—A. I think there was not less than ten, and no more than about sixteen.

Q. Did you look yourself to see if you could ascertain who the men were, or where they were firing shots ?—A. At the time of the shooting?

Q. Yes, or afterward ?—A. No, sir; all I know is the shots came from that side of the depot right straight on through.

Q. Did you see anybody there ?—A. I did.

Q. Where were they at the time of the shooting, or just afterward ?—A. There was a very few when I came out scattered around there. All I could take any notice of was three men on horseback.

Q. Were they armed or not ?—A. I could not say. I did not see any arms.

Q. What became of them ?—A. They went off on the horses.

Q. Did the voting continue there ?—A. Yes, sir; it was continued; not directly there in that place.

Q. What became of the ballot-box that was being used there ?—A. We left it there.

Q. Where did you go ?—A. We went, I reckon, about between a quarter and a half mile, and the voting began there again.

Q. At what place ?—A. It was at a school-house. They told me it was a school-house. I know there had been teaching there before.

Q. You commenced the election there again ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not take the same ballot-box with you ?—A. No, sir; we had nothing to do with the box at all. We left it there.

Q. About how soon did you commence the voting at the school-house?—A. Well, I could not give any exact time that we commenced it; but as near as I can say, if it had been 12 o'clock, it could not have been much past 12.

Q. How long did you continue there?—A. As near as I can recollect it was after the sun was down, at any rate, when I left there.

Q. Do you know how many men voted there that afternoon?—A. Yes, sir; I think 1,317, as near as I can say.

Q. What place did you occupy when the voting was going on at the second voting?—A. I acted as a clerk.

Q. What did you do?—A. I registered the names of the voters.

Q. State whether you know that that number of persons voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Colored men or white men?—A. Colored.

Q. When the voting was over, who counted the votes?—A. I am the one that counted them.

Q. Who assisted you?—A. Mr. Allen.

Q. Was a return made of the votes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the managers' return signed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what was done with it?—A. The returns were handed over; the two managers took charge of the returns, Allen and Bush.

Q. What time did you get through counting?—A. I think we got through about between sundown and dark.

Q. When you got through counting is what I want to know.—A. After we got through counting the vote, it was dark.

Q. Did you have a candle there?—A. No, sir; we didn't have no candle.

Q. Where did you go after the counting was over?—A. I went to Allen's house at night.

Q. Do you know what time it was when you got there?—A. I could not say.

Q. Was it in the night?—A. O yes, it was in the night.

Q. Do you know about what time it was when the polls closed?—A. No, sir. As I stated, it was about sundown, or a little after sundown, when the voting stopped.

Q. Are you able to state how long it took you to count the votes and make the returns?—A. It did not take us very long to count the votes, because men voted and we would just look at the tickets and found out that they were all republicans, and that not one had been scratched, and we just counted the number of the votes and made out the returns accordingly.

Q. State whether you know if there were 1,317 names registered.—A. Yes, sir; there were 1,317 names registered.

Q. Who were the officers that managed the election in the morning before the firing upon the house?—A. Bush was one of the managers. Do you wish to know the supervisors and all?

Q. Yes. Give the managers first.—A. There was Bush, Maxson, and Allen, I think. I think those were the three.

Q. What United States marshal, if any, was there?—A. L. W. Mimms.

Q. Was any supervisor there?—A. I was there.

Q. Who was the other?—A. W. J. Wood; he was the democratic supervisor.

Q. Did he remain there during the time the voting was being done?—A. Yes, sir; at the first place.

Q. Did he go to the second place?—A. No, sir.

Q. What became of him?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. What was done with the ballot-box after the voting was over?—A. Allen and Bush took it in charge.

Q. Where did they take it?—A. They took it to Barnwell, I believe. I could not say about that.

Q. Where did they take it that night?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. You went to Allen's house that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it was taken to Allen's house?—A. Not as I saw it, sir. I made no inquiry about it, and did not see it there.

Q. Where did Bush live?—A. He does not live over three miles from Allen's, if that.

Q. Did you see any white men have arms that day?—A. When the firing was going on, a remark was made, I could not tell by whom; he said, "You damned republicans stand back, and you democrats come this way and get your guns."

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You heard that?—A. I heard that.

Q. Did you see any guns?—A. That was after the firing, please remember; and the democratic supervisor after the firing ceased—I didn't come out immediately after the firing ceased—he said—

The CHAIRMAN. State what you saw and said and did yourself.

The WITNESS. One of the bullets made a cut through the door, and I put my eye to the hole and I saw a young man standing back from the platform with his gun.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Was that after the order to get their guns?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You got between the cotton-bales?—A. Yes, sir; when the firing commenced.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid until the order was given to "Get you guns," and then I ran and looked through the bullet-holes to see how things looked out there. He was standing off on one side, but the balance, I don't know where they were.

Q. Was he a white or a colored man?—A. He was a white man.

Q. How many white men did you see there that forenoon, before the firing, or while the election and all was going on?—A. I don't think there could have been more than forty.

Q. When you went out how many were there?—A. All I took any notice of was those three men on horses.

Q. Do you know what became of the ballot-box in which the voting was done in the forenoon?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have never seen it since?—A. No, sir.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of voters coming in the afternoon from other precincts or parts of the county?—A. I recognized some from other precincts.

Q. What precincts were they?—A. They were from Cainan's; they were from Red Oak, and they were from Millett's.

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. You say that your home is in Charleston; were you appointed from Charleston as supervisor of election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you appointed?—A. Barnwell.

Q. How long had you been at Barnwell?—A. About seven years. I have been teaching school up there.

Q. Seven years?—A. Yes, sir; between six and seven years.

Q. You began quite young, then?—A. Yes, sir; I don't think I was fifteen.

Q. You were not quite fifteen years old when you began to teach school at Barnwell. What sort of a school were you teaching?—A. A public school.

Q. What time in the morning was it when you got to that precinct?—A. I got there between five and six o'clock.

Q. It was after sunup when you got there?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was.

Q. Who was there when you got there?—A. There was some white men.

Q. Can you name any of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. There were no colored men there when you got there?—A. Yes, sir; a few colored men.

Q. You were on the ground before the managers got there, were you?—A. That part I am not able to state; I don't know, sir; I could not give a correct statement concerning that at all.

Q. Were you present when the managers organized that morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What managers participated in that organization; who were present when they first organized?—A. Allen, Bush, Maxson, and this white man; I don't know his name.

Q. Was the white man there when they first met?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know his name?—A. No, sir; I could not recall his name.

Q. Was it Dr. Bailey?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is his name.

Q. Were Allen, Bush, and Maxson all colored men?—A. They were all colored men. Bailey was the white man.

Q. The three colored men were republicans, were they?—A. I could not tell you their politics.

Q. Do you know the politics of the white man?—A. No, sir; I could not tell you.

Q. Did all four of them sit at the same time?—A. Yes, sir; I believe they all did sit down there.

Q. Did they all take their seats before any ballots were cast?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All four acting as managers?—A. No, sir; I don't say that they were sworn in; I could not say that all four acted as managers.

Q. You did not see anybody sworn in?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them sworn in when the voting started.

Q. Who swore the managers in?—A. Dr. Bailey, I think; I could not give a positive answer concerning that, however.

Q. What is your best judgment as to that?—A. According as I think, Dr. Bailey swore them in.

Q. Whom did he swear in?—A. Bush and Maxson.

Q. Did anybody swear Allen in?—A. Yes, sir; Bush and myself swore Allen in.

Q. Both of you swore him in?—A. Yes, sir; we had something to do with it. We didn't do it exactly; when I claim that both of us swore him in, I mean to say that Bush—he repeated the oath to him and I made it out.

Q. How did you make it out?—A. By filling up the blanks. There was blank oaths there, and I filled up the blanks.

Q. Bush, then, administered the oath to Allen, and you filled up the blank, and Allen signed it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How came Bush to swear Allen in?—A. I could not say.

Q. Was there no conversation about it previous to the administration of the oath?—A. No, sir.

Q. He just presented himself and Bush swore him in?—A. In fact he was the regular appointed manager for Cainan's Fair.

Q. Yes; but he was not appointed for Robbins precinct, was he?—A. There was some threats about it that they would kill the managers.

Q. How do you know there were threats about it? Did you hear them?—A. Well, I am going to tell you.

Q. Did you hear any threats?—A. Suppose I should tell you that I saw some intimation of threats.

Q. I will give you an opportunity to explain afterward. Did you yourself hear any threats?—A. No, sir; I did not hear any; but, coming in upon my question now, I saw a note written to the managers saying that they must not go to the polls that day.

Q. Where is that note?—A. I have not got it.

Q. Where is it?—A. It was given to one of the commissioners of election.

Q. What right had Allen to sit as a manager at Robbins precinct?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Was there no discussion among the managers and yourself as to his right to sit there?—A. None that I heard.

Q. He just presented himself and Bush swore him in?—A. Yes, sir; as a manager from Cainan's not being allowed.

Q. What was Bailey doing there?—A. I could not say.

Q. Was he a manager?—A. I could not say; he had a claim himself as a manager.

Q. Was he not recognized by Bush and Maxson as a manager?—A. I reckon so, sir; I cannot give a definite answer to that; if you will give me time to explain, I shall do so. I didn't take hardly any notice of any of that proceeding at all, simply for the reason that my life had been threatened so much I kept as quiet and still as I possibly could.

Q. That did not prevent you from seeing anything. Were you in the house when they organized?—A. Yes; I was in the house.

Q. You saw these oaths administered?—A. Yes, sir; I saw the oath of Allen administered.

Q. Did you see any other oath administered?—A. No, sir; I don't think I did.

Q. Have you not stated that Bailey swore in Allen?—A. No, sir; Mr. Bush. I saw that; and according to the slight recollection that I have of the matter, Mr. Bailey swore in the balance of them.

Q. Did Bailey swear in those parties after Bush swore them in?—A. What parties?

Q. Whom did Allen swear in?—A. Allen did not swear in anybody.

Q. Who swore in Allen?—A. Bush.

Q. Who swore in Bush?—A. Bailey.

Q. Who swore in Bailey?—A. That part I could not tell you.

Q. Bailey swore in Maxson and Bush, but you did not see anybody swear in Bailey?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you there when Dr. Bailey first came in?—A. That is another question that I am at a loss to answer.

Q. Did you, as supervisor of election, understand that a manager appointed for one precinct could act at another precinct?—A. I didn't think there was any harm; I didn't know it was anything against the law, or anything of that kind.

Q. Where were you during that morning after the organization of this board, up to the time that this disturbance occurred?—A. I was sitting down at a table there, after everything got quiet.

Q. Did you remain in the room all the morning at the table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing?—A. Taking the names of the voters.

Q. You were not acting as clerk for the managers, were you, that morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was acting as clerk that morning?—A. I think a man named Turner.

Q. Up to the time that this disturbance occurred, how many votes had been polled there?—A. As near as I can recollect, I think there had been about 280.

Q. Do you know how many white men had voted up to that time?—A. I think not higher than fifty, nor less than forty.

Q. Have you any information on this subject?—A. What kind of information?

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to how many voted, or is it a mere conjecture? The election had gone on in the ordinary way up to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was nothing special to call your attention to the number of whites or blacks that had voted up to that time?—A. No, sir. I had just seen them come in and give their names.

Q. What enabled you to give us the hour at which this disturbance occurred?—A. The train goes down some time after ten o'clock, I think; I don't rightly know that, either. It goes down, I think, between ten and eleven o'clock on the Port Royal Road, and it was not a considerable time afterward that this occurrence took place.

Q. This firing came from what direction?—A. Across the railroad.

Q. Is the railroad north and south, or east and west?—A. It runs on the east, on the right-hand side of the depot.

Q. Was the room you were sitting in taking the ballots next to the railroad?—A. Yes, sir. There was a door leading out to the railroad.

Q. And they were balloting at the door?—A. No, sir; they were balloting at the window.

Q. When you went into this other room, was the room in which the ballots were being taken between you and where the firing came from?—A. No, sir; there was a door.

Q. Did the firing strike the depot on the side on which the window was?—A. The window was in front.

Q. Where did the firing come from; that side?—A. The right-hand side.

Q. What part of the depot did these balls strike?—A. All the parts, I should say. The first shots were fired pretty near in the direction in which we were sitting, and it kept going that way. Then they quit on the place where we were sitting. Just as I went into the other large part of the depot they stopped firing on that part.

Q. To which side of the depot did you go when you looked out through that bullet-hole?—A. On the left-hand.

Q. How high up were these bullet-holes?—A. They were high and low.

Q. Were any of the bullet-holes low in that room?—A. When I was passing out there was one that I thought would catch me about my waist.

Q. That is, if you were standing up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were those parties standing when you heard that conversation about "republicans standing back, democrats getting their guns"?—A. On that side, the left-hand side.

Q. How long did you remain in that room?—A. I remained until the firing had ceased and everything appeared to be quieted down.

Q. Was there anybody else in that room besides you?—A. There was men there—some other men; but who they were now I do not know.

Q. How many?—A. I could not form any idea.

Q. Do you know the names of any of them?—A. No, sir; I do not. I was so scared that I could not tell you.

Q. Did any of the other officers go in there with you?—A. Yes, sir; there was some there, but who they were I could not tell you now. I know there was some of these tellers that were putting down the names of the men behind me, and putting down the tickets they voted.

Q. Who was behind you taking names and the tickets?—A. There was some democrats. There was one standing on that corner of the window, and one standing on the other side window, and two sitting behind us, each with a paper in his hand. This one on this side of the window, every man that would come up and vote he would ask his name and set it down, and when he started to put his ticket in the box this man would look, and he would holler out, "Democrat!" and he would put a "D" to his name; but if he voted republican he would put an "R" to his name; and this one behind would do the same thing.

Q. How many men were in there besides the officers?—A. That I am unable to say, because they kept going out and coming in, and they were all white men. No colored men came in at all.

Q. Including yourself, there were four republican officers in there?—A. As I said before, I could not tell you the politics of those other men.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. You know that Allen is a republican, do you not?—A. I could not say.

Q. You know that Bush is a republican?—A. I could not say. All I know is that I am a republican.

Q. After this firing occurred and you went out these white men had all left except three?—A. Yes, sir; that is all I recollect. I saw three on horseback.

Q. Where were the black men when you went out?—A. They were scattered around, and I could not tell exactly how many there was—a few.

Q. How long did you remain in that house after the firing ceased; how many minutes?—A. I could not form any exact idea.

Q. About how long did you stay? Can you not tell how many minutes or hours?—A. It was not hours, I think.

Q. Did you stay there as long as five minutes?—A. As near as I can come at it, according to my judgment, after the firing had ceased, it could not have been over ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. The white men then had all gone?—A. As far as I saw.

Q. And a few black men were scattered around there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were the last one that left the depot?—A. Yes, sir; near about the last.

Q. And this ballot-box was then on the table?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No one with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know what became of it after that?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did you leave any black men about the depot when you went off down to this other place?—A. I don't know that either. If there were any there, there could not have been over five or six.

Q. Where did you rejoin the other colored men? Or did you go down with them to this other place?—A. No, sir; I did not see any of them until I got to the place.

Q. How did you know where they were?—A. When you say these other men, you mean the managers, don't you?

Q. No. When you went down to this other voting-place, where you renewed the voting, did you go down with the other black men that went there; and, if not, how did you ascertain that they were there?—A. O, when I got out and got off a piece from the depot, I met a colored man, (I don't know who he was, either,) and he said they were going to finish the voting down there by the school-house.

Q. When you got there what were they doing?—A. They were fixing a box.

Q. How long were they engaged in fixing that box?—A. I could not say; they were not long engaged in fixing it.

Q. How did you organize there?—A. There was no organization to go into at all there, as I saw. Bush and Allen were there. When I say there was no one there, I mean there was no other manager.

Q. Did you act as manager at this place?—A. I acted as clerk.

Q. Were you sworn in?—A. I was sworn in as supervisor.

Q. You acted as a clerk and supervisor at that place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell what time of day it was when you began to ballot there?—A. When we began to ballot it was near about 1 o'clock.

Q. And you got through about sundown?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And finished counting the votes before it was quite dark?—A. Yes, sir; it was quite dark.

Q. Was the return also written up at that time?—A. No, sir; it was not written up.

Q. When was that written up?—A. The day after.

Q. Who wrote that up?—A. I wrote it up.

Q. The next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you write up that return?—A. Where I am staying.

Q. Where was that?—A. It is George Morgan's place.

Q. How far was that from where Allen lived?—A. I think it was about a mile and a half or two miles.

Q. Was any one with you when you wrote it up, or did you write it up and take it there afterward?—A. I just wrote it up and took it over.

Q. What did you write it up from; your recollection?—A. No, sir; I had a ticket, and then we took a memorandum of the number of votes cast that night, and that was all that was necessary, as there was no—

Q. Then you took the names from the ticket and wrote opposite each name 1317?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you wrote out that return what did you do?—A. I gave it to Manager Allen.

Q. Where?—A. At his house.

Q. What time next day?—A. I could not say.

Q. Was it dark when you left the school-house, all of you, that night?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was.

Q. You left there before you had any candle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know who took that box?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not go to Allen's house that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who went with you?—A. I went by myself.

Q. Did you stay at Allen's that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who else staid there?—A. Only the family.

Q. No one else besides yourself and the family?—A. No one, sir; no one else besides myself and the family.

Q. You were the only one outside of the family who remained there that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of Bush?—A. I could not say. He went to his house, I reckon. I don't know.

Q. He did not stay there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see the ballot-box that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went from the school-house with Allen?—A. No, sir; I went alone.

Q. You did not see the ballot-box after you got to Allen's?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor after you left the school-house? You have not seen it since up to this time?—A. O, yes; I have seen it since.

Q. Where did you see it?—A. At Blackville.

Q. When?—A. It was some time ago.

Q. State about the time.—A. As near as I can recollect it was not many days after the election.

Q. About how many; a week?—A. I think it was the Monday following Tuesday, the day of the election.

Q. Whereabouts in Blackville was it?—A. It was at a house in Blackville; Mr. Miller's house.

Q. Whereabouts in the house was it?—A. It was in one of his rooms.

Q. Setting on the table?—A. No; it was setting down in a corner.

Q. Was that a room where parties went in and out?—A. No, sir.

Q. How came you in there?—A. I went in to get a book.

Q. Was any one in there when you went in?—A. I and Mr. Miller went in together.

Q. What was in that room; was it a family room?—A. I don't know what he used it for. There was a book in there that I wanted. He got the key, and I went with him and got it. The only way that I know that that was the box was that it was wrapped up in paper and tied up, and I saw on the outside of it "Robbins's box."

Q. You have not seen it since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who reached Allen's house first; you or Allen?—A. I got there first.

Q. How long was it before Allen came after you got there?—A. I don't think it was over an hour.

Q. Did you see him when he came in?—A. No, sir; I didn't see him.

Q. Where was he when you first saw him after he got there?—A. I was in the kitchen eating, and he came in.

Q. How many rooms are in his house?—A. I think there is four or five rooms.

Q. Did you hear him when he came in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he come into the room next to where you were eating?—A. The kitchen is not joining onto the house, and I was out there, and heard him when he came up the front steps.

Q. Did he come into the kitchen, or did you go to the house where he was?—A. He came into the kitchen. I don't think he came in directly from the road.

Q. Did you see that ballot-box there that night?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Then you did not go home along with Allen?—A. No, sir.

Q. You took this return that you had fixed the next day to Allen or Bush; which?—A. To Allen.

Q. And you delivered it to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain with Allen that night?—A. Yes, sir; I staid there that night.

Q. Was any one else there besides you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen that return since?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never saw it signed?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you next see Allen after that night?—A. I am accustomed to seeing him very often, because I am a general visitor at his house, and I see him more or less every day, or every other day at least.

Q. How long was it after that that you went to Barnwell?—A. I had nothing to do with going to Barnwell.

Q. You did not go there at all?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. Annott:

Q. Do you not know Dr. Turner?—A. Which Dr. Turner do you mean?

Q. You know Dr. Turner, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know two Dr. Turners?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know all the Dr. Turners there are in that country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean the Dr. Turner who was there at that election as clerk of the board?—A. By sight I do.

Q. You have spoken to him, have you not?—A. Well, yes; by sight I know him.

Q. You have known him and spoken to him, have you not?—A. I don't quite understand that.

Q. You have spoken to him?—A. Yes, sir; no more than "Good evening, doctor."

Q. He was there all that morning, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was there as clerk of the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that perfectly well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He went off at the same time with you?—A. No, sir; I don't think he did.

Q. Don't you know whether he did go away with you?—A. I can't safely say that he did go away with me.

Q. Can't you safely say who went away with you?—A. I should say I went off from the depot with no man.

Q. And you will not swear that you did not go with Dr. Turner?—A. Yes; I will swear that I did not go with Dr. Turner.

Q. Do you mean to say that you did not go—you, and Bailey, and Bush, and Maxson—three or four miles from that voting-place? Don't you know that you four went off together?—A. No, sir; I would not swear it, nor I did not go three nor four miles with him.

Q. Well, did you not go off a couple of miles with him?—A. No, sir; I did not go off a couple of miles.

Q. Did not you go beyond that school-house with Dr. Turner?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not "ride and tie" with Dr. Turner?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. I want you to be sure of this, because you know, of course, whether you went off with

Turner, Balley, Bush, and the other man.—A. I am positive on oath that I did not go off "riding and tie" with Dr. Turner.

Q. Did you go with Mr. William Bush and Mr. Daniel Mixson and Dr. Turner?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Or with any or either of them, off beyond that school-house?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you never had any conversation afterward with Dr. Turner about this matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many white men were there around the table at the time the firing first commenced?

Mr. LAPHAM. Your question assumes what the witness has not said.

Q. Were there any white men in that building around the table at the time the firing commenced?—A. Was there any white men there right around the table?

Q. Any where in the room, or where the voting was going on?—A. There was some.

Q. How many, and who were they?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Give us an estimate about how many?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Two dozen?—A. I could not form any idea how many were in the room.

Q. Were there thirty?—A. All I know is there were white men there.

Q. Were there one hundred?—A. No; I know there was not one hundred, because the room was not large enough to hold one hundred.

Q. Were there fifty?—A. I should not say any more than that. I know that the room was not large enough to hold one hundred.

Q. Was Dr. Turner in there?—A. I am unable to tell you that.

Q. Was Dr. Wallace Balley in there?—A. I am unable to tell you who was in the room.

Q. How many of those tellers were there at the time the firing commenced?—A. I am unable to tell you.

Q. But you do recollect that some time after the firing commenced some of these white democratic tellers fled for protection and took refuge with you behind the cotton-bales?—A. Yes, sir; they were in the room there. I don't know whether they fled for protection or not.

Q. You all got down behind the cotton-bales?—A. Yes, sir; we did that.

Q. And you did that for the purpose of avoiding the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what became of those men afterward that were in the room? Did they come out with you?—A. No, sir; they did not come out with me.

Q. They were in there when you left?—A. I could not tell you that; there was three or four doors to the place, and I got out one way and they might have got out another way.

Q. And the only arms you saw about that place was the gun in the hand of one white man?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How many republicans had voted up to the time of the firing?—A. I could not make any estimate of that. I know, as far as I can get at it, the whole time that they were there there was no less than forty nor more than fifty white men had voted, and the total vote as near as I can get at it was about 280.

Q. You said you had been threatened?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Speak only of what was done within your own knowledge.

Q. When?—A. From the time the campaign opened until the close of the election.

Q. What was said to you, and who said it?—A. I could not tell you who said it. I know that at least two hundred came to George Morgan's house, where I was staying.

Q. Whom was that?—A. That is another point that I didn't take any exact recollection of.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. How long before election?—A. This was just after the Ellenton and the Robins riot.

Q. Was anything said to you after that?—A. No, sir; not to my face.

Q. Nothing was said to your face down to the day of the election?—A. No, sir; not to my face. The reason was—

Mr. ANNOTT. You need not state the reason.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Where did you stay?—A. At George Morgan's.

Q. How long were you there?—A. I staid there from the 3d of June up to the time of the election.

Q. Did you remain at the house, or did you go out through the country anywhere after the threats were made against you?—A. I staid in the swamp.

Q. How long?—A. About a week.

Q. Why did you go into the swamp?—A. There were some colored men there who were in confidence with these men who I call raiders, and they would tell—

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. How did you know they were in confidence with them?—A. Because they have taken sides with them.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. State why you went into the swamp?—A. These men were in confidence with these white men, as I said, and—

Mr. COCHRANE: Do not tell what other men said.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. State why you went into the swamp?—A. In plain words, sir, because I was afraid of bodily injury.

Q. Did you see or hear anybody around the swamp?—A. Yes, sir; one place I was at they came. Yes, I can state an instance why I staid in the swamp exactly. After I left the place where I was staying I came down about 20 miles lower down the country, and was staying there, and at that time a report got out that there was some men—

Q. Never mind the report.—A. At that time they were raiding around in the north section of the country.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. How do you know that? Tell only what you know yourself.

The WITNESS. While I was there at that gentleman's house, about two hundred men came there and asked for me.

Q. How do you know they asked for you?—A. Because I was there—right there—and they asked for those men that came up from the section where the riot was.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Did you see the men?—A. I did.

Q. Were they white men or colored?—A. They were white men, and those that hadn't double-barrel guns had pistols.

Q. What time did they come?—A. It was in the morning. I don't recollect the exact day.

Q. On foot or horseback?—A. They were on horses.

Q. What did they do and say?—A. They asked for those men that came from the section where the riot was, and then they pointed personally to me and asked who I was and where did I come from, and the gentleman told them that I was one of his sister's children; that I came from lower down in the country, and they went off after that.

Q. Are you one of his sister's children?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whose house was it that you were at?—A. Bill Mixson's.

Q. Was this before or after you had been in the swamp?—A. This was after—it was during the time.

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. You say that two hundred men, after the Ellenton riot, came to Morgan's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see them?—A. I had a glimpse of them, sir.

Q. Did you see them?—A. I did not come right out and look straight at them, because that would have been—

Q. Where were you when they came to Morgan's?—A. I was in the room.

Q. Who else was there?—A. His family was.

Q. Was Morgan there?—A. No, sir; he was not there himself; his wife was there.

Q. You had a glimpse of them; is that all? Did you count them?—A. O, no, sir.

Q. How far were you from them?—A. The fence is in the yard, right in front of the road, and they were in the road.

Q. Passing by?—A. No, sir; they were standing there.

Q. Did they stop?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they come into the house?—A. No, sir; they hallooed into the house and asked "Where is Motte?"

Q. How far off were they?—A. Right beside the paling.

Q. How far off from the house?—A. It is no considerable distance.

Q. How many yards?—A. I think about twenty-five or thirty yards.

Q. And one of them asked where was Motte?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any response made to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was that all that occurred?—A. Then, when they said that, they said "Hullo, Motte!" and no answer was made, and they used an oath and said "We will make you answer," and I slipped out the back way and went off.

Q. Was that in the day-time or at night?—A. O, in the night.

Q. Did you know any one that was in that party?—A. No, sir; I did not recognize them.

Q. What time was it in the night?—A. I could not say; it was not late in the night.

Q. Had you gone to bed?—A. No, sir; I was sitting down in my room reading.

Q. You had not gone to bed?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long was that after you went to Morgan's house to stay?—A. That what I told you just now was the first part that I wanted to bring in before—what made me stay in the swamp.

Q. I ask you how long that was after you first went to Morgan's house to stay?—A. That was just after the Ellenton riot. I went to Morgan's the 3d of June.

Q. How long was it after you went to Morgan's?—A. Tell me how long it has been from the 3d of June to the first Ellenton riot?

Q. I don't know anything about the Ellenton riot. Was it the same month?—A. I say I have forgotten the date of the Ellenton riot.

Q. Can't you state whether it was in June or not?—A. No, sir; if I go to stating the month I may go over. It was not the first month I went there.

Q. Was it the 1st of July?—A. No; I don't think it was.

Q. When was it?—A. Just as I told you; it was after the Ellenton riot.

Q. How far is that from where the Ellenton riot occurred?—A. It was between eight and ten miles.

Q. Were you at the Ellenton riot?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no connection with that riot?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you ever seen those parties before that night?—A. I did not recognize any one.

Q. You went out and went into the swamp?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you stay in there?—A. Backward and forward, I staid there a week.

Q. Where is that swamp?—A. At the back of his house.

Q. Then you went how far from there to where this second affair occurred?—A. I think it is about twenty miles.

Q. What county is that in?—A. The same county, Barnwell.

Q. And you stopped there at whose house?—A. William Mixson's.

Q. What town is that near?—A. Near the village of Baldoek.

Q. When those men asked who you were they just turned and left?—A. Yes, sir; after the gentleman told them that I did not come from where the Ellenton riot was they left.

Q. And that was about a week after the first affair occurred?—A. Yes, sir; about a week.

Q. After that did you return to Morgan's?—A. Not right away.

Q. How long was it before you went back?—A. It was about a week or two before I went back.

Q. Did you remain at Mixson's all that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then went back to Morgan's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain at Morgan's until after the election?—A. No, sir; I went backward and forward from Morgan's to Blackville.

Q. How far is Morgan's from Blackville?—A. I think it is between twenty and thirty miles.

Q. After you went back to Morgan's no one disturbed you up to the time of the election?—A. No, sir; no one ever disturbed me, because they could not get the chance to disturb me.

Q. You went to this town and from there back to Morgan's how often?—A. Well, about once a week, I think; and all the time I traveled about one or two o'clock at night.

Q. Where did you stay at Blackville?—A. I just boarded about there; paid my board and staid with my friends there sometimes.

Q. How large is the place?—A. I am unable to tell you; it is not very large.

Q. What did you do when you were at Morgan's?—A. I was teaching school.

Q. Then during this time you were at Morgan's that you are now speaking of you were teaching school, were you?—A. O, no, sir. Now I can tell you the exact time of the month that this disturbance took place. It was in September. I stopped teaching school right in the month of September.

Q. When did you resume teaching?—A. I have not been teaching since.

Q. This was in September and October that you were passing from Blackville to Morgan's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you not attending political meetings at any time during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; I attended one or two of them.

Q. You went to political meetings the same as any other citizen would?—A. Yes, sir.

We the undersigned supervisors certify that the above is a correct return of votes cast at the election held at Robbins precinct, of Barnwell County, on the 7th day of November, 1876.

B. K. MOTTE,

Supervisors.

OFFICE OF CHIEF SUPERVISOR OF ELECTIONS,
DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, December 13, 1876.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the election-return of Robbins precinct, Barnwell County, on file in this office; and that B. K. Motte, whose name is affixed thereto, was one of the supervisors duly appointed for said precinct.

SAMUEL I. POINIER,
Chief Supervisor of Elections.

SUMPTER H. BLOCKER (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. Blackville, Barnwell County.

Q. How old are you?—A. Within a month of 22.

Q. Did you hold any office at the last election?—A. I acted in the capacity of supervisor at Millett's precinct.

Q. What time did you reach there?—A. At a quarter to 6 o'clock on the 7th of November.

Q. What occurred at that precinct?—A. I prefer that you will ask me questions.

Q. Was there any interference with the election there? and, if so, tell what.

Mr. Cochran objected to going into the question of interference or intimidation at this time, as a violation of the understanding of the committee.

The Chairman said that the committee had agreed unanimously to postpone the question of intimidation until after the completion of the examination of the election-returns, and that, therefore, testimony upon that subject would not now be in order.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not object to proof that parties went there from another precinct.

Q. Was there interruption during the day at Millett's when white voters came from Robbins's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time was it?—A. Different times.

Q. Name the different times?—A. Well, they were so numerous. There came down at one time about twenty, I suppose.

Q. At what hour in the day was that?—A. About 1 o'clock in the afternoon, as near as I can remember.

Q. How did they come there?—A. They came on horseback.

Q. Was there any time that afternoon when colored voters left there and went to another place?—A. Yes, sir; at different times; the same as the whites came from Robbins's to and fro.

Q. How many colored voters left and went elsewhere?—A. Why, they went in crowds.

Q. From your observation and recollection, how many colored voters went over from Millett's to Robbins's?—A. I cannot state the number, because they were going all the time.

Q. Can you state anything about the number?—A. I saw some twelve leave at once and go in the direction of Robbins's, and others at different times after that, and some before that.

Q. You are unable to say how many in all went?—A. I cannot say exactly, because I did not count them.

Q. How is the fact as to whether the colored men generally voted at Millett's that afternoon to any extent?—A. No, sir; not to a great extent.

Q. Do you know where they did vote?—A. I cannot tell you where they went.

Q. You were there all day, were you not?—A. I was standing there, and a man was standing there, and he said—

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state what you heard any one else say.

Q. Do you know how many colored people went away from that poll and who did not vote there, wherever they went?—A. That is what I want to explain now.

The CHAIRMAN. Answer the questions and do not explain. How many people left there?—A. I cannot say.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. State your best knowledge as to the number of colored people who refrained from voting at that poll that day ?—A. It is impossible for me to tell you exactly how many.

Q. You can give an estimate ?—A. I will make a supposition.

By Mr. LAWRENCE .

Q. State your opinion, from the circumstances, and from the best of your judgment ?—A. Well, there were—I will make a supposition. I will suppose about fifty to seventy-five—between fifty and seventy-five. I made a supposition. I cannot tell positively, because I did not count them.

Q. That was up to the time that you left, was it ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you leave, if you did leave ?—A. I don't recollect the exact time that I did leave.

Q. Was it in the afternoon ?—A. I left in the afternoon.

Q. About what time in the afternoon ?—A. I cannot tell positively.

Q. State it as near as you can judge ?—A. It was late in the evening. I only make a supposition of it.

By Mr. LAPHAM :

Q. Was it after the polls had closed, or did you leave while they were voting ?—A. I felt in so much danger that I left while they were voting.

Q. Did you make a report to the district supervisor ?—A. I did.

Q. If you would see that, would your recollection be refreshed as to the time you left ?—A. Probably it would.

Mr. LAWRENCE exhibited to witness a certified copy of the report.

A. [Referring to the paper.] It was somewhere along about 3 o'clock.

Q. Have you examined that paper ?—A. I have.

Q. Is that a correct copy ?—A. It is, sir ; a correct copy.

Q. State whether the facts it contains are true.

Mr. COCHRANE objected, on the ground that this was raising the question of intimidation, contrary to the understanding of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. This is simply accomplishing by indirection what we have decided shall not be done at this stage directly. We do not propose to take any ex-parte statements as evidence of facts ; and if you gentlemen propose to prove outrages and intimidation by the ex-parte reports, and not simply the ex-parte but the purely partisan reports of election-officers, certainly you cannot expect us to admit such evidence.

Mr. LAWRENCE said that this testimony was competent, not to make proof of the substantive fact of intimidation, but to show that men did go from this precinct to Robbins's, and the reason why they did go.

The chairman excluded the testimony.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 18, 1876.

LAWRENCE W. GENNERETTE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. State your age and residence ?—Answer. I am about twenty-two years old. I reside at Midway, Barnwell County.

Q. Did you hold any official position on the 7th of November last at the presidential election ?—A. Nothing more than an appointment as a commissioner for the election, as a member of the board of county canvassers.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of the appointment of Allen as a manager of election ?—A. I know that he was appointed.

Q. For what precinct ?—A. I cannot state directly unless I had a list of the appointments.

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. Are these appointments of the precinct managers made in writing by the county commissioners ; if not, how are they made ?—A. We make an appointment and notify the managers by sending them a card.

Q. Is that appointment made a matter of record ?—A. No more than that each of us as a commissioner takes a list.

Q. Then you notify him in writing, and that notification is his authority for acting ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the day of election ?—A. At Midway precinct, where I reside.

Q. How far is that from Robbins's ?—A. I cannot say exactly. Robbins's is situated near the Port Royal Railroad.

Q. What do you know of the return having been made to the county officers of the vote at Robbins's?—A. I know that these men, or the managers, presented a return to us—that is, myself and Mr. Knopf—on the morning after we had canvassed the votes: that was on the road; we met them coming to Barnwell, the county-seat. I refused to take them in the road, and I went to Blackville.

Q. What time did the commissioners adjourn?—A. I cannot say exactly, but I think it was about 7 o'clock in the morning of Saturday following the election.

Q. Go on and state what you know about this Robbins precinct.—A. I know the returns were presented to us on the road, and I refused to take them on the road.

Q. What time were the returns offered to you?—A. I really cannot state the time.

Q. Who was present when it was presented on the road?—A. The other commissioner, Mr. Knopf and myself were riding in a buggy, coming from Barnwell. After we got to Blackville I received the returns in the presence of Mr. Knopf. Mr. Knopf refused to sign the return. He said that he didn't think it would be safe; that he knew that if he did sign it he could not live in the county. I told him that I would sign it, because I thought I had a right to do it.

Q. Then what was done with the return?—A. That same evening I took the train and came up here to Columbia, and on Tuesday I presented it to the State board of canvassers.

Q. You gave it to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir, or his clerk.

Q. Were the board of officers in session when you delivered it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you state to them the reason why it was not in the county returns?—A. Yes, sir; I put in a statement to that effect.

Q. Did you make an affidavit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And filed it with the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was present when you were canvassing the county returns?—A. There were a good many of us present. Among the number, Judge Mahor, and General Hagoood, and others.

Q. Who was Judge Mahor?—A. The former judge of that circuit.

Q. In what capacity did he appear there?—A. He asked to come there as an adviser to the board, and the board agreed to take him.

Q. Was he a republican or a democrat?—A. A democrat.

Q. What was said in the board, if anything, about waiting for the return from Robbins to come in?—A. Well, after the board had organized for the purpose of receiving the boxes, returns, &c., I made a motion to adjourn until the next day at 9 o'clock. We didn't reach Barnwell until some time near 5 o'clock that evening. I made a motion to adjourn until Saturday, at 9 o'clock. This was on Friday, the 10th of November. Judge Mahor said to me that it was no use. I told him that, according to the act that governed the election, we should proceed to canvass on the following Tuesday after the election, and I would like to go by that instruction. He said that I was right, but the instruction of the attorney-general of the state was to go right through with it, and I did not understand it. The democratic commissioner was willing to go through with it, but Mr. Knopf hesitated, and I insisted upon my motion. He asked me then what was the use of my being so hard; to go to work at it. I told him I thought I had reason; and while sitting down to the table, just like this here, Mr. Knopf whispered to me and told me that I had better not go any further; that it would not be safe, because the democrats were there in such force that, if we objected and did not do what they wanted us to do, he would not give a cent for our lives. There were over thirty or forty men there dressed in red shirts, and with their rifles standing around us, cursing and going on in all sorts of style.

Q. Who was Mr. Knopf?—A. The republican commissioner.

Q. You were a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the chairman?—A. Mr. Knopf.

Q. What was done then?—A. I just went to work with them; I took his advice.

Q. Did you proceed with the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you finish it?—A. About 7 o'clock in the morning.

Q. Did you sit up all night at work on the canvass?—A. The whole night.

Q. Did you hear anything of Robbins's box that evening?—A. No, sir; I did not hear anything about it.

Q. You have said that Mr. Knopf spoke of the number of men who were there. What is the fact about it?—A. Well, they were there, about thirty-five or forty of them, dressed in red shirts, and they had their guns with them.

Q. What were they democrats or republicans?—A. All democrats.

Q. Were there any republicans there who were armed?—A. Not a single one, save myself and Mr. Knopf.

Q. Did they stay there all night?—A. Not the whole crowd of them, but a good many of them staid the whole night, and some slept around the building.

Q. Did any returns come from Calnan's Fair church?—A. No, sir; the box was presented to us by that manager, with a blank we gave them to make out the return, and a statement, and we, each one of us, looked at the writing on the other side—

(Mr. Phillips objected to the witness stating the contents of the paper.)

Q. Who brought the ballot-box there?—A. One of the managers.

Q. Who was it?—A. I know his name was Maxson—I think it was David.

Q. Maxson was one of the managers at Cainan's Fair?—A. He was.

Q. Were there any ballots in the box?—A. I never examined the box at all.

Q. Was there any return of the election from Cainan's Fair?—A. No, sir; no return.

Q. And no canvass?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see the paper which was produced by Mr. Maxson?—A. Yes, sir; I saw it and read it.

Q. What was done with that paper?—A. We gave it back to him. We just took a copy of it and handed the original back to him.

Q. You spoke of these men having red shirts; what is the significance of that?

(Question objected to, and excluded by the Chair.)

Q. What was the political complexion of Cainan's Fair precinct—democratic or republican?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. What was Robbins—republican or democratic?—A. O, a republican majority.

Q. Do you not know how it was at Cainan's?—A. I cannot tell directly.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You had, by law, until the Tuesday after election to make your returns to the State canvassors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made the return of the Robbins vote within that time?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. You say you are twenty-two years of age, and live at Midway; how far is that from Burnwell Court-House?—A. I think it is about thirty-five miles.

Q. What recollection have you about the appointment of Allen as precinct manager?—A. I know that he was appointed manager.

Q. You do not know for what precinct; you know he was not appointed manager for Robbins?—A. I cannot say, without I had a list here.

Q. Did not the county commissioners preserve any record or memorandum of the appointments of precinct managers?—A. No, sir.

Q. You kept no record of it at all?—A. Yes, sir; I think we did; but that is with the chairman.

Q. How long have you resided at Midway?—A. I think since shortly after the breaking out of the war.

Q. How old were you when the war broke out?—A. I cannot say directly.

Q. The war broke out in 1861; do you know in what year you were born?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What year was it?—A. 1855.

Q. Were you born at Midway?—A. No, sir; I was born at Charleston.

Q. Did you go from Charleston to Midway?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have lived at Midway ever since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If I understand you, the first time this Robbins box was presented to you was on the highway, when you were going from Burnwell to Blackville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time you had met and canvassed the precinct returns, and made out your returns and adjourned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time of day was it that you met this box?—A. I have no idea of the time.

Q. You were the only one of the managers that signed that return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you signed that at Blackville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?—A. Just as soon as I got to Blackville.

Q. Then what did you do with it?—A. I kept it in my possession until evening, when I took the train from there and came up here. That was Saturday evening.

Q. Did you reach here Saturday night?—A. Sunday morning.

Q. When did you take that return up to the secretary of state's office?—A. I think it was Tuesday.

Q. Where was the return in the mean time?—A. I had it with me all the time.

Q. Did you submit it to any one for examination in the mean time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you show it to any one?—A. No more than to Mr. Knopf, one of the commissioners. He was up here at the same time and brought the general return with him.

Q. You and he came together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you show that to any one here in town?—A. No, sir.

Q. To any one at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any one talk to you about it here in town?—A. No, sir; not as I know of.

Q. In what shape did you bring the returns up?—A. I wrapped them up by themselves and tied a string around them.

Q. Wrapped them up in what?—A. Nothing but the paper itself.

Q. You just had a string tied around the returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You presented that return on the Tuesday following and delivered it to whom?—A. Mr. Hayne.

Q. To him in person or to his clerk?—A. I know he was present. I cannot tell whether I handed it to him or the clerk.

Q. Is this Judge Maher judge of the circuit court of that place?—A. He was formerly.

Q. How long is it since he was judge?—A. I cannot say.

Q. What is your recollection about it?—A. I cannot recollect what time the present judge came there.

Q. How long is it since Judge Maher was judge of that circuit?—A. I would rather not say unless I could make a direct statement.

Q. How came Judge Maher to be regarded by your board as your legal adviser? Do you state that he came and requested to be regarded by the board as its legal adviser?—A. No, sir; not to me.

Q. Did you see him go to any member of that board and request that they should take him as a legal adviser?—A. No, sir; but Mr. Knopf told me.

Q. You did not see or hear him make any such application?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say that the board consented to take him as their legal adviser?—A. That was my understanding of it. Mr. Knopf told me that he asked.

Q. Did you acquiesce?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you object to it?—A. I objected to it.

Q. To whom did you make your objection?—A. To the chairman of the board.

Q. Where?—A. Right in the room.

Q. When?—A. At the same time.

Q. Who was present when you made that objection?—A. A good many were present.

Q. State the names of those who were present.—A. There were a good many strangers and I could not recall the names.

Q. Was General Hagood there?—A. I do not know as he was at that time, but he was there all along.

Q. Was this after your board had organized and was in session for the purpose of canvassing the precinct returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made it publicly there before the board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Judge Maher himself present then?—A. No, sir; he was outside.

Q. Was he notified that you had objected to him?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. At what time did Mr. Knopf tell you that Judge Maher had requested to be taken as an adviser of the board?—A. I cannot tell what time.

Q. Was it after your board had organized?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long afterward?—A. A few minutes afterward.

Q. Where did you organize?—A. In a building in the village.

Q. In the court-house?—A. No, sir; there is no court-house there.

Q. That is the county-seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Blackville, where you received the box, is how far from the county-seat?—A. Ten miles.

Q. What time on Friday did your board organize?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did you make this motion to adjourn until Saturday immediately on the organization of the board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was present when you made that motion?—A. A good many of them.

Q. Name any who were present, outside of the board?—A. Judge Maher was present.

Q. Who else?—A. I cannot recollect any of their names.

Q. Was General Hagood there?—A. I do not know as he was there right at that time. That was near about the time when I objected to Judge Maher—near about the time, or right after. I do not know as he was there at the time.

Q. Did you assign any reason for the adjournment of the board until the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. I stated that my objection was that the Robbins box was not present, and if we adjourned to some time the next day the box might have come in.

Q. Had you any information at that time about the reason why the Robbins box was absent?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you ascertain that it was absent?—A. We had just organized ourselves as a county board of officers.

Q. Now, I ask you if you had learned of the absence of the Robbins box before that, and, if so, how? Did you go to make an examination to see what returns were there before you organized as a board?—A. The first organization was as commissioners.

Q. You met as commissioners to canvass the precinct returns?—A. We met then and organized to receive them.

Q. You met about 5 o'clock and organized. Now, before you had met and organized as a board, for the purpose of canvassing the precinct returns, had you gone there to the office to see and to count what precinct returns were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then when did you learn that the Robbins precinct was absent?—A. When the chairman called out for all the boxes by name all were present except that one.

Q. Had that been done before you made a motion to adjourn until the next morning?—A. I never made a motion to adjourn until the next morning.

Q. Haven't you just said that you made a motion to adjourn until the next morning on account of the absence of the Robbins return?—A. I made that motion in the evening, just after we met.

Q. Was that the first thing you did on meeting?—A. After we received the boxes.

Q. You did not make that motion until after the boxes had been presented?—A. No, sir; not until after the boxes were presented.

Q. Who did you say objected to that adjournment?—A. Judge Maher.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that he thought we had better go through with the counting.

Q. State exactly what he said as far as you can recollect it.—A. That is all he said until I objected further and stated my grounds, and then he said I was right, but according to the instruction of the attorney-general of the State, he said, we had better go through.

Q. Did he state what that instruction of the attorney-general was?—A. He said that the instruction was that three days after the election was over we should proceed to the canvass.

Q. That you should meet and begin the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that all he said?—A. Yes, sir; that was all he said.

Q. And thereupon you all entered into the canvass and continued it until you completed the canvass of all the returns, at 7 o'clock the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You then made up your return as county commissioners, to be forwarded to the State board, and adjourned?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You said you signed some return at Blackville; what was it that you signed there?—A. I signed the returns.

Q. What returns? The returns that those persons gave you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you sign them?—A. At a private building at Blackville.

Q. Is that [handing witness a copy of the return] the form of the paper that was given to you? If so, tell us where you signed the return which was given to you and given to the secretary of state.—A. I do not know as I signed this, because I cannot find my name on it.

Q. That purports to be a copy of the paper that is in the secretary's office. Now, whereabouts did you sign it?—A. I signed it about here, [indicating.]

Q. Did you do anything more than put your name to it?—A. Nothing more.

Q. How sure are you that you put your name to the return which was produced by Allen and Bush? Are you sure that you put your name to it at all?—A. Yes, sir; I am sure of that.

Q. Was that paper signed by Allen and Bush?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it under their names that you put yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated nothing in this paper above your name?—A. No, sir. I only put my name.

Q. You only put your name under the managers' names?—A. Nothing else on that paper.

Q. Did you on any other paper?—A. I sent in an affidavit.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. At the time that your board of canvassers organized, were the boxes containing the returns all there in the room?—A. There was not a single box there at the time we organized.

Q. How long after you organized was it that the boxes were brought in?—A. As soon as we had organized we called for them.

Q. Who called for them?—A. The chairman of the board.

Q. What did he say?—A. He commenced alphabetically and called from the first precinct down to the last.

Q. Who brought them in?—A. At first some of the chairmen of the precinct managers, and others.

Q. Where did they have the boxes?—A. They had them in their hands, outside.

Q. They were standing outside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said when Robbins precinct was called?—A. No one answered at all.

Q. Were all the boxes there at that time except Robbins?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you remember that, during this canvass, there was a discovery made that Hurley, one of the republican electors, had no votes at Blackville? Do you remember that there was a precinct where Hurley was left out or was missing?—A. I do not know as the name was missing.

Q. Was there any difficulty about the electoral vote of Hurley?—A. There was a little mistake made, but that was by the managers.

Q. What occurred in reference to that?—A. Well, we agreed to send that return up before the State board of canvassers.

Q. What occurred before your board?—A. Nothing occurred, only we all concluded that it was a mistake.

Q. Was not one of the managers there with the return?—A. No, sir. As soon as we received the boxes and the returns, then the managers all left.

Q. Are you not mistaken about the manager from Blackville; was not he still there when this mistake was discovered?—A. No, sir; he was not there.

Q. Do you remember how you ascertained that it was a mistake?—A. Nothing more than we just concluded that it was a mistake.

Q. You don't remember anything being said by the manager of that precinct about it?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Or do you remember whether you took the advice of the counsel about it?—A. He said that we had better send it up.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. Who said?—A. Judge Maher.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Do you remember that his advice was asked about it by either of you commissioners?
—A. No, sir; I cannot remember.

Q. What did he say about it, whether he was asked or not?—A. He said that it was a mistake.

Q. What else did he say?—A. That we had better send it up to the State board of canvassers, and it would be determined there.

Q. What did he say as to whether you could correct it there?—A. No, sir; he didn't say that we could correct it.

Q. Did he say that you could not, or anything upon the subject?—A. Well, he said that he didn't think that we could correct it there; that we had better send it up.

Q. State whether that was the reason it was not corrected by the commissioners, the advice he gave?—A. Yes, sir; that was the reason.

Q. Do you remember the number of votes at that precinct?—A. Something over eleven hundred.

Q. I mean the number of republican votes. Do you remember how many Hurley lost by that mistake?—A. I know that the majority for the republicans at that precinct was something over two hundred, but all the republican votes I don't recollect.

Q. If I understand you, Mr. Knopf was the person selected to bring the returns from your county to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have spoken of bringing to the secretary of state's office a return from Robbins precinct. Now, I want to know whether you brought it and filed it at the same time that Mr. Knopf filed the other returns of the commissioners?—A. Not at the same time, but on the same day.

Q. That was the last day you had to make returns, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time you met and filed an affidavit of the facts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you one of the accounting-officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you sign their returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you also sign the managers' return for the Robbins precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you happen to sign the Robbins precinct return?—A. I signed it because I thought I had a right to sign it. One of the commissioners was present, Mr. Knopf. He refused to sign it, and he stated his reason.

Q. Now, there is no mistake about this: this return which Allen and Bush produced to you you did sign your name upon that paper; that you do know, if you know anything about these things, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Where was that?—A. That was at Blackville.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. You did not correct that mistake, as you supposed it to be with reference to Hurley; you just sent it up to the State board?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 18, 1876.

ABRAHAM KNOPF sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Blackville, Barnwell County.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Next March it will be twenty-two years.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I was merchandising; I am not now.

Q. What is your age?—A. About forty-four.

Q. How long have you lived in this State?—A. Twenty-two years.

Q. All the while at Blackville?—A. I have lived at Blackville ever since 1865. Previously I lived out in the country about eight miles from the place.

Q. Did you hold any office at the last election?—A. County auditor.

Q. How long have you held that office?—A. Nearly two years. I hold it now.

Q. Were you elected to the office?—A. I was appointed, on the recommendation of the delegation, by Governor Chamberlain.

Q. As county auditor were you one of the board of county canvassers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the other members of the board?—A. W. T. Blanton and L. W. Gennerotte.

Q. When did you first meet for the purpose of canvassing?—A. I don't exactly remember the day; some time in October.

Q. I mean for the purpose of canvassing the vote after the election?—A. We met at Barnwell on the 10th of November, Friday, about one o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. What returns had come in at that time?—A. There were thirteen returns, and the fourteenth was empty; that was the box for Calnan's Fair; there was no election held there. At Robbins there was none. There were thirteen in all.

Q. Including the Calnan's Fair box?—A. No, sir; aside from the Calnan's Fair box and the Robbins box.

Q. What time did the commissioners organize for the purpose of the canvass?—A. As soon as I got there.

Q. How many people were there at that time?—A. Well, I traveled ten miles to get there, (from Blackville to Barnwell,) and when I first got in there were not more than one or two, but in the course of a few minutes there were a good many there.

Q. How many?—A. Two rooms, perhaps the size of this, were well crowded, and a good many in the yard.

Q. Were any of the persons armed?—A. I did not see any.

Q. That evening?—A. I did not see any arms that day.

Q. Did you that night?—A. No, sir; I saw some the next morning in the room.

Q. What time in the morning?—A. After we got there. It was about eight o'clock before I saw any arms.

Q. Where were they?—A. They found them in the corner. There were only three guns.

Q. In the room that you were in?—A. In the next room.

Q. Were there any persons in red shirts there?—A. Yes, sir; during the afternoon, but none at night.

Q. When you ascertained that the Robbins precinct return was not there, was there any application made or anything said about adjourning over your canvass?—A. O, it took us until about four o'clock to canvass, but we didn't certify until about eight or nine o'clock in the morning.

Q. Was there any motion made to adjourn the canvass on account of the absence of the Robbins precinct return?—A. Not as I remember; not during the day.

Q. At any time before you got through?—A. Well, next morning—

Q. No; that evening I mean?—A. No, not that evening.

Q. Do you not remember Mr. Gennerotte's making that motion?—A. I don't remember that any one made any such intimation to me during the day.

Q. Now, you say you got through with the canvass about four o'clock in the morning?—Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything said then about adjourning for the Robbins precinct?—A. I called Mr. Blanton; I remember that. I ain't certain whether I called Gennerotte. Says I, "We are through now; let us adjourn and go home." That was about eight or nine o'clock the next morning.

Q. You do not understand my question. Was there any application made to wait for the returns from Robbins?—A. Not as I remember.

Q. Did you see any one from Robbins the previous evening while you were engaged in the count?—A. I saw two of the managers at nine o'clock that night, as near as I can recollect.

Q. Who were they?—A. William Bush and W. J. Allen, I think. Allen I did not speak to; Bush is the one that I spoke to.

Q. What was said?—A. He called to me at the time while we were canvassing. I suppose there were twelve or fifteen in the room where we were sitting, and I heard my name called. I saw Bush, and he said, making a motion, "I have brought the return from Robbins." I said, "Have you got the box, too?" Said he, "Yes." At the moment I said, "I shall receive nothing from Robbins." This was at nine o'clock at night. He insisted for a while on my taking it. He said, "That is as soon as I could come." Said I, "You get away just as quick as you can." I would not touch it.

Q. What reason did you assign for that?—A. Well, I feared to receive it.

Q. Didn't you say so to Mr. Bush?—A. Yes, sir; I tried to cut it as short as I could to get him away.

Q. Did you mention it to either of the other commissioners?—A. No, sir; I never mentioned anything at all.

Q. Why didn't you do that; why didn't you tell Gennerotte and Blanton?—A. Well, I hardly know myself; I was excited at the time at the idea of the box—

Q. Excited with what?—A. Well, I expected that I was pretty closely watched.

Q. Excited with what, anger or fear?—A. Sort of fear; of course it was fear.

Q. Was there any other reason than that, why you didn't speak to your associates?—A. Well, it seemed like the whole weight was on me, because Mr. Blanton—

Q. Just answer my question; was there any other reason than these fears for your not speaking to Blanton and Gennerotte about their having come there with that return? Can you assign any other reason?—A. At that moment I thought they might suspect me of something wrong, a party that was inside.

Q. Well, that was part of your fear?—A. Well, that was my fear.

Q. And you did not say anything about it?—A. No, sir; I did not say anything during the whole night.

Q. What time Saturday morning did you adjourn?—A. Between 8 and 6 o'clock.

Q. Where did you then start for?—A. Back for Blackville, after I had seen doctor. I was made messenger to bring the returns to Columbia.

Q. On your way to Blackville, did you meet either of the officers of Robbins Parish?—A. Yes, sir; as we got outside of the gate at Barnwell, they approached us.

Q. While you were there at Barnwell, you met them?—A. Yes, sir; right at the gate as we got out of the building where we had been canvassing.

Q. Who was Mr. Blanton?—A. I think he remained in the building.

Q. You left him in the building and you and Gennorette started to go to Blackville and they met you?—A. Yes, sir; we met three of them, Allen and Bush and the supervisor.

Q. How far from the door of the room where you had been canvassing were you?—A. I suppose about twenty yards.

Q. What occurred there?—A. Well, they said, "We come to you to take your returns." They demanded of me to take the returns of Robbins.

Q. Who made that request?—A. All three of them. Mr. Motto said, "I am supervisor, and I demand of you to receive this box." I told them, "My return is sealed up, and I consider that I have finished my work."

Q. What did Mr. Gennorette say?—A. After they had talked there awhile he said he would take it, and he received it.

Q. Did you state there any other reason for not taking it than that the returns were sealed up?—A. I told them that I considered that we had done our work, and I didn't consider that we had a right to receive anything else after it.

Q. Did you say anything there about your fears in case you should take it?—A. I think I said something about that. I told them I would not dare touch anything now.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. On to Blackville.

Q. Did they go back with you?—A. They didn't go with me, but I saw them there, and they approached me again.

Q. Did you and Mr. Gennorette go together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after you got there did you see them first?—A. I think it must have been about 3 o'clock when I met them. I got there about twelve.

Q. You saw them, then, within an hour or two after you reached Blackville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What occurred then?—A. In fact, they sent for me and asked me why I didn't receive it, and they tried to tell me the reason that they could not bring it any sooner. I told them not to tell me anything at all. I said I had done my work and I could not take anything from Robbins. I said, "I cannot endanger myself by taking anything now."

Q. What reason did they give you for not bringing it sooner?

Mr. PHILLIPS objected to the question as calling for a mere conversation.

Mr. LAPHAM contended that the question called for an official communication.

The committee overruled the objection.

Q. What was said to you by Mr. Bush, or either of these gentlemen, in regard to the reason why they were not earlier with the Robbins return?—A. They told me that some of them got out in the road and hunted him and wanted to kill him, or wanted to take the returns from him, (I don't recollect the exact words,) and that they had to ride around out of their way.

Q. At what time did they state this to you?—A. In the morning when they came to Barnwell, and then at Blackville.

Q. Who was counsel for the board while you were engaged in making the canvass?—A. One was with us all the time, Judge Maher.

Q. He is a democrat, is he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember in the course of the canvass a defect in one of the precincts, an omission of any electoral vote for Mr. Hurley?—A. Yes, sir; at Blackville.

Q. How many votes?—A. Six hundred and ninety-five.

Q. Tell the committee what occurred when you discovered that defect. You discovered it during the canvass, I understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said and done?—A. I handled all the returns. When I got to Blackville, in calling out the electoral votes I made mention, "I see Tim Hurley's name ain't there," and at that time one of the managers from Blackville that brought the returns hadn't left Barnwell, when he called the attention of the board to the fact that Mr. Hurley's name was left out, and he said, "It isn't there." I told him, "There it is." He took out then the tally-list and showed the board that his name was there. I told him, "'Taint here where you are signed to it; 'taint here officially." Then we understood there the reason it was left out. He offered to give it to the board. I told him, "We cannot receive it; you are only one."

Q. What was the reason it was left out?—A. They all got tired and slept, I suppose, the latter part of the night. The democratic supervisor copied it, and while he was copying he, through mistake, lost it out.

Q. That was said there, was it?—A. Yes, sir; by the messenger.

Q. Was he one of the managers himself?—A. Yes, sir; he was one of the managers.

Q. What was said then?—A. Judge Mahor ruled me that I could not receive it, and I thought he was right.

Q. Was that the reason the correction was not made?—A. Well, he said we could not put anything there without the managers put it there themselves; that we could not go behind the returns.

Q. And it was not done?—A. It was not done.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. For that reason?—A. At that time it was not changed at all; it was left that way.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Did anybody advise that you should not correct that mistake?—A. Well, the attorney for the board (he offered his services voluntarily) he advised that I could not go behind the returns.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You speak of him as the "attorney of the board"?—A. He offered voluntarily to act for us if we needed any advice.

Q. Did the board employ him or ask him to act as their counsel?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he not appear in fact as counsel for the democratic candidates?—A. I cannot say. As soon as I got there he said, "Mr. Knopf, if you need my advice I will give it to you voluntarily." I told him I had no objection.

Q. Where was your precinct?—A. Blackville.

Q. Was it there that this deficiency was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know as to whether Mr. Hurley was voted for by the voters that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any republican tickets on which Mr. Hurley's name did not appear?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, if I understand you, by the return of the managers, Mr. Hurley had no vote at all?—A. None at all.

Q. But you know you voted for him?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You know Mr. Blanton, I suppose, perfectly well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not afraid of him?—A. No, sir.

Q. He was not a man who would have done you any violence under any circumstances?—A. Well, he took no part at all.

Q. He was one of your commissioners; now he would not injure you if you communicated to him the fact that you had had that return offered?—A. Well, I did not feel like mentioning it to any one.

Q. You were not afraid of Mr. Blanton?—A. No, sir; not of him.

Q. You were not afraid of Gennerette?—A. No, sir.

Q. General Hugood was there at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not afraid of him?—A. Well, I do not know that I thought much about it; there were a good many there.

Q. You hadn't seen a gun in the room that night?—A. Not a gun that night.

Q. Nobody had threatened you?—A. Not that I had heard.

Q. So that there was an absence of arms, there was an absence of any threats whatever, and, so far as Mr. Blanton was concerned, you were not afraid of him?—A. I would not have been afraid of him if the board had been by itself.

Q. You were not afraid of Judge Mahor, the counsel?—A. No, sir; but I did not feel right in telling him.

Q. Your only reason was that you were afraid of something?—A. I just had a fear.

Q. When did Mr. Gennerette first take that return?—A. He received it there at Barnwell.

Q. When did he sign it?—A. At Blackville. We were in a buggy when he received it.

Q. Then he took it into the buggy and drove on to Blackville, and when he got to Blackville he then signed it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw him sign it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you came with him to Columbia?—A. I did not come with him.

Q. You came to Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He came at the same time, didn't he?—A. No, sir.

Q. How soon after did he come?—A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't you meet him here?—A. Yes, I saw him.

Q. Did he get here before you, or afterwards?—A. I think he must have got on the train before.

Q. You carried the general returns for the county to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would he receive them when you brought them there?—A. I did not see the secretary of state at first.

Q. Would they receive them?—A. No, sir; they would not.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. It was on Monday that I went there to deliver them, and they would not receive them, and I did not go there again until Wednesday.

Q. Why didn't you go next day?—A. Well, I thought I would stay away until Wednesday, and maybe they would take them, and when I went there they took them.

Q. What reason was there for not receiving them when you carried them to the secretary of state's office?—A. Well, I thought they didn't want to receive them.

Q. Well, they said they wouldn't receive them, didn't they?—A. Said he, "Have you got a full return for Barnwell County?" Said I, "I have got thirteen boxes." He asked me if I did not have the balance of the returns, the other two. I told him that was all I had. Said he, "We cannot receive them."

Q. Which other two were they?—A. Robbins and Cainan's Fair.

Q. Did you see the secretary of state, or any other person, in that office between that and Wednesday?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody between that and Wednesday?—A. No, sir; I didn't go to the state-house at all.

Q. Did you see anybody here to talk with upon that subject of returning your papers?—A. Yes; I made mention to General Hagood; he is the only man that I remember.

Mr. LAPHAM objected to the witness stating his conversation with General Hagood.

Mr. ABBOTT. I want to know what the witness did in reference to those returns, as bearing upon his conduct in not delivering them.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything that occurred in this connection which was directly connected with the delivery of the returns to the secretary of state, is competent.

Q. Did General Hagood in any way advise you not to deliver them, or offer any inducement not to deliver them.

Mr. LAPHAM objected to the question as incompetent.

Q. Did General Hagood in any way offer any inducement to prevent you delivering those returns to the secretary of state?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not he advise you to deliver them to the secretary of state?

Mr. LAPHAM objected to the question as immaterial.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is a material fact which may be brought out, whether strictly and legally competent or not.

Q. Did General Hagood urge you in any way to deliver those returns to the secretary of state's office?—A. He only asked me whether I had made a return. I said, "No; they have not received the returns from me yet." He then, next day, said that he would send some one to be at the side of me and watch and see whether the secretary of state would refuse to receive them. I said, "No." Said I, "I am going to return them to-morrow morning." That was Tuesday. He said he would send some one to be at my side to see that the secretary of state did not refuse them. I told him that I did not offer them directly to the secretary of state; that I only saw his clerk. The general wanted me to deliver them that Tuesday afternoon. I told him, "No; I believe I will not go over there until Wednesday morning."

Q. He did urge you to deliver them Tuesday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he wanted to have some witnesses present to see whether they would take them or not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not assent to that?—A. No, sir; I did not, but he did send witnesses.

Q. Did you give any reason for not assenting?—A. No; I told him, "I see they are crowded and excited, and I believe I will wait until to-morrow to deliver them."

Q. Did you give any reason for not having any witnesses?—A. I told, "Taint necessary." I told him, "They will certainly receive them from me."

Q. Didn't you make some arrangement with the general to have somebody to see whether they would or would not receive them?—A. He partly insisted. In fact two men approached me on Wednesday morning and said, "Here, we want you to go and hand in the returns, if they receive; if not, we will take out a mandamus." I told the men I was just getting ready. It was a few minutes of 10 o'clock.

Q. Did you see anybody else in reference to delivering these returns?—A. Not as I remember.

Q. Did you go to the governor about it?—A. No; I went in to the governor the first morning I came in.

Q. I inquired only in reference to the time when you came to deliver the returns?—A. I did not see him after Monday morning.

Q. Did you go to him or say anything to him about the delivery of the returns?—A. Yes, sir; I had the returns in my hand when I went.

Q. Did you say anything about this subject?—A. Well, we talked a little about it.

Q. About the delivery of the returns?—A. Not exactly about the delivery.

Q. About giving those returns to the secretary of state?—A. I did not mention anything to him, because I did not think he was the person.

Q. I don't care for any conversation with the governor except what had reference to these returns.—A. I have not mentioned to the governor anything in regard to their not being received.

Q. Did you say anything to him about having the returns with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He knew, then, that they had not been received?—A. Well, it was the same morning. I went from one room to the other.

Q. I don't want to draw out any conversation, except about those returns. If there was anything said on that subject tell me.—A. He did not say anything, as I remember, in regard to it.

Q. And you said nothing to him about it?—A. Nothing, only just general talking. I don't remember exactly the wording of it. I didn't offer them to him. I told him, "I have got the returns."

Q. Did you talk about that Barnwell precinct?—A. We talked about the Robbins box.

Q. Did he say anything to you about delivering or not delivering the returns?—A. He didn't say anything about the delivery in regard to the secretary of state.

Q. Or about not delivering them?—A. Not a word mentioned.

Q. Or holding them back until something else was done?—A. No, sir; nothing.

Q. He gave no advice in any way in reference to the delivery or non-delivery of those returns?—A. Nothing; not a word was said. I don't know for certain whether I went into the governor's office before I went into the secretary of state's office.

Q. All I want to get is, what was said between you and the governor upon the subject of delivering these returns or not delivering them?—A. What little time I was in there he said something to me about the returns, if I had them here; but I don't remember whether I went in there first or not.

Q. No matter whether you went in there first or last. You had the returns with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said something about the returns; can you tell us what that was?—A. Nothing, but that he asked me, "How about that Robbins box?"

Q. What did you say to that?—A. I told him exactly as I have stated here, that it was brought to me that night. And he asked me, "What is the reason you didn't receive it; do you think there is anything wrong about it?" I told him I could not conscientiously receive it; and he answered me, "Don't you do anything against your conscience, or anything dishonest." I remember that conversation between us.

Q. And that is all you recollect?—A. That is all I recollect.

Q. You told him you could not conscientiously receive it, and he told you, "Don't do it?"—A. He asked me, "How is it what I hear about that Robbins box, that you did not receive it?" And I told him it came to me, but I could not receive it; and then says he, "What do you think; is there anything dishonest, anything wrong?" Says I, "Governor, I cannot conscientiously receive it."

Q. And that was true, was it not?—A. Sir?

Q. You told him the truth?—A. Well, I told him something—that I could not receive it.

Q. You told him what you thought to be the truth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And thereupon he said, "Don't do anything against your conscience"?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who is General Hagood?—A. He was running for comptroller-general.

Q. What had he to do in this matter, that he advised you about it?—A. He was the chairman of the democratic party of Barnwell County.

Q. And an active democratic partisan?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the reason that you did not accept his proposal to send a democratic witness to your offer of the returns?—A. I told him I did not see it was necessary, because certainly they would receive it from me.

Q. You did not think it was necessary?—A. I did not think it was necessary.

Q. Did he or did he not say to you in that conversation that if you made this tender of the returns and they received them, that the democrats could get in other returns on the other side upon the precedent thus established?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Are you sure he did not say that?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did General Hagood come to see you to talk upon this matter or did you go to him?—A. No, sir; we just met.

Q. Where did you meet?—A. I think he was coming out of the State-house and I was walking in.

Q. Which broached this subject first; did you ask his advice or did he offer it to you? What did he say?—A. I think he did, first. He was walking with a gentleman, and he said to him, "I want to see this gentleman (me) for a moment or two;" and he took me off to one side, and he asked me, "Have you delivered your returns?" Says I, "No, sir." Then, from that we walked on until we got to the Wheeler House.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. In this conversation between you and the governor, did you say anything to him about their coming in the evening and your declining to take them?—A. I told him exactly the same as I have stated here, that they came in about nine o'clock, as well as I remember, and again in the morning at between nine and ten.

Q. Did you say to him that you declined to take them in the evening because you were afraid to take them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told him the same as you have testified here?—A. That is, that I had a fear on my mind to touch anything further.

Q. You have used the expression here that you could not conscientiously receive that return?—A. I said that to the governor.

Q. Does that apply to your not receiving it at night, or to your not receiving it after you had adjourned?—A. I answered the governor, the reason that I did not sign them at all with Gennerette.

Q. When you said you could not conscientiously do it, you were speaking of your refusal to sign, were you not? What were you speaking of when you said that to the governor?—A. I think, as well as I remember, that I told the governor of my living in a very dangerous section, and that I did not feel right to sign anything from that place.

Q. You explained your fears to the governor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You signed the general county officers' return for county officers, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All three of you signed it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You did tell the governor that you could not conscientiously sign those returns?—A. Yes, sir; that Robbins box.

Q. And you understand what you mean when you say you cannot conscientiously do a thing, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That it is wrong, that it would be something in which you would feel that you had done wrong?—A. The reason I construed it so, the reason I did not receive it, and after I had not received it that night, I did not feel right in receiving it afterward.

Q. That you could not conscientiously do it?—A. I could not conscientiously sign any paper after we adjourned.

Q. And that is all your remark had reference to?—A. That is all.

By Mr. PHILIPS :

Q. In your examination-in-chief you are made to say that as county auditor you were acting as county commissioner of election; you were not county commissioner by virtue of your office as auditor? You were appointed commissioner separately?—A. Yes, sir; it is a separate appointment.

Q. You received your appointment from Governor Chamberlain as county commissioner?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you met and organized as a canvassing-board on Friday, about one o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And concluded the canvass about four o'clock in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard no motion made when you met on Friday to adjourn to Saturday morning at nine o'clock on account of the Robbins box, or on any other account?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. How long have you known Judge Maher?—A. Ever since I have been living in the county, twenty-two years.

Q. How old a man is he?—A. He is about my age, or a little older; between forty-five and fifty.

Q. Is he a man of very high character?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A man of great probity, is he not? Is he not very much respected as a judge and a gentleman?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it brought about that he acted as legal adviser for the board there?—A. I think Mr. Blanton, the democratic canvasser, got him there.

Q. Did you see him bring him there?—A. O, he was already living there.

Q. But did you see him bring him into the room?—A. No, sir; the reason I say that is, when we met a few days before Mr. Blanton says to me, "We ought to have counsel, and we ought to have a guard." I said we didn't want anything of the kind. I told him I didn't see what we wanted with either of them.

Q. And you did not then agree to have any?—A. I did not. We met at Blackville to select the managers. We had two meetings previous to the canvassing.

Q. When this matter about Timothy Hurley's vote was discussed by the board, Judge Maher advised you that the functions of that board were simply ministerial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you had no right to go behind the face of the precinct managers' returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't he further tell you that that matter in respect to Mr. Hurley, if it was a mistake, could be corrected by the State board? Didn't he tell you that you could just certify the facts?—A. I don't remember that part, but I know that about two or three o'clock in the night he advised me that I could place Tim. Hurley there—that was afterwards—that is, provided I would make a swap.

Q. What sort of a swap?—A. When I reached Graham's precinct (which was about midnight) I discovered that there was also a mistake between the State officers, between the comptroller and the attorney-general; they were placed by the managers on the wrong pages. There was another attorney there, by the name of Thompson. There were 226 against General Hagood because he run for comptroller-general, and they made a mistake. General Conner was running for attorney-general, and his votes were placed to the comptroller-general, and the other attorney, Mr. Thompson, had a short conversation with Judge Maher, and they both agreed that they would allow me to replace Mr. Hurley and give him 696 votes, by replacing the other 200 votes.

Q. Who was Mr. Thompson?—A. He was an attorney from Williston. He was there pretty much the whole night, too.

Q. Was he acting for any political party?—A. No, sir.

Q. Just a looker-on?—A. Just the same as Judge Maher. He was not there as steady as Judge Maher, but pretty much; he was there nine-tenths of the time.

Q. Did your board make that change?—A. No, sir; I told him that I should make no changes; and then he said, "You are right."

By Mr. BANKS:

Q. Who was it that proposed this?—A. Mr. Thompson; he was not a candidate. General Hagood was not there at the time. He had gone out about half an hour before, and he didn't hear any of that conversation.

Q. On the Friday night when you were in there canvassing, at the time Allen and Bush came up with the Robbins return, were you called out of the house?—A. No, sir; I was called in from one room to another—from the room where we canvassed to another room.

Q. By whom?—A. By Mr. Bush, I think it was.

Q. Was Mr. Allen there when Bush came out with you?—A. Mr. Allen was in the rear of him.

Q. You had no conversation with Mr. Allen at all?—A. No, sir. It was dark and cold, and I did not care to go too far from the fire. Says I, "Have you got the box?" Says he, "Yes. Mr. Allen is here; he has the box." Says I, "Just take it and leave."

Q. You had no conversation with Mr. Allen?—A. No, sir; not until the next morning.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You have stated a conversation with your associate, Mr. Blanton, at a meeting before the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before?—A. Five or six days.

Q. Where was it?—A. At Blackville.

Q. That was when you met to appoint managers?—A. Yes, sir. We had two meetings to appoint managers.

Q. Who were appointed managers for the Robbins precinct?—A. We revised the list right smart at the second meeting, and I don't remember. We agreed that each commissioner should give one.

Q. Do you remember whether you transferred one from Cainan's Fair?—A. I made transfers of several boxes, and so did Mr. Blanton—in the second meeting.

Q. In the revision, do you remember whether you transferred one manager from Cainan's to Robbins; if so, who was it?—A. The first meeting, I think it was, I had Bush, Nixon, and I don't remember the democratic manager; and the next meeting Mr. Blanton himself, I think, changed the democratic manager, and I made one change.

Q. What change?—A. I took Allen. We had a general changing, so that I don't remember the names unless I had a list. We made a general change.

Q. I am only inquiring about the Robbins precinct.—A. As well as I can remember, it was J. W. Allen, Mr. Bush, and Dr. Bell.

Q. At which meeting was it that Mr. Blanton advised you that you had better have counsel and a guard?—A. The second meeting.

Q. On what occasion was it that he said to you, "We ought to have counsel and a guard?"—there that day?—A. No; when we canvassed the votes.

Q. Did he state any reason why you had better have a guard?—A. No, sir; he did not. I said we had no need of anything of the kind.

Q. Was Mr. Gennerette present?—A. Yes, sir; I think he was.

Q. You were all three together?—A. Yes, sir; I think we were all three together.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. When your board appointed the precinct managers, you notified each precinct manager of his appointment, in writing, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir; by postal card.

Q. Did you keep any record or memorandum of these appointments?—A. I think I have a list at home.

Q. Didn't you make an entry in any book of any sort?—A. I think I have got the first list with me, but different changes were made, and I don't remember them.

Q. Whatever nomination you made of Allen you notified him of in writing?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. Do I understand you to swear that in your revision of that list you appointed Allen & Barnwell?—A. I am not able to say. We made a revision of nearly all the boxes.

Q. That is not the point. You do not undertake to swear now that you appointed Allen in your revision of the list?—A. Well I do not say—I don't remember.

Adjourned.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 19, 1876.

THOMAS C. DUNN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Columbia.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Two years.

Q. Where was your residence before coming here?—A. In Horry County, in this State.

Q. How long have you resided in the State?—A. I have been in the State eleven years.

Q. What office do you hold?—A. Comptroller-general.

Q. When were you elected?—A. In March, 1875.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-seven.

Q. You were a member of the State canvassing board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what day you commenced the canvass?—A. We assembled on the 10th of November. We commenced canvassing the votes on the 17th, I think.

Q. What was done on the 10th, if anything?—A. There was nothing done on the 10th, except the assembling together of the board and some conversation, or discussion in the nature of a conversation, with some of the democratic lawyers who were present.

Q. You transacted no business?—A. No business.

Q. When did you adjourn to?—A. Until the next day at ten o'clock.

Q. What was done on the 11th, if anything?—A. I don't recollect precisely what occurred on that day, but I know there was no business with regard to counting or canvassing the votes. The time was taken up in discussions with the democratic lawyers who were present as to the manner in which the canvass should be conducted; also with regard to the time within which the canvass had to be concluded. If I remember rightly, it was on that day that there was a discussion as to whether the time for canvassing the presidential electors was not limited to five days, and some oral argument was made by Mr. Youmans on that point. He is a democratic member of the bar here. He was there representing the democrats.

Q. What position was taken by him on that point?—A. That we were not limited to five days, but were limited to ten days.

Q. When did you adjourn to on that day?—A. We adjourned to Monday, the 13th, at ten o'clock.

Q. What occurred on that day?—A. We were still discussing the powers and duties of the board; the democratic counsel taking the position that the canvass of the votes by the board was purely ministerial. We had been asked on the preceding Saturday by General Conner whether we proposed to entertain contests and decide between contending parties. The time that we were together that day was mainly occupied with the discussion of that question, as to whether we had any judicial powers or not; and during Saturday and Monday several protests were entered by General Conner, representing the democratic party.

Q. They contended that yours was a purely ministerial power, and confined to what?—A. To the aggregation of the votes as returned from the county boards.

Q. Was there any business transacted on Monday, more than that general discussion?—A. No, sir; no business looking to the canvassing of the votes.

Q. When did you adjourn to from that day?—A. Until Tuesday, at ten o'clock.

Q. What was done that day?—A. The same general discussion was continued; and I think on that day (if I remember rightly; I will not be positive whether it was that day or the next) we were served with a notice of an application to the supreme court for a writ of prohibition and mandamus. I think this was on Tuesday, but the minutes of the board may show that I am in error with regard to the date.Q. You have gone so far as to say that on that day, or the next, you are not certain which, you were served with notice of the application for a mandamus and prohibition.—A. Let me correct that. We were notified, but there was no formal service of notice. On Wednesday the service was made upon us from the court to appear and make answer to their application for a writ of prohibition and mandamus.

Q. What further was done, if anything, Wednesday?—A. Nothing.

Q. When did you adjourn to?—A. To Thursday.

Q. What occurred on that day?—A. On Thursday, as soon as we assembled, a motion was made to adjourn, or take a recess, to appear in court and make answer.

Q. Did you adjourn?—A. Yes, sir; we took a recess and went to court, and met the same day, afterward.

Q. What was done that day?—A. We met after returning from the court, and I should have to refer to the minutes for what we did on that afternoon. I don't remember what we did. As far as I recollect, though, I think we adopted some resolution; at some time during the course of the week we had adopted a resolution, in answer to the request or demand of the democratic lawyers, as to the method of our procedure, that we would act upon no proposition from them until our powers should be determined by the court. I think it was adopted upon that day, but it may have been on the day previous. We had been summoned before the court to make answer why we should not be prohibited from doing certain things.

Q. What occurred on Friday?—A. On Friday we received the order made by the court; upon the receipt of that we proceeded to canvass the votes in obedience to the order.

Q. Something has been said here about examining precinct returns in connection with the canvass of the vote and time; what was there about that?—A. When we began the canvass in obedience to the order of the court, some of the members of the board, myself included, (I believe I was the one that made the proposition,) decided or wished to take up the precinct returns, aggregate them, and compare the result with the statement as returned by the county board. When we began to do that the democrats, through their counsel, General Conner, objected, and entered into an argument before the board to show that in doing that we were going beyond the order of the court; that the language of the order was that we were to aggregate the final statements forwarded to us by the county boards; and they referred to the law which speaks of the precinct or managers' returns as "returns," and speaks of the returns of the county board as "statements," they claiming that we were to aggregate the statements of the county boards, and not to correct them by the precinct-managers' returns.

Q. What further occurred then?—A. The board then decided that, in deference to what was claimed by General Conner, while they would go on examining the precinct returns for their own satisfaction as far as they chose to, yet they would not correct anything in the statements of the county boards, but would aggregate them just as they were returned. We then went on in that way, making up our record for the court precisely as indicated by General Conner as being in the order.

Q. How many persons were permitted by the board to witness this canvass?—A. Eight on each side in addition to the members of the board. We decided first upon five, but made it eight at the request of the democratic counsel, who wanted to have some clerks present—experts.

Q. How far did you go in examining the precinct returns in connection with the others?—A. We examined the precinct returns until we got through Charleston County. I think that is the sixth county.

Q. What time did you commence the canvass?—A. I think it was at one o'clock Friday; we finished Charleston County about half past ten at night.

Q. What did that canvass embrace; anything but the electoral vote?—A. Nothing but the electoral vote. We decided to take up the electoral vote first, and go through with that before we touched the State election.

Q. When you got through with Charleston, what then occurred?—A. Several times before we reached Charleston some of the members of the board had objected to going on in that way, because it took up so much time, particularly as we were not to make any correction, even if we discovered an error; and before taking up Charleston County there had been quite a little discussion among the members themselves as to whether they had not better go right on taking the statements of the county boards, because of the time that had been consumed, and, I think, mainly because of my persistence in wanting to look at the precinct returns, they continued that way until they got through Charleston County. Then a motion was made by one of the members of the board that we should not take up any more precinct returns.

Q. That motion was made on what ground?—A. On the ground that it would be impossible for us to go through with the canvass within the time specified by law if we went on in that way. That was not, however, included in the motion; the motion was simply that we should go on and aggregate the statements of the county boards without looking at any more precinct returns.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Had you been served with an order of the court fixing the time within which you should make a return to the court?—A. No, sir; I do not think there was any order specifying the time. I do not at this time recall that any order was made fixing the time.

Q. When this proposition was made to drop the managers' returns because it was taking so much time, what occurred?—A. The majority of the board decided to go on without the precinct returns.

Q. Was anything said by the by-standers, democrats or republicans?—A. There was nothing said by them at that time. But, as I have said, some of the board raised the question before we took up Charleston County at all, and at that time some of the democratic lawyers, I think General Conner, expressed a desire that we should go on, saying that as we had commenced that way they would be willing that we should continue; it was not a matter of discussion, however, but a mere expression of opinion. They made no objection at that time.

Q. Up to that time, when the board decided to drop the managers' returns, do you remember whether there were any precinct returns missing in the six counties canvassed?—A. I do not think there were any missing precinct returns up to and including Charleston County.

Q. Do you remember whether the returns embraced in all cases up to that time the electoral vote?—A. It was the electoral vote solely that we were examining. I am speaking now from memory, which I would not say is exactly correct, but I don't remember any precinct returns having been found missing.

Q. From that time on you canvassed only the returns of the county managers?—A. Pernaps it would be proper for me to say, in further answer to your question whether any precinct returns were missing, that there were differences and irregularities found and noted at the time, but no actual absence of any one-precinct return.

Q. Was there any statement of the discrepancies made as you went along?—A. We noted them as we went along.

Q. Where is the record?—A. I think that the abstract of the precinct returns that we made are in the possession of the secretary of state, who was chairman of the board.

Q. You made that abstract as you went along?—A. Yes, sir; an abstract of the result of the examination of the precinct managers' returns.

Q. That abstract would show if there were any absent return, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; and it would also show what irregularities were noted as we went along.

Q. How much longer, if at all, did you work that evening in the electoral vote?—A. I think we worked until half past eleven that night.

Q. When did you resume?—A. Next morning. I don't remember whether it was at the usual hour or not.

Q. What time did you finish the electoral vote?—A. We finished the electoral vote about twelve o'clock next day.

Q. From what was the aggregate electoral vote made up as you aggregated it in your return?—A. It was made up exclusively from the statements of the county boards.

Q. Do you remember the deficiency in the electoral vote of Mr. Hurley from Blackville, in Barnwell County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that included?—A. No, sir; that was one of the irregularities we noted, as I have stated.

Q. Do you recollect the number of votes?—A. Yes, sir; six hundred and ninety-five.

Q. That vote was not given to Mr. Hurley in your canvass?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember the deficiency in the vote of Mr. Cook in this county, Richland?—A. I can only approximate that; it was about three hundred.

Mr. COCHRANE. I object to the witness stating these facts. The records we have before the committee are the best evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is hardly worth while for the witness to refer to the record itself and then state its contents to the committee.

Q. What precinct in this county was that deficiency at?—A. Acton precinct.

Q. What distance is that from the city?—A. I think it is in a southeasterly direction from the city.

Q. Was that vote given in the canvass to Mr. Cook, or was it omitted?—A. It was omitted.

Mr. COCHRANE. I object. These facts all appear in the record.

Mr. LAPHAM. No; they do not appear in the record. The record is an aggregate, and Mr. Cook has so many less than the other electors, and I am explaining how it occurred.

Mr. COCHRANE. We have certified copies of the aggregate vote canvassed by this board for all the electors, including this.

Q. You have stated that there was a deficiency in the vote of Mr. Cook in this county, at Acton precinct; now was that number of votes, that deficiency, whatever it was, embraced by the State officers in the canvass of votes which they made for Mr. Cook?—A. It was not included; nor was the number for the democratic candidate included either. I forget which of the democratic electors it was. Mr. Ingram was a democrat. His vote at the same precinct was not included.

Q. Give the vote for each.—A. Three hundred and ninety-seven for the republican and one hundred and ten for the democrat.

Q. Those omissions in the Acton precinct were not corrected or included in your canvass?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of or remember any other instance where there was any difference between the vote for the electors, any omission?—A. There was an omission of the electoral vote for Mr. Nash, one of the republican electors, in Charleston County, but I don't remember enough about it to give the particulars.

Q. Was that corrected in your canvass?—A. No, sir. No correction whatever was made in our canvass from the statements of the county boards.

Q. When did the time expire for completing your canvass?—A. On the 22d. That was what we supposed.

Q. Was anything said during the progress of the canvass about the effect of the order of the court upon the time—whether it extended it?

Mr. COCHRANE. Said by whom?

Mr. LAPHAM. By any one of the democrats or the republicans present, or by the board.

The WITNESS. Yes; it was a matter that was frequently spoken of by the board, and also spoken of with the democratic counsel.

Q. What was said upon the subject?—A. The board desired to know whether the time occupied by these court proceedings would be counted in the ten days that we considered that the board was allowed to sit by law.

Q. What was claimed or said upon the subject?—A. My understanding was that the democrats—

Q. Just state what was said upon the subject of the effect of the order of the court.—
A. There was a good deal of conversation between the board and the democratic lawyers, but no decision was arrived at.

Q. What was claimed on the part of the democratic lawyers, or said?—A. That the time would not be included; and the board asked that an order of the court might be gotten to that effect; but no order was gotten.

Q. How did the board claim that the time was extended to the 22d?—A. Sundays were not included. We deducted the two Sundays.

Q. Then nothing was allowed for the order of the court?—A. No, sir. We had no order of the court to the effect that the time would not be included, although we had asked for it.

Q. If the board had continued the examination of the precinct returns as they began, state whether the canvass could have been, in your opinion, completed within the time allowed by law?

Mr. PHILLIPS objected to the question, for the reason that it calls merely for the opinion of the witness.

The CHAIRMAN ruled that the question was admissible, because a similar one had been put to other witnesses.

The WITNESS. You mean the whole canvass, including all the county and State officers?

Q. Yes.—A. It would have depended a good deal upon how many hours a day we worked.

Q. I mean working the ordinary hours.—A. I should say it would have been difficult to have completed it all in that way. I will not say that it could not have been done within that time.

Q. Was anything said when the proposition was made to drop the managers' returns about whether it could be completed?—A. That was the basis upon which those who wanted to drop it argued, that they could not complete it in that time. Taking the electoral vote alone, we had only completed six counties in about nine hours' continuous work.

Q. My question is on the assumption that you worked the ordinary hours for such a canvass; and I want your opinion or judgment whether it could have been completed within the time allowed by law.—A. I do not think we could have made such an examination as we commenced, and gone through with all the State and county officers, within the time; or, at least, it would have consumed the whole time. I think it would have taken us four or five to have done it. It took two days just to aggregate the county statements alone, and the returns from those six counties.

Q. Some of the board of State officers, acting under this order, were candidates for re-election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any determination made by the board as to the part which those who were candidates should take in the canvass of the votes for the offices for which they were running? If so, state what it was.—A. There was a resolution adopted by the board before we began to canvass that when the votes for any of the State officers or members of the board who were candidates should be canvassed they should not be present and vote upon them. I forget the precise language of the resolution.

Q. Was that resolution followed out in practice?—A. It was followed out in practice so far as voting was concerned. So far as the aggregation of the statements of the county boards, the members of the board were all present when that was done. When the question of declaring the election of any one of the State board, or of the office for which he was a candidate, was up, the member whose case was to be acted upon retired.

Q. Who acted with you in making this canvass?—A. The members of the board, Mr. Stone, the attorney-general; Mr. Hayne, the secretary of state; Mr. Cardozo, the State treasurer; Mr. Purvis, the adjutant and inspector general; and myself.

Q. Were those persons present during the entire canvass of the electoral vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the spectators there participate in the examination of the precinct managers' returns so far as they were examined in the first six counties?—A. Yes, sir. One of the democratic lawyers looked over the shoulder of the chairman as he examined them.

Q. Did that lead to discussions occupying time—the discrepancies that were found—were they a subject of talk?—A. Well, it was very brief. Some little time was occupied, mainly by the members of the board, however. I do not think the by-standers said very much. The most of the time that was occupied was by General Comer, when the matter of Robbins' precinct in Barnwell was up. General Hagood was there also; he was a candidate. He had something to say about it.

Q. How much time was occupied with that?—A. I should say perhaps half an hour on the admission of that Robbins' poll.

Q. Was the vote from Robbins' precinct included in your canvass?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. What was the position taken by the democrats in reference to that before your board?—A. That the return was not officially before us from the county board, not in the original statement of the county board.

Q. Was there any objection made to it that you remember?—A. No, sir; the objection was based wholly upon that, that it was not before us officially, and therefore could not be included ; and it was not included ; not because there was objection, but because we did not make any correction.

Q. Do you remember whether there was a return from any of the managers, of Robbins ?

—A. Yes, sir ; there was a return regularly signed by the managers.

Q. And from any of the county canvassers ?—A. It was signed by one member of the county board.

Q. Was the return by the member of the county board a separate paper from the managers' return ?—A. Yes, sir ; the member of the county board made what purported to be a supplemental county-board statement, but it was signed by only one member of the board.

Q. [Showing paper to witness.] Is that the supplemental return to which you refer ?—A. Yes, sir ; to the best of my recollection, that is the supplemental return. That accompanied the managers' return.

Mr. LAPHAM offered the paper in evidence, as follows :

“ SOUTH CAROLINA, Barnwell County :

“ We, the undersigned commissioners of election for Barnwell County, respectfully submit the following supplementary report in relation to Robbins precinct, the returns from said precinct having been presented to us while we were engaged in canvassing the votes, and for that reason not included in our original report. See affidavits attached.

“ We do hereby certify that the foregoing statements are correct in all respects.

“ In witness whereof we have herunto subscribed our names this 11th November, 1876.

“ L. W. GENERETTE,

“ Witness :

“ B. K. MOTTE, Jr.

“ OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

“ I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original on file in my office.

“ Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 19th of December, 1876.

[SEAL.]

“ H. E. HAYNE,

“ Secretary of State.”

Q. Was there a protest in writing by General Connor against the Robbins precinct ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you that ?—A. It is attached to the abstract that we were making at the time. It was not entered upon the minutes.

Q. Mr. Hayne has that paper, has he not ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. COCHRANE :

Q. What is your age ?—A. Forty-seven.

Q. How long have you resided in South Carolina ?—A. Eleven years.

Q. Where have you lived during that time ?—A. Nine years in Horry County and two years in Columbia.

Q. Are you a native of the South ?—A. No, sir.

Q. From what State did you come ?—A. Massachusetts.

Q. How long have you occupied the position of comptroller-general ?—A. Since April, 1875.

Q. Did you occupy any official position prior to that time ?—A. I was a representative in the State senate from Horry County for two years preceding.

Q. Any other position ?—A. No, sir ; no other official position.

Q. In what business did you engage after you came to this State ?—A. I engaged in the business of having turpentine distilled, and shipping it to New York, and general merchandizing.

Q. Are you engaged in that business now ?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long did you carry on that business ?—A. Between nine and ten years.

Q. You are a member of the republican party ?—A. I think so.

Q. Have you any doubt about it ?—A. Not very much.

Q. Have you any ?—A. Not any.

Q. Is Mr. Stone, the attorney-general, a republican ?—A. He professes to be.

Q. Is Mr. Hayne, the secretary of state, a republican ?—A. He professes to be.

Q. Is Mr. Cardozo, the State treasurer, a republican ?—A. I think he is.

Q. Is Mr. Purvis, the adjutant and inspector general, a republican ?—A. He so says.

Q. Then all the members that constitute this board of State canvassers were members of the republican party ?—A. To the best of my knowledge and belief.

Q. How many of this board were candidates for re-election ?—A. Three of them.

Q. Please give the names.—A. Mr. Cardozo, for State treasurer ; Mr. Hayne, as secretary of state ; and Mr. Dunn, as comptroller-general.

Q. If I understand you correctly, all the members of this board were present during the whole count of the vote ?—A. During the whole aggregation of the statements of the county boards.

Q. And none of the candidates for re-election withdrew until the time came for declaring the parties elected ?—A. No, sir ; none withdrew until then.

Q. Did they participate in the discussion and ruling of questions which from time to time were raised as to the precincts and counties?—A. I do not know that there were any discussions raised or rulings made during that time.

Q. Were there any made?—A. I do not know that there were any made.

Q. Do you know that there were not any made?—A. What do you mean by rulings? If you will explain what you mean, I may be able to give you a more definite answer.

Mr. Lapham objected, on the ground that as the only question now under investigation was in regard to the presidential electors, it was a waste of time to examine the witness on the questions relating to the State election.

The chairman overruled the objection.

Q. In the canvassing of the managers' and the county canvassers' returns, were those members of the board who were candidates for re-election present and did they participate in the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they present, discussing any questions which might arise before the board?—A. They were present discussing all questions except as related to the election of any one of them to the office for which he was a candidate; during any discussion that may have taken place in regard to that; they were not present.

Q. Was there any such discussion?—A. None that I remember until the question of the declaration of the election.

Q. Then they were present all the time?—A. They were present all the time until then—that is, I do not mean to say that some member of the board was not absent at any time, but there was a quorum there all the time.

Q. Were they present when the question of the admission of Robbins precinct came up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they present when it was concluded to canvass the precinct managers' returns in all instances?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they present after you had concluded Charleston and when the resolution was passed to abandon the precinct managers' returns and proceed to count the vote by county canvassers' returns only?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they vote for the first and the second proposition?—A. Some of them did; some of them voted against it.

Q. Which of them voted against it?—A. I could not say exactly, because I don't remember; I remember that there was a difference of opinion at the outset and also when they abandoned it. I will say for myself that I voted for taking up the precinct returns in the first place and voted against abandoning them in the second place.

Q. Do you remember that any member of the board voted against abandoning the precinct returns?—A. I don't remember any but myself.

Q. Did you so vote?—A. Yes, sir. It was an informal vote, that did not go upon the record, however, being a mere matter of the action of the board.

Q. Upon what day did your board of State canvassers first meet?—A. The 10th November.

Q. How long did you continue in session on that day?—A. About three hours.

Q. What time of day did you meet?—A. At 12 o'clock, and adjourned about 3.

Q. What day of the week was that?—A. Friday.

Q. When did you meet again?—A. On Saturday.

Q. How long did you continue in session?—A. About the same length of time; met at 12 and adjourned about 3.

Q. When did you meet again?—A. On Monday.

Q. How long did you continue in session?—A. We were in session on Monday about the same length of time. I think we came back after dinner on Monday, but I am not certain about that.

Q. You met again on Tuesday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you continue in session then?—A. About the same length of time.

Q. You met again on Wednesday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you continue then; the same length of time?—A. No, sir; we adjourned and went to court.

Q. But you returned again?—A. Yes, sir; but we were not together

Q. It was not until Thursday that you got down to active work?—A. No, sir; we could not; the democrats prevented it by raising questions all the time.

Q. You did not dispose of those questions that were raised by the democrats?—A. The time was taken up in argument, but we came to a conclusion as far as we could.

Q. But you sat only three hours a day?—A. That is all. Allow me to say that for the first three days we could not have taken up the examination of the returns if we had been disposed to, simply because they were not there.

Q. How many were missing on the 10th?—A. There was only a return from one county.

Q. How many had come in about the 11th?—A. I think about three counties, as far as I remember.

Q. How many on Monday?—A. Perhaps three or four more. Probably there were not more than half of them on Monday.

Q. Did you make an examination to find out how many had been returned?—A. We were informed by the chairman.

Q. Do you know of your personal knowledge how many had been returned?—A. No, sir; I have no personal knowledge whatever, except what came from the Secretary of State.

Q. Did he tell you on Monday that not more than half the counties were in?—A. I will not make a positive answer with regard to that, because it is a matter of memory; but I know there were a great many missing.

Q. Do you recollect that you asked him any questions on the subject on Monday?—A. I think, as far as I remember, that there was not any day but what we inquired generally how many counties were in. Whenever any new counties would come in we inquired about them. As far as I remember there was not any day that we did not make that inquiry; that is, on the first three or four days.

Q. That would be Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Now, were they all in on Tuesday?—A. I do not know whether they were all in, but if they had been we could not have commenced the canvass, because we were notified by the counsel for the democrats that they would go into court to prohibit us.

Q. Prohibit you from what?—A. From doing anything in the way of making a judicial determination; from doing anything to correct the returns.

Q. But they did not prevent you from doing anything in a ministerial way, did they?—A. No, sir; they did not prevent us from proceeding to count the vote in a ministerial way if we had had the returns there.

Q. But you say you could not have gone on on Tuesday because they prevented you?—A. Yes, sir, because they notified us they were going to take us to court, and it was to be a mandamus generally; we did not know what would be included in it. It was on Tuesday that they notified us; on Wednesday the process was issued.

Q. Did not the democrats state what they were going to include in their mandamus?—A. In the notification they gave, do you mean?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. No, I do not think they did. If they did, I have not any recollection of it. I know generally that they were going into court to bring us into their way of thinking, or to bring us to act according to their way.

Q. Up to Tuesday had your board decided that they would act in a judicial capacity unless prevented by order of the court?—A. Yes; I think we had.

Q. At what date had you decided that?—A. I cannot answer that. The minutes will show.

Q. You have given us your opinion about other things; won't you give us your opinion about that?—A. No, sir; I would not undertake to say what day we decided to answer questions put by General Connor as to whether we should entertain contests or protests or not. I know we did so decide, but on what day I could not say. The minutes will show.

Q. Are you quite sure that on Wednesday all the returns were in?—A. I am not sure that they were all in on Wednesday or that they were not all in. I think it is very probable that by that day they had all got in; no, I believe that returns from Laurens County did not get in until Thursday.

Q. Were they not all in on Wednesday except Laurens County?—A. I think they were; that is, a number came in that morning and they were all there at 12 o'clock in the day. Those are matters that I did not especially charge my mind with, and I would not swear to the correctness of my recollection.

Q. Your board met on Friday, as I understand you, about 1 o'clock?—A. Twelve o'clock.

Q. How long did you continue your session before taking a recess; didn't you adjourn for dinner?—A. I think we adjourned finally at that time. I do not think we took any recess. If I remember right we met about twelve and adjourned about three, and did not meet again.

Q. I am referring to the following Friday, when you met as a board and commenced counting?—A. We met on that Friday about 1 o'clock, or began the count about 1 o'clock.

Q. Did you adjourn for dinner?—A. We did.

Q. At what time?—A. I don't remember clearly; probably about 3 o'clock, that being our usual hour.

Q. For how long did you adjourn?—A. Probably an hour and a half; the minutes will show; as near as I remember, we met at half past four, but it is a mere matter of memory.

Q. Then you met again and continued the count?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you adjourn for supper?—A. I am not certain but I may be mistaken in saying that we came back at half past four. I do not clearly recollect that we met, adjourned, and went to dinner, came back and adjourned again for supper. My memory is not clear on that point. It is barely possible that when we adjourned in the afternoon at three or half past three, we did not meet again until six or about that time, and that we had gotten supper before we came.

Q. Then at six you proceeded with the count?—A. Well, I do not wish to give exact hours in that way unless it is clearly understood that it is a matter of memory, and that I have only a vague recollection about it. My impression, however, is that we did meet at half past four that afternoon, and that we must have adjourned some time for an hour for supper.

Q. You think it was about 10 o'clock when you had completed the canvass of the six counties? Do you recollect how long you adjourned for supper?—A. O, no, I do not; because I do not recollect whether we adjourned.

Q. By 10 o'clock on Friday night you had completed the canvass of the six counties?—A. About half past ten.

Q. How many precincts were there in the six counties?—A. That I cannot tell, except that Charleston had, I think, forty-five.

Q. Charleston is a very large county; the largest in the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are about one hundred and fifty-three precincts in these first six counties, are there not?—A. I do not know that I have even added them up. It is very easy to tell. I should judge there are something like one hundred and fifty.

Q. Do you know how many precincts there are in the State?—A. No, sir; I never added them up.

Q. When you first resolved to canvass the vote and compare the county returns with the precinct managers' returns, what was the understanding as to the return which you were to make to court?—A. The understanding was that we were to make a return utterly disregarding any precinct returns; we were to make the returns as the county boards' statements footed them up.

Q. Was it not then understood that you were to make a double return to the court—a return of the figures as they appeared by the county canvassers' return, and a return of the figures as they appeared by the precinct managers' return?—A. Not by any manner of means. The very point that the democrats argued against was that we had no right to touch the precinct returns at all.

Q. That was in the first instance?—A. Yes, sir; when we had commenced the aggregation.

Q. They did not argue in that way when you did proceed to canvass the six counties?—A. No, sir; they made no argument at all then. I have said that before taking up Charleston County, when some of the board wanted to drop the precinct managers' returns, then, and in the discussion as to whether we should drop it, some of the democratic lawyers took part. The chairman, I think, asked General Conner whether it would be agreeable to them to do so, and he replied that as we had commenced in that way they would prefer we should go on, although General Conner had made the argument in the first place against taking them up at all.

Q. Tell me why it was, if you did not design returning to the court the aggregates by the precinct managers' returns, you touched them at all?—A. I can only tell you why I touched them or took them up; it was because I considered that we could not tell anything like what had been the legal vote of the State unless we examined those returns. I considered it a part of the duty of the board, if they were to verify anything, to verify the returns of the county boards by the precinct managers' returns.

Q. But you did not intend to change anything?—A. We would not change them in the report we would make to the court, but that does not say what our subsequent action was to be.

Q. Then you did take them up with a design to some subsequent action?—A. So far as I was concerned I should have been governed by them.

Q. For example, if the figures of the county canvassers' return had not agreed with the managers' you would have felt at liberty to touch them?—A. I should have felt at liberty to decline giving a certificate of election except upon what I considered a true rendering of the vote.

Q. Was General Gordon present with General Conner when you commenced to count this vote?—A. General Gordon was present himself all the time, and I think it very probable that he was present at that time.

Q. You say that when you resolved not to further count the precinct managers' returns the democrats made no objection. Was General Conner present when you passed that resolution?—A. He had been present during the evening; whether he was there just at that time or not I cannot say.

Q. Do you know that he had just gone out previous to the passage of that resolution?—A. No, sir; I do not. If you tell me that he had gone out I have no doubt that he had; I don't remember it.

Q. Was General Gordon present?—A. As I say, he had been going in and out, and he may have been present; I don't know.

Q. Who was present at the time?—A. The room was full.

Q. I mean among the democrats?—A. So far as I know they were all there, or they may have been all there.

Q. Can you give me the names of those who were present?—A. I can tell you the names of some who were there; I do not know that they were all that were present.

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. Le Compto was there. I remember him distinctly because he was standing behind the chairman. I think General Conner was present. I am certain that Mr. Le Compto was present, and I won't undertake to swear to the presence of any of the rest of them except that the room was full; that there was about the usual number.

Q. What was the usual number?—A. Eight on each side; but sometimes there were ten on each side, and the room was nearly full. We were not over-strict in enforcing the rule; and at the time we adopted that, at half-past 11 o'clock at night, I won't undertake to say which of the gentlemen were present, because they were coming in and going out just as suited their inclination. I remember that Mr. Le Compte was present, and also Mr. Janney, because he sat near their clerk, correcting him. There were a dozen other gentlemen present, and I think General Conner was.

Q. Who made the motion to abandon the precinct managers' returns?—A. I think it was Mr. Cardozo.

Q. And you don't remember whether any of the board voted against it but yourself?—A. I don't remember that there was any other.

Q. The democrats subsequently filed a protest against your abandonment of the count by those returns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they file any objection?—A. If they filed any objection to it I don't know it.

Q. Don't you know that the next morning, General Conner and General Gordon filed a protest with the board, against your action in abandoning the count by the precinct managers' returns?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of their doing anything of the kind.

Q. Did not General Gordon appear before the board and protest against it verbally, and afterward did he not protest?—A. The only time that I know of General Gordon saying anything about the precinct returns at all, was Saturday night, when he asked the chairman of the board to allow the democrats to take those returns, to make copies of them. That, of course, is not an answer to your question.

Q. Did the board permit him to make copies of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you say that there was not a protest filed?—A. I say if there was any protest filed by General Conner or General Gordon or anybody else, this is the first I know of it.

Q. Or any objection made by either of them?—A. When you speak of a "protest," you speak of a formal objection?

Q. Well, any sort of protest, whether formal or otherwise?—A. No, sir; no one that I know of. I do not say that there was none made. I say if there was any made it was made when I was not present, and I never heard of it until now. His request to make copies of the papers was in writing.

Q. Did you permit him to make copies of the papers?—A. No, sir; we told him we would give him an answer on Monday; that was Saturday night. As to that protest, I say positively that there was no such protest made to the board at all, that came within my knowledge.

Q. You told General Gordon you would give him an answer on Monday?—A. Yes, sir; we told him that so far as his question raised on Saturday night, we would give him an answer on Monday.

Q. Did you give him an answer on Monday?—A. I don't think he pressed his question on Monday.

Q. Was there any answer given to him at all?—A. I don't think there was any answer given him, nor any further action taken at all.

Q. Do I understand you to say that it would have been impossible to have completed the count by the precinct returns, within the time provided by law?—A. I don't think I said it would have been impossible. I said if I remember right, and I say it again, that considering the number of officers, which exceeded some 400 altogether, to be voted for, to have compared the precinct managers' returns in that manner with them all would have consumed all the time that was left between the 17th, when we commenced under the order of the court, and the 22d, when our time ceased by limitation.

Q. Suppose you had worked twelve or fifteen hours a day, do you think you could have gotten through with the whole count within the time by law?—A. O, yes, sir; if we had worked fifteen hours a day we could have done it.

Q. You stated, in your examination-in-chief, that several times during the count members of the board objected to going on on account of the time that was being consumed; what members of the board objected?—A. I think that when the matter was discussed, before Charleston County was taken up, Mr. Hayne and Mr. Cardozo were the ones that made the objection, and Mr. Purvis. They said it was not our place to take up the time in going on in that way when we were not permitted to make any corrections even if we discovered any errors; that this was extra work we were doing, which we could not include in our report to the court.

Q. And it was upon that account that they voted to abandon the precinct managers' returns?—A. Yes, sir; so I understood.

Q. When they made the suggestion, however, as I understand you, the democrats objected, saying that the board had commenced in that way and they preferred they should go through the whole in that way?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. In speaking of the time at which you did not include the Robbins precinct in the aggregation of your vote, you say you did not do it, not on account of the objection alleged against the integrity of that poll by the democrats, but because, under your construction of the law, you could not go behind the commissioner's return?—A. I don't think that at that time the democrats made their objection to it for any other reason except the one I have stated, that it was not a paper received through the regular official channel.

Q. But you said that you did not exclude it on account of their objection, but because you had no right to make a change in the commissioner's returns?—A. Yes, sir; that was the reason.

Q. Was that the construction of the board of their powers?—A. At that time we were acting under the order of the court, and that was our construction.

Q. Did you at any time in making the canvass abandon that construction?—A. We made no other canvass except that character of statement made by our report.

Q. You finished the electoral vote when?—A. On Saturday.

Q. When did you make the official count or announcement of the election?—A. On Saturday. We made the announcement before taking up the State count; not the final determination.

Q. When did you make that determination?—A. That was on the 22d.

Q. Between Saturday and the day that you arrived at that determination of the electoral vote what did the board do?—A. They were engaged in making up the State canvass and in attendance on the supreme court.

Q. If I understand it the board did not make any canvass of the gubernatorial vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not canvass that vote at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. You canvassed the other State officers' vote and the legislative vote?—A. Yes, sir; the electoral vote, members of Congress, State officers, members of the legislature, and county officers.

Q. Did you pursue the same course in counting all the vote clear through, taking the county commissioner's returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not go behind them?—A. Except that in the case of Edgefield and Laurens we gave no certificate of election to anybody.

Q. On what principle did you go behind the county commissioner's returns there?—A. Because we had evidence before us of fraud and violence so far as Edgefield was concerned; in the case of Laurens because the statement of the county board was signed by two managers only, and one of them had signed it under protest.

Q. Then you did go behind the county commissioner's returns in Edgefield County?—A. We went behind them to the extent of not determining the election at all.

Q. You made no determination at all then?—A. No determination at all. We gave no certificate of election to any person whose election depended on the vote of Edgefield or Laurens, neither on one side nor the other.

Q. In the matter of candidates for the legislature?—A. No, sir; nor county officers.

Q. You gave no certificate to any one in these counties?—A. No, sir.

Q. You simply declined to act on them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you refused to act on account of something found outside of the commissioner's returns in these cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you so act in one case and decline to act in the other?—A. Because the persons declared electors would have been the same whether we had counted the votes of those two counties or had rejected them.

Q. Then you were governed merely by policy and not by the question of what was the law. What right had you to determine the vote as it affected the result one with the other?—A. We determined the result on the electors in favor of the republicans, because, had we excluded Edgefield and Laurens, they would have been elected, and had we included them, which we did, they would have been elected all the same.

Q. But you did include those counties of Edgefield and Laurens in the aggregation of the electoral vote?—A. Yes, sir; we did.

Q. The same evidence was before you on Saturday when you concluded your review that was before you when you went to review the vote for State officers?—A. Yes, sir; had we excluded the vote of Edgefield and Laurens, or declined to act upon it, we still would have certified to the election of the same men that we did certify to.

Q. But still you included those two counties when you made your count?—A. We did in our report to the court. We made no other count.

Q. Then, when you came to aggregate the vote for State officers and legislators you did not include them at all?—A. We made no decision in regard to those counties, because then we had to act on those counties separately.

Q. You certified the vote of the other counties separately?—A. Do you mean to the court?

Q. To the legislature.—A. No, sir; we simply certified to the election of certain men to the secretary of state.

Q. Did not you certify to the secretary of state the election of certain other men as members of the legislature?—A. Yes, sir; we certified their election, but gave no aggregate figures.

Q. You made no certificate at all in respect to the election in Laurens or Edgefield for members of the legislature?—A. We made no certificate in regard to the election of any officer whose election depended upon those counties.

Q. Did you include Edgefield and Laurens in the count for any of the State officers?—A. Yes, sir; for all of them except for members of the legislature and for county officers.

Q. Why did you count the vote for other officers and leave it out for members of the legislature and county officers?—A. I might answer that it was for the same reason that it was done for the electoral vote, the same men would have been elected in any case whether it was included or not.

Q. Then if it would not have elected those men you would not have excluded it?—A. Allow me to explain, because I see that perhaps you do not clearly understand the method by which we arrived at results. We were ordered by the court to aggregate the statements of the county boards and certify that result to the court. We made such a statement to the court, protesting at the same time against the jurisdiction of the court in the matter, but at the bottom the statement, (the statement being the aggregate of the votes of all the counties including those two.) We said that the unfairness, fraud, intimidation, and illegality were such that we could not certify to the true result in those counties as to who had the largest number of legal votes. Now there was no other canvass of that votes than that made by order of the court. When we came to take our action upon the last day that we were a legal body we declared the election of all those officers who were not affected adversely or otherwise—not affected at all by the result in Edgefield—that is to say, those whose election did not depend upon that county.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You mean where the election would not be changed by it?—A. Yes, sir; and we included all the State officers. My own election, for instance, as an illustration. The board decided that I had a small majority, including Edgefield and Laurens; had the including of those counties affected the result adversely to me, then they would have been obliged to include them or decline to give me a certificate of election at all, or decline to give it to my opponent at all. That is to say, if the result had depended upon counting that vote then they would have given neither party the certificate.

Q. I do not know how you know what they would have done when you were not present?—A. I am not saying what they would have done in that case. What I want to make you understand is that the board would not declare any officer elected whose election depended upon the vote of that county; but if he was elected including the vote of that county, that is, where their counting the vote of that county did not change the result, then they gave him a certificate of election.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And counted it in?—A. It was aggregated in the statement we made to the court. They did not certify to the number of votes.

Q. But in the election for electors it was counted in?—A. In the election for electors it was counted in, because, including the vote of that county, the average majority for the Hayes electors was about 800. Had this been excluded, then the aggregate majority would have been about 5,800. But they would have been elected all the same. That is what I want you to understand, that in no case did the board give a certificate to a man who would not have been elected if that vote had been excluded.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. You were acting as an officer charged with the discharge of a duty; now if in your judgment you were not permitted to count those votes for members of the legislature or for any State officers because you supposed there was intimidation and fraud there, how could you count that vote for electors whether it affected the result or not?—A. Can you say that we did count them? We made an aggregation of votes under the order of the court and submitted it.

Q. This electoral vote, as I understand, you did not, under the order, submit to the court until you had arrived at a determination. You arrived at a determination on the 22d and then immediately adjourned?—A. We made no report to the court as to our action on the 22d, because we were not obliged to.

Q. Did you make any report of the electoral vote to the court?—A. Certainly, we must have done so.

Q. State what you recollect about it.—A. I base my opinion upon the fact that we first took up the electoral vote. We made the report to the court of exactly what they included in their order, whatever that may be.

Q. Did you send up to the court the aggregation of the electoral vote, including Edgefield and Laurens Counties, as canvassed and counted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you file that aggregation in the office of the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you do it?—A. We filed that in the office of the secretary of state on the 22d.

Q. Did not that aggregation thus filed include Laurens and Edgefield Counties? Look at this copy and see.—A. I do not think we filed those papers with the secretary of state.

Q. How did it get into his office, then? Does not the law require it to be filed?—A. I think it was in his office as a part of the record of the proceedings of the board. I never acted upon the board of state canvassers before and am not perfectly familiar with the regulations. This appears to be a part of the certificate we gave as a State board to the secretary of state. You asked me whether we certified the electoral vote to the supreme court. I say yes, because I know that we took that up first, and although I don't remember the exact terms of the order, yet I think that the order must have been that we should give it to them, and, if so, we did give it; and if we gave it, it certainly included Edgefield and Laurens.

Q. Your construction of the order of the supreme court as it affected the electoral vote was that it was not binding upon you?—A. We obeyed the order of the court, although we protested against their right to order us to do anything.

Q. But you did obey the order, and certified the returns and adjourned?—A. We obeyed the order of the court and sent the report asked for. Then, on the next day, the 22d, we made a declaration of the result of the election, and certified to the secretary of state the election of certain persons; not to the court.

Q. Including in that certificate Edgefield and Laurens Counties as canvassed by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, when you came to the State election, you did not include them?—A. We did include them in all the certificates of election we gave.

Q. You did not for members of the legislature?—A. We did not give any certificates.

Q. But in the presidential electors you canvassed and included those without objection, while in the others you did not?—A. We included it in everything that we gave a certificate of election for.

Q. When it came to giving certificates to the members of the legislature from those two counties you failed to act?—A. We failed to act. We never excluded the vote of those two counties from any certificate of election we gave.

Q. And when you came to the electoral vote, you included it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were governed in that by its effect on the election?—A. Yes, sir. I will illustrate that by the vote for solicitor for this circuit. His vote depended on four counties. Had Edgefield been included, it would have given the election to one solicitor; had it been rejected, it would have given it to the other. That was so, although three other counties were included in that vote. Now, we gave no certificate to either of the candidates.

By Mr. COCHRANE.

Q. In other words, if Edgefield had been counted it would have elected the democrat, would it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You declined to give him the certificate?—A. We declined to give a certificate to any one whose election depended on Edgefield County, whatever party he belonged to.

By Mr. PHILLIPS:

Q. How was it as to members of Congress?—A. As to members of Congress the result would have been the same whether we included or excluded that vote.

Q. Did you, as a matter of fact, include them?—A. We included them in every case where we gave a certificate of election.

Q. Then you did, as a matter of fact, include Edgefield and Laurens in the congressional election?—A. Yes, sir; we included them in every case that we gave a certificate of election for.

Q. Have you ever examined this managers' return from Richland County?—A. No, sir.

Q. I see Killian's precinct on the managers' return appears blank as to the electors, but there is a memorandum on the margin that it appeared that the vote was so much for "Tilden and Hendricks," and so much for "Hayes and Wheeler;" that vote seems to have been counted, however, in aggregating Richland County for both sides; it is included on both sides except as to McGowan. Do you recollect anything about that? McGowan has only 2,188; all the others get their full vote, including the 211 at that precinct.—A. I have seen this paper here, but I never compared it.

Q. Is there any reason known to you for omitting those 211 votes from McGowan's vote?—A. None whatever. That is the footing of the county board's statement, which we took; we never made any alterations in their figures.

Q. You speak in your examination-in-chief of an abstract made by your board of certain irregularities and changes during the time you were examining the first six counties and comparing them with the statements of the county commissioners; what was the form of that memorandum or abstract that you made? Was it upon a separate piece of paper or was it upon the returns of the managers themselves?—A. It was not upon the returns of the managers. It was made upon an abstract that we were making.

Q. Where is that paper?—A. It belonged to the secretary of state.

Q. Is there on file, then, in the office of the secretary of state your canvass of the first six counties according to precincts and the memorandum of the changes?—A. Those would not be on file, because they were not formal papers; they were mere memorandums, and they would no more be filed there than any other memorandum; when I say they are there, I say it because I know they were there yesterday.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. In the return which you made to the writ of mandamus issued by the supreme court you reported that Bowen had received 91,786 votes, and the other republican electors about the same number, while Barker had received 90,896, and the other democratic candidates substantially the same number; state whether those numbers of votes included all that were returned in the county commissioners' returns from all the counties of this State?—A. Yes, sir; those figures give all the statements of the votes given in the statements of the county boards to the respective canvassers, but do not include any that were given, or claimed to have been given, but where errors were claimed to have been made by not allowing them in the statement. In other words, we corrected no errors in the county commissioners' returns.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. It does not include Robbins's box?—A. It does not.

Q. It includes all those votes reported by the county canvassers from all the counties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it include any votes except those which are reported in the county canvassers' returns?—A. No, sir.

Q. You closed your canvass on the 22d, being the last day you were allowed by law to continue it, as you supposed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were served with the order of the court subsequently?—A. Yes, sir; at 10 o'clock that night.

Q. Were you subsequently arrested?—A. Yes, sir; for contempt.

Q. And confined where?—A. In Richland County jail.

Q. How long?—A. From Saturday at 5 o'clock until Monday at 10 o'clock.

Q. You continued in the custody of the marshal until Judge Bond made his decision?—A. I was in the custody of the marshal several weeks.

Q. Who else were in that custody?—A. The rest of the State board.

Q. Who transacted the business of your respective offices during that time, or was there any done?—A. From Saturday to Monday there was no business transacted.

Q. What time Saturday were you arrested?—A. The order of arrest was served on us about 1 o'clock in the day; but the sheriff gave us until 5 o'clock in the evening to arrange our business matters. That was a matter of favor so far as regarded our official business.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. You speak of being in the custody of the marshal; did you not, after you were taken out on a writ of habeas corpus, have the liberty of the city; were you all the time in the presence or custody of the marshal?—A. No, sir; we were not in his presence, but we were in the custody of a deputy marshal.

Q. How much of the time did he accompany you?—A. Well, he should have been with us all the time; and I for one took the liberty of walking from my house to my office.

Q. You staid at home with your family?—A. I staid at home, but the other members, I understand—

Q. Confine yourself to your own knowledge. You staid with your family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not under the eye of the deputy marshal much of the time?—A. No.

Q. Were you not at large and at liberty to go at your will about the city?—A. Well, I suppose I could have gone anywhere, but I did not, from motives of honor.

Q. You were out on the street wherever you wished to go?—A. I had a deputy marshal accompanying me.

Q. All the time?—A. For the first two or three days, until the matter was heard in the court, and then the democratic counsel made a complaint, so to speak, that we were practically at liberty, and Judge Bond decided that that was a matter of responsibility for the marshal; that he was responsible on his bond to have those persons present in court, and if they were present that was all that was required. After that we felt more at liberty to go about without the presence of the deputy marshal, although a deputy was in attendance upon me until finally released.

Q. This proceeding was for an alleged contempt?—A. Yes, sir; for not obeying that order, which we did not receive for hours after we had finally adjourned.

Q. Judge Bond is a judge of the United States Supreme Court, is he not?—A. He is district judge, I think. I am not a lawyer. I do not know whether he is a district judge or not.

Q. Judge Wright is the district judge, is he not?—A. No, sir; Judge Wright is in the circuit court of the State. I wish to correct or add a word of explanation to something that I have testified to. When the question was asked me whether General Conner or General Gordon had made any protest the next morning against our having ceased the examination of the precinct returns—

Mr. PHILIPS. That night or the next morning?

The WITNESS. I said that if they had made any I never heard of it. Upon thinking further about it I remember that at one time on Saturday, after we had completed the canvass for the electoral vote and were about to declare it, (that is, the chairman was about to read it off; that was the extent of the declaration,) General Conner and others interposed and objected to its being given publicly, as they said, from our board; and at that time he gave as his reason why it should not be made public, (remember we had taken this vote the night before and continued the canvass during the forenoon of that day, no objection being made,) that if we had made an examination of the precinct returns he thought it would have vitiated the result; he did not say to what extent, nor whether it would have made a final difference.

Q. Was not that objection made on Friday night just after you made that determination?—A. No, sir.

Q. And then did not General Gordon come in next morning and make the protest in writing?—A. No, sir; the only protest or objection in writing that I know of in regard to this matter of ceasing the examination of the precinct returns was when we were about to make the declaration of the final result on the presidential electors; he then objected to making it public because, he said, an examination of the precinct returns might make a difference.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 19, 1876.

A. KNOPP was recalled, at his own request, to make a correction, which he did, as follows: Last night I was asked whether any motion was made in the board by Mr. Gennerette to adjourn. When we first started we said to each other that we would be back, because we would do nothing to-day until the Tuesday following. When we met we organized, and I made mention, "That is about all we can do, to organize and then meet next Tuesday. We will have received all the returns." Then there was attorneys from Blackville and Barnwell, and they disagreed. Some said that we could only organize and do nothing else until next Tuesday, and some of the attorneys say, "No; they had better go right on." Mr. Gennerette came to me, to one side, and says he, "There is too many people in here. We had better adjourn. We can do nothing here with so many people in the room." I said to him, "Let these lawyers agree, and whatever they agree we had better abide by." They did not agree, but I consented to what Judge Maher said, and I stepped up to Gennerette and said, "We had better follow Judge Maher's advice. Let us go on and not adjourn."

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Do I understand you now to say that Mr. Gennerette did make an application for an adjournment?—Answer. Yes, sir. He called me one side and said, "We can't do nothing here. We had better adjourn."

Q. Adjourn to when?—A. "For to-day," he said. "Let us adjourn for to-day;" says he, "we can't do nothing here; there is too many people in the room."

Q. Your previous suggestion was to adjourn to Tuesday?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. How came you to think of this matter? You were asked about it yesterday evening, and you did not remember anything of that sort.—A. My attention was called to it by Mr. Gennerette. When we went out he said, "Don't you remember?" and he reminded me, and then I remembered that I told him we should adjourn till Tuesday.

Q. Your attention was called to this by Gennerette after you had testified here yesterday evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was not here when you testified yesterday evening?—A. I think I noticed him here once.

Q. But he came to you after you testified and asked you about the matter?—A. Yes, sir; he asked me, "Don't you remember that I told you we should adjourn?" and I said I did now, but I could not recollect distinctly in my mind.

Q. We asked you about that here a short time before that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why could not you remember it as well then as you did when Gennerette mentioned it to you?—A. I could not get it to my mind.

Q. What circumstance brought it to your mind when Gennerette asked you?—A. Well, I felt more deliberate. It came into my mind that I remembered the thing well then.

Q. When Gennerette mentioned it to you?—A. Yes.

Q. Gennerette did not make the motion before the board, but called you one side and mentioned it to you alone?—A. I don't think he said it to the board, but only to me.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. He gave as a reason for adjourning that there were too many people about?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was all the reason that he gave?—A. Yes, sir; that is all he said. That is the only reason. I did not feel like telling any one to go away until Judge Maher said, "You had better clear the room."

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 19, 1876.

HENRY E. HAYNE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Columbia.

Q. How long have you resided here?—A. Four years.

Q. Where did you reside before coming here?—A. At Marlton, in this State.

Q. How long had you resided there?—A. From 1866 until 1872.

Q. How long have you resided in this State?—A. I was born in this State.

Q. What is your age?—A. I will be thirty-six the 30th day of this month.

Q. You are at present the secretary of state of South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were in November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you held the office?—A. From about the 5th of December, 1872.

Q. As secretary of state, were you a member of the board of State canvassers at the last election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what day this year did the canvassers first meet?—A. On the 10th of November.

Q. How many days were you allowed by law for the canvass?—A. Ten days.

Q. The 10th of November was Friday of the same week of the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether any returns had been sent in at that time?—A. On Friday, the only return that I remember being in was from the county of Richland—this county.

Q. What was done that day by the board?—A. We met, organized, and adjourned.

Q. Were any persons before you that day representing the different political parties?—A. I think there were. I think five or seven gentlemen came as lawyers representing democratic candidates at the election held on the 7th.

Q. What subjects, if any, were discussed?—A. I think the question was asked by one of the gentlemen when we proposed to canvass the returns, or whether we proposed to canvass the returns; and my answer was that there were no returns in but one, and that we should only organize and adjourn.

Q. To when did you adjourn?—A. Next day at 10 o'clock.

Q. What occurred that next day, Saturday?—A. I think there were three or four more returns in—I cannot tell positively how many—but we did not go into the canvass that day.

Q. What was done?—A. If I had the minutes before me I could refresh my memory. This committee has a certified copy of them.

Q. You have a right to refer to them. Can you state from recollection what county returns had reached you from Saturday?—A. I cannot testify to that.

Q. You adjourned to Monday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without reference to the minutes, can you state the events of Monday from memory, whether you transacted any business that day?—A. I cannot say positively as to transacting any business. I think that was the day that the first protest was made by General Conner, though I am not sure.

Q. Was that protest in writing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many returns had reached your office then?—A. I don't think there were more than ten.

Q. When did you adjourn to from Monday?—A. Tuesday at ten.

Q. State what occurred on Tuesday.

Mr. COCHRANE. As we have the minutes of the board, and as the witness says that he cannot remember anything that occurred except as it appears in the record, it seems useless to spend time in proving the contents of the record.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not propose to change the record or add to it by this testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair is not inclined to limit the examination in this respect.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. State briefly what occurred on Tuesday, the 14th of November, after the meeting of the board on that day.—A. [Referring to the minutes.] After the board met that morning these gentlemen came into the room. After their submitting, the day before, several protests, the board decided to hear oral argument on the question as to the time for canvassing the presidential vote, and General Conner gave as his opinion that we could wait five days for the respective returns before we commenced to canvass, but that the limitation to five days did not refer to completing the canvass in five days; that we had five days to wait for the respective returns and then five days after; that we had the same time to canvass the presidential returns that we had to canvass other returns, but we could not wait beyond five days before we began the canvass of those returns.

Q. What else occurred that day?—A. It is some time since, and I have not had a chance to refresh my memory, and I will have to refer to the record now and then.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, Judge Lapham, that you are not attempting to verify the record by this witness, but simply to let him look at the record to refresh his memory as to other matters?

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes.

The WITNESS. I think after that the board asked the gentlemen to retire, and we deliberated on the matter and came to the same conclusion ourselves, that the five days was not intended to be the limitation for the completion of the returns.

Q. Was there any business transacted that day, that you remember?—A. None, that I remember.

Q. Do you remember whether any notice was given that day about the application to the court?—A. No, sir; I do not think there was. I think that General Conner said that he desired the board to give an answer to a proposition that he had submitted the day before, as they were anxious to know just exactly what were the views of the board. I think he did say that they were anxious to know, and he said something in regard to the court. I don't remember now what.

By Mr. COCHRANE:

Q. He asked the board to give an answer to what proposition?—A. I think it was as to whether those who were candidates had a right to sit as members of the board. There were several orders submitted—one in regard to the members of the general assembly, and another in regard to the returns for governor.

Q. What answer, if any, was given as to the participation in the canvass of the members of the board who were candidates?—A. The decision was that they had a right to sit, except in their own cases, when they came before the board.

Q. State whether notice was given to the democrats thore of that decision.—A. Yes, sir; we passed a resolution to that effect and gave them a copy of it.

Q. Was there anything more said on Tuesday, that you remember?—A. [Referring to minutes.] Tuesday was the day that the notice was served on us by the court of the application for a writ of prohibition and mandamus. That was the 14th.

Q. What time in the day was that notice served?—A. I think it was something after 12 o'clock.

Q. What action did the board take, if any, on the service of that writ?—A. They referred the matter to our counsel.

Q. Did you transact any further business?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you adjourn to?—A. We adjourned to Wednesday.

Q. Are you able to say how many of the returns had come in from the different counties at the close of that day?—A. I think we had all the returns in on Wednesday.

Q. I am inquiring about Tuesday.—A. After the writ was served on Tuesday we did not transact any more business on that day.

Q. How many of the returns were in at that time when the writ was served?—A. I think all the returns were in, except the county of Kershaw.

Q. Do you mean all the returns from all the precincts, or from all the counties?—A. From all the counties.

Q. Do you remember when the return from Kershaw County was received?—A. The return from Kershaw County was received, I think, on Wednesday morning.

Q. What time on Wednesday?—A. Ten o'clock.

Q. What business, if any, was transacted that day?—A. That was the day that General Conner submitted an order asking that clerks be allowed to verify the statements, or make an aggregation of the returns of the precinct managers.

Q. What action, if any, was taken upon that order?—A. No action was taken that day.

Q. What was done on Wednesday?—A. Mr. Cordozo offered a resolution that we should entertain no proposition until the supreme court had decided our powers and duties.

Q. Did the board decide not to take any action?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was done beyond that, if anything, on Wednesday?—Nothing, sir; that was adopted, and we adjourned until Thursday.

Q. What occurred on Thursday?—A. On Thursday, the case being before the court, we did not do anything that day; we met and took a recess until three, and then at three the board met without a quorum, and adjourned until the next day at ten for want of a quorum. The next day was Friday.

By Mr. PHILIPS:

Q. Who was absent?—A. I think the attorney-general was absent. We met Friday morning, and that was the day that we proceeded to canvass the returns.

Q. What time did you commence?—A. We passed a resolution in the morning to allow so many persons from each party to be present—eight, I think, including the clerks—and we took a recess until two o'clock.

Q. To enable the parties to arrange their men to represent them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was the order of the supreme court directing the manner of your counting served?—A. I think that was on the 17th.

Q. That was Friday?—A. Yes, sir; the same day.

Q. What time in the day?—A. I think the order was given just after we had met.

Q. And before you determined how many should be present?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. After you met in the afternoon?—A. The court met that morning at eleven o'clock.

Q. When did the board first have notice of the action of the court?—A. That afternoon, I think, after we had taken the recess.

Q. When you met at two o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who served it?—A. The deputy sheriff of Richland County; I am not sure whether it was the deputy sheriff or not.

Q. You do not remember the person who made the service?—A. I cannot remember just now whether it was the clerk or the deputy sheriff.

Q. Was there a question raised at that time as to the mode in which you would canvass under the order?—A. The order read that we should make our statement from the county canvassers' statements, but the comptroller-general suggested, I think, that we had better, for our own satisfaction, take up the managers' returns in connection with the commissioners' returns; which was objected to by General Conner, as not being in accordance with the order of the court, the court having directed us to make up a statement to them from the canvassers' returns. I think his answer, so far as I can recollect, was that we were doing this simply for our own satisfaction. I think he said, "General, we are only doing this for our own satisfaction." The objections were not made in writing. We took up then the managers' returns from Abbeville, Aiken, Anderson, Barnwell, Beaufort, and Charleston.

Q. Had you opened or examined returns from the county of Abbeville up to that time when you commenced the canvass?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or the county commissioners' returns, either, from that county?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether the precinct managers' returns were all in from that county or whether there were some missing?—A. There was no return from two precincts for presidential electors, Calhoun's mills and Magnolia.

Q. Have you the original county commissioners' returns of Abbeville County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. [Showing witness a paper.] You knew the precincts in that county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen any returns from either of those precincts for presidential electors at the last election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are there returns from those precincts for the other officers?—A. There are, from Calhoun's mills, but not from Magnolia.

Q. There is a return from Calhoun's mills, but it does not embrace to presidential electors?—A. No, sir; there was no election held at Magnolia.

Q. Do you remember whether the electoral vote returned by the county officers was or was not larger than that shown by the precinct returns?

Mr. PHILLIPS. That appears by the papers themselves, and they are the best evidence. I object.

(The chair sustains the objection.)

Q. Do you remember any precinct in that county where only a part of the names of the electors were included in the precinct returns, only the surnames, for instance?—A. Yes, sir; they ran in that way; not only in that county, but in others.

O. I am only inquiring about this county.—A. I cannot remember just now.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any precinct where only one of the managers had signed the return?—A. Yes, sir; precinct Ninety-six.

Q. Was this absent precinct, Calhoun's mills, embraced in the aggregate of the county commissioners' returns from Abbeville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the cases where there were defective returns not signed by all?—A. Yes, sir; it was the first county that I noticed where there was a return missing, and I telegraphed all three commissioners that there was no return sent for Calhoun's mills as to presidential electors.

Q. Has any ever been made yet?—A. Not up to that time. One of the commissioners of election, Mr. Perrin, came into my office to see me in regard to other business, and I asked him in regard to Calhoun's mills, and he said that the managers sent out no return, but they took the supervisors' books, and, finding the names of the electors on both tickets, and that they talked with the supervisors' returns, they took up the supervisors' returns as corroborating the ballots in the boxes.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. And that was included in the county commissioners' returns?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Had you ever opened or examined the returns from Aiken County until you took up the canvass?—A. They were brought open.

Q. But had you ever examined them with the view of seeing whether they were all there or imperfect?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you say they were brought?—A. They were brought by one of the commissioners, wrapped up in a newspaper.

Q. Do you remember by whom?—A. Mr. S. B. Spencer.

Q. On looking at them with a view to the canvass, state whether there were any returns of electoral votes missing from that county.—A. There were no managers' returns from Silverton and Windsor precincts.

Q. Were there managers' returns of the other vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it with Aiken Court-House?—A. Aiken Court-House was returned.

Q. Aiken was first reported missing, but you found it afterward and supplied it to us.—A. Yes, sir; they made it out on a blank that was intended for the commissioners, and that is the way we overlooked it the first day, when this committee's clerks were at the office.

Q. Were there election returns from all the precincts in that county? I do not confine my question now to the electoral vote, but any kind of returns?—A. Yes, sir; from all the precincts, but not of the electoral vote from Silverton and Windsor.

Q. Had the county commissioners in that county allowed the electoral vote for Windsor and Silverton?—A. I think not, sir. Not by their return as compared with the precinct returns.

Q. Look at that abstract furnished to this committee from your office, and then take the county commissioners' return and compare them.—A. I made a comparison with the return before I came here. There is a difference of three votes on the republican electors, without Silverton and Windsor precincts, and a difference of 240 in the democratic electors.

Q. Is that difference included in the returns of the county commissioners?—A. I made a comparison of the precinct returns with the county commissioners' return, and I found that the precinct returns footed up 2,215 for the republicans, and 2,653 for the democratic electors, without Silverton and Windsor. The county return of the commissioners of election shows 2,218 for the republicans and 2,903 for the democrats.

Q. Which number of votes is embraced in the canvass made by your board?—A. We took the commissioners' returns.

Q. The largest number?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That number is more than the precinct-managers' canvass?—A. Yes, sir; without Silverton and Windsor.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. You have no evidence of the number of votes given at those precincts?—A. None at all.

Q. If you should give the party vote at each of those precincts, which would it increase, the republican or the democratic?—A. Giving both of those precincts to both parties, it would leave the democrats one hundred and something less than their vote in the commissioners' return.

Q. It would make the democratic majority one hundred less than it is now on the commissioners' return?—A. Yes, sir. I may be mistaken, but I think I am right. I can send for those returns.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What two returns?—A. The precinct returns for State and county officers.
[The witness was directed to produce the returns in question.]

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. That brings us to Barnwell. Had you looked at the Barnwell returns until you took up this canvass on Friday afternoon?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether any returns for electors from precincts in that county were missing?—A. Yes, sir; Cainan's Fair Church. Robbins was in.

Q. It was not in the general returns?—A. No, sir; not in the return sent by the messenger.

Q. Do you know whether the county canvassers' return in Barnwell embraced the vote from Cainan's Fair Church or Robbins's?—A. It did not.

Q. The county return and the State canvassers' agreed in regard to that count?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was there, in fact, any election held at Cainan's Fair Church?—A. No, sir.

Q. The abstract of votes, as made up by the State canvassers for Barnwell County, gives Bowen 2,835, and the other republican electors substantially the same except Mr. Hurley, who only has 2,140; and it gives Barker 3,695, and the other democratic electors substantially the same. State if these figures are the same as found in the county commissioners' return for that county.—A. They are, sir.

Q. These figures include the vote at Barnwell Court-House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a managers' return sent up from Barnwell Court-House?—A. The one I have just mentioned. General Hagood appeared before the board and said that was the return, and we took it as the return.

Q. You have furnished a certified copy to the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not signed?—A. No, sir. There is no name of the poll attached to the papers. I have a certified copy of the poll-list, certified before a trial-justice.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Was that poll-list returned to your office?—A. No, sir; it was not sent up with the other papers, but afterwards.

Q. Then it is a paper not sent to you officially, but simply a copy attested before a trial justice?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. What is that paper?—A. It is a certified copy of the poll-list, sent to me while our board was in session.

Q. Certified to by whom?—A. The two managers of the precinct.

Q. Which is a democrat?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. This paper accompanied the affidavits, copies of which you have furnished?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you furnish a copy of this?—A. I think that at that time it was in the hands of the Committee on Privileges and Elections with some other papers.

Q. You have a list of the missing precincts in the electoral returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please bring with you after recess the managers' returns from those precincts, whatever return there is of managers of elections held, whether it includes the electoral vote or not.

The WITNESS. I will do so.

Recess until 4 p. m.

The committee re-assembled at 4 p. m.

HENRY E. HAYNE, secretary of state, direct examination continued.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State if any managers' precinct returns failed to be returned to your office from Beaufort County?—Answer. Yes, sir; Beech Branch. I mean for presidential electors. There was a return for the other officers.

Q. Was the electoral vote for that precinct included in the county canvassers' returns?—A. I think it was.

Q. State whether the State board of canvassers in the abstract of votes which they made up included the entire vote of that county?—A. That I cannot say. We only took, in every case, the county commissioners' return.

Q. You have stated that the county commissioners' return in that county did include Beech Branch?—A. I think so. I think you will find that there is a difference on these tabulated sheets of between seventy-four and twenty-two votes—seventy-four on the democratic side and twenty-two on the republican.

Q. There was a county commissioners' return from that county?—A. Yes, sir; for State and county officers.

Q. State whether there was a county commissioners' return from every county in the State?—A. Yes; from every county.

Q. State whether the State board of canvassers, in making up their abstract of votes, included all the returns as they were sent up by the county canvassers in all the counties?—A. Yes, sir; for every county.

Q. Robbins precinct was not included in the returns of the county canvassers?—A. No, sir.

Q. State whether any managers' returns were missing from Charleston County, or whether returns were made for all the precincts?—A. I think that returns were made from all the precincts, but in one instance I think they only returned a portion of the electors, or they returned the number and not the names, or something of that kind.

Q. Was there any error in Charleston County?—A. There were two precincts, I think, where they only gave the names of two electors on each side. Those precincts were Dutart's Creek and Cross-Roads.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Q. Was there not one precinct in Charleston County where the name of one republican elector was left off?—A. I really cannot say.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What is the state of the vote, as shown by the managers' return, for Dutart's Creek?—A. Sixty-six for Bowen and Whismith each, and Barker and McGowan twenty each.

Q. Is any vote shown for the other electors?—A. Not on the precinct returns.

Q. Is it shown on the county canvassers' return?—A. The county canvassers evidently included this vote the whole way through for every candidate.

Q. State what the vote is on the managers' return for Cross-Roads.—A. Bowen and Whismith 68, Barker and McGowan 105.

Q. But the deficient votes are given for all the electors in both those precincts, in the county canvassers' return?—A. Yes, sir; there does not seem to be any difference between them.

Q. So the vote of that county is complete?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. All you know about it is that the county canvassers returned one way and the precinct managers the other way.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether any managers' returns were missing from Chester County.—A. Yes, sir; presidential returns for the Boyd's store precinct. The returns for State and county officers were made.

Q. State whether the vote of Boyd's store was included in the county managers' return?

—A. I can tell you better by comparing the return with this tabulated sheet. Chester County gives the republicans 2,441 as an average, and 1,973 for the democratic electors.

Q. Did the county canvassers' return for Chester County include the vote for presidential electors at Boyd's store?—A. I think it must have included it.

Q. What is the republican vote at Boyd's store?—A. The average is 203 republican to 209 democratic.

Q. That is for the candidates for State officers.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Colleton County were there any precincts from which any managers' returns for presidential electors were sent up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are they?—A. There are several. Bell's Cross-Roads, Preacher's Mill, Ashapoo, Iron's school-house, Cross-Roads, and Bennett's Point.

Q. State whether any election was held at Bennett's Point?—A. No election was held at Bennett's Point.

Q. Were managers' returns sent up from Iron school-house, Ashapoo, Preacher's Mill, or Bell's Cross-Roads?—A. Yes, sir. Some returns came by mail, the other day. Here is the package just as they came.

Q. What day did they come?—A. I received that by Mr. Myers, the senator from that county, on the 16th of December, from the chairman of the board of county canvassers.

Q. You have the managers' returns from Bell's Cross-Roads here?—A. Yes, sir; it is signed by all the managers on the 7th of November.

Q. What is the vote?—A. Republicans, 35; democrats, 105. That is the vote for each elector.

Q. When did you get that return?—A. December 16th, by mail.

Q. From whom did you receive it?—A. The senator of the county.

Q. Have you before you the envelope with the post-mark on it in which that managers' return was sent to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How came it to be post-marked when you received it through Senator Myers?—A. Because the package was addressed to Senator Myers.

Q. Where is it post-marked at?—A. "Charleston and Savannah Railroad agent."

Q. What is the date of the post-mark?—A. December 15.

Q. Was any managers' return for Bell's Cross-Roads precinct brought to you or to your office with the other managers' returns from that county?—A. Yes, sir; for State and county officers; not for electors.

Q. Was any managers' return for electors brought for Bell's Cross-Roads when the other returns were brought?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any one received except that one which was sent by mail?—A. None except this one which I hold in my hand.

Q. Can you state whether the vote for electors at these points, Bell's Cross-Roads, Preacher's Mill, and Iron school-house, were included by the county canvassers in the returns which they sent up?—A. I think they were. The only thing sent up from Preacher's Mill in regard to the presidential electors was the supervisors' return. They told me that was what they counted as the electoral vote there.

Q. You have that before you now?—A. I have.

Q. What vote does it show?—A. It shows 100 for all the republican electors, and 164 for all the democratic electors. No return was sent up from Ashapoo for presidential electors.

Q. Was a managers' return sent up from Ashapoo for State officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the republican vote there for State officers?—A. The vote for State and county officers at Ashapoo was 437 republican and 96 democratic.

Q. Have you the returns for Iron school-house?—A. Yes, sir; it shows 180 republican to 44 average democratic vote.

Q. Have you the county canvassers' return for Edgelyield?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether there were any precincts in Edgelyield County from which no managers' returns for electors were received?—A. Yes, sir; Cheatham's store and Richardson.

Q. Was there any managers' return for the State officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of the vote for State officers at these two precincts, as shown by the managers' returns?—A. Two hundred and eighty-eight republican and 320 democratic; that is at Richardson,

Q. How many at Cheatham's?—A. One hundred and seventy-three democratic and 88 republican.

Q. State whether the county canvassers' returns included the vote of these two precincts for electors.—A. I believe they did. I find that Cheatham's store is the only absent precinct. Richardson is only a defective precinct; there is a return for that precinct, but it is not signed.

Q. State whether managers' returns for the electoral vote were sent to you from all the precincts in Fairfield County.—A. There is one precinct, Ridgeway, from which no return at all for presidential electors is made.

Q. Was there any return from there for State officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the return for State officers?—A. I have not got that with me.

Q. State whether the county commissioners' return included the vote of Ridgeway precinct?—A. Yes, sir; I think it did. The chairman told me so.

Q. State how the vote for State officers, as shown by the managers' return made to you, compares with the electoral vote, included by the county commissioners in their return?—A. I cannot tell you that just now. I have sent for that.

Q. You have stated that you received a return sent by mail to the senator from Colleton County for Bell's Cross-Roads since the State canvassers canvassed the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you received any managers' returns for any other precinct in that county since the canvass by the State officers?—A. No, sir.

Q. There are two mentioned in the letter?—A. There are affidavits that he refers to. He calls them "returns" in his letter, but they were in fact affidavits.

Q. To what precincts did they relate?—A. To Ashepoo and Blue House.

Q. Where are these affidavits?—A. You have a copy of them here.

Q. What is the matter with Blue House?—A. At the time that we thought we overlooked Colleton we did not know that any of the presidential returns were attached to the general returns at all. Judge Abbott and Mr. Saylor came and examined the county returns of this very county, I think, in regard to some of these precincts. They suggested that they might have been put with the general returns, and in looking over them we found them.

Q. The Blue House return is included in the abstract of county returns which you furnish?—A. I think so.

Q. Let me see those two affidavits. [The affidavits being produced, Mr. Lawrence proposed to insert them as defective returns, but Mr. Phillips objected to them as ex-parte affidavits, and also as not having been filed within the time prescribed by law, and they were excluded.]

Q. In Georgetown County were there any presidential returns from Upper Waccamaw and Pedee?—A. Upper Waccamaw is returned as Brook Green, and Pedee as Birdfield.

At this point the examination of the witness was suspended.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

PETER M. GREGORY sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question: Where do you reside?—Answer. In Charleston.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. One of the canvassers; commissioners, they are called.

Q. State what the vote was for electors for President and Vice-President at Cross-Roads precinct.—A. I cannot remember the number of votes.

Q. What vote was shown by the managers' return?—A. Sixty-eight votes were given in one instance.

Q. At Cross-Roads?—A. Sixty-eight votes; I only know what the return shows.

Q. Did you examine the votes in the ballot-box for Cross-Roads precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether all the electors were voted for.—A. They were all on the tickets; on all the tickets from Cross-Roads.

Q. Johnson and Hurley and Nash, then, received the same vote that Bowen and Winsmith received?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether you examined the ballots to find in the box for Dutart's Creek, also.—A. We would take out the poll-list and the tally-list on the return as they were called, and then we would aggregate the amount of the votes given to each candidate, and see if they would correspond.

Q. Do you remember whether the Cross-Roads return for Dutart's Creek was blank for Johnson, Hurley, Nash, Cook, and Meyers?

Mr. ABBOTT. The return is the best evidence of that.

Q. Did you count the ballots at Dutart's Creek?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether the names of all the electors were on the ballots for Dutart's Creek.—A. In every case, sir, we found all the electors on the tickets.

Q. And the same vote for all the electors?—A. Yes, sir; with the exception of where the ticket of one party would be more than the other. But I do not remember any cut tickets, or split tickets.

Q. Whatever vote was given to Bowen and Winsmith in Dutart's Creek precinct was given to the other republican electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so of the democratic electors?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you count the votes in all the different precincts, also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The whole fifty-five?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did it take you, if you counted the votes from each box?—A. We would do every one. We were several days doing that.

Q. At every precinct did you open the box and look at the votes?—A. Yes; every precinct.

Q. Do you recollect anything special in regard to Dutart's Creek precinct?—A. There was some omission on the part of the managers there.

Q. If you opened the boxes and examined the votes, why didn't you, in your returns, put it down as you found the votes were?—A. We have placed everything in that way. Every irregularity that occurred we noted.

Q. You, by counting, ascertained that the precinct managers' returns were incorrect, and then you would correct the errors in your return to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that your return you intended to be, in this respect, in regard to these two places, precisely as the votes showed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The canvassers' return included all the votes from all the precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And wherever there was an irregularity in the managers' return you corrected it by looking into the ballot-boxes and examining the tickets?—A. Yes, sir.

---

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

B. G. YOCOM sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I reside in Chester.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. I was chairman of the board of canvassers.

Q. Did you canvass the vote of Chester County?—A. I did.

Q. On what day?—A. It was on Friday following the election, the 10th of November.

Q. Did you have the managers' returns from all the precincts of the county?—A. We did, sir.

Q. Can you state what the vote was at Boyd's-Store precinct for electors of President and Vice-President?—A. I believe the vote was 208 for the democrats and 204 for the republican ticket.

Q. State whether this was included in the county canvassers' return.—A. It was.

Q. All the managers' returns were included?—A. All the managers' returns were included; the vote of each of the precincts.

Q. All your precincts were sent forward, I suppose, to the secretary of state's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You inclosed them or saw them inclosed?—A. I inclosed them myself. I rolled them all into a bundle of paper and tied a twine around them and gave them to the messenger.

The secretary of state, being present, remarked to the witness that one of the returns was missing.

The WITNESS. Then it must have been the fault of the messenger. I started them properly. I handled them myself, and we had the return from every box, and there was no return left in the office, so it must have been his fault.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What was it you gave to Walker?—A. I gave him a tabular statement of the vote at each box, showing the number of votes counted for each candidate.

---

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

HENRY E. HAYNE recalled and examination resumed.

By Mr. LAPHAM:

Question. Have you the managers' return for the State officers for Ridgeway precinct, in Fairfield County?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the republican vote at the last election, as shown by these managers' returns, and what is the democratic vote?—A. The average seems to be 390 republican and 352 for the democrats.

Q. State whether the canvassers for Fairfield County included the vote of Ridgeway precinct in their canvass and statement.—A. I think that the aggregate will show that they did. I do not think you will find a discrepancy between the managers' return and the commissioners' return anywhere except in Aiken.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. And the Robbins box?—A. Well, the Robbins box was not included in the commissioners' return, because it was not handed to them to canvass.

Q. You said, if I understood you, last evening, that Upper Waccamaw precinct, in Georgetown County, was returned to the State board under the name of Brook Green?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Peedee is returned under the name of Birdfield?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You have not found any of the missing Horry County returns, I suppose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Granby, in Lexington County, under what name is that returned?—A. It is returned as Red Store, and Casey's as Sandy Run.

Q. Oconee County?—A. Fenton Falls is the only precinct missing. There was no return at that poll for any officers.

Q. What is the fact as to whether there was a poll there or not?—A. That I cannot say.

Q. How is Hurd's, in Pickens County, returned?—A. As Hurricane.

Q. What was the vote at Central Station?—A. 86 republican and 309 democratic. I see that the witness, Mr. Bradley, of Pickens County, thinks that he brought me the returns. That is a mistake. When he came into the office with the Pickens papers, without opening the package, I said to him, "Why, you have nothing but the poll-list here." He said, "The others have been sent by mail, and we did receive the others by mail."

Q. What are these papers that Mr. Bradley did bring to you?—A. The managers' poll-lists; nothing else.

Q. For each precinct in the county?—A. For such as are here. This is one of the papers that was brought by him, a tally-list. There is nothing on the paper to indicate to what place it belongs; that it was Pickens Court-House.

Q. On this tally-sheet, which appears among the Pickens County papers, there is a tally for State officers?—A. Yes, sir; there are thirty-seven on this paper for the democratic electors, and none for the republican.

Q. What do you suppose this paper containing the thirty-seven tallies for the democratic electors to be?—A. I really cannot tell.

Q. On this large tally-sheet which you suppose to be from Pickens Court-House, what is the vote?—A. 345 democratic, and 141 republican.

Q. That seems to have been counted by the canvassers as the Pickens Court-House, return though it is not signed by any one?—A. Yes, sir. The excuse they give for making the return in this form is that the blanks did not reach them in time, but they were sent out on the 15th of October at the same time as the others were sent out, and we have the express company's receipt for them.

Q. This large tally-sheet includes the surnames of the republican and the democratic electors, but no Christian names, and does not indicate what offices they were voted for?—A. No, sir. The papers were very incomplete in that county, but I am satisfied that all the precincts from Pickens were included in the county commissioner's return, canvassed by the State board.

Q. What is the vote at Union?

Mr. ABBOTT. One hundred republican and 103 democratic.

Q. To whom were the canvassers' returns and the managers' returns made—to you as secretary of state, or to the State board of canvassers?—A. To me as secretary of state.

Q. When did you open the returns that were made to you?—A. In almost every instance I opened the returns on receipt of them to get out the commissioners' returns.

Q. But sometimes you opened them afterward?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether you have preserved and have on file, and have produced for the inspection of the committee, all the returns which you received.—A. Yes, sir; every return that I received.

Q. Have you suppressed or changed any?—A. None, sir. It is not my interest as a public officer to do anything of the kind.

Q. State whether you received any returns after the State board had canvassed the first six counties.—A. Yes, sir; I think we did. The county of Kershaw came in the very last. It was very late in getting in.

Q. Did you receive other returns?—A. Yes, sir. Some of the commissioners had an idea that under the law they had ten days to canvass the precinct returns, and we had to notify them that such was not the fact.

Q. Who certified the election of the electors for President and Vice-President?—A. The entire board.

Q. State whether this paper now produced is a correct abstract of the votes as canvassed by the State board of canvassers for President and Vice-President.—A. To the best of my knowledge it is. It is a certified copy.

Q. This is the paper which you have furnished to the committee under your certificate and seal of office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What had been the custom of the State board of officers previously as to the mode of canvassing the votes for officers?—A. I have been a member of the board for four years; and the custom since I have been a member has always been to canvass the commissioner's return of election, except in cases of contests and protests, and then those polls that were contested were taken up.

Q. In the cases of contests and protests, what did you do?—A. We took evidence in those cases.

Q. If there be any other fact which you know of or think of as material, you may state it.

—A. The only fact I desire to bring to the attention of the committee is as to the manner of canvassing the returns. Always, since I have been a member, we have canvassed from the commissioner's returns unless in cases of contests and protests.

Q. State whether this that I now hand you is an official document.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The tables now handed in from pages 0126 and 0127 are taken from this volume, are they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Lawrence offered the tables in evidence, as follows :

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. I understood you to say that all these returns were made to you as secretary of state, in the first instance ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you open those returns as they are received ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that from the time you received them until the present time the returns have all been opened ?—A. On the receipt of each package I place them in my safe until the meeting of the board of canvassers.

Q. And they are open ever after that ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These returns were produced open to the State canvassers ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since the State canvass where have they been kept ?—A. They have been kept in my office.

Q. They are open to any one who comes there ?—A. No, sir ; not to any one.

Q. Well, they are open to a great many persons ?—A. They are not open to any one except by permission.

Q. You are not always in the office ?—A. No, sir ; but there are clerks there.

Q. They are open to the clerks ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have these papers been examined by any persons other than these committees ?—A. Since the committee examined them ; they have not before.

Q. By whom have they been examined since that time ?—A. Well, they have been examined by the committees of the house and senate.

Q. But not before this committee examined them ?—A. No, sir ; no papers were examined before this committee examined them.

Q. And they have been kept in your office all the time since the State board canvassed them ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This paper is a return, by precincts, of the vote for 1874 ?—A. Yes ; a return for some of the precincts and some of the counties.

Q. Well, for whatever counties it purports to be a return for, it is a correct return ?—A. I would not swear to that ; but this is, as near as I can say, a correct copy of these precincts at the time it was taken.

Q. It was taken by yourself or by your order ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whatever precincts appear here you believe to be a correct transcript for the election for 1874 ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Turning to Red Oak, Barnwell County, I see the total vote cast there is 259 ; that you believe is correct as given here ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The colored vote is given as 206 ; white vote, 53 ; Milletville, total, 312 ; colored, 46 ; white, 66 ; Robbins, total, 366 ; colored, 293 ; white, 67. Will you leave this statement with us ?—A. If it is desired.

Q. Some of these precinct returns for electors have been found since the committee made the first examination, have they not ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were mislaid in some way or other so that they could not be found when the first examination was made ?—A. Only in one case, Aiken Court-House, when the presidential electors return was made on a commissioner's blank.

Q. Was not Barnwell Court-House returned here last Monday morning ?—A. We brought that sheet purporting to be Barnwell Court-House, but it is not signed.

Q. A great many of these reports are not signed ?—A. Yes, sir. But I desire to say this : that in nearly every instance where these copies were made, they were called out and copied by one of your clerks.

Q. Yes ; but they were made from papers furnished by you.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You or one of your deputies were present when our clerks made these copies ?—A. O, yes.

Q. And you superintended the examination of the papers ?—A. I got the bundles out for Mr. Myers and Mr. Devine. I staid with them. My clerk was with the other two gentlemen.

Q. You or your clerk produced whatever papers were produced there, and the committee's employes took only the papers that were produced by you ?—A. Well, these papers were in the package at the time it was handed to them.

Q. You had a clerk to produce them and hand them to them ?—A. Yes, sir ; we handed the packages to them.

Q. This Barnwell Court-House return, for example, where was that return found ?—A. In the package. I don't suppose they would have taken it for a return any more than I would myself, unless it was explained.

Q. It is a return regular in every respect except that the managers did not sign it ?—A. There is no name of the managers or the precinct attached.

Q. Is that the only such one that appears in your office ?—A. No, sir ; I think there is one in the case of Pickens.

Q. Is that the only one that appears in your office for Barnwell Court-House ?—A. Yes ; the only one.

Q. And there was no other received by you ?—A. No, sir.

Q. The Aiken Court-House return was also overlooked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because it was a little out of its place?—A. Because the blank, instead of having "Precinct," had "Commissioners" at the head, and "Precinct" marked below.

Q. What time on Friday, the 17th of November, did you begin making your returns as a board of State canvassers?—A. I think it was between one and two o'clock, because immediately after the re-assembling of the board we commenced to canvass.

Q. How long were you engaged in going through the first precincts, the canvass of which it has been stated were made by a comparison of the managers' returns with the statement of the county canvassers?—A. I know it was late in the evening.

Q. About what time should you suppose it was?—A. About half past nine o'clock, I should think.

Q. About half past nine before they completed all these counties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During what portion of the time between one or two and half past nine were you engaged actually at this work?—A. We only took one rest, to my best recollection.

Q. Did you not adjourn for dinner?—A. Yes, sir; that is the only adjournment.

Q. Did you not take a rest for supper?—A. I have no recollection of it; we may have taken one.

Q. How many other counties did you canvass after you finished the canvass of these six counties by precinct returns?—A. I cannot tell exactly; you have a copy of the minutes here.

Q. A number of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What formal action was taken after you had finished the canvass of Charleston County with reference to the manner in which you should canvass?—A. Well, before we had canvassed Charleston County I called the attention of the board to the fact that if we proceeded by the managers' returns we would never get through soon enough to make the return within the time allowed.

Q. What I want to know is what formal action was taken at the time you changed the method of your count?—A. No formal action, any more than that I called the attention of the gentlemen present to the time it would take; that we had to make a return not only for the electors, but also for State officers.

Q. Was there anything like a resolution of the board formally adopted after you finished Charleston County that you would no longer continue that method, but would simply make up your statement from the statement of the canvassers?—A. I think I put the motion, and I think all the members except one voted. But I don't know as any other one made the motion.

Q. You put the motion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the board then formally resolved that they would proceed to make their canvass thereafter from the commissioners' returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State the method that you pursued during the canvass of those first six counties?—A. We had sheets prepared and a general blank like this large one here. When they got through calling off the precinct returns, then they inserted the commissioners' return on this general blank, this large sheet.

Q. You noted the discrepancies and irregularities in the returns of the county commissioners during that time. State what formal notice you took of them; what abstract of these irregularities you made.—A. Nothing except what you see on the margin of the papers.

Q. Were there no separate papers?—A. No such separate papers kept by us.

Q. Is there no paper in your office containing a statement of the canvassing that was done of those six counties?—A. None at all.

Q. And you made no memorandum at all of the irregularities or discrepancies except what were made on the precinct-managers' returns?—A. We made no statement at all on their returns. When we called off, for instance, this precinct, and the return was not signed, we would mark it on the margin, "No return," or "Return not signed," on those tabular statements we prepared of these six counties, but we took no note otherwise.

Q. Do you mean to say that you had papers like this county abstract of precinct returns for those first six counties?—A. Yes, sir; we have them in the office now.

Q. Please produce them.—A. I will do so.

By Mr. LAWRENCE;

Q. You have stated that you opened the returns from the counties as they were received?—A. Yes, sir; to get at the commissioners' blanks for each presidential and State officer.

Q. Do you mean that it was done immediately, in the presence of the officer who brought the returns, or soon after?—A. Not immediately. It is my duty as secretary of state to lay before the board of State canvassers the returns from the different counties, and, as I stated before, it was the custom of the board only to canvass.

Q. When you broke open the package to take out the returns, did you do it immediately or subsequently?—A. In some cases I did immediately, before the messenger. In some cases they were not sealed, but rolled up in bundles; and in some cases they were brought in satchels and little trunks, the papers rolled together. In very few cases were the precincts sealed.

Q. Did you in all cases make an examination before the messenger left, to see that all the returns were there, or did you make your critical examination before them at a later period?
—A. The time fixed for the canvass was on the 10th of November by the amended law, which would be three days after the general election, so you will see that the board was in session before the majority of the counties could have had their returns in, and as the returns came in I took them and in some instances opened them before the messenger, but in other instances I did not.

Q. When the abstract of Barnwell County was made out for this committee, it was done by clerks furnished by this committee, was it not?
—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Barnwell precinct return, or the paper which you have certified, supposing it to be the managers' return for Barnwell Court-House, was that in the bundle of papers furnished to the clerks?
—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it their omission, or yours, that it was not at that time put into the abstract?
—A. I have stated, just now, that it was in pencil, in two sheets of paper, and I don't suppose that they thought it was a return any more than any man not acquainted with the fact would have thought so.

Q. State whether you had any purpose to conceal it.
—A. None whatever.

Q. It was there, open to their inspection?
—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You don't mean to change what you told me in reference to opening these returns; you opened them before giving them to the board of canvassers?
—A. O, yes, sir. They came to me as secretary of state.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

A. C. SHAFFER sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?
—Answer. In Colleton County.

Q. What office did you hold at the last election?
—A. I was one of the commissioners of election.

Q. State who was the messenger to bring the return from that county to the secretary of state.
—A. I was appointed by the board.

Q. Was there any election at Bennett's Point?
—A. None.

Q. What was the vote for the republican electors at Ashpoo precinct?
—A. 437 for the republicans; 96 for the democrats.

Q. At Iron school-house?
—A. 180 republican and 444 democratic.

Q. State whether managers' returns were before the canvassers from all the precincts?
—A. No, not from all of them. From Prescher's Mill all the return we had was the supervisor's return.

Q. Is that included in the canvass for the county by the county canvassers?
—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what the vote was?
—A. No, I do not.

Q. It was a democratic majority?
—A. I think it was.

Q. Then in the canvassers' return you included the vote at all the precincts in the county except Bennett's Point, where there was no election?
—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what returns you brought to the secretary of state.
—A. I brought the returns from all the precincts except Bennett's Point, where there were none, and Bell's Cross-Roads, that was left out by mistake; it was not returned at the time I brought the others. I discovered it afterward.

Q. What was there about Rantoul's precinct?
—A. The managers there, I believe, could not agree. They counted the votes over and found how they stood, and they could not agree in regard to the counting, and as they could not agree, they left the whole matter to the county board of canvassers; did not fill up any return at all. Two of the managers came up with the ballot-box and the poll-list. We then canvassed the vote from the ballots and it tallied with the poll-list and with what they stated was in the box. We certified so on the returns. I had a tabular statement prepared of the vote at each precinct in the county, which I gave to Mr. Fox.

Q. You say there was one of the managers' returns, Bell's Cross-Roads, which you did not bring up to the secretary of state?
—A. Yes, sir; it was left out by mistake.

Q. Was it subsequently sent up?
—A. Yes, sir. I will tell you how it was. I am county treasurer, and in my table is a drawer where I keep nulla-bona tax-lists. When these votes were canvassed Mr. Fox and the other commissioners opened the papers, and I called out the figures to the clerk, who put them down. We first made the tabular statement, and the vote was corrected from that. After we finished the different returns the other managers folded them up in a roll, with a string tied around them and marked with the names of the different precincts, and they were laid in this drawer. We worked all that night until about five o'clock the next morning, and when we concluded they appointed me as messenger, and I went to my house to prepare to bring the return to Columbia. I returned as quick as I could, in an hour or an hour and a half, so as to be in time for the morning train. I left one side of my valise for those papers. Mr. Fox and I and the clerk went into the office together and they opened the drawer and took out these papers and laid them in the valise. I verified them to see that they had the right number, 18, (there are 19 precincts, but there was none from Bennett's Point,) and they had 18, so that the number was correct, though one was left.

Q. Did you examine the votes from Preacher's Mill?—A. No, sir; we did not count the votes. We took the supervisor's return, as it tallied with the vote given for all the other officers. I think there was a return for the State officers made from that precinct, and where they all tallied we thought it was unnecessary to count the votes. There was no objection made by the board at all.

Q. You were going on to say how you left this out?—A. I brought them to Columbia and untied each package as I turned them over to Mr. Hayne. I opened them and took out the returns for governor and lieutenant-governor, and when I came to open one I found that it was nothing but one of my nulla-bona tax-lists, which they had tied up.

Q. You discovered that there was one return absent?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You discovered a nulla-bona tax-list?—A. Yes, sir; but I did not discover that the return was missing, because I did not check them. I went home without discovering it. Afterward they informed me that Bell's Cross-Roads had not been turned over. I went to my office; the first place I searched was in that drawer, and sure enough, in the back part of the drawer, with some nulla-bona tax-papers, I found this list.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. The governor's return you gave to the governor's private secretary and not to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the secretary of state had nothing to do, so far as you were concerned, with the returns for governor and lieutenant-governor?—A. I did not take them out of the office; they were sitting there at the table.

Q. Well, you delivered those returns to the governor's private secretary?—A. Well, I don't know if he took them.

Q. What do you mean us to understand when you say that? Do you mean us to understand that you did deliver them, as you said, to the governor's private secretary, or are we to understand something else?—A. I will give you exactly what I mean in regard to it. When I came to turn them over I was told that the governor's return should be turned over either to the governor or his private secretary. His secretary was sitting at the table, as I opened them, but whether Mr. Jones took these papers I do not remember. I did not take a receipt from any one for them.

Q. But let us understand. You intended to hand those papers to Mr. Jones?—A. That was my intention, as they said they belonged to him. I intended to do it, but I do not think he took charge of them in my presence.

Q. What he did in reference to that you don't know?—A. No, sir.

Q. But your intention was to hand them over to him?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was there a return for governor apart from that for the other State officers?—A. Yes, sir; the law requires that there shall be a return separately for the governor and lieutenant-governor.

Q. State whether the vote for governor and lieutenant-governor was not in the precinct returns with the other State officers?—A. My impression is that it was. It is very easy to ascertain.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

H. E. HAYNE recalled and further examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State what return was made as to Colleton County of the vote for governor.—Answer. The managers make a return to the secretary of state from each precinct of the vote for governor.

Q. How were they in the case of Colleton County, if you recollect it?—A. They returned for the precincts for governor and lieutenant-governor.

Q. And those managers' returns were brought to you by Mr. Shaffer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What papers were delivered to the private secretary of the governor?—A. A copy of the return, as required by law, with all the officers on it, from the governor down to the corner.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you mean that there were double copies, one delivered to the governor's private secretary and another to you?—A. Yes, sir; one package comes addressed to the governor, and the other to me.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

A. P. HOLMES sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What office did you hold at Colleton?—A. I was first appointed one of the commissioners of election.

Q. Did you perform the duties of the office?—A. Up until within five or six days of the election; after everything having been arranged, I then resigned.

Q. Were you present at the canvass by the county officers?—A. I was, by invitation of the board of canvassers.

Q. State what was done; how many precincts were in that county?—A. There were nineteen precincts in that county, and eighteen at which an election was held. There was no election at Bennett's Point.

Q. What did the county canvassers include in their canvass?—A. They canvassed all the returns of seventeen polls and the ballots of Rantoul's poll. The managers there disagreed, and they never made any returns, but just returned the tally-list together with the ballot-box and ballots, and the county officers made the return.

It is agreed that Wilson Cook received 379 votes for presidential elector in Acton precinct, Richland County, at the presidential election on the 7th of November last, and that those votes were by mistake not included by the canvassers in their return of the votes to the secretary of state, and so were not included by the State board of canvassers in their abstract of votes, and that Cook is entitled to that number of votes in addition to those which appear in the abstract of votes made out by the State canvassers, as certified by the secretary of state.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

J. N. STANSELL sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. You live in Barnwell County, at Barnwell Court-House?—Answer. No, sir; I live within two and a half miles of the court-house.

Q. Were you one of the managers at Barnwell Court-House precinct at the last election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that paper now shown you one of the returns that was made of the election?—A. This is one of them.

Q. That is signed by all the managers?—A. Yes, sir; by all three of them.

Q. Were you present and know it was signed?—A. Yes, sir; I know it.

Q. How many were made?—A. Three.

Q. What was done with them?—A. One was put in a box and returned to the county canvassers; one we mailed in an envelope to the secretary of state, H. E. Hayne, and that is the other, which we kept.

Q. Were they all three signed?—A. I am confident they were.

Q. Were they signed in your presence?—A. I am confident we signed three, sir.

Q. And they were all checked like this one which you kept?—A. Yes, sir.

The paper was put in evidence, as follows :

*State of South Carolina, board of managers of Barnwell precinct, Barnwell County.—
Statement and return of votes for presidential electors.*

We, the board of managers for the Barnwell precinct, of the county of Barnwell, State of South Carolina, make the following statement and return of the votes given for presidential electors, voted for in the said county on the seventh day of November, A. D. 1876 :

In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names this seventh day of November, in the year 1876.

F. W. LASPORLAD,
JOHN N. STANSELL,
W. H. SANDERS,

Board of Managers for the Barnwell Precinct of the County of Barnwell.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You were one of the precinct managers ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present when the county vote was canvassed ?—A. No, sir ; I delivered my box and was dismissed.

Q. Did they have this precinct returned ?—A. They did ; sealed up inside of the box returned of the canvassers.

Q. It was canvassed, then, by the county commissioners ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about the Blackville precinct ?—A. I know nothing about it officially.

Mr. ABBOTT. We do not make any question about that precinct. Hurley's vote was 695 at that precinct.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

JAMES MCCUTCHIN sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. You live in Williamsburgh County ?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Where ?—A. ———

Q. What office did you hold at the last election ?—A. I was one of the county commissioners.

Q. And you assisted in canvassing the votes ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the precinct managers' returns present from each of the precincts in the county ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they present from Muddy Creek and Black Mingo ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Give us the democratic presidential vote at Black Mingo.—A. Barker, 906 ; Harrington, 90 ; Wallace, 90 ; Aldrich, 90 ; McGowan, 90 ; Ingraham, 90 ; Erwin, 90.

Q. Give the republican vote at Black Mingo.—A. Bowen, 79 ; Winsmith, 79 ; Johnson, 79 ; Hurley, 79 ; Nash, 79 ; Cook, 79 ; Myers, 79.

Q. Now give the democrats at Muddy Creek.—A. Barker, 210 ; Harrington, 210 ; Wallace, 210 ; Aldrich, 210 ; McGowan, 210 ; Ingraham, 210 ; Erwin, 210.

Q. Now the republicans.—A. Bowen, 142 ; Johnson, 142 ; Nash, 137 ; Meyers, 137 ; Winsmith, 142 ; Hurley, 137 ; Cook, 137.

Q. Did you seal up, or tie up, or inclose the returns from these and all the precincts to the secretary of state ?—A. I saw it done, sir. One of the canvassers did it in my presence.

Q. From each precinct in that county ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know that ?—A. They were left in charge of the clerk, with instructions to forward them by the messengers.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether they were forwarded by the messenger ?—A. didn't see him depart with them. They were left there to be forwarded, and I have the affidavit of the clerk of the board that they were so sent.

Q. At any rate you saw them sealed up, and the instructions of the board were to send them ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the return that was made to the secretary of state did you include the vote of Black Mingo and Muddy Creek ?—A. Yes, sir ; they were included.

Q. You included the vote also of Sutton's precinct ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the county abstract Sutton's precinct is blank.—A. There was some informality in regard to that ; there was no notice of any objection on the part of any person representing the republican side as to any of the polls in the county before the board, and the full vote, as returned, was summarized by the canvassers and forwarded to the secretary of state for all the precincts.

Q. Do you remember what the vote at Sutton's was ?—A. No, sir ; I don't remember precisely.

Q. It is marked here 142 republican and 80 democrats.—A. I think that was about the vote, though I cannot swear positively that that was the precise result at that poll.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

C. PERRY QANATTLEBAUM sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Conwayborough, South Carolina.

Q. That is the county-seat, I believe?—A. It is.

Q. Were you present when the canvassers were canvassing the vote at the last election?—A. I was in the office between the time when the returns were received and the time when they were sent to this place while they were making up their statements.

Q. Did you request them at any time to let you examine and take a memorandum from the precinct managers' return?—A. I did.

Q. Did you do it?—A. I did, in connection with another party, Mr. Cooper, who called off from the original returns and I took down in pencil.

Q. Were there precinct managers' returns from each of the precincts in Horry County?—A. There were.

Q. Have you here that original memorandum made at the time?—A. I have; I would like to state that there is one set of figures here for presidential electors that were put down by Mr. Cooper. I was called out of the office into the court-room just before completing this, and Mr. Cooper put down the last set of figures, which you can see are different from mine.

Q. The democratic electors all received the same vote?—A. They all received the same number of votes, as I recollect.

Q. How was it with the republicans?—A. They varied very little.

Q. How much?—A. I don't remember, very few votes, not more than three or four, if that many.

Q. How did you take it, the highest or lowest?—A. I took the highest. I did not take the separate names in putting down the republicans, I took the highest number received by any republican elector.

Q. So that they got the benefit of the highest vote given for any one of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now give Conwayborough?—A. Democratic electors, 416; republican, 170.

Q. Dog Bluff?—A. Democratic, 211; republican, 8.

Q. Gallivant's Ferry?—A. Democratic, 117; republican, 25.

Q. Socastee?—A. Democratic, 138; republican, 61.

Q. Little River?—A. Democratic, 103; republican, 64.

Q. Simpson's Creek?—A. Democratic, 221; republican, 33.

Q. Give us the vote at Dogwood Neck.—A. Democratic, 73; republican, 27.

Q. Were you present when these managers' returns were rolled up?—A. I was not.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What is the total democratic vote for electors in that county?—A. [Referring to paper.] The total number of votes is 1,935 for the democrats, and 599 for the republicans. I think you will notice that there is a discrepancy of one vote between my statement and the certified returns filed with the clerk which will be before you.

Q. That aggregate which you have given includes the vote of all the precincts of the county?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

JOHN R. COOPER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. Within a mile of Conwayborough Court-House, Horry County.

Q. Were you present at any time during the canvass of the vote by the canvassers of that county at the last election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you assist Mr. Qanattlebaum in taking the tally of the votes cast for presidential electors?—A. I did.

Q. What did you do?—A. I called off the votes.

Q. For presidential electors what did you call it from?—A. From the precinct returns, which I asked the commissioners of election to give me, and they handed them to me.

Q. Were there precinct returns present from all the precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give them correctly to Mr. Qanattlebaum?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Can you tell us whether these presidential returns were on separate pieces of paper, or whether they were all tied up together with the county and State returns?—A. There was a portion separate, but I cannot say what number, and a part attached to the county returns.

Q. Were you present when they were inclosed in a bundle by the county canvassers?—A. No, sir; I was not.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

JOSEPH T. WALSH sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. You are a member of the bar at Conwayborough, Horry County ?—Answer. I am.

Q. At the presidential election were you chairman of the democratic county committee ?—A. I acted as chairman of that committee.

Q. Did you, in the discharge of what you considered your duty, take any pains to ascertain whether the returns by the county canvassers were made up and forwarded ?—A. Yes, sir. On the night that they were closing their report there, I was present when it was done and furnished a secretary to assist them in doing it.

Q. Did you see the different precinct returns from all the precincts in your county inclosed ?—A. I did, and furnished tape to tie them up and saw them delivered to the messenger.

Q. Who was the messenger ?—A. Ferd. D. Bryant.

Q. You saw them delivered to the messenger, but beyond that you cannot say ?—A. I cannot.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

TIMOTHY HURLEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you reside ?—Answer. In Charleston.

Q. What office did you hold at the last election ?—A. I was chairman of the commissioners of election for that county.

Q. State whether there was any defect in the managers' returns from Cross-Roads precinct.—A. Let me understand the question.

Q. All the managers' returns from Cross-Roads precinct failed to give the vote for some of the electors, both republican and democratic ?—A. The returns did not mention the presidential electors, but the board of canvassers went to the tally-sheet and there found the names of the parties for whom the votes of that precinct were cast.

Q. Did you examine the ballots ?—A. We looked at the tickets and saw that on all of them were the names of the parties who were voted for on both sides.

Q. The tickets in the box from Cross-Roads had the names of all the electors, democratic and republican ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the tally-sheet had the vote for all the electors ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you included in your canvass the vote for all the electors ?—A. That is the view we had of it. We counted all the votes that were returned for Hayes and Wheeler, and we counted for the men on that ticket, and those for Tilden and Hendricks were counted for the other parties.

Q. So that the full vote cast was counted for both sets of electors ?—A. Yes, sir ; I think the whole poll was less than 200 ; I know the democrats had the majority at that poll.

Q. Were all the votes counted also in the return which the canvassers made for the electors at Dutart's Creek ?—A. Yes, sir ; we counted at every poll where there was a case of that kind the votes for the parties whose name appeared on the tally-sheet.

Q. So that all the votes were counted ?—A. All the votes were counted that were returned on the tally-sheets where there was a discrepancy in the managers' returns.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. That is, you corrected the managers' returns by examining the votes and seeing that they had been absolutely cast ?—A. No, sir ; we did not do that. We looked at the tally-sheets, and where they bore on their faces that John Smith, for instance, had received 165 votes and John Jones 68 votes, we looked into the ballot-boxes and saw that the tickets were there ; but we did not count the tickets ; we verified our report by the tally-sheet.

Q. The tally-sheet had the names of the presidential electors and the vote under each ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you found on the tally-sheet the vote of each of the presidential electors you corrected the managers' return by that tally-sheet ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did you go further and verify by looking into the votes ?—A. We did in one case. There was a man on the ticket, John Isaac Erwin, and he was returned on the managers' return as John "Isington." We knew there was no such person and we gave Erwin the votes, 200 and odd votes, for "Isington."

COLUMBIA, S. C., December, 20, 1876.

A. C. SHAFFER recalled.

The WITNESS. You asked me in regard to Colleton County, if the returns were all complete. I stated that they were not at Preacher's Mill, and before I could answer as to the others I was asked some other question. From Ashepoo and Iron Cross-Roads precinct there was no presidential return. They had a tally-list with the votes given for each one of the presidential electors, and also for the State officers; and we corrected the returns for those two precincts from those two tally-sheets. I discovered that on turning them over, and I brought them up and showed them to the secretary of state, and he told me I must get the returns, and I took steps to do so.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. But you had a tally-list for all the electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you took the vote as it appeared by the tally-list?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you look into the box to see that the tickets were regular?—A. No, sir; we did not. You also asked me in regard to my turning over the returns to the secretary of state and to the governor's private secretary. It was the commissioners' returns for the general officers that were turned over to Mr. Jones, while the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor were turned over to the secretary of state.

Q. Then you did not mean what you testified before?—A. No, sir; I got the wrong impression from my opening the packages there and Mr. Hayne and Mr. Jones being present.

Q. You have seen Mr. Hayne since and he told you you made a mistake?—A. I know very well.

Q. He told you you made a mistake?—A. Yes, sir; but I am certain of the fact.

Q. You were certain the other way when you swore the other way, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; because Mr. Hayne told me that those returns were short.

Q. When you swore before that you gave the returns for governor and lieutenant-governor to Jones, you thought you were telling the truth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And since that Mr. Hayne has told you that you were mistaken, and now you change your testimony?—A. Yes, sir; and from a certain fact I am certain I did not give them to Mr. Jones.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

H. S. VANDERVEER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. You were one of the county managers for Oconee County at the last election?—Answer. I was.

Q. Were all the precinct managers' returns present before the managers?—A. They were.

Q. You returned one as Hall's. Is "Fenton" (Fenton H. Hall's) and "Hall's" the same?—A. Yes, sir; I presume so, because I know of no "Fenton" precinct.

Q. How many precincts are there in your county?—A. Fourteen, I believe.

Q. Have you your original canvass?—A. Yes, sir; the one from which we made up the whole thing. (Referring to paper.) "Hall's" appears on this canvass. It is the same as "Fenton."

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

JOHN A. BARRE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Columbia.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. I did not hold any office; nothing more than a clerkship in the senate. I was manager of election at Acton precinct, Richland County.

Q. Was there any omission in the managers' return at Acton precinct?—A. Yes, sir; there was an omission of the name of Wilson Cook, one of the electors. His name was omitted by mistake.

Q. State whether he received the same number of votes that the other republican electors received.—A. The same number, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

AARON W. GILBERT sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age and residence?—Answer. I am thirty-five years of age, and live in Aiken County.

H. Mis. 31, pt. 1—10

Q. What office did you hold on the day of the last presidential election?—A. Clerk of the Silverton board in Aiken County.

Q. Was there an election held at Silverton precinct?—A. There was.

Q. How many votes were given for electors of President and Vice-President?—A. Four hundred and fourteen.

Q. How many votes were given for the republican electors?—A. There were 232, and 182 for the democrats.

Q. There was a republican majority of 50?—A. A republican majority of square 50. There was not a scratched ticket in the box.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

ALBERT CARROLL (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What office did you hold at the last election?—Answer. I was a challenger at Silverton precinct.

Q. How many votes were cast?—A. There was 414, if my memory serves me right.

Q. Do you know what the republican majority was for presidential electors?—A. Fifty; a straight ticket.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

J. W. BROWN (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Beaufort County.

Q. Were you one of the county commissioners of election on the 7th of November last?—A. I was.

Q. Did you canvass the votes given at the election?—A. Yes, sir; at the time appointed, three days after the election.

Q. About how many votes were cast at Gray's Hill precinct?—A. I cannot certify correctly as to the number; it was four hundred and odd.

Q. Was it nearer 500 than 400?—A. Yes, sir; to the best of my recollection there was four hundred and eighty-odd votes cast.

Q. Did you open the ballot-box for Gray's Hill and examine the ticket?—A. Yes, sir; we was compelled to open the box to get at the poll-list.

Q. Did you notice the tickets?—A. Yes, sir; and on the return of the managers there were votes assigned to Hayes and Wheeler and Tilden and Hendricks that should have been assigned to the presidential electors.

Q. How were the tickets themselves in the box?—A. They were straight, with all the electors on them, but the votes were given to "Tilden and Hendricks," and "Hayes and Wheeler." The names of the electors and also of the President and Vice-President were on the tickets.

Q. Were there any scratched tickets?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. In the county canvass you included them with the other votes for both sets of electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a return from Beech Branch?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You canvassed that return?—A. Yes, sir; but I can't say as to the number, because it was very small.

Q. Black Creek was very small, too, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Did you examine all the votes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean to swear that you took each one of the four hundred and odd votes and examined each one?—A. If I am not mistaken, we did.

Q. I want to know whether you are mistaken or not?—A. I am stating now to the best of my recollection.

Q. Are you willing to swear that you examined all those votes in the box at Gray's Hill?—A. I state just what I stated just now.

Q. Are you willing to swear positively that you did examine all of them?—A. It is so long ago that I can't remember everything, you know.

Q. Did you examine all those votes for Gray's Hill, and are you willing to swear that you did examine all the votes in the Gray's Hill box as you now recollect it?—A. Yes, sir; as I recollect it we did.

Q. Do you recollect it so certainly that you are now willing to swear that you examined all the votes in that Gray's Hill box?—A. I can't swear to anything that is untrue.

Q. Precisely that. You won't swear to it?—A. Yes, sir; I will swear that we did.

Q. Will you now swear that you examined each and every vote in the Gray's Hill box?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you recollect now that you examined each and every vote?—A. I stated that before. That is how we found the discrepancy.

Q. Well, you do recollect now that you examined each and every vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You recollect the fact now that you examined each one of the votes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes, sir; to my recollection we did.

Q. Why didn't you bring some of those votes up here?—A. Which votes?

Q. The Gray's Hill votes.—A. The votes are in the box.

Q. But the box is in the control of the commissioners, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, in a case of this kind, why didn't you bring some of the votes up here?—A. I was not told to bring them.

Q. How was it with Black Creek; do you know anything about it?—A. I know that Black Creek is one of the precincts in Beaufort County.

Q. Do you know anything about the votes in Black Creek?—A. I don't know what you want to know about them.

Q. Do you recollect about there being any trouble with the votes there?—A. Not as I recollect; only there is a very small number of votes.

Q. You did not examine any of the votes at Black Creek?—A. Yes, sir; we could not help seeing them, they were so very few.

Q. Did you take out the votes at Black Creek and examine them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what?—A. In taking out the poll-list we took them out and you could see them every one.

Q. The poll-list lay on top of the votes, did it not?—A. Yes, sir; we took the poll-list out of the boxes.

Q. I am speaking of this box.—A. It was not necessary to take the poll-list out to get at the vote.

Q. Did you take the votes out at Black Creek and examine them?—A. It was unnecessary.

Q. Then you did not do it?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. Then you cannot tell anything about what the vote showed at Black Creek?—A. O, from the returns I can tell.

Q. Confine yourself to the votes. You did not examine the votes at Black Creek, did you?—A. I won't swear that we did not.

Q. Have you any recollection of examining the votes at Black Creek?—A. I think we did.

Q. What makes you think you did, now, when you did not recollect anything about it a little while ago?—A. Because the votes at Black Creek were very small, and we could not help seeing in taking out the poll-list.

Q. You say there were few there, but did you take them out of the box to examine them?—A. If I am not mistaken we did.

Q. Did you take them out of the box to examine them?—A. I won't swear that I did take them out, and I won't swear that I didn't, as I don't recollect.

Q. Is there anything about Black Creek especially different from any of the others that makes you recollect anything about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. Simply because the votes were very small.

Q. That is all?—A. That is all.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were the same electors found voted for in the box at Gray's Hill which were voted for at all the other precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 20, 1876.

W. H. HURD (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Beaufort County, at Mount Carmel.

Q. Were you one of the officers of election in that county?—A. Yes, sir; I was deputy United States marshal.

Q. Where did you vote on that day?—A. At Calhoun's Mills.

Q. Were you there during the entire day?—A. No, sir; I were run off between two and three o'clock, I think; I didn't have the time.

Q. What do you know of the return of the vote for that precinct at the presidential election on the 7th of November?—A. Well, by some mistake, I reckon, the electoral returns were left out, and Secretary Hayne telegraphed to Abbeville—

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Are you telling what you know?—A. I am telling what I saw.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You saw him telegraph?—A. I saw the telegram, because I had it in my hand. He telegraphed to send the returns down here for Calhoun's Mills precinct. One of the commissioners told me —

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Did you get the managers' returns for Calhoun's Mills?—A. Yes, sir; I was sent as a special messenger down to get the returns.

Q. To whom did you apply to get them?—A. I applied to one of the managers, Jefferson Clay.

Q. Did you receive the managers' returns?—A. About eleven or twelve o'clock he came to church, where I was, and gave me the returns, and told me to go on and take them to Abbeville, as the managers' returns, signed by all three of the managers. He told me to take them on to Abbeville now, as he thought all the people had gone to church, and there had been threats; so I took the returns and jumped on my horse and started to Abbeville. When I got within six miles and a half of Abbeville I looked behind me and saw two men coming. I knew the men and I suspected something, so I commenced loping. They hallooted to stop, but I didn't do it, and they commenced shooting at me, and when they shot at me five times I returned their shots. They fired three shots after that. I quit shooting and looked in front of me, and there were eight or ten other men. I then jumped down off my horse and took to the woods, and ran between a half and a quarter of a mile. I didn't know much about the place, and when I got out I ran upon some houses, and saw some people there. The people ran out after me and shot at me two or three times, and I thought they would kill me, so I ran up to the house where the ladies were, thinking they would not kill me in their presence. They then surrounded me, and kicked me and choked me, and took my pistol and searched me, and took away the returns and some private letters I had, and my little memorandum-book; they took that from me, and they asked me some questions, and then they put me on the same horse that I were on, (they had caught him and brought him down,) and they carried me off through the woods, a near way, until they came to the next house, and then they got a rope and tied me, and had a halter and a rope, so that one man could ride beside me and keep hold of it, and they came to the house of a man named Thomas Brown, and they took supper there. They put me in the kitchen with a man to guard me while they were eating supper. After supper they went on to Harper's Ferry. The next morning we got to the house of Colonel Harper, and they took breakfast there, and had a man to guard me there in the kitchen while they took breakfast. They untied me then and carried me across over into Georgia, to a little town named Ruckersville. When they got me there they said I was a United States deputy marshal that had come over to make arrests of parties from Georgia that had voted in South Carolina on the day of the election. One of the men there came up to me and said that he thought I was not fool enough to come to make arrests in Georgia with five or six men. I told him I was captured and brought there. They went down to the house of a man named Taylor. I had Taylor's name, under the enforcement act, for voting in South Carolina. They turned me over into Taylor's hands, and him and two or three others took me into the woods four or five miles, and when they got down a piece I jumped down and run. They shot at me four or five times. They captured me again in a gully and carried me round there, and that night about ten o'clock they carried me back to Taylor's house where we had left Brown, and he sent down and got ropes and tied me. I staid in a pile of cotton all night. Next morning we started, after breakfast, to Ed. D. Stark's. I had his name, under the enforcement act, for voting at my precinct. They carried me down there about two or three o'clock. When we got within a piece of the house we stopped, and I asked Taylor to ask Stark not to kill me. Directly Stark came and another man with him. This man came up and cocked his pistol and told me to get down. He asked me if I knew him. I told him I did not. They said, "Take him up there," and I thought they were going to kill me, but he said he was a peaceful man and was only going to guard me for the others. I went up there on a log and he guarded me for a while, and directly Stark and two or three others came and gave me something to eat. One of the men, a man named Bradley, wanted to kill me right there, but Stark told him not to do it, because his wife would hear the report of the pistol and she would think something. They cussed me there a while, and about dark Stark and Bradley and a man named Kelley—they had gone back to the house, and they came up to me with a pistol at this time, and he said, "Well, Hurd, it's night now and darkness hides all crimes." I begged them not to kill me, and I said, "I am willing for anything if you just don't kill me." Says he, "O, by God! it's no use; that is what we have been waiting for;" and they asked which I would rather, be hung or be shot. I told him I had never been killed, and I didn't know which, but I hoped they would not kill me at all. I told them I was not ready to die. They asked me if I could get ready in fifteen minutes. I told them I didn't think I could. This man Kelley had his shot-gun, and he told them to let him shoot me, that he would do it, no matter what I said. Stark said my life was in his hands, and, says he, "You know, Hurd, that I hate you as I do the devil; you are just as if you were hanging over hell." Says he, "I would rather kill you than twenty common niggers, because you have some sense, and you would do more harm than twenty common niggers." I told him not to kill me; that if they would not kill me I would do anything they said. Stark and thom went up to the store and left me there with Brown. I began begging Brown to let me loose. He was from South Carolina. He said no, if he let me loose they would say he did it on purpose. I was just fixing to run then, but he didn't know it. He told me they were not going to kill me then, but they were going to carry me to Elverton and put me in jail there until after Tilden was inaugurated. He asked me if I wanted to send my buttons to my wife. I said no, if I get out of that jail I will want my buttons myself; and I told him if they started with me to that jail twelve miles that night I knew they would be certain to kill me, and I would die with my buttons in my shirt. Kolley came back, and he asked if there would be any impropriety in taking me up to the store the back way. He said "No." They showed me eight double-barrel shot-guns there that they had, but Stark said that "the Lord had prevailed" with him, and they would let me off if I would go to Athens, Ga., and stay there the balance of my life, until Tilden was inaugurated, and never come back unless I supported the democratic ticket. I told them not to kill me and I would do what they said. Says he, "Will you come here and wait on me?" I said, "Yes, I would do anything." So they went off and held a consultation, and they came back and said. "Well, Hurd, sit down and write your wife a letter that you are released and all right." They wouldn't let me date it from any place but just "Georgia." I was to say just that I was released and well, and that they had treated me well. Then a company of four men, armed with shot-guns, escorted me down to the ferry, and one old colored man went along to see that they didn't kill me; and I thought they would kill me, so I got into a position so that they could not shoot at me unless they shot him. So they put me across, and Stark told me "good-bye;" and when I got to Athens I must write him the price of cotton that he might know I was there. So they released me on a promise that I was not to come back here and not to have anything more to do with politics.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. It was about twenty miles from that to Washington, Ga., but I got lost, and I walked about thirty-two miles without eating or drinking. I got to Washington a while after day. I slept under the ear-shed, and when the train whistled I got on the train, and when I got to Augusta, I went over from Augusta to Hamburg. I took the train there the next day and went to Aiken; and when I got to Aiken I came from there here. I laid over a day or two in Aiken.

Q. Are you a member of the state senate of this State?—A. Of the house, sir. Well, they took the electoral vote from me and said they was going to deliver it to Colonel Cothron, the chairman of the executive committee of Abbeville County, but I don't know what ever became of it, any more than that I know they took it from me. On that vote there was the same number for each man of the republican electors, 467, and the democratic vote was 247. Votes were even for every man; I believe there was but one blank vote. The total vote was 715.

Q. That was the vote at Calhoun's Mills precinct as shown by the managers' returns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen it since?—A. I have never seen it since.

Q. Were those men white men?—A. They were white men that took me—all white men.

Q. Do you know the politics of any of those white men who took you?—A. I know them all to be democrats. Some of them had on red shirts. I know some of the men.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Can you give their names?—A. The two that rode behind me when they first came up to me, was William Ward and Eli Thornton. The names of the crowd that was up in front of me was Sam Link, Marion Link, Tom Link, Percy Brown, Willie De Bose, Tom Brown, Ed. Mitchell, and William Miur. That was all I knew. There was four or five others that I didn't know.

Q. You are originally from Georgia?—A. Originally from Georgia.

Q. How long have you lived in South Carolina?—A. About five years.

Q. In Abbeville all the time?—A. Yes, sir; in the same place.

Q. But from Georgia originally?—A. Yes, sir; Elbert County there.

Q. That is somewhere near the South Carolina line?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These people that you have named, are they South Carolinians or Georgians?—A. They are all South Carolinians and live in Abbeville County.

Q. How many times were you fired at?—A. I was fired at three times, and I was fired at eight times by the men behind me.

Q. How many times by the men before you?—A. They shot at me twice after I jumped down to run.

Q. Then before they caught you, how often?—A. They only fired twice at me there—twice in front.

Q. That makes ten times?—A. And then five times in Georgia.

Q. That makes fifteen times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they armed with guns?—A. They were armed with pistols.

Q. No guns?—A. Yes, sir; they had one gun.

Q. Did they fire with guns or pistols?—A. With pistols, I think. They shot two shots behind me.

Q. How far were they from you when they fired at you?—A. About twenty-five steps, I reckon.

Q. And you were fired at fifteen times and they did not hit you?—A. No, sir; they didn't hit me any time.

Q. And the moment you were released you went back to Aiken County?—A. Yes, sir; from Augusta.

Q. Right near the place where these men had captured you and threatened to kill you?—A. No, sir; that was in Abbeville County.

Q. Is it not near the same place?—A. No, sir; there is Edgefield County between.

Q. You are a member of the legislature from where?—A. Abbeville.

Q. You came up to Aiken and remained there two days?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. People knew you were there, I suppose?—A. Nobody knew me there.

Q. You did not conceal yourself any way?—A. Yes; I kept sort of hid there, and at Hamburg, too.

Q. You mean you did not go out?—A. I didn't go out much.

Q. Whom did you stay with?—A. A man named Dixon, at Aiken.

Q. Did you know him before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you go there?—A. I knew Hayne, and he told me he thought I could get to stay there.

Q. What Hayne?—A. I believe his name is C. D. Hayne. He used to be senator.

Q. And then you came directly to Columbia?—A. Yes, sir; I came directly to Columbia with the witnesses in the Hamburg case.

Q. You have been here since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have taken no proceedings against those people?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you have made no attempt to have them arrested?—A. No, sir; because I told them if they would spare my life—

Q. Did you ever write a letter about the horse?—A. I wrote a letter to the people that the horse belongs to Mrs. Jones.

Q. To whom did you write a letter?—A. I wrote the letter to my father asking if they had returned the horse and pistol.

Q. Did you ever write a letter here about returning that horse?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir; I am very sure.

Q. Perfectly sure?—A. Yes, sir; I am. I have not wrote a word; but I said something.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

JOHN J. MAHER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. You live in Barnwell, and you have been, until recently, judge of your circuit, I believe?—Answer. The second district.

Q. How long have you been judge of that circuit?—A. Four years.

Q. Your term expired in August last?—A. Yes, sir; the 26th of August.

Q. Since that you have been a practicing lawyer in your county, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you act as legal adviser to the board of county canvassers in November last?—A. Yes, sir; by their invitation. Before the meeting of the board, I think the day after the election, I was requested by Mr. W. T. Blanton to attend and act as legal adviser. I told him I would do so if the board desired it. On the day the board assembled a messenger came to my office and said that the board desired to see me. I went over and I was met on the outside by Mr. Blanton, who said that he had decided to have me present as adviser. I walked into the room and told them that I was informed that they desired me to assist and give them any legal advice that might be required; and they all said that that was their desire. I took the pains to say to them that my advice would be confined to the application and construction of their written instructions, and that, if any difficulty or embarrassment should occur in the construction of those instructions, they might call upon me and I would be there for the purpose of giving them my views.

Q. What was the first question that arose and was referred to you?—A. It was with reference to the electoral vote, which was canvassed first. When the Blackville precinct returns were opened I heard the remark that Timothy Hurley had been left out entirely, that his name was not there; and a Mr. Asher, who represented himself to be a manager of that precinct, happened to be in the room, and he walked up and said that it was a clear mistake; that he had a tally-list; and he took the tally-list from his pocket and exhibited it to the board, and after some discussion between the members of the board, they asked me in reference to correcting the clerical error. I looked at the printed instructions, which required that the ballot-boxes should be delivered to the board sealed, and that the board should canvass upon the managers' statements, and I told them that my view was that they had no right to open ballot-boxes, which were the highest evidence of any clerical error; that the tally-list was not an official paper before them, and that I thought their instructions precluded them from inquiry; that they were bound to take the managers' statement, and that the State board would correct any error in the case. That was the first question, and I think the only other question except as to the manner of arranging the certificate arose when they were canvassing the votes as to the State officers. In that case, at the Graham's precinct the return of the managers showed that the names of Hagood and Conner, who were the democratic candidates respectively for comptroller-general and attorney-general, had been transposed, the votes for Dunn were put down for the attorney-general, and the votes for Conner and Elliott were put down for the comptroller-general. A discussion arose between the members of the board, and the drift of the discussion seemed to be that this must be a mistake, for there was not a single vote given for those gentlemen for the offices for which they were notoriously candidates. There was no paper exhibited in that case at all, and I was not called upon for any expression of opinion for the minute or two that they were discussing the matter. Then Mr. Knopf, the chairman of the board, said, "Well, if we correct this, we must correct Timothy Hurlley too." Said I, "You cannot correct it; this case is like the other, and if it is corrected at all the State board must do it." Mr. Thompson, of Williston, a lawyer, happened to be there, and he prepared, at their own instance, papers in the nature of protests for Hagood and Conner, claiming that it was a clerical error which should have been corrected by the county board, or should be corrected by the State board. Those papers were sealed up and filed.

Q. I need hardly ask you whether you gave any advice that the error in Hurlley's case should be swapped off against the other?—A. O, not at all, sir; nothing of the kind. I was consistent throughout in confining them to their printed instructions, which I thought were very clear. I should have stated, however, that the very first question, the first business after the board organized, (I instructed them how to do that, swore in their clerk, and suggested to him to keep regular minutes,) after that the managers were called in, and delivered their boxes and tally-lists, and when that was completed, Knopf said: "This is all we can do to-day, we will adjourn now until Tuesday." Said I, "Have you looked at the printed instructions in regard to that?" They were submitted and the direction was of the clearest and most peremptory character that they should complete their business within three days from the election. This was the 10th, the election having been on the 7th, and the State board was in session that day. The law originally did direct that the board should meet within three days to receive the votes, and within three days meet to canvass, but the law was changed. The State board was to meet on the 10th of November; that law was not altered, and consequently these inconsistencies had to be reconciled by construction.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Have you the attorney-general's instructions?—A. No, sir; I have not.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You instructed them upon the instructions?—A. I instructed them go on and continue their business according to those instructions, and not adjourn until Tuesday.

Q. And you instructed them that the attorney-general's instructions were such that they were obliged to go on?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you concurred in that construction with the attorney-general?—A. Subsequently. At the time, my impression was that Tuesday was the proper day to meet, and two lawyers came in and urged it upon me that the board should be advised to adjourn and meet Tuesday, but I insisted that the instructions of the attorney-general should be followed.

Q. Your idea of the duty of the board was that when instructions were given by the legal officer of the board they should be followed?—A. Yes, sir; I would not have been willing to have attended in any other capacity than to give advice on their construction of their instructions.

Q. Did you hear anything about adjourning on account of waiting to get in Robbins precinct?—A. I never heard of Robbins precinct at all, except that when the managers came in to deliver their boxes, that box did not come in; it was notorious that the box had been fired into.

Q. From the time the managers assembled until the business was completed, were there any armed men, so far as you could see, about the place of meeting?—A. I saw no armed men that night. I remained from one o'clock until four o'clock next morning, until all the papers were completed. I saw no armed men.

Q. Any trouble or threats?—A. Nothing of the kind, sir. Mr. Knopf, chairman of the board, opened all the returns and the clerk took them down; the other two managers kept their seats. He had the whole direction of everything, and managed the business very quietly. There was no threatening in any appearance that I saw there.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Where did you remain during the preparation of the canvassers' statement?—A. In the room, sir; they sat with closed doors.

Q. How long did you remain?—A. From one o'clock, I think, until about four o'clock next morning. I remained continuously until the canvass was completed.

Q. You did not go Tuesday to see what men there were out there?—A. No, sir; I did not go out of the building. I went into another room.

Q. There might have been armed men outside without your seeing them?—A. Yes, sir; and I have no doubt there were armed men in there that night, because we had been keeping guard in the village for at least a month previous on account of incendiary fires. Persons would come in during the night—it was a bitter cold night and there was a good fire—and they would walk in and warm themselves, and pass out, but I saw no arms.

Q. Do you know how many men there were outside?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know from the number that came in whether there was a large number of them outside?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You know Mr. Knopf?—A. Yes, sir; very well.

Q. State whether he is a correct and reliable man.—A. I have regarded him so.

Q. Truthful?—A. I think so. So far as I know I have regarded Mr. Knopf as a very worthy man.

Q. Can you produce the instructions which you say were issued by the attorney-general?—A. Well, sir, I never took charge of any instructions. That paper, though, that has been submitted here; is the same, I think. That is the paper that was furnished to the precinct managers as well as to the board. I know in the instance of Barnwell it was furnished, because they called upon me.

The paper was put in evidence, as follows:

ELECTION LAW.

SECTION 1. That the general elections in this State shall be held, pursuant to the constitution thereof, on the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November in every second year, and the same shall be conducted at the voting-precincts fixed and designated by law in the various counties, cities, and towns of this State.

SEC. 2. Every male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, not laboring under disabilities named in the constitution, without distinction of race, color, or former condition, who shall have been a resident of the State for one year, and in the county in which he offers to vote for sixty days next preceding any general election, shall be entitled to vote: Provided, That no person while kept in any almshouse or asylum, or of unsound mind, or confined in any public prison, shall be allowed to vote.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying on such election, it shall be the duty of the governor, at least sixty days prior to any such election, to appoint in and for each county three commissioners of election, whose duty it shall be to appoint three managers of election for each election-precinct of the county for which they shall respectively be appointed. The said commissioners of election and said managers of election shall take and subscribe, before any officer authorized to administer oaths, the oath of office prescribed by section 30 of article 2 of the constitution, and the same shall be immediately filed in each instance in the office of the clerk of the county in which said commissioners and managers shall be appointed; and if there be no such clerk duly qualified by law, then in the office of the secretary of state.

SEC. 4. The managers are authorized to appoint a clerk to assist them in whatever duties may be required of them, who shall take the oath of office prescribed by section 30 of article 2 of the constitution before the chairman of the board of managers.

SEC. 5. The commissioners aforesaid, and the managers aforesaid, at their first meetings respectively, shall proceed to organize themselves as a board, by appointing one of their number chairman of the board; and such chairman, in each instance, shall be empowered to administer the necessary oaths.

SEC. 6. The polls shall be open at such voting-places as are designated by law at six o'clock in the forenoon, and close at six o'clock in the afternoon of the day of election, and shall be kept open during these hours without intermission or adjournment, and the managers shall administer to each person offering to vote an oath that he is qualified to vote at this election, according to the constitution of this State, and that he has not voted during this election.

SEC. 7. The State constables, and other peace officers of each county, are required to be present during the whole time that the polls are kept open, and until the election is completed; and they shall prevent all interference with the managers, and see that there is no interruption of good order. If there should be more than one polling-place in any county, the State constable is empowered and directed to make such assignment of his deputies and other peace officers to such polling-places as may in his judgment best subserve the purposes of quiet and order.

SEC. 8. The voting shall be by ballot, which shall contain written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, the names of the persons voted for, and the offices to which such persons are intended to be chosen; and shall be so folded as to conceal the contents; and such ballot shall be deposited in a box to be constructed, kept, and disposed of as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 9. There shall be one general ticket, on which shall be the names of the persons voted for as Representatives in Congress, electors of President and Vice-President, and State, circuit, and county officers. Upon the same ticket, the amendments proposed to the constitution of the State shall also be voted for.

SEC. 10. The commissioners of election shall provide one box for each election precinct. An opening shall be made in the lid of such box, not larger than shall be sufficient for a single ballot to be inserted therein at one time, through which each ballot received shall be inserted by the person voting, and by no other; each box shall be provided with a sufficient lock, and such box shall be publicly opened and inspected to see that it is empty and secure, and then locked just before the opening of the poll, and the keys returned to the managers, and shall not be opened during the election. Each box for such precinct shall be labeled as follows: "Congress," "State," "Circuit," and "County officers."

SEC. 11. Each clerk of the poll shall keep a poll-list, which shall contain one column headed, "Names of voters;" and the name of each elector voting shall be entered by the clerk in such column.

SEC. 12. At the close of the election, the managers and clerk shall immediately proceed, publicly, to open the ballot-box and count the ballots therein, and continue such count, without adjournment or interruption, until the same is completed, and make such statement of the result thereof, and sign the same, as the nature of the election shall require. If, in counting, two or more like ballots shall be found folded together compactly, only one shall be counted, and the others destroyed; but if they bear different names, the same shall be destroyed, and not counted. If more ballots shall be found, on opening the box, than there are names on the poll-list, all the ballots shall be returned to the box and thoroughly mixed together, and one of the managers, or the clerk, without seeing the ballots, draw therefrom, and immediately destroy, as many ballots as there are in excess of the number of names on the poll-list. Within three days thereafter, the chairman of the board of managers, or one of them, to be designated in writing by the board, shall deliver to the commissioners of election the poll-list, the boxes containing the ballots, and a written statement of the result of the election in his precinct.

SEC. 13. The commissioners of election shall meet in some convenient place, at the county-seat, within three days after the close of the election, and shall proceed to organize, and shall form the county board of canvassers.

SEC. 14. They may appoint some competent person as secretary. The chairman shall then proceed to administer the constitutional oath to each member of the board, as canvassers; and shall administer the constitutional oath to the secretary, and the secretary shall administer to the chairman the same oath that he shall have administered to the other members of the board.

SEC. 15. They shall then proceed to canvass the statements of the result of the election made by the several boards of managers, and shall make such statements thereof as the nature of the election shall require.

SEC. 16. They shall make separate statements of the whole number of votes given in such county for Representatives in Congress; and separate statements of all other votes given for other officers; and separate statements of votes given for and against the proposed amendments to the Constitution. Such statements shall contain the names of the persons for whom such votes were given, and the number of votes given for each, which shall be written out in words at full length.

SEC. 17. Duplicate statements shall be made and filed in the office of the clerk of the county; and if there be no such clerk duly qualified according to law, then in the office of the secretary of state.

SEC. 18. The returns of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor shall be sealed up by the managers of election in their respective counties, and also by the several boards of county canvassers, and transmitted by mail to the seat of government, directed to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives at the next ensuing session of the general assembly, and a duplicate of said returns shall be filed with the clerks of the courts of said counties, whose duty it shall be to forward to the secretary of state a certified copy thereof upon being notified that the returns previously forwarded by mail have not been received at his office.

SEC. 19. There shall be prepared by the commissioners three separate lists of each statement, besides the lists to be filed in the office of the county clerk or secretary of state, and each list shall be certified to as correct by the signatures of the commissioners subscribed to such certificate.

SEC. 20. After the final adjournment of the board of county canvassers, and within the time prescribed by law, (to wit, within three days after the close of the election,) the chairman of said board shall forward, addressed to the governor and secretary of state, by a messenger, the returns, poll-list, any protest, and all papers appertaining to the election. The said messenger to be paid his actual expenses upon a certificate to be furnished him by the secretary of state. Said certificate shall be paid out of the funds provided for the payment of commissioners and managers of election.

SEC. 21. All bar-rooms, saloons, and other places for the sale of liquors by retail, shall be closed at six o'clock of the evening preceding the day of such election, and remain closed until six o'clock in the morning of the day thereafter, and during the time aforesaid the sale of all intoxicating liquor is prohibited. Any person duly convicted before a competent court of a violation of this section shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 22. Every person who shall vote at any general election who is not entitled to vote, and every person who shall by force, intimidation, deception, fraud, bribery, or undue influence obtain, procure, or control the vote of any elector to be cast for any candidate or measure other than as intended or desired by such elector, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in jail not less than three months nor more than twelve months, or both, within the discretion of the court.

The joint resolution of March 26, 1875, proposing an amendment to the constitution of the State of South Carolina, is as follows:

That the following amendment to the constitution of the State be submitted to the qualified electors of the State at the next general election, and if a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the general assembly, voting thereon, shall vote in favor of such amendment, and two-thirds of each branch of the next general assembly shall, after such election, and before another, ratify the same amendment, by yeas and nays, it shall be part of the constitution, to wit, that section 5, article X, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The boards of county commissioners of the several counties shall levy an annual tax of not less than two mills on the dollar upon all the taxable property in their respective counties, which levy shall not be increased, unless by special enactment of the general assembly, for the support of public schools in their respective counties; which tax shall be collected at the same time and by the same officers as the other-taxes for the same year, and shall be held in the county treasuries of the respective counties, and paid out exclusively for the support of public schools as provided by law. There shall be assessed on all taxable polls in the State an annual tax of one dollar on each poll, the proceeds of which tax shall be applied solely to educational purposes: Provided, That no person shall ever be deprived of the right of suffrage for the non-payment of said tax. No other poll or capitation tax shall be levied in the State, nor shall the amount assessed on each poll exceed the limit given in this section. The school-tax shall be distributed among the several school-districts of the counties in proportion to the respective number of pupils attending the public schools. No religious sect or sects shall have exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school-funds of the State, nor shall sectarian principles be taught in the public schools."

That the question of adopting this amendment shall be submitted to the electors as follows: Those in favor of the amendment shall deposit a ballot with the following words written or printed thereon: "Constitutional amendment—Yes." Those opposed to said amendment shall cast a ballot with the following words written or printed thereon: "Constitutional amendment—No."

Q. Do you know whether this was in fact prepared by the attorney-general?—A. I do not, sir; I understood it to be, because it was published about the same time that certain opinions of the attorney-general upon the election-laws were published in the official paper here.

Q. This is the paper, at all events, which you had there and upon which you gave your advice?—A. Yes, sir; the paper that they had themselves, furnished by the same authority.

Q. Please examine this and see whether it is a correct transcript of the laws which relate to elections in this State. You may examine it at your leisure and bring it in hereafter.—

A. I will do so, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you adjourn for dinner or supper at all during that business?—A. No, sir; I had my dinner sent to me, and I remember that about dark General Hugood came in and some member of the board, I think Mr. Knopf himself, was complaining that he had had no dinner; and the general, who was county chairman and had possession of some funds, very politely said that he would have some sent.

Q. Was there any hallooing or noisy demonstration about the building?—A. Nothing of the kind. I never knew the village quieter, and never saw any business transacted more quietly. At first, when we all went into the room, the managers, not understanding what was proper and having waited some time for the board, crowded in, and I said to the chairman, "I think you had better have your room cleared, and then let each manager be called in in the order in which you may indicate; it will save you time, you will not have so much trouble, and you can look into the poll-lists and ballot-boxes with greater ease." With the exception of that crowding in, everything was quiet, and there was nothing disorderly in that; it was only a manifestation of their impatience to get rid of the boxes, some of which had been there for three days.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You speak of the patrol or watch; there was nothing that night different from what there had been for two or three weeks previously?—A. No, sir; nothing.

Q. There had been some incendiary fires and they had found it necessary to have a watch?—A. Yes, sir; the people were very much alarmed.

Q. It was a volunteer watch?—A. Yes, sir; a volunteer watch. The oldest citizens would turn out whenever notified. Occasionally one of the guard would carry a gun; we all went armed on such occasions.

Q. How many was the guard?—A. I think six was the usual number. Two would go, at a time and patrol the town. We never assumed to interfere with anybody or ask their business.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. When the room was first opened a crowd came in?—A. Yes, sir; it was crowded with managers.

Q. Those that came in other than officers, and those who came in during the evening, were they white men or colored?—A. I think in every instance they were white men; there were some colored managers that came in.

Q. Were you acquainted with them?—A. Yes, sir; they were citizens of the town.

Q. Democrats?—A. Every one, sir. The truth is, we have no white republicans there save one.

Q. Did they have on red shirts?—A. There was one box came into the village and I think there were three or four men with red shirts who brought that box in. It was one of the first delivered, and I saw nothing of the red shirts afterward. They did not intrude into the room.

Q. What is the significance of the red shirt worn by citizens here?—A. Well, I never saw it, sir, until during this last campaign. When General Hampton came to our county I saw a great many in red shirts and a kind of regalia or uniform. It had no special significance in our county, except as a kind of uniform, and I was a little surprised to see it that day. Not more than a couple of weeks before General Hampton went through and there was an escort for him; the people turned out in large numbers and escorted him through the country. They had various kinds of regalia.

Q. The red shirts were worn by democrats only?—A. Yes, sir; only by them, I think. I never saw the colored people wear them.

Q. Did the colored people have any badge or uniform?—A. Not that I know of, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

JOHNSON HAGOOD recalled and further examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You told us that you were present at the county canvassing in your county?—A. Yes, sir, from 1 o'clock until, I think, between 10 and 11 o'clock, when I was very tired and went home. Things were then going on very quietly.

Q. You were there when the board met?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the board met did you hear from any source any suggestion to adjourn on account of the absence of Robbins's box?—A. No, sir. Indeed, I did not hear what Judge Maher has testified to about Mr. Knopf's suggesting to adjourn to Tuesday. My business was not immediately in connection with the board.

Q. During the time you were there were there any armed men in the room or about the house, so far as you saw?—A. I saw none in the house nor out of it. I was not confined to the room as Judge Maher was. It was a large, rambling building. The court-house had been burned, and it was a private dwelling that was used; and I went into a vacant room, two rooms off, and laid down on a bench there and dozed a while. I saw no armed men there that night.

Q. With the exception of the watch spoken of by Judge Maher, did you see any armed men about the place?—A. There were no armed men that day in Barnwell that I saw.

Q. You were about all day?—A. I was about all the time; I hadn't been home for three days.

Q. Was there any disturbance or noise about or in the building?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. Any excitement or crowding?—A. Not the slightest, beyond the anxiety to have the votes counted. It was an excitement that did not find expression. There was a pretty strong feeling on the part of the democrats to have the votes counted. We knew that we had carried the county, and we wanted the votes counted, and fairly counted. That feeling did not find expression in words, but it did exist. I felt it myself.

Q. You were not present at Robbins's?—A. No, sir; I was at Barnwell village, thirty miles off.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Knopf here in Columbia after the canvass?—A. Yes, sir; I came up with him from Barnwell, and met him here afterwards.

Q. What did he say to you in reference to his returning the votes?—A. We left Blackville on the same train on Sunday night. I think it was Monday afternoon, but it might have been Tuesday morning when we got here. We separated and went to different hotels, and I did not see him until Monday evening or Tuesday morning, I think. I met him near the State-house, accidentally, and perhaps I remarked to him, "You have not gone home yet." Said he, "They have not received my returns—my package." He had been appointed messenger by the board to fetch up the returns to the secretary of state. I asked him, "Why?" Said he, "They want me to put in a supplemental report about the Robbins box." I had heard nothing of the Robbins box, and neither had he, for he told me so, until he got here.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is this competent evidence?

Mr. ABBOTT. We do not claim that it is of itself competent, but simply to control Knopf's testimony on that point.

The WITNESS. I am speaking now of the Swamp box, where the 1,300 votes were put in. Mr. ABBOTT. Confine yourself to the conversation between you and Mr. Knopf.

The WITNESS. We talked for a few minutes. He all the time used the word "they." He mentioned no names. Said he, "They will not receive my box." Said I, "Why?" "Because," said he, "they want me to put in a supplemental report about the Robbins box," meaning the Leslie box, or the Swamp box, which had those 1,300 votes, and of which I had then heard for the first time. He went on to say, "I will not do it. My conscience won't let me do it. I won't sign any paper that the board don't sign, and the board has adjourned." I was in a hurry, and I said so to him, and asked him if he would walk on up this street and talk as we walked. We then had a conversation, walking along in this direction. I said to him, "They have no right to refuse to receive such papers as you are prepared to deliver;" and I asked him to make another application to the secretary of state to receive his papers, and to allow me to be present to see him refuse, and I think I said, "If he refuses, Knopf, I will make him take them through the courts. He has no right to refuse what you offer him." He declined to let me be present, but said I might have witnesses. "Very well," said I, "I will send witnesses; when will it suit you?" Said he, "The witnesses must not go in with me, but you can have them to follow me in to see me do it." And we made the arrangement that I was to have two men, one of whom he named, from Barnwell, John V. Brown. Knopf knew and I know that he was to go down at a certain hour the next day. (By the way, Knopf refused to make the third application until the next day.) Brown was to go down and stand in the State-house door, where we agreed upon, and Knopf was to walk by to let me see him, and this man was to follow Knopf into the secretary of state's office as a stranger, (there is very little discipline in that office, you may have noticed,) and to witness the thing. I asked him to let me have a lawyer there from the town—Mr. Janney, a young gentleman—and he agreed to it; and he agreed to brush by Brown, so that there should be no mistake. I asked him where his papers were, and he said, "At Rose's Hotel." Said I, "You may be chloroformed, and those papers taken from you and destroyed, and the whole county vote thrown out." The county vote had been lost in a previous election by being burned, and that made me think of the suggestion. He said that he was too smart for that, or words to that effect; that the papers were in the safe of the hotel. "Very well," said I; "that is a safe place." As we came up the street we passed by a group of men; I think Mr. Hubbard, the chief constable, was one of them; and Mr. Knopf said, "There, now! they see me walking with you; they see me with you!" He showed trepidation. Said I, "What if they do? Are you not a free man? Can't you walk with whom you please?" I asked him, "Who were they? Was not Hubbard one?" I think he said he didn't know Hubbard. He said Eaton was one. Said I, "Who is Eaton?" Said he, "The man that was United States marshal in Barnwell. He is clerk in the comptroller-general's office here." Said I, "Why don't you want him to see you walking with me?" Said he, "They say I am under your influence; that is why I won't do this thing." Said I, "I must see your receipt when you take it; won't you show it to me?" Said he, "Yes, sir." Said I, "If you don't want to be seen in public with me, and if you wish to see me any more, I am staying in Pollock's, and you can meet me in the back-yard of his place." He acquiesced. I sent the witnesses—Mr. Brown and I think, Mr. Janney—according to our agreement. They followed Knopf in.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That you don't know of your own knowledge?

The WITNESS. Afterwards I was standing in front of Pollock's door, and I saw Knopf coming toward me, and I, perhaps, greeted him and walked back into Pollock's back-yard, and he followed me into the back-yard and said, "I have delivered the papers;" he produced a receipt, and I took my pencil to copy it, but observing that it was the regular printed form, I did not copy it. I then asked him what they had said to him about this matter. We all the time said "they." He mentioned no names and I mentioned none in the conversation. He commenced replying to me and stopped. Said he, "No, I won't say, but I will do what is right; I will tell what is right." He said distinctly, "General, you don't know what they do to me," or "What they say to me," I don't know which; but my impression is that he used the word "do." Said I, "Tell me, what did they do?" "Well," said he, dismissing the subject, "If you put me on the stand, I will tell, but I ain't going to talk about it without." I have twice since tried to get him to tell me.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How long have you known Knopf?—A. He has been a resident of the county where I live a long time. I had not spoken to him and didn't know him save by sight.

Q. You know him to have lived there and you know his reputation as a citizen?—A. Well, sir; I think his reputation has been an insignificant one until recently, he has been appointed county auditor, and, I have heard, has made an excellent one; he is a man of business habits.

Q. Is he regarded as a man of truth?—A. I know nothing of his general reputation.

Q. Do you know anything against his general reputation?—A. No, sir.

Q. There has been no allegation against his character for truth?—A. None at all, sir. If you wish me to speak of the impression he has produced on my mind, I can tell you that.

Q. I don't care for that. Where do you live?—A. Just outside of the limits, Barnwell village.

Q. Where does Knopf live?—A. Ten miles farther, at a place called Blackville.

Q. For what purpose did you come to Columbia?—A. I was chairman of the county democratic committee. I came up in the discharge of the duties of that office. The election was over and Columbia was the central point. I was a candidate on the State ticket for comptroller-general. Those were my special reasons.

Q. For what purpose were you here?—A. To look after the canvass. I had been here off and on ever since the election.

Q. What was to be done in looking after the canvass?—A. Well, sir; nothing more than the interest that a candidate has in seeing the result of the election of which he has been a candidate.

Q. How long did you remain here?—A. I must have been here about ten days. I have been here for the last month, with the exception of two or three visits home of two or three days at a time.

Q. In what were you engaged when here?—A. I was engaged about the democratic State headquarters, frequently in consultation with General Hampton and the executive committee about the election generally in the State, and in particular conferences about the Barnwell County vote. It was being canvassed up here, and I was present, at one time only, before the canvassers. The rule that the State canvassers adopted was that so many should be present on each side, and that when a county was called and the vote being counted, one man, in addition, from that county should be present, and I was kept here on purpose for that. I remember now that my first return home was for the canvass of the Barnwell vote. That was the only time I was present at the State canvass.

Q. On the afternoon and night when the county canvassers canvassed the vote of Barnwell, where did you remain; in the building where the canvass was going on?—A. I went in with Knopf about 1 o'clock. I remember being in company with him. I stood around while the managers were handing in the boxes and the board was being organized. I talked to various persons, but did not speak to one of the board that I remember, except about the supper. I was, in the afternoon, in that and the room beyond that, and late in the afternoon I went into the room beyond that, and dozed there about half an hour, when somebody came and waked me.

Q. How long did you remain in the building?—A. I was there from about one o'clock in the day until between ten and eleven.

Q. Where did you go after that?—A. I went to my home and went to bed. I was very tired. My route home did not carry me through the village.

Q. There was an armed crowd that night in the village?—A. I have not a shadow of a doubt of it. There is a watch there now. It has been kept up since about a month before that.

Q. Do you know whether there were men there uniformed in red shirts?—A. Yes, sir; I know all about that matter that Judge Maher refers to. There was a precinct called Baldock, ten or fifteen miles below Barnwell. When that box came up, four or five men came up with the box. They came as a sort of escort, riding behind the carriage in which the managers were with the box. Those men were not armed; no arms were visible. My reason for noticing it was this, that, as county chairman, I had instructed the democratic party not to carry arms publicly anywhere or under any circumstances, and when I saw these men coming up I was a little alarmed lest it should look badly, and I examined them carefully.

Q. Those men were not officers of election?—A. I don't know whether they were or were not. They rode as an escort.

Q. How many were there?—A. There were four, I think; there may have been five.

Q. From what precinct did they come?—A. Baldock it is called.

Q. Was that a democratic precinct?—A. Yes, sir; they were all democratic except two, I think, in the county. There was a large colored and white vote there.

Q. You say there was a pretty deep excitement that was felt rather than expressed there?—A. I heard no expression in words there, but the excitement, I am confident, existed. I felt it myself. I was anxious to see votes legally and peacefully counted.

Q. Was it not apparent to an observer that that excitement did exist?—A. I cannot tell what other people observed; it was apparent to me. I must say that there was no more excitement apparent to me, and certainly less exhibited, than I have frequently seen whenever there was anything like a contest in that election. I mean in that community.

Q. Were there any colored men there?—A. I don't know, sir. I don't remember. It appears to me that I saw some, but I don't remember.

Q. Were there any republicans there except Knopf?—A. Gennerette was a republican. If there were others I cannot recall them. Gennerette was a negro manager.

Q. Those two were all the republicans you saw there that afternoon or night?—A. I think they must have been all, because there are but nine white men out of 3,100 who voted that ticket, and I know them all, and I don't recall seeing them. There may have been negroes in and out. I don't remember, but I think I saw some negroes. I can count up the white men. I know who they were. Of course ballots were closed, and some may have voted the republican ticket without its being known, but there were only nine reported to me, and I know most of them by sight. I think it likely those were the only republicans there. There were plenty of republican negroes outside of the house, along the streets and elsewhere, and there was one republican white man who lived in the town, but I don't remember to have seen him about the boxes.

Q. Mr. Knopf had no difficulty in having his returns received?—A. When these witnesses went there—but that, you would say, is not testimony—he told me he had no difficulty, and the witnesses told me the same. That was when he went there a third time.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. This watch you speak of is a watch with reference to fire?—A. Yes, sir; it is a watch on which I serve when my turn comes. In the early part of the campaign a house was burned and the democratic headquarters was fired.

Q. How large was this watch?—A. I don't think it exceeded six. Two generally served at a time.

Q. There was nothing unusual about it this night?—A. To my personal knowledge there was not. Other men may have volunteered to go around that night; I cannot say what I don't know. I saw no armed men up to 11 o'clock, when I left.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. There may have been armed men there whom you did not see?—A. Of course, sir; it was a dark night. But not in the house; if they had been in the house I should certainly have seen them. There is one little matter in respect to which I perhaps was not strictly accurate in my first examination. I was asked if I had heard of persons intending to come from Georgia to vote. I replied to that that I had vaguely, and I mentioned one person I had heard it from, a railroad conductor. Then I was asked whether after the election I had heard that any had come. I replied, "No," without any qualification. But, upon reflection, I remember that one person told me that there were some Georgians, as well as I can remember he said about fifteen or twenty, at the Robbins box. I asked him what became of them after the Robbins box was abandoned, and he said they went, or that he supposed they went, and voted at the other box.

JOHN J. MAHER was recalled at his own request and made a correction of his testimony, as follows:

I said that I did not leave the building from 1 o'clock in the day until 4 o'clock next morning; I remember now that General Hagood and myself left and went to a restaurant and had supper. That was after dark, and we both returned to the building. I was absent during that time.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. Within two miles of Robbins.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Two years the 13th of this month.

Q. Are you a native of South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir; I was born and raised in Barnwell County.

Q. Were you present at Robbins precinct when the election commenced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain through the forenoon?—A. Yes, sir; I staid there for some time after 12 o'clock; I don't know exactly the minute.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I went to William Wood's to dinner.

Q. Who was William Wood?—A. He is the supervisor of that place.

Q. Did you go with any one?—A. I went with his brother.

Q. How far is the place from the station?—A. It is between a half and three-quarters of a mile.

Q. When you were going there did you have occasion, for any purpose, to go out of your way at all?—A. No, sir; I went right straight to the house.

Q. Did you go aside to get any water or anything of that sort?—A. Not after I started. Just before I started, Wood came to me and said, "Come down and have some dinner." I told him to hold on a minute and let me go to the well and get some water.

- Q. Where was the well?—A. It was something over one hundred yards from the depot.
- Q. In which direction?—A. South.
- Q. When you were down at that well, did you see anything?—A. I saw some negroes in the woods, sir.
- Q. Where were those negroes that you saw?—A. They were a little southwest from the depot.
- Q. In or out of the woods?—A. They were in the edge of the woods.
- Q. What was between the negroes and station, if anything?—A. Some underbrush and briars.
- Q. How many negroes were there?—A. I could not exactly tell; I didn't pay a great deal of attention to them. There was five or six, or perhaps more; there was that many any way.
- Q. Were they armed?—A. Yes, sir; they had guns. That drew my attention. We all had orders not to have any arms there that day, and I saw them with the guns, which caused me to notice them.
- Q. Did you then go to your dining-place?—A. I then came back to the depot and met this young Mr. Wood, and we started on down to dinner.
- Q. Did you communicate this fact to him?—A. I told him about it. I told him they had orders not to have any arms there that day, and that I saw some negroes in the edge of the woods with guns.
- Q. Did you get to his house before you heard firing?—A. Yes, sir; just cleverly got to the house when we heard it.
- Q. Did you go back again?—A. Yes, sir; we told one of the negroes on the place, named Dexter, to hitch a horse in a little wagon, and we drove back as quick as we could.
- Q. When you got there had the firing stopped?—A. It stopped before we got started.
- Q. Could you tell about how many guns were fired?—A. I think there were between sixteen and seventeen, as near as I could guess. I didn't count them. There may have been more; there was that many any way.
- Q. When you got back to the station whom did you find there?—A. I found very few there. Captain Woods was there, and J. E. Cochrane and Barney Cochrane, and another young man that lives not far from there; I can't recall his name, though I know it as well as I do my own.
- Q. He was a white man?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you see any negroes there?—A. There were two or three negroes.
- Q. Did you know them?—A. No, sir; I know the name of one.
- Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I staid until sundown that night. We didn't know but there might be some more trouble, and there were some men expected to be ambushed on the road, and we didn't know—

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

- Q. Did you know any of those six negroes that you saw in the woods?—A. No, sir; was a good way from them.
- Q. How far were they from the depot?—A. About three hundred yards, as near as I can guess at it.
- Q. What were they doing?—A. They were just standing there; they looked as if they were talking to one another. I paid but little attention to them.
- Q. How do you know they were armed?—A. I saw the guns. That is what drew my attention, and I knew they had orders not to have any arms that day.
- Q. Where were the guns?—A. They had them in their hands; some had them on their shoulders and some were holding them in their hands.
- Q. You say you had orders not to have any arms there?—A. That was the order.
- Q. Who gave that order?—A. I don't know, sir. I was told that by several persons. Almost every person that I spoke to said that. I asked them if they were going to be armed, and they said, "No; nobody was to have arms."
- Q. Did you have arms yourself?—A. O, no, sir.
- Q. Why did you inquire if they were to be armed?—A. I heard the supervisor of our club company say that he didn't want any arms brought there by any person.
- Q. What is your club-company?—A. The "Four-mile Club."
- Q. A democratic club?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many members does it consist of?—A. Something over one hundred; I don't know the exact number.
- Q. The members have arms?—A. Some of them have double-barreled guns, and some have pistols.
- Q. They are all armed, are they?—A. I don't know about that.
- Q. How frequently do they meet?—A. Sometimes they meet every Saturday and sometimes every other Saturday.
- Q. When was it organized?—A. I think it was in August.
- Q. Are there other similar clubs in the neighborhood?—A. O, yes; there are clubs all over.
- Q. Democratic clubs?—A. There are both democratic and radical clubs.

Q. Do you know of any radical clubs being armed?—A. They were all the ones that were armed, so I have been told.

Q. Haven't you just stated that your Four-Mile Club was armed?—A. I said they had double-barreled guns and some of them pistols. I don't know that they all had that or not.

Q. You never were in a republican club, were you?—A. I have been to two republican speeches; that is all.

Q. Republican speeches?—A. Well, the club meeting.

Q. That is the only republican club there is, where there is—that club where there are speeches, so far as you know?—A. So far as I know.

Q. You never attended any other republican clubs or meetings except where they had speeches?—A. No, sir; I only went to two.

Q. You never heard of any others?—A. I heard a good deal about them, but I never paid any attention to them.

Q. Did your Four-Mile Club, the members of it, travel on horseback?—A. Some of them did. I did often, and a good many others.

Q. When they attended the meetings, did they come armed?—A. O, no, sir. They left their arms at home. Sometimes some of them would carry their guns hunting; sometimes there would not be a gun at the meeting, that I saw.

Q. What time did your club meet?—A. It generally met at eleven o'clock, Saturday.

Q. In the day-time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not at night?—A. O, no.

Q. How long would your meetings be?—A. We would generally break up at two o'clock.

Q. Did you have any colored men belonging to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But few colored men, I suppose?—A. There were not a great many. I don't remember how many.

Q. How far did you live from Robbins?—A. Two miles.

Q. Where did you vote on the day of the election?—A. At Robbins.

Q. Before the firing?—A. Yes, sir; I voted before I started to my dinner.

Q. Did you come down to where they were voting after the firing at the school-house?—A. It was not at the school-house; it was at the depot.

Q. The election was held at the depot before the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But did you go down to the school-house after they opened a poll there and commenced voting?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Where did you remain during the day?—A. I remained at Robbins after I came back.

Q. Whom did you see there after you came back?—A. J. E. Cochrane, Barney Cochrane, and this white man that I can't tell his name, and Captain Bill Wood.

Q. What were they doing?—A. They were not doing anything of—

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I staid there until sundown.

Q. Doing nothing at all?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you hear of any poll being opened at the school-house that afternoon?—A. I didn't hear it that day; I have heard of it since.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Are you certain about the time you left the depot to go to your dinner?—A. I told you just now that I was not certain of the minute. It was after twelve o'clock, but I am not certain of the minute. I didn't have the time.

Q. You did not look at any time-piece?—A. No, sir; I have no watch.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

S. B. SPENCER,
CHR. EDMONDSTON,

County Board of Canvassers for the County of Aiken.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE, SOUTH CAROLINA:

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original on file in my office. Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 21st December, 1876.

[SEAL.]

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

NATHAN R. WILLIAMS sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Aiken County.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. Eight years.

Q. In what business are you engaged?—A. For the first two years I was clerk to the county commissioners there. For the last four years I have been in the legislature as a committee clerk.

Q. What office did you hold at the recent presidential election?—A. I was clerk to the commissioners of election in Aiken County.

Q. When did the commissioners meet to count the votes of the county?—A. They met on Friday after the election; but as there was no returns before them, and as there was some difference of opinion in regard to the day of counting the ballots, they adjourned until the following Tuesday, one week after the election.

Q. State whether any returns had come in from precincts before the Friday on which they met to count the vote.—A. Yes, sir. Returns were all in on Wednesday, the 8th of November.

Q. Who took possession of them?—A. Mr. Charles Edmonston, clerk of the court and of the commissioners of election.

Q. Did he produce them at the Friday meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. To what time did the canvassers adjourn at their first Friday meeting?—A. Until the following Tuesday.

Q. At what time did they in fact meet?—A. On Monday morning, at six o'clock.

Q. Who met?—A. Mr. Charles Edmonston and Mr. Samuel B. Spencer.

Q. Were they democrats or republicans?—A. One democrat and one republican.

Q. Who else was present?—A. George Croft, Mr. Jordan, Mr. W. Williams, (democratic candidate for probate judge,) Mr. Oakley, Mr. Hudson, and J. St. Julian Yates.

Q. What were their politics?—A. With the exception of Mr. Spencer, they were democrats.

Q. You were there?—A. I came in afterward; about half past six in the morning.

Q. Where was this meeting?—A. In the clerk of the court's office, at Aiken Court-House.

Q. What was done there?—A. When I arrived they had the returns, or papers purporting to be the returns, on the table, and Croft was calling off, and these other gentlemen keeping the tally—Williams, Yates, Hudson, and Aldrich.

Q. Was Fountain Academy precinct there?—A. No, sir; that came in a few minutes after I did.

Q. Who brought it in?—A. Mr. W. F. Carson.

Q. How were the votes canvassed for presidential electors?—A. The votes were called off from the managers' returns, with the exception of Windsor.

Q. Who called them off?—A. Mr. Croft called off from the managers' returns. The returns for Windsor were not filled out as regards the number of votes cast, and Mr. Croft called off from a piece of paper that he said was a supervisor's return, giving 360 votes to the Tilden electors all the way through, and none to the Hayes electors.

Q. For what precinct was that?—A. Windsor.

Q. For that precinct no republican votes were put down for any of the republican electors?—A. No, sir; the returns were not filled out from that at all. There were at Windsor 360 for Tilden and none for Hayes.

Q. State if that was carried into the county canvass.—A. It was. It was put down on Edmonston's tally and forwarded in the returns that were forwarded to the secretary of State in the county canvassers' return.

Q. What was done about Silverton?—A. There was no return at all called from Silverton.

Q. Was any vote for either the republican or democratic electors included in the county canvassers' return for Silverton precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who signed the county return?—A. Mr. Edmonston and Mr. Spencer.

Q. What part did Spencer take in the canvass?—A. No part at all, sir.

Q. Do you know about the reasons why he signed it?—A. Yes, sir; I know what he told me.

Q. What was said there at the time?—A. He said nothing in the presence of the board. I only know what he told me.

Where is Mr. Spencer now?—A. He lives at Hamburg, in that State.

Q. Where did Croft get the paper from which he gave the county canvassers—the democratic votes from Windsor?—A. He got it out of the Windsor box.

Q. From what sort of a paper?—A. It was a small piece of paper, five or six inches long. I didn't examine it. I saw it when he held it up. It was larger than a ballot.

Q. Did Croft say anything about any republican votes in the precinct?—A. No, sir; nothing at all as regards the electors. The State and county officers were filled out.

Q. Was there any meeting of the county commissioners on the Tuesday to which they had previously adjourned?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say you were clerk for the county canvassers?—A. Yes, sir; clerk for the board of commissioners of election, which was the same. I was secretary of the county canvassers.

Q. Did they permit you to take any part in the canvass of the county?—A. None at all, sir; I had nothing to do with it.

Q. State whether you signed the county canvassers' return.—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Why not?—A. Because I didn't know what it contained. I had nothing to do with it, and I didn't see any of the figures put down, and didn't know what I was signing; so I refused to sign.

Q. Who kept the tally?—A. Mr. Edmonston made out the canvassers' return and Mr. Croft called off; Mr. Jordan and Aldrich, and Jordan and Williams, and Yates kept the tallies.

Q. What is Spencer's first name?—A. Samuel B. Spencer.

Q. Do you know what the vote of Silverton precinct was?—A. No, sir; I don't know what it was.

Q. Do you know what the vote of Windsor was?—A. No, sir; I could not tell. I didn't see any of the returns.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You were clerk of the board, you say, and took no part in the canvass?—A. No, sir.

Q. You examined no figures, no returns?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take any memorandum or any minutes?—A. No, sir; nothing at all. I impressed on my mind.

Q. I am asking if you took memorandum or minutes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then there is no memorandum or minutes from which you can give us any of those figures whatever?—A. No, sir; not while they were canvassing the votes. I can, previous to that.

Q. You heard the declaration made from every precinct, did you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you not there?—A. I was sitting there, but I didn't pay any attention.

Q. You were in the same situation when the others were called out that you were in when Windsor was called out?—A. Yes, sir; but I paid more attention to Windsor, because they said there was no return from there.

Q. But you were in the same situation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is no other vote for presidential electors in the county that you can give us?—A. I might.

Q. I don't want what you might; can you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You took no memorandum of the Windsor vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Silverton; do you recollect anything about that?—A. I didn't hear Silverton called at all.

Q. Do you recollect any other precinct that was absent?—A. Fountain Academy.

Q. No other one?—A. No, sir.

- Q. Was Fountain Academy called?—A. Yes, sir; it was called, but it was absent at the first call.
- Q. It was there before they finished?—A. Yes, sir; before they had up the total it was added in.
- Q. Were there any returns from Windsor for the other officers?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Can you give us the returns for governor?—A. No, sir, I cannot, because I paid no attention to it.
- Q. There is no single vote at any other precinct that you can give except the vote for presidential electors?—A. No, sir; because the peculiarity of it impressed it on my mind more than anything else.
- Q. That is the only one you can give, at any rate?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You were there on Monday morning yourself, at half past six?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. There was some understanding that you were to be there, and that the rest should be there?—A. No, sir; I had never been notified to be there until Monday morning at half past six.
- Q. Why were you there?—A. Well I understood they were going to count the votes. If I could state the situation I could tell.
- Q. Well, it was from some understanding?—A. Not from the commissioners of election; it was from outside parties.
- Q. By whom were you appointed clerk?—A. By the majority of the board.
- Q. At their first meeting?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You were not one of the commissioners?—A. No, sir; only the secretary.
- Q. And you heard, not from the commissioners, but from outside parties, that the votes were to be counted?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you went there at half past six in the morning, and the commissioners came soon after, and the votes were counted?—A. They were there when I came there.
- Q. Edmunston is clerk of the court, is he not?—Yes, sir; I don't know whether he is now.
- Q. He was clerk of the court when you last heard of him?—A. Yes, sir; but I think his successor qualified.

COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, December 21, 1876.

E. A. WEBSTER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Orangeburgh County, in this State.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-seven years.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. I was a commissioner of election for Orangeburgh County; elected by the board chairman of the board.

Q. On what day did you meet to receive the returns?—A. On the Wednesday following Tuesday the day of the election.

Q. What did you do on that day?—A. We received the boxes and returns from the managers of the various precincts, and gave receipts for the same. On the next day, the boxes being all in, we organized as a board of county canvassers, and began to canvass the votes.

Q. Had you received the return for Griffin's precinct?—A. We had received the ballot-boxes and all returns, as we supposed, but on examining them we found that the return for presidential electors was wanting. The blank was there, but had not been filled out.

Q. What did you do as to the presidential electors?—A. We then proceeded to aggregate the statements, the returns from the different precinct managers. I read the returns from the managers, and Mr. Fows, the democratic commissioner, took the figures; also the clerk took the figures at the same time. After going through one precinct we verified, and then came to another. When we came to Zeigler's precinct, the return of the managers gave the vote as cast for Tilden and for Hayes, 123 for Hayes and Wheeler and 90 for Tilden and Hendricks. The board, without any disagreement at all, concurred that this should be counted for the presidential electors without examining the ballots; and we accordingly return them in our aggregate as so many votes for the Tilden electors, and so many votes for the Hayes electors.

Q. Zeigler's was included in the county canvassers' return for the republican and the democratic electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that box how were the tickets in fact? Were they for the electors?—A. I could not state, because we did not examine the ballots at all. The box has not been opened.

Q. Was one uniform printed ballot used all through the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both for the republican and democratic electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there were no tickets for "Hayes and Wheeler" and "Tilden and Hendricks?"—
A. No, sir; they were on the regular ticket with the electors.

Q. Proceed with your statement.—A. In reference to Griffin's precinct, from which there was no return, the question arose with the board of canvassers whether they could make a return for it. We agreed to telegraph the attorney-general of the State, to ascertain if the law would allow us to open the box and recount the ballots, stating that at this precinct the managers had failed to make a return for presidential electors; I telegraphed to him as chairman of the board. He answered that we were authorized by law under such circumstances to open the box and examine the ballots. We then opened the ballot-box from Griffin's poll and counted the ballots, and found the following to be the result in that box: Bowen, 232; Winsmith, 232; Hurley, 232; Johnson, 232; Nash, 232.

Q. How many for the democratic electors?—A. One hundred and thirty-five each.

Q. That is the result from the counting of the ballots?—A. Yes, sir. Then we included that in the return of the county canvassers to the secretary of state.

Q. What was the total aggregate for Bowen in the county?—A. Four thousand four hundred and eighty-six, and for Barker two thousand eight hundred and thirty-five.

Q. And the other electors on each side the same?—A. There were three republican electors that received one less each; Johnson, Nash, and Myers received 4,485 each.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

EUGENE W. FERRIS sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Where do you reside?—A. At Kingstree, Williamsburgh.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. Commissioner of election for that county.

Q. When did you meet to count the votes?—A. On the third day after the election, Friday.

Q. Had you a managers' return before you from Sutton's precinct?—A. We had.

Q. Was it included in the county canvassers' return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the vote for the republican electors?—A. There was no vote for republican electors. The managers sent a return, "Republican, for President," so many; "Democratic," so many; I could not give you the figures on the poll.

Q. We have the figures here as 142 republican and 80 democratic; is that right?—A. That is my belief; I could not swear positively to it.

Q. State whether there were any tickets used in Williamsburgh County except the regular printed ticket for both democratic and republican electors?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. The regular printed republican ticket and the regular printed democratic ticket were used by the voters at Sutton's precinct?—A. Yes, sir; none other used that I am aware of.

Q. State what occurred in the board of canvassers as to that precinct?—A. At the time Sutton's precinct was being canvassed, I think the return of the board of managers was read by Mr. McCutchin, the democratic commissioner of election. After we counted the vote for the governor and county officers, then it was read on the managers' returns, "Republican, for President," so many, and "Democratic," so many; and the question came up whether it should be counted as if the electors had been voted for by name. The democratic commissioner of election found no fault, and the republicans found no fault, the democratic chairman of the county found no fault, nobody about there found any fault, and it was agreed by everybody that they should be included as if they had voted for electors.

Q. It was agreed on all hands that the voters at Sutton's precinct had voted for the regular electors on the republican and democratic tickets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so the vote was included in the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. I suppose they were on the same ticket with the rest of the State ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Lawrence puts in evidence the returns from Sutton's precinct, as follows:

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

T. H. BLOCKER recalled and further examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you live ?—Answer. At Blackville.

Q. You were supervisor of that precinct ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go to the polls ?—A. I went there about a quarter to six.

Q. What did you see when you got there ?—A. When I arrived voting was going on, and I saw white men took every colored man that started to vote at the poll by the arm, and forcibly brought him to the box where I was.

Mr. ABBOTT. That is outside of this branch of the inquiry.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, I think it is.

Q. You were at Millett's precinct on the day of election ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of colored republican voters leaving Millett's precinct polling-place to go to any other place to vote ?—A. I saw the leader apparently of about a dozen or more men, and heard him say to these men, "Come, let's go to Robbins; I can't vote here."

Q. How many men did you see start in the direction of Robbins ?—A. I saw about two dozen start in that direction.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge of others going ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the day of the election ?—A. Yes, sir; some came to me and they took my advice; men who were around the box came to me and asked my advice. I told them I was there as supervisor, and I could give no advice. He told me, the man that was speaking to me, "We are going to Robbins." He appeared to be the leader of about thirty men.

Q. He was a colored man ?—A. Yes, sir; all republican voters.

Q. State the reason colored men went there; was it because of any obstruction or difficulty thrown in the way of their voting by white men ?—A. Yes, sir. If any of these men would start toward the box, a dozen or more white men would run right up to him and carry him to the box and say, "What ticket are you going to vote ?" and he would say the republican ticket—

Mr. ABBOTT. That is going beyond the present stage of the investigation.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. There was a squad of soldiers stationed at that box ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the command of a lieutenant ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were known to be there by everybody ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Was there a United States marshal at that box ?—A. No, sir; there was no marshal there. I went to the lieutenant and asked him if he would keep the peace, and he told me I was unable to act unless the marshal came to him and said that he was powerless to act

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. How do you know there was no marshal there?—A. Because I asked permission to leave.

Q. How many United States troops were there?—A. Only nine and the lieutenant.

Mr. Lawrence put in evidence the following papers :

SAMUEL T. POINIER,

BLACKVILLE, S. C., November 15, 1876.

SIR: Herewith inclosed find my report of intimidation. I endeavored to act in accordance with the instructions sent me. I discharged my duties faithfully as long as I was allowed to do so, which was up to 3 o'clock p. m., 7th instant. Then, to save my life, I were compelled to abandon my post, in consequence of which fact I am unable to make any report of the number of votes polled for electors and Congressman. Not only my life was threatened, but that of most every man that professed republicanism. There were men at my precinct that came from Georgia—thirty-three in number—which was the leading men in intimidating the colored voters, and notwithstanding I tried hard, I could not find out the name of but one of the number mentioned above, which you will find in my report.

Your obedient servant,

S. H. BLOCKER

Mr. SAMUEL T. POINIER,

SAMUEL T. POINIER,
Chief Supervisor of Elections, District of South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

STEPHEN W. SWAILS sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I am forty-four years of age.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I reside at Kingstree, Williamsburgh County.

Q. What office did you hold at the last election?—A. I was commissioner of election and chairman of the board.

Q. Did you canvass the vote at Sutton's precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was included in the county canvassers' return to the secretary of state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many votes there were canvassed at Sutton's precinct?—A. As to electors I have not got the count. There were 142 for Chamberlain and 80 for Hampton.

Q. The vote for the electors was the same?—A. Yes, sir; to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Did you examine the ballot-box for Sutton's precinct to see whether the voters had voted for the regular electors?—A. No, sir. The question came up before the board at the time that the return was opened. The return merely said, "142 republican and 80 democratic." Mr. McCutchin, who was a member, said, "What will we do with this?" I said, "Here is the box; we can go through the box." He says, "It is not necessary; I know and believe that they voted the straight ticket."

Q. Do you know whether the printed ticket was circulated all over the country?—A. Yes, sir. There is another matter in connection with that that has been, for the last ten days, in my possession, and should be there now—the supervisor's return for that precinct, which had the names of all the electors on it. It is now in the hands of the supervisor, and I have sent for it.

Q. You will get it and bring it here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know that in Sutton's precinct the full ticket, with all the names of the republican and democratic electors, was circulated among the voters?—A. Yes, sir. I have also the affidavits of two of the managers at that poll.

Q. They show that the electors were voted for by ballots?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

ROBERT SISSON recalled :

Question. State if you can furnish to the committee now one of the printed republican tickets used at Blackville precinct, Barnwell County.—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Were any of the republican electors scratched at that precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. The full ticket was voted?—A. Yes, sir.

The witness produced the ticket, as follows :

UNION REPUBLICAN TICKET.

[Victory. Cut of an eagle.]

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 21, 1876.

R. R. DESVERNEY (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your residence?—Answer. Abbeville Court-House.

Q. Were you an officer of election on the 7th of November last?—A. I was; one of the commissioners of election.

Q. What canvass did you make of the vote of Abbeville County?—A. We met and organized the day after the election, but did not make any canvass that day because of the returns not having been all in. Thursday we met again and then proceeded with the can-78-16.

Q. Did you examine the box at Calhoun's Mills precinct?—A. We did.

- Q. Did you examine the tickets in the box?—A. We did,
 Q. How many votes were cast at Calhoun's Mills?—A. Seven hundred and fourteen.
 Q. How many of those were given for the republican electors?—A. Four hundred and sixty-seven for all the republican electors; 247 for all the democratic electors.
 Q. And you included that vote in the return which you made to the secretary of state?—
 A. We did. We done that upon the affidavit of the United States supervisor. The managers failed to make a return for electors at all at that time, and we summoned the supervisor and from him got the report and compared it with the canvass that we made of the votes, and they corresponded.
 Adjourned.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 22, 1876.

WILLIAM J. WOOD sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. Thirty-six years.

Q. Where do you live?—A. At Robbins, Barnwell County.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Three years.

Q. Are you a native of South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were supervisor at the last election at Robbins precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you get to the polling-place that morning?—A. I was there about six o'clock.

Q. Whom did you find there?—A. Dr. Bailey was the only manager there when I got there.

Q. Who were the other two managers?—A. The other two managers were Daniel Mixson and Bill Bush.

Q. Were you the democratic supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the other supervisor?—A. Ben. Motte.

Q. When did the other supervisor and the two managers get there?—A. About half past eight o'clock.

Q. How soon did the polls open?—A. About half an hour afterwards, as soon as we could make arrangements to swear each other in.

Q. Was a man named Isaac Allen there at that time, or during the forenoon, with the managers?—A. No, sir; he was not.

Q. Was there any such person sworn in, or acting as a manager during the forenoon, to your knowledge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there during all the forenoon, until the firing commenced?—A. Yes, sir; I was there the whole time.

Q. Who were the persons inside, do you know?—A. Bailey, Bush, Mixson, myself, and Motte were the officers of the election. Dr. Turner was clerk, and there was one other white man present, T. S. Dunbar.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He was helping the clerk to keep the tally.

Q. Were those you have named the only persons present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that continue until the breaking up of the poll?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did the firing begin?—A. About twelve o'clock.

Q. How long did it last?—A. A few minutes.

Q. How many shots were fired?—A. Some ten or a dozen; I never counted them.

Q. Was there anybody hit, to your knowledge?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you do after the firing was over?—A. I left the building where we were taking the votes and walked about over the grounds; there is a little station there, and I went first into one store and then in another, walking about.

Q. Did you ascertain who fired?—A. I did not.

Q. How soon did the people who were there leave after the firing commenced?—A. They left immediately.

Q. During the rest of the afternoon were there any people there about the polling-place?—A. None at all, sir.

Q. Did you hear of any other poll being opened that afternoon?—A. I did not.

Q. When did you first hear of it?—A. I did not hear of it until after the boxes were returned here.

Q. That was a week after?—A. It was over a week; I don't remember the exact time.

Q. How near do you live to the station or original voting-place?—A. A short mile.

Q. That has been your residence for three years, and you have lived there ever since the election?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You live about a mile from there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you away from home during the first week after the election, or did you remain at home all the week?—A. I was going backward and forward from my home to Augusta and to Allendale, below.

Q. You live in the country, on a farm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far from Augusta?—A. Twenty-eight miles the station is. My residence is one mile from the station.

Q. During that week did you remain at home, or were you most of the time at Augusta or Allendale?—A. I don't remember, sir. I frequently go to Augusta. I think I was at home most of the time.

Q. You did not see any of the neighbors round about there to converse with them?—A. I met the neighbors every day or two.

Q. Did you during that week meet and talk with any of the neighbors?—A. I have no precise recollection of that.

Q. Did you meet and talk with any of the colored people of that neighborhood during that week?—A. Very probably I did, sir. We talk about it continually whenever we meet each other.

Q. Do you now remember having met and talked with any colored people during the first week after the election?—A. I do not; I have no recollection of any special conversation.

Q. That polling-precinct of Robbins is a largely republican precinct, is it not?—A. It has voted a majority for the republican party heretofore, but we were hoping to carry it for the opposite party that time. We had been working very hard to do it and had got the promise of a great many of the colored men to vote with us.

Q. You are a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you belong to the democratic rifle-club?—A. I belonged to a democratic club; we never had a rifle-club.

Q. What did you call your club?—A. We called it the Four-Mile Democratic Club.

Q. Did any colored men live on your land?—A. Yes, sir; a good many.

Q. Did you intercede with them to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I did, sir.

Q. How many colored men live on your land?—A. I will have to count them; about seventeen.

Q. How far from Robbins polling-place?—A. Robbins station is on my place, the polling-place.

Q. Did you say or indicate to them in any way that they would not be permitted to remain on your land unless they voted the democratic ticket?—A. I did not tell them if they did not vote the democratic ticket. I told them if they persisted in supporting a corrupt government in South Carolina I should cease to employ them.

Q. What did you mean by a "corrupt government"?—A. Well, supporting the party that was in power here at that time.

Q. That was the republican party?—A. That was known here as the republican party.

Q. You told all of them, did you, substantially that?—A. I don't know that I spoke to all of them. They understood it, however.

Q. Do you know whether Isaac Allen was appointed one of the managers at the adjoining precinct, Cainan's Fair?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. In the morning and during the forenoon was not there quite a large number of colored men there at Robbins?—A. There were a good many there.

Q. Allen might have been there without your observing him?—A. O, yes, sir. I was in the house, in the room where the vote was being taken.

Q. There were occasionally some other colored men in the room where the voting was going on besides the officers you have named?—A. Not a single exception.

Q. Did you exclude them?—A. Yes, sir; we excluded all. There was not another colored man in the room during the morning.

Q. Were white men allowed in?—A. No, sir; only those that I have mentioned; only the officers of the election.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Have you any idea of how the vote was divided when the poll was broken up?—A. My impression is that the vote was about equally divided.

Q. You have no means of knowing with certainty?—A. No, sir; it was so early in the day that we had not made any reckoning.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know whether the white men who had voted in the morning went to other places to vote?—A. I don't know, sir; I can only answer for myself.

Q. Did you?—A. I did not.

---

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 22, 1876.

A. WALLACE BAILEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Barnwell County, near Robbins precinct.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have been living there all my life.

- Q. What is your age?—A. I am about thirty-seven.
- Q. At the last election were you chairman of the managers at the Robbins precinct?—A. I was.
- Q. How early did you get to the polling-place in the morning?—A. About 6 o'clock.
- Q. Who was with you at first?—A. Mr. William Wood was with me—the democratic supervisor.
- Q. When did the other officers of the election arrive?—A. At about 8 o'clock.
- Q. Who were the other managers beside yourself?—A. Daniel Maxson and Bill Bush, two colored men.
- Q. Who was the other supervisor?—A. Motte, a colored man.
- Q. When did you begin the voting?—A. They got there about 8 o'clock, we swore in each other, and got ready to commence voting about 9 o'clock.
- Q. Did you see there at the voting-place a colored man by the name of Isaac Allen?—A. I did not.
- Q. Was any such person in there taking part as an officer or manager in your room with you?—A. No, sir; there was no such person in the room.
- Q. Who were the persons present in the room where you were receiving the votes?—A. Mr. William Wood and myself, Dr. Milton Turner, the clerk, and the other two managers, Maxson and Bush, and a gentleman named Tom Dunbar.
- Q. What was he doing?—A. He was only helping to keep the tally.
- Q. Were there any other persons, up to the time of the firing, assisting in any way?—A. No, sir; I reckon not.
- Q. Did you see Allen there that day?—A. I don't recollect seeing him.
- Q. At all events, he did not take any part in the management of the election?—A. No, sir; he took no part, if he was there.
- Q. About what time did the firing commence?—A. I think it was about 12 o'clock.
- Q. How long did it occupy?—A. It was a very few minutes; perhaps three or four minutes.
- Q. Do you know of your own knowledge of any one being hit or injured?—A. No, sir.
- Q. What did you do after it stopped?—A. I left there.
- Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I suppose half an hour or an hour.
- Q. When you left had the people generally left?—A. Yes, sir; everybody had left, and I thought there was no use in my remaining.
- Q. How near to the voting-place do you live?—A. Within about three miles.
- Q. Did you hear that afternoon of any new poll being opened at a new place?—A. No, sir.
- Q. When did you first hear of the new poll being opened?—A. About a week afterward. That was the first I heard.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

- Q. You say Mr. Dunbar was in the room while the voting was going on?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. He kept the tally?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were there occasionally some other persons who came in during the forenoon besides the officers?—A. No, sir; as a general thing we kept them out.
- Q. As a general thing; but occasionally some would come in?—A. Some would ask permission to come in, but they would come in and go right out.
- Q. They were in, then, occasionally?—A. I don't recollect any one being in there except Mr. Dunbar, in that capacity.
- Q. When persons asked permission to come in was not the permission given?—A. Yes, sir; occasionally there was.
- Q. Were they generally white or colored men?—A. Sometimes colored men would come in.
- Q. And sometimes a white man?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You allowed as many colored men to come into the room as you did white men?—A. Where they wanted to see any one on particular business, and go right out, we did.
- Q. You live three miles from the polling-place?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where were you during the week after the voting?—A. I was at home all the time.
- Q. You didn't see or talk with any of the colored men during that week?—A. Yes, sir; I saw the colored men there who lived there among us.
- Q. Did you talk with any of them?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. About the election?—A. Well, the fact of being fired upon I think I talked to some of them about.
- Q. You live in the country?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How far is it to your nearest neighbor?—A. Well, sir, I live in a pretty thickly settled country. There are four or five houses just around me where I live.
- Q. White or colored men?—A. White men; they employ a great many colored people on their places who live there also.
- Q. How many colored men have you on your place?—A. I have about thirty.
- Q. Were you a member of the Four-mile club?—A. Yes, sir; I am a member of the Four-mile democratic club.
- Q. Did you urge any of the colored men on your place to vote the democratic ticket?—A.

I only asked them to vote with me; I never tried to insist on their voting except as they thought proper. I left them to do and vote as they pleased.

Q. Did you give them to understand that if they continued to vote the radical ticket you would not want them to continue on your land?—A. No, sir; I have never told them that.

Q. Did you give them to understand that in any way?—A. I don't know that I ever did.

Q. None of them?—A. No, sir; I have told them that I would like them to vote with me, but that they were free and had a right to vote as they pleased and to do as they pleased. I have told them that I would like for them to vote for General Hampton for governor, and as for the President, that it did not matter to me who they voted for; that I would like them to vote for Governor Hampton, any way, and if they wanted to vote for Governor Hayes, they could do so, that I preferred their voting with me for Hampton; I did not care how they voted for President.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Are you a practicing physician in that neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you the only practicing physician in that neighborhood?—A. No, sir; there are several physicians in that neighborhood.

Q. You are one of several practicing physicians there?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 23, 1876.

JOHN T. MARTIN sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. I am thirty-six years old.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Barnwell County, in this State, about eight miles from Robbins' station.

Q. Did you vote at Robbins?—A. I voted there.

Q. How soon did you get there in the morning?—A. I got there about half past eight o'clock. I think.

Q. Had the voting commenced when you got there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you remain there until the firing commenced?—A. No, sir; I left when the train came down about eleven o'clock.

Q. Was there any disturbance or trouble there before you left?—A. None at all, sir; there was perfect order when I left.

Q. Do you know a colored man named Isaac Allen?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Who were the persons in the voting-place taking part in the election when you were there?—A. I remained there from half past eight until eleven, and I was about the room in which they were voting during that time.

Q. Were you in the room?—A. No, sir; I was not in it, but about it.

Q. Who were there?—A. Mr. William Wood, B. K. Molte, with the United States supervisors of election, and two colored men, William Bush, Daniel Mixson, and Dr. Bailey were the managers, and Dr. Milton A. Turner was the clerk.

Q. Was Mr. Dunbar?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Dunbar was in the room.

Q. There were no other colored men in the room?—A. None but those.

Q. Was there any trouble or disturbance about the premises?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you vote anywhere else?—A. No, sir; I voted there early in the morning and went home at eleven o'clock, and knew nothing of the disturbance until near night.

Q. When did you first hear of there being another poll?—A. I heard of it—I am not sure whether it was the Sunday following the election, or the second Sunday after.

Q. You had a conversation with this Bill Bush on that Sunday?—A. Yes, he came to my house on that Sunday.

Q. Do you know where Bill Bush lives?—A. Yes, sir; he lived about a mile from my house until some time during the last week, when he moved from that neighborhood, and he has moved his family about eight or ten miles below me.

Q. Is he sick, so far as you know?—A. Not so far as I know. He was not sick a few days ago; that is, I heard from him, though I have not seen him since that Sunday.

Q. Is he said to be in Charleston now?—A. I heard that he was.

Q. At all events, he has left that neighborhood?—A. He has left that neighborhood.

Mr. ABBOTT proposed to prove the declarations of Bush to this witness in regard to the "Swamp box" at Robbins.

Mr. Lawrence objected to the testimony as incompetent.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You do not know of your own knowledge where Bush is, do you?—A. I do not.

Q. You got to Robbins polling-place early in the morning?—A. About half past eight o'clock.

Q. And you voted immediately?—A. Yes, immediately upon my arrival.

H. Mis. 31, pt. 1—12

- Q. The voting was going on when you got there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How many men had voted when you got there?—A. I have no idea; I had no means of ascertaining.
- Q. How many men there?—A. I should judge there were some 150 or more.
- Q. Had the men who were there voted by the time you got there?—A. I have no idea. They were voting when I got there and were voting when I left. As to what proportion had voted I could not say.
- Q. You are sure you voted as early as half past eight?—A. I voted immediately upon my arrival at the voting-place, and I think I got there about half past eight o'clock.
- Q. There were colored men and white men both there?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did they allow, occasionally, persons to go in the room where the voting was going on?—A. I don't know that; I saw no one in that room except those gentlemen that I have mentioned. In fact, I know that I did not see any one.
- Q. The voters were sworn?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. When they came up in considerable numbers, how did they swear them; each man separately or in squads?—A. Each man was sworn separately as far as I saw. I do not think they were sworn in squads at all; I know they were not during my stay there.
- Q. When they come in crowds are they sometimes sworn in squads; is that the usage?—A. I don't know that I ever saw it; not in voting.
- Q. Were there any rifle-clubs in Robbins that you know of?—A. There were none in my vicinity that I know of, sir.
- Q. Were there any armed men that you saw about the voting-place as long as you remained there?—A. I saw none at all.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 22, 1876.

MILTON A. TURNER sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT;

- Question. How old are you?—Answer. I am twenty-seven years old.
- Q. Where do you live?—A. In Barnwell County, South Carolina.
- Q. How near Robbins polling-place?—A. Between six and seven miles.
- Q. Were you present at the last election at Robbins polling-place?—A. I was.
- Q. In what capacity?—A. As clerk.
- Q. When did you arrive there in the morning?—A. About six o'clock.
- Q. Did you come first or was Dr. Bailey there before you?—A. I believe I was there first. I am not certain, but I am under that impression.
- Q. Who came next?—A. I found Captain Wood there when I got there, and I think Dr. Bailey came after me. That was about all. The other managers did not come until some time afterward.
- Q. Who were the other two managers—the colored managers?—A. Bill Bush and Daniel Mixson.
- Q. How soon did the voting commence?—A. It commenced a little while after they got there and swore each other in.
- Q. Who was present in the room with the officers of the election until the time of the firing?—A. There were Captain Wood, Ben Mott, and myself; Daniel Mixson, Dr. Bailey, Bill Bush, and Tom Dunbar.
- Q. What was Tom Dunbar doing?—A. He was there sort of keeping a list of the names of the voters.
- Q. From the time that the polls opened until the firing began were there any other persons in the room with you?—A. None at all.
- Q. Do you know a colored man by the name of Isaac Allen?—A. I do.
- Q. Was he in that room with you?—A. He was not.
- Q. Do you know of his acting as manager that day in any way whatever?—A. I heard that he was manager of another box.
- Q. When did you hear that—soon after the election?—A. I heard that in a day or two after the election.
- Q. Did you see him there about the polls?—A. I did not see him at Robbins at all.
- Q. Where did you first see him that day, if you saw him at all?—A. I never saw him that day at all.
- Q. About what time did the firing commence?—A. About twelve o'clock.
- Q. How long did it continue?—A. Not more than three or four minutes.
- Q. What did you do after the firing ended?—A. I left.
- Q. How long did you remain after the firing ended?—A. Not more than half an hour.
- Q. Did you have a horse?—A. I had.
- Q. Who left with you, if any one?—A. Daniel Mixson, Bill Bush, and Ben Mott left with me.
- Q. Any one besides?—A. Tom Dunbar went a piece with me.
- Q. Did he have a horse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did either Mixson or Bush ride on your horse with you?—A. They both rode on my horse. Daniel Mixson rode first some three or four hundred yards from the box; then he got down and Bill Bush got up and rode about a mile.

Q. You say Mixson rode first with you on the horse, and then Bill Bush got up and rode about a mile?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was done then?—A. I went on and left Bill Bush, Daniel Mixson, and Ben Mott coming on, going in the direction of their home; I left them in the public road.

Q. How far was that from the station?—A. It was about a mile; maybe a little more.

Q. About what time of day was that?—A. Between one and two o'clock.

Q. Was there anything said by Bush, Mixson, and Mott as to where they were going as you left them?—A. Nothing at all, sir; only they said they were going home.

Q. How soon did you see Bush after that?—A. I saw him the next morning after break fast.

Q. How soon did you see Mixson after that?—A. I saw Mixson the next day in the afternoon, after dinner.

Q. Had you a conversation with Bush in reference to what had occurred the day before?—A. I did.

Mr. ABBOTT proposed to show to witness the declarations of Bush, one of the managers of election at Robbins, in reference to the "Swamp box."

Mr. LAWRENCE objected to the testimony as incompetent, and it was not received.

Q. Do you know anything about Bill Bush, or where he is?—A. I do not; only what I have heard. He has moved from where he lived during the election. He lived within three or four hundred yards of me, but he has moved.

Q. When did he move?—A. Some two or three weeks ago.

Q. Did you hear anything about his being ill?—A. I never heard of that until I came here. I saw a negro that was with Bush Saturday and Sunday both.

Mr. LAWRENCE objected to the witness stating what the negro told him.

Q. When did you first hear of the second box being opened?—A. Several days after the election.

Q. You heard nothing of it that day?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. And Bush lived within three or four hundred yards of you?—A. Yes; within three or four hundred yards.

Q. It was three or four days after the election when you heard of the second box?—A. Yes, sir; it was Friday, and the election was on Tuesday.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You got to the polling-place at Robbins about what time?—A. About six o'clock.

Q. What time did the poll open?—A. The poll did not open until about half past eight.

Q. How many men were there at that time when the poll opened?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was there quite a crowd of men?—A. Yes, sir; a good many men.

Q. One hundred?—A. No; there were not one hundred.

Q. Were there colored men and white men mixed up—all sorts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Occasionally during the forenoon were men admitted to go into the room when they requested it?—A. No, sir. I was busy writing, and I saw no one at all in the room, except the gentlemen that I have mentioned.

Q. Was the door kept shut?—A. The door was kept shut.

Q. Where were the ballots received?—A. At a window. They were allowed to come up at a window, and the box was on a table by the window.

Columbia, S. C., December 22, 1876.

J. W. PERRIN sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. You live in Abbeville County, I believe; how long have you lived there?—Answer. I was born and raised there.

Q. You were one of the county canvassers of that county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did your body have a meeting first before the election?—A. About a week or ten days previous to the election we organized.

Q. At that meeting was it proposed to open two polling-places at Abbeville Court-House?—A. It was.

Q. What was done by you?—A. I objected, upon the ground that the statute did not provide for it. Two years previous I was commissioner of the election, when, according to the act of the legislature, the board had a right to establish as many precincts as they saw proper, and designate them; but in 1875 the law was changed, and I objected upon the ground that the statute did not provide for it.

Q. Was this the first election ever held in that county after the statute of 1875?—A. It was.

Q. Was there any action that you know of at that time?—A. The matter was adjourned until the next meeting, which was the Saturday previous to the election.

Q. At the next meeting what was done?—A. At that next meeting they insisted upon opening the precinct, and I entered a protest.

Q. Have you that protest with you?—A. I have not got it with me.

Q. Can you get it here?—A. I find that it cannot be found this morning.

Q. Well, in fact, you did protest?—A. I did protest, and had it entered on the proceedings.

Q. And the polling-place was opened?—A. Yes, sir, the polling-place was opened.

Q. That was polling-place number two?—A. Yes, sir; number two.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. What had the voting-place been called in prior years?—A. Two years before it was designated the A. M. E. school-house. That is the same place that is now called Number Two. I ought to state in that connection that they professed to have a written opinion of the attorney-general.

Q. Did you take any counsel?—A. I did; I got the written opinion of the bar of Abbeville and I read it to the board.

Q. And at the second meeting they insisted on opening the poll?—A. They insisted on opening it, and I read the opinion to them, and they still insisted, but refused to show me the opinion of the attorney-general.

Q. The second polling-place was established?—A. It was.

Q. How far apart were the polls?—A. About three hundred yards; one was in the courthouse and the other on the back street.

Q. There were officers of election at both places?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All duly qualified?—A. I believe so.

Q. No objection was made on the day of election to voting at the second poll?—A. Except that a great many of the voters were cautioned not to vote at that box.

Q. Where did you vote?—A. I voted at Childs' Cross-Roads, the nearest precinct, and where I reside.

Q. You were not at Abbeville number one or two?—A. Yes, sir; I was at both during the day, but very late in the day. I left Childs' Cross-Roads after the voting was pretty well over, at eleven o'clock. I think there were about 25 or 30 votes polled after eleven o'clock. I went by way of Cedar Springs, which was directly on the route to Abbeville.

Q. Who were the officers that directed this poll number two to be opened?—A. The commissioners of election, the majority of them; Tolbert and Desverney were the other two.

Q. You were all three present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you know that it has been usual to open two boxes in several places?—A. The act provides that there shall be two in several counties.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 22, 1876.

J. C. HEMPHILL was recalled and produced the following letters, referred to in his former testimony :

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Columbia, November 15, 1875.

DEAR SIR : I accept, with thanks, your election as an honorary member of the Abbeville Rifle Club, and I remain, yours very truly,

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN,
Governor.

J. C. HEMPHILL, Esq.,
Abbeville, S. C.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Columbia, May 27, 1876.

To the ABBEVILLE RIFLE CLUB,
Abbeville, S. C. :

GENTLEMEN : By direction of his excellency the governor, I have the honor to thank you for your invitation to " Concert Hall " on the evening of yesterday, and to inform you that it arrived too late for acceptance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. R. JONES,
Private Secretary.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. At the time Governor Chamberlain sent that letter of acceptance, had he not to some extent cut loose from the republicans, and was he not acting with the democrats?—A. Well, I never regarded him so, and I was rather leaning toward him at that time. He was avowedly a republican.

Q. Still, was it not generally understood, and to a large extent published in the newspapers, that he was falling over to and co-operating with the democrats in this State?—A. Here is the way my people understood it: I supported him in my paper; we thought he was doing the best for us of any governor we had had.

Q. Was he not supported or sustained to a large extent by the democrats after he had entered upon the discharge of his duties as governor, and as the democrats fell in and supported him didn't the republicans to a large extent become lukewarm in his support, or in opposition to him for a time?—A. Yes, sir; for a time.

Q. Didn't that state of things continue until the democratic State central committee met and took a vote upon the question whether they would adopt him as a candidate?—A. It continued to that extent. He was frequently thought of by a great many democrats in the State until Hampton was nominated.

Q. A few days before Hampton was nominated, didn't the democratic State central committee have a meeting and take a vote whether they should adopt Governor Chamberlain as their candidate?—A. I don't know whether they had such a meeting as that. I don't know that I ever heard of it; I know that he was very popular with them.

Q. Didn't you know it as a matter of common notoriety, if not of your own knowledge?—A. No, I cannot say that I did.

Q. Was it not spoken of?—A. I never heard anything spoken about it by the executive committee. It was generally spoken of that Chamberlain would be the best man.

Q. Was it not regarded as probable among the leading democrats of the State, up to within a few days of the nomination of Hampton, that Chamberlain might be adopted as their candidate by the democrats?—A. That was the opinion.

Q. And at that time was it not expected that the republicans would oppose him and take some other nominee?—A. Yes, sir; that was expected; at least I expected it individually.

Q. When the democrats nominated Hampton, Chamberlain then fell back to the republicans?—A. I don't know that he fell back; I don't think he had ever deserted them.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You were a republican at that time?—A. No, sir; I never was much for any party. I was a kind of independent. My mother is a northern lady, and my father a native of this State, but opposed to slavery. I have been rather exceptional in my political views. I was raised in South Carolina with the idea that slavery was a sin.

Q. You were an independent?—A. Yes, sir; and I supported Chamberlain because I thought he had done the best.

INTIMIDATION AND VIOLENCE.

TESTIMONY IN BEHALF OF THE REPUBLICANS.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

B. G. HUGHES (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you live, and what is your age?—Answer. I live in Barnwell County, at Allendale; I was thirty-eight years of age last October.

Q. Where were you on the day of the presidential election last November?—A. At Allendale, in Barnwell County.

Q. State what you know, if anything, respecting voters being driven away from the polls or denied the right to vote.—A. On the morning of the election I got to the polls between five and six o'clock to act as United States deputy marshal, for which I was commissioned. The democrats had the polls in possession when I got there, captured—between two and three hundred of them. Between nine and ten o'clock, or may be later, I asked them would they not give the republicans a chance to vote on that day. The answer was 'turned to me, "Damn the republicans and you too!" I waited until twelve or one o'clock. I then goes to Captain McLaghlan. He comes to the poll with me. After he came the whites would come to the door that we went in at and locked the door that we went out, and they then would bring in the democrats—bring in men at the side door, and obstruct the way of the colored people voting. I then came out. I found between two and three hundred men going off that had not voted. I said to them, "Men, this will not do! See! come back and vote."

Says they, "They will be here until night and we can't get to vote, and we may be killed on the wayside as we go home." I then goes to Captain McLaghlán again. Captain McLaghlán said to me, says he, "If you call for the Federal troops to come out I will have to turn them out, but (says he) if there is any way to stop the Federal troops from going out let us do it." He came down himself about that time. The white people then entirely backed off from the polls while he was present. As soon as he left they taken possession again.

Q. How soon did he leave?—A. I suppose in about twenty-five or thirty minutes. They then said, "Our object is that none of you vote here unless you vote for Wade Hampton." About that time two or three dozen of them got at me with their pistols pointed on me, some of the parties.

Q. Democrats or republicans?—A. Democrats, white men. I was then surrounded by a gang of colored men and carried over to Captain McLaghlán's room at the hotel. Then the captain said to me, "You stay in here with my boys and you shall not be hurted." In the course of a few hours Dr. Ogilvie and Mr. Youmans, one of the democratic candidates for the legislature, came in and said to Captain McLaghlán that they would take me and see that I would not be hurted that night, that I might be where the votes were counted. Mr. McLaghlán asked me what did I think of it. I told him I was not afraid of Dr. Ogilvie or Mr. Youmans, either one, of hurting me. He asked me would I go along with them. I asked him where to. He said to where they were counting the ballots, about twenty or thirty steps away in another house.

Q. What time was that?—A. That was after night; I suppose about 7 or 8 o'clock at night. I went with the two gentlemen. Dr. Ogilvie soon left the house, and I have not seen him since. The counting went on very well for about two hours. Then some white parties, who was Mr. O'Bryant, a young lawyer, started a row with me, and went on after me, I suppose, for some time. Mr. Youmans said to the captain that I should not be hurted while the ballot was being counted. He would turn me over to the captain next morning alive. He then said to Mr. O'Bryant, says he, "You can't kill him here. If you want to shoot, fight, or cut," says he, "now, God damn you, come down-stairs, and you shall get it out of me." He stood between me and Mr. O'Bryant and would not let him hurt me at that time. He then turned Mr. O'Bryant out of the room where we were counting. Mr. O'Bryant was then taken off to his house with some young men. After daylight next morning I went down-stairs, and was then captured by some democratic parties. The policemen ran up from the town and took me away from them and turned me back to Mr. Youmans's.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of republicans going away from the polls and not voting?—A. There was between two and three hundred, to the best of my knowledge, didn't vote at all.

Q. What was the reason?—A. There were men there what drew their pistols and made threats and said they should not vote, and one thing and another, and kept kicking up a row, drinking, and going all day long, and it seems they were scared away, some of them, and some parties said they would go off rather than be killed on the way home.

Q. State if any threats were made against republicans.—A. They were.

Q. What, if anything, was said by any parties about not renting land to republicans in case they voted the republican ticket?—A. That was a neighborhood chat among them. That has been told to me myself very often; in other words, I know parties who were discharged from off the places on that account.

Q. State if any of the democrats told you that they would discharge republicans from their lands if they did vote the republican ticket.—A. They did, sir.

Q. Did you hear anything of the sort?—A. I did.

Q. What time in the afternoon or evening did those republicans go away from the polls without voting?—A. They began to leave the polls from twelve until late in the afternoon.

Q. How far was it to any other polling-place?—A. I think one was about eight miles, and the other between six and eight, the two highest.

Q. State what numbers of armed men there were there, if any?—A. There was a good many men there armed with pistols on that day.

Q. Republicans or democrats?—A. Democrats—white men.

Q. State how they were divided, the white men and the colored men, generally; who were the democrats and who were the republicans?—A. Well, the white men were the democrats and the colored men were the republicans, of course.

Q. If you know any other fact in relation to this subject, you may state it.—A. There was a boy voted there that looked to be about thirteen or fourteen years old. He was rejected by all parties, even the democratic managers themselves. He was brought in by one of these notorious characters, and he says he be God dammed if he wouldn't vote or he would kill Ben Hughes. I then stepped back and said not another word, and he was made to vote. There came in another man, to our knowledge, and he was rejected, and he was boot-licked out by Dr. Ogilvie. I see that myself.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You got there at six o'clock, before the polls were opened?—A. Yes, sir; between five and six.

Q. You say a band of two or three hundred had captured the polls?—A. About.

Q. You mean that they had got there and that no man could vote unless they were willing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They kept the polls captured how long?—A. Until about twelve or one o'clock.

Q. Then you went to Captain McLaghlin and he came down?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was it that the polls were open so that the republicans could vote?—A. I suppose from that time on until between half past one and two o'clock.

Q. There was some half-hour or so, when the captain came down, that the colored men could vote?—A. No; when the captain came down the polls was open. He opened it at the door that we went in at, and the captain then left, and there was another door that was—

Q. How long did the captain stay there?—A. I suppose twenty or thirty minutes.

Q. While the captain was there the black men could vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he went away?—A. They began the same game then.

Q. They captured the polls again, and there were three or four hundred there. Now, how long after that did they keep the polls captured?—A. Well, they kept it captured about the same way the whole day.

Q. So that there was never really but about twenty minutes or half an hour, while the captain was there, when the colored men could vote?—A. No; they kept it captured that way. After it got late and the men got through voting, up until late in the evening, they still guarded that door.

Q. The polls were closed then, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But when the polls were opened did these two hundred or three hundred democrats keep the polls captured pretty much all day?—A. They would let them in occasionally. They would vote a man about the fourth man.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The republicans?—A. No; the democrats. In other words, they would go out and bring in a colored man from that door and make him vote, and obstruct the way, until the white men themselves says, "You ought not to do this."

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Well, the result was that, except when the captain was there, the polls were captured all day, so that a republican could hardly vote?—A. They worked it in such a way, they delayed the time. In other words, to get to it, in about five hours—somewhere in that length of time—it seems that the democratic party vote about five or six hundred. Well, if the republicans had had the same chance at that poll, they could have voted six hundred, too, which they hadn't.

Q. Tell us only what you saw done.—A. I would not give anything else, sir.

Q. Is it true that from the time you got there until between 12 and 1 o'clock the polls were captured, as you say, by democrats?—A. It seemed to be they had the power of the polls all day. There was so many in the room that nobody could vote at all.

Q. Is it true that from the time the polls were opened until between 12 and 1 o'clock the polls were captured by the democrats, as you have sworn here three times over?—A. Certainly; the democrats were in charge of that.

Q. You used the term "captured." By "captured" do you mean that republicans were refused permission to vote?—A. I mean to answer you correctly. I am on my oath, and I am going to do it correctly.

Q. Now, tell me whether during that time when the democrats had captured the polls the republicans were prevented from voting?—A. There was a good many prevented.

Q. Did any of the republicans vote during that time?—A. They did.

Q. How many, in your judgment?—A. In my judgment, they voted about every fourth man.

Q. During the rest of the day, after the officer went away, were the polls captured and in the hands of the democrats?—A. That is what you just asked me, and that is what I am speaking about. Up to these hours that I spoke about previous to now the republicans did not vote at all; the democrats had it indeed when the republicans went to vote.

Q. Stop. See if you understand me. From 6 o'clock in the morning, when the polls were opened, until between 12 and 1 o'clock, did any republicans vote? Were they permitted to vote at all from the time the polls were opened, at 6 o'clock in the morning, until you went and brought the officer there?—A. None, as I know of.

Q. Then again, in the afternoon, from about one to four?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is what you mean by "capturing the polls"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This O'Bryant—was he drunk?—A. The best part of them was drunk.

Q. You have been living up there in Barnwell ever since, have you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where have you lived?—A. I live everywhere.

Q. Where have you lived?—A. Some time I staid at home; some time I was in Aiken County; some time I was in Richland County, here.

Q. Haven't you made your home in Barnwell since the election, just the same as you made it before the election?—A. No, sir; I could not say that. My family is there.

Q. Haven't you been there a greater part of the time?—A. No, sir; I have not been in Allendale since the election.

Q. Have you not been at and about your home a greater part of the time since the election?—A. I have been a greater part of my time within about thirty-five miles of home.

Q. Haven't you been at and about your home the greater part of the time since the election, as you were before?—A. I have been in the country.

Q. Understand the question. I asked you if, since the election, you have not been at and about your home the greater part of the time, as you were before the election?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you been at home at all?—A. I have.

Q. How large a portion of the time since the election?—A. Well, I go home when I can, and knock around some two or three days.

Q. Two or three days at a time?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. ABBOTT offered in evidence the vote at Allendale at the election on November 7, 1876, as follows: republicans, 451; democrats, 673.

Mr. LAWRENCE objected to the introduction of the evidence at this point. The objection was overruled.

Mr. ABBOTT. By the certified return to the secretary of state, in 1874, the vote in Allendale was: colored, 367; white, 722.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. State the reason why you have not been at home since the election as you were before?—A. The democrats told me that if I staid about there they would kill me.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

PHILIP MCKNIGHT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Thirty-seven.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Allendale, Barnwell County.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Eleven years.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I was at Allendale.

Q. State if you saw any men that day armed with guns and pistols.—A. I seed men with pistols.

Q. How many of them?—A. I never noticed particular how many. I seed I reckon about may be twenty.

Q. State whether you know of any republicans who were at the polls that day leaving without voting.—A. Yes, sir; I was one of the managers; I was in the little room and I didn't come out at all outside; I staid inside of the box all day. That evening, when I came out, there was about, I reckon, one hundred men that was right there; that was after the polls closed at 6 o'clock; there was about one hundred there ready to vote, but they could not vote; the time was out.

Q. Who were they, white or colored men?—A. Colored men. All the white men, they voted first. The democrats, they crowded first and said they would vote first and then give up the poll and let the republicans vote, and the republicans must stand back until the democrats had voted. They got through about 1 o'clock and then the republicans started to vote. It was about 1 o'clock when they got through voting, but they didn't give up the poll when they got through voting.

Q. State whether any obstruction was thrown in the way of the republicans voting?—A. Well, after the democrats got through voting they crowded the way to the poll. It was about twelve foot square, and the democrats were crowdod all round there. There was two colored men in there, managers, and that was all; there was two republican and one democratic manager, with two colored men, was all the colored men that was in there during the day; there was about twenty others in there, democrats, crowdod around.

Q. How was it outside, around the voting-place?—A. Outside it was crowdod, too; I never went outside; I went out once or twice, but came right back; I didn't notice anything outside.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. No republicans, as I understand you, voted up to about 1 o'clock?—A. No; I didn't say none didn't vote.

Q. Do you know whether any republicans voted?—A. Well, I could not tell the ticket. They brought the tickets foldod, but the arrangement was made that the democrats should vote first.

Q. Well, the arrangement was carried out, was it not; the democrats voted up to 1 o'clock?—A. Yes, sir; until they got through.

Q. A very few republicans voted at that time?—A. Very few.

Q. And then in the afternoon the republicans voted somewhat?—A. That was the republican time.

Q. But they didn't vote, you say; they were interferred with by the democrats?—A. Well, they had a heap of questions to ask, "Where do you live?" and so on.

Q. They would crowd the republicans out, too, and prevent their getting in?—A. Well, they were always crowding around the box, the democrats, during the time of the voting.

Q. And they would prevent the republicans from getting up to the box?—A. Well, they asked questions, which consumed the time; that was all.

Q. How was it about preventing them, crowding and telling the republicans they shouldn't come in to vote?—A. After 1 o'clock?

Q. Yes; after 1 o'clock.—A. That must be outside. I was inside. As they came in they came in a little narrow lane, and the box was back in the room.

Q. But didn't the white men get in and shoulder them and prevent their coming up?—A. They stood in the way.

Q. Then they put a great many questions?—A. Yes; a great many questions.

Q. And made each one swear separately?—A. Yes; they had to swear. They had a book that they called a registry-book, and if they could find their name there of course they would let them vote.

Q. And then the voters had to swear, hadn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the democrats questioned the republicans; put a great many questions to them, didn't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, were they gone at 1 o'clock? It took a great while for a single republican to vote?—A. It took a great while. The supervisor would swear every man, of each party, as they voted.

Q. And then questions would be asked by the democrats, so that it took a great while for a republican to vote?—A. The supervisor asked questions of both parties.

Q. Well, it would take a great while for a republican to vote, would it not? The democrats would ask questions, and it would take a great deal of time for each republican to vote?—A. Yes, sir; a great deal of time consumed there.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

L. W. MIMMS (colored) recalled.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Rosemary, Barnwell County.

Q. At what precinct?—A. Cainan's Fair precinct.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At Robbins precinct.

Q. State whether you saw any armed men there that day.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they?—A. About 12 o'clock in the day all the white men at that precinct, with the exception of very few, was armed.

Q. Did you see any white men armed away from the polls or near to the voting-place?—A. I only saw one man, about one hundred yards away from there; one of the men that was supposed to be thought that shot into the box. I saw him with a gun presented toward the house; only one.

Q. Where was he standing?—A. Between seventy-five and one hundred yards from the depot.

Q. What sort of a place was it?—A. Bushes; only he was out in the edge.

Q. Were you at the school-house where the voting was done in the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir. I was the United States deputy marshal.

Q. Who were the managers at the election at the school-house?—A. D. K. Motto, W. I. Allen, and William M. Bush.

Q. State whether they were there all the time that the voting was going on at the school-house?—A. Yes, sir; they were there.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made by democrats owning land against colored men living on their lands in case they voted the republican ticket?

The CHAIRMAN. State what you know, not what others told you.

A. They made threats in my presence that in case the colored men voted the republican ticket, they would turn them off.

Q. State if you know of any being turned off.—A. Yes, sir; there is a man by the name of Henry Wright that was turned off the place of E. W. Peacock and J. A. Peacock and N. W. Peacock, three brothers, and plenty others that I know of.

Q. Did you hear that threat?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it, and I heard Mr. W. H. Duncan tell his hands that they could hunt their homes: that they couldn't stay there any longer.

Q. While the voting was going on at Robbins station, in the forenoon, state what threats, if any, you heard made by democrats against republicans, in case they voted the republican ticket.—A. I heard a Mr. Wood tell a crowd of colored men that if they voted the republican ticket, they would turn them off, and I heard him tell a colored man that if they didn't vote with them, they would make them vote with them.

Q. State whether you know anything of any interruption or interference with republican meetings before the election.—A. Yes, sir. I was not allowed to stay home ever since the 14th of last September until after the election, because I wouldn't agree to take part with the democrats. They went to my house and destroyed my books and other things. A crowd of thirty-five men rode there and asked for me, including E. W. and N. W. Peacock and H. H. McGoey. The rest of them I don't know. My father only knew them. They swore they intended to kill me.

Q. Did they state why?—A. Yes, sir; because they said I was a leading republican, and there was only one way for me to save myself, and that was to come over and bring over thirty-five republicans to the democratic party, and then they would save my life.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. They told you that, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you attended any republican meetings prior to that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any disturbance at any of the republican meetings where you attended?—A. No disturbance at any of the republican meetings until then.

Q. State whether there was any afterward.—A. There was no disturbance at any of the republican meetings, only the Robbins box that I attended. I was not allowed to attend any republican meetings or democratic, either.

Q. After what time were you not allowed to attend republican meetings?—A. After the 14th of September until after the election, for fear of being assassinated. They sent me word that they intended to guard the roads for me.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. There were republican meetings holden in your county?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. And holden down to the time of the election?—A. Yes, sir; there was three more after the 14th of last September that I attended.

Q. I thought you said just now you did not attend any after that?—A. I said I did not attend only those three up to the election.

Q. You did attend three then after the 14th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there other republican meetings in the county?—A. Yes, sir; but not where I live.

Q. But in the other parts of the county there were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first see arms at the Robbins box?—A. About twelve o'clock in the day.

Q. There were no armed men until the firing commenced?—A. No, sir.

Q. And then they armed themselves?—A. Yes, sir; they had the arms in a house about twenty steps from the depot.

Q. How many armed men did you see?—A. Not less than forty nor more than fifty-five.

Q. How long did you remain?—A. About ten minutes.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I went down to Millett's station.

Q. That is about nine miles off, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did it take you to go down?—A. I run the horse every step of the way.

Q. You ran your horse nine miles?—A. Yes, sir; I never stopped.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. I don't suppose I was over fifteen minutes.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. About an hour and a half.

Q. How long did it take you to go back?—A. I didn't go back quite so fast; I suppose I went back in half an hour.

Q. That was about eighteen miles in three-quarters of an hour; how was your horse when you got back?—A. He was pretty tired when I got back there.

Q. You were pretty tired, too, weren't you?—A. Yes, sir; I was that.

Q. You left about half past twelve to one o'clock?—A. I left directly after twelve; I won't say it was half an hour, not over ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. You staid there an hour and a half and it took you about half an hour to come back—two and a quarter hours; then where did you go?—A. I came back to Robbins.

Q. What did you find at Robbins when you came back?—A. I found no one there at all.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. Well, sir, I didn't remain there a minute; I didn't stop there at all.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. I went between a half and three-quarters of a mile off, where there was polling going on.

Q. You didn't see anybody at Robbins station with whom you talked?—A. No, sir; right this side of Robbins I met one man, and he told me they was at the old school-house voting.

Q. They had opened the poll, I suppose, when you got there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Motte was not a manager?—A. No, sir; he was supervisor.

Q. There were only two managers then, Allen and Bush?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored republicans did you see at the depot that forenoon?—A. I could not say exactly.

Q. You say there were only about forty white men, or not more than fifty-five?—A. That I know by the votes that were polled.

Q. Now, tell us in the same way how many colored men there were?—A. Not more than from five hundred to seven hundred.

Q. Isn't that setting it a little high?—A. No, sir. If anything, I am beneath it.

Q. You would not put it under 500?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any of them vote?—A. A good many of them voted.

Q. Well, black men voted freely there, didn't they?—A. Not until after ten o'clock; after that they voted pretty freely.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. How were the voters sworn at the Robbins voting-place in the afternoon?—A. Well, those that were sworn under my observation, if I am not mistaken, there were some seven or ten sworn at a time.

Q. A batch or group of men brought up and the oath administered to them all at once?—A. Yes sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

GEORGE A. OSBORNE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Thirty-two or thirty-three.

Q. Where is your residence?—A. Williston, Barnwell County. I am a merchant.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. About six years.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of any intimidation at the last presidential election, or preceding it?—A. Well, sir, if you wish to know about the general intimidation, I can tell you by starting back previous to the Ellenton riot.

The CHAIRMAN. Confine yourself to what you personally know.

The WITNESS. That is what I propose to do. As county chairman of the republican party, I called a large meeting sometime previous to the late Ellenton riot. Governor Chamberlain and other republicans came down to that meeting to speak; the meeting was at Midway; I presided over the meeting as chairman. As soon as the meeting was organized, about 800, I suppose, mounted white men rode into town and came up to the meeting and demanded a division of time. I told them that the meeting was called by the republicans of the county for the purpose of hearing republican speakers, and that as no request had been made of me by their committee, that I could not allow a division of time. They insisted upon it, and I saw that if I refused, there would be some trouble, and I thought the best to do was to put it to the vote of the republicans. So I stated to the republicans that the democrats wished a division of time, and put it to the vote, and they thought as I did, that it was best to allow them a division of time, and did so. Well, they spoke turn and turn during the day, republicans and democrats. On one occasion Mr. Hoge, a member of Congress from this district, was speaking; some remarks passed between him and one of the democratic speakers, and I saw a person, Sigmund Liedman, pull out a pistol; and about that time twenty-five or thirty more white men pulled out pistols. I thought it was a pretty hard place, or would be in a second or two, and I got down off the stand, but some gentleman controlled them, and he put his pistol up. But it would have taken very little—

Q. State what you saw.—A. Well, this is from observation. That was about the first of the intimidation that I saw through the county. After that the Ellenton riot took place, and I suppose about 150 of the leading republicans, in different portions of the county, came into Blackville. I also had to go there myself, and put myself under the protection of Captain McLaglan, with these other leading republicans from the different precincts. We remained there under his protection for I suppose a week, off and on.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. That was during the Ellenton riot?—A. Yes, sir. I saw armed bodies of men riding through the county at all times of the day. On several occasions in the town of Blackville I was accosted and insulted, but that had become almost a common thing.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. By white men; democrats?—A. Yes, sir; they claimed to be. The morning I left my residence I was coming down town to the village, (I live in the suburbs of the village;) that was the first I knew of the Ellenton riot. I was coming down the morning after the Robinson Bridge affair, and I saw about fifty mounted men in their shirt-sleeves, with double-barreled shot-guns and rifles, in front of the store. I walked into the store to protect myself; I thought the crowd looked somewhat angry. Several of them came into the store and remarked that they were going to clean out the damned negroes that morning. I got around behind the counter for fear some of them might pitch into me; and I heard some one in the crowd remark, (I don't know who he was,) "There is that damned son of a bitch, Osborne; best commence on him first."

Q. These were white men?—A. Yes, sir; men that I know and who had been very friendly to me before this campaign, or on very intimate terms, but they have drawn the line so sharply that they were pretty rough customers.

Q. They were democrats?—A. Yes, sir. I staid in the store until they left, and then went immediately back home and got some clothes and left the town. I went down to Blackwell and went under the protection of Captain McLaughlin of the United States Army. When I got there, there was a large number of republican leaders that kept coming in for days, from Allendale, Millett's, Robblus, Cainan's Fair, Red Oak, and several of the precincts; in fact they staid there off and on until the election.

Q. For what purpose did they come there?—A. They were run off from their homes by these armed bodies of men.

By Mr. ANBOTT:

Q. That is only what you have heard from them?—A. That is all; I never saw any of it.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. For what purpose did they come there?—A. For protection. I saw these men passing through the town two or three days; it was at least three days before they got back home. They were all very angry and cursing and swearing in all this election-campaign. We usually open the campaign about six weeks to two months before the election; this time I was not able to get the convention together earlier than a month previous to the election, on account of the general intimidation throughout the county. There were several portions of the county, such as Robbins and down there, that could not get represented at all in the county convention. We could not get the men to hold meetings there.

Q. Who are the principal land-owners of the county?—A. The white men own the greater portion of it, but there are some very wealthy colored men.

Q. State if you know anything of threats made by democrats owning lands against tenants on their lands in case they should vote the republican ticket.—A. O, that has been a common remark all through the county. I have heard it time and again in my presence, that if the colored men did not vote with them this time—

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was it said to the colored men?—A. They were told in my presence. I have had them tell colored men right in my presence, using profane language, that if they did not vote with them this time, damned if they should stay on their places. That was v

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. At Blackville.

Q. State any other facts that you know.—A. Well, I saw no violence at all myself, because I did not and could not go out in the county. I had to stay under the protection of the United States troops; my life had been threatened time and again.

Q. How long did you remain under the protection of the troops?—A. I was off and on there until the day of the election, until they were taken away. On the day of the election about eleven o'clock I left Blackville and went down to Midway on the cars, under the protection of the United States marshal. I had to go down there and call upon an officer to clear the box; it was so crowded that I didn't think the voters could get through. The white men had crowded into the box, and a great many colored men were complaining of not having a chance to vote, and I asked the officer to go there and clear the polls for them; and he did so.

Q. State how the election had been managed up to the time that the officer got there.—A. Well, there was a great many complaints of repeating, &c., on the part of the republicans. They complained that the democrats were repeating there, and strangers and men that they thought didn't have a right to vote; that is somewhat general, however, at all elections. There was no violence, that I know of.

Q. State whether republicans had the opportunity to go up and vote as freely as democrats.—A. No, sir; I have just said that the poll was so crowded that the black people, (I don't know whether republicans or democrats,) were complaining of not having a chance to vote, and I went down to an officer and asked him to clear the polls, that those colored people could have a chance; and he did so, and they voted somewhat more freely than they had done.

Q. If you know any other fact which is material, you may state it.—A. I don't believe there is anything else.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You were chairman of the republican county committee of Barnwell County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say that you opened the canvass in that county at Midway, in September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a large meeting?—A. About 800 on each side.

Q. In this affair that you say occurred between Judge Hoge and some man in the crowd, when a man drew a pistol, and you say others drew pistols, was any one hurt?—A. No, sir; I stated that.

Q. Did it result in any riot?—A. No, sir; the leaders on the democratic side stopped it.

Q. And the meeting was quietly and peaceably held?—A. Well, I suppose we would call it quiet down here.

Q. I understood you to say that you saw no armed men traveling through the country until after the time of the Ellenton riots?—A. None with arms exposed.

Q. Well, no armed men; there may have been men with pistols. It is very common in this country, is it not, for men to carry pistols, both democrats and republicans?—A. Yes, sir; it has been for the last year or two.

Q. Did you know of the Ellenton riot at the time it broke out?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take part in any way in attempting to suppress that riot?—A. No, sir; I had been here to the State convention, and had just got home.

Q. Do you remember the date of the Ellenton riots?—A. It was in October, I think.

Q. These men that stopped in front of your store were a party of men who were endeavoring to suppress the Ellenton riots, were they not?—A. That is what I understood.

Q. The only body of armed men that you saw in the county was during this period of the Ellenton riots, and it was at that time that you became alarmed for your own safety?—A. Well, no; I cannot say that.

Q. You had been at home attending to your duties until this body of armed men stopped in front of your store?—A. Yes, sir; but my life had been threatened long before that.

Q. It was subsequent to the Ellenton riots that these bodies of negroes gathered into Blackville, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a military force at Blackville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they came within that region for protection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to the time of the Ellenton riots, had you any disturbance at any of your campaign meetings that you know of?—A. No, sir; none that we would call disturbances.

Q. Then, you did open your campaign in September, did you not, in Barnwell County?—A. Yes, sir; that Midway meeting was the opening of the campaign.

Q. How long was that prior to the election?—A. About two months.

Q. You say that at Midway the white men crowded about the box in the morning, upon both sides. Under your system of voting, has it not been the custom for one side or the other to get to the polls and vote first, if they could get there first in the morning?—A. It has been the custom somewhat, but in any election previous to this the crowding has never been—

Q. Don't you know that prior to this election it has generally been the custom of the colored people to get to the polls early in the morning and take possession, where they were in the majority?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know that to be a fact?—A. No, sir; I know this much: that the polls in the counties, at all the elections I have been to, the colored men never could keep a white man from voting.

Q. Where have you attended the polls?—A. At Williston, Blackville, and Midway.

Q. Don't you know that it is a part of the policy under this system for one side or the other to get their voters out as early in the morning as possible, and get their votes in first, for fear that from the custom you have of making voters swear to their right to vote there will not be time enough for all to vote?—A. Well, sir; I don't know that it has been the system. We always try to get the voters out as early as possible.

Q. And if you succeed in getting a very large number of voters there first under your system, and with the manner in which they come from one township to another to vote, it is altogether likely that some of the other side would be kept from voting in the evening, is it not?—A. It is very seldom that any of the whites are kept from voting.

Q. Well it is just as likely, is it not?—A. No, sir; a white man can always crowd himself in and scare off forty or fifty colored men, and get a chance to vote.

Q. Do you mean to say that one white man would scare off forty or fifty colored men?—A. Well, I don't mean to say that, but one determined white man could crowd his way in, no matter how thick they were, and get a chance to vote.

Q. Well, a determined colored man could do the same thing, could he not?—A. No, I don't think he could.

Q. You took a pretty active part in this campaign, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many speeches did you make?—A. I only made three public speeches.

Q. Where did you make these?—A. I made one at Blackville, one at Allendale, and one at Robbins.

Q. When did you make those speeches?—A. In the latter part of October, two weeks previous to the election.

Q. Were you attended by any armed guard from one of these places to another?—A. Yes, sir; we carried two or three United States marshals along with us.

Q. Not United States soldiers?—A. No, sir. We went to where soldiers were, though.

Q. Were those meetings disturbed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Peaceable meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said some very bitter things, did you not?—A. No, sir; I always, made it a point not to make a bitter speech; I never approved of that.

Q. Did you ever give any advice to the negroes to assert themselves?—No, sir,

Q. Didn't you say to them in your speech that they had the power now, and they must do it, if it took the torch or anything else?—A. No, sir; I never used or approved of any such language.

Q. If you have not used such language, have you not used other words equivalent?—A. No, sir; I was always opposed to incendiary speeches.

Q. You say that you did not use that or any other language calculated to rouse the negroes to acts of violence?—A. I do say so, because I always disapproved of it.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Why were those meetings held where there were United States troops?—A. For protection; because we could not hold them anywhere else.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. There were no United States troops at Robbins?—A. No, sir; but I will state the way that we came to hold those meetings. If those meetings had been held simply for the interest of the local ticket, I don't know that we should have been allowed to speak. They were called in the interests of the national ticket. It was so stated in the call, and when I opened the meeting I stated that this meeting was called in the interests of Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. At Robbins there were no soldiers?—A. No, sir; there were very few there that day for this reason.

Q. There was no disturbance?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you had a quiet, peaceable meeting?—A. Yes, sir; because on that day General Hampton had a meeting at Allendale, and we took the back track on him.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Are you a native of South Carolina?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

W. I. ALLEN recalled and further examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. When you were examined before you stated that each man was sworn at the Robbins voting-place in the afternoon?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state how they were sworn?—A. What number you mean?

Q. Yes; just how the swearing was done?—A. Do you mean how many were sworn in, or the words?

Q. Not the words, but how they were sworn?—A. Sometimes they were sworn in one at a time when we first started to swear them in; that continued, I suppose, for about half an hour. After that we saw we was getting on too slow, and we started then to swear them in about seven to ten and twelve in squads.

Q. What time did you leave the voting-place?—A. I suppose it must have been about nine o'clock at night when I left there.

Q. Who left with you?—A. Myself and Bush left at the same time.

Q. Where did you get your supper?—A. At home.

Q. Who went to your house before you got there, if anybody?—A. Mr. Motte, the supervisor. He got there a little before I did.

Q. He left the voting-place before you did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated before here that you had a candle or light there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the fact?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. When you were swearing them there I suppose you would wait until you got from seven to twelve ready, getting their names down and getting them ready to be sworn?—A. They would have all gone out at a time.

Q. They would all have to give their names separately?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you would take their names down, and when you got them down you would administer the oath to the whole number?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who administered the oath?—A. William Bush.

Q. Do you know what the oath was?—A. I cannot tell, sir.

Q. Nobody else administered the oath but William Bush?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In what part of the county do you live?—A. In Barwell County, within five miles of Robbins Station.

Q. Do you know anything of the strikes of the laborers engaged in cultivating the rice-tracts?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

W. H. HURD (colored) recalled and further examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Twenty-seven.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. At Calhoun's Mills, in Abbeville County.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of intimidation toward republican voters on the day of the election?—A. Well, in the morning, about six o'clock, after we had got to the polls, about 140 went to the polls at the same time, (because we was afeard to go alone, for fear that we would be prevented from going; there was men riding all night, shouting and hallooing, and shooting off their pistols)—that morning, about six o'clock, about the time the poll opened, there came up a crowd of about eighteen men from Saint Charlotte's precinct. They wore armed with carbines, strapped to their backs. They rode round three times, and said, "We'll see the damn radicals that vote here to-day!"

Q. Were they white men?—A. They were white men. Part of them had on red shirts.

Q. Democrats?—A. Yes, sir; they were democrats. They dismounted then and stood for a while by the fire; then they went up and hitched their horses, and stacked their guns by the side of the fence about fifty yards from the polls. They then came back and surrounded the polls so that it was impossible for any one to get to them. I asked them to go away. They said they would not do it, and asked me what authority had I there, and one of them said, "O, he is U. S." Said they, "We'll show them we don't give a damn for U. S. here to-day." I asked them to give way, but they would not pay any attention. I then started for Lieutenant Barnhart. I met him and asked him to come up and make these people give way so that the people could vote. He came up and spoke to them and they gave back about three feet, or maybe more, so that the people could vote. These fellows from Saint Charlotte's Township voted, and while they were voting some Georgians voted with them. Some of them I knew and some I didn't know by name. They would vote there six men at a time, and every time some of these South Carolinians would vote two or three Georgians would mix in and vote with them. Some of these Georgians I would tell that they ought not to vote there, as they lived in Georgia. They would say, "O, we live up here on the river." I would object, but the manager would say if they would take the oath let them vote. I would say, "Well, I know this man ever since he was a boy; don't let him vote." But he said it is his own responsibility if he votes. I would tell him that he knew he could vote there and get over in Georgia and never be bothered. They would detail one man to stand right where they came in at and another man where they would go out at, and another man right over where they could see the box. Then these men would say to them, "Are you going to vote that radical ticket? If you do I will tell him, (naming his employer,) and we'll see whose land you work next year." And if he worked on his land he would say, "You go home and get off my land before I get there;" or sometimes he would say to him, "Did you vote that damn radical ticket?" or, "I saw you vote that damn radical ticket." All that didn't have much effect on them. The colored people voted pretty well, because I told them that I didn't think this would have any effect, and that I would try to have them protected, and they voted along pretty well except some two or three was afraid that they would be turned off, and some did vote and was turned off afterward, but about between one and two o'clock up came R. B. Cade. He had gone on the previous day to Magnolia precinct.

Q. Who was he?—A. A white democrat. He had a guard of about thirty with him. They came up and B. C. Walls went out to meet them and joined in with them, and they came right on up to the poll hallooing and cursing, "Where's Henry Hurd?" or, "Where's that United States marshal? By God, we want to see him!" One of that crowd walked right up to me without saying anything and struck me in the face.

Q. State if any of them were armed.—A. Yes, sir; they had all revolvers, and they had one sixteen shooter in Cade's wagon. He walked up and struck me in the face, this man. Lieutenant Barnhart was off twenty-five or fifty yards talking to a crowd of white men. I went over there to ask him to make an arrest, and when I got about ten steps from this man that struck me in the face, J. T. Cleveland, he throw a rock and struck me on the right arm, and when I got a little piece farther he shot at me. I got to the lieutenant and asked him to stop that. When I done that, Henry Vickers, from Washington, Georgia, walked up and struck me on the side of the head and he throwed a rock at me. By that time there was seven or eight rocks throwed at me, and he drew his pistol. When he drew his pistol the colored men got around me, and the lieutenant says, "Hold, Henry! don't do that! Don't do that!" Then he put up his pistol. The colored men surrounded me and carried me off a piece. My arm sort o' quit hurting, and I got up and said I would try to have a man arrested. But the sheriff said there could not be no arrests made that day. These men, when they struck me, said, "Now, G--d damn you, make your arrests, make your arrests; we'll see who makes any arrests here to-day!" The sheriff said there could not be any arrests made. I said, "There must be arrests made, live or die." Lieutenant Barnhart said that he didn't think any arrests could be made then, but to make them in the future. A Mr. E. C. Mars told me that he was for peace; he said, "You know me, Hurd; you know I will do what is right; don't try to make an arrest to-day; there's no man will be arrested here to-day." I told him well, I thought I would try to make an arrest, no matter what would happen to me. There was men walking around, these Georgians, telling me, "Get out, God damn you, get out, or we will kill you!" The sheriff told me I had better go up on the stand. I went up and took a seat. When I done that a fellow come up in front of me and drew his pistol and said, "Get out of that, God damn you; I will shoot your head off." The democratic supervisor said, "Get out of that; I don't want to be shot here;" and the republican manager said, "Yes, get out; they will shoot you and they may shoot somebody else." I walked off a piece, and Mr. Mars came to where I was to tell me he thought I had better go up to the soldiers' camp, about half a mile off. I said I hadn't voted. He says, "Well, you know I am a friend, and if you want to vote I will go to the polls with you." Well, I went right alongside of him, and we went up to the polls. The democrats asked me if I wanted a ticket. I told 'em no; I had one. When I went to vote they said, "Do you hear that God damn rascal, that he is nearly killed, voting that damn radical ticket! Shoot him now." - Mr. Mars told them, "No." I voted, and this same fellow with long whiskers, he says, "We only give you five minutes to get away from here, and if you don't do it, damned if I don't kill you!" There was a crowd of colored men, about 150, as near as I could estimate it, told me they hadn't voted, but they said they would all go, for they could not vote there; if they voted there they'd be killed, and one of them says, "You come on and go over to the soldiers' camp."

Q. They were republicans?—A. Yes, sir; colored republicans. Me and the sheriff made a estimation that there was about 150. I went to the soldiers' camp, and the others went on down the road toward their homes. I went to the camp and staid until night. At night, when they came over there to count the votes in the trial-justice's office, I went and asked if they would let me come in. They said no; nobody could be admitted except the supervisors and managers. I then jumped on my horse and rode over to my home and staid all night, and next morning I went over to Abbeville, and there I staid until I was sent down there after the electoral vote, when I was captured and carried to Georgia.

Q. What time was it when these 150 republicans left the polls without voting?—A. I think it was between two and three o'clock.

Q. How far was the nearest voting-place from there?—A. In the direction they were going, the nearest voting-place was Lowndesville, which was about twenty-two miles off.

Q. Were they on foot or on horseback?—A. On foot.

Q. Why did they leave without voting?—A. Well, they said they could not vote; they saw that I was run off from the polls, and they were afraid that Cade would shoot them. The name of Cade is a terror down there, all the colored people and some of the whites is afraid of him; he is a terrible desperado. Had not Cade come with his guard, I think our majority would have been 350 in that precinct.

Q. Did you know any of Cade's guard of 30?—A. Yes, sir; I know Cade, and Reuben Smith, and Stark, (he was from Georgia,) and this man Cleveland that struck me, and two or three of the Hesters that I know, and some other Georgians that I didn't know.

Q. Did any of the Georgians vote?—A. Yes, sir; about twenty voted that morning before I left there. This man Stark voted while I was on the ground. I saw him when he voted; I was standing off about twenty-five or thirty yards.

Q. How near to the polling-place do you live?—A. About two miles and a half.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Since January, 1873.

Q. To what extent are you acquainted with the people of that precinct?—A. I know them tolerably well.

Q. State to what extent strangers voted at that poll that day?—A. Well, at that poll that day there was strange white men voted there before I left; I guess to the number of fifty or sixty.

Q. State whether you have heard any threats made against republicans by men on whose land they lived?—A. Yes, sir; this man Hugh McKelvy told a man that day if he voted to "Go home and get off my place." Says he, "Aleck, I like you and got nothing against you, but," says he, "G--d damn you, I told you if you voted the radical ticket to get off my land; now you get off before I get home." There was Hugh Burt, he told a colored man that I didn't know: "Put that ticket in there, God damn you, and go and get-off such a place," mentioning somebody's place. Says I, "That ain't your place, and it doesn't look as if you had anything to do with it." Says he, "Yes, he has got to get off there; and don't you say nothing, because, by God, we are going to take care of you after this." Says I, "You needn't make your threats." Says he, "Yes; I tell you, we are going to take care of you." Then there was R. M. Boyd, he told a colored man, "You go home and get off my place; every one; all of you that votes that ticket here to-day."

Q. How many colored men are on Boyd's place?—A. On Boyd's place there are eight or ten colored men, voters. This man Cade, after I had voted, said, "Not another damn radical shall vote here to-day;" and that was one of the main reasons why these other men went off without voting, because they were afraid of Cade.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. I went off between two and three o'clock.

Q. Did you return again?—A. No, sir; because I was afraid. They had been threatening my life all that day.

Q. You are a member of the legislature now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you elected?—A. At the last election.

Q. Did you hear any threats made before the election, through the canvass, by land-owners against persons who lived on their lands?—A. Yes, sir; this man R. B. Cade has on his place 85 families, I think; he told men in my presence, and he told me, that not a man that voted the radical ticket should remain on his place. He said he was going to see that a great many voted the democratic ticket, and he brought a good many of them there in wagons and made them vote that ticket. They have told me that since. A Mr. Caldwell said that no man should live on his land that voted the radical ticket. It was a general threat during the canvass;—they wrote me a letter.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Have you got the letter?—A. It is at Abbeville.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you receive a letter during the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is the letter?—A. It is at Abbeville; C. E. Bruce, the trial-justice, has it.

Q. For what purpose was it deposited there?—A. That it might be turned over to some of the authorities that could do something with it; that it would be to prove that there was illegality in the canvass and the election, if necessary. I gave it to him. He told me that he thought it would do some good in showing there was violence in that county at that time.

Q. Is the paper under your control now?—A. Yes; he told me that I could get it at any time.

Q. How far is it from here?—A. It is at Abbeville Court-House. I saw several letters received on the Sunday before the election.

Q. By colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they come from; through the mail?—A. Yes, they came through the mail.

Q. Did they have any name signed to them?—A. No, sir; no name.

Q. In what business have you been engaged?—A. Teaching school.

Q. Were you at any of the republican meetings during this last campaign?—A. Yes; I was at two, at Abbeville Court-House.

Q. Were there any threats or violence?—A. Yes; in August, at the first meeting at Abbeville Court-House, there was a large number of red-shirt mounted men armed with revolvers, and during the speaking there they went on at a terrible rate. They would interrupt the speakers there, and that evening over in town they shot at a flag-man and beat up the head of one colored man there with a pistol.

Q. State any other facts that you know occurred during this last campaign relating to violence or intimidation?—A. During this campaign (I think it was the Wednesday after I received that letter) there was a crowd of mounted men went to my house.

Q. Were you there?—A. I was there, but I was not in the house. I locked the door and went out in the woods. They went around the house, and one of them said to me, after that, "If we had found you there we would have killed you."

Q. How many men were there?—A. There was thirty-four. Eight or ten got down and went round the yard. They first called for me off the road. Willie Ard told me since that he was one of the guard, and if they had found me they would have killed me. They rode there several nights. I had to break up housekeeping in August, and send my wife to Georgia.

Q. Where is she now?—A. She is here now.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You are a witness here before the United States court?—A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't you been summoned here by them?—A. Yes, sir; I was summoned here.

Q. How long ago were you summoned before the United States court?—A. When the crowd came here from Alkon.

Q. How long ago was that?—A. It was some time during this last month. I think it was about the 25th of November.

Q. And you have been here ever since, under their subpoena?—A. I have not been here under them, because I went to them and they told me that they didn't have time to do anything with me.

Q. You have been under their subpoena and drawing pay as a witness?—A. No, sir.

Q. Haven't you got any pay from them?—A. Yes, sir, I got some pay.

Q. How much?—A. Five dollars.

Q. Then you have been summoned before the Senate committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were under their subpoena?—A. No, sir; I was not. I just went up and give my testimony.

Q. You got pay from there?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How much?—A. Four dollars.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. There were troops at Calhoun's Mills?—A. Yes, sir; eleven, with the officer.

Q. And they were directly in the neighborhood of the polls?—A. Yes, sir; about half a mile.

Q. How near was this man that shot at you?—A. I suppose about ten or fifteen paces.

Q. He did not hit you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were within ten or fifteen paces of Lieutenant Barnhart?—A. Yes, sir; right behind him.

Q. He was in the neighborhood, was not he?—A. O, yes; right there.

Q. How far is it from Calhoun's Mills to Magnolia Station?—A. About nine miles, I reckon.

Q. That is the nearest precinct to Calhoun's Mills, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; but there was election there.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there anybody else hurt or struck at the polls?—A. I didn't see it.

Q. Did you see nobody struck but yourself?—A. No, sir; I didn't see anybody struck but myself.

Q. It is true, is it not, that wherever you have been you have been the hero of the trouble and the only man that has been in trouble?—A. No, sir; almost all the republicans have been in trouble.

Q. From the accounts you have given us, you have been a special object of animosity on the part of the democrats?—A. Others received the letters just as I did.

Q. Well, the other colored men got along peaceably.—A. No; the managers of the election at the polls—

Q. But you did not see anybody else hurt?—A. No, sir; I didn't see anybody else hurt.

Q. You were a member of the legislature voted in by the legislature?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any hearing before a committee?—A. We had a protest in.

Q. Was there any witness summoned?—A. There was no witness but affidavits. I don't think there were any personal witnesses except myself.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

LEWIS C. WALLER (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Greenwood, Abbeville County. I was born and raised there. I am twenty-two years old.

Q. Were you an officer at the last presidential election?—A. I was deputy United States marshal at Centerville box.

Q. State what occurred there on the day of election.—A. I got to the box about half past five o'clock in the morning. I found armed white men in red shirts camped there, between sixty and one hundred of them. They were camped and had a fire. I went up to the box and the polls were opened. I stated to the managers of the box (two of them were colored and one white) what my business was, and showed them my authority as marshal assigned to that place. They said they hoped we would all get along together. Things passed off very well for a time. When the polls were opened, this same crowd that had been camped, with red shirts and pistols on, said, "No damn radical comes here to-day." We heard the hallooing before we could see them, and I think they were a drunken crowd of men; in fact, I know that they had whisky there. They spoke to me very kindly. About nine o'clock they asked me what business had I there. I told them I was deputy United States marshal. They asked my name, and I told them. They said they had heard it often before, and they said, "We have got enough of you in this county; we don't want no damn radicals here, and we don't know what business you have got here." I told them I was deputy marshal appointed there. They told me I must leave. I said, "I don't know whether I have done anything to leave." I told them I was only there in discharge of my duty, and I would like to carry that out if possible. They then asked me what kind of a ticket I was going to vote. I said, "Wait until evening, when everything is through, and when the managers vote, and you will see what ticket I vote." Says they, "You can't stay there." Says I, "Perhaps I am going to vote the democratic ticket. Why can't you wait till you see, and then, if I vote against you, say something?" When I said that, they said, "No; we know you by reputation, and if you vote, you are going to vote the radical ticket, and we don't intend another radical ticket to go in here. You must leave." I told the gentlemen that I was there under authority, and that I had taken my oath, and that I did not care for any disturbance. At that stage I stepped up to McAdam, one of the democratic managers, and asked him to please stop the row; that I did not want to report anybody. He said, "I will go out and see if I can stop them and make them let you alone." He came back to me and told me that he thought it was for my safety to leave; that he had been out, and he had as much influence among them as anybody, but that they were enraged against me, and I could not stay there, and if I staid there he thought I would be killed. I staid around in the house. They pushed up to where the box was in the door, and he told me I had better go out in the street. I walked out in the street, and I said, "I am going to stay here until the thing is over. Let them do what they please." They said, "You can't do it." Says I, "Well, the only way to get me away is to kill me." A gentleman named Harkness stepped up to me and said, "I have known you for some time, and you know who I am. You are against us, and you are here to advise them to vote against us, and you must leave." Said I, "I am here as a marshal, and if you insist upon my leaving, I shall certainly do so." Says he, "We do insist." I started down street, and they commenced hallooing and running me off. That was between nine and ten o'clock. I moved off about two hundred yards from where the poll was and jumped from the fence and went to Abbeville Court-House and voted. They refused to allow me to put in my vote there. They said I was a radical and could not vote there.

Q. Did you hear any guns or pistols discharged there?—A. Yes, sir. They had pistols, and they never kept them concealed. They had them on their persons. While I was there there were several pistols discharged; and after I got out from the polls I heard pistols firing off. I was not fired at on the day of election; but when I went to the court-house to be sworn in, coming back from the court-house I was fired at and shot. That was betwixt Abbeville Court-House and Greenwood. It was on Saturday, the 4th of November, about eight o'clock in the evening. We rode along, three of us together—two in a wagon and one on a mulo. There was a crowd of men on the side of the road, and as we passed I looked around and the moon was rising, and just as I looked back somebody fired, and I felt my arm burn me. They fired again. One of the men jumped out of the wagon and commenced running. I was so excited that I could not do anything at all. Says I, "I am shot, certain," and the horse made a dash, and they fired about four times, according to my recollection, and they shot the mulo that was along with us, and he has since died from the wound. I got to Greenwood that night, and I went to the intendant of the town and told him what had occurred to me about three miles up the road. He said, "Well, I think you was very lucky to make your escape, for this is a time when the country is in a powerful stir." Mr. J. G. Boozer stepped up and asked me what was the matter, and I told him, and he said, "Well, the ball ought to have gone through your damn head instead of your shoulder."

[The witness here showed the committee the place in his coat where he said the ball went in, and where it came out, and stated that he had a corresponding wound on his shoulder.]

Q. The ball passed through the two coats that are on you now?—A. Yes, sir; the men were on the side of the road, and the moment we passed they stepped out into the road and fired and the horse made a dash. It was in a dark place in the woods.

Q. Could you see any of the crowd?—A. I saw two men, but I could not distinguish what color they were. I saw the persons of two men that was moving and felt the shot.

Q. Did you return to Centerville?—A. After I was shot on Saturday night, I went to Centerville, where I was assigned on the day of election, and they ran me away from there and I voted at Abbeville Court-House. I did not go back to Centerville afterward.

Q. Are these papers which you produce your commission as an officer of election, your oath of office, and instructions?—A. Yes, sir; that is my commission and here is my instruction.

Mr. Lawrence put the papers in evidence, as follows:

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
SOUTH CAROLINA DISTRICT.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye that, reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity, capability, and diligence of L. C. Waller, of Abbeville County, in the State of South Carolina, I have appointed him a special deputy marshal of the United States in and for the State of South Carolina in the said district of South Carolina, and do authorize and empower him to execute and fulfill the duties of that office, according to law:

And to have and to hold the said office, with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments to the same of right appertaining unto him the said L. C. Waller, until the 31st day of December, 1876, unless I shall please sooner to revoke and determine this commission.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, at Charleston, in the district aforesaid, this twenty-seventh day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and in the one hundredth and first year of the Independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.]

[BADGE.]

R. M. WALLACE,
United States Marshal, District South Carolina.

State of South Carolina, Abbeville County:

I, L. C. Waller, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute all lawful precepts directed to the marshal of the district of South Carolina under the authority of the United States, and true returns make and in all things well and truly, and without rancor or partiality, perform the duties of the office of a marshal's deputy of the district of South Carolina during my continuance in said office, and take only my lawful fees: so help me God.

L. C. WALLER.

Sworn and subscribed to this 4th day of November, in the year 1876, before me.

LEWIS D. BOWIE, C. C. P.

Instructions to deputy United States marshals.—Their duties in connection with the congressional and presidential election on 7th November, 1876.

To L. C. WALLER, Esq., deputy United States marshal :

SIR : You will carefully observe the manner of conducting the election at your precinct. Your duty will be substantially as follows : To institute proceedings against all and every person who shall commit any of the following offenses, and arrest or cause him or them to be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before the next term of the United States district or circuit court for your district, to wit :

1. It shall be the duty of every person and officer charged with the duty of furnishing citizens an opportunity to become qualified to vote, to give to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to become qualified, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If any person or officer whose duty it is fails to do this, it is a crime for which he should be prosecuted.

2. The offer of any citizen to perform any act required to be done to qualify him to vote, if it fail to be carried into execution by reason of the wrongful act or omission of any officer, the offer to perform shall be deemed and held as a performance, and the person so offering, being otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote in the same manner as if he had in fact performed such act; and any manager of election whose duty it is to receive such vote who shall wrongfully refuse to receive the same is guilty of an offense for which he should be prosecuted.

3. Any person who shall, by force, bribery, threats, intimidation, or other unlawful means, hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct, or who shall combine and confederate with others to hinder, delay, or obstruct, any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote, or from voting at the election, will commit an offense for which he should be prosecuted.

4. Any person who shall prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, or attempt to prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, any person from exercising or in exercising the right of suffrage, who has the right of suffrage under the constitution, by means of bribery, threats, or threats of depriving such persons of employment or occupation, or of ejecting such person from a rented house, lands, or other property, or by threats to refuse to renew leases or contracts for labor, or by threats of violence to himself or family, such person is guilty of an offense for which he should be prosecuted.

5. If two or more persons shall band or conspire together, or go in disguise upon the public highway, or upon the premises of another, with intent to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise of the right or privilege of voting, or because of his having exercised the right of voting, (he having a right under the constitution to vote,) such person shall be guilty of a felony, and should be prosecuted.

6. If at the election for Representative in the Congress of the United States, any person shall knowingly personate and vote, or attempt to vote, in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious; or vote more than once at the same election for any candidate for the same office; or vote at a place where he may not be lawfully entitled to vote; or vote without having a lawful right to vote; or do any unlawful act to secure the right or opportunity to vote for himself or any other person; or by force, threat, menace, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer or promise thereof, or otherwise unlawfully to prevent any qualified voter from freely exercising the right of suffrage, or by any such means induce any such voter to refuse to exercise such right; or compel or induce, by any such means or otherwise, any officer of election to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified or entitled to vote; or interfere in any manner with any officer of election in the discharge of his duties; or by any such means or other unlawful means induce any officer of election, or officers whose duty it is to ascertain, announce, or declare the result of any such election, to give or make any certificate, document, or vote in relation thereto, to violate duty, or any law regulating the same; or knowingly and willfully to receive the vote of any person not entitled to vote, or refuse to receive the vote of any person entitled to vote; or aid, counsel, procure, or advise any such voter, person, or officer to do any act prohibited, or omit to do any duty imposed, or attempt to do so, every such person shall be forthwith prosecuted.

7. That any officer of any election at which any Representative in the Congress of the United States shall be voted for, who shall neglect or refuse to perform any duty in regard to such election required of him by any law; or violate any duty so imposed, or knowingly do any act, unauthorized, with intent to affect any such election, or the result thereof; or fraudulently make any false certificate of the result of any such election, in regard to such Representative; or withhold, conceal, and destroy any certificate of record, required by law, respecting the election of any such Representative; or neglect or refuse to make and return the same as required by law; or aid, counsel, procure or advise any voter, person, or officer to do any act hereinbefore described as a crime; or omit to do any duty, or attempt to do so, shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and should be prosecuted.

8. Every person claiming to act under the laws of any State, county, city, or town, or under the order of any judge or other officer of any State, county, city, or town, who obstructs, hinders, threatens, or in any way interferes with any supervisor of election or any deputy marshal, in the discharge of any duty required of him or them by the laws of the United States; or who shall obstruct, hinder, or threaten any citizen in voting or in going to or returning from the polls; or who refuses when called on by any marshal or deputy-marshal to aid and assist him in the performance of his lawful duties, shall be liable to immediate arrest, without a warrant, and shall be carried before the proper officer, to give bail or be committed to jail. [See Section 5522.]

9. In the absence of a United States commissioner, or his refusal to act, you can procure a warrant of arrest from a trial-justice, who is authorized by the provisions of sec. 46, Revised Statutes of South Carolina, to take cognizance of offenses against the United States, and he will hear the case and require the prisoner to give bail for his appearance at the United States circuit court, at Columbia, on fourth Monday in November next, or commit him to jail to await his trial.

10. You will be governed by the instructions of the chief deputy marshal of your county, and you will report all cases that may arise to him or to this office and state what disposition was made of them. If you desire instructions in any particular case, apply to your chief deputy or this office. Cases of importance should be reported by telegraph.

11. The law does not make any provision for paying a salary to deputies outside of cities having 20,000 or more inhabitants, and your pay will be made up of the usual fees for executing warrants and making arrests.

12. It will be your duty on the day of election to preserve order around the polls, to assist the supervisors in the discharge of their duties, and to protect all citizens of all parties in their right to go to the polls and deposit their ballots without molestation. Discharge your duty firmly and with discretion, and let your official conduct reflect credit on yourself, your party, and your country.

R. M. WALLACE,
U. S. Marshal, Dist. So. Cu.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Charleston, So. Ca., November 1st, 1876.

Q. Is this [producing a badge] the badge you wore on the day of election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other violence committed during the recent campaign?—A. Yes, sir. In the village I live in I have a brother who is butler in a hotel, and the landlord of that hotel told me that no man that voted a republican ticket could stay in his place any longer. My brother voted the republican ticket, and he was turned off.

Q. Do you know of any threats having been made by employers or land-owners against colored men who were republicans in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. I was employed as an assistant school-teacher in Abbeville County, and I was informed by the chairman of the board of trustees that I could not teach any longer unless I changed my politics. I positively refused, and he told me I could not look to them for any more assistance; that any man that voted against them was against them; that if we were all together we ought to vote together, but they said, "If you are going to vote against us, we must certainly look for men that will vote for us; we are tired of the present administration, and we cannot employ you, because we can get plenty others."

Q. Have you been retained in your position as assistant teacher?—A. I was knocked out of it two months before the school-year expired.

Q. When was that?—A. They stopped me the last of August.

Q. Have you heard any threats made by land-owners?—A. No, sir. Before I conclude, I was served with a paper by the secretary of the democratic club at Greenwood, Abbeville County. This was in September. The paper was that they had understood—

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Where is the paper?—A. The paper is not here; it is at home. I telegraphed from here that I would be at home on Saturday, and my people telegraphed me not to go home on that day, and that is the reason I do not exhibit the paper. The county treasurer of my county, who is a conservative that the democrats support, can testify to the same thing, because I showed it to him as soon as I got it.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Have you been requested to produce it before this committee?—A. I was asked by a member of this committee to have the paper here by the time they called upon me, but they told me they would not call on me to-day; they said about Tuesday or Wednesday.

Q. Why is not the paper here?—A. It is from the fact that I am actually afraid to go home to get the paper. If I can be guaranteed or be in safety to go home I can produce the paper.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; at a place called the Promised Land and at Sims Cross-Roads.

Q. Were any white men at those meetings?—A. Yes, sir; they rode up and said that they intended to have half the time. Our chairman told them that it was a republican meeting, and he did not know whether they had a right there or not. They said, "Well, you have got men here and we have got men here." They had arms, and in fact our men were armed. They said, "We intend to have half the time." We told them they could not get it. They said, "Well, if anybody else spoke there they would put up their men." We put up our candidate for the senate and they would not hear him, so we made a compromise, and allowed their candidate for the senate to speak first, and our candidate to follow him, and then two other speakers followed them. On Saturday night we went to Sims Cross-Roads; when we got there there were two rifle-clubs present, the Ninety-Six Club and the Greenwood Club. They said this was a democratic meeting; they intended to speak to the colored people and get them to join the club, and if there was any radicals that wanted to speak they would be heard. The republicans called the meeting; but the democrats got there before sundown, and said that if, after they got through, if any radicals wanted to reply they would hear them. Two of our men did reply to them, but their people was drunk and they cursed and abused them for everything; there was everything used there except decency.

Q. At the democratic meeting did the democrats allow the republicans a part of their time?
—A. Not at all, sir; they would not do it.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know that?—A. Yes, sir; I know it.

Q. You were present?—A. I was present at one meeting in my precinct at Greenwood, where the democrats called a meeting and they saw a republican ex-member of the house of representatives, and they commenced hallooing after him, and took him up and carried him there, and tried to make him acknowledge something that the republican party had done. No republican would go on the street when they had their meeting. And on one occasion they went to a prayer-meeting and broke it up. I was there. They said they understood it was a political meeting, and they intended to have half the time.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The prayer-meeting was held by the colored people?—A. Yes, sir; by the colored people. It was very fashionable in the up country.

Q. Those colored people were republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the people that came there and broke up the meeting?—A. I only knew two of them, Dr. Maxwell, a candidate for senator on the democratic ticket, and Taggart, captain of the democratic rifle-club at Abbeville.

Q. State any other fact that you know of showing intimidation.—A. I don't know anything more than that they were shouting and hallooing for Hampton at Greenwood, and cursing any Chamberlain men, saying, "We want to hear from them," or "We dare any man to own Chamberlain." They would discharge their pistols on the street, and say that Hampton was going to be the next governor, which I know frightened me, and it would have frightened anybody that was of a different opinion to what they were.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. When was it that they made that noise and hallooing at Greenwood?—A. Along about the 1st of November.

Q. Was it at any meeting?—A. Yes, sir; at every meeting.

Q. Was it at any particular meeting?—A. Yes, sir; it was on Thursday night, at the Promised Land, in Abbeville County.

Q. I am asking about Greenwood?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Then there was no meeting in Greenwood where there was any disturbance?—A. No, sir; it was at no meeting at all.

Q. And the people were hallooing in the streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many republican meetings did you attend?—A. Only two.

Q. Did you attend any democratic meeting?—A. Yes, sir; I attended one at Greenwood.

Q. When was that?—A. I don't know the day it was; some time in October.

Q. Did you go to the managers of that democratic meeting and ask them to divide the time?—A. No, sir; I would not dare to do it.

Q. Did you hear anybody ask them to divide the time?—A. I did not.

Q. When you went down to Centerville how far was that from the precinct in which you lived?—A. It was about thirty miles.

Q. Why did not you act as marshal in the precinct where you lived?—A. I don't know, sir; I received my commission and was assigned there.

Q. Had you ever been in Centerville before?—A. I never had been there before.

Q. Did you know any of the people at Centerville?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know any considerable number of the people there?—A. No sir; only a few.

Q. Do you know why you were sent to Centerville, thirty miles away, rather than left at home?—A. Yes, sir; I know.

Q. What was the reason?—A. Well, sir, it was for this fact, that it was hard to find a man competent, or a man that could take the oath for that office in our county. We held a meeting and they took certain men and assigned them to certain places.

Q. That is the only reason you know why you were sent there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You arrived there when the polls opened?—A. Yes, sir; I got there about half past five o'clock and found armed men there camped and they ran me off about ten. I remained there from about half past five until a quarter to ten.

Q. You did not go back after that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know or hear of any interference with anybody else except yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was interfered with besides yourself?—A. I don't know the names of the men.

Q. How many were interfered with?—A. Two, to my knowledge.

Q. Any more than two?—A. Two to my knowledge.

Q. Were they prevented from voting?—A. They were, sir.

Q. How?—A. Somebody came up and told them that they lived on their places and if they voted against them they could not live with them any longer, and they gave them tickets that were headed Union republican ticket and with the same stamp as ours. The men asked me were that the proper ticket for them to vote, and I told them that I were not there to advise either way.

Q. Did those men vote?—A. They did not vote up to the time I left.

Q. How many colored people were there before you left?—A. There were about 165 colored votes cast according to the managers' return when I left.

Q. There were about 165 colored votes cast at about quarter past ten o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how many white votes?—A. I cannot tell you; I think there were about 125 or 130 as they came in from all points.

Q. You thought there were about 125 or 130 white men who had voted there, and about 165 colored, before you left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The polls were opened at six o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any interference with the peoples' voting except in the two cases you have mentioned?—A. No, sir; none that I know of.

Q. Were there any troops about there?—A. No troops.

Q. Was there anybody shot at?—A. No one that I know of.

Q. Anybody beaten or assaulted?—A. No one but myself. I were assaulted there.

Q. Was your skin broken by that ball that touched you on the shoulder?—A. Yes, sir; and you can see it for yourself. That was not on the day of election, though.

Mr. Abbott put in evidence from the official returns the vote at Centerville precinct, as follows:

Vote in 1876: republican, 178; democrat, 229. Vote in 1874: republican, 158; democrat, 131.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

ANDREW POOLE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Greenwood, Abbeville County. I am twenty-five years old.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I was at the box at Greenwood precinct. I was supervisor.

Q. State what occurred there on the day of the election.—A. Well, sir, there did not anything much occur there that day. The election was all fair there, pretty well; that is, they had a large hall and marched right up to the door, and they let ten men in in a squad, and they marched right down to the next door, and the box was right at that door, and they voted and passed right out. I was there at the box all day from early morning, and they did not have any row or anything like that. There were white men that would come in with so many colored men under their control and vote them right through.

Q. What ticket did those colored men vote that were brought in by white men?—A. The democratic ticket.

Q. State whether you heard anything said by any of the white men to the colored men about how they should vote?—A. They were telling them all the time that they must vote the democratic ticket, and a good many told them that if they didn't, they had to leave their places; they would not employ them any longer.

Q. They were white democrats who said that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What had those colored men been, democrats or republicans?—A. Republicans.

Q. About how many colored people voted the democratic ticket in that way?—A. I could not exactly tell. They brought in a great many. I think there were 936 votes cast there that day, and the colored people cast five hundred and something, but, anyway, when the votes were counted there was only 336 republican votes and five hundred and something democratic votes.

Q. Where were you at the election in 1874?—A. I was at Greenwood.

Q. What was the republican vote at Greenwood in 1874?—A. I declare I don't know.

Mr. LAWRENCE. At the election of 1874 the republican vote at Greenwood precinct was 430, and the democratic vote, 288. Did you hear any democrats make any threats against colored men who lived on their lands during the recent political campaign?—A. Yes, sir; I heard plenty say that they should not stay on their places if they voted the republican ticket; they would have to leave and go somewhere else; that they would not employ them any longer if they didn't vote in their interest, because if they voted the democratic ticket they would be voting the colored people's interests and the whites' interests too, and if they did not vote that ticket that they should not stay there.

Q. Do you know what effect that had on some of the voters?—A. It caused some of them to be very frightful and very afraid, because a good many of them had large families, and if they left these white men on account of voting the republican ticket, the others would hardly employ them, and they did not know what to do.

Q. What class of men generally own the lands in the county where you live?—A. White men—democrats.

Q. How do the colored people usually occupy land there—as tenants of the white men?—A. Yes, sir; generally.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. No, sir; not any to amount to anything that I can recollect; just a small meeting of a few men.

Q. Do you know of any other acts of violence or intimidation?—A. No, sir; I do not.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Some of your colored people came in with white men and voted the democratic ticket this time more than they ordinarily do?—A. O, yes.

Q. Whether they were republicans or not, I suppose you do not know? You did not know them personally, but you took them to be republicans because they were colored?—A. I know the majority of them.

Q. A great many more of the white men voted this time than ever voted before, did not they?—A. Yes, sir; there was more votes voted there than ever was known before.

Q. You know that all the white men who were voters voted there?—A. Yes, sir. There were white men that voted there this time that I don't know that they ever voted before.

Q. That is, the white men on previous occasions had not voted their full vote there, but this time they did cast their full vote?—A. Yes, sir, with the exception of a few.

Q. And some of the colored race were induced in some way or other to vote with the whites?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know of any illegal votes being polled at that precinct?—A. There was some votes polled there that was supposed to be under age.

Q. White men?—A. Colored.

Q. How many?—A. There was not very many; only five or six. White men brought them in to vote the democratic ticket.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Have you been a witness before the Senate committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also before the court?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

L. N. GUFFIN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. About thirty-two; residence, Abbeville Court-House.

Q. How long have you resided there?—A. I was born there and have lived there all the time except four years that I was in the war and about two years in the West since the war.

Q. On which side were you in the war?—A. I was on the confederate side.

Q. What, if anything, do you know in relation to intimidation or threats against republican voters at the last presidential election?—A. I know there were a great many threats made there against republicans at Abbeville Court-House, and through the county.

Q. State, so far as you know, what threats were made.—A. I know that republicans were told that if they voted the republican ticket they would be discharged and not employed. The newspapers advocated that. Besides, I heard it personally in a great many instances.

Q. You heard it from land-owners, addressed to the colored people on their lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the day of the election where were you?—A. At the court-house.

Q. Were any threats made on the day of election?—A. I don't know that I heard any threats that day, further than this, that the democratic party had a committee of gentlemen at the box. The election was held in the court-house. The lawyers' bar or desk was a long table, rather in circular form, and at one end of the table there was a democratic committee that was keeping a list of the voters. There was a gentleman standing there, and when a colored man would come up, if he voted the democratic ticket, this gentleman that was standing looking directly at the box would say "that is right," and would give his name to the committee. If a colored man came up and voted the republican ticket, he would give his name and say "that is wrong." I remarked to him at the time, "You have no right to make those remarks; these men have a right to come up and vote just as they see fit."

Q. Do you know of any illegal voting there?—A. Yes, sir; there was a great many votes there that I considered illegal. I challenged a good many votes until 11 o'clock. At that time I received a note from my wife to please to come home; that she wanted to see me. When I got home I found my wife very nervous, and she begged me not to go back to the polls. I remained at home for probably an hour, and then went back to the polls. When I went back there was a crowd of red-shirted men there jeering at me, saying, "Guffin, am I old enough to vote?" and saying that I had no business to challenge anybody there.

Q. To what extent were illegal votes received?—A. At that box I think there were twelve or fifteen illegal votes received.

Q. Democratic votes?—A. Yes, sir. If I had the poll-list that was kept by the managers I could tell exactly, because I challenged them, and had the clerk make a note of it; but everything has been in such an unsettled condition since, and they have made it so lively for me there since, that I have not prosecuted anybody, and I don't think I shall.

Q. State whether you know anything of republicans leaving the polls without voting from any cause?—A. I don't think there was anybody left the polls without voting that presented themselves at the box. I think every one voted there except two men that came in near the close of the polls, and asked to vote and some one challenged their votes, and I don't think they voted. My impression is they had voted before, they did not press the matter. I said to one of them, if you have voted anywhere else, you lay yourself liable to go to the penitentiary if you vote here now.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; I was at two at Abbeville Court-House.

Q. What was the condition of affairs there?—A. The first one was when Governor Chamberlain and some other gentlemen from Columbia came there. There were but a few republicans. The meeting had not been very well advertised, and there were not many there. At that time I was opposing Chamberlain and his administration, and I had taken no part in the meeting at all. There was about eleven or twelve hundred republicans there, and three or four thousand democrats in uniforms, red, and yellow, and blue shirts.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Some of them had pistols.

Q. Describe what occurred.—A. The meeting was called as a republican meeting. The republican committee met and there was a demand made on them for a division of time by the democrats. They acceded to it, and there was a stand or platform erected in the grove near the depot; the crowd marched down there, and the republican speakers went on the stand. After they had taken their position on the stand the democratic speakers came down, Colonel Aiken, Colonel Cothron, General McGowan, and there may have been others. Among the republicans were Governor Chamberlain, General Hoge, Mr. Jillson, and probably some others; the democratic clubs came down on horseback, and did not dismount. They formed a circle around the republicans. There was no seats for the audience; they were just standing in front of the stand. They crowded around with their horses and moved in toward the stand when the speaking commenced.

Q. What proportion of those mounted surrounding the republicans were armed?—A. O, I would think they were nearly all armed. I could not tell who were armed only where I saw the butts of the pistols sticking out. I saw no other arms but pistols. I staid until Chamberlain spoke, when Mr. King, one of the captains of a democratic rifle-club, came to me and said, "Guffin, you did me a little service on a certain occasion, and if I was you I would not stay here, I would go to my house." I taken him at his word, and I went. I got my dinner, and after my dinner the meeting was breaking up and the clubs was passing my house. I was there on the piazza, and had my little girl on my knee, and they cursed and abused me a good deal, but I did not feel much alarmed at it, because it was rather a common thing. They said, "Guffin, you went to school with us boys, and we have always been good friends; if you leave your politics out, we all like you, and will do anything we can for you."

Q. Did you see what occurred at the meeting?—A. After King came to me I didn't; I only saw the clubs passing my house.

Q. Did you hear anything that occurred at the meeting?—A. Before I left I heard them calling Governor Chamberlain a liar while he was speaking.

Q. To what extent was he interrupted in his speaking?—A. Considerable. All of the republican speakers were interrupted. When they would say anything they didn't like, the democrats would call them liars and shout. Colonel Cothron, though, the chairman of the democratic party, appeared to be doing all he could to preserve the peace.

Q. Were any of the democratic speakers interrupted by republicans?—A. They were not that I heard.

Q. How did you finally vote for governor?—A. I voted for General Hampton, but I voted the republican ticket straight, with the exception of governor and treasurer.

Q. At the democratic meetings did the democrats allow the republicans part of the time for discussion?—A. I never heard of it. I don't know that there was any demand.

Q. Did the democrats generally make a demand on the republicans for a division of time?
—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had this meeting been advertised as an exclusively republican meeting?—A. I so understood it.

Q. State whether when the demand was made on the republicans for a division of time, it was made in such a form that compliance was a necessity?—A. I so considered it at that meeting; there would have been no meeting at all if the republicans had not complied with the request for a division of time.

Q. State the general effect of the menacing manner in which the democrats surrounded that republican meeting. What effect did it have on the colored people?—A. It had this effect, that there were a great many colored men that were not in this ring or bull-pon that was formed there, and one-half did not attend the meeting through at all.

Q. State to what extent, if any, did colored men fail to attend the poll in consequence of threats or intimidation?—A. O, I think there were a great many. We did not vote our strength at all on the day of election. We ought to have voted nearly 5,000 votes. That is about our vote in the county.

Q. For what reason did so many republicans remain away from the polls?—A. The reason was this threat of turning them off and not allowing them to work their lands.

Q. State how general that threat was?—A. That threat I think was general through the whole county.

The CHAIRMAN. Confine yourself to what you know.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. State to what extent you have heard land-owners make that threat?—A. Every single land-owner that I have talked to has said it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In the presence of their own colored men?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How many have you talked with?—A. A great number. I don't know how many.

Q. State any other fact within your own knowledge bearing upon the subject of intimidation.—A. After the speaking, when the meeting broke up, the crowd went into the public square and got up some difficulty there and commenced firing their pistols. I did not see it, but I heard the reports of the pistols. I heard may be 200, and I saw the colored people running from the square in every direction. I think they were more completely demoralized by that shooting than by any other one thing through the campaign.

Q. Are you well acquainted with the colored people through that part of the country?—A. I think I ought to be.

Q. What is their character as to timidity?—A. They are very timid; they have no confidence in themselves; as a body they are easily frightened; that has been my experience with them.

Q. How do they compare with the white men in that respect?—A. I hardly know what comparison to make. There is really no comparison between the white men and the black men in that respect.

Q. The white men are incapable of intimidation, while the colored men are extremely susceptible to it?—A. That is just what I think of it.

Q. Two could put ten thousand to flight?—A. Well, no; I hardly think that, but ten or fifteen resolute armed white men could scatter a whole neighborhood of them. A few nights before the election there was a large meeting at Lowndesville, and I heard the pistols fired off about one mile or a mile and a half from my house. I was sitting on my piazza, and a colored man came up out of breath and says he, "My God, we are all going to be killed. There is 500 red-shirted men down in the road just fixed to come down on you." Said I, "I guess I will see them when they come," but they did not come.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You knew they would not?—A. I did not apprehend much danger. I did not think they were going to come here. I did not fear they were ever coming to attack me when I was awake. I helped my brother, the sheriff, to arrest sixty-three of them for what they did on that night.

Q. Arrests were made for what was done on that occasion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You state that you had been taking no part in the election until the time of this meeting?—A. I had been taking but little part in it.

Q. You were known as a republican?—A. I was.

Q. You went as a republican to the polls for the purpose of challenging illegal votes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were in proper standing with the republican party, and went there in the service of that party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you challenged a few German voters?—A. Yes, sir; and a few boys that I thought were under age.

Q. What attention was given to your challenge?—A. The voters were sworn.

Q. Two of the managers were republicans and one a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the votes were received by the managers, two republicans and one democrat, after your challenge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the managers were satisfied, I suppose, that the parties were entitled to vote?—A. I do not know as to that. I would infer that from their receiving the votes.

Q. You had no personal knowledge that those parties were under age, or were not entitled to vote?—A. Some of them I had knowledge of. Those Germans had told me themselves that they were not naturalized.

Q. Did they swear that they were?—A. They swore that they were entitled to vote.

Q. You had no personal knowledge as to whether they were naturalized or not?—A. No, sir; I had not.

Q. And the two republican managers received their votes upon examination?—A. The only examination was that they swore that they were entitled to vote.

Q. Did you see any fraudulent colored votes put in there that day?—A. Not one, sir.

Q. You said a while ago that there were two colored men who attempted to vote illegally?—A. There were two that attempted to vote.

Q. You were not much on the lookout for republican illegal voters?—A. Yes, sir; I was. I wanted a fair and square election. There were one or two republicans that were challenged by the opposition, two boys; and I told them, "Now, boys, if you are not twenty-one years old, don't vote," and they didn't vote.

Q. How many of the polling-places in the State have you attended as an officer of the election, or a challenger?—A. Only at this one poll on that day.

Q. Do you know anything of a custom here of persons of both parties being present and keeping a tally?—A. I never saw anything of it until that day.

Q. And this is the only poll you saw that day?—A. I have been at several different polls at other times. This was the only one I was at that day.

Q. And the only one where you paid particular attention to what was going on?—A. I had paid particular attention to elections for some years.

Q. Don't you know that it is very customary for each side to have a person there to keep a list?—A. I never saw it done before.

Q. You spoke about the rifle-clubs that were present at this meeting that Governor Chamberlain addressed. What do you mean by rifle-clubs?—A. Organizations of rifle-clubs.

Q. Were they anything but political organizations?—A. That I cannot say.

Q. Don't you know that, under the proclamation of the governor, the rifle-clubs had disbanded?—A. This was before the proclamation was issued.

Q. The rifle-clubs were subsequently disbanded?—A. I do not know that they were.

Q. You do not know that they were in existence after the proclamation of the governor?—A. I do not.

Q. What kind of arms did they have?—A. Pistols.

Q. Is it not the custom of the people in that part of the country to carry pistols whether in rifle-clubs or not?—A. It did appear to be the custom during the campaign.

Q. So that these men were not distinguished from the rest of the community by the fact that they carried pistols?—A. The way they were distinguished from the rest of the community was that they were in uniform.

Q. But they were not armed beyond what people generally were in that part of the country?—A. Well, yes, sir; I think they were a little more uniformly armed than the people generally are. As a general thing the republicans have very few arms, and what they have are of an inferior quality.

Q. They have as good pistols as the other side, have they not?—A. I think not.

Q. What means of knowledge have you on that point?—A. Well, I have been with them a good deal, and I have opportunities of seeing and knowing what they do. I told them plainly that I didn't think they could cope with white people in arms, and not to make any display to bring on any conflict.

Q. You say that those men were on horseback, and surrounded the meeting, and that there was a "bull-pen" there. What do you mean by a "bull-pen"?—A. I mean a circle.

Q. And the people who were on foot stood within, between the horsemen and the speakers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The horsemen did not come up close so as to crowd the people, did they?—A. I do not think any one could have gotten in after they formed.

Q. They formed on the outside of the crowd?—A. Yes, sir; and pressed them up together.

Q. Was there any kind of disturbance except the ordinary shouting that is usually heard at political meetings there?—A. I thought they unnecessarily abused Governor Chamberlain and the other republican speakers.

Q. Did you attend any democratic meeting at all?—A. I did not.

Q. It has been the custom among your people to divide time in political campaigns?—A. I never heard of it until this campaign.

Q. Has it not been the custom among the candidates for office in this State to hold joint discussions?—A. No, sir; I never heard of a joint discussion until this campaign.

Q. Have the democrats made much of the canvass in this State for several years past until this campaign?—A. Yes, sir; we had a bolting ticket in 1874, when the county was thoroughly canvassed by both sides.

Q. That was a county canvass, not a State canvass?—A. A county canvass.

Q. Did Colonel Cothron and the other leaders of the democratic party seem inclined to excite disturbance in this campaign?—A. I do not think that General McGowan did.

Q. Did Colonel Cothron?—A. I do not know; there were one or two talks that I had with him when I considered his talk very bitter.

Q. I mean at this meeting that you have described?—A. No, sir; at that meeting I think they exerted very much influence to preserve the peace.

Q. And nobody was hurt at the meeting?—A. There was no one killed.

Q. Did you see anybody hurt?—A. I saw no blood of any kind.

Q. Was there anybody hurt at the meeting?—A. I think there was, but I would not be positive. I did not see it. When they commenced firing on the street—

Q. That firing was after the meeting, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was nobody hurt there, either, was there?—A. No, sir; not that I heard of. I left my house; my wife was very much excited and asked me not to stay, and I left.

Q. You were not afraid of any personal injury, yourself?—A. Yes, sir; I was, that day.

Q. I thought you said a while ago that you sat at an open window with your little girl on your knee?—A. That was when they were passing. I knew that the feeling was very bitter, and I was afraid that perhaps if they should get up a row my life would be in danger.

Q. Where was this shooting—out of town?—A. I was at my brother's, about four miles west of the court-house. The firing was within my hearing; it was about ten or eleven o'clock.

Q. The parties who got up the disturbance were promptly indicted, were they not?—A. I think so; we arrested sixty-three of them.

Q. Was there any trouble about the serving of the process?—A. Colonel Cothron knew of the indictment, and he told my brother, the sheriff, that he would notify the Lebanon club, and they would come up and surrender themselves; which they did, and gave bonds for their appearance.

Q. And there was nobody hurt in the firing, that you know of?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you see any republican armed at that meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. But very few of the colored men have pistols?—A. Very few. They are very poorly armed. In fact, few of them have any arms that you could consider arms. There were two or three companies of national guards, two, three, or four years ago, and they have some State arms; but they have no ammunition, nor haven't had.

Q. The colored people have no pistols of any consequence?—A. O, no, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is it not true that all the arms of the State are in the hands of the colored men?—A. I don't know that.

Q. So far as you know that is true, is it not?—A. As far as I know, in my own county, it is so. A few white men have arms, but they are very few.

COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, December 25, 1876.

RICHARD WRIGHT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am twenty-four. I live at Calhoun Township, Abbeville County.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I was at Calhoun's Mills. I was one of the managers of the election.

Q. State, if you know, whether any intimidation was employed against republicans on the day of the election.—A. That morning, a little before six o'clock, there came in a company from Bordeaux Township, yelling and going on with their guns, and they said they was going to beat the republicans out; that they was going to gain the election or to kill the last republican. I think there was about forty of them.

Q. White men and democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what occurred there during the day.—A. They reared around there about half or three-quarters of an hour, and then that company sort of quieted down. About half past one o'clock another company from Magnolia came, and they hit the United States marshal, W. H. Hurd, and ran him off, and kicked up a row.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Yes, sir. Then about two o'clock one of the white men that was in the club in our township went down to the branch, and he came loping back to the stand, and said the niggers were down at the branch bushwhacking, and some one shot at him. That raised another row, and some of them drew their pistols and said there should not be another republican ticket voted that day. The United States marshal was gone, and the lieutenant and Mr. Guffin had to get the other colored man to leave to keep down the fuss. Then Mr. Cade—he were drunk, and he is a very wild, rattling man anyhow—and he got a petition and made me and the other managers sign it—that there was not any intimidation used there that day. So under that head me and Clay was compelled to sign it, for fear if we didn't sign it he would make us. We knew there was intimidation there; and after he got it up we had no protection there at all, and we was compelled to sign it.

Q. Do you know of any republican who left the polls without voting?—A. They just got scared after the white people commenced drawing their pistols, and left. They said they was afraid to stay.

Q. Did you hear anything said by democrats owning land which was calculated to intimidate colored men—republicans living on their land—from voting the republican ticket?—A. O, yes, sir; they said that. They had a little place about a yard wide for them to go in through. The men would stand outside as the voters came up in this little alley to vote, and they would catch them by the shoulder and tell them if they voted the radical ticket not to go back to their places any more. Some of them voted it, and they run a good deal of them off, and they made them leave the crop, too.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know of any one being run off?—A. He is away from the place, and the white man himself said so.

Q. Did you hear what the white man said about running him off?—A. No, sir.

Q. State whether the republican left that place, and how soon after the election he left.—A. He left the next day after the election.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of colored men voting the democratic ticket, and under what influences?—A. There were some that voted the democratic ticket that joined the club. They voted right straight along; and then some said afterwards that they was forced to vote.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of democrats bringing colored men up to vote on the day of the election? What do you know of what they said to them to induce them to vote the democratic ticket?—A. There was a crowd there, off about a hundred yards; and when they would come up—I was one of the managers of the stand—and they would not say anything, only I would see them having a man by the arm, and they would lead him up, and he would vote. Then some of them would come in to vote the republican ticket, and they would stand behind them and punch them, and tell them if they voted that ticket they should not come on their place again, and should not get any employment nowhere around in the country, and that they would have to leave the State.

Q. What effect did that have on the colored voters?—A. I believe it kept a heap of them from voting. At least they said it did.

Q. To what extent did the colored republicans stay at home and not vote?—A. I think there was at least a hundred and fifty in that township that didn't vote at all. About a hundred went away from the polls, and about fifty, I reckon, staid at home and didn't vote, because a man told them that if they went and voted they must leave.

Q. Do you know the fact that colored men staid away from the polls on account of those threats?—A. Yes, sir; and I know white people that told me before the election that if I voted the republican ticket I would have to leave the county. They don't hide that up there.

Q. Do you know of any illegal votes being put in?—A. Yes, sir; some white men came from Georgia and voted the straight-out democratic ticket.

Q. How many?—A. There's two that I know personally; and there's several others that I don't know.

Q. Did you have personal knowledge of their being residents of Georgia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in that township?—A. I have lived there about ten years.

Q. To what extent are you acquainted with white men of that township?—A. I know most all of them.

Q. To what extent did white men—strangers to you—vote the democratic ticket at that poll?—A. There was a heap that came there from other townships, and I didn't know whether they was from Georgia or not; but these that I know of that came from Georgia didn't have the red shirt. All the South Carolinians had the red shirts.

Q. How many white men voted there that had not the red shirts?—A. Thirty or forty.

Q. Were they with those two men from Georgia that you knew?—A. Yes, sir; in the same crowd.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; at Abbeville Court-House; not at any other.

Q. If you know any other fact showing violence or intimidation, you may state it.—A. During the whole campaign we saw all the time that the white people up there were riding around at night, and going to people's houses and shooting off their fire-arms—

The CHAIRMAN:

Q. State only what you saw.—A. I am stating what I saw. They were passing up by our house every night.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Yes, sir. They even armed their little boys. A boy ten years old up there has a pistol and a big pocket-knife.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did the colored people come up from Magnolia to vote there?—A. A few come from there.

Q. The white people came from Magnolia to vote at Calhoun's Mills in quite large numbers?—A. They came there.

Q. The black people didn't come with them, I suppose?—A. They brought about twenty, I think, that had joined the club.

Q. But no republican colored people that you know of came with them from Magnolia?—A. No, sir; because they were not mounted on horses.

Q. The republican Magnolians went to Abbeville?—A. A good deal of them did.

Q. So, then, you had mainly only the colored voters from your own precinct, Calhoun's Mills?—A. Yes, sir; I reckon there was about twenty or twenty-five came from Magnolia, but they came behind the club. Some of them voted. They objected to some of them voting because they had voted at Magnolia.

Q. Then there were about twenty of them from Magnolia that came with the republican colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody hurt during that meeting?—A. Yes, sir; Hurd.

Q. Did you see anybody hurt or struck, or shot at?—A. Yes, sir; I saw one of them hit Hurd. I saw the man when he struck him. Mr. Jim Griffin, from Abbeville court-house, I saw them hit him. Cade and J. T. Cleaveland.

Q. Was there anybody else hit?—A. No, sir; those were the only two.

Q. Did they interfere with the colored men's voting to any extent; did they shove them away and prevent their voting?—A. In the morning they crowded around.

Q. If any republican went up to vote, was there anybody who shoved him off and prevented him from voting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you prevented at the election at Calhoun's Mills in 1874?—A. I was there.

Q. Don't you know that there were a great many more colored voters at the last election than ever voted before at Calhoun's Mills?—A. I do not know; I didn't count them.

Q. But you were present at the election in 1874?—A. Yes, sir; I was there.

Q. In your judgment were there not more black people who voted at this election than in 1874 or in any previous election?—A. No, sir; I do not know whether there was or not.

Q. What do you think about it; do you think there were more black people who voted there in 1874 than in 1876?—A. I tell you I don't know, because I never saw the poll-list in 1874.

Q. I want your own judgment, as you were present?—A. Well, in 1874 every man voted that was there. There was no violence.

Q. Precisely. Now, were there as many colored people who voted in 1874, when there was no intimidation or violence, as voted in 1876?—No, sir; I think there was more colored people that voted the democratic ticket this time.

Q. But I mean people of your race who voted the republican ticket. Were there ever so many of your own race that voted the republican ticket at that precinct before, as far as you know?—A. I do not know, because I never saw the poll-list, and I never heard anybody say.

Q. You say this company from Bordeaux that came there in the morning were armed. How were they armed?—A. They had pistols.

Q. Anything but pistols?—A. I saw one gun. It was about the dawn of the day when they were riding around and hollering, and after day broke I saw one man sitting on his horse with one gun; but they had all pistols.

Q. How do you know that?—A. Because every one that I saw had a pistol. They had red shirts and pistols buckled outside, a heap of them, with a strap across the shoulder, and the pistol so that you could see it.

Q. How were the men armed that came down at one o'clock?—A. In the same way. Then there came in other clubs, from other precincts, and they were armed in the same way.

Q. The people generally were armed with pistols?—A. Yes, sir; the whole club through.

Q. The people outside of the clubs had pistols, didn't they?—A. I suppose they had a few, but nothing like the white people.

Q. Where do you live now?—A. I live there in Calhoun Township; the same place.

Q. You have been there ever since the election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has anybody tried to run you off?—A. No, sir. I didn't vote; that was all the reason that they didn't bother me.

Q. Have they bothered other people who voted?—A. They bothered them by not showing them any favor, and telling them that they had best leave, that they wouldn't rent them no land another year, and all such ways as that.

Q. Did they run anybody else off by force or violence that you know of?—A. Yes, sir; they run some of them off, and turn—plenty of them there now. They say they sha'n't rent them no land another year; that they have got to move out of the county, or out of the State.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. The United States soldiers were there that day ?—A. Yes, sir ; they were a'bout half a mile off.

Q. The officer in command was there, was he not ?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You were the republican manager of the election there, but you didn't vote ?—A. No sir ; I didn't vote.

Q. Do the colored people in your township have arms ?—A. Some of them have pistols—a very few.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

W. H. TAGGART sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am fifty-four years old ; I live in Abbeville.

Q. What is your occupation ?—A. I am doing nothing now ; I have been farming.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election ?—A. I was United States supervisor at Calhoun's Mills precinct.

Q. State whether you saw any violence at that voting-place on the day of election.—A. Yes ; I saw the marshal knocked down and shot at. His name was W. H. Hurd.

Q. Who knocked him down ?—A. Strangers to me, said to be Georgians.

Q. How long have you lived at Abbeville ?—A. I was born and raised within a mile and a half of the mills.

Q. To what extent are you acquainted with the white people of Calhoun Mills precinct ?—A. I know them all.

Q. State what you know, if anything, of Georgians voting at that precinct.—A. I don't think any of them voted there ; if they did it didn't come to my knowledge.

Q. Whether white men, strangers, voted there that day ?—A. Some.

Q. You didn't know their residences ?—A. No, sir ; I didn't ; but I challenged all the votes that I did not think were legal.

Q. How many white men, strangers to you, voted there that day ?—A. I could not say how many.

Q. Did you see any Georgians there ?—A. They were said to be, but I didn't know them to be Georgians.

Q. How many of those strangers were said to be Georgians ?—A. A pretty big crowd—ten, or fifteen, or twenty.

Q. Were any of them armed ?—A. They were all armed.

Q. State what they did with their arms, and if any of them used violence.—A. Only to Hurd, that I saw.

Q. Did you see the assault on Guffin ?—A. Yes ; I saw that. That was by Abbeville men.

Q. What threats of violence were made during the day there ?—A. I did not hear any, only that they would make them leave their plantations if they voted the republican ticket.

Q. Who made those threats ?—A. I heard a good many, but I could not locate them.

Q. Were they made by white men—democrats ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the threats were made to the colored men living on the white men's lands ?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Ben Cade make an assault on Guffin ?—A. Yes ; I saw him draw his pistol and tell him he was going to kill him ;—he pushed him up against the stand and cocked his pistol, but he was seized by other parties and stopped.

Q. What is the character of the colored people of that county with regard to timidity ?—A. I don't think they are as timid there as in some other parts of the county ; but, still, they are timid.

Q. What effect does these threats have upon them in deterring them from voting ?—A. Very heavy, I think.

Q. To what extent were colored men, republicans of that precinct, prevented from coming to the polls ?—A. I could not say.

Q. To any considerable extent ?—A. I should not think there was many but what come to the polls, but a good many went off without voting.

Q. Did you advise any republicans to vote the democratic ticket, in order to save their places ?—A. I did advise the two managers.

Q. What, if any, threats were made against you that day ?—A. There was a pistol drawn, and a man said he was going to shoot me for my principles, being a republican ; but he didn't shoot.

Q. What effect did the threats that were made on the day of election and those assaults upon you and Hurd and Guffin have in deterring republicans who were present from voting?—A. I think that one hundred, or more, who were there, went off without voting. A good many went off en masse. They became frightened at this row and went off.

Q. What effect did it have upon the two republican managers?—A. I think that after I made that statement they didn't vote at all.

Q. What effect did the row have upon them in the discharge of their duties?—A. They were about to leave the box, and I told them to sit down; that they were safer where they were. They told me they were about to leave, and I think they were deterred from voting by the shooting by Cade.

Q. Were you present at any republican meetings during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; at Abbeville.

Q. State whether republican speakers were interrupted, and, if so, to what extent.—A. Very much interrupted, and cursed, and called thieves and rascals and liars.

Q. Was there any interruption of the democratic speakers?—A. None.

Q. Had that meeting been announced as a meeting for joint discussion, or only as a republican meeting?—A. I think as a republican meeting.

Q. Do you know the character of the demand that was made upon the republicans for a division of time?—A. I don't know, sir; I have heard—

Q. At the democratic meetings were the republicans allowed any division of time?

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you at any democratic meetings?—A. I was at none at all.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. The United States troops were in the neighborhood of Calhoun Mills all day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the lieutenant was there all the time?—A. Most of the time he was in the box. The troops were off about a half a mile.

Q. And the whites voted a larger vote than usual that day?—A. Not to such an extent as the excess was.

Q. Didn't the white men all vote at that election?—A. I think so.

Q. And they voted to a much larger extent than they ever voted there before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And white men came up from Magnolia to vote at that precinct?—A. Yes; and a good many from below, too.

Q. And they all voted?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there not a larger republican black vote cast at this election than was ever cast before at that precinct?—A. Yes; I think so. There was no box at Magnolia, though, before.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How far were the troops off?—A. Half a mile.

Q. How many of them were there?—A. I think there were fifteen or twenty.

Q. Was not the lieutenant away from the polls a part of the day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that there were not enough white men who voted there to account for the excess of the democratic vote. What do you mean by that?—A. I think that a good many negroes were made to vote to make up the democratic vote.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. The negroes belong, to a certain extent, to democratic clubs in that neighborhood?—A. A few.

Q. Did the white men's vote at any previous election at that precinct cast more than half their vote?—A. O, I think a good deal more than half.

Q. What proportion of the white vote, should you think, at any previous election at that precinct?—A. I do not know, but I think most of them voted, except the extremely old men and a very few others. I think quite a small number were left out.

Q. There was no democratic ticket in 1874. Green and Chamberlain, the two candidates, were both republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the democrats come out in their full strength at that election?—A. No, sir; I do not think they did.

Q. How many democrats, should you think, came down from Magnolia?—A. I do not know.

Q. You say they came down in a crowd?—A. Yes, sir; I should say somewhere between twenty and fifty.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What effect did the threats which you have described have upon the colored republican men of the precinct?—A. I could not tell you that. It kept out a good many of them. I know of several that stood around there and did not want to vote.

Mr. ABBOTT put in evidence from the official returns the vote at Calhoun's Mills precinct, as follows: 1874, white vote, 119; colored, 421; 1876, democratic vote, 247; republican vote, 467.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

JEFFERSON CLAY (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age, and where do you reside?—Answer. I am twenty-two. I reside in Calhoun Township, Abbeville County.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. I was manager at Calhoun's precinct.

Q. Did you vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. Well, the reason was they got up an excitement there about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and said that no damned radicals should vote there, and on those occasions I was not allowed to vote.

Q. You were afraid to vote, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. There were republican black votes cast at that precinct after 2 o'clock, were there not?—A. I don't think there was.

Q. Do you mean to say there were not?—A. I do not know as there was.

Q. Do you know whether there were or were not?—A. I would not say candidly that there was not.

Q. What is your best impression?—A. I do not think there was.

Q. The whole republican vote was cast before 2 o'clock, then?—A. Yes, sir; the biggest majority.

Q. The whole vote for the republican party was cast before 2 o'clock, as you believe?—A. I would not say candidly.

M. T. THOMAS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you reside and what is your age?—Answer. I reside at Lowndesville, Abbeville County. I am twenty-three.

Q. Where were you on the day of the presidential election?—A. At Lowndesville.

Q. State what, if anything, you know of threats being made by white democrats against colored men residing on their lands in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. I was there as a supervisor. The polls opened at 6 o'clock, and between fifteen and twenty minutes after the polls opened about twenty-five or thirty white men, with red shirts, came riding up to the polls with pistols, and they said, "Where is the God damned radicals?" and they commenced crowding around the polls. I said, "Gentlemen, this won't do; we want a peaceable election, and, remember, I am not here in the interest of any party. I am here as a supervisor." They said that any man that voted the republican ticket they would kill him, and then another man says, "Any man that is on my plantation has got to leave, and when I go home I am going to kill him." There was twenty-five or thirty colored men with republican tickets that wanted to vote, and I said, "Gentlemen, allow these men to vote." They said, "No, they sha'n't vote for these damned rascals, Chamberlain and the others;" and they said, "What are you going to do here?" I said I was supervisor. They said, "You had better go to the box, then, and stay there." I said, "No; I am sent here;" and a man there, Mr. Buckam, says, "You are doing tolerably well, and you had better keep your mouth shut." He said, "I want you to vote the democratic ticket here." Says I, "I can't." Says he, "Why?" Says I, "Because I am a republican. If I voted the democratic ticket I would be a member of the club." Says he, "You are a good ways from home and you had better do it." This was only a short distance from the Georgia line, and some men came out, and one of them says, "By God, we don't allow no God damned nigger to challenge our votes." I says, "If you vote I will report you, and carry you before the United States court." This man told me, "If you put my name on that list, we will murder you to-night." Says he, "How do you go home?" I told him I crossed the double bridges, but I didn't. He asked me when I was going home. I told him I was going in the morning. He says, "That's all right; you are going to stay here all night." I says, "Yes," but I didn't stay; I left. I went in another direction. There was six or eight boys under age that voted there, and then there was these men that voted from Georgia.

Q. Did they vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes; every one of them voted the democratic ticket. I watched them very close. They called for the republican ticket there and dared any man to show a republican ticket. I took some out, and they said, "If any God damn man was going to show them the republican tickets, they would kill him." So I put them back in my pocket. After the polls closed that evening one of them asks me, "Where are you going?" Says I, "I am going to see the ballots counted." Says he, "What are you going to do about it?" Says I, "I am the supervisor of the United States and I have a right here." A man named Lee says, "You can't come in here except you promise us to drink whisky every time we give it to you." I told him I didn't drink whisky. My instructions was not to drink any when I left home. He says, "Well, you can't do anything; if you do we will take you out." They had it fixed so I could not get out that night, and they made two of the managers vote the democratic ticket. I would not vote at all. They wanted me to vote the democratic ticket, but I would not do it.

Q. Were those colored managers that voted the democratic ticket?—A. O, yes, sir; I think they had been republicans up to that time.

Q. You spoke of some twenty-five or more colored men who wanted to vote the republican ticket. Did they get an opportunity to vote?—A. Some of them did, and then the others got scared, because they said the men that they was working for would discharge them, and they left.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of colored men coming there to vote and going away without voting?—A. Yes; they come there and went away without voting, because these men would not allow them. They come there off and on all day long and went away without voting.

Q. About how many colored men, republicans, came there to vote and went away without voting, as near as you can judge?—A. About one hundred and fifty, I think, that did not vote at all. Some had liens and the liens had not been paid, and they said that if the colored men voted the republican ticket they would break them up.

Q. Explain what you mean by liens.—A. Well, in January the colored people go to work and they give a lien on their property to a merchant to furnish them with provisions during the year to make their crops, and they had not paid up those liens, and these men that had the liens on them were not allowed to vote, and the men that were living on their plantations were not allowed to vote the republican ticket.

Q. State whether you intended to vote the republican ticket.—A. Yes, sir; I intended, and I would have voted it if I had not been afraid.

Q. How many Georgians voted there that day?—A. I know about twelve or thirteen, and there was a man there from Anderson, adjoining county to Abbeville, that voted. The men were strangers to me. I told them that I was a supervisor, and had a right to challenge the votes. This man said, "By God, I am from Anderson." Says I, "You can't vote here; you can vote in Anderson." Says he, "Yes, I will." Says I, "Well, you may vote for President." Says he, "No, by God; they will vote for all the ticket;" so I spoke to the manager and told him. They said they were going to swear them. One man says to me, "What's that you are doing?" Says I, "I am just writing." Says he, "Will you put down my name;" I told him, "No, sir."

Q. Why did you tell him that?—A. Because I was afraid. They had long pistols, and I was afraid they would kill me. Then, too, I let them search my papers to see that I had any names, but I had taken all the names and put the paper down in my boot.

Q. To what extent were men armed there that day?—A. I saw nothing but pistols.

Q. How many did you see have pistols?—A. I saw men with pistols buckled on the outside of their clothes, about twenty-five or thirty.

Q. Did you see any colored men have pistols?—A. Yes, sir; some colored men. I do not think there was more than about a dozen. They was of the democratic club, riding in the procession.

Q. Did you see any republican colored men have pistols?—A. No, sir; they might have had them, but I didn't see them.

Q. What has been your occupation heretofore?—A. Working in a printing office at Abbeville.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You didn't live in Lowndesville at that time?—A. I went there the day before election.

Q. But you lived at Abbeville?—A. Yes, sir; before I went to Lowndesville.

Q. You were sent to Lowndesville to be a supervisor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They threatened you and all the rest of the colored republicans, you say?—A. Yes.

Q. That is, they told them all that if they voted they would shoot them or destroy them?—A. They said that them that voted the radical ticket they would kill them and run them off the lands.

Q. Then you believe that if you did vote that ticket they would kill you?—A. Yes; I believe it, because they had killed one.

Q. And the other colored people were frightened in the same way?—A. Yes.

Q. And the result was that they didn't vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was pretty dangerous for one of you to vote, because your lives were threatened?—A. Yes, sir; I advised some of the colored people to go to Abbeville to vote.

Q. Well, the feeling among them was that no black person could be around that precinct without being in danger of his life?—A. Well, some of them had lands of their own.

Q. Yes; but they were all threatened with being shot?—A. Yes.

Q. You have no land, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How happened it that any of the black men dared to vote when they were threatened to be shot?—A. I say some of them had lands of their own.

Q. But they were all threatened to be shot if they voted; even if they had lands of their own, that would not prevent them from being shot; and that was the universal threat to every black republican, was it not, that if he voted he would be shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you found some of those people voting the republican ticket, and that they were not shot, why didn't that encourage you?—A. Because I had to stay there all night and see the ballots counted.

Q. But you say that some of the colored republicans did come up and vote and were not shot; now, why didn't that encourage you?—A. Because these men could come and look at the poll-list.

Q. But they could see these other colored men's names on the poll-list too?—A. Yes.

Q. And they didn't shoot them?—A. No, sir; they shot some of them since.

Q. When you found that they didn't follow up their threats and shoot these other republicans who voted, why didn't you come up and vote?—A. Because I was afraid.

Q. But they were equally in danger, were they not? Why, then, didn't you come and vote as they did?—A. Because I had to stay there that night.

Q. Why didn't you go when you found that the others who voted were not shot?—A. I was afeared to do it. I was afeared that these men were going to kill me.

Q. Why should they kill you rather than the others?—A. Because I was acting as supervisor, and I challenged several white men's votes for the reason that they didn't live in the county or in the State.

Q. Then they were going to kill you not because you voted, but because you challenged votes?—A. Yes; and because I voted.

Q. How many of the colored republicans did vote?—A. There didn't any of them vote right at the time they were threatened to be shot.

Q. But these white democrats staid at the polls all day?—A. Yes, sir; and some of them rode around there all night.

Q. They were at the polls all day, threatening every black man who wanted to vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes.

Q. And there were not a great many black men there braver than you, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; some of them.

Q. How many of them marched up and voted, notwithstanding that threat?—A. They didn't march up; they stood around and picked chances.

Q. How many of them were there who in the face of these threats and these armed men voted the republican ticket that day?—A. O, I suppose some one hundred voted during the day.

Q. But there were white men standing around the poll and threatened them all day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Threatened to shoot them if they voted?—A. They didn't call out any particular man.

Q. But they said that they would shoot anybody that voted?—A. Yes; and turn any man off their plantations.

Q. Now I ask you how many black men were brave enough in the face of those threats to come up and vote?—A. Most of them voted the democratic ticket.

Q. How many, then, did vote the republican ticket?—A. I don't know.

Q. How many should you think?—A. I should think about one hundred; but there were scratched tickets. They had to put on Hampton instead of Chamberlain.

Q. Then Chamberlain got no republican votes?—A. Yes; he got seventy-five or eighty, I think.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You do not know just how many republican votes were cast?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have any of those colored men who voted the republican ticket been killed since?—A. Yes, sir; three.

Q. Do you know who killed them?—A. Only by report.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

WILLIAM T. FINLEY (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside, and what is your name?—Answer. I am thirty-four next May. I live within two miles of the village of Abbeville, in the county.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I was at first at the Magnolia box. I got there about sun-up or a little later, and I staid about two hours. I went there to vote, and when I got there the managers said that they had lost the blanks to take the names on. Then we walked about and waited to see if they could find them; they were not found. I left then, and went to Calhoun's Mills box.

Q. What was the condition of things there?—A. When we got there everything seemed to be tolerably quiet, and about one hundred and fifty of us went from this Magnolia box, and we commenced voting, and about twenty or thirty voted.

Q. All republicans?—A. There was one democrat, a colored man. A parcel of men followed on behind us with a man named Cade. They were on their horses. About thirty of us voted, and then these Georgians came up and said they had a fellow named Hurd, and that they had whipped him when he lived in Georgia; they got off the horses, and one of the Georgians said he knew Hurd before he came there, and he had whipped him once and he would do it again. He told him he had a United States badge on, and if he didn't take it off, damn his soul if he didn't whip him and kill him, too. Then he walked up to Hurd and hit him either in the face or on the head. Hurd moved around a little. By that time eight or ten had gathered round, and he sort of moved a little farther off, and then they commenced throwing rocks, and throwed seven or eight rocks at him, and then some colored people gathered round him. These men kept throwing rocks at him, and they said, "Kill him! kill him!" There was about fifty or sixty men shouting "Kill him; that he couldn't be a United States marshal; damned if they didn't marshal him, the damned radical son of a bitch." Then one man jerked out his pistol and fired right out amongst them, and he didn't hit anybody. He shot right by us. Then the whole troop of colored men gathered round him, and they didn't throw rocks so much at these other colored men, and they kept Hurd huddled up in the middle of them, so that they couldn't get to shoot him.

Q. Did you see any other pistols than that one?—A. O, yes; I saw more than two hundred pistols. Almost every white man there had a pistol. Some one or two colored people had pistols.

Q. How many shots were fired?—A. At that time there wasn't but one shot, but a few minutes after that there was about fifty or sixty.

Q. How far was that firing from the polls?—A. Some of it was upon the other side of the street, some of it about in the middle of the street, and some down as far as the State-house; where the big crowd of people would be standing they would be shooting around.

Q. Were there any men there on horseback?—A. All of them had their horses, and they all had red shirts and blue shirts.

Q. How were the South Carolina men dressed?—A. They were the ones dressed in red. The Georgians were in citizens' clothes.

Q. How many of those white men dressed in red were there?—A. About sixty or seventy.

Q. What, if anything, did you hear said by white men there—democrats—to the colored men?—A. When this row was kicked up with Hurd, the colored people still kept voting, and some white men came up and told them to get away from the poll. They said they were not doing anything; that they wanted to vote. They said, "Go away from this poll," and they took a colored man by the arm and led him away by the arm. They said if he didn't go, he would get hurt. One of the colored men didn't go right then, and three or four of them caught hold of him and took him out. Then about that time Guffin, the sheriff of Abbeville County, told them they must keep the peace, but they got into a row with him, and I think Mr. Cade knocked him down. He fell, and I didn't see anybody else strike him.

Q. State what you heard of threats made by white men against colored men.—A. When I get down to that, then I will tell that part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. You have your story all arranged?

The WITNESS. I have got it arranged just as the thing went.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Proceed and tell what occurred.

The WITNESS. They got after this fellow Guffin and knocked him down, and Guffin then said he wanted the colored people to go home; that the white people were accusing him of keeping the niggers there to vote the republican ticket. The row with Guffin took about half an hour, and the other men standing off couldn't vote, because the poll was pretty well surrounded by democrats, and neither white nor black voted. The disturbance got up and there couldn't anybody vote. The white people was there with their pistols lying on a piece of board by the ballot-box. Mr. Cade said that that pistol was telling the managers that that election had to go just as they wanted it to go, and if it didn't go as they wanted it to go, it couldn't go at all. Then the question came up of the niggers that they must vote the democratic ticket, and they told them the grounds. Says they, "You live on our land, we give you a home, we give you bread and sell you meat, and then why can't you vote for us down South? but you still vote with the damn carpet-baggers that come from the North down here and tell you lies. We are the people that freed you. You think the Yankees freed you, but they didn't. If it hadn't been for our action the Yankees never would have freed you, and if you don't vote with us you can't live on our land. We shall stop our mills grinding for you, and you shan't have doctors to attend on your families when they get sick, and we shan't give you no credit unless you have money to pay for it."

Q. You speak of colored men being taken away from the polls?—A. Four of them went up and voted, and these men got hold of them and put them out and told them they must go out further; that if they wasn't going to vote with the democrats it didn't make no difference to them whether they voted at all or not, and they must stand back from the poll.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of colored men going to the voting-place and going away without voting?—A. In that crowd that went down there was fully one hundred and fifty of us, but I don't think there was more than forty that voted. The others scattered off and went towards their homes. They said they must go off; that if they didn't, they would get killed or shot. Some of them asked me what should be on the ticket, if they should vote.

I didn't know what to tell them. Some of them said, "If we vote, we'll get killed." Others said, "We have to move to-morrow, and I would rather not vote than be put out."

Q. Were there colored men that came to the voting-place and went away without voting?—A. Yes, sir; they would persuade them that they would have to leave, that they couldn't live on their land; but they didn't commence drawing pistols, I think, until after this row. Then the colored people got scared.

Q. Those men in the crowd that came with you from Magnolia and went away without voting, in what direction did they go?—A. They went back in the direction that we came. The nearest voting in that direction would be twenty-two miles off.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You started from Magnolia about what time in the morning?—A. I couldn't tell you to save my life, because I had no watch and it was cloudy and rainy; it was about eight or nine o'clock in the day, as near as I could tell.

Q. All the voters there went up with you?—A. No, sir; part of them went to Abbeville Court-House, and about one hundred and fifty went with me down to Magnolia.

Q. About how many went to Abbeville?—A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. According to your recollection, how many?—A. I suppose about one hundred and fifty or two hundred went to Abbeville.

Q. About one hundred and fifty went up with you and a good many didn't go at all?—A. I couldn't tell you that.

Q. You have some idea about it?—A. I reckon there was about thirty men that didn't go.

Q. The rest went to one of the two places?—A. I guess so.

Q. Were there any white men there that morning?—A. Yes.

Q. They started before you?—A. No, sir; after me.

Q. They didn't get to the box, then, before you?—A. No, sir; they got to Calhoun's Mills box last; they came afterward.

Q. And when you got up there there were about one hundred and fifty of you?—A. Yes; about one hundred and fifty in that drove.

Q. How many voters were there at Magnolia when you got there?—A. Between four and five hundred; there were no less than that.

Q. How many white men?—A. About one hundred and fifty white men.

Q. Was that about the usual number that voted there?—A. That is more than votes there. Their white vote two years ago was about fifty-seven.

Q. They never had an election before at Magnolia, did they?—A. Yes; we call it Magnolia; they called it Riley's school-house, but it was all in the same township.

Q. Were there any more colored men collected there together that day than usually voted at that precinct?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then there were about four hundred colored men collected together that morning at Magnolia?—A. As nigh as I can give it to you, in truth; about three hundred and fifty colored men and about one hundred and fifty white men, as nigh as I can tell the truth.

Q. That was about the usual number of black men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there was not any unusual gathering of black men, though there was of white men?—A. Yes, sir; because there was men there that said they lived in Georgia.

Q. And your people were about the usual number?—A. About the usual number.

Mr. ABBOTT put in evidence the vote at the precinct known as Riley's in the election of 1874, as follows: Republican vote, 184; democratic, 101.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

F. E. WILDER sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Beaufort.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. Commissioner of elections for Beaufort County.

Q. State whether you examined the ballot-box from Gray's Hill precinct?—A. We did.

Q. Did you examine the ballots for electors for President and Vice-President?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they all regularly printed for the republican and democratic electors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were none for Hayes and Wheeler and Tilden and Hendricks?—A. No, sir.

Q. How was it at Black Creek precinct?—A. That was the same; they were all regular; there were no scratched tickets.

Q. What do you know of colored men, republican voters, being imposed upon with spurious tickets at Hilton Head precinct?—A. I know there was spurious tickets there that were given out to several different colored men. The heading was "Union republican ticket."

Q. What candidates were on that ticket?—A. It was the regular democratic ticket, except the heading.

Q. To what extent did republicans vote that ticket?—A. There was only one that I know of.

Q. Do you know of any intimidation of republican voters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or any violence?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

LEWIS CLAY (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am twenty-eight. I live at Mount Carmel, in Abbeville County.

Q. Where did you vote on the day of the presidential election?—A. At Calhoun's Mills.

Q. What time did you go to the polls?—A. About half past five in the morning.

Q. What occurred there?—A. When I got to the polls I saw a company of red-shirted men; they had a big fire, and I suppose they had camped there all night. I suppose there were forty or fifty of them.

Q. Had any of them pistols?—A. I didn't see any in that company, but after a while, about six o'clock in the morning, there came up about fifty or sixty on horses and rode all around us. About one hundred and fifty of us went there at about half after five o'clock, and we stood on the other side of the box, and they stood on this side. When the red-shirted men came up they rode around us and yelled and whooped and hollered; some of them had guns; we could see them as they rode around holding them up as if they wanted to get up a fight and run us off, I thought; they rode around and halted, and said that they had come to carry that election and damn all republicans; and they said they were going to kill us out that day or carry that election.

Q. You were there with a crowd of about one hundred and fifty republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of those one hundred and fifty republicans voted there?—A. I suppose all of them voted; we voted right smart there, but we lost about 150 votes there.

Q. What do you know of colored republicans coming to the polls to vote and going away without voting?—A. About one o'clock in the day there came a company there from the Magnolia box, about forty or fifty men; they came up yelling, and they called for the United States marshal; somebody pointed him out to them; they said they wanted to see him, and they went to him and commenced punching him right in the side with their fists; he walked off and ran to the left-hand for protection, and some of them threwed something at him and struck him on the arm and shot—I suppose they must have been shooting at him; I didn't see the pistol, but I heard the report, and he had to leave.

Q. How long did you stay at the voting-place there?—A. I staid until about three o'clock, I think.

Q. State what you know about republicans going away without voting.—A. There was a great many right at that time. That company of men said that no more republican votes should be cast there that day; that the men that voted for the balance of that day had to vote the democratic ticket or they couldn't vote at all.

Q. How many republicans went away without voting?—A. They went off in crowds; we made an estimate of it, and we thought there was about one hundred and fifty in all. They went off and they met some coming, and they told them—

Q. You left about three o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any republicans vote after this crowd came up threatening them?—A. I didn't see none vote after that.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings during the campaign?—A. I was at several. I was at one at Abbeville. We didn't dare to have any in the country; we started it, but we had to stop it.

Q. Why?—A. They told us we should not do it.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did anybody tell you that?—A. Yes, sir; D. Wyatt Aiken. He says, "When you see them going to have their meetings, go to see 'em;" and they hollered out, "We'll do it." Says he, "Whenever you hear of their meeting, go to see it and break it up;" and they told me time and again, "Whenever you have your meetings we'll be there."

Q. Have you any knowledge of republican meetings being withdrawn, or its being decided not to hold them, in consequence of such threats?—A. Well, I don't know of any being withdrawn, because we were afraid to appoint them after that.

Q. Have you any knowledge of republican committees or leading republicans determining not to call meetings because of their fear of trouble?—A. At Mount Carmel, myself as a leader, and Hurd as a leader, and Richard Wright as a leader, and Albert Burton, and several others, which always calls our meetings in that precinct, we came together and came to the conclusion that we wouldn't have any more public meetings, because some of us might get killed. When it was understood that we must send our men to Abbeville to nominate for the legislature and other State officers, it has been always the rule that we should meet at the mill at eleven o'clock in the day-time, but we had to meet a little before day; we was afraid to have our meeting in the day-time, or in the first part of the night, because they would interrupt us we concluded; so we made the nominations a little before day. By the time we had got the men nominated it got out that we were meeting there at the church, and about sun-up we could see them on their horses coming to town to get up the clubs to come and "see us."

Q. You could see whom; democrats or republicans?—A. O, red-shirted fellows; regular democrats. They said they was determined we should hold no more republican meetings.

Q. What do you know of democrats and land-owners making threats against colored men if they voted the republican ticket?—A. I expect I have heard a thousand that said that. I heard them tell the hands right to their faces, and then tell me, "Lewis, if such and such a man votes the republican ticket, he has to leave my place."

Q. To what extent did colored men, republicans, stay at home or away from the polls in consequence of the threats that were made and the excitement existing?—A. There was a great many that staid away.

(Mr. Abbott objected to this witness stating the reasons why they staid away.)

The WITNESS. A few days after the election twenty-two armed men came to my door and told me—well, they didn't exactly get to see me, either, because I stepped out for fear they might kill me, but they told my wife—

Q. Were they white men?—A. Yes, sir; white men. They came to my door. Then after that I saw some of them, and I asked Mr. McBride, he was the captain, says I, "You was at my house the other day and left word for me to leave the State." He says, "Yes; I did. I had nothing against you myself; you never done nothing to me, but I was ordered to go there and order you to leave the State."

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I was raised there; bred and born there.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. I am a minister of the Methodist church; I have a circuit.

Q. How long have you been preaching?—A. About six or seven years.

By Mr. ABBOTT:—

Q. Who first came down from Magnolia, the colored people or the whites?—A. The colored people were first.

Q. How many came down?—A. There was a good many there before I knew that they were there.

Q. How many did you see come down?—A. I saw some fifteen or twenty.

Q. How soon after that did the white men come?—A. About half an hour afterward I saw them.

Q. How many of them came?—A. I reckon there was about twenty or twenty-five.

Q. About the same number of each party came there?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Did you hear any firing aside from this at Hurd?—A. No, sir; I never heard no guns.

Q. There was about the usual number of people there to vote at that precinct?—A. No, sir; there was a great deal more than ever had been there.

Q. Didn't the blacks vote their full vote at previous elections?—A. Yes; Magnolia box broke up, you see, and some went off.

Q. With the exception of the twenty or twenty-five men from Magnolia Station, did you see any other black republicans there from other places?—A. Yes, sir; from Bordeaux.

Q. Is that the name of a voting-place?—A. Yes, sir; they call it Charlotte; there was a poll there.

Q. How many were there from Charlotte?—A. They came up in droves; I think there was a hundred.

Q. Did any white people come there from Charlotte?—A. About fifteen or twenty did, but not to vote.

Q. And there were about eighty or eighty-five black people?—A. I think there was about a hundred black people.

Q. Did the whites come from anywhere else?—A. The whites didn't vote at Calhoun's Mills; they just came to look around; I suppose they didn't get off the horses at all.

Q. Did the blacks vote there?—A. They couldn't vote.

Q. You don't know whether they did vote at Calhoun's Mills or not?—A. I don't think they did; I saw a good many leave there without voting.

Q. You don't know whether they voted at Charlotte?—A. No more than what they said.

Q. They may have been repeaters, who had voted at Charlotte, and had come up to repeat at Calhoun's Mills?—A. Well, I don't think so.

Q. You don't know?—A. No; I don't know it.

Q. At the previous election were you at Calhoun's Mills?—A. I have been there at every election.

Q. More people voted on the republican side at this election than ever voted there before?—A. I don't know as there was.

Q. Were there not more people about there apparently voting at the last election than ever before?—A. We had more colored people there; but there was a great many left and didn't vote.

Q. You saw more people about there voting than you ever saw before?—A. I saw more on the ground in the morning until they started.

Q. Don't you think that more people voted at this very last election on the republican side than ever voted before at Calhoun's Mills?—A. No, sir; I don't think so.

Q. Do you think fewer people than usual voted there?—A. I don't know the number. I think there was a larger number there, and if they had all voted I think there would have been more.

Q. You saw the men voting there?—A. Yes.

Q. Of the people voting don't you believe that there were more who voted the republican ticket at the last election than ever before at Calhoun's Mills?—A. I cannot say, sir.

Q. Do you think there was a less number?—A. You have got me hard there; I can't say whether there was less or more; I can't say which way it was.

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. No, sir; I don't belong to any league at all.

Q. Do you belong to any republican society?—A. No, sir; my name can't be found.

Q. Did you never belong to one?—A. No, sir; I never joined any political society.

Q. In previous years have not there been elections held at Magnolia?—A. Yes.

Q. The fact that no vote was taken at Magnolia this year would naturally increase the vote at Calhoun's Mills?—A. Yes, sir; it would. That is the reason that I know there was more men there.

Q. Do you mean to say that there ever was a poll held at Magnolia before?—A. Yes; they have always voted there.

Q. Don't you know that this was the first time that a poll was ever held there?—A. O, no, sir; I don't know that. They have voted in Magnolia, but this is the first time it was ever held at the upper end of Mrs. Haskell's gin-house. It is the same township, though.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

ALEXANDER WILSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am twenty-eight years old, and live at Calhoun's Mills, Abbeville County.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At Calhoun's Mills. I got there about seven o'clock in the morning.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of colored men, republicans, who were there to vote, but went away without voting?—A. There was some there that went away without voting.

Q. How many, as near as you can remember?—A. As nigh as I could come at it, about one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty.

Q. What time did you leave the voting-place?—A. I left there about two or three hours of the sun in the evening. I left there after the riot was kicked up.

Q. How long did you stay after the row was over?—A. I staid there about half an hour, or probably three-quarters.

Q. State whether you saw any republicans vote after that difficulty occurred?—A. No, sir; not any.

Q. Did you see any armed men there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. In the morning there was men mounted there on horses, and they rode around we black people there, with guns, and they had pistols there all day long.

Q. Were you at any other voting-place that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. State whether you heard any threats made by democrats who owned lands, against the men living on their lands in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. The man that I lived with myself, he told me if I voted the republican ticket he would turn me out of doors; and he did.

Q. State if you know of any others being turned off lands for that reason?—A. No, I don't know of any others that was turned off, but several said they would let them stay until Christmas, and then turn them off.

Q. How long have you lived in that township?—A. Ever since the emancipation.

Q. How extensively are you acquainted with the white men of that township?—A. I am acquainted with a great deal of them in that town.

Q. Do you know anything of any persons voting at that voting-place who were not residents of the county?—A. I don't know any men's names, only some that came out of Georgia. I know they were Georgians, but I did not know their names. They went back in the evening after the riot. As near as I could guess there was about ninety or one hundred of them. Then there was some starting there, but the others coming away made them turn back, and all went back together.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. About what time did you leave?—A. About two or three hours of the sun in the evening.

Q. Did the sun set about half past four?—A. I don't know, sir, what time.

Q. These Georgians all went off before you did?—A. No; they was all mounting their horses when we left.

Q. They left the mills before you did?—A. No.

Q. Then you don't know anything about their leaving there and going off all together?—

A. They was all mounting their horses. I left some of them there.

Q. You did not know where they went?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then why did you swear that you did know?—A. Those men they were mounting their horses there. I know it was some of the men that passed me on the road.

Q. But you left them at the voting-place, and went off about your business?—A. Yes.

Q. And you never saw any of them in Georgia?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them in Georgia. I worked there last year about August.

Q. How many of them did you see in Georgia?—A. I seen three or four.

Q. Do you know their names?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see them more than once?—A. Yes, sir; several times.

Q. How long did you work in Georgia last year?—A. Three months. I did not know the names. I seen them in passing their houses.

Q. You had no talk with them?—A. Not at all. I only knew them by sight.

Q. You saw them, in passing their houses, and seeing them a year afterward you know them?—A. It could not have been a year.

Q. Well, some months; how many months?—A. Two or three months.

Q. When did you work in Georgia?—A. I worked in Georgia along until about Christmas a year ago.

Q. Then you had not seen those people for eleven months?—A. Yes; passing backward and forward.

Q. You left there last Christmas?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you only saw them when you were in Georgia passing by their houses?—A. Yes.

Q. You have not seen them in Georgia since that time?—A. Yes; because I was passing backward and forward over the river.

Q. Where did you see them?—A. Over at Lisbon.

Q. Did you have any occasion to talk with them?—A. No, sir.

Q. You cannot give any account of their names so that we could summon them and see whether you are telling the truth or not?—A. No, sir; I don't know their names.

Q. How many of them had you seen in Georgia?—A. There was three of them.

Q. Was there any other men that you knew?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many came up from Magnolia?—A. I don't know.

Q. How many should you think came from Magnolia Township?—A. I cannot say how many with the crowd that came. I should give a rough guess that it was twenty-five or thirty.

Q. Would that number cover all that came—white men?—A. Yes.

Q. How many black men came from Magnolia?—A. I never seen only five black men.

Q. You saw all that came from Magnolia?—A. No; I did not see all.

Q. You were there, and could see the people who came?—A. Yes; I only saw five black men that came there from Magnolia.

Q. Did you ever before attend an election at Calhoun's Mills?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there not more people voting there this year than you ever saw vote there before?—A. Yes.

Q. A great many more colored people than ever voted there before?—A. Yes; I think there were.

Q. The whites never came out before as they did this time, did they?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you hear any guns or pistols fired except the one at Hurd?—A. No, sir; only just one.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What time did you get there?—A. About seven o'clock, and we and the managers came there together.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

BEVERLY VANCE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. Lawrence:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am forty-four, and live at Abbeville.

Q. Were you in Abbeville County at the last presidential election?—A. I was at Cokesbury.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. About half-past five o'clock, and I remained until about half-past nine at night. There was a committee of six appointed to look after the arrangements of the election, and see if anything was going wrong, and I was considered the head of the committee.

Q. You were a republican?—A. Yes.

Q. State whether you heard any threats or intimidation there.—A. No threats, any more than charges that men that voted the republican ticket should not live on their places.

Q. What was said?—A. What I speak of was said by the democrats that had hands employed. They would go and take them out there by the hands, and say: "Look here, I am a good friend to you, and if you vote this radical ticket here to-day, you can't live with me any longer; and beside that, you owe me a good deal, and if you don't vote it I will give you a chance, but if you do you will have to leave my place, and I shall have to have the money now."

Q. To what extent were threats of that kind made?—A. There was a great many there that would have voted —

(Objected to as a matter of opinion. Excluded.)

Q. State what you know of republicans coming to the polls at that place that day, and going away without voting.—A. There was at least thirty that came there and went away without voting. These threats that I made mention of were the reason of their not voting. Many of them had got their tickets. I was one that gave out tickets, and many of them had got tickets from me and would come up to be sworn and some gentleman pull some of them away from the polls after they were sworn. There was a good many things done to entice them. There was whisky there, and guns, and a barrel of whisky within about fifty yards of the store.

Q. Who had the whisky there?—A. A democratic club.

Q. Was that whisky given to republicans?—A. Yes, sir; it was given to a great many of them. They would take them off by the arm and treat them, and some of them came up after that and voted the democratic ticket, and some wouldn't vote at all.

Q. Had they been republicans previously, up to that date?—A. Yes.

Q. State if you heard such threats made at any time prior to the election?—A. For months there has been threats of that sort; many of them had been turned out; myself had been thrown out as being an adviser. They had been defeated two years ago in the Green and Chamberlain election. I myself was in favor of the Chamberlain ticket this last time, and a great many of them would not take the ticket, or would come to me and ask what was my opinion about it. I told them it was the best thing for them to stick to their party, and the democrats has seen fit to set me and my family aside. I have a boy as big as myself. They undertook to push me out, and since the election they have met in the club and made all that belong to that club pledge themselves —

Mr. ABBOTT. You don't know what was done in the club?

The WITNESS. I don't know anything more about it than this: Democrats themselves, members of the club, have come to me. I bought a piece of land of Dr. Noah, a member of the club, and he has seen fit to receive eighty dollars from me since the election, and when I gave him my note to receipt me of the money, he saw fit to keep the paper and the money, and he has told me to give up the house on the first day of January, and I have paid him altogether three hundred and eighty-seven dollars.

Q. Are the members of the labor reform club democrats or republicans?—A. They are democrats.

Q. What have they said about employing you?—A. They have told me that I must not be employed by any of them any more; that if they saw no other way to get me away from there before the next election, they would kill me.

Q. You have not received any employment from them since July?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you received employment from them previously?—A. O, yes; I have been very popular with the gentlemen, ever since 1868. They generally look to me as a man that advises the party sometimes. I do not go through the county stump-speaking, but a great many comes to me and puts confidence in me, and asks what I think best, and I tell them.

Q. How large a family have you?—A. My wife and eight children. From the threats made about me before the election there was several republicans that came there to guard me, expecting me to be killed; and these people passed by my house cursing and abusing me, and on Thursday night after the election they came through by my house, going down to ~~separate~~ Colonel Aiken, and they shot all through my yard, and shot bullets through my door, and shot into my house, and the bullets are there now. They put four in the door; and another man that lives about two hundred and fifty yards from me got two balls in his ~~door~~.

Q. How long have you lived in that neighborhood?—A. Twenty-nine years. I moved in there in 1847.

Q. To what extent did republicans remain away from the polls in that precinct, in consequence of threats?—A. I don't think they did remain away, but there was several came that didn't vote after they got there. Generally the most of them came to the polls, but about twenty-five or thirty did not vote.

Q. How far are you from the Georgia line?—A. About thirty or thirty-two miles.

Q. State any other facts, if you know any, relating to intimidation or violence.—A. They didn't do anything. There was arms there, and whisky, and all those things, but there was no threats of using them. They had about thirty or forty guns in a store about three hundred yards off, and a barrel of whisky about fifty yards off.

Q. Did any of the republicans have arms?—A. I never seen any. Our understanding was that nobody was to carry arms, not even a pocket-pistol. Everything went off quietly, so far as threats of arms or anything of that kind.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. What is your business?—A. Farming. I used to be a carriage-driver for a gentleman named Major Vance, but since the emancipation I have been farming.

Q. Have you a farm of your own?—A. No, sir; I don't own any, only this place that I bought about two years ago.

Q. Have you been carrying on a farm on your own account?—A. Yes.

Q. So that you work upon your own land, or land that you hire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, if you were working on your own land that you hired, how can you have been turned out of employment since July?—A. I will tell you how we do in this country. I only bought five acres of this land, and that wasn't enough, but I attend to that land and then go out wherever I can get work outside. I have two sons, one of them nearly as large as I am.

Q. And you have not had any employment since July?—A. No, sir; very few of the colored people own land. They ask you fifty or a hundred dollars an acre for an old field.

Q. When these people fired at your house in passing, no one was hurt?—A. No, sir; I was in bed. They passed about midnight.

Q. The firing did no harm to anybody?—A. No, sir; the balls didn't come through.

Q. You don't know of anybody being harmed by the firing of that party?—A. No, sir; not by the firing. I saw three men break a bottle a piece over a man's head, and I have been laying out for ten days with messages sent from them that they intended to kill me, and they went in squads to the depot and asked for me.

Q. Did you see them?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen them in squads, and one of them came to my gate and asked for me.

Q. How do you know that if you were not there?—A. They asked my family. One of this crowd told me a few days before the election, at my gate, that he wouldn't vouch for my life for ten days.

Q. But you are still living?—A. O, yes.

Q. Who were these men that were beaten?—A. They were young men.

Q. Were they republicans or democrats?—A. Republicans.

Q. Who were the men that inflicted the violence?—A. Democrats. Some of them are young men that voted at fifteen or eighteen years old.

Q. Who owns the land in that neighborhood? Is it generally owned by democrats?—A. Yes, sir; generally. Very few of the colored people own any.

Q. Was this beating at any political meeting?—A. No, sir; it was since the election.

Q. The young men were drunk, I suppose?—A. Well, they played off that way.

Q. Well, they were drunk, were they not?—A. I don't think they were as drunk as they made out to be.

Q. They were under the influence of liquor, were they not, and a quarrel arose, and they broke some bottles over the other man's head; wasn't that the way?—A. No, sir; no quarrel. They just walked up to him and asked, "What ticket did you vote?" Says he, "That is a railroad ticket." Says the men, "That ain't the question." Says he, "Why did you ask me that question?" Says the other, "We have come to the conclusion to kill every nigger that voted the republican ticket." This colored man says, "If that is your conclusion, you had better begin on me," and he jumped up and caught hold of him, and got the pick. When he got the pick, this fellow said, "Now look here, Rich, I don't want no foolishness with you; let's go and get some tobacco;" and that was all about it.

Q. There was no trouble there; but in the other case where the bottles were broken, that was a drunken broil, was it not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Some drunken fellows hit another man with a bottle?—A. No, sir; there was three of them, and only one of them showed any whisky.

Q. Had you seen them just previous to the affair, and talked with them?—A. No; I had not talked with them, but I had been passing them all day.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

R. G. GRIFFIN (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE;

Question. What is your age, and where do you reside?—Answer. Fifty years of age; I live at Greenwood, Abbeville County.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Fifty years.

Q. You are a white man, are you not?—A. No, sir; a colored man.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I were at Greenwood, at the box.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of intimidation employed against republicans there on the day of election?—A. The democrats persuaded all of them they could vote with them on that day, but I could not see that there was any violence used where I was.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats against republicans that they would be turned off land, or refused employment, if they voted the republican ticket?—A. Well, I certainly heard men say time and again that day, "If you vote the republican ticket, you can't go back to my place."

Q. That was said by democrats to republicans?—A. Yes, sir; to men that they had employed. I heard it said often, I couldn't say how often that day, but I don't know more than two men who really didn't vote that day from what was said to them. I know two that didn't go to the poll, but turned around and went back home, men that I was well acquainted with.

Q. Do you know of any other republicans in that neighborhood who did not come out to the polls in consequence of the threats that had been made?—A. Well, I knowed of seven that didn't come, that I have seen since the day of the election.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. Yes; I were to the conventions that was called, and I were to Abbeville to one the day that Governor Chamberlain spoke there.

Q. Were you at any other?—A. Yes, sir; I were at one at Abbeville, after the meeting that the governor spoke at.

Q. State whether any threats were made against you by democrats.—A. Yes, sir; there was threats made against me. They were taken back, though. The gentleman came to me afterward and asked my pardon, for he felt they had given me what I did not deserve. Therefore, of course, I pardoned them, and I would not like to mention them. There never was a word spoken cross to me only that time.

Q. Was that on the day of the election?—A. No, sir. That was about a month before the election.

Q. Where have you been since the election?—A. Right at my place, Greenwood. On the day that the words were spoken I had been up on my place, where I had some hands employed, and they had been robbed and very severely beat. I went up to see them, and I came back to Greenwood, and there was a council meeting there; and being one of the wardens, I went in. And after coming out, half a dozen gentlemen were standing on the street, and they called me up and asked me about it; and while I was telling them how it was done, about fifty white men got around me and commenced cussing me, and said to me that it was not the white men in that settlement, it was the damned radicals that abused those people. I said to them that it was not; that the men knew who they were. They then asked me why didn't they come down and report that to the club, and I said to Dr. Maxwell, Taggart, and Aiken, I said, "Gentlemen, they know that they would be abused and killed right off." At that these men commenced cussing me, and Mr. Aiken says to them, "Gentlemen, just stop. If you can't talk to him in the right manner, don't talk to him at all." There has not been a cross word spoken to me since. I am right amongst gentlemen that I was raised among, and I never had a cross word said to me until during this campaign, and I believe that was by men that didn't know me. Everybody was persuaded to vote the democratic ticket, of course, that could be. There was violence used, but I didn't see it, because I could walk up to any man that I knew and talk with him. They were shouting and riding around me; but they didn't say a word to me.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. At that time, when you had cross words spoken to you, they asked you first why the men didn't come down and report the people that abused them?—A. Yes; and I said that they were afraid to have come, and this man came up and said, "It was you damned radicals." He said I was one.

Q. And you denied that, and they answered roughly, and Mr. Aiken interfered and said to them not to talk to you unless they could talk properly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that ended it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. When the democrats speak of "radicals," they mean republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

A. J. TITUS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age and where do you live?—Answer. I am thirty-two; I live at Abbeville Court-House.

Q. Where were you the day of the last presidential election?—A. Right at the court-house.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made to induce republicans to vote the democratic ticket?—A. There was threats made there against republicans voting the republican ticket; that if they voted the republican ticket, and did not vote for Hampton, they would have to leave the county; that they could not stay there.

Q. Who made those threats?—A. Well, there was so many that I could not say who all did it. They were democrats.

Q. To whom were those threats made?—A. The colored people; republicans.

Q. Do you not know of any threats made prior to the day of election?—A. O, yes; it was the general tone all over the county.

The CHAIRMAN. Confine yourself to your own knowledge.

The WITNESS. Well, they told me if I said anything for Chamberlain I would have to go away; that I could not stay there; that I would get my light put out if I said anything in behalf of the republicans.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I was born and raised within two miles of the town, and I have lived in the town ever since I was freed.

Q. Did you vote on the day of the election?—A. Yes; I voted at the court-house.

Q. Do you know of any violence there?—A. There was no violence at all in town more than the threats made by the democrats.

Q. How long were you at the polls that day?—A. I was at the polls all day long, for I was supervisor at box No. 1.

Q. What do you know of republicans coming there and going away from the polls without voting, in consequence of threats?—A. At Abbeville Court-House, every republican was allowed to vote. They did not prevent anybody from voting at the polls, but only told them that if they did vote the republican ticket they would not give them any more work, and they would have to go off their places.

Q. Do you know of any republicans who went away from the polls without voting?—A. None, but only three.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of republicans living in that precinct who did not come to the polls?—A. I don't know of any that did not come to the polls, only those three in town. There was a great deal of whisky used all around on the day of election. The bar-rooms were all closed, but the democrats had all the whisky they wanted, and gave it to the darkies to vote the ticket, and I suppose some of them voted it.

Q. Did any of the colored men who had been republicans vote the democratic ticket after being furnished with whisky?—A. Yes; a good many of them did. They had a big breakfast prepared over there, and whisky and things to induce the republicans to vote the democratic ticket, and after the breakfast was over they marched to the court-house, and a good deal of the men that I knew were strong republicans, after they got full of whisky they voted the democratic ticket.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. Yes, sir; I did belong to it when it was organized here.

Q. You belong to it now, don't you?—A. I would belong to it if there was any, but it has not been kept up. It died out.

Q. Was it not kept up until the election?—A. O, no, sir; there has been no Union League in our town for the last two or three years.

Q. You have not had a meeting of the league for the last year?—A. No. We had private meetings of our own, but it was not called the Union League.

Q. It was a secret organization, though?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You swear your men in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They swear that under no circumstances would they vote any but the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if any man voted anything but the republican ticket, he was considered a traitor to his religion and false to his party?—A. Yes, sir; a traitor to his party; that is right.

Q. And if he voted anything but the republican ticket he was to be kicked out of the union?—A. Well, we would just put him down as a traitor, and let him go.

Q. You would do as people do with a mad dog. You would give him a bad name?—A. Yes, sir; we would do that.

Q. And he could not live there comfortably if he got a bad name among you secret-society people?—A. O, yes, he could live about as well without it as he did with it, because the society did not keep him up. He would feel bad, of course.

Q. You put that oath to everybody that joined the Union League?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had a secret society that embraced all the colored voters, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. And you made them all swear?—A. Yes, sir; we made every one swear.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is the name of that society now?—A. The Laboring Union. They was all aborning on, you see.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Is that society kept up now?—A. Yes, sir; it has not met since the election. It was kept up until the election.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It exists all over the State, does it not?—A. I cannot say that it did beyond my own county.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were you ever in more than one society?—A. Yes, sir; I have been in two or three.

Q. When was that society started?—A. The Union League was started in 1868.

Q. That society did not administer any oaths?—A. O, yes; we administered oaths; and the next society we had, about four years ago, was the United Brethren, and after that the Laboring Union.

Q. When was that started?—A. Last year.

Q. Why did you hold your meetings in secret?—A. Because it would not do to let the democrats know everything we had to do; and they had their place that we didn't know anything about, and we thought it would be foolish to let them know our place.

Q. O, they have meetings, too?—A. O, yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know that they had?—A. Of course I know they had them.

Q. How do you know that?—A. Because they had a lodge-meeting every night; and they had their democratic club-meetings. I asked one of the democrats could I join his club, and he told me no. I asked him the reason why, and he said "Because my face was black and they knowed I was a strong republican, and they didn't want no radicals in there."

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Were they not glad to get black men to join their clubs?—A. Well, they would let some in, but they knew I wanted to get in for a purpose.

Q. They knew that you meant mischief?—A. I guess so, because they asked me to go into our club, and I told them I thought they could not be admitted.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did those white men belong largely to the secret democratic clubs?—A. O, yes, pretty largely.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

J. W. BRITT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am 21; I live at Saint Charlotte's.

Q. Did you vote on the day of the last presidential election?—A. Yes, at Saint Charlotte's, Bordeaux.

Q. What, if anything, do you know about threats being made against republicans in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. On the morning of the election there were fifty of us in the crowd and we met fifty armed men with rifles and sixteen-shooters and pistols; they met us at the cross-roads, about half a mile from the box. They turned our men back, and told them if they were going there to vote for that thieving son of a bitch, Chamberlain, they could not go to that box unless they would go and vote for Wade Hampton and good government. There was fifty colored men turned back, and there was fifty red-shirt armed men there to turn them back. We all started back together, but I went around through the woods and got up to the box, anyhow. There was a man named Jim Ransom, with a sixteen-shooter on his shoulder and a pistol in his hand, and he halloed out, "God damn you, you are all here to-day." We went up to the box. He asked who I was going to vote for. I told him I didn't know who I was going to vote for yet. Says he, "If you vote for that damned thieving Chamberlain, there is going to be blood spilt." I said, "I don't know, Mr. Ransom, who I am going to vote for." He was from Georgia. He hands me a democratic ticket, and says, "You vote that ticket." I says, "I don't know whether I will or not." I had a republican ticket in my pocket, and I put the democratic ticket in my pocket and voted the republican ticket. I knew if I showed him the republican ticket he would kill me, for he said so; and he sent word to the manager, Jake Hammond, if he was going to vote the republican ticket to bring his coffin with him.

Q. Did any of those 50 colored men who were turned back vote?—A. There didn't none of those 50 men go and vote but me. Jake Hammond, the marshal, came down to Captain Jones's place, and about 50 of them came there to hunt for that marshal. They asked us where that damned marshal was. We told them that he went down to Green's Corners. The marshal did go in that direction.

Q. Do you know this of your own knowledge?—A. Yes, sir; I know this myself.

Q. You were there?—A. Yes; I was there. I ain't telling more than I know. We were standing there and several of them got up on the stand to go and vote, and Ransom jerked them down. Says he, "Let me see the ticket you are voting." Says he, "They sent me from Georgia to have this election run out fair and square for Hampton to-day, and I am going to have it done or I will kill some damned radical;" and he marched all day with his sixteen-shooter on his shoulder and his pistol in his hand.

Q. What do you know of other colored voters going to that place to vote and coming away without voting?—A. There was 150 that came to that box that day and did not get to vote. The Sunday before the election Felix Turner was going to be manager at the election, and they came to the church and called him out. They said they wanted to see him.

Q. Were you there?—A. Yes, sir; I was there at church.

Q. You heard it?—A. Yes; I heard it. Says he, "What do you want of me?" Says they, "Never mind; God damn you, come out here;" and McIntosh said, "Come here, Felix, we ain't going to hurt you." When he came out a fellow named Ed. Nowbett struck Felix and knocked him down. His wife, she broke and ran. She jumped over the fence and the ball struck right in the rail.

Q. Was Felix a republican?—A. Ed. said, when he struck him, "I am knocking the damned republicanism out of you now. I want you to vote for good government on Tuesday."

Q. Did you see any other Georgian there?—A. I seen men there that they said were Georgians, but I could not be certain whether they were Georgians or not. I only knew one Georgian, named Ransom.

Q. Do you know the white men that live in that township generally?—A. I know the best part of them.

Q. How many strange white men were at the voting-place that day?—A. O, lots of them that I had never seen before.

Q. How many?—A. About eighty or ninety, or more than that.

Q. How far were they from the Georgia line?—A. About three miles from the river.

Q. Did any of those strange white men vote that day?—A. Yes, sir; the last one of those strange men voted.

Q. Did the first one vote?—A. Yes; the first and the last.

Q. What do you mean by saying that the last one voted?—A. I mean that every one of them voted.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of threats being made against the colored men before the election?—A. Threats were made before the election. They told them if they was not going to vote for Hampton that they had to go away from that place; that they be damned if they was going to keep them on their places voting against their interest.

Q. Who own the land there generally; the white men?—A. The white men.

Q. And the colored men live generally on the lands of the white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the colored voters compare in number with the white men?—A. I don't know the total number of republicans, but I know there is a majority of three hundred and something in that precinct.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir; about three miles from Saint Charlotte's school-house. We had a meeting there one Saturday, and the democrats had a meeting at the double bridge, about three miles from there. They came in that evening, excited, hooting and yelling, and ran the republicans away. They said that D. Wyat Aiken told them to be at every damned republican meeting.

Q. And that republican meeting was dispersed?—A. Yes, sir; at every republican meeting they was there and takes the time away from us and would not let us hold our meeting at peace; they would be there to raise an excitement.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. What other meetings did you hold?—A. We held a republican meeting at Baler's Ferry on Monday, and they all met with us there.

Q. On the Monday before the election?—A. About three weeks before the election. They met us at that place and run us away. McIntosh was the captain.

Q. Do you mean that they drove you away from the meeting?—A. Yes, sir; they told us we could not hold any meeting, and some of the same men drove us away from both places, and we didn't hold any other meeting.

Q. They didn't want to divide the time with you there?—A. No, sir; they wanted all the time.

Q. And they drove you away, saying that you could not hold your meeting?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. The company, do you mean?

Q. I mean the Union League, a secret society?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to the Laborers' Union?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you belong to any society where you meet secretly and take an oath?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have not you ever belonged to any society of that sort?—A. No sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes, I am sure of that.

Q. Do you know of any such meeting?—A. No, sir; I don't know of any in our precinct.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

BENJAMIN H. WIMMS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr LAWRENCE :

Q. Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Abbeville County.

Q. What business have you been engaged in?—A. I have been going to college all the time, but at the election I was appointed one of the managers at Long Cane, Mackay's Mills.

Q. What college have you been going to?—A. At Greenwood.

Q. What do you know of threats being made against republicans by democrats in case the republicans should vote the republican ticket?—A. They told me that, right in the presence of others on the day of election. I came about half past five o'clock, and there were apparently about 400 in red shirts, and they asked me who I intended to vote for. I had the box with me. They asked what I was going to do with that box. I told them I brought that box for the election. They said that is well, and they asked who we would vote for. I said the republican ticket. They said, well, if we voted the republican ticket they would turn us off, and they called me by name and said they would kill me. Then a young man got off his horse and ran out in the mill-house and said, "Come in, you Hampton men; you can vote." We employed a democrat for clerk, Frank Henry. He opened the door and told the Hampton men to come in. He said he was sent over from Laurens to see that Hampton was elected. After that he let some colored men come in now and again, but he would not let enough come in to turn the white people. About four o'clock about twenty-five of them went over on the bridge above the mill, and all kinds of shooting you ever heard of they had there. Then the democratic supervisor went out to try and stop them. And they ceased a little and then they started shooting again. Then about fifty colored men didn't vote at all; they stood down at the mill thinking they would break up and let them vote. And I went out and tried to get them to come in and vote one way or the other, but they said if they could not vote the way they wanted to they would not vote at all, and they did vote and they turned them out.

Q. Were you present when the men turned them off their premises?—A. Yes, sir; they told them right at the voting-poll.

Q. Do you know whether there were colored men who, after the election, left the places where they had been living?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored men and republicans were there at that voting-place who went away without voting?—A. I think there were about fifty; I didn't count them, but I thought there were about fifty.

Q. Had they made any effort to vote?—A. Yes, sir; but these men just stood there on their horses at the door, and the people could not get by them.

Q. How far is that from the Georgia line?—A. It is near about thirty miles.

Q. Did you hear any threats against republicans before the election?—A. O, yes; you could not have a republican meeting there no time; they would not let you.

Q. State whether any effort was made to have republican meetings.—A. Yes, sir; several times. The day the governor was there he could not get to speak.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Were you present at every place where they tried to have meetings?—A. Yes, sir; every place that I am speaking of.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Were you at any place when the colored men attempted to have meetings and failed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did they fail?—A. They got scared; these men would come there and they would first say that they wanted to divide the time. They would wait until you were about starting the meetings, and then they would ride up and surround the house, and as soon as a republican got up to speak they would not let him speak; they would abuse him and curse him, and everything.

Q. How many republican meetings of that sort were dispersed by democrats in that way?—A. I was at about ten in the same way, and every meeting I was at they never did hold them; they would break them off before they got through.

Q. You have stated that you saw armed men at the voting-places on the day of election?—A. Yes; with pistols, not guns.

Q. Did you see any colored men have arms?—A. Yes; one colored man had a pistol, but he had a red shirt on.

Q. Did you see any republicans have pistols or other arms?—A. No, sir; they better not have brought them there or they would have taken them from them.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you belonged to it?—A. About four years.

Q. You take an oath in that league?—A. Yes.

- Q. You take an oath to vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Can you repeat the form of the oath that you take?—A. No, sir; I cannot repeat. I don't exactly know what you mean.
- Q. Just tell us the words of the oath.—A. You mean when I joined the league?
- Q. So you take an oath that you will do certain things?—A. O, no, sir; I didn't take any oath when I joined the league.
- Q. Well, after you joined you took an oath, didn't you?—A. No, sir.
- Q. But you said just now you did?—A. I thought you meant when I came in here.
- Q. O, I did not ask you about coming in here. I asked if you took an oath when you joined the Union League, and you said yes. What did you mean by that?—A. Well, I could not repeat the words now.
- Q. O, you did take an oath?—A. Yes, sir; they had us to take an oath somehow, but I couldn't repeat the words.
- Q. Well, you took an oath, and the oath in substance was that you would not have any but the republican ticket?—A. It was something in that way, but it said "according to principle."
- Q. Well, one thing in it was, that you would not vote any but the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; but we was governed to it by principle though.
- Q. But the result of it was, that you should not vote any other than the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And that you should do everything you could to promote the success of the republican ticket?—A. Everything that was just. That was the way they brought it in.
- Q. What would become of a black fellow if he broke his oath?—A. He could not belong to the league any more.
- Q. But what would become of him if he broke his oath?—A. I don't know, because after I joined it I went off to college and I did not attend. We had a Hayes and Wheeler club.
- Q. Had you any laboring union?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You belonged to that, did you?—A. No, sir; I expect I would have belonged to it if I had been at home.
- Q. What is the name of this precinct at which you were present?—A. Long Cane.
- Q. What township is it in?—A. Long Cane.
- Q. Did it ever go by any other name?—A. Yes, sir; Clear Spring.
- Q. Were you at the election two years ago?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. A good many more colored people voted there this time than voted at the preceding election?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Are you sure of that?—A. There would not have been more if they had all voted.
- Q. You are sure that more colored people voted at the election two years ago, than voted at the election of 1876?—A. Yes.
- Q. Cannot you be mistaken about that?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How do you know that?—A. Well, I know two years ago there was 136 colored men voted there, and this year there was only 118.
- Q. You are perfectly sure of that?—A. Yes.
- Q. How do you know that 136 voted there two years ago?—A. I was one of the secretaries, and I think I have the list at home now.
- Q. And you are perfectly sure of the number?—A. Yes, sir; at Clear Spring, 136.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

- Q. You have before you the poll-list of the colored votes at the last election?—A. Yes.
- Q. How many names of colored voters are on it?—A. One hundred and eighteen.
- Q. How many white voters?—A. One hundred and twenty-seven.
- Q. You have that paper in your hand now, with all the names on it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

- Q. What office did you say you held?—A. I was one of the managers.
- Q. You made a return to the county commissioners?—A. I signed the paper, and I signed it through fear.
- Q. What did they do to you to make you sign it?—A. They just asked me to sign it, but there was so many white men standing over me.
- Q. What was it you signed?—A. When you sign papers in that way you sign that everything went right.
- Q. What did you sign as to the vote? Did you read the paper to see whether it was right or wrong?—A. No, sir; I was excited to see so many white men standing there with pistols.
- Q. You signed the paper and the other republican managers signed it?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And nobody said that he would blow your head off, or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; they just asked me to sign it.
- Q. You knew when the votes were being counted and you helped to count them?—A. Yes.
- Q. You knew what the count was?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And the other manager also knew what the count was?—A. Yes.
- Q. Who said it had been in the return?—A. Mr. Frank Henry the clerk.

Q. He said it had been from your count?—A. Yes; from all our counts, the three of us.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Is this paper which you have in your hand the correct list of the white and colored voters who voted at that precinct at the last election?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Why did you not give it to the county commissioners?—A. We had two; one of the managers kept a list and the clerk kept a count.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You returned the poll-list?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is exactly like this?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are certain you have the number correct here?—A. Yes, sir; there was 118 colored men voted, but Chamberlain got only 114.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

WILLIAM R. FRAZER sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age and where do you live?—Answer. I am twenty-two; I live at Cedar Spring Township, Abbeville County. I have lived there ever since I was born.

Q. Were you at the last presidential election in that precinct?—A. I was supervisor at Childs's Cross-Roads about five miles from there.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of democrats making threats against republicans in case they voted the republican ticket at that election?—A. Yes, sir; they told them if they did not vote the democratic ticket they would be exiled from the county, and likewise they would not be employed. They would have nothing to eat, and they would turn them out immediately after they voted the republican ticket.

Q. State if you know anything of any colored men being induced by threats of that sort to vote the democratic ticket.—A. There was one or two I think, but I won't say: I think one or two voted in that condition.

Q. How extensively were threats of that sort made on the day of the election?—A. Well, they told them if they didn't vote they was going to exile them from the country, and likewise set them out of their premises.

Q. Was there much of that sort of talk?—A. Yes; there was a great deal. Every employer said so.

Q. You heard those threats made yourself to the colored?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who owned the land mainly in that precinct—the white men?—A. O, yes.

Q. Do the colored men in that precinct generally live on the white men's lands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any republicans who reside in that precinct, who in consequence of threats remained at home and did not come out to vote?—A. Yes; two or three, to my knowance, promised, previous to the election, by these threats and by them telling them they were going to exile them and would not give them no employment; they promised to vote and they didn't come to the poll.

Q. Do you know of any republicans who came to the election and went away without voting?—A. Yes, sir; one, to my knowance.

Q. State whether you heard any such threats made before the election?—A. Yes, sir; I heard a great many threats made. The first threats I heard made was the time the governor made his speech at Abbeville. That was some time before the election. I was going home and there was a party up from Edgfield, and they asked me and two or three others did we have any pistols. I had one, but I had it in my pants pocket. I was on the opposite side from him; the others was between him and me. He says turn around, the last one of you, and hold up your coats. He drew his pistol then. I know him; his name was Len Lyon. I don't know the others. He told us to stop, and not to go another step until we pulled up our coats and showed whether we had pistols or not. And then, after having 'did that, we went on about one hundred yards farther, and two of them rode on before us, and they turned right around and turned back to meet us again, and examined us thoroughly. They was about two yards from us—not quite so far, either, I think. I had a watch and pistol, too, and I knew that they were going to take it. After that I got over in the field and went on a piece, and then they stopped the fellows that was with me, and asked them, "How came you not to tell them that that yellow nigger had a pistol?" "Well, I didn't know it," says he. "Yes, you did know it," says he, and cursed a great deal. I heard this myself. Then at the polls, where I was supervisor, they had great inducements there for the colored men. They camped at about 150 yards from the polls, and had tables and everything fixed there expressly to induce the voters to vote for them, and they told them what they was going to do for them—more than the republicans could or would do.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting except that at Abbeville?—A. Yes; I was at two at Abbeville—one at the time the governor spoke, and then there was another after that, when Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Taft, from Charleston, and Professor Greener, from Columbia, was there. That day the democratic party spoke in town, and so the republicans got through and dispersed before the democrats did, and that is the reason they did not get a chance at them that day, I suppose.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. They did not get a chance at them anyway?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were you at any other republican meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any republican meetings being dispersed by the democrats?—A. Not of my own knowledge.

Q. Were you at any other meetings except those you have mentioned?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know, from the leading republicans who had the management of the campaign in your part of the county, whether they were prevented from holding meetings in consequence of threats?—A. I was afraid, myself, a great many times, to go to a meeting which was appointed.

Q. Do you know of any illegal voting at that election?—A. At the precinct where I was supervisor I know of three; I suppose there were a good many others, but I am confident of three democratic repeaters.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know of any republican repeaters there?—A. No, sir.

Q. There were no republican repeaters, that you know of, anywhere, were there?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. What do you work at when you are at home?—A. I teaches school.

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or the Laboring Union?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. I am sure.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

P. T. RICHARDSON sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. Abbeville County, at Ninety-Six precinct.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I was raised within two or three miles of there. I am now twenty-six years of age.

Q. What do you work at?—A. I have been a constable there during this year. I was supervisor at the election.

Q. Did you vote?—A. I did.

Q. What do you know of threats being made by democrats against republicans?—A. On the day of election to my certain knowledge I don't know that there was any threats, but I know there was a lot of people locked up in a house on the night before election, and told that they would have either to vote the democratic ticket or they could not stay on the premises where they were.

Q. What houses were they locked up in?—Q. Some store.

Q. How many?—A. About four people to my certain knowledge.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made before the election?—A. Yes, sir; they told people that they were going to bring men from Georgia over there, and they were going to see that they voted for Hampton; if they didn't vote for Hampton there would be people from Georgia to kill them on the road.

Q. How often were these threats made?—A. I heard it during the whole campaign.

Q. By whom were they made?—A. By democrats to the republicans.

Q. How far were you from the Georgia line?—A. Somewhere about 30 miles.

Q. Do you know of any republicans in your precinct who, in consequence of threats of any kind, did not go to the voting-place?—A. Yes, sir; to my certain knowledge there were about 50 that did not go at all; some of them came to the poll, and the white people stopped them before they got to the door, and told them that if they voted against them they would have to leave their premises, and some of them went on and voted and they had to leave.

Q. State whether there were any republicans who came to the polls and went away without voting?—A. Yes, sir; there was some came to the polls and went away without voting. I guess there was about 20 that went away without voting.

Q. Do you know whether threats were made against those?—A. Yes, sir; they told them they would have to leave if they voted the republican ticket.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did they come and tell you that at the time?—A. I heard them tell them so at the election. I was supervisor, and I told some parties not to use intimidation; that the people ought to let them vote as they wanted, and some said if they could not vote the democratic ticket they could not vote at all.

Q. How many of those people were locked up the night before?—A. Four to my certain knowledge.

Q. Did they make them vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The whole four voted the ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any more?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Were there any more that you have reason to suppose voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; in my township I know as far as nine that voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Nine aside from the four?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would make thirteen that you know of who voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any more than that?—A. I don't know of any more that voted the democratic ticket.

Q. There was no violence, shooting, striking, kicking, or anything of that kind there?—A. No, sir; not at the poll where I was.

Q. Do you belong to the Laboring Union?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to any secret society?—A. No, sir; I don't belong to any secret society at all.

Mr. Abbott put in evidence the vote at precinct Ninety-Six, as follows:

1874, republican vote 374, democratic 138; in 1876, republican vote 355, democratic 5.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

AMOS LEONARD (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Whitehall, in Abbeville County, about thirteen miles from Abbeville Court-House.

Q. Were you present at the election in November last?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what threats, if any, you heard made by democrats.—A. I heard right smart made on the day of the election, and right smart a while before the election. They came to my house on the 29th of June and left word there with my family if I held another political meeting they intended to 'gassinate me.

Q. You must confine your statement to what came within your own knowledge.—A. Well, they came again on the 10th of September, and I was not there then either.

Q. Did they make any threats to you?—A. Yes, sir; they told me that if I didn't join the democratic club I would have to leave the State.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made to other republican men?—A. Yes, sir; some one or two. They told them that they would have to leave their places if they didn't vote the democratic ticket.

Q. By whom were those threats made?—A. By the men that had them employed.

Q. Were they democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings?—A. Yes, sir; some few.

Q. Were any republican meetings disturbed by the democrats?—A. Yes, sir; they was disturbed so that they could not hold a meeting at all. They had to break up and quit.

Q. How many such meetings were you at yourself?—A. One, sir.

Q. In the day-time or at night?—A. At night.

Q. Do you know of any violence being used?—A. Yes, sir; they threatened my life at that very meeting.

Q. Who did—white men—democrats?—A. Yes, sir. I can call both their names; I know them well.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Yes, sir; they were.

Q. Do you know of any other violence being used?—A. Yes, sir; on the 26th of August, I think, they came—about twelve of them—to the church, armed, and went into the church-yard, and looked into the church, and asked for me.

Q. Were the services going on?—A. Yes, sir; and they disturbed the people so that the church had to break up.

Q. It was a colored church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they do anything to you?—A. They didn't get to see me.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you belonged to it?—A. About five years.

Q. Do you belong to the Laboring Union?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You take an oath to vote the republican ticket, don't you?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Can you tell us what you swear to in that oath?—A. I could not repeat it all by heart.
- Q. There is something in it besides voting the republican ticket, is there not?—A. Well, it is to sustain the republican party.
- Q. And to do all you can to sustain the republican party?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Anything else?—A. I disremember.
- Q. Most of your colored people belong to that organization, don't they?—A. Yes, sir; generally. Some few of them don't.
- Q. Substantially all of them belong to it, and have belonged to it for a length of time?—A. It is beyond my power to say how many.
- Q. Well, about all your people that you know of belong to it, don't they?—A. O, I reckon there was one-third of them that didn't.
- Q. As many as one-third?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. A good many voted the democratic ticket who did not belong to that organization?—A. There was a heap of them that voted the democratic ticket that joined it, too.
- Q. Did they join it after they joined the democratic clubs?—A. No, sir; but they joined the clubs.
- Q. Then they broke away from the league?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What would they do to you if you broke away?—A. They don't do anything.
- Q. What would they do to any one if he should break his oath?—A. Well, I don't say there was anything done. The meetings was not kept up regular and the people got careless about it.
- Q. What do you in your oath which you take in that organization say should be done to you if you break that oath?—A. I disremember, sir.
- Q. Was it not something very terrible was to happen to you if you should break the oath?—A. No, sir; I never take an oath of that kind.
- Q. You did not get beaten or struck during the campaign or the election?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You live at your own place now?—A. No, sir; I have had to leave there since the election.
- Q. When did you leave?—A. I just finished moving last Monday a week ago.
- Q. You staid there then from the election until last Monday, a week ago?—A. I had to move my family the second day after the election. They came to my house and took away my arms.
- Q. Did you remain in that place from election-time until last Monday?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How far off did you move then?—A. Several miles.
- Q. They knew where you moved to?—A. Of course they did.
- Q. There are people in the same neighborhood who knew all about you?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you have lived at your old place and your new place ever since the election?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Have you been a witness before the Senate committee here?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And before the grand jury?—A. No, sir.
- By Mr. LAWRENCE:
- Q. Why did you move away from the place where you had lived?—A. Why, they said I could not stay in that township any longer.
- Q. Who told you that—the democrats?—A. Yes, sir; in fact I moved to my father-in-law's, where they have bought Government land, and it is uncertain whether I can get to stay there or not.
- Q. Has this Union League been kept up?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How long since it died out?—A. Two years and better.
- Q. Are you sure there was an oath administered in it?—A. Yes, sir; I am. Because I had to hold up my right hand as I did here to-night.
- Q. Do the democrats have political secret meetings also?—A. Yes, sir; I expect so.
- Q. They meet at nights?—A. No, sir; principally in the day-time, but sometimes at night.
- Q. Have they democratic clubs in every neighborhood?—A. In every neighborhood around about.
- Q. And they have their secret meetings?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were those meetings kept up until the election?—A. Yes, sir; and kept up till yet.
- By Mr. ABBOTT:
- Q. The democrats had meetings of their clubs in the day-time?—A. They had some of them at night.
- Q. There was no secrecy about it when they met?—A. Well, they had the door shut.
- Q. Certainly; the members of the club were in there and no others. That is what you mean?—A. That is all.
- Q. Didn't you say that you belong to the Laboring Union?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That was kept up until the election?—A. No, sir.
- Q. When was that stopped?—A. 'Taint been kept up much to do much good in a year.
- Q. The Laboring Union was kept up until after election-time, was it not?—A. No, sir.
- Q. How late was it kept up?—A. Well, sir, I ain't been at a meeting of the Laboring Union in a year.
- Q. There have been meetings of it within a year, though?—A. Not in my neighborhood.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

WILLIAM M. HOLLAND (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Ninety-Six precinct, Abbeville County. I was clerk for the board of election at that precinct.

Q. What do you know of threats being made against republicans in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. Well, I don't know of any threats being made on the day of the election, but I know that a day or two before the election they consulted me, myself—the democrats. They told me they wanted me to come around with them and influence the republicans, as I was the chairman and could do a great deal; and if I should do so, that I should be well taken care of. And if we didn't do what they wanted—they told me plain, "If they don't vote with us, they shall not be employed through the county," and furthermore that they would turn the men off their places; that they should not stay in their houses a day after the election. And the next day after the election I know myself there was two families turned out.

Q. Do you know of any republicans who did not go to the polls to vote in consequence of threats made?—A. I did not count them, but I know of a great many in Ninety-Six that didn't vote at all on account of hearing that they would be discharged from employment if they voted the republican ticket.

Q. Do you know of any republicans who came to vote and who went away without voting?—A. No, sir; I do not. I saw them walking around outside—colored men—but they didn't attempt to vote.

Q. Republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored republicans were there that you saw at the voting-place that day who went away without attempting to vote?—A. I do not know certainly how many there were.

Q. Estimate as nearly as you can.—A. Well, I saw in front of the doors about four or five to my knowing. They were standing around about ten or twelve steps from the place where the voting was going on, and they were sitting on the railroad, and walking backward and forward, and finally they didn't vote at all. They lived right in the little village of Ninety-Six.

Q. Do you know of any others in the neighborhood who lived in that precinct who were there and did not vote?—A. No, sir; I do not know any of my own knowledge except those I have stated.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings this year?—A. Well, we had about three republican meetings—our secret caucus. We didn't have a chance to have any republican meetings, because when we had a meeting the democrats would come to our meeting anyhow. They even came into the church on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and they told us to our face that where we had a meeting they allowed to come to it.

Q. Why did you have secret meetings?—A. Just to talk over matters among ourselves.

Q. Was it in consequence of the fact that democrats would come to your meetings if they were public?—A. O, yes, sir; because when we met to elect our delegation to the county convention they often came there themselves.

Q. Were any of your republican meetings disturbed by the democrats?—A. No, sir; not disturbed. They didn't break up the meetings at all. They merely said they came there for peace, and they didn't do us any harm at all, but they would come to any meetings we had to see what we are doing. They said they intended to see what we were doing.

Q. Did you have any speeches at your meetings?—A. No, sir; we did not; because we were afraid to have any speaking.

Q. Why were you afraid?—A. We was afraid they would do something to us, because they came with pistols girded around them—the democrats.

Q. How many of them would come?—A. I could not tell you how many, because they would come in crowds.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. How many black men were there that were induced to vote the democratic ticket at Ninety-Six?—A. I don't know how many.

Q. Were there any?—A. There didn't any vote the democratic ticket at Ninety-Six.

Q. Were there not four that were shut up in a building all night before the election and made to vote the ticket?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. You never heard of that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were there not nine other colored men that were induced to vote the democratic ticket at Ninety-Six?—A. No, sir; not to my knowance.

Q. Didn't you hear of anything of that sort, about thirteen colored men being made to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Not to my knowance.

Q. Were you one of the managers?—A. No, sir; I was the clerk.

Q. There were two republican managers, were there not, and you were the clerk?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many white votes were there at Ninety-Six?—There was some six white votes polled there.

Q. That was all the votes cast for the democrats?—A. There was six white men voted and five democratic tickets.

Q. Then there were only five democrats who voted there?—A. Only five.

Q. Were you ever at an election before at Ninety-Six?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The democrats cast over one hundred votes at the former election there, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this time they cast only five?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to the Laboring Union?—A. No, sir; I belong to none of that class.

Q. Where did the white men of that precinct vote that year?—A. They voted at Greenwood, I believe.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

ALEXANDER S. RICHARDSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Chester Court-House, Chester County.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Over five years.

Q. What business are you engaged in?—A. I am a school-teacher.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I was at Chester Court-House.

Q. Did you vote there?—A. I did.

Q. Did you hold any office at the election?—A. I was the secretary of the county executive committee of the republican party, and I acted as chairman a good deal of the time.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of intimidation of republican voters in that county?—

A. As secretary of the executive committee there, most of my knowledge came to me without coming under my personal observation.

—Q. State what you know, yourself.—A. I remember an instance in the early part of September. I went out to speak, in connection with three or four other persons, at Carmel Hill, fifteen miles west of Chester Court-House. It was a republican mass-meeting, but there were several democrats present and a number of democratic speakers went from Chester Court-House about the time of the organization of the meeting and asked for a joint discussion or a division of time, which was granted. Some of the speakers went on horse after the speaking was over, and others went on horseback. I, in company with three others who had spoken at the Carmel Hill precinct, was escorted back to Chester Court-House by a body of three armed men, democrats, I should judge from their affiliations, who threatened our lives if we dared to speak again in the county of Chester. They were riding behind me on horseback, and I was in a wagon without a top. Three pistols were pointed at me, and four pistols were pointed within four or five inches of my head, because I turned around and referred to their impoliteness in abusing men on their way from a political meeting where a joint discussion was allowed. We were subjected to gross abuse. This instance came under my own personal observation.

Q. Do you know of any intimidation on the day of the election?—A. The chief marshal of the county, Mr. Alexander George, who was shot a few days after the election, acted with me in accumulating the reports from the various United States marshals that were stationed at the various precincts in that county.

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state what the marshals reported.

Q. Did you attend any other republican meetings than the ones you have spoken of?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. I was advised by my friends, in order to save my life, that I had better not speak any more in the county, and I concluded to do office-work.

Q. Were the republicans able to hold meetings in the county away from the county-seat?—A. They were able to hold joint meetings, but not republican meetings alone.

Q. How were they induced to hold joint meetings? Did the democrats demand of the republicans a division of time?—A. They always asked them to divide the time.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Are you speaking of your own knowledge or from what you heard?—A. I am speaking of my own knowledge, at one meeting that I have told you about.

Q. Was this meeting that you spoke of announced as a republican meeting alone?—A. Yes, sir; a republican mass-meeting.

Q. Did the democrats ever divide the time at their meetings?—A. No, sir; they were not requested to.

Q. Was there any republican meeting in the county, so far as you know, where the democrats did not make a demand for a division of time?—A. No, sir; no meeting in that county to my recollection.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made by land-owners to turn republicans off their lands if they voted the republican ticket?—A. Well, sir, that is a most bewildering question. I don't know of any republican in the county of Chester but what has in some way been intimidated.

The CHAIRMAN. Please confine your testimony to your own personal knowledge.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What do you know, yourself, of threats being made against republicans in case they voted the republican ticket?—A. I don't know as I can present to you any better evidence of the feelings of those who are hostile to republicanism than simply to mention the fact that in the democratic clubs by resolution of the clubs, colored men who voted the democratic ticket were allowed a certificate of democracy called a diploma, a printed diploma.

Q. Do you know that?—A. I know that.

Q. What was the object of it? Do you know whether these men could get employment when republicans could not?—A. The persons who were presented with those diplomas were insured that as they had voted the democratic ticket they would receive favor.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Are you speaking now from what was told you, or were you present when any such assurance was given?—A. I have seen the diplomas, and I can say of my own knowledge that in two of the stores in Chester men have gone with those diplomas, with the certificate of the Tilden and Hampton club, countersigned on the back by the man who saw the colored men vote the democratic tickets, and have received goods.

Q. Were you present when these diplomas were presented?—A. Yes, sir; and I saw the goods put up.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Have you heard any threats made against republicans in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen papers come from land-owners—

Mr. ABBOTT objected to the witness stating the contents of the papers.

Q. Have you heard threats made, yourself?—A. Often, sir. Very frequently, sir; right in the town of Chester.

Q. Covering what period of time?—A. Six or seven weeks preceding the election. Ever since Chamberlain was nominated for governor.

Q. Threats made against republicans and to republicans by democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What class of people own the land generally in Chester County—democrats or republicans?—A. The white people, the democrats, own most of the land.

Q. How do most of the colored men live there—on lands which they rent?—A. They work the lands of the democrats—the white people; but a great many of them own land of their own.

Q. Do you know any other fact that is material to this investigation, in regard to intimidation?—A. Nothing that I know of. I was at a precinct where the United States troops were stationed, and about twelve o'clock they were called in by the United States marshal, Mr. James Canton, to suppress the disturbance that was arising on account of the intervention of George Mackey questioning the right of the deputy United States marshal to interfere in the election, or even to discharge the duties that were assigned him to perform. I will say this, that heretofore at elections in Chester County the republican majority has been twelve hundred, but in the last election there was only four hundred. The republican vote was nearly the same as before, about three hundred less, but the democratic vote was increased by several hundred.

Q. Was there any immigration to the county which would account for that increase?—A. No, sir; none that I know of.

Q. What was the cause of it, so far as it is within your own personal knowledge?—A. Well, general intimidation, general intimidation. The falling off of three hundred colored voters in the county, and several cases of repeating which came under the observation of myself.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Tell me the name of a single man in the town of Chester whom you heard threaten a republican that if he voted the republican ticket he should be discharged.—A. His name is Marshall Given. He lives in Chestertown. He is a coach-driver. He used to drive for George Mountain.

Q. Does Marshall Given employ anybody?—A. No, sir; he is a coach-driver. He was threatened, he told me.

Q. Did you hear him threatened?—A. No, sir; I didn't hear anything; he told me.

Q. You were asked to give only the cases where you heard persons threatened?—A. Well, I heard William Rainey threatened.

Q. Who threatened him?—A. The man's name is Sample Alexander. He lives at Chester Court-House. He is a butcher. He told this man that if he voted the republican ticket he would never drive a wagon for him.

Q. Can you give any other name of a democrat whom you heard threaten a republican if he voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; John Gill. He is a porter in a store in Chester.

Q. You heard him threaten somebody?—A. No, sir; the proprietor, Joseph Wylie, threatened him.

Q. You are willing to swear that you heard those two persons, whose names you have given, threatened?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those are the only names you can give?—A. I don't say that; but those are all that occur to my recollection.

Q. You cannot recollect any other man in Chester whom you heard threaten any one for voting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. I believe that is a defunct organization. I do not belong to it.

Q. Did you, or do you, belong to the Laboring Union?—A. No, sir; I do not believe there was ever such an organization in this State as the Laboring Union.

Q. Do you belong to any other secret society than the Union League?—A. I would appeal to the chairman if I am obliged to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Any political society, he means.

The WITNESS. No, sir; no political society.

Q. Do you say distinctly that there is no such political organization as the Laboring Union?—A. I never heard of any.

Q. What did you say had been the usual republican majority in Chester?—A. About twelve hundred. In 1874, to the best of my recollection, it was about that.

Q. Do you mean the majority at the court-house, or in the county?—A. In the county.

Q. There were two republicans running for governor in 1874, Green and Chamberlain?—A. There was a fusion ticket in the field.

Q. Were there not two republicans running for governor, and were they not the only candidates?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was not Green a republican?—A. Not that I know of. I don't believe he was.

Q. Hadn't he always been a republican up to that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you mean to say that you do not understand that Green, who ran for governor in 1874, was a republican up to that time?—A. I don't believe he was. We didn't vote for him in our county.

Q. Didn't you understand, and was it not understood generally, that Green was a republican?—A. Not in our county.

Q. You never heard that he was a republican?—A. I don't know as I ever have. I am not acquainted with him.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Did you know that he had always been identified with the republican party?—A. No, sir; he is a graduate of the South Carolina College, and he is naturally a democrat.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Was he known at that time as a democrat, upon your oath?—A. I don't know, sir. His force was in the lower country.

Q. Do you mean to say that you do not know what the politics of Mr. Green were in 1874?—A. I do, sir.

Adjourned

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

T. A. JEFFERSON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Greenwood, Abbeville County; I was bred and born there; and I am about thirty-nine years old.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At box No. 1, Abbeville Court-House. I was deputy marshal.

Q. State what, if anything, you know of any threats being made against republican voters by democrats on the day of the election.—A. On the day of election I saw about one or two. I was marshal, and I prevented that as much as I could, and got them off from the school-house. At last one went away from me, and would not vote, by the intimidation of men around.

Q. What was the intimidation?—A. Men trying to force them that if they did not vote the way they wanted them to, that they should leave their places.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats or intimidation prior to the election? Do you know of any threats against republican voters?—A. O, yes; there would a great deal of it pass in the village.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Tell only what you heard.—A. I tell what I know, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. How far do you live from Abbeville?—A. Fourteen miles.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made by democrats against republicans in your neighborhood?—A. I do; they have even made it a question that it would be "Death, or you vote the way we want you."

Q. What threats, if any, were made as to the privilege of occupying land in case republicans should vote the republican ticket?—A. Well, that they could not live there.

Q. What did you hear?—A. I have heard even this much, that my name is on the subscribed list in the county to be run away. I am on the club-list with them, and they have fought me down to the last minute and won't let me stay any place, not a job of work nor anything else to live. My name is on the list.

Q. Did you hear any threats made by democrats who owned land against republicans who lived on their lands as to what should be done if they voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I heard my brother taken square in the street there, I thought every minute would be his last. I heard him censured to be away from the place, that he had to go away to get away from there.

Q. Do you know anybody that owns land there?—A. I do, a good man.

Q. Who own the lands generally; the democrats?—A. The democrats own a good deal, and some colored men owns some. I own some myself. It is principally owned by the democrats, though.

Q. Where do the colored men live; on the white men's land?—A. Yes, sir; generally.

Q. Have you heard any of those white men who owned land say anything about those who lived on their land, as to what they would do in case those men living on their lands would vote the republican ticket?—A. Heard themselves say the word, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. I have not heard the man to come right out and say the word; I have not heard that, but it has been the general rumor.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of republicans being refused employment because they were republicans?—A. Of course I know a good deal of it if it would stand its value in telling it. It may be different you asking in a law department—it is different, now you want to come right to a fine point, but if you take the country in general you would find it hard enough to live there.

Q. Do you know of any violence being used to republicans?—A. Yes, sir; I know of this: Cornelius Arnold and Louis Wheeler; I know of a number that used violence upon them.

Q. Who used violence upon them?—A. The parties in the neighborhood.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Did you see it?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the Union League?—A. I have been a member for years.

Q. And you are at the present time?—A. Yes, sir; I am a member now.

Q. And you took an oath to vote the republican ticket?—A. I took an oath to support the constitution.

Q. Didn't you take an oath to vote the republican ticket?—A. I did not, sir; to support truth and justice.

Q. Didn't you take an oath to support the republican ticket?—A. Well, sir, if my memory serves me right, according to the reading of the book it is to support truth and justice.

Q. See that you understand me now. Did not you take an oath to vote the republican ticket and support the republican party?—A. Support the republican party.

Q. Support the republican party?—A. I taken an oath in this way—

Q. Answer me directly?—A. I taken an oath simply this way. I taken an oath to simply support that which is right, and that which I conceived to be wrong I taken no oath to support it.

Q. I am going to have you answer this question if you stay all day; now I ask you again, didn't you take an oath to vote the republican ticket and support the republican party?—A. I believe I will study a while now. I won't answer you nothing but the truth. (After studying.) I taken an oath to support the constitution of the State.

Q. I am going to put that question to you until you answer it. Did not you take an oath in that league to vote the republican ticket and support the republican party. Now do you understand that?—A. I do understand that, to support the republican party and support the constitution.

Q. Answer that question directly.—A. I taken an oath in the republican—the Union League; the Union forever, of course—I taken an oath under that flag. I taken an oath to support that which was right—truth and justice.

Q. Now, witness, you cannot get rid of answering this question, and I wish you to answer it carefully. Did you take an oath to vote the republican ticket and support the republican party? You understand that, do you not?—A. Yes, sir; I understand it.

Q. Answer directly—did you or did you not?—A. I taken an oath, of course, in the Union League.

Mr. LAWRENCE, (to witness.) Answer.

A. The republican party, State of South Carolina—well, the republican party, no matter whether it was in South Carolina or Georgia. Well, I want to study how I taken an oath.

Q. Are you going to answer?—A. I am trying to get to it right, as near as I can.

Q. Don't you know whether you took an oath to vote the republican ticket or not?—A. Well, I suppose it must have been that I taken an oath—if that was the way that the ticket was got up; for I know when the tickets first came up I taken an oath to this, as near as my remembrance serves me right, I taken an oath to support the Union. I suppose that was the republican party at that time.

Q. You cannot get rid of answering this question directly.—A. Of course I do not deny answering you correct.

Q. Answer me, then. Did you take an oath to vote the republican ticket?—A. I suppose it must have been that, sir; that and the Union.

Q. Did the oath use the words "republican party"?—A. I suppose it must have.

Q. Do you remember whether it did or not?—A. I do not. That is the reason I can't answer.

Q. How long ago has that been?—A. That is nearly eleven years ago.

Q. Has that Union League been kept up since then?—A. We kept it up a little now and then. We got up the Brotherhood. I have the book at home.

Q. You have the book at home; how long will it take you to get us that book?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. When did you see it last?—A. I have not seen it in a good while.

Q. What did you mean when you said that you had the book?—A. The Brotherhood, I mean.

Q. Have you it now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you send it to us?—A. If I can get it I will send it to Washington.

Q. What is the Brotherhood?—A. That is another organization.

Q. A secret organization?—A. No, sir; it is open. We have open doors.

Q. You take an oath there, do not you?—A. We do take an oath.

Q. Then there is another one—the Laboring Union.—A. I never joined that, but the Brotherhood.

Q. You take an oath there?—A. Yes, sir; we take an oath.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JAMES JACKSON.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Bordeaux, Abbeville County.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. About forty-five years in that township.

Q. Where did you vote on the day of election?—A. At Bordeaux, then Saint Charlotte;

Q. What do you know of people from Georgia voting there?—A. There was three that voted there that day. They came on the day before the election, and they came to the polls next morning to vote. There was some parties said there was more; but I cut two of their tickets, and one voted the full ticket.

Q. Do you know the white men generally who live in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there strangers who voted there that day whom you do not know, besides those you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. I have no specified number, but a great many of them voted there—white men.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of threats being made by men who owned land, democrats, against republicans—living on their land, in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. Well, it was a general threat.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. State what you heard yourself.—A. What I heard them say to the men, you mean?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes; on the day of election or before.

A. Well, I didn't hear any of them say, on the day of the election, that they intended to discharge any of them, but the people said themselves that they were afraid to vote.

Q. Do you know of any republicans coming to the polls and going away without voting?—A. Yes, sir; there was about forty that came on the ground that day, and on the Monday before the election the whites camped out at Liberty, and they were well armed, in different companies; some dressed in blue, some in yellow, some in red, and they had uniforms, some of them; and they shot their pistols so rapidly on Monday that one-half of the republicans did not appear at all. They always number over three hundred votes there, and they were fearful to turn out; and there was about forty came to the poll that day and went off and did not vote for fear of those men that was armed; and the Georgians had threatened to come over on the night before the election and kill us out, and we had to take the woods that night for fear. Those voters came to the polls and saw those strangers there with pistols and red shirts, and they would not vote at all.

Q. How far was that from the voting-place where they camped?—A. It was not more than a little over a quarter of a mile.

Q. Did the republicans have any arms?—A. Not at all; not a one of them.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting before the election?—A. No, sir. I am a preacher, and I never attended any of them. I am a traveling missionary.

Q. How long have you been preaching?—A. I have been preaching four years.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to any other association or society?—A. Nothing but the Union Laboring Society.

Q. You take an oath there, don't you?—A. Take an oath?

Q. Yes; take an oath.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You take an oath to vote the republican ticket, don't you?—A. No, sir. I vote what I please.

Q. Do not you take an oath to vote the republican ticket?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the oath in the Laboring League?—A. Well, it is just to help one another, the poor, &c.

Q. Is there not an oath in the Laboring Union to vote to support the republican party?—A. No, sir; I never taken any such oath as that.

Q. Did you ever hear it?—A. No, sir; none of them ever take any such oath as that.

Q. You say the people at Saint Charlotte, a good many of them, were frightened away; they saw other blacks voting, did not they?—A. Yes, sir; there was others voted. Those forty that didn't vote, they came up last.

Q. They had seen other blacks voting?—A. No, sir; they did not see us voting.

Q. But they knew colored men had voted there?—A. Yes, sir; that they had voted and went away.

Q. That is, they knew that they had voted and that they were not interfered with when they voted?—A. No, sir; there was only one man interfered with, Richmond Tate.

Q. Well, they knew that, with one exception, the colored men had not been interfered with when they voted?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What was done with Richmond Tate?—A. Why, he was asfured. This man Ransom told him if he voted he would kill him.

Q. Was Tate a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was Ransom?—A. He was a democrat, from Georgia.

Q. Did any republicans vote after that?—A. Very few of them.

Q. Did you see any?—A. Yes, sir; I saw several of them vote. I was supervisor, and was standing there.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JOHN WARDLAW sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In Abbeville County. I was born and raised there. I am twenty-three years of age.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of republican voters coming to the polls at Saint Charlotte precinct and going away without voting?—A. Well, I made out a list, and I think there was about forty-five that came there, and on account of the democrats having arms they went back and never voted. They never attempted to shoot them, or nothing of that sort, but through their big blust they scared 'em.

Q. Did the republicans have any arms?—A. Not a one.

Q. What do you know of men from Georgia being at the polls there?—A. There were several of them there. I could not exactly tell how many. I know of one voting there, and that is all that I can say.

Q. Do you know the white people of that precinct generally?—A. I know right smart of 'em.

Q. Were there many strangers at the voting-place that day?—A. Yes, sir; a good many; there was a heap there that I didn't know, and I knows the most of 'em what lives in that precinct.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made against republicans by democrats owning lands in that precinct?—A. O, yes; a good many threats was made before the election.

Q. Did you hear some made?—A. Well, I heard several of 'em talking about if the republicans vote the republican ticket they should not work the land, and that backed a heap of 'em from getting to the box.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the campaign?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any republican meeting being disturbed by democrats?—A. No, sir we met on the sly; they did not know when we met.

Q. Why did you meet on the sly?—A. Case we was affeared to meet.

Q. Afraid of what?—A. Afraid of the democrats coming upon us.

Q. Do you know of any violence being used?—A. None that I knows of. There was not any around the box the day of the election.

Q. None that you saw?—A. None that I saw.

CO'UMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

PARIS SIMPKINS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Edgefield Court-House. I was born and raised in Abbeville. I am twenty-seven years old.

Q. What offices, if any, have you held?—A. I have represented that county twice in the general assembly of this State, the lower house.

Q. Were you a candidate for re-election at the last election, on the 7th of November?—A. With the consent of the committee I will read a statement that I would like to make, and afterwards, if they choose to ask any questions they can do so.

Q. Who prepared it?—A. I prepared it, from what transpired under my own observation.

The witness read the statement, as follows :

I am a resident of Edgefield County; have lived there all my life. I have represented that county twice in the legislature of this State; was a candidate for re-election at the last general election which was held on the 7th day of November. I was at the polls on election-day for the purpose of voting the republican ticket, but did not have the privilege of doing so. The polls at Edgefield Court-House, where I was, No. 1 and 2, were blocked, and otherwise crowded by armed democrats, who were uniformed in red shirts, and from one to two pistols buckled on the outside, and some with sixteen-shooters strapped to their sides, the major part of them being mounted on horses, and using threats of a violent nature toward republicans who would present themselves for the purpose of voting the republican ticket. After witnessing for several hours the violent and formidable demonstration of the democrats to overawe and deter republican voters, and knowing, as I did, that my life had been previously threatened by the democrats for political reasons, I came to the conclusion that if I voted the republican ticket I would be murdered. I know the fact that at least six or eight hundred republicans at Edgefield Court-House, who were at the polls for the purpose of voting the republican ticket, were prevented from doing so. I am quite sure if they had wanted to vote the democratic ticket, they could have done so with perfect safety. I know I could have voted the democratic ticket with perfect ease if I had so desired it. I saw a large number of republicans make several efforts to vote during the day at box No. 1, but as they would get near the polls, the democrats would immediately rush around the place of entrance, and keep the republicans back. The democrats had all voted, but notwithstanding this, they stood there armed and equipped as so many sentinels placed there for the specific object of preventing republicans from voting. During the day the democrats, who were mounted would gallop from box to box sometimes yelling and brandishing their pistols. At about three o'clock in the afternoon, the democrats organized a democratic meeting on the court-house steps, the place of entrance to the polling-precinct No. 1, at which several candidates on the democratic ticket made speeches. This was kept up until the polls were closed; during all this time republicans made repeated efforts to vote, but were not allowed to go up the steps. I would state further, in order to show to what extent the republican leaders were intimidated by the threats and violent demonstrations of the democrats, because of their political sentiments and party fealty, that it was utterly impossible to canvass the county in the interest of the Hayes and Wheeler electors, Congressmen, or State officers. On the day of the election I saw several republicans who had been violently assaulted and beaten over the head with pistols, and severe wounds inflicted on them, because they had endeavored to vote the republican ticket. The vote of the county is largely in excess of that of any previous election. There were about 3,000 votes polled over and above what we were legally entitled to by the census which was recently taken. The majority of the census-takers of Edgefield County were democrats; that census gives the colored men a majority over the white men of 1,678. Republicans were publicly threatened with being discharged from employment, and the probability of being killed, if they persisted in giving their support to the candidates on the republican ticket.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Who did you say prepared this statement?—A. I prepared it.

Q. Did you have any assistance?—A. None, whatever, sir; I of course knew that I had to come before the committee to testify, and I wanted to testify correctly, and I thought I would reduce what had come under my own observation to writing in order that I might not make any misstatements.

Q. You did it without any request from any member of the committee?—A. Yes, sir; I did it without any request, for my own guidance.

Q. You say that a meeting was organized on the court-house steps on the day of election, which prevented the republicans from getting to the voting-place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who addressed that meeting?—A. I don't know all who addressed it, but I do know that General M. C. Butler and Mr. J. C. Sheppard addressed it.

Q. How long did that meeting continue?—A. I suppose about three hours.

Q. State whether any democrats passed through the crowd to the voting-place.—A. I could see them continually going up the steps. The box was held inside the court-house, up-stairs, and of course I did not see them depositing any ballots, but I know they passed through the crowd.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. Do you own land?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Are you a member of the loyal league?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of any other society?—A. No secret society.

Q. Are you a member of the laboring union?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor of any society of that sort?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that the vote cast was nearly three thousand in excess?—A. Nearly three thousand.

Q. You mean by that, I suppose, within a very small number of three thousand?—A. Well, I cannot say that it was more than twenty-nine hundred. I should put it about three thousand.

Q. I want to get at the exact meaning of your statement.—A. Well, I think I could put it in this form: from twenty-five hundred to three thousand.

Q. If it now lies in your mind that it was from twenty-five hundred to three thousand, why did you say in your written statement that there were about three thousand?—A. Well, when I made that statement I didn't know the exact number, and I do not know it yet.

Q. But you meant us to understand that there were nearly three thousand votes in excess?—A. Well, I mean that yet.

Q. Do you know whether there were about three thousand votes in excess or not?—A. I am quite sure there was from twenty-five hundred to three thousand.

Q. But if it is in your mind that the true statement would be from twenty-five hundred to three thousand, why did not you put it so when you prepared that statement for the information of the committee?—A. Well, I said "about;" I didn't propose to be accurate as to numbers.

Q. You are an intelligent man: now, did not you mean us to understand that there were within a very small number of three thousand?—A. I meant you to understand that there were at least twenty-five hundred or three thousand votes in excess of the legal votes.

Q. When you used the expression about three thousand, did not you wish us to understand that it was within a very small number of three thousand?—A. Well, sir, I will explain again. I intended the committee to understand that there were at least twenty-five hundred or three thousand votes in excess.

Q. If you meant that, why didn't you say that instead of saying about three thousand in your written statement, which you say you prepared so carefully?—A. Well, I didn't know that it made any particular difference, as I did not state the number accurately.

Q. You meant us to understand exactly the truth, did not you?—A. That is it.

Q. The exact truth is, as you say now, from twenty-five hundred to three thousand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then why did you not state that?—A. Well, I expected to be interrogated by the committee, and I could then explain.

Q. But you meant to have that statement of yours, which you prepared carefully, as correct as you could make it, didn't you?—A. If I intended to have made it as correct as I could on that point, I would have gone to the secretary of state's office and got the figures, examined the poll-list.

Q. Did you mean to make that statement for our information as correct as you could?—A. As correct as I could without further data.

Q. That is what I mean.—A. Certainly, I did.

Q. Then what has changed your mind since you made that statement so as to make you say now that there were from twenty-five hundred to three thousand?—A. My recollection of the vote is not certain as to whether it was twenty-five hundred or three thousand.

Q. When you wrote that statement you had no accurate recollection as to whether it was twenty-five hundred or three thousand?—A. No, sir; no accurate recollection; but at the same time I am still of the opinion that it was three thousand.

Q. Were there troops stationed at Edgefield Court-House?—A. Yes, sir; I think there were six companies.

Q. They were there during all the time of the election?—A. Not at the Court-House all the time; they were in the county.

Q. How many were there in that town or village of Edgefield Court-House?—A. I think there were three companies.

Q. Three companies in the village, ready to be called on if there was any disturbance?—A. I presume that is what they were there for.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What census is it that you referred to in your written statement?—A. The State census, taken in 1875.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know of any republican meeting being disturbed in that county?—A. Yes.

Q. State what you know of your own knowledge about that.—A. Some time before the election, I don't remember the date, there was a meeting advertised there as a ratification of the nomination made at Cincinnati by the republicans of Hayes and Wheeler. It was advertised that Governor Chamberlain would be there in person to speak at Edgefield Court-House. There was quite a large assemblage there of republicans and democrats, and when Governor Chamberlain was escorted to the stand the stand was simultaneously mounted by General Gary and General M. C. Butler, and General Butler first addressed the meeting. I cannot remember what he said, but I know he addressed the meeting first; and I recollect he said that they proposed to be heard there, and that if they were not allowed half the time by the republicans they would not be responsible for the consequences of what might follow. General Gary also made that statement. The chairman of the meeting proceeded to introduce Governor Chamberlain to the audience as the first speaker. He was interrupted by General Gary, who told him that they did not need any chairman on that occasion, and that before any speaking was done some member of the republican party must first get up and assure the democrats that they would have a show or be permitted to speak in reply. Of course, the chairman of the meeting could not proceed any further. He had only spoken three or four words by way of introducing the governor. He stopped, and conferred with Governor Chamberlain and others who were there as republicans to speak, and the governor decided that it would be better, under the circumstances, to accede to the demands of these gentlemen. Of course, the chairman of the meeting had nothing more to say, but consented to what Governor Chamberlain had said. Governor Chamberlain then got up and spoke for the republicans, and said that it had been agreed that the demands of the democrats would be conceded, or at least that time would be granted them, and that they would be allowed half an hour each. He said he would speak first for half an hour, and General Butler, I think, was to follow, McKay next, and Gary next.

Q. McKay was a republican speaker?—A. He was at that time in the interest of Governor Chamberlain.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. That was before the re-nomination of Chamberlain?—A. Yes, sir. They proceeded in that way, and the democrats rushed around the stand and took charge of the meeting, and the republicans began to leave the meeting, and, in fact, they all did leave before the meeting was concluded.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Why did they leave?—A. Because they felt that there was a riot imminent, and they felt that they would be murdered. That is exactly why they left. I am very free to admit why I left. I was there, and I got away as soon as I could without attracting attention, because I didn't know at what moment there would be a riot. They were all there with two or three pistols each, and some with sixteen-shooters.

Q. State whether the democrats at their meeting allowed a division of time.—A. I have never gone right up to their meetings, but I have been where I could look on and hear the speeches. I was afraid to go to their meetings.

Q. State whether at their meetings they ever allowed a division of time to the republicans.—A. I knew of no republican who has affiliated with the republican party ever speaking at a democratic meeting in Edgefield County.

Q. State whether there was any republican meeting of any consequence at which the democrats didn't demand a division of time.—A. No; I don't know of any. I know that at the last meeting we had at Edgefield Court-House the democrats came, after the meeting was organized, and they marched around it, about 1,800 of them, I suppose, mounted, with red shirts; they marched around where the republicans were assembled, and commenced yelling and going around and around; they marched around and yelled, and so on, and then passed away. Of course, the republicans could not continue their speaking while the others were kicking up all that noise, and the republicans were ordered to give three cheers for Hayes and Wheeler, and both parties were yelling there for a long time. A half an hour after the democrats marched off, General Butler came back, and stood at the stand on horse-back, and the only demand I know of—in fact, it was more of a request—was made by him that he be allowed the privilege of speaking. The chairman of the meeting told him it was a republican meeting, and no joint discussion had been agreed upon, and he could not speak at that meeting; so, of course, he did not urge any further. At that meeting, though, they were situated differently—there were United States marshals to preserve the peace; there were none at the first meeting.

Q. What do you know of republicans remaining away from the polls, in consequence of threats that had been made?—A. I don't know of any, except what I have heard. No one ever told me that they remained away, and I was rather of the opinion that they all came out to the polls; but I know of my own knowledge, as I have stated, that there was quite a number there to vote that didn't have the opportunity to vote.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Were you ever present at a democratic meeting when any request was made by the republicans for a division of time?—A. I don't think there was any republican in Edgefield County that ever had the temerity to ask such a thing.

Q. Were you ever present at a democratic meeting when any such request was made?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

AUGUSTUS HARRIS (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live and what is your age?—Answer. I am about 32; I live at Edgefield Court-House; I have lived there about fifteen years.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. I was deputy United States marshal.

Q. What obstruction, if any, was thrown in the way of republicans voting at the election in Edgefield?—A. Well, sir, they would not let them vote at the court-house at all; the republicans had box No. 2; they would not let them vote at all; I think I was the first colored man that voted there; I know I was.

Q. What prevented the republicans from voting?—A. They would not let them vote; they said that they had been holding the polls heretofore in the forenoon, and now the whites intended to hold them that day until the afternoon, and they called on me as deputy marshal to go up there and see that they voted. I went up and voted, and the colored people went up and voted, and they commenced frailing on them with pistols and sticks, and would not let them vote at all. General Butler rode up and spoke first.

Q. Did you see any violence?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them knock several men over the head.

Q. Who knocked them over the head?—A. Joe Wise was one. He struck a fellow named Joe Butler, and cut a gash in his head, with the lock of his pistol, about an inch and a half long.

Q. What did he strike him for?—A. Because he tried to get in to vote.

Q. What means were employed to enable the republicans to get to vote there at that poll?—A. They had made a rush to vote, and they kept them from it, and then I went down to the camp where General Brannan was, and told him the condition of affairs up at box No. 2, and he said to me, "Well, you will have to wait a minute. I just sent out an officer to every poll to find out, and as soon as he reports, I will tell you what I can do." I said, "It might be too late by the time your officer gets back, because I just left there, and there was about to be a big row." They had been knocking some of the colored men, and blooded up some of them right smart. He says, "Well, I can't help that; you will have to wait." By that time I got on my horse and rode back up there, and the colored men had stopped voting. About fifty or sixty had voted, and they would not let any more vote. So I come back and told him, "I have been up there, and they wouldn't let them vote at all." "Well," says he, "You have got to wait; you colored men want too much; you have been holding the polls at other elections, and now the white men wants a chance." "Well," I says, "I won't dispute your word, but there never has been a time when white men could not vote when they wanted to," and I says, "Now you can see whether they are fixed for a row." He says, "What's that?" I says, "Look at those fellows with double-barreled shooters going to the court-house." He says, "That's so, but that is no reason why there should be a fuss;" and he says, "Well, you colored men want too much, anyway; you have been in the habit of holding the polls during the forenoon. General Gary says so." "Well," says I, "I will make a demand on you whether you send the troops or not," and I wrote out a demand and handed it to him; he took it and tore it up, and threw it down and said, "I will see directly." By that time another assistant deputy marshal came to report to me, and he says, "Major, will you take troop; up there?" and he said, "Yes," and he got out the troops, and they went up there.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What major was that?—A. I think it was Major-Kellogg. I know him very well when I see him, but I don't know his name; the officer said to me when he started out, "Are you going up?" I told him "Yes." Says he, "Come on," and we walked up together. When we got there, the whites was there with their horses around the school-house, and the republicans could not get near. When the officer got up he lined his troops off about ten or fifteen yards from where the horses was, and he says, "You fellows must get off and let the people vote." Says they, "We ain't going to move a foot until General Gary comes." By that time he loped up on his horse, and he says, "Hello, Gus, there is going to be hell up there; what are you going to do about it?" I says, "I don't know; we propose to open these polls." He says, "You may have a God damned good time a-doing it." And he told them to move, and three or four of them came up to him and says, "General, what are you going to do; give back?" He says, "Not a God damned inch; you hold these polls, as I told you;" he says, "Damn the troops, you hold these polls as I tell you." They done just as he ordered them to do. They held it until, after a while, this Major Kellogg sent two guards and an officer, and told them to open a highway, so that the people could pass in. Even after he done that, while a colored man would be going in, these men would be sitting on their horses over him, and say, "You God damned radical son of a bitch," and they would hit them as they went in.

Q. What did they hit them with?—A. With sticks and pistols; if they hadn't sticks they took their pistols. I know several had to hold their heads down that way, [illustrating,] with the blood streaming out where they were hit, as they went in at the door.

Q. Did the republicans have any arms there that you saw?—A. No, sir; I didn't see any. I suppose some few men had on pistols, but I didn't see them.

Q. Do you know of any arms being there?—A. Yes, sir; there was a wagon about fifteen stops, I guess, from the school-house, down on the hill-side; as I went to the back window I saw a wagon standing there. It looked as if it had food in it, and then I saw a dozen double-barrel shot-guns lying in the wagon.

Q. Was that wagon removed?—A. Yes, sir; it was taken right away. As soon as the troops came up they took it over to General Gary's.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of republicans coming to the voting-place and going away without voting?—A. I know a good many that came there, and staid all day in the line trying to vote, but they found they could not do it, and several of them (over a hundred of them—two hundred, may be) left, and went to see if they could vote at the court-house. That was about half past five or six o'clock. They asked me, when did the polls close. I told them, about half past six. They said they would go up to the court-house. I went along with them. There was about two hundred of them followed me up, and when we got as near the polls as that building across the street, I think it was General Butler that was up speaking to the democrats, and they were all standing there with double-barrel shot-guns and muskets, and they just told them they would dare any republicans to come and vote at that poll.

Q. Did the republicans get to vote at that poll?—A. They didn't.

Q. How many went away without voting?—A. I think there was about three hundred that did not vote. Some wouldn't lose the chance of voting at the school-house.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of people from Georgia voting at Edgefield?—A. There was some men there from Augusta, Georgia, that I know personally. I know that Captain Fred Smith voted there, and Colonel Hewett voted there.

Q. Any others?—A. They were about the only persons I know personally.

Q. Did you know where they resided?—A. Yes, sir; they resided in Georgia. I knew them well; they used to live in Edgefield; they have been gone to Augusta only about four years.

Q. Do you know the white people generally who live in Edgefield?—A. I think I do, as a general thing, if I don't know their names; I know the faces of pretty nearly all the men in the county, because I have a great deal of business with them.

Q. State whether there were a great many strangers, white men, who voted at Edgefield on the day of the last election?—A. Yes, sir; I know some men there from North Carolina. I don't know their names, but I know they were dealers in whisky and drummers; they voted. I know one that voted at that school-house four or five times, and he came out and put on a red shirt and went to the court-house.

Q. What did you hear farmers, who were democrats, say to the colored men, republicans, as to what should be done if they voted the republican ticket?—A. I know one very large farmer there came up with about a dozen colored men to vote that worked on his place, and he says, "Look here, boys, if you are going to vote against me—are you going to still persist in voting that damn radical ticket?" They says, "O, yes; that is the party I must be 'ong to." He says, "Well, if you vote that ticket you just go on home, and be off my place when I get home. Just take your wives and children and get off. I don't care where you go to, but you must be away when I get home." They voted, and started off as if they was going to do it.

Q. Do you know whether threats were made to any considerable extent through the county?—A. Yes, sir; there was threats of that kind made all over the county.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings during the campaign?—A. We had only two republican meetings in the campaign. We had one and attempted to have one.

Q. Was the first one advertised as a republican meeting alone, or for joint discussion?—A. As a republican meeting; we had not learned anything about the joint excursion; that was the only experience that we had on that day.

Q. What occurred?—A. When the meeting was called the republicans went over to the place where we had our meeting at the academy. When we got over there—you know men looks more than they really is on horseback—well, I will say there was about three hundred on horseback, headed by General Butler, and Gary and Sheperd, they was in front. They went on over to the stand. After seeing the republicans started, they went over and got there first, because they were on horseback. Cain was the republican chairman of the meeting. He got on the stand, and Governor Chamberlain and Smalls and Simpkins, and my brother and myself. General Butler says, "Hush; you don't need him; I am the chairman of this meeting to-day." Some one attempted to put the motion, and he said, "It is no use to put it, because he can't act. I am the chairman of this meeting to-day, and we are going to have part of this time or you don't have any meeting." It went on that way. He introduced General Gary, and he got up and spoke, and went on and abused the governor a good deal.

Q. Did they agree upon a joint discussion?—A. No, sir; we did not agree upon it. They agreed to it themselves. General Butler said that if Chamberlain wanted to speak, we will give him half an hour, but unless my men speak, you don't have any meeting here to day.

Q. Was there a joint discussion?—A. Well, Chamberlain got up and attempted to speak, but they bothered him so that he could not speak.

Q. Who did speak?—A. General Butler, General Gary, and Sheperd.

Q. Butler and Gary were democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hold any smaller meetings around through the county?—A. Well, we could not hold any.

Q. Why not?—A. We knew it would be dangerous for any of us to leave the town. General Gary told me that himself. He says, "If any of you fellows leave this town, God, you won't come back here to hold your meetings, unless you let us go in with you."

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you belong to any other society?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you belong to the laboring union?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were marshal at the court-house?—A. Yes, sir; both precincts were in my charge.

Q. You were at precinct No. 2 most of the time?—A. Yes.

Q. You went there and remained how long?—A. I went there before the polls were opened and I remained there about half an hour.

Q. How long did you remain during the day?—A. I staid there off and on. I rode backward and forward. I don't know particularly how long I staid.

Q. Were you at No. 2 more than you were at No. 1?—A. I think I was there more.

Q. And these remarks of General Gary that you have given were made in the presence of the troops?—A. Certainly they were.

Q. He told you that he did not care a damn for the troops right in their presence and hearing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They could hear what he said?—A. Yes, sir; they could hear it as well as I could.

Q. And notwithstanding the presence of the troops the white people continued to keep the voters away from the polls?—A. They did.

Q. Even when the troops had made an opening for them to go up, the white people would hit the colored voters with their pistols and make the blood run?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the troops did not interfere?—A. The troops said they had no right to interfere.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was that at box No. 1 or at box No. 2?—A. That was at box No. 2.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. And at box No. 2 about three times as many colored men as white people made out to vote, I believe?—A. No, sir; I don't think so.

Q. What do you think was the proportion? The white people I suppose all voted the democratic ticket?—A. I presume so.

Q. Well, that is what you understood, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now what is your idea of the proportion of colored voters to whites who voted there that day?—A. Well, I don't know, sir. I did not take particular notice about that. Most of the republicans who voted at all voted over there.

Q. But you can form some idea of the proportion. Were there twice as many colored republicans as democrats who voted at box No. 2?—A. I could not form any idea, for this reason: they came in squads from every direction and voted and went right off—some did and some staid there all the time. They kept about one hundred or two hundred there all the time.

Q. Did more white men vote at box No. 2 than colored?—A. No, sir; I think more republicans voted there.

Q. Twice as many republicans?—A. I don't think there was twice as many.

Q. This trouble you have described began early in the day; you went down for the troops in the forenoon, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How early did the obstruction to the republicans voting begin?—A. They began that when the polls first opened.

Q. Then they began to keep the republicans from voting, threatening to kill them, &c., when the polls first opened that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They kept it up?—A. Yes, sir; they kept it up.

Q. And they absolutely beat the republicans over the head for voting during the day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then they got up on the steps and had this democratic caucus or meeting?—A. That was about 5 o'clock.

Q. And after that they would not let any colored men go up?—A. No, sir.

Q. And then there was this trouble in the afternoon when General Gary came up and kept everybody away?—A. That was in the forenoon.

Q. How long was that kept up?—A. Well, it was a continual thing.

Q. Then it was a continual thing that they absolutely kept the colored men from getting to the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when the colored men persisted in going to the polls, the whites would beat them over the head, so that the blood would run down as you have described?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And neither the soldiers, the marshal, nor anybody else interfered?—A. No, sir; there was no marshal but me; I done all that I could do.

Q. You did not go to the troops and tell them to seize those men?—A. Yes, sir; I went to Kellogg twice.

Q. And he would not do it?—A. He said he had no orders to do it.

Q. Well, he would not do it. He saw the man hit, or he might have seen him hit, as you have described?—A. Yes, sir; and I think if you had him, he would testify that he saw him hit.

Q. If all this obstruction was kept up during the day, it could not be possible that twice as many republicans as democrats voted there?—A. I don't know about twice as many. I know there was colored men in line about four deep; about as far as from here to the next corner, and they staid that way.

Q. Do you think there were twice as many colored republicans who voted that day at box No. 2 as there were democrats?—A. No, sir; I don't think there was twice as many.

Q. You think that with such terrible obstruction as you have described, it would have been impossible?—A. Well, I guess so. They was determined to vote, if they could. Some of them would have voted if they got killed.

Q. Were you ever present at any republican meetings, except the two that you have spoken of, in the last campaign?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you keep any account to ascertain what number of republicans voted at poll No. 2 as compared with democrats?—A. No, sir; I didn't.

Q. And you do not pretend to state with any accuracy the relative number of republican and democratic votes?—A. I do not.

Q. But you know that republicans went away without getting to vote?—A. Yes, sir; I know that.

JESSE JONES (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside and what is your age?—Answer. I reside at Edgefield Court-House. I am twenty-five years old, and have lived there all my life.

Q. State what you know about any violence or intimidation against any republicans during the recent campaign or during the election.—A. I was commissioner of elections. There was box number one and box number two at Edgefield Court-House. On the morning of the 7th of November I arose at 6 o'clock, and went to box number one to vote. I was there until 10 o'clock. I suppose at least two thousand colored men waited there until 9 or 10 in the day before a single man of them voted. The polls were surrounded by about four or five hundred white men, with red shirts, and on horses, a great many of them round the door and preventing colored men from getting up the steps. Then, there was a great many dismounted round the box, and they said that no Chamberlain men should vote there. We made an application to the marshal to see General Brannan, who was in command, to see if we could get a detachment of troops to enable some of the colored men to go and vote. There was complaint made to me several times, and he finally said, the last time, "Who is surrounding the polls?" They says, "The white men have surrounded the polls, and no colored man can vote." He says, "Well, you must know those are white men." He seemed to speak as if they were privileged to vote. Senator Cain, from Edgefield, and myself and the other commissioner of election, went down to General Brannan and asked him to send up some troops, that we had at least three or four hundred men there to try to vote. The white men had completed their voting at box number one, but they surrounded the polls to prevent others from voting, and we asked him to send up troops. He just stood in the door and would not say whether he would send them or not; and while we was asking, three or four of the leading democrats in town came up to where we was standing and said to him, "By God, your men have voted already; and, by God, you shun't vote; 'tis a damn trick you are playing." While the conversation was going on the crowd of colored men held up their right hands and swore they had not voted that day. Some of the white men cursed and swore in the presence of General Brannan, and offered $100 to some parties that was holding him to turn him loose to fight him in the presence of the troops. There was very little protection from the troops. We staid there until near 10 o'clock, and not a single colored man voted there. We went up to the school-house to box number two. There had not been any troops sent there at all until about 10 or 11 o'clock, and the white men were there with large hickory clubs, ax-helves, and pistols, and Remington rifles. They had a whole wagon-load of arms standing off about twenty yards from the grounds. They all stood around the box, and no colored man was permitted to vote. Some tried to go in to vote, but they were beaten with sticks and the blood knocked out of their heads. That was about 11 o'clock. We sent up to see if we could not get troops, and Major Kellogg went up to the box, and no colored man was permitted to vote until he got there. At that box we had about five hundred majority—the only box in the county. We have always had, in Edgefield, at these two boxes, about fifteen hundred at least.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of colored men going away from the polls without getting an opportunity to vote?—A. I know, I think, at least eight hundred that left the polls. They staid there until nearly six o'clock and found it was impossible to vote, and then they left. I didn't vote, and I tried from six o'clock in the morning until six o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made against the republicans on the day of the election, or before it, by democrats owning land, that the republicans should not stay on their land if they voted the republican ticket?—A. Those threats were universal throughout the whole county.

Mr. ABBOTT. State only what you heard yourself.—A. Yes, sir; I heard it myself. It was universal. It was a matter of public speeches on the stump by democrats.

Q. What class of men generally owned the land in that county?—A. White men, nearly altogether.

Q. Do you know anything of people from Georgia voting at Edgefield on the day of the election?—A. I saw a great many strange white men voting there. I have been clerk of the court there for two years. I have lived in Edgefield all my life, so I would know a great many of the men in Edgefield County. But there were men there that day that I never saw before or since, and men run their horses down voting from one box to another; some of the horses died. We were told there by prominent men, "Have you voted?" "Yes." "God damn you, go and vote again; I am responsible; vote as you damn please; let the consequences take care of themselves."

Q. Did you know of any double ballots by democrats?—A. No, sir; only what the sub-county canvassers reported to the commissioners. I know of men that voted twice in Edgefield.

Q. Did you see them vote twice?—A. Yes, sir. The evidence is this way: men that came in from the country I heard them say—

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state what you heard them say?

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You went first to box No. 1?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were there at about what hour in the morning?—A. I was there about six o'clock in the morning.

Q. How many colored men were there then?—A. There was nearly a thousand colored men there at six o'clock in the morning.

Q. How many got there before you went down for the troops when they would not let you vote?—A. There was at least fifteen hundred.

Q. I understood you to say that there were about two thousand colored men there?—A. Well, I think there was; I mean about nine o'clock in the day. There was at least from fifteen hundred to two thousand.

Q. I understood you to say that in your judgment there were two thousand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You think there were two thousand there together in one crowd and none of them permitted to vote?—A. Yes, sir; none of them permitted to vote at nine o'clock that day.

Q. Then you went for the United States troops?—A. Yes, sir; with Senator Cain. Senator Cain made the request.

Q. And General Brannan refused to send any troops?—A. He did not refuse. He did not say anything.

Q. Well, he did not send any troops?—A. He did not.

Q. And you were not able to get from him an assent that troops should be sent to that poll?—A. No, sir.

Q. And no troops were sent so far as you know?—A. No troops were sent.

Q. Did you go back to that or to the other box?—A. To the other box.

Q. And you could not vote during the day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can't you tell me what time you reached box No. 2?—A. I suppose about ten minutes after nine.

Q. You remained at box No. 1 until nine o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you left box No. 2 and went to the military and tried to get them to go to No. 1?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you go for the military—before you went to box No. 2?—A. I went from box No. 1 to box No. 2, and after coming back from box No. 2 I went for the military.

Q. When did you return to box No. 2 a second time?—A. I suppose about half after nine.

Q. And at that time the polls were in possession of the white men, as I understand you?—A. Entirely.

Q. How long did they remain so?—A. They remained there till dark.

Q. The polls entirely in possession of the white men?—A. Yes, sir; both boxes. They were on horses, and whenever they saw colored men going from one box to the other they had couriers and they rode off just as fast as they could to head off the colored men.

Q. You mean that they prevented the colored people from voting at box No. 2?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They surrounded the polls and beat the colored men, I suppose, when they attempted to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there troops there in the course of the day?—A. Yes, sir; they went there, I suppose, about ten o'clock, and remained there during the day.

Q. And you say that in the presence of the troops the polls were surrounded, and the black people prevented from getting to the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From ten o'clock clear up to the close of the polls?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. I understood you so. At ten o'clock you found the whites in possession?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did they remain in possession?—A. Till Major Kellogg went there with his troops. That was near ten o'clock.

Q. You got there about ten, didn't you?—A. About half past nine.

Q. I understood you to say that after Major Kellogg got there with his troops the democrats still remained in possession of the polls?—A. They did until he ordered them away.

Q. How long was it before he ordered them away?—A. He ordered them away in five or ten minutes; they didn't move even then.

Q. How long before they went away from the polls?—A. They would not leave them at all.

Q. Then they staid and obstructed the polls, notwithstanding the presence of the military?—A. Yes, sir; notwithstanding the military.

Q. And kept the blacks all day from voting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And would beat them if any of them attempted to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that really the blacks could not vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did not vote?—A. No, sir; a great many of them did not.

Q. How could any of them vote if they were obstructed and beaten in the way you have described?—A. Well, they did vote in some instances.

Q. You remained in plain sight of the poll all day; how many voted, should you think?—A. I suppose about two or three hundred I saw voting. The troops had to stand out and take in ten at a time.

Q. But if the polls were in possession of the democrats, and they were beating the black men and keeping them away, how did you get in those platoons of ten at a time?—A. An officer would come up—the corporal of the guard.

Q. Then the corporal interfered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as often as a black man wanted to vote the officers interfered, didn't they?—A. No, sir; because there was eight or nine hundred that did not vote at all.

Q. Do you mean to say that any man asked to have an opportunity to vote and the soldiers would not give it to him?—A. They obstructed the entrance to the box so that the soldiers had to go in at the window. They surrounded the door with their horses, and the troops themselves had to go in at the window.

Q. Then the white men really took possession of the polls?—A. Yes, sir; all day.

Q. And you think there were only two or three hundred blacks that voted?—A. O, I know there was more than that, because I saw that many.

Q. But you saw all that voted?—A. No, sir; because I went from one box to the other, trying to vote from six o'clock in the morning until six in the afternoon.

Q. But they voted at both places?—A. Yes.

- Q. And you saw them voting?—A. I saw a few.
- Q. You could have voted there as well as the others, couldn't you?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Why not?—A. I will give you my reasons. After leaving box No. 2 I went back to box No. 1, the court-house box, and tried to vote.
- Q. What did you do in trying to vote?—A. I had about three hundred colored men with me going to the polls to vote, and when I got up there a man halloosed, "Democrats, dismount and defend your rights." At that time they was round the polls with their horses and three or four pistols stuck around them; the horses were several tiers deep around the box, and we then called upon General Brannan to send troops so that we could vote—that the white men had finished voting there, and here was three or four hundred colored men that had not voted at all. He did not say whether he would send troops or not.
- Q. You told us that. When you saw platoons of the colored people going up to vote why did you not go too?—A. I never saw platoons.
- Q. Well, eight or ten men together; I call them platoons.—A. I never saw that many.
- Q. You have told us that you saw eight or ten colored men at a time going up to vote.—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you see more than one colored man go up to vote at a time?—A. Not at box No. 1.
- Q. Did you at box No. 2, where the troops were?—A. Yes; I saw ten or twelve go in there.
- Q. When you saw them do that, why could not you go in and vote as well as others?—A. Because the crowd was so terrible around the box, and it was rather late.
- Q. But why couldn't you go in as well as other colored men?—A. From the simple fact that the crowd was so great.
- Q. You mean that the other colored men did what you could not do?—A. A good many of them stood heavy licks over their heads that I would not risk.
- Q. Do you mean to say that these platoons of eight or twelve colored men, under the protection of the soldiers, to be taken to the polls to vote, were beaten over their heads as they went up to vote?—A. Yes, sir; and I mean to say, in addition to that, that I saw them push them away from the officer, and push and beat them over the head.
- Q. What officer was it from whose possession you saw men taken and beaten over the head?—A. I think it was Major Falk. He is now at Edgefield Court-House. I did not say that he had them in his possession. The corporal was standing at the door, and he would say, "Come in," and one or two would come in.
- Q. You have instanced Major Falk as the man from whose protection black men were taken and beaten over the head?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That is true, I suppose?—A. 'Tis true, sir.
- By the CHAIRMAN:
- Q. Was Colonel Randall one of the officers there?—A. That I do not know.
- Q. What other officers were there that you were in communication with?—A. Major Kline and Major Kellogg. Kellogg is here now.
- By Mr. LAWRENCE:
- Q. You say you saw two or three hundred colored men voting at box No. 2?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You don't know how many voted there while you were absent?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

LEWIS CASS CARPENTER sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Please state your age and place of residence.—A. I am forty-one years of age, and live in Columbia. I have been in business here for eight years, and I have resided here for six years. I have been in the State off and on for eight years; part of the time residing at Charleston and part of the time here.

Q. What office do you now hold?—A. I am collector of internal revenue for this State.

Q. Were you a candidate for any office at the last election?—A. I was a candidate for Congress from the third congressional district of this State.

Q. At what points were troops stationed during the political campaign in that district?—A. At Columbia, at Newberry, at Abbeville, prior to the election, and I think on the day before the election there were some stationed in Oconee County and also in Anderson County, but I don't know about that; I never saw them there.

Q. About what was the republican majority in that congressional district at the election two years ago, and what was the democratic majority this year?—A. The majorities differ somewhat. Judge Hoge, who succeeded me in the Forty-fourth Congress, received thirty-five hundred and some odd majority in 1874. He was the republican candidate against General McGowan. Mr. Chamberlain's majority for governor was forty-nine hundred and seventy-two. The majority for Aiken, the democrat, for the next Congress is between five and six thousand, I think.

Q. State whether republican meetings were interrupted in that district during the canvass.—A. When the canvass first began I was in New York. I received a telegram to be here on the 14th of October, when my canvass began, and I reached here on the morning of the 15th. My first meeting was at Newberry. One meeting had been held in my district, at Lexington, on the Saturday before I reached here. I was present at the meeting at Newberry with Mr. Taft and Professor Greener, who went to accompany me through my district and speak with me. We reached Newberry between ten and eleven o'clock in the day. We found the public square where we were to speak occupied by mounted and a med men, democrats. They occupied the whole public square in front of the court-house. We were to speak from the court-house steps, and they were placed so closely that it was impossible for anybody else to get into the square. We went upon the stand, and I sent a request to Mr. Pope, the intendant of the town, that they should give us at least half the public square. He ascended the steps part of the way and requested them to give us part of the square, which they refused to do. We waited I suppose fifteen minutes for them to make this arrangement, but they made none. They would not give us any chance at all. We deliberated about opening the meeting, and finally decided to speak off the end of the piazza. On the right-hand side, facing the court-house square, was a vacant spot, where from one hundred and fifty to two hundred men could stand. Our men got around to that opening and formed themselves there. Mr. Taft was introduced as the first speaker by the chairman of the meeting, Mr. Joseph D. Boston, who was also the chairman of the county. It was a republican meeting, called as such, advertised as such, and when the republican chairman went on the stand to introduce the speaker he advertised it as such, reading the call. He introduced Mr. Taft as the first speaker. Mr. Taft began his speech, and, with constant interruptions all the way through, finished it, I suppose, in the course of twenty minutes or half an hour.

Q. By whom were those interruptions made?—A. By these men sitting on their horses.

Q. Democrats?—A. I suppose they were; they were white men. After he concluded, I was introduced. Some one in the assembly—who he was I don't know—asked that they should hear me quietly. I spoke perhaps three minutes without interruption, and from that time on (I don't suppose I spoke more than fifteen or twenty minutes at the outside) I don't think my voice could have been heard across this room. Sitting in front of me was the commander of this detachment that was occupying the square, Mr. Lipcomb. I had not spoken more than four or five minutes before some one in the party says, "That's a damned lie; you lie, God damn you," and then it was taken up by the crowd all around. "Bring him down!"—"Take him off there!" I paid no attention to parties interrupting me, and tried to talk a little, but I couldn't be heard. While I was speaking there was a slight commotion made to the left of me, and these parties surged down to the left of them and the right of me toward the people in front of me that I was trying to talk to. I spoke probably five or ten minutes afterward and stopped, saying that I found that they were not disposed to hear me, and I would give way to some person that they would listen to. I went back from where I was speaking, and Professor Greener was introduced. He is a professor in the university here in Columbia. He began his speech and went along quietly for two or three minutes, and then they raised the same objection to him that they did to me. They told him that he lied, and that he was a "God-damned nigger," and so on; but he persevered and tried to talk for, I should think, thirty or forty minutes. I stood back of him not farther than across this room, and I could not hear one word in ten that he uttered. I was not more than twenty-five or thirty feet from him, on the same piazza with him, but I could not hear because of the noise and commotion below. They applied the same epithets to him—"You lie!"—"You are a damned liar!"—"You are a damned nigger!"—and everything of that kind. When he ceased speaking, the meeting closed. The chairman of the meeting never introduced any speaker after he introduced the first one. I was introduced by some person that I never saw before, a person who was not connected with the meeting. After Professor Greener closed we started down to the depot. I was going home the same night. General Purvis, who was also there, was to speak after we had got through. He remained there that night. Professor Greener also remained there. He was to go with me the next day to Abbeville. I came home that night. On our way to the train I was in company with Lieutenant Anderson, of the United States Army, in citizen's dress. He was stationed at Laurens; he was on his way to Charleston to meet his wife. The train from Laurens comes down to Helena, about a mile and a quarter or a mile and a half, and waits there for the train from Greenville. Lieutenant Anderson had three or four hours to stay in Newberry. These horsemen followed us all the way down to the depot, shouting and cursing. I was ahead of Lieutenant Anderson, and as we reached the platform I walked upon the platform, and lost sight of him until I saw him in the midst of a dozen of these men who were all around. I could not hear what was said, but there was some loud talking, and he finally got through and got upon the platform with me. Mr. Aiken, my competitor for congressional honors, was standing on the platform at the same time, a few feet from me. Two of these men on horseback rode up and said to me, "You never shall be elected to Congress; this man we are going to elect, not you." I said, "Very well, gentlemen, if this man gets a majority of the votes, no man will acquiesce quicker than I will." Aiken said nothing. They bantered me three or four minutes in that way, when the train came in, and we took it and came home. The next day I had to go to Abbeville to meet my engagement for Wednesday. This was Monday. On Tuesday I left here to go to Abbeville in company with Colonel Low, General Dennis, Mr. Kirkland, and Mr. Thompson. Low, Dennis, and Kirkland were deputy United States marshals; the other gentleman was a United States commissioner. We went on until we passed Silver Tree, which is a depot in Newberry County. The first place we were interrupted was at Ninety-Six. I was sitting in the ladies' car with Colonel Low, and there were several ladies present and quite a number of gentlemen. When we reached Ninety-Six, Thompson, Dennis, Kirkland, and Mr. Taft and Professor Greener (who had got on at Newberry) were in the smoking-car. Three men came into the car at Ninety-Six. One of them had a wooden leg—I think his left leg. In his vest he had two pistols, crossed, with the butts sticking out, and one in his hand. The three passed into the car, the man with the wooden leg ahead. He said, "He is not here; no governor here," and they passed out at the end of the car. This was the rear car. When they got out on the platform some one told them that I was in the car; who it was that told them I do not know. They immediately came on to the front end of the car again. At that time there was an engine company on the train going from here to Greenville to take part in the parade. Two or three of those men came on to the front end of the car, and told these parties which was Carpenter; they said, "That's him back there; that red-whiskered man; that's Cass Carpenter back there," and they came back within five or six feet of me, and sat down on the arms of the seats. This man with the wooden leg sat nearest me, almost opposite to me, with his pistol in his hand. They did not say a word to me, but they talked to each other, talked at me. This man said, "Is this Cass Carpenter?" pointing at me, and the other fellows said, "Yes, that's the son of a bitch—that red-whiskered man." Colonel Low sat in front of me. I said nothing to him, and they said nothing directly to me. In the course of three or four minutes Captain Land, who had charge of the train as conductor, came in and ordered them out, and they left the car. Just as they were leaving, Mr. Tolbert, who was a candidate for superintendent of education, came into the cars. I said to him, "Mr. Tolbert, are you going up to Abbeville?" He said, "Yes." This wooden-leg man says, "So am I, too." Just then they walked out of the cars. We had no more interruptions there. When we reached Greenwood there was quite a number on the outside of the cars, and they greeted me very much as they had done at Ninety-Six. They called me a "damned radical son of a bitch," and wanted to take me out of the cars, and so on; but nobody came in. When we reached the dinner-station, and the place where we change cars for Abbeville, we left the main train and went into the ladies' car. There were, I think, five or six ladies and as many children. I went to the front end of the car, nearest the engine. A great many colored republicans there knew me, and they followed me in. I stood up with my back to the door three seats from the front, and the colored men formed all around me. The seat where I was standing was turned backward. The other seat on the other side was facing the engine. Between us was a place for a stove. Colonel Low, Mr. Thompson, the United States commissioner, and General Dennis, were in this open space. There was quite a number of people outside. They said there were two hundred, but I don't think there were more than fifty or sixty. They were very abusive to me. The first expression that I understood was, "Take out the damned radical son of a bitch and hang him here." I of course did not feel in the very best humor. I did not feel as I would have felt in a place where there was nothing of this kind going on, and I was constantly on the lookout. Thompson was walking up and down in the little open space. Colonel Low stood right beside him, and Dennis beside me. These fellows kept saying, "Kill him; shoot him; don't let him get in here." A man came into the car and touched me on the shoulder from behind, and said "Where are you going to sleep to-night?" He was a white man. I did not know him, and I turned around suddenly and said, "What is that to you?" When I answered he had edged his way through the crowd and got up close by me. Colonel Low said to him, "Here! I am United States marshal, and I do not want any trouble here. I have come here to preserve the peace." The other man replied, "I don't care a God damn if you are a United States marshal;" and then he said, "O, I don't want any trouble. I simply asked Mr. Carpenter because I wanted to call and talk with him." And he turned abruptly and left me. His name was D. B. Glynph. There was another very much younger man seated at my left, four seats in front of me. He had annoyed me very much by pointing me out and saying, "That is the son of a bitch; that's Cass Carpenter. He's got a stove-pipe hat on, and red whiskers." I stood it as long as I could, and at last I said to Colonel Low, "I wish you would ascertain for me that young man's name." The young man jumped up and said, "My name is Gury. I belong to the Mart Gary stock." I said, "I am very glad of that," and I took my book out of my pocket and wrote his name down on a piece of paper. He turned to the men outside and said, "He's taking your names down." He got up and left the car, and I didn't see him any more. In about two minutes afterward the car started, and there were no further interruptions until we reached Abbeville. One of these men, who had been on the car insulting me and talking badly about me, called General Dennis aside and said that he did not mean anything; that he was only joking with me; that he knew me very well. We went to Abbeville and staid at Mrs. Holland's house, and at our meeting the next day I suppose we had between two and three thousand present. None of those gentlemen came there at all. It was perfectly quiet and orderly. That was the second meeting at Abbeville.

Q. There were troops near there at that time?—A. Yes, sir; there were troops there at that time. They had been sent there about four days before we went there. The meeting was perfectly quiet and orderly, and we left the next morning, driving across the country, thirty-three miles, in the rain to Anderson. Although there was railroad communication, we thought it best to go across the country. We arrived there about five o'clock in the afternoon, having started about nine in the morning. The meeting at Anderson was to take place the next day, the 20th. We spoke at Abbeville on the 18th and at Anderson on the 20th. I stopped at what they call the Sentinel Hotel. In the morning the rifle-clubs came in armed and mounted. They had been led to believe there would be a joint discussion. Mr. Hoyt had come to me the night before to ask me if there was to be a joint discussion, and I told him that I was under instructions from the State central committee, and that I could not go beyond those instructions; that they had sent instructions to the chairman of every county committee to permit no joint discussions, and I was simply a speaker sent out by the committee. When the rifle-clubs came in the next morning they rode in front of my hotel, and they took occasion to give some of their usual salutes to me. They held their meeting on the fair-ground, and we held ours at what is called the Greeley Institute, a school-house for the colored people. Fifteen or twenty of these men came down there, but no interruption took place at all. I was waited upon that afternoon by a delegation from their rifle-clubs, saying that they had no disposition to harm me; that while they did not like my politics, or the cause I was advocating, they had no disposition to do me any personal harm. I thanked them and told them that I had no disposition to harm anybody; that I wanted an opportunity to discuss my politics from my own stand-point, in my own way. That night we started for Walhalla, and arrived there about seven o'clock in the evening. I was treated, when I went to take the train, very much as I had been treated at Cokesbury, with the exception that persons did not come into the cars. I spoke at Waloola on the 21st. The people would point me out as I sat in the car and say, "That's Carpenter; that red-whiskered man," and they would use the epithets that had been used at other places. On the way up to Walhalla I had no interruption from anybody. We had our meeting there the next day, at the school-house. A delegation waited on me and asked if there was to be a joint discussion. I told them, as I had stated at Anderson, that I had no authority to agree to a joint discussion; that I was simply acting under the orders of the State committee, and if they had agreed to a joint discussion they had not informed me. We went to our meeting. I suppose we had about three or four hundred republicans present, and quite as many of the democracy, mounted and armed. We spoke from the school-house door. There had been some rude steps there, but they had decayed, and the door was four or five feet from the ground. Professor Greener was the first speaker. He went to the door and began his speech. There were only a very few persons in the building; the officers of the meeting and a few old gentlemen that could not hear unless they were close to the speaker, sat at the rear of the speaker. I had gone to the back of the building and gone out of the window, which was about three feet from the ground. The building was surrounded by scrub-oaks. Down in the rear of the building, about a hundred feet, was a spring. I was sitting on the stump of a tree, very close to the building, when I heard some persons near the spring in very loud conversation. I could not hear what they said, but I could hear that they were in angry conversation, and in the course of a minute or two I saw them come up to the building. One of them was very much under the influence of liquor, and he said, "I'll shoot the damned nigger; I'll shoot him anyhow," and he jumped in at the window in an instant, before his friend could catch him. His friend jumped in after him. Professor Greener, of course, heard nothing of this. I walked deliberately to the window and spoke to the man as he walked up. There was a long bench behind the professor. I said to him, "You must not do anything of the kind in there, because if you do you will get hurt." Mr. Alexander Bryce, jr., was the presiding officer of the meeting. A colored woman had gone down and called Brice at the same time, and he came up and spoke to this young man, and said, "I took you out of the guard-house yesterday; now you must get out of the way and go away." The young man said, "Very well, Mr. Bryce, if you say so I will do it." He sprang out of the window again, and this friend of his took him away, and I never saw any more of him. Professor Greener finished his speech, and Mr. Tolbert was introduced. He spoke, may be, thirty-five minutes, with such interruptions as questions being asked all the time, and such sallies as that he was a damned liar, and so on; but aside from this he got through. It came to my turn, and I went on the stand. In the mean time they backed up a large produce-wagon, and I stepped into it instead of standing at the door. I suppose I spoke ten or fifteen minutes without interruption, and then they began to serve me as they had done at Newberry. They said it was a damned lie, and I was a damned liar, and I was a damned liar. I turned to the president of the meeting and said, "I can't go on in this way. If these people won't hear me I will go off the stand." A man named Dendy, the probate judge of the county, rose and said, "Listen to Mr. Carpenter, and when he gets through, and when we have heard him, we can refute all he says here." This man was a democrat. Except by the boys there, belonging to Waloola College, I was not interrupted again save once; but the boys kept interrupting me all the time, although they had their teachers with them. I paid no attention to them, however, and finally finished my speech. We left and went up to the hotel and took dinner, and left that night for Greenville. We reached Greenville, on Sunday morning about half past one o'clock. On Monday, the 23rd, I spoke at Pickens. We drove across the country in a carriage. We went along quietly until we came within six miles of Pickens Court-House, where the meeting was to be held. Then they came up with two mounted clubs, one in red shirts and the other in white shirts, with a rosette under the left arm. I suppose there were about sixty in the two clubs, and they were hurrahing all the way from there to the court-house for Hampton, and damning the radicals, but they didn't interfere with us at all. We followed right along behind them until we came to the road that comes from Easeley station; about three-quarters of a mile from that road, in plain sight, we saw a company coming in on the Easeley road. There were trees that obstructed the view, so that I could not tell the number, and as we ascended the hill which leads to the court-house we found them drawn up in two lines of, I should think, about a hundred on either side of the road, with the horses' heads toward the road, and we were compelled to drive through between the lines. There were four of us in the carriage. Everything was perfectly quiet; not a word said on either side. As we passed along, after we got through they formed in line behind us and followed us up about a quarter of a mile to the court-house, when they diverged, and we went on to the court-house and alighted and went into the auditor's room. It was then determined that instead of holding our meeting in the grove, we should hold it in front of the auditor's office; and we extemporized a stage, and Professor Greener was put forward as the first speaker. He had been speaking probably three or four minutes quietly, nobody but republicans being then present, when those mounted men came dashing up at full gallop and surrounded our meeting completely, in the form of a semicircle, with our people in the middle. They then dismounted.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Yes, sir; they were armed with pistols. They had no rifles or guns, but some of them had as many as three or four pistols. One man in front of me had two strapped around his body and one in each pantaloons pocket, making four. He was sitting side by side with Senator Bowen, the democratic chairman of the county. He was a young man, under age, I should judge. He had on a red shirt. Professor Greener spoke four or five minutes without interruption. He always announces himself when he goes on the stand as a negro, although he is newly as white as either of us are. He was interrupted at first by the same person that had these pistols. This man said, "No God damned nigger shall speak here." Mr. Bowen, the senator, was sitting by his side, and kept patting him on the shoulder; for what purpose—whether to restrain him or to urge him on—I do not know. Professor Greener worried along for nearly three-quarters of an hour, and then he closed. I don't think he said as much in the three-quarters of an hour as he could have said in ten minutes if he had not been interrupted. I was then introduced. Before I went on the stand, Captain Childs, a lawyer of Pickens County, and a captain of one of their clubs, appealed to the people to hear me without any interruption at all. Said he, "You have heard Mr. Carpenter speak here before, and now hear him without interruption." I spoke three or four minutes without interruption, and then they began, and they were tenfold more abusive than before. They called me a "God damned liar," a "damned radical son-of-a-bitch," and things of that kind, until my voice could not be heard at all. I then appealed to Senator Bowen, who sat there. Said I, "Senator Bowen, you see very well that I cannot be heard in this crowd. Your people don't intend to hear me, from the way they are going on, and I shall decline longer to speak. I came here for a quiet meeting. Our people have made no disturbance at all, and do not intend to make any, and upon you shall rest the responsibility," and I went off the stand. I had not been off for more than two minutes when General Dennis, one of the deputy marshals, ascended the stand, and told them that he had an ~~understanding with Bowen~~ understanding with Bowen that there should be no interruption, and he appealed to them to hear me again. Captain Clyde, who was very much under the influence of liquor, tried to urge me to go on the stand again, but I told him "It is useless for me to go on again: did you hear me out where you were?" "No," said he, "I could not hear you; there is a good deal of noise here, it is true, but it is all made by your men." Said I, "Captain, what do you mean by my men? Were there any republicans interrupting me?" "No," said he, "but they used to be republicans once." Said I, "That is another matter; they are your men now, ain't they?" "Yes," said he, "they have got my shirts on." The meeting broke up in half an hour. They finally went on the other side and held a meeting of their own. I staid until I got my dinner, and then left by way of Easeley station. The Easeley democratic club followed me all the way from Pickens Court-House to Easeley station. I should think there were not less than thirty men.

Q. Were they armed?—A. They had their pistols on. They would dash along by the carriage at a full gallop, hallooing and hurrahing for Hampton, and they would wait until we came up and passed through them, and then they would go by us again but that is all they did. We passed on, and arrived at Greenville about eight o'clock.

that night. I received a telegram from the department to come immediately home to attend to official business, and I came home. The rest of the party went to Laurens, which was the next place on the list, but I didn't go there. That was a Wednesday. On Friday, the 27th, I went to Newberry again from here. I spoke there that day in company with Mr. Tomlinson. Everything was perfectly quiet. No interruption at all, either going or at the meeting. I left that same afternoon on the two o'clock train, and on my way home, at a place called Prosperity, I was sitting in the front end of the car with Mr. Thompson, the United States Commissioner, when several of these red-shirted men came on the train. I was pointed out to them in the front end of the car, and they applied the same epithets to me that they had done when I went up the week before—such as this: "That's a God damn radical, is it?" "That's L. Cass Carpenter sitting on the front seat, that red-haired, red-whiskered man; he ought to be taken out here and tarred and feathered." They passed out at the rear end of the car, and then came back at the front end. General Dennis was standing by the door, and he placed his back against the door and covered the window so that they could not see me. We staid there the usual time for dinner. They came on to the end of the car and said, "Good bye, God damn you, Carpenter, good bye, we will get you yet." Who they were I don't know. I never had seen them before. They were white men and had red shirts on. That was the last speech I made in the up-country. I spoke here next day from the state-house steps, and was not interrupted by anybody.

Q. There were troops here?—A. Yes, sir; there were also troops at Newberry, at the last meeting. I spoke at Lexington Court-House the last Saturday before the election, and everything passed off quietly. Two days after I had left Newberry I received an anonymous message, postmarked Newberry, saying, "You must never come here again," and signed "Hampton." I paid no attention to it at all, as I have received a great many messages of that sort since I have been here. When I was editing a paper here from 1858 to 1875, I was in receipt of them very often. On the 20th of November I received a package by express. I was sitting in my private office attending to my duties. My chief clerk brought in a package wrapped up in paper, addressed to me. When he handed it to me he said, "I think it is a box of cigars." I looked at it, and saw the express label "Prosperity, S. C.," and I thought there is no cigar-maker there. It is not a box of cigars. There is something wrong about it. I immediately called in my deputy, Mr. Dennis, and another deputy, who happened to be in the office at the time. Dr. Ensor, the superintendent of the Lunatic Asylum, was there also, and he came in. The package was covered with brown paper. I told my clerk to cut the paper off. It was sealed at each end of the box with the Southern Express Company's seal, with a wax stamp on it, and with their red label telling where it came from, and addressed "Hon. L. Cass Carpenter, Columbia, S. C." It was marked also, "Value, ten dollars," with expressage paid. The clerk cut the paper and pulled it off. I found an ordinary yellow-pine box, the lid of which was secured with screws. I did not like the looks of it at all. It didn't look just right to me. I sent down for the fireman of the building, to have him bring a bucket of water. He brought it, and I took it myself and soaked the box in the water until I had saturated it fully. Dr. Ensor said, "How are you going to open it?" I said, "I think I will pry the bottom off. I won't unscrew the top." He said, "If I were you I would take it to the top of the building," (the United States court building, three stories high,) "and drop it off." He said he would let the fireman take it. I said, "No; I will do it myself." So I took the keys and went up on the roof and dropped the box off from the west end of the building, with these gentlemen standing in the first or second story below to see it drop. It dropped, and struck on its end, and the bottom came off, and in it was a small wooden coffin, very nicely made, packed around with hemp and cotton. I went down and took it up and took it into my room, and exhibited it.

Q. Can you produce it now to the committee?—A. I can. [Witness produces a small box, made of pine, about nine inches long, in the form of a coffin, painted dark brown, and packed in another box with hemp and cotton, the outer box bearing the label of the Southern Express Company.]

Q. Have you received other coffins?—A. I have received coffins made of pasteboard, but not by express. I have sometimes found them in my yard, and sometimes received them by post.

Q. Have you received them in this canvass?—A. No, sir; in 1871.

Q. State to what extent the republican managers decided not to hold meetings in the last campaign in consequence of the condition of feeling which existed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you one of the republican managers?—A. No, sir; I was not.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were you present when they consulted about these things?—A. I was present at the committee-rooms when the executive committee consulted about them.

Q. State whether they declined to appoint meetings which otherwise would have been appointed, in consequence of the condition of feeling existing here?—A. I began this campaign in June with Governor Chamberlain. We attended several meetings together in June, July, and August. The rifle-clubs did not attend our meetings until after the nomination of General Hampton. I spoke at Rock Hill with Chamberlain, at Chester, and at Winnborough, where none of these clubs were present. I think it was on the 16th of August that Wade Hampton was nominated by the democrats. Immediately after his nomination the first meeting that we held was at Newberry, where we found a large number of them present, (they say a thousand men, but I don't think there was more than five hundred;) they surrounded our meeting and were very abusive to the speakers. I didn't speak. Governor Chamberlain, Judge Hoge, and Mr. Jilison spoke on our side. The second day after that they were to speak at Abbeville, at a meeting which I did not attend. It was determined by leading republicans, after they returned from Abbeville, to hold no more joint meetings. I think that was the 22d of August. There were several more meetings held afterward, but it was understood that there were not to be joint meetings, although the democrats did come and demand joint meetings. Three days after our meeting at Abbeville I attended a meeting at Midway, in Mr. Small's district; I was invited down by Senator Smith, who represented that county in the general assembly. I told him I would not go if it was a joint meeting, and he assured me there would be no joint meeting. We arrived there about two o'clock in the morning, and knew nothing about a joint meeting until about eleven o'clock in the day, when it was intimated by several persons who came to call upon the governor that they expected to have a joint meeting, and when we got on the stand we saw large numbers of these rifle-club men coming along two by two; they had no red shirts on at that time; that was before they introduced the red-shirt business.

We found that they demanded half the time. The democrats formed on the left of the stand, and the republicans on the right, the parties being separated by ropes, drawn out from the stand. Governor Chamberlain was introduced, and spoke for perhaps half an hour before any intimation of a joint discussion was given. Then somebody in the audience mounted the box, and pointed to the governor and said, "How long is he going to speak?" Mr. Osborne, the county chairman, said, "This is a republican meeting, and his time is not limited." This man turns to the crowd and says, "He can speak an hour, can't he?" They replied, "Yes, yes." The governor turned to me and said, "Shall we agree to a joint discussion?" I replied, "This is your meeting, governor; not mine." I had made up my mind not to agree, but he thought we had better agree to it. The governor spoke his hour, and they put up a man named Simms to follow him. After he got through I was introduced, and I spoke nearly an hour, including the interruptions, when Mr. George D. Tilghman was introduced. For the first ten or fifteen minutes of his speech he was quite moderate. While he was speaking I was sitting behind him on the stand, and he turned to his people on the left and said, "Why don't you hang these men—hang 'em here, and hang 'em now; shoot them down like the dogs they are." Governor Chamberlain got down off the stand, and, I think, got into a buggy with Colonel Crouch, or Couch, or some such name, a prominent man in that county. I staid on the stand until Tilghman got nearly through, and then I went over to the hotel to meet Judge Hoge, who was to follow Tilghman. Tilghman closed just a minute or two after the train came in. Hoge went on the stand, and hadn't spoken more than three or four minutes before he had half a dozen or more pistols drawn on him. He is the present member of Congress from this district. Simms mounted the stand and said, "As soon as this man Hoge apologizes he can speak." They had appointed twenty-six marshals, thirteen on each side, and they took these men out of the crowd, and the judge got up and finished his speech. Tilghman followed him again, but he said very little when he spoke the second time. After him came Jilison, who said very little. I was sitting in the hotel after the meeting with Senator Smith, when Mr. Burke, the proprietor of the hotel, came in and wanted to introduce a man named Dr. Carroll, a very prominent planter and doctor in that neighborhood. We sat down and talked perhaps ten or fifteen minutes in a quiet, gentlemanly way. The doctor rose to go, and held out his hand and said, "Now, Mr. Carpenter, this meeting has been a failure, so far as we are concerned." Said I, "Doctor, what do you mean by that? You have certainly had more men than we have had, and you have all the abuse on your side." "Well," said he, "it has been a failure in this, that they didn't kill eight or ten men to-day." Said I, "Doctor, you don't mean that you wanted any men killed to-day?" Says he, "I mean exactly what I say; we can't do anything with these niggers till we kill off eight or ten of their leaders." I asked Senator Smith, "Is that a sane man or a lunatic?" He said, "Well, he means just exactly what he says; he is a prominent man and a planter, and he means exactly what he says."

Q. At any of the meetings that you attended, did the republicans interrupt the democrats?
—A. I never heard it.

Q. Were you ever at any joint meetings where the democrats did not interrupt the republicans?—A. No, sir.

Q. At democratic meetings, did the democrats ever allow the republicans to take part in the discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever at any democratic meetings during the campaign?

The WITNESS. I was at several. At Honey Path, Judge Cooke, of the 8th circuit, was a speaker. He spoke as a republican although he voted the democratic ticket.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. With that exception did you know of any instance where they allowed republicans to speak at a democratic meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where a meeting had been organized as a republican meeting, and the democrats demanded a division of the time, state whether the demand was accompanied by such circumstances and indications as that it was unsafe to refuse it.—A. I think that at the meetings at Newberry and at Midway, where I was present as one of the speakers, it would not have been safe if we had refused to allow them to have half the time.

Q. State whether the democrats at those meetings were generally armed with pistols.—A. I never have been at one of those meetings when I did not see a large number of them armed with pistols, either strapped about their person or in their pockets in plain sight.

Q. How was it with the republicans in that respect?—A. I never saw any of them armed at all at any meeting that I ever attended.

Q. What is the character of the colored population with respect to timidity; are they a courageous people, or timid and easily influenced by intimidation?—A. So far as I know them, (and I have now been eight years among them,) I think they are naturally very timid. I think they are particularly liable to all influences that are brought to bear to excite their fears. If a show of force is made, they are naturally very timid. As a body, they are unarmed. Some of them may have a squirrel-gun or a rusty old pistol that might go off once out of every ten or fifteen times, but they have no efficient arms. I am speaking now of the country districts. Here and in Charleston it may be different.

Q. How is it with the white men—the democrats; are they, as a class, liable to be easily influenced by intimidation?—A. I hardly think so. They are all armed with the best arms that money can purchase, so far as I know.

Q. In any of the democratic speeches, did you hear advice given to refuse employment to negroes if they continued to vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I did, by Tilghman, at Midway.—After they refused to hear me, he said, "These are no better than trees; we can make these men do as we desire by turning them off the plantations." He has published letters to that effect. I also heard Lipscomb, at Newberry, use almost identical language. He was a democratic candidate for State senator.

Q. To what extent were threats of refusal to employ republicans current throughout the State?—A. I can only answer so far as my own district is concerned. I have heard myself from democrats themselves that they would not employ men upon their plantations who would not vote with them. They said it was common in the Northern States, and particularly in New England, for employers to refuse employment to men unless they voted with the employers, and they were going to carry that into operation here. Mr. Hemphill, the editor of a paper in my district, told me that they had a policy of "preference," not proscription, but preference; that they were going to prefer to rent their lands only to those that voted with them. It was not proscribing anybody at all; it was simply preferring somebody else that they liked better.

Q. What effect did the violence and threats which you have described have in deterring republicans from coming to meetings?—A. It had this effect: where we ought to have had meetings of two or three thousand people, and where we have had them until this campaign, we would have only from eight hundred to a thousand, or perhaps fifteen hundred.

Q. What effect did it have in preventing local meetings being held at minor points throughout the counties?—A. The effect was that they didn't hold them at all; they didn't dare to hold them.

Q. What effect did it have in preventing the colored republicans from coming to the polls on the day of election?—A. Every colored man that had a piece of land that he had rented felt that if he did go he would lose his home, and the consequence was that he did not go, and in the county of Abbeville I was deprived of at least eight hundred votes in cases where the voters did not go near the polls at all.

Q. State, if you know, whether the democratic rifle-clubs held meetings from which republicans were excluded, or were their meetings open for anybody to come in?—A. I only know about two or three of them, but so far as I know they were always private, and no person was allowed to come in unless he belonged to the club.

Q. Do you know whether there is any organization of those rifle-clubs, having a central head, the local club being subordinate to and receiving instructions from a common head?—A. I do not; I have heard that, but I don't know anything about it.

Q. What time did the legislature meet?—A. It met on the fourth Tuesday in November, the 27th or 28th of the month.

Q. What do you know of large numbers of armed men, democrats, assembling here in Columbia, at about the time of the meeting of the legislature, or soon after?—A. I saw them here.

Q. In what numbers?—A. From what I saw, I should judge that there were about two thousand. I was no lower down than this building except once. The men that I saw were in the upper part of the town, and they usually camped in the rear of my house, on what they called the fair-grounds.

Q. Were they armed?—A. They were, with all sorts of weapons; single-barreled guns, doubled-barreled guns, rifles, and pistols. They walked up and down the streets with them.

Q. What time did they come into the town?—A. At various times in the day. One train came in about 1 o'clock in the afternoon on Monday after the legislature met. They came in during all those three days, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Q. Where did they come from?—A. I don't know that.

Q. From how many directions did they come?—A. I know of some that came from the Greenville section, and some from the Sumter section, and some came in on the Charlotte road, because I knew some of the people among those, and knew where they lived.

Q. Do you know of any instructions sent out for them to come in?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know how they could be brought in without instructions?—A. I do not, only what a man told me.

Q. Do you know whether they left the city immediately before this congressional committee came here?—A. Yes, sir; I know they did.

Q. Did they leave until it was known here that the committee was coming?—A. I don't know that. I knew the committee were coming; I don't know whether they did or not; the papers knew it.

Q. Did they begin to disperse until after it was announced this committee was coming?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they then disperse?—A. They did.

Q. And they had mainly left before the committee arrived?—A. Yes, sir; I think there were but very few here when this committee arrived.

Q. You were a member of the Forty-third Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you know of any other fact which is material to this investigation you may state it.—A. I think I have given the committee a fair resumé of what I know of this matter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What State are you a native of?—A. I was born in Connecticut.

Q. Where had you lived prior to coming to this State?—A. I had lived in Washington four years before coming here.

Q. How many years is it since you came here?—A. I came here in 1868, as editor of a newspaper, the Charleston Republican.

Q. You settled in Charleston then?—A. No, sir; I settled here, but I vibrated back and forth between Washington and Charleston for a year and a half. My home was in Washington that time.

Q. You edited the Charleston Republican for a year and a half?—A. I edited it until 1871.

Q. When did you first bring your family to this State?—A. In May, 1870.

Q. After you quit editing the Charleston Republican what was your occupation?—A. I edited the Union, at this place. I established the Union on the 15th of November, 1870, and ran the two papers together until the 8th of September, 1871, when I closed the Republican office and ran the other.

Q. Is that the same paper that is now known as the Union-Herald?—A. No, sir. They bought me out and never paid me, and I took it back again until March, 1875.

Q. Up to that time you held no public office in the State?—A. No, sir; the first public office I held here was my short term in Congress.

Q. You ran for Congress in the fall of 1875?—A. I did.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Who was the candidate against you in the fall of 1875?—A. I had none.

Q. What was your majority?—A. Twenty thousand and some odd.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When were you appointed collector?—A. On the 15th of March, and I took possession of the office on the 7th of April.

Q. You have held the office of collector of internal revenue since that, and you now hold it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say your majority two years ago in your district was thirty-five hundred, and in the same contest Chamberlain received nearly five thousand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was candidate against Chamberlain?—A. Judge John T. Green.

Q. What was his politics?—A. He was a republican.

Q. There was no democratic candidate running?—A. None at all.

Q. State, as a matter of fact, whether since 1868 the democrats have made any political contest in this State.—A. I think they made a contest in 1870, when Judge Carpenter was a candidate for governor and General Butler for lieutenant-governor.

Q. Was Judge Carpenter a democrat?—A. He was so regarded. He was elected judge by the republicans.

Q. Has he not been identified with the republican party since he has been here, with the exception of his independent run in 1870?—A. Up to that time I don't know, but since that I think he has been.

Q. Do you know that he came here as a republican appointee, and was made register in bankruptcy under a republican administration?—A. I know he came, but how he came I do not know.

Q. Don't you know that he was appointed under a republican administration?—A. Yes, sir; by Chief-Justice Chase.

Q. And that he has always been identified with the republican party with that exception in 1870?—A. He has been since that time. Prior to that I did not know him.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, you do know that since 1868 the democrats have had no distinctive candidate for governor?—A. Not for governor.

Q. And the contest which they made this year is the first that they have made since 1868?—A. The first with a regular democratic candidate.

Q. Don't you know, also, that in these various contests, because of that fact, the great body of the democrats have remained at home and have not voted?—A. No; I don't know that, but I presume that to be the fact; but in this county I know they did vote. This county, however, is different from the others, because nearly all the democrats live in this city.

Q. You know that as a rule the democrats have not voted at past elections because they have had no candidates of their own?—A. A great many of them did not vote, that is true.

Q. This election of 1876 is the first time since 1868 when they have had a candidate of their own, around whom they have rallied?—A. As a party. I think that is true.

Q. They made no contest at all against you in 1875?—A. No, sir.

Q. They did not even put up a candidate against you?—A. No, sir; although they ran a candidate against Judge Hoge for the term in the Forty-fourth Congress, they ran none against me. The candidate against Hoge was Gen. Samuel McGowen.

Q. At the meeting at Nowberry, in October, which you have described, where you say you found the square filled with armed men, how were those men armed?—A. They had their pistols strapped around them; some had them sticking from their pockets, and others had them in holsters.

Q. They had no guns?—A. I saw nothing but pistols.

Q. Was there any shooting done?—A. I heard no shooting.

Q. Was there anybody in danger at that meeting?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. It was simply a large body of men who had taken possession of the public square?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some of them, I suppose, had been drinking?—A. I couldn't judge of that, because I was not in a position to see them.

Q. Those men that called out and said you were a damned liar were exceptional persons here and there, were they not?—A. Not at Nowberry. At other places that was exceptional.

Q. Was it a general cry from all those armed men at Nowberry?—A. It was pretty difficult to tell. It was so general that you couldn't hear my voice as far as across this room. I saw Lipscomb myself sitting on his horse, and I saw him rise in his stirrups and appeal to the crowd, and heard him say, "If you can't obey me, choose some man that you can obey." He was the commanding officer.

Q. And he attempted to keep those men quiet?—A. I think he did.

Q. Was it not the general effort of the democratic leaders to quiet their men?—A. I think it was.

Q. When you went down to the train there was no personal violence offered you?—A. No, they didn't strike me or touch me at all. They would ride by me, and back of me, and call me these fancy names.

Q. Did they say anything more to you down there except that you should not be elected?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you reached Ninety-six, and the men sat about you, they didn't offer you any personal violence?—A. No, sir; they never touched me; they merely talked at me, but not to me.

Q. Did those men have the appearance of having been drinking?—A. Yes, sir; the man with the three pistols, the lame man, had the appearance of being very much under the influence of liquor. He was the one that did most of the talking; he had a pistol in each hand and two in his vest.

Q. How about that young man who said his name was Geary; was he under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir; I don't think he was at all.

Q. Did you know him?—A. Only his face. He was a very fine-looking young man, and I think a professional man of some sort. I think he lives at Hall's, Cookesbury.

Q. Did he make any interruption after you turned and spoke to him?—A. No, sir; not at all. I understood that he was going up to Abbeville with us, but he left the train and didn't get on again.

Q. Did the democrats at Anderson do anything more than make a demand for a joint discussion?—A. No, sir; and ride around in front of the hotel.

Q. Was the demand for a joint discussion attended with any threats, or manifestations of violence?—A. None at all, sir.

Q. And when it was declined, was it attended with any such manifestations?—A. No, sir; they held their meeting at one place, and ours was at another.

Q. And the meetings were quiet?—A. Ours was. I did not attend theirs.

Q. And there was no interruption?—A. No, sir; there were one or two questions asked but they were proper ones.

Q. Prior to the time that you decided not to have any more joint discussions, it had been the custom to have such discussions?—A. No, sir; it had not been the custom. We had been compelled to have them against our will.

Q. Had it not been a custom in this State to hold political canvasses in that way?—A. No, sir; not since I have been here. In 1870 Judge Carpenter, who was then a candidate on the democratic ticket, held a joint discussion with Governor Chamberlain, who was then a candidate for attorney-general, but aside from that I have never heard of joint discussions.

Q. This armed man that you saw come up from the spring, with the other man, how was he armed?—A. He had a short sack coat on, with one pistol in his pocket, and another in a holster behind him.

Q. Was his companion armed?—A. Yes, sir; he had a pistol.

Q. And the one with the two pistols was drunk?—A. Yes, sir; very much under the influence of liquor.

Q. When they came up and jumped in at the window, did they offer any violence to anybody?—A. No, sir; they passed directly up to the rear seat, from which the professor was speaking. They had not any more than got to the seat before I spoke to them, and they left immediately. Mr. Brice came and told this young man that he must leave, and he immediately got up and went away.

Q. Mr. Brice was a democrat, was he?—A. No, sir; a republican.

A. And when he spoke to them they left?—A. Yes.

Q. And the sober man was trying to quiet the drunken man?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him several times afterward, but not the drunken man.

Q. Is it true that the democratic leaders were endeavoring to preserve quietness in the crowd?—A. So far as I could judge from appearances, they appeared to be. I saw that gentleman patting this young man on the shoulder, but I could not hear what he said.

Q. Was there any more interruption at that meeting than ordinarily attended an exciting political contest in this State?—A. O, yes; more than I have ever seen at any other meeting before.

Q. Is it not a custom here for men, and especially drunken men, to go around and use expressions of this coarse character at meetings?—A. It never has been the custom, that I have seen before this campaign.

Q. You have been in campaigns in other States than this, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Haven't you very often at meetings had drunken men come around and play the rowdy?—A. Yes, sir; but I have never had a majority of those present appear to be drunk.

Q. Were a majority of the people at that meeting apparently drunk?—A. Well, a majority of those at the meeting at Pickens acted as that young man did.

Q. I refer now to the meeting at Waloola.—A. O, no, sir; there were very few there.

Q. When Mr. Dendy quieted the crowd and asked them to hear you, were you interrupted after that, except by the boys?—A. No, sir; I was interrupted but once by the men. The rest of those that interrupted me were young lads from sixteen to twenty—college boys.

Q. It was a very characteristic performance on the part of the college boys, was it not?—A. Well, I didn't do exactly that way when I was in college, but sometimes we did. Their tutors were there and the boys were appealed to.

Q. Do you mean to say that their tutors seemed to approve of the conduct of the boys?—A. I do.

Q. What kind of an institution is that?—A. I don't know, sir; only that it is the college up there.

Q. Under the control of the State?—A. No, sir. It is a private school, but they call it Waloola College.

Q. How many professors or tutors are there connected with it?—A. I do not know. There were three there that day.

Q. And you really think that the tutors encouraged the boys?—A. A young man named Brice was sent by the postmaster, his brother, to a tutor in that college to ask him if he wouldn't keep the boys still, and the young man came back and reported that the man said it was none of his business; that there was no school that day.

Q. Do you know that tutor's name?—A. No, sir; but I can get it for you.

Q. Did the interruptions of the boys interfere seriously with your meeting?—A. No, sir; not seriously.

Q. Was it anything more than a little hurraing?—A. Well, nearly all the remarks applied directly to me.

Q. This club that you met on your way from Greenville to Pickens, did they in any way offer you or any of the gentlemen with you personal violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they use any offensive remarks to you?—A. No, sir. They simply hurraed for Hampton and damned the radicals.

Q. They were simply a democratic club going to a meeting at Pickens and hurraing for their own candidates?—A. Exactly.

Q. And they did not interfere with you in any way?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. You came upon them accidentally; you overtook them?—A. Yes, sir. We were in a carriage and they were on horseback.

Q. When you came to have your meeting at Pickens, they didn't crowd away your people?—A. O, no, sir; the immediate surroundings of the stand were in our possession.

Q. They simply formed on the outside of the crowd, on their horses?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there any pistol-shots fired there?—A. They were fired after the meeting was over, but none during the meeting. Pistols were drawn once or twice, but no one fired that I heard.

Q. There was no one hurt?—A. No, sir. There was some one shot afterward, but it was among themselves. There was no interruption of the meeting.

Q. When Mr. Bowen appealed to them during the meeting, did they cease to make a disturbance?—A. No, sir. The crowd appeared to be divided into two parts. The crowd on his right and on my left was from Easley station. Those on the other side were from the country. He sat in the center. They were in uniform and he was not. He sat in front of me, maybe a hundred feet from me. I could see him make motions, but I could not hear what he said. The people on his left were quiet all the time. Those from Easley were the noisy ones. The others made no interruption of any kind. They were mostly dressed in gray shirts, and a great many of those from Easley were apparently under age.

Q. They made so much noise for a time that you quit speaking?—A. Yes, sir; I could not speak at all.

Q. Did the democrats give you any assurance after that that they would quiet the crowd for you?—A. Yes, sir; Captain Clyde himself came in and said if I would go on the stand again, he would guarantee me a fair hearing.

Q. Then the noise had been made by the young men or boys from Easley, who didn't seem to be under Mr. Bowen?—A. No, sir; they didn't seem to be under anybody's control. Those are the ones that rode home with me.

Q. But they offered you no violence on the way home at all?—A. O, no, sir. I started to the door when Clyde came to me, but some young man began to shout again, and I would not go on the stand.

Q. On the train at Prosperity how many of these men were there who came on the front end of the car?—A. I think there were about ten in all; but only three of them went through the car.

Q. Did any of them seem to have been drinking?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. Did they offer any personal violence to yourself, or any one else in the car?—A. Not that I saw.

Q. Did they do anything except indulge in loud and coarse talk?—A. No, nothing, but telling them to take me out and tar and feather me.

Q. That was outside?—A. Yes, sir; at the car-door.

Q. And no effort of that kind was made?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you regard the receipt of the little coffin as a very serious indication of your approaching death?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. It didn't frighten you at all?—A. No, sir; not a bit.

Q. It is not a very unusual thing I believe?—A. Not in this country.

Q. You didn't consider yourself under any obligations to get into the coffin, I suppose?—A. Not at all; it was not large enough in the first place.

Q. You have spoken of rifle-clubs. You do not mean to say that these organizations of political clubs during the campaign between General Hampton and Governor Chamberlain, were the same as the old rifle-clubs, do you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And when you speak of rifle-clubs, now, you mean simply democratic political clubs of the campaign, do you not?—A. No, sir; I do not mean that. In the spring of 1875, after the election of 1874, they began organizing what they called rifle-clubs, and we took their own name. They purchase rifles.

Q. When you say they, whom do you mean?—A. I mean the democrats.

Q. Don't you know that the governor was a member of one of those clubs?—A. No, sir; I do not know that.

Q. Don't you know that he was an honorary member of two of them?—A. No, sir; I do not know that; but I have no reason to dispute it.

Q. The membership of those clubs was not confined to democrats?—A. It was in my county.

Q. Those rifle-clubs were all abandoned, were they not?—A. After the proclamation.

Q. And these clubs that you speak of during the campaign were not rifle-clubs?—A. They were not armed with rifles, but it was the same club.

Q. They were political clubs, purely, were they not?—A. I suppose they were organized in that way.

Q. The republicans had organizations of a secret character, also.—A. I know nothing of that.

Q. Don't you know that they had the Union League first, then the United Brethren, and then the Laboring Union?—A. I know they had, in 1870, what they called the Union League.

Q. Don't you know that they had other organizations; don't you know that they had what was called the "Laboring Union" in this campaign of 1876?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Don't you know that the negroes had organizations of that kind throughout the State?—A. No, sir; I never heard of one and never saw one.

Q. You spoke of secret political meetings of the democrats. Were they anything more than the meetings of those called political clubs?—A. I suppose not.

Q. Don't you know that it is a common thing for political parties all over the country to organize political clubs, and hold meetings?—A. I do.

Q. Then in that respect there was nothing unusual about the meetings of these clubs?—A. Not so far as I know.

Q. They were not held at undue hours, but in broad daylight, or in the evening?—A. So far as I know, they were.

Q. There was no concealment of the fact of the existence of the clubs or of their times or places of meeting?—A. O, no, sir; it was public.

Q. And the only secrecy about them was that they confined their meetings to their own members?—A. So far as I know, that is true.

Q. So that there was nothing unusual about the character of the clubs at all?—A. So far as I know, there was not.

Q. It was not until the latter part of August that the republicans determined that they would hold no more joint meetings?—A. That was the time.

Q. Prior to that time they had held joint meetings?—A. They had.

Q. Were Governor Chamberlain and General Hampton both in the field as candidates then?—A. No, sir; Chamberlain was not nominated until the 13th of September.

Q. Hampton had been nominated?—A. He had been.

Q. You referred to a meeting held at Midway, which you said was organized as a republican meeting, but the democrats came to it, and an arrangement was made for a joint meeting. State whether, in the opinion of both sides, ample provision had not been made to keep the peace.—A. It seemed to me there had been. There were thirteen marshals on each side.

Q. Was it not the evident purpose of the leaders on both sides that it should be a quiet meeting?—A. I think it was.

Q. Was it not the desire of both sides that the meeting should be quiet and orderly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was not the disorder that did exist beyond the control of the leading men?—A. I think that is true, too, because they did control it afterward.

Q. Was it not made chiefly by a few persons who had been drinking?—A. At Midway I could not say that, because I did not see much of it until after the trouble began.

Q. You say that the democrats never gave the republicans an opportunity for joint discussion. Do you know of any instances where the republicans made application for a joint discussion and were refused?—A. Yes, sir; they made one at Newberry, and they were refused.

Q. Do you know anything yourself of that refusal?—A. No, sir; I was not there, but I was told of it. I never was at a democratic meeting where that application was made and refused. I never was at one where they did make the application.

Q. So you have no absolute knowledge on that subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. And therefore you cannot say that the democrats refused the republicans an opportunity to have a joint discussion at their meetings?—A. No, sir; I cannot. I can only state what I have heard on that point.

Q. You speak of these men carrying pistols. Is it not the custom in this country to carry pistols?—A. It is.

Q. Pretty nearly everybody who can buy a pistol has one here?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. So that these men were not very remarkable by the fact that they carried pistols?—A. No, sir; not very. Some of them, though, had more on than people ordinarily carry with them. I have seen some of them with as many as five.

Q. You state that you were deprived of 800 votes in Abbeville County. How do you know that?—A. I do not know it of my own absolute knowledge.

Q. Is not that a mere estimate on your part, a mere expression of your belief that you did not get as large a majority in that county as you think you ought to have got?—O, no, sir; I did not. If I had meant the majority I ought to have had I should have said two thousand.

Q. Is it not true that a great many colored men voted at the last election with the white people who never voted so before?—A. It is true that some did, but I mean that there were about 800 that did not vote at all that I ought to have had.

Q. You have stated that a great many white men voted the democratic ticket at the last election who did not come out at previous elections. Now, is it not true that a great many more colored men voted the democratic ticket at the last election than ever voted so before?—A. I think that is true, too, but I think also that a great many colored men did not go near the polls at all this time.

Q. What is the ordinary vote of Abbeville County?—A. I think there are about 4,000 colored and something like 2,183 white voters, by the census.

Q. How many votes were cast in the election of 1876 in that county?—A. About 7,500.

Q. That is more than the ordinary number of voters, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; a larger vote than was ever cast there before.

Q. And yet you think there were 800 men who did not vote who ought to have voted for you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These armed men that you speak of as having been in Columbia in the early part of this month remained here how long?—A. About three days, I think.

Q. Where did they stay?—A. One or two companies quartered up at Stenhouse Hall, and a large number quartered on the fair-grounds.

Q. Did they commit any acts of violence?—A. I heard of none.

Q. Did they fire their pistols, or anything of that kind?—A. O, yes.

Q. At anybody?—A. I did not hear of their firing at anybody. "They discharged volley after volley upon the fair-ground, but I suppose it was for amusement.

Q. That was their camping-ground?—A. Yes.

Q. What was their conduct about the city—did they interfere with anybody in any way?—A. They were rough and boisterous, as such men usually are, but I didn't see them interfere with anybody.

Q. They remained about the city for three days, you say?—A. A portion of them did. Some came in on Monday, and some did not go away until Friday, but a majority of them went away before the three days expired.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. At every election since you have been in the State have not the democrats had candidates whom they supported?—A. Yes, sir; they had candidates that they supported.

Q. Except in the single instance when you were a candidate for an unexpired term in Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At those elections didn't the democrats give substantially their vote?—A. At some of the elections they did, and at some they did not. In 1872 they did not, I think.

Q. Did they at other elections?—A. In 1870, I think they did, and in 1874 I am sure they did.

Q. Did you mean to say, then, in your testimony here, that at previous elections the body of the democrats did not vote?—A. O, no, sir; I did not mean to say that.

Q. Was it not a fact notorious and shown by the census that the colored voters of the State were largely in the majority?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Both by the census of 1870 and that of 1875?—A. O, yes, sir.

Q. Was there any secret, oath-bound republican organization in this congressional district to your knowledge this year?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any in the State, to your knowledge?—A. No, sir.

Q. State whether for a time during Governor Chamberlain's administration he did not largely co-operate with the democrats, or whether the democrats did not seem to have his confidence, and to support his administration, even as against a large part of the republicans who were opposing him?—A. They did, from the time he was first inaugurated governor up to last July.

Q. Do you know whether the convention which nominated Hampton considered the propriety of adopting Chamberlain as the democratic candidate?—A. I do not.

Q. During that time he was in favor with the democrats of the State generally, was he not?—A. Yes, sir; if I can rely upon what the public press and individuals said.

Q. You spoke of a proclamation; what proclamation did you refer to?—A. The proclamation of Governor Chamberlain, commanding these rifle-clubs to disband.

Q. What was the date of that?—A. I cannot give you the date.

Q. Can you furnish us with a copy of the proclamation?—A. I can. It was followed a few days afterward by a proclamation of the President.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Both the papers that you edited in this State were strong, active republican papers — A. Yes, sir; they were just as strong as I could make them.

Q. Pretty extreme?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. What time was the anniversary of the attack on Fort Moultrie?—A. The 25th of June.

Q. Was there not a large number of these rifle-clubs in the procession in which Governor Chamberlain joined?—A. I was not at that procession, but I have heard so.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Was that while the governor was receiving the favor and support of the democratic party?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JESSE JONES was recalled, at his own request, to make a correction of his previous testimony; which he did, as follows:

I stated that Captain Falk was at the school-house, but I think it was Lieutenant Williams or Mr. Hoyt that was at the box. It was those two officers, with Major Kellogg here. I stated that when certain colored men were coming in to vote they were struck over the heads with sticks in the presence of these officers. My statement was that it was Major Falk, and I just want to correct the name.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Why do you want to correct the name? How do you happen to know that you were wrong?—A. Because I learned since that Major Falk was at Shaw's Creek, or some other place.

Q. Somebody has told you since you testified here that you were mistaken, and that Major Falk was not there?—A. Somebody has told me that he was not the man. I know it was one of the other officers.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

MILES P. MOORE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside, and what is your age?—Answer. Whitehall Township, Abbeville County. My age is twenty-four. I have lived there for six years.

Q. What office, if any, did you hold at the last election?—A. I was major of the box.

Q. Do you know of any intimidation at that place on the day of election?—A. No, sir; not at the box. I was major at the box, and staid there all day. Every man was allowed to vote there; but I could not give an account of what happened outside. I stood at the box all the time.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made by land-owners in that township against colored men before the election?—A. To discharge them from their homes, do you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. I know of two. The man I live with told me that if I will vote and still taken an interest in the election, as he thought I did, he would remove me from the place.

Q. You are a republican?—A. Yes, sir; and he was a democrat.

Q. Do you know of any other instances?—A. I don't know of others that he threatened.

Q. Do you know of other persons making threats?—A. Just the same as that; they said they would turn them off if they voted the republican ticket.

Q. Who did the others say that to?—A. That would be talked to me about others, telling me if such and such a one voted they would turn them off the places.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JACOB TRIBBLE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age and where do you reside?—Answer. I am twenty-nine. I live in Abbeville, at Ninety-Six precinct. I have lived there nine years next April.

Q. Were you there at the last election?—A. I was.

Q. Did you vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any threats made against republicans on the day of the election?—A. No, sir; I never heard of any that day. I was chairman of the managers of the box; I was not out.

Q. Do you know of any threats made before the election?—A. I heard before the election there was a great many of them. I heard them say that if the hands that they had on their places voted the republican ticket they would turn them off.

Q. Who were the men that said that, white men and democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the men on their places were colored men and republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings before the election?—A. No, sir; we did not have any. I went to one at the time that Chamberlain spoke at Abbeville.

Q. Were you at any other republican meeting? Was any other held in your neighborhood?—A. No, sir. Up at a place called Sim's Cross-Roads, about seven miles off, there was one, but I did not go to it.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

J. A. BEATTY sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age, and where do you reside?—Answer. I am thirty-six years old. I reside in Columbia, and have resided there some five years.

Q. Where were you on the day of election?—A. I was at Edgefield village.

Q. What office, if any, did you hold?—A. I was acting as chief marshal of the county on that day.

Q. Did you see any violence on the day of the election?—A. Do you desire me to give in detail what I saw.

Q. Yes.—A. On the morning of the election, I and the commissioner went to the court-house. When we got there, I found the portico and around the bottom of the steps crowded with white people. I called on Dr. Jennings and Gen. M. C. Butler and asked them to have those parties removed from the steps and the portico, and allow the colored men to go up. He stated to me that the whites had got the inside track on the coloreds, and they did not propose to yield until they had all voted. I asked him what time he thought they would get through voting and allow the colored people to go up without molestation. I then called on General Brannan and consulted with him, and he told me not to take any steps to open the way until a few minutes after ten o'clock. He said that Butler and Gary had called on him and assured him that the whites would get through about ten o'clock and allow the colored people to vote. I submitted to that suggestion. I then visited box No. 2, and found some three or four hundred white armed men around the entrance to the polls, and also around the window where the voters had to pass out. I entered by the window. I could not get in by the door, and I was not allowed to enter until I told them that I was the United States marshal. After the crowd that I saw in there had voted, others passed in, too, and I think that was repeated two or three times, until they could not find any more whites. The colored men then made an effort to vote, and were stopped by the crowd of horsemen in front of the entrance. Some few did make their way in, but it was by beating their heads and running up against the church. Then, about half past eight I called on General Brannan, through the commissioner, for troops, and he sent a company under Major Kellogg, at about a quarter to ten, as near as I can recollect, to box No. 2. I immediately stated to Major Kellogg, on his arrival, the condition of things, and he sent me some men under Lieutenant Hoyt. We could not get admitted through the door, and we made an entrance through the window. After Lieutenant Hoyt satisfied himself about the condition of things, he made his way out in front and opened the crowd at the front, and after that there were some other colored men admitted at a time. The whites then blockaded the window. I called on Major Kellogg, and he cleared them away, and after that they went on voting very smoothly all day.

Q. What do you know of any violence against republicans on the day of election?—A. Well, there was a number of mounted horsemen there with pistols, clubs, bludgeons, and everything of that kind, yelling and screaming and beating niggers over the head.

Q. Was any violence inflicted upon any colored men?—A. Yes, sir, upon several; I cannot exactly name the number, but I know about three; I cannot recollect their names, though, at this moment.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you mean that you saw the violence inflicted on them?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. With what weapons was the violence inflicted?—A. They were struck in the head with pistols and clubs, and pistols were drawn on them, many of them cocked at the time. There was the appearance of a general row or fuss.

Q. Where did you remain during the day?—A. I remained the greater portion of the day in the building doing what I could to have all parties vote without molestation.

Q. What building do you mean?—A. In the church, where they were voting at box No. 2.

Q. You did not have an opportunity to see all that was going on outside?—A. There was a glass broken out of the window, and I could see the whole crowd.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of colored men, republicans, going away from the polls without having an opportunity to vote?—A. There was six or seven hundred when the polls closed that did not vote. I had a fair opportunity to see the crowd all day.

Q. Do you know of any democrats who failed to vote?—A. I think not.

Q. If the polls had remained unobstructed, could those six hundred colored men have voted?—A. Yes, sir; they could have voted had it not been for the questions that were asked at the box—useless questions.

Q. Do you know of any interruption to any democrats voting?—A. None whatever. There was not anybody there that dared to interfere with them.

Q. Did you hear any threats made by white men against colored men that occupied their lands?—A. Yes, sir; I heard many of them that day; in fact, two or three of them told me that they proposed to send every nigger off their property that voted the republican ticket.

Q. Was that said in the hearing of the colored men?—A. It was the general talk outside.

Mr. ABBOTT. Confine yourself to what you heard.

The WITNESS. I cannot say of my own personal knowledge that any of the colored men outside took any notice; the confusion was so great that scarcely anything could be heard.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. The troops first arrived at box No. 2 at what time?—A. I think about fifteen minutes before ten.

Q. And immediately Lieutenant Hoyt opened the way so that the blacks could go in by squads of ten?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then, when you found that the window was obstructed, another lieutenant was posted so as to keep that clear?—A. No lieutenant; there were some troops.

Q. And after that everything went on smoothly?—A. Except that now and then there was some confusion in the building.

Q. The soldiers saw that the blacks voted as they came up?—A. They didn't do anything but allow ten of them to come in at a time; they had no control over their voting.

Q. And every ten men that came up they let in as fast as they wanted to go in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that continued all day?—A. Yes, sir; up to six o'clock in the evening.

Q. Who were the three men that you saw hit on the head?—A. I cannot recall their names now.

Q. Where did they live?—A. In Edgefield village.

Q. Who hit them?—A. That I cannot say.

Q. You cannot give the names of the persons hit, nor of the persons that hit them?—

A. I think I can give the names by referring to my notes.

Q. When you saw that done, did you take any means to prevent it?—A. I called on the supervisor of election, Mr. Shepard, and asked him to use his influence to stop it.

Q. Did you make an arrest?—A. I made no arrests that day.

Q. Did you attempt to make any?—A. I made no attempt to arrest any one.

Q. You had United States troops in the neighborhood, had you not?—A. Not at the time of the clubbing.

Q. But you had them within call?—A. Within about three-quarters of a mile.

Q. With three companies of United States troops did you fear resistance; did you expect any resistance to the United States troops?—A. I did expect to see bloodshed.

Q. There was no blood shed?—A. There was none, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You say you made no arrests; why didn't you?—A. For the reason that my life would not have been worth ten cents if I had undertook that.

Q. You were afraid?—A. I was not really afraid; but, of course, I knew it was not prudent to start anything of that kind.

Q. And with three companies of United States troops and with a lieutenant with thirty troops —?—A. [Interrupting.] No, sir; there were only six troops about the house.

Q. How many troops were there about there?—A. I think in all there were thirty in the company.

Q. There were thirty about the box?—A. No; not about the box—within a hundred yards of the box.

Q. Within call?—A. Yes, sir; within call.

Q. And three whole companies stationed in Edgefield Court-House village?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you swear here positively that you were afraid of your life if you had undertaken to arrest a man for assault on that occasion?—A. I have not sworn that I was afraid of my life.

Q. Is it true that you refrained from arresting a man for an assault committed on a peaceable citizen because you were afraid of your life?—A. The assault was—

Q. Answer my question. You did not arrest any one, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you saw a person assault another without cause?—A. I saw them assaulting a man because he was trying to get to the box to vote.

Q. Well, the man who committed the assault had no justifiable cause, had he?—A. He had none.

Q. Yet you didn't arrest him?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you refrained from arresting him because you were afraid of your life?—A. If you will allow—

Q. I want you to answer that question?—A. I cannot answer that, for the reason that there was a general assault on this party.

Q. I asked you if you refrained from arresting a man because you were afraid of your life?—A. I refrained from arresting a hundred men.

Q. Did you refrain from arresting that man that you say you saw assault a man without cause because you were afraid of your life?—A. Do you mean the man that was assaulted or the man making the assault?

Q. Did you understand me, sir, to ask whether you refrained from arresting the man that was assaulted?—A. Yes; from the remark that you made a while ago. I would like very much to answer your question, but I don't hardly know how.

Q. Did you understand me to ask you if you refrained from arresting the man who was assaulted?—A. It seemed to me, the way that you spoke before, that you was trying to get me to say that I was afraid to arrest the man that was assaulted.

Q. Did you understand me to ask if you refrained from arresting the man that was assaulted?—A. I would like to answer your question.

Q. Do you understand the question?—A. I must say that I understood you before to ask me the question whether I was afraid to arrest the man who was assaulted—

Q. Now answer me, did you refrain from arresting the man who made that assault without cause because you were afraid of your life?—A. My life would have been in danger.

Q. Was that the reason that you refrained from making the arrest?—A. The very reason, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

ALEXANDER BOWIE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. Where do you live and what is your age?—Answer. I live in Abbeville County, Magnolia precinct. I am thirty-five years of age.

Q. Was there any election held at Magnolia at the last presidential election?—A. There was an election intended there, but on account of the blanks being misplaced the parties dispersed, and a portion went to Abbeville, and others to Calhoun's Mills and Lowndesville.

Q. Where did you go to vote?—A. To Abbeville.

Q. Were you at Ridge Springs precinct at any time during the day of the election?—No, sir.

Q. Did you see any violence inflicted on colored men on the day of election?—A. No, sir; not particularly. There was a great deal of stir distributing tickets, and so on, but I did not see any violence.

Q. How long were you at the election?—A. I was at the polls about two hours. It was about half past three o'clock when I voted.

Q. How soon after that did you go away?—A. I did not absent myself from the polls entirely. I went out into the street as soon as I voted.

Q. Did you go to box No. 1 or No. 2?—A. I went to both boxes. I voted at No. 1 at the Court-House. I went over to the school-house, but I could not get in, and I came back to the Court-House.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

CHARLES BARNUM sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. Forty-five; Columbia, S. C.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Ten years.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. I was at Laurens Court-House.

Q. Did you hold any office on that day?—A. I was deputy United States marshal.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of any obstructions thrown in the way of republicans voting on that day?—A. There were four polls very close together, and there was a system of arrests there started by the police of the town.

Q. Democrats?—A. Yes, sir; the first I saw was probably about 400 feet from one of the polls. I heard there was a difficulty there, and started immediately for that poll, and I saw a policeman of the town having a man going with him. At the time I thought it was some man arrested for fighting. I heard say they were taking him off, and there was three or four hundred men following him and hooting him. He was a colored man. I asked the cause of the arrest, and they said it was because he had voted twice.

Q. How many colored men were arrested there that day?—A. I only saw three.

Q. Do you know what they were arrested for?—A. For illegal voting, it was said. This was the first one. I protested against arresting a man for that—that they must have a warrant. The next man I saw arrested and taken to the trial-justice's office. They said they had a warrant.

Q. Do you know whether those men had voted more than once?—A. No, sir; I do not. That was alleged.

Q. Do you know of any other obstructions thrown in the way of republicans voting?—A. Well, they had "rough riders" all that day—squads of men, twenty-five or thirty, in red shirts and blue shirts, and they were riding the county all the night before.

Q. White men—democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know whether they were riding the county all the night before?—A. I know they came in and went out.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were they armed?—A. I don't know that they were all armed; I saw a good many of them had pistols in their boots. The majority of the men that I saw that day did not have any arms that I saw; but I saw some that had pistols.

Q. Do you know of any threats made against republicans in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. I did not hear any threats on the day of election, but I was in Laurens Court-House two or three weeks before, and I know it was the general talk.

Q. Did you hear anything said there in the way of threats?—A. Yes, sir; I heard people say that men who worked for them and voted the republican ticket could not work for them next year.

Q. Was that said to the colored men?—A. I don't know that I heard it said to the colored men. I heard it said to me.

Q. Do you know of violence on the day of election?—A. I did not see any.

Q. Do you know of any republicans going away from the polls who had had no opportunity to vote?—A. I think I saw three or four hundred men go away.

Q. Had they voted?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were there any armed democrats at the polls on the day of the election?—A. So far as I know the majority of those there had no arms, but I saw some with pistols in their boots and in their belts. They wore red shirts, and blue shirts, and yellow shirts.

Q. Do you know any reason for those colored men going away without voting?—A. The only reason I know is the system of arrests which was started there.

Q. Did you stop that system of arrests?—A. I went to the trial-justice. He had issued two warrants. The first arrest that was made was made without a warrant, as I was told; the next man that was arrested I went to the trial-justice's office and asked him why he had arrested this man, and he said, "I have issued a warrant against him for illegal voting."

Q. Did you see the charge against the man?—A. No; but he told me he had issued a warrant for illegal voting.

Mr. ABBOTT. You are not to state what was said to you.

The WITNESS. Well, I won't state that. I went to the trial-justice, and I said, "What are these arrests for?" and he told me. I said, "How is it you issue warrants when there is a United States commissioner in town." He said he did not know there was one there. The United States commissioner only got there the night before. I said, "How is it that you direct your warrants to the police—why don't you direct them to the United States marshal? You know that I am United States marshal!" He said, "Will you serve them. I have got no constable, and I can get none in the town." While I was there the third man was brought in, and was afterward released.

Q. Was any proof offered against them?—A. That I don't know; but they were released.

Q. Do you know of any illegal voting there that day?—A. I was a stranger.

Q. Do you know of any illegal voting by any of the republicans?—A. No, sir; I did not hear of any.

Q. What time in the day was it that these colored men went away without voting?—A. The first arrest that I saw was about half past seven o'clock. I was to have been sent to Clinton precinct, nine miles from there, but I could not get a team to go with, and I didn't get to the poll until about half past seven, and I found the poll very crowded. The chief deputy marshal there told me to come to that poll. I went there and got the crowd away, and gave the people a chance to vote. There were four polls right close together. When I got that poll cleared I started to make a round of the four polls, and as I got on the opposite side of the square I heard there was a difficulty there. That was the first arrest I saw. I suppose it was nearly eight o'clock; and by the time that everything got quiet and I had stopped the arrests I suppose it was a quarter to nine o'clock. After that I remained at that poll until twelve o'clock. Then most of the people had voted there, and everything was quiet, and I left. I was back there during the afternoon, but there was no crowd, and I did not see any violence.

Q. What time was it when you saw these crowds of colored men going away?—A. It was between eight and ten o'clock.

Q. How far was it to any other polling-place?—A. To any other poll except Clinton I don't know the distance, because I was a stranger in the county. There was four that I didn't know the distances to.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Near which polling-place were those three or four hundred men?—A. They were nearest to what I would designate as poll No. 1.

Q. Did they try to vote?—A. I don't know that they tried to vote. I saw them going away, and I went and told them that they would have an opportunity.

Q. Did you see any one of those men attempt to vote?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you tell this trial-justice in substance that he could not issue a warrant for fraudulent voting?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you object to his issuing a warrant?—A. No, sir; I asked him why he issued the warrant when there was a commissioner.

Q. Has not a trial-justice the same authority to issue a warrant as a commissioner?—A. As I read the law, the trial-justice could issue a warrant only after the commissioner had refused to act.

Q. Do you understand that a trial-justice could not issue a warrant for false voting at a State election?—A. O, I suppose he could.

Q. Did you understand that he was acting according to the law?—A. As I would understand the law, he would not have a right to issue a warrant unless the commissioner refused to act.

Q. Did you give him to understand in some way that he could not issue a warrant because the United States commissioner was there?—A. I showed him the law as I had it.

Q. Did you mean to give him to understand that he could not issue warrants for false voting unless the commissioner was there?—A. I don't know as I can answer that question in that way. I am not a lawyer, and do not understand law; but as I read the law he had no right to issue it until the commissioner refused.

Q. Did you mean by what you said and did to have him understand that he had no authority to issue a warrant?—A. My intent was simply that the law should be carried out.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to the witness stating what his intent was. He may state what he said and what he did.

Q. What did you mean to have that trial-justice understand from what you said and did to him?—A. I will tell you exactly. The trial-justice there was a republican, but he was afraid to do his duty, and afraid to say his soul was his own, because he was afraid of personal violence. I went to him and showed him the law, and asked him if he understood it as I did. He was afraid to issue a warrant when it was asked of him, and my construction of the law was that when the United States commissioner was there he should issue the warrant, and if he refused that then the trial-justice could issue it.

Q. Do you believe that that is an answer to my question?—A. Well, I think it is.

Q. I will put it again. Did you mean by what you said and what you did in the presence of that trial-justice to make him understand that he had no right to issue a warrant?—A. My construction of the law as I had it laid down to me was that a trial-justice could not issue a warrant unless the commissioner refused.

Q. If you don't understand my question, say so. Did you mean to have that trial-justice understand by what you said and did to him that he had no right to issue a warrant?—A. No, sir; I did not mean to tell him that he had no right to issue it.

Q. Do you say you did not mean that he should so understand it?—A. No, sir; but I meant this: I showed him the law—I went to consult with him because probably he knew the law better than I did. I thought from the reading of the law as I had it laid down to me as a marshal, that a trial-justice could not issue a warrant unless the commissioner refused to act.

Q. You meant him to so understand it, did not you?—A. Well, I thought he would so construe it.

Q. That was your intention that he should so understand?—A. I thought he ought to understand it so.

Q. And you meant that he should understand it so?—A. I didn't mean to dictate to him at all.

Q. Did you mean that he should so understand it?—A. I tell you plainly that I did not mean to dictate to him. I meant that he should so understand it.

Mr. LAWRENCE, (to the witness.) Say yes or no.—A. Yes, I did.

Q. You have been auditor of this county, have you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or of any county?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you held any office here?—A. I was city clerk in this town from 1872 to 1874.

Q. As city clerk you received certain fees that belonged to the public?—A. I received a salary.

- Q. Did not you receive certain fees belonging to the public?—A. I did.
 Q. Are you not to-day a defaulter?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Have you settled with the county or city?—A. I have.
 Q. Did not you leave your office on account of being a defaulter?—A. I did not.
 Q. Did you resign?—A. I did not.
 Q. Were your accounts settled when you went out of office?—A. They were, sir, and audited.
 Q. And you paid up all that was due from you in that office?—A. I did.
 Q. Or in any public office?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

E. R. KELLOGG sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What position do you hold in the United States Army?—Answer. I am captain in the Eighteenth Infantry and brevet major.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At the court-house in Edgesfield County, in this State.

Q. State what occurred within your knowledge on the day of election at Edgesfield.

A. About half past nine o'clock in the morning I was directed by Major and Brevet Major-General Brannon, commanding that post, to take my company and go to box number 2, which was in the outskirts of the village. He said that the deputy United States marshal, Beattie, would be there, and I would receive instructions from him as to what he wished me to do. I went with my company, with First Lieutenant Hoyt. I got to the church, or school-house—I think it was a school-house, next to the church—where this box was, and I halted my company about fifty yards from the school-house. There was a very large crowd around the building, in front and on the two sides of it; not so many in the rear.

Q. White or colored men?—A. Right around the building, next to it, they were all white men, and mounted. There were very few that were dismounted, and all who were dismounted appeared to have their horses near. Just around the house they were all mounted; there were several hundred of them.

Q. Do you know whether they had pistols?—A. I only saw during the whole day some five or six men that I could not swear were armed. All were armed except those, and I presume those were, but I did not know it. Each man had from one to two or three revolvers on his person, generally carried so that they could be readily seen. The negroes at that time were in front of the school-house, between the whites and the fence, and running back in the road each way, more toward town than on the other side. There were a large number of them. Mr. Beattie came to me as soon as I got there and reported that the whites had obstructed the way to the box, which was inside of the building, so that no one could reach it.

Q. You mean so that the colored men could not reach it?—A. Well, no one, without the permission of those in the front; and he said that no one was going in at that time. I immediately detailed Lieutenant Hoyt and four men to go down. Beattie asked me to send a detachment to assist in opening a passage so that any one who wished to go in to vote could do so, and in compliance with that request I detailed Lieutenant Hoyt with four men to effect the opening to the box. I then gave some instructions to my company, and very soon afterward I went down myself to see the actual condition of affairs immediately around the building. When I got there Lieutenant Hoyt had succeeded in opening a passage from the door leading across the road directly in front of the building. The passage was about four or five feet wide—very narrow, but wide enough for any one to go through. I had a good deal of difficulty in getting through the crowd to reach Lieutenant Hoyt. The horses were jammed in so thickly that I could only get there by requesting men to turn their horses one side, and by squeezing my way through. A large number of the men had pistols drawn at that time, and a number of them next to this line that had been opened by Lieutenant Hoyt had their pistols in their hands, with their thumbs on the cocks and their fingers on the triggers, and many were shouting; in fact, nearly all of them were more or less shouting and swearing, and using such expressions as "Shoot! God damn it, shoot!" and others of that character.

Q. If a colored man attempted to pass through that line to vote, how near would he be to the muzzles of the drawn pistols?—A. If he went in the center he would be within three to four feet of the pistols on one side or the other.

Q. Do you know whether colored men did venture to pass through that opening?—A. Yes, sir; they were going through. I waited there some time, and one or two squads of men were taken in to vote. They would call them in by squads of from six to eight at a time, colored men and white, if the whites wished, but I think no white men went in while I was there. I staid there about ten minutes. A man near this lane, ten or fifteen feet off, offered me his horse to sit on; and I got on the horse and staid there about ten minutes. When I was getting through the crowd, I came across General Gary. I came up behind him, and was passing his horse, trying to get through. He was the only man in the crowd that I knew, I think; the only one that I recollect now. As I came up to him, before he saw me, he had hold of his pistol, which was in his saddle-bags, and I heard a remark from him, "If there is going to be a riot here, by God there will be a lively one." I then spoke to him, and said something like this, "General, you seem to have some control over these people. I wish you would assist in preserving order." I don't think he made any reply to that; but very soon afterward I made the same request of him, and then he said, "I am a deputy sheriff, and that is what I am here for." I said, "General, there are several men in the front there who have their pistols out, and I wish you would see if you can get them to put them up." He did not pay attention to that request, and I repeated it very soon afterward. And then he called out to some one, "Tell those men over there to keep quiet." He did not mention any name; and that is all that he did to enforce order that I saw. The pistols were not put up for some time after that.

Q. Did you see any colored men armed?—A. I did not; I could not swear that a single black man had a pistol. I have no doubt that some of them had pistols, but I did not see anything of the sort.

Q. Did you see any hostile demonstrations by any colored men?—A. I did not.

Q. Go on and state what occurred during the day within your knowledge.—A. I saw that this force of four men was hardly sufficient to keep the crowd in check, and I sent down four more men to assist Lieutenant Hoyt, and with those he managed to make a little wider passage. Just after I sent Lieutenant Hoyt to the building, there seemed to be a commotion in the crowd of white men in front, and a number of negroes shouted out, "Its commenced! its commenced!" and started to run toward town. In fact, nearly the whole crowd that were some distance back from the school-house started to run. Those right near the school-house I don't think did; I called to them to keep quiet and come back, and they did so. I observed that whenever the negroes shouted in concert or in any considerable numbers, it seemed to make the white men angry, some of them at least; and I heard a number of times threats—I will not use the word threats—I heard such expressions as this, when the negroes would shout, "Now there is going to be a fuss," and I saw the white men handling their pistols at such times, and for that reason I called some of the negroes to me and requested them not to shout, but to keep quiet, and nearly all of them complied with the request as soon as it became known to them. During the day I frequently heard from white men such remarks as this: "These damn niggers ought not to be allowed to vote." I did not hear any remarks of that kind made directly to any particular person; but it was very disorderly there nearly all the time. These men were riding back and forth, but there was a large body of them that staid around the door until toward night.

Q. How many mounted men remained around the door in that way?—A. Until just before the closing of the poll there must have been at least sixty there all the time, and generally, I think, there were more than that right around the house. Then, a few rods off, there were a good many more.

Q. In all, how many mounted and armed white men were there that day, as near as you could judge?—A. I think when I first went there, there must have been altogether at least three hundred.

Q. How long did you remain at the voting-place?—A. I remained until about half past six o'clock, after the closing of the poll.

Q. Did you observe any colored men going away without voting?—A. I believe that a large number went away without voting. When the polls closed there was a large number of men standing right there who had been there ostensibly for the purpose of voting, and had to go away without voting.

Q. Did you make an official report of your operations?—A. I did.

Q. Is there anything else that occurred there which you can state, and which is material?—A. I don't know that there is. After the polls were closed, I was requested by one of the managers, to leave a detachment in the building for the purpose of protecting the managers while they counted the votes, as he seemed to be apprehensive that they would be disturbed. One of the other managers, however, (I do not know the names of any of them; one was white and the other was black, and the black man was the one that requested the presence of the troops,) one of the others, a white man, said, "I don't think it is necessary," but he made no objection. I reported to General Brannon for instructions, and he directed me to leave a detachment for that purpose.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. How many United States troops were there at Edgefield Court-House?—A. I do not know, sir; Lieutenant Hoyt can tell you more accurately, as he was the post adjutant at the time.

Q. There were three companies, were there not?—A. There was my own company, which had forty-one men; I don't think there were more than fifty or sixty men besides my own.

Q. There were something like one hundred men there, more or less?—A. Yes, sir; rather less than more, probably.

Q. Was Colonel Randall there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From what you have seen of the Edgefield people, state whether it is not usual for them to carry arms strapped about them.—A. Yes, sir; I think it is.

Q. I suppose that is a custom which is almost universal there?—A. I cannot say in regard to that, because I have not been there long.

Q. But, so far as you have seen, it is the ordinary custom there?—A. Well, from my knowledge I think it is a rare thing for a man to go unarmed there.

Q. Just previous to the election, white men had been shot at from ambush, had they not?—A. I was not there when that matter occurred which I suppose you allude to. I got there only on the 1st of November.

Q. You had been absent from that county how long previous to the 1st of November?—A. I had not been at that place since 1870.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Have you had some opportunity to know the character of the colored people as to timidity and being easily alarmed?—A. I think I have.

Q. What is their general character throughout this State in that particular?—A. I cannot speak so intelligently in regard to the negroes in this State as I can in regard to those in Georgia and Alabama; but, I suppose, the negro character is generally the same. My observation is that heretofore the negro has been extremely adverse to getting into any conflict—in a fight, or riot, as they term it here—and I have never myself seen a negro try to incite a conflict, or engage in any controversy with a white man.

Q. In these States where slavery has existed, are not the negroes easily frightened by any display of force on the part of the white men?—A. I think they are; I think that probably they are more ready to defend themselves, or engage in a fight, than they have been heretofore.

Q. But have you ever known them to provoke a conflict?—A. I never did see anything of that kind in all my experience. I think that as a race they have been very peaceful—that is, so far as actual fighting is concerned. I wish to add, with the permission of the committee, that General Butler came around in the evening, after the closing of the poll, and thanked the company for the courteous and impartial manner in which they had performed their duties during the day.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

GEORGE S. HOYT sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Please state your position in the Army.—Answer. I am lieutenant in the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election, on the 7th of November last?—A. In Edgefield, S. C.

Q. Were you present at any time during the voting in Edgefield?—A. I was at what was called box No. 2.

Q. State whether you saw any violence inflicted by white men upon colored men.—A. I saw only one case. I saw one colored man struck over the head with a club in the hands of a white man.

Q. What was the occasion of that?—A. The colored man was trying to get up on the platform to go into the building to vote.

Q. To what extent was he injured?—A. I don't know, sir; I don't know that he was injured at all. I saw him hit on the head, and he sort of fell back off the platform. I was there from about the time when the polls opened until six o'clock. Part of the time I was right down near the door, and part of the time back about fifty yards distant with the company.

Q. You did not see all the occurrences of the day when the voting was going on?—A. No, sir; I was not there all the time.

Q. State whether you saw any colored men going away from the polls without being able to vote—men who had been seeking an opportunity to vote.—A. At the time the polls closed, in my opinion, there were four or five hundred colored men who I think had not voted, and who I think had to go away.

Q. Did you see any colored men armed with pistols or other weapons during the day?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see any colored men attempt any violence upon any white men?—A. I did not.

Q. What number of white men did you see with pistols or other weapons?—A. I do not know; I don't think I saw a white man in the vicinity of the polls but what was armed with pistols.

Q. State if there was any obstruction by white men preventing colored men from voting.—A. At the time I went down, there was obstruction in the front of the door, which kept them from going into the building where the voting was going on. There were drawn up in front of the door, I should say, from thirty to fifty horsemen, in such a way as to obstruct the passage of people on foot and prevent their getting in.

Q. What time of the day did you reach the polls?—A. About ten o'clock.

Q. When you were away from the voting-place, was any other officer of the Army left there?—A. Yes, sir; Lieutenant Williams. He is now at Edgefield.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You arrived at the polls about ten o'clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And remained there until they were closed?—A. At the polls and within about fifty yards of them.

Q. So that the polls were within plain sight?—A. Well, I cannot say that I kept any particular watch over matters there during the time I was away.

Q. You opened the way to the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you remain there at that time?—A. That was about ten o'clock, and Lieutenant Williams relieved me for the first time about noon. I went back to the company, about fifty yards distant, and remained about two hours, and then relieved him again and staid until the polls closed. We were at the polls about four hours each.

Q. Each of you had how many soldiers there?—A. At first I had but four men, but afterward the guard was increased to eight.

Q. Very soon after, was it not?—A. Yes; in about half an hour.

Q. When it was found necessary, in order to keep the passage open, the additional men were brought down?—A. I think the men were sent down by Major Kellogg's order, as he saw it was advisable to have them there.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

DAVID T. CORBIN sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. Charleston, S. C.

Q. What office do you hold?—A. United States district attorney for this district.

Q. How long have you been district attorney?—A. Since April, 1867.

Q. What steps did you take to ascertain whether there had been any violation of the laws of the United States at the last election in Aiken County, in this State?—A. About the middle of September I went to Aiken County, taking a United States commissioner with me, to investigate the troubles that had been reported to me in a general way. Upon a very casual examination, I found that a large number of murders had been committed.

Mr. ABBOTT. I object. Anything that the witness knows of his own personal knowledge of course he may state.

The WITNESS. It was alleged that large numbers of murders of colored people had been committed on account of their political sentiments, and on account of their race and color. I proceeded to investigate those charges, and called before me and before the commissioner some two or three hundred witnesses, and took their testimony in writing, at great length. I had a stenographer with me to assist in the investigation. The witnesses were all sworn. Upon the affidavits thus made before me, I caused about five hundred warrants to be issued for the arrest of parties charged with those crimes in Aiken County.

Q. Crimes committed during this current year?—A. Yes, sir; during August, September, and October.

Q. What amount of testimony did you take in the form of affidavits?—A. I took about one thousand pages of legal-cap paper, and examined about two hundred or two hundred and twenty witnesses.

Q. You have that testimony now?—A. I have, at my office.

Q. You are ready to produce it to the committee, if they desire?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was done in the court upon the warrants which you issued?—A. The prisoners were arrested by the deputy marshal, aided by the United States troops, and brought to Aiken, and they appeared there with a large array of counsel and waived examination and gave bonds for their appearance before the United States court, the counsel stating that they did not propose to go into an examination and so give me an opportunity to produce before the country the testimony of the witnesses as to these outrages.

Q. What was done in the court?—A. The defendants, all that were arrested, were bound over to appear before the United States court. I think some one hundred and eighty or one hundred and ninety were arrested, and they appeared before the United States court at the term just adjourned. Informations were prepared against all of them, but not filed. A controversy arose in court as to whether informations would lie instead of indictments, and the court held that I should have proceeded by indictment, especially upon one section of the act which I had relied upon—section 5506 of the Revised Statutes—and they quashed the informations. No further proceedings were taken in court at that term, because we had discharged the grand jury, not apprehending that they would be required, and we could not then proceed further. The cases have been continued until the next term.

Q. Have you prepared a tabulated statement of the names of persons charged with crimes in that county, with the names of the witnesses in part on whose affidavits they were arrested, and the number of persons who were alleged to have been killed or injured in that county during the year?—A. I have.

Q. Can you produce it?—A. This is the statement, [producing a paper.]

Q. This signature is yours?—A. Yes, sir; I have certified to that as from the records of my office.

Mr. LAWRENCE offered the statement in evidence.

Mr. ABBOTT objected to its reception.

Q. What number of persons are alleged to have been killed in that county during this year?—A. Twenty-three or twenty-four, I think, in that county during this season.

Q. All colored men?—A. All colored.

Q. State whether any investigations were made in regard to other counties?—A. Very slight investigations were made in Edgefield and Laurens and Barnwell Counties by the United States commissioners, but they were not lawyers, nor did they have the advice of lawyers, and they made very little progress.

Q. Have the investigations been completed in the counties which you have just named?—A. No, sir; they are right in their incipency.

Q. So far as those investigations have gone, can you state the number of alleged violations of the laws of the United States by acts against colored men in any one of those counties?—A. No, sir; I don't think I have sufficient evidence to indicate, except in a very general way, the number of violations of law. From information which has come to me in my official capacity, I have reason to believe that they are very numerous.

Q. What is the character of the crimes alleged before you upon sworn testimony which you have now in your possession?—A. Eight or ten murders of colored men in Laurens, and in Barnwell County some ten or fifteen murders of colored men; but, as I said before, I have had no opportunity to personally investigate them. I have the names of the colored men alleged to have been killed, and the witnesses who have made the affidavits, and I can furnish those to the committee.

Q. You have the sworn testimony of the witnesses?—A. Simply affidavits furnished me by the commissioner.

Q. What other crimes have you sworn testimony of having been committed against colored persons during this year?—A. Whipping on account of their political sentiments or because they were going to vote the republican ticket, and quite a large number of them have been wounded, have been shot at, and have escaped with slight wounds. The crimes range from murder down to flogging and intimidation in lesser degrees; threats to turn them off the land; threats to turn them into the road; threats to kill them, &c.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. All this testimony of which you speak is entirely ex parte, is it not?—A. Well, nearly so.

Q. Was there any appearance before you upon any of the testimony for the parties charged?—A. There was an appearance at Aiken in some few cases, very few.

Q. As a rule the testimony is ex parte?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that which was taken before the commissioners is all ex parte testimony?—A. Well, not so in the other counties.

Q. Do you know how—that is, of your knowledge?—A. I do not know it of my own knowledge, only by the statements from the commissioners.

Q. You spoke of affidavits.—A. Yes, sir; the other side had due notice of them, but did not choose to appear.

Q. Printed affidavits?—A. No, sir; they were all taken by the stenographer first, and then written out.

Q. The parties all appeared; there was no trouble in arresting them?—A. O, yes; we had great trouble in getting some of them.

Q. Well, they were all brought before the commissioner and gave bail?—A. Those that we arrested were brought before the commissioner and gave bail.

Q. Then the cases were proceeded against before the circuit court and the court quashed the information, and the grand jury had been discharged; have you not power to resummon the grand jury at the same term of the court?—A. No, sir; not under our rules.

Q. Can you not resummon the same jury when it has once been summoned?—A. No, sir; not after it has been discharged.

Q. Is there any provision of law against that?—A. No provision against it and none for it. We have never done it in this district. The court discharges the grand jury, they are paid off, and they go home.

Q. But they can be brought in again. As long as the court remains they are the jury?—A. We have no such practice in this State.

Q. When was that adjudication quashing the informations entered?—A. It was about three or four days before this Senate committee came here.

Q. It was before the committee came here, was it not?—A. I recollect when you came, but the date is not in my mind.

Q. Was it not done before you knew about the House committee coming here? The date appears upon the record of the court, I suppose.—A. Yes, sir; I will ascertain.

Q. And ever since that time the witnesses have been holden?—A. The witnesses were discharged, and kept here for the purpose of testifying.

Q. How do you mean discharged? They were holden by some process?—A. No, sir; except by my telling them they would be needed here.

Q. Do you mean that they were to receive no pay from the United States?—A. No, sir; not unless you gentlemen pay them.

Q. Do you mean to say that they staid here voluntarily on their own account?—A. Well, by my advice.

Q. How long is it since they were discharged by the court and paid?—A. They were discharged within a day or two after the decision was rendered; it may have been a couple of days after.

Q. And as far as the court or the prosecuting officer is concerned they have not been kept at the expense of the Government?—A. O, no, sir. In explanation of their being kept two or three days and paid, I would say it was because after that decision I sent a petition to the supreme court for a special term to be held, and I held the witnesses two or three days in order to have them appear at that special term of the court if it was ordered. But the special term was not ordered, and the witnesses were discharged.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. General Banks and Mr. Lapham and I notified you within that time; thus, so far as the witnesses knew facts material to our investigations, we wanted them.—A. Certainly you did; and I also received the same notice from the Senate committee.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JACKY HAMMOND (colored) sworn and examined,

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Bordeaux, in Abbeville County.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. At Saint Charles precinct, as a manager.

Q. You remained in the house most of the day?—A. Yes, sir; I continued there all day long.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made against colored men in that precinct before the election?—A. Yes, sir; I know that the white men, land-owners, objected to colored men voting the republican ticket, the men that lived on their places, saying, "If you vote you shall leave my plantation."

Q. Did you hear land-owners say that?—A. Yes, sir; I heard them say that.

Q. Did you hear any such threats made on the day of election?—A. Yes, sir; I heard them say it right there, "If you vote that ticket you need not come to my place any more."

Q. That was said by white men?—A. Yes, sir; by white men, of course.

Q. Were there any men at the election armed with pistols or other fire-arms?—A. Yes, sir; as I took my oath I can solemnly swear that I saw guns and pistols.

Q. Who had them—the white men?—A. White men, sir. I never saw a colored man with arms that day.

Q. How many white men did you see have pistols or other arms?—A. I could not number the pistols that were there, but I am certain that I saw a man come right in front of the box with a gun strapped around his shoulder.

Q. Were there many white men there with guns and pistols?—A. Yes, sir; I think every one had them, not only under their coats but buckled around their tops.

Q. Do you know of any colored men going there to vote and going away without voting?—A. Yes, sir; I do. There was to the amount, I would suppose, of thirty or forty men that I know of coming there to vote, and hearing word against them, they did not vote but went back home.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. That is, hearing somebody say that they would not get employment, they did not vote?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

J. C. GRANT sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age?—Answer. Thirty-three.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At Abbeville Court-House, box No. 2, part of the time; I voted there.

Q. Did you see any violence inflicted upon colored men there that day?—A. No great violence at that box, only this: The colored people had got unfortunately some way or other, and did not get to vote at the Magnolia box, and they then came on from the Magnolia box about one o'clock, or near there; I don't know the exact hour; any way, there were some white people that crowded the door, and it seems they did not want the colored people to come in, and they would not let them come in, and the colored people walked off to the court-house and said they were going over there; and I got into the road and waved my hand, (my house was right within a hundred yards of where the voting was)—I waved my hand and I says, "Meu, go back; 'tain't no use to go over yonder; you can't get to vote over there now." Says they, "Yes, we can; we can't get to vote here;" and they turned back, some of them, and part staid and voted. At the same time I heard some man say there were fifty more behind. Some one asked, "Why is it that they don't go on?" and another man replied, "They have started, but they are afraid to go."

Q. State what you saw.—A. Well, I seen these men standing in the door as if they wanted to bar these people out, and they turned back and went over to box No. 1.

Q. Were you at box No. 1 at any time during the day?—A. Yes, sir; I was there some part of the time during the day.

Q. Did you stay there any considerable time?—A. I staid there half an hour at a time, going backward and forward. I staid most of the time at box No. 2.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of colored men going away from the polls without voting?—A. I will tell you what I seen a colored man do. He went up stairs with his ticket folded up. I said, "Mr., let me see your ticket; what sort of a ticket do you vote?" Says he, "I am voting the ticket all right." Says I, "What sort of a ticket do you call an all-right ticket?" Says he, "The republican ticket." There was a white man came up just before him. I was behind him. You have to go up the steps at the court-house, and then it is about seventy feet to the box from where you get up to the steps. We got up the steps and the colored man stopped, and he had his ticket, and says I, "Let me see that ticket?" He showed me the ticket, and the white man he had a ticket and he said, "You vote this ticket," and the colored man wouldn't vote nary ticket, because this white man kept constraining him to vote the democratic ticket; and he just turned and went out, and said he would not vote at all.

Q. Do you know of any considerable number of colored men who had come to either of those voting-places to vote and who went away without voting?—A. No, sir; no great quantity. He was about the only man that I seen that went away and said he would not vote at all, because this white man was constraining him to vote the democratic ticket, and he would not vote any ticket.

Q. Did you hear any threats made that day against republicans?—A. I heard a man say to a colored man, "If you vote the republican ticket you cannot stay in the settlement you have been staying in any longer."

Q. Were any white men there that day armed with pistols or other weapons?—A. I did not see them with any other weapons but pistols; they had them, I am sure.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. These colored people from Magnolia were about two hundred and fifty, in a body, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they went over and voted at box No. 2?—A. Some part of them, and some voted at No. 1.

Q. They came over shouting and hurrahing and making a good deal of noise?—A. Well, they came up as if they was rejoicing in going to the election.

Q. Well, they made a good deal of noise, did they not?—A. Yes, sir; right sharp noise.

Q. And the women turned out and cheered them as they came up?—A. Yes, sir; rejoicing to see them.

Q. Nobody interfered with them?—A. Yes, sir; they interfered with them after they got over to box No. 2.

Q. There were about ten white votes cast at box No. 2, all told?—A. Yes, sir; they did not vote there, but they would go over there with large gangs and come back.

Q. Over to No. 2?—A. Yes.

Q. Did not any of those Magnolia people vote at No. 2?—A. Part of them voted there; ninety voted there.

Q. And the other one hundred and fifty voted at No. 1?—A. I don't know exactly the number, but there were nearly about half and half. White people did not vote over there at that precinct, but they went over there continually during the day.

Q. More colored people voted there that day than ever voted there before?—A. I don't think so, sir.

Q. More voted there that day than voted in 1874?—A. Whatever did vote there might have been a few more, because there is a great many more that moved there, and a good many come of age.

Q. Has Abbeville increased in size very much since 1874?—A. A great many has come there from other counties.

Q. Well, there was a large vote in Abbeville this time?—A. There was a good vote, but I don't think there was much overplus than it has been, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JACOB HOPE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence?—Answer. I am twenty-three; I live in Lexington County.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. Supervisor of election at Spring Hill.

Q. Were you present at the close of the election?—A. I was present at the counting of the votes until the whole was counted.

Q. Were you present when the votes were canvassed by the county canvassers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the votes in the Spring Hill box?—A. I seen the tickets.

Q. Did you see the tickets for electors for President and Vice-President?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether all the names of the republican candidates were on the ticket, and all the names of the democratic candidates on the democratic tickets for President and Vice-President?—A. Yes, sir; they were to my knowledge.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. There was the regular printed ticket on both sides?—A. Both printed.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The regular ticket, with all the names of the electors on it for both parties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You signed the return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were no scratched tickets?—A. Yes, sir; there was some.

Q. For electors of President and Vice-President?—A. No, sir; not for electors.

Q. Did you hear any threats made against republicans before the election in your county?—A. No, sir; I did not hear any in my county.

Q. Did you hear any made on the day of election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any colored men in your precinct who remained away from the polls and did not come up to vote?—A. Yes, sir; my father did not vote. He was sick at that time.

Q. Do you know of any remaining away in consequence of threats against them or intimidation?—A. No, sir.

H. N. BOWIE (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your age and where do you reside?—Answer. I am twenty-five; I live at Edgefield Court-House.

Q. What business have you been in?—A. For the last two years I have been probate judge of Edgefield County.

Q. Where did you vote on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At Ridge Spring precinct.

Q. What time did you reach that voting-place?—A. I reached the precinct on the evening of the 6th, about eight o'clock. It is about seventeen miles from the Court-House.

Q. What did you observe on your way from the Court-House to Ridge Spring precinct?—A. I met crowds of red-shirted men all the way to the polling-place. They would number from about twenty-five to one hundred each.

Q. Did they offer any obstruction to your passing in the direction in which you were going?—A. They did not offer any resistance until I got down near the neighborhood of the Ridge Spring precinct. When I got down there it was getting dark, and I found they were camping in the roads. I passed by three crowds that were encamped. One of these crowds, I suppose, was about seventy in number. They halted me and the four men who were with me. We halted. I did not say anything to them. One walked up and looked me in the face, and said, "This is Bowie?" I did not say yes or no. Said he, "Where are you going?" Said I, "I am going down the road a piece." I didn't say anything more. "Which way are you going to vote to-morrow?" "I expect to vote as usual, sir." "Well, you shan't vote here, unless you make all these damned niggers vote for General Wade Hampton. We are tired of the government we are living under." My reply was: "Well, gentlemen, I suppose we will have time to talk this matter over to-morrow at the polls, and we may be able to compromise some way, and decide on some plan that we can carry out at the polls." I think this was Mr. Stanmore Watson that was talking to me, but he kept his face kind of sideways from me, and I could not identify him exactly. I spurred my horse around, and he didn't seem to offer any resistance to my going after I made that statement, and the men that were with me followed me.

Q. Where did you stay all night?—A. I staid about six miles from the polling-place. When we got to the house there was a crowd of about a hundred, I suppose, standing at the gate or in front of the house where I was going to stay. In fact, the gentleman who lived in the house was the United States supervisor. He came up to the Court-House, and I went down with him, and when we got to his house this crowd were standing at the gate, singing how they "Loved Hampton, because he first loved them." They tried to hold us, but we wouldn't stop for them. We went around and got in the gate. We were in about ten minutes when they commenced firing off their pistols. We could hear the bullets going through the trees. We stepped out in the yard, where they were paroling some green pease, and we heard the bullets going through the trees, and we all had to retire into the house. I reckon they fired about twenty-five shots at the house. I staid in the house during the day. Crowds were passing throughout the night, and as they passed they would stop and yell, and then fire off their pistols.

Q. Did any shots strike the house?—A. I do not know, sir; but they struck the trees, because we heard them while we were standing where the children were paroling the pease. During the night I could hear these cannons, or anvils, or whatever they were, bursting in every direction; down below me, and on either side of me, and up in front of me, where they were encamped.

Q. What time did you reach the polls the next morning?—A. I got there about daylight. I was there before the time for the polls to open. I talked with two of the managers of the election before the polls were opened.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of the democrats voting two tickets at a time there?—A. The voting went on quietly until about eight o'clock. I detected nothing of double voting until about nine o'clock. I then went into the house where the voting was going on, and stood and looked directly on the faces of the voters as they came up, and observed very closely their hands as they deposited their ballots. One man's ballots slipped. He had frided them separately, and then put them together, and he would raise up his right hand and I would notice. The first one that I detected had up two fingers, and I saw that the ballots slipped apart, but he pushed them back again and crammed them into the box. Then I called one of the republican managers to me, and said to him: "I see that these democrats are voting two or three tickets, and if you don't watch that clerk (he is a democrat) he will put down names to correspond. I noticed that gentleman who voted a while ago held up two fingers. I do not know what it meant unless it was to give the clerk a signal how many tickets he had voted." I staid there and watched, and for about twenty-five or thirty voters every single one of them voted a double ticket.

Q. Were they armed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What tickets did they vote?—A. Well, I do not know positively, but I think they were democratic tickets, because there was no white men down there that I know of that voted the republican ticket.

Q. Were you there when the managers counted the votes and made out their returns?—A. No, sir; I was not allowed to stay there.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to whether the number of names on the poll-lists corresponds with the number of tickets found?—A. All the knowledge I have of that is that the United States supervisor and one of the managers of the election made affidavit—

Mr. Abbott objected to the witness relating what was not within his personal knowledge.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of that?—A. No, sir; I was not allowed to stay there; I was driven off for that purpose.

Q. How were you driven off?—A. Mr. Robert Watson came down and stated to me just exactly what these two managers had stated to me from Carwile. He came down to the house when I went from the polls and called me out.

Mr. Abbott objected to the witness stating what was said to him.

Q. Did you leave in consequence of what a leading man told you from Carwile?—A. I staid there notwithstanding these messages until I saw that Carwile had drawn around him a great crowd and commenced waving his pistol about, and cursing and swearing, and firing his pistol off, and then several of my friends came to me and said if I didn't go away from there—

Q. You need not state what they said to you; but you did leave?—A. Yes, sir; I had to leave. I felt that it was not safe for me.

Q. Were there any armed men at the voting-place?—A. If they had arms they were concealed. I did not see any.

Q. You did not see any pistols?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you heard firing?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Carwile fired off his pistol late in the evening.

Q. What do you know of colored men, republicans, being interrupted and prevented from voting?—A. About eight o'clock there was a crowd of colored men, republicans, that came up to the polls, marching solidly in ranks, and there was one man ahead of them who was hurrahing for Hayes and Wheeler and Chamberlain, and when he would turn around and wave his hat all the others would halloo, too. There was 195 in the crowd, so they told me. They asked for that number of tickets, and I know the crowd was about that in my judgment. When that crowd came up, Mr. John Gaston, Mr. Carwile, and Mr. Robert Watson walked right up in front of them. They seemed to be perfectly infuriated. They were just as mad as men could possibly be, judging from appearances. They shook their fists in the faces of the men, saying: "This is a white man's country, and we be damned if you haven't got to stop; we will not stand it. This is our country, and we propose to take care of it from this time on." Mr. Robert Watson came up, and he was hallooing, "What ticket are you going to vote? You ain't going to vote for Chamberlain here to-day; if you do you will have to leave." These men came, most of them, from Clond's Creek, a place known as Mr. Watson's lands. When Watson looked in the crowd and saw me he commenced saying, "Let 'em cheer; they'll holler to-day, and we'll holler to-morrow." Mr. John Gaston went on saying, "You don't live in Edgefield County." The men answered, "Yes, I do. I don't want you to tell me where I live." Said he, "But the line is changed, and if you vote here to-day you vote illegally, and I will have you arrested, and Chamberlain's government isn't able to protect you." Mr. Carwile was coming up the line of colored men shaking his fist in their faces, and when he met me he stopped; but Mr. Watson kept on by me, but changed his line of expressions, and said, "Let them holler to-day and we will holler to-morrow." But they all stepped out right before that crowd of colored men, threatening them, and daring them to vote the Chamberlain ticket; that if they did vote they would vote illegally, and so on; and the result of it was that about forty of those men went off and didn't vote; they were afraid.

Q. Where did those men live?—A. Those men lived in Edgefield County. I was elected probate judge from that place, and I know the men.

Q. Were you a candidate at the last election?—A. Yes, sir; for sheriff.

Q. Were any threats made against you?—A. Yes, sir; threats were made against me from last March up to now.

Q. What were they?—A. The democratic party had their meetings on the first Monday in every month; and their speeches were to the effect—

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you go to their meetings and hear their speeches?—A. Yes, sir; I went within hearing of some of them. I was within hearing of nearly all of them that was at the court-house on those first Mondays; and these speeches were to the effect that Lawrence Cain, Paris Simkins, and myself were to be driven out of Edgefield; and if they could not get rid of us in any other way, we were to be killed out. They said, "We have got to get rid of this government at any cost." I heard those remarks made more than once.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What had been the practice of the republicans in previous years as to holding meetings over the county?—A. The chairman of the republican party always would set a series of meetings in different portions of the counties, and he would apportion speakers to those meetings; or sometimes he would let them all come together, and have them so that all the speakers could attend every meeting, and thereby canvass the county thoroughly; but in this last campaign we were not able to have a single meeting outside of Edgefield Court-House village; and in fact General Gary told me right down that we should not have them; that he was satisfied that we did nothing but talk rascality into the heads of the negroes, and that we should not have them. We attempted to have one at the court-house there some time in August, and it was a total failure on account of the democrats taking possession of the stand and breaking it down, and carrying on the meeting to suit themselves. The republicans all became disgusted and retired from the scene in disgust. They broke the stand down before the republican speakers went over there. When we went there we found General Gary standing with his pantaloons in his boot-tops, standing on the broken-down stand.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

- Q. Do you belong to the Union League?—A. I know nothing about it.
 Q. Did you ever belong to the Union League?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Nor to any secret society?—A. No, sir; I am a member of the church.
 Q. Did you ever belong to the Laboring Union?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Or to the United Brethren?—A. No, sir.
 Q. You know nothing about them?—A. I never was a member of but two societies: one was the Baptist Church, and the other a society in Augusta, called the Union Waiters and Benevolent Society. It had nothing to do with politics.
 Q. All this firing that you have told us about, was anybody injured by it?—A. No, sir.
 Q. There wasn't even a house hit?—A. I don't know; but I heard the bullets flying through the trees.
 Q. No human being was hit or hurt by it that you heard of?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Were you ever indicted?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Was any charge of conspiracy ever made against you and one Jones and Paris Simkins?—A. One man made an affidavit to the effect, and he has been convicted.
 Q. Was the charge made against you of conspiracy with those other persons to assassinate General M. C. Butler?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Are you not under indictment now?—A. Well, I am not indicted, sir.
 Q. Are you not under some legal process for a conspiracy to assassinate General Butler?—A. Yes, sir; that is different from an indictment.
 Q. You and this Paris Simkins and Jones, who has been a witness also, are under that process?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Is your time as probate judge up?—A. It was two years, but I am still holding over in Edgefield.
 Q. Do you exercise the duties of probate judge at the present time?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. When did your term end?—A. I took charge of the probate court on the 24th of December, 1874.
 Q. And your term was for how long?—A. Two years, constitutionally.
 Q. Your term of office ends, then, regularly in December, 1876?—A. Yes, sir; if my predecessor is elected and qualified.
 Q. Then you ran for sheriff of the county and did not get elected?—A. Well, I think I was elected.
 Q. Well, you didn't get elected by the declaration of votes?—A. No, sir; I will admit that.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

GEORGE WASHINGTON (colored) sworn.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

- Question, State your age and residence.—Answer. I am 28, and live in Aiken.
 Q. What office, if any, did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. I was commissioner of elections.
 Q. Do you know what the vote of Windsor precinct was?—A. I do not.
 Q. Did you have any managers' returns from Windsor precinct?—A. Yes, sir; there was managers' returns from that precinct, but I don't remember what the vote was.
 Q. Did you have a managers' return, or a statement of what the supervisors' return was?—A. I never seen the returns at all. I seen the votes at Windsor for the State and county officers.
 Q. Did you see any for presidential electors?—A. No, sir; I never seen any.
 Q. Did you have the vote of that precinct?—A. No, sir; I seen the vote of that precinct after it got here, but when the elections were declared in Aiken I was not present.

Q. Did you sign the commissioners' returns?—A. No, sir; I signed the supplementary report.

Q. Why did not you sign the original return?—A. I will tell you. The Friday following the Tuesday of the election, the commissioners of election, Mr. Edmondson, Mr. Spencer, and myself met, and proceeded to organize the board of canvassers, as the law required. After organizing the board of canvassers, we then elected Spencer chairman of the board.

Q. Why did not you sign the returns?—A. Because I were not present.

Q. Why were you not present?—A. Because we adjourned to meet on Tuesday at 10 o'clock, and Mr. Spencer was called upon by the democrats some time before day in the morning; he and Edmondson. I think Edmondson served a summons on him, calling on him.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You don't know about that, except what somebody has told you?—A. I know what Spencer told me.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you have any notice of that meeting?—A. I had no notice of that meeting.

Q. Do you know why you were not notified?—A. I do not know any more than what they told me.

Q. Who told you?—A. Mr. Spencer, chairman of the board. After I got to Aiken, on Monday morning, very early in the morning, I heard on the street that they were over in the court-house declaring the election, so I went over, and the hall was occupied by Mr. Croft and other gentlemen, O. C. Jordan, and J. St. Julian Yates, and others. Mr. Spencer was sitting on one side of the table and Mr. Croft were calling out the numbers of the managers' returns.

Q. Do you know of any reason why you were not notified of that meeting?—A. No more than what Spencer told me.

Q. You were a republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made against republicans before the election?—A. I do not know of any threats myself, sir, made to republicans; only oaths made against different men in the campaign through the county; not against any one particular. I know of no one that said directly that he would do so and so if such a one did not do so and so in the campaign.

Q. Do you know anything about democrats saying that republicans should not live on their land if they voted the republican ticket?—A. No, sir; I don't know that.

Q. Did you hear anything of that sort said on the day of election?—A. No, sir; not on the day of election.

Q. You were not out?—A. No, sir; I was not out on the day of election.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was at Aiken and Fountain Academy.

Q. Where did you vote?—A. At Fountain Academy.

Q. How far was that from Aiken Court-House?—A. About six miles.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made there that day against republicans?—A. No, sir; there were no threats there when I was there.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid at Fountain Academy about fifteen minutes, and I went from there to Aiken and remained there during the day.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You don't know what precincts the two commissioners had before them when they finally made up the return; you did not examine to ascertain?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about what they had on Monday morning.

Q. You found them reading from the precinct returns, but what returns they were you don't know?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard the precinct returns being read from by somebody, and they were being taken down?—A. Yes, sir; by Mr. Croft.

Q. Edmondston, the other commissioner, is clerk of the court of Aiken, is he not?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JOHN ANDERSON sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. What is your position in the Army?—Answer. I am a lieutenant in the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Where were you on the day of the presidential election?—A. At Laurens Court-House, S. C.

Q. State what, if anything, you know of any violence at the polls there on that day.—A. At the polls, in Laurens Court-House, on the day of the election, there was no violence to my knowledge on the part of any one. There were several officers there, and I have reason to believe that there was no violence used at all on the day of the election; but I desire to make a remark in connection with that statement, that prior to the election a great many negroes came in from different plantations and reported to me—

Mr. ABBOTT. State only that which you have personal knowledge of.

The WITNESS. Well, sir, the only thing that is within my knowledge is that the negroes came in and made these reports to me.

Q. How large a military force was at Laurens Court-House on the day of the election?—A. We had about 28 men. We divided our command, and part went to Clinton.

Q. Was there any military force at the voting-place on the day of the election?—A. No, sir; not in Laurens.

Q. How near to Laurens voting-place were you?—A. About 200 yards.

Q. State whether there were any armed men around the polls?—A. I was not at the polls. I remained camped during the day and had no means of knowing what was going on immediately around the polls.

Q. You had no opportunity of knowing whether there was violence at the polls or not?—A. I had no opportunity of seeing that, but I had reason to believe that there was none.

Q. You had no opportunity of knowing whether there were any threats made against republicans?—A. I had none except what was reported to me upon what appeared to be pretty good authority.

Q. Reports were made to you?—A. Yes, sir; reports were made to me in great numbers, and when we moved to this place from Laurens we brought two men with us to save their lives.

Q. Colored men and republicans?—A. Colored republicans; they are here now.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You know nothing of that, I suppose, except what the men told you?—A. I know nothing of my own knowledge except the general appearance of things, and I must say that the general appearance of things confirmed their report.

Q. But the fact of their being brought here depended upon their report to you?—A. Upon their claim. Wherever I am stationed, if a man comes to me and reports that his life is in danger, I always give him the benefit of the doubt, if I have any, whether he is white or black, republican or democrat.

Q. And you brought these men here upon their report?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in command of the detachment?—A. No, sir; Major Stewart was.

Q. And while you were stationed about two hundred yards from the polls you had no demand made on you for the assistance of the military?—A. None whatever, sir. There was considerable noise, but I saw no violence. It appeared to be cheering for the different candidates.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during this year?—A. Yes, sir; at Laurens.

Q. When?—A. I forget the exact date; it was some two or three weeks before the election.

Q. Was there any interference with the meeting, and, if so, by whom?—A. There was, in my opinion, decided interference. There was a republican meeting to be held at a certain time in Laurens. The republican meeting was appointed for one day, and there was a democratic meeting for the day following; I think the republican meeting was first. The republicans assembled there to have the meeting, and about the time when that meeting was to come together the "Hampton cavalry" came in with red shirts on, and all of them, or most of them, to my personal knowledge, armed with revolvers strapped outside of their garments, so as to be plainly visible. I believe one republican did speak, and then there was a great disturbance raised, and some of the county officers had to take refuge with me in order to save their lives.

Q. How near the place of holding the meeting were you?—A. At that time I was probably within one hundred yards.

Q. Could you hear what was going on?—A. Yes, sir; hear it a mile and a half or more. I heard yells and threats to kill certain men there who belonged to the republican party, repeatedly.

Q. Was that while the republican speaking was going on?—A. No, sir; after the speaking was over.

Q. During the time the speaking was going on, what was done?—A. During the time the speaking was going on I was not present at the meeting, because I made it a point during the whole campaign to absent myself from all political meetings whatever. I heard a great deal of noise, but I was not present at the time the political meeting was going on, and my knowledge of that is only hearsay.

Q. State what you know, if anything, of any noise or disturbance while the republicans were assembled, or while they were holding their meetings.—A. There was a great deal of noise while the republicans were speaking. After that I was in Newberry where the republicans attempted to have a meeting, and I certainly know, of my personal knowledge, that they were drowned out by the noise that was made, and were not able to speak. Furthermore, some of the people took me for one of the politicians, and made an assault on me after that.

Q. Who did that? White men?—A. White men with red shirts. I don't know how many there were. I could not count them. They said there were 1,500 or 2,000.

Q. How would your own estimate correspond with that?—A. I don't know that. They filled the whole street from the depot up to the public square. I was passing from Laurens to Charleston. I had nothing whatever to do with their political meeting. I had to wait about an hour and a half at Newberry for the train, and while waiting I went up street to the post-office, which is kept by a friend of mine, and took dinner with him. After dinner I started to walk down street with a friend to the depot. About that time the republican meeting had broken up, and there was quite a number of republican speakers going along there. I had nothing to do with them. I was walking with my friend, who had nothing whatever to do with politics, (and even to this day I don't know what his politics are;) but before I reached the depot I was surrounded by a large crowd of horsemen with red shirts, who demanded to know my politics. I told them, as I would tell almost anybody who would ask such an impertinent question, that it was none of their business, and I continued my way up to the depot. Before I got there, however, they tried to ride over me; backed up their horses and tried to make them kick me; and in fact they heaped many insults upon me. I got upon the platform, and turned around to know what they had to say, and a number approached me and demanded to know my politics. I declined to tell them what my politics were. They shook their fists violently in my face. Some of them had revolvers; and they called me a God-damned radical, and quite a number of other names, and demanded to know who I was. While this was going on a gentleman whom I knew who was with that party, a democrat, rode up and begged them to stop. "That is Lieutenant Anderson, of the Army; I know him." It was some time before he could be heard, but as soon as he could be heard they stopped their demonstrations against me at once, and then they gave quite a number of cheers for "Lieutenant Anderson, a straight-out democrat." I had no further trouble from that party. The train soon left. I heard the speakers that were there insulted. I can give their names, if required. One of them was L. Cass Carpenter, of this city; another was a professor of the university; and another was Mr. Taft, of Charleston, a member of the legislature; and, I think, there was another one, but I am not sure as to the fourth.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any other meeting?—A. None, except the one in Laurens that I have referred to. I beg pardon; I was at a Hampton meeting in Laurens about the same time at which they all came in, but I saw no man armed at that time.

Q. Did any republican disturb the Hampton meeting?—A. No, sir: I don't think it would have been healthy for them.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any violence being inflicted upon colored men?—A. I have.

Q. State what it is.—A. The command to which I belonged was ordered from Greenville to Laurens the last of August of the present year. We started from Greenville on the 2d of September. Prior to that, quite a number of colored men had come in to Greenville and asked protection from the troops, and we gave them protection, and paid their expenses out of our private pockets.

Q. Did you give them protection in consequence of what they reported to you?—A. Yes, sir. We started out on the 2d of September to go to Laurens, thirty-six miles. We marched all night. About 7 or 8 o'clock in the morning our command arrived within ten miles of Laurens, and a white man came out and wanted to know if there was a surgeon in the command. We had a surgeon there, and the command was halted. I saw a negro who was shot; I did not examine the wound myself; he was lying in bed; I saw him but did not see the wound. He died within twelve hours after I was there.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. That you don't know, except from what somebody told you?

The WITNESS. I know from the records of Laurens County.

Mr. ABBOTT. That is immaterial. What you know personally you may state.

The WITNESS. Well, sir, I know personally that I saw the negro who was shot, lying in bed, and I was asked to take his testimony, which I did.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was it a matter of common notoriety that he died next day?—A. It was.

Q. How many hours was it before his reported death that you saw him?—A. About twelve, as near as can I remember.

Q. State whether you were requested to write down his dying statement or declaration?—A. I was.

Q. State what he said as to the cause of his death.

Mr. ABBOTT. I object. A dying statement is not evidence, except in case of the trial of a man for murder.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I propose to show by this witness that this colored man, while in a dying condition, said that he had been shot by a democrat without any provocation, when he was endeavoring to escape from an assault made upon him by a democrat, and because he was a republican; that he was assaulted in the road by a democrat who met him and fired upon; that he attempted to flee, and while fleeing was shot by this democrat.

The committee sustained the objection.

Q. Do you know of any other acts of violence committed on republicans?—A. No, sir; I don't know of any other which I can call to mind now, except general insults.

Q. State what you know of them.—A. I heard the republicans insulted at Newberry the time of their meeting there. That is all. I have kept away from public meetings, and it was a mere chance that I happened to be passing through there that day.

Q. If there is any other fact which is within your own personal knowledge, showing violence towards republicans, or intimidation, you may state it.—A. No, sir; I don't know of any other fact within my personal knowledge.

By Mr. ABBOTT.

Q. There is no fact of violence within your personal knowledge there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. I have stated it, sir, in relation to Newberry.

Q. Did you see anybody shot at or anybody struck? What violence did you see?—

A. I should think it came very near violence, the matter I have described.

Q. Did you see anybody shot or struck at?—A. I did not.

Q. And you never have seen anybody hurt at the South since you have been here?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean in connection with political matters?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Where?—A. At Laurens Court-House.

Q. What was done?—A. I saw two negroes when I was in command of a detachment there four years ago—

Q. O, we will not go back four years.—A. Well, you asked me whether I had seen anything since I have been in the South.

Q. I mean within the last few months or a year.—A. I have not seen any personal violence applied; I mean where any blow has been struck or any shot fired, within the last two years. The last election was a little more than a year ago—about a year prior to the recent election.

Q. You were not present at the meeting at Laurens that you have referred to?—A. I was on the street at the time the meeting was being held. I did not go into the court-house where the meeting was being held, but I was on the streets and saw what was going on.

Q. You saw on the streets a great deal of violence and heard a great deal of noise?—

A. I cannot pretend to say that I saw a great deal of violence. I saw a large number of men, and heard a great deal of cursing and swearing, and saw a great many with revolvers.

Q. What was going on in the house you don't know?—A. I do not of my personal knowledge.

Q. And whether it was a meeting where the time was divided between the parties you don't know?—A. Not of my personal knowledge.

Q. At Newberry, did you attend the meeting?—A. I did not attend it. The meeting was outside.

Q. Did you go near enough to know what was going on?—A. I did.

Q. Who was speaking?—A. I saw Mr. Carpenter trying to speak, and I saw Professor Greener trying to speak.

Q. Did you leave before they stopped?—A. I did. I passed several times back and forth through the square. I did not stop to hear them because I had nothing there of interest, but I heard them both trying to speak, and I saw the crowd there making such demonstrations and so much noise that I know I could not hear a word that was said.

Q. But they continued to speak until you left?—A. They were trying to. I saw one of them come down and say that he would give it up.

Q. Well, the meeting was not broken up when you left?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. There were drunken people, a good many of them, around there, were there not?—

A. Probably nine-tenths of them were so.

Q. When you went down to the station, how many men were there who made these demonstrations toward you?—A. It would be impossible for me to state.

Q. About how many—fifteen or twenty?—A. More than that.

Q. They were on horse and you on foot?—A. Yes, sir; I was walking.

Q. If they had tried really to ride you down, those fifteen or twenty horsemen, could not they have done it?—A. I have no doubt that they could. They did not try it very hard until I was near enough to get on the platform.

Q. If they had been really in earnest they could have succeeded, they being on horse-back and you on foot?—A. Undoubtedly they could.

Q. That is what I want to get at, whether, if the attempt had been prosecuted in real earnest fifteen or twenty horsemen could not have ridden down one man on foot.—A. There is no question about that.

Q. And most of the men were drunk?—A. Most of them were, I think.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

GEORGE S. STEPHENS sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age, and where do you reside?—Answer. In Union County, in this State. I am 24 years of age.

Q. What office did you hold at the last presidential election?—A. United States deputy marshal, at Goshen Hill precinct.

Q. What time did you reach the voting-place on the day of election?—A. I didn't reach there until 7 o'clock.

Q. What occurred when you reached there?—A. As soon as I got off my horse a party of democrats came up to me and drew their pistols on me and shook their fists in my face and dared me to open my mouth. One of them snatched my marshal's badge and stampered it in the dirt. He said he didn't give a damn for United States marshals nor nothing else, and dared me to attempt to arrest any of them.

Q. State whether any voting was going on when you got there?—A. Yes, sir; it had been going on for some time before I got there. The republicans were prohibited from voting at the time I got there.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. At 7 o'clock in the morning?—A. Yes, sir; and the democrats were crowding the polls, and several remarks were made by several parties that no damn republicans could vote there that day, and if they did vote they could not have any land to work in that county, nor should not live in the county. I am sure there was a good many seeing the men with pistols on them and about half-drunk that got frightened and would not vote, and they left.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Were any of the men armed?—A. O, yes; they had their pistols all around them. Where the ballot-box was was a small room, and in the room joining that there was fifty or sixty guns stacked up in the corner.

Q. Who had charge of the guns?—A. That I don't know.

Q. Did you see any colored men there that day armed with pistols or other weapons?—A. I did not.

Q. How many white men did you see have pistols?—A. All the white men there.

Q. What sort were the guns stacked up in that room?—A. They looked to be sixteen-shooters and breech-loaders.

Q. Did you make any effort to remove the obstructions from the polls, so as to give the voters an opportunity to vote?—A. I asked one or two to give way to let the voters come up, and they told me to hush my damn mouth, and said they were going to rule matters that day, and no marshal or anybody else could have anything to do with it.

Q. What do you know of republicans, who had come there to vote, going away without voting?—A. I know as many as seven or eight went away without voting, and there was a great many that I know, on account of being intimidated the day before the election, didn't go to the polls at all.

Q. Were they colored men who resided in that neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was their nearest voting-place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent were these colored men who remained away from that polling-place men who lived in that precinct?—A. To my certain knowledge about fifty or sixty.

Q. How long did you remain at the voting-place?—A. Until three o'clock.

Q. Why didn't you remain longer?—A. I could not remain. I was told that I had better leave; if I did not I would be killed, and the men were going around. In fact, before this time, several rows occurred there among republicans and democrats, though no one got injured at all. The colored men ran out of the way. One democrat came up to me and said, "Now, by God, you marshal go to work and stop this fuss." I says, "It is impossible for me to do that; here is seventy-five to one hundred men against me; if you desire order and peace, and will assist me in keeping order, I will do so; but it is no use for me to attempt it, and you know it." They says, "Ain't you marshal?" I says, "Haven't you, eight or ten of you, told me that I was not to arrest any one at all?" Then, about one o'clock, four or five from Newberry, the adjoining county, came over mounted, with red shirts and two or three pistols on them. One of them came up to the precinct and said, "We are going to vote here to-day. Where is that son of a bitch of a marshal that is here?" Another democrat replied, "He sits in there." Says he, "All we want is the sun to go down, and we will make hash out of him for the dogs." About three o'clock they hoisted the red flag and said that all republicans that were there when that flag went down, they would go down with it. There was a conservative democrat there, and he came to me and told me I had better leave. I asked him why. I told him I was there as marshal, and I would like to stay until the votes were counted. He says, "Well, I tell you I am a friend to you, and you had better go away." Said he, "These fellows have said they were going to do it, and they are fixing up a plan to kill you as soon as the polls close." I said, "If that is the case, I think I had better go." I sent a boy around with my horse, and I went up through the field. In leaving the polls, in order to get away, I told them I was going to my dinner, and that I would be back directly. After I got where my horse was, I went to the little town of Union Court House. After I left, the United States supervisor, who was there, left also, and overtook me before I got to the town.

Q. When you left, how many republicans were there who had not voted, as near as you could judge?—A. About fifteen or twenty.

Q. Do you know whether they remained or left?—A. As many as five or six went off when I went. They did not go the same route that I did, but I saw them going away.

Q. Did you see any violence used upon republicans at the polls that day, either while they were attempting to vote or otherwise?—A. When they would come up to take the oath to vote, the democrats would exclaim, "By God, you will have to go to Georgia if you vote that ticket; you can't live here; we will put your name on the dead-list." There was a man there, the democratic supervisor, and he was taking the names of all who voted the republican ticket, and their names were registered on what they called the dead-list.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you see them registered there?—A. I saw him writing them down.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. State what that democratic supervisor said to you.—A. Well, he said that those names were on the dead-list; that is why he was taking them down, and that they could not live in that county; and I know myself that five or six families have left there since the election; they could not live in the county. I cannot live in my county, and I cannot ever get back there, either.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of the republican managers not voting?—A. I don't know anything more than what they told me, because I was not there.

Q. What is your place of residence?—A. Union County, right in the precinct. I was teaching school about eighteen months.

Q. How long had you lived there?—A. I had lived in the county about two years.

Q. Where did you come from before that?—A. Aiken County.

Q. Are you a native of this State?—A. I was born in Edgefield.

Q. Have you lived in the State all your life?—A. Only when I was off at school.

Q. How long were you away at school?—A. At one time as long as two years; at another time a year and a half.

Q. State whether you heard threats made against republicans before the election.—A. O, yes; those were numerous. On Monday night, the night before the election, I was going to the precinct from Union, and at a church I passed there was gathered about two hundred democrats, some dressed in black gowns and some dressed in white gowns. In passing, of course, I could not go so as to let them see me, and I went through the woods; but I heard them say, "We are going out to the place called Sand-tuck, and we will kill every radical nigger or make him vote the democratic ticket."

Q. Did you see the crowd of men?—A. I did.

Q. How many were there?—A. A great number; I cannot state exactly, because there were some in the church and some outdoors.

Q. Did you hear any land-owners make threats against republicans who lived on their lands?—A. Yes, sir; the man that lived at the precinct where the vote was taken. I heard him tell his hands that if they voted the republican ticket they could not live with him longer; he would not furnish them any supplies, but they would have to go to their republican friends to get their supplies.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting during the last campaign?—A. Yes, sir; I was at every meeting held in the county. I canvassed the county twice, though I was not a candidate.

Q. How many meetings were you at in the county?—A. We have ten townships, and we held a meeting in every township. Before the election we made about twenty meetings, besides two or three extra meetings at the court-house.

Q. Were any of your meetings interrupted?—A. We didn't hold but five meetings in the county but what we were interrupted. I was cursed several times on the stand for a damn son of a bitch, and dared to speak. On one occasion, at Gold Mine, I was speaking, and there was a gentleman who had run on the republican ticket four years ago, and I was saying something in reference to how many of the republican party was so that as soon as a native of this country would come in they would take him up and give him office. This man said I was a God damned lying son of a bitch, and dared me to open my mouth, and some of his friends ran up and drew their pistols. There was a candidate by the name of Joe Goss between me and them, and he said, "Any man that will take advantage of one man that way is a damn coward; put up your pistols." After I got through speaking they told me they would get me on the way home that evening. I was about ten miles from the county-seat, so I was somewhat afraid to go, still there came up a rain and we ventured to go. I was not molested on the way. At Jonesville, at one meeting, we had some white republicans and white democrats got into a fight, and that broke up the meeting.

Q. Who commenced the disturbance?—A. The democrats cursing any white man that joined the republican party for damned thieves and scoundrels, and a republican white man took it up, and they got into a fight, and that broke up the meeting. On one occasion we went out to a place called Cross Keys, and there was a wagon-load of guns sent out the night before, but Providence seemed to have something to do with it, and the creeks got up and they could not get exactly to the place with the guns.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How do you know that the guns were sent out?—A. I saw the wagon that had the guns in it. It rained until next morning about 10 o'clock, from 12 that night. We republican speakers ventured to go in the rain; we started about 8 o'clock in the morning and we managed to get there. After we got there and opened the meeting there was a good many democrats that lived around the vicinity, and the crowd that went around the meeting and raised the fuss was from Union, but they didn't get there until the last speaker was on the stand, and that saved us, so we did not have any fuss that day. But the second time we went back to that place, about seven days before the election, when I had received my commission as marshal, several men drew their pistols on the speakers, and the republican speaker that was on the stand, after they drew their pistols on him he drew his pistol on them, but I managed to keep down the fuss, being a marshal.

I told them that I was there for the purpose of keeping the peace if I could, and to see that they didn't get into a fuss. There was not a great many democrats there, so we didn't have any fuss more than cursing and drawing pistols. Then on Saturday night before the election at the court-house we were to have a big meeting there, and I happened to be chairman of the meeting. Three speakers had spoken, when there came three or four democrats drunk. Two of them walked up to the bar where the lawyers sat, and one of them drew out a pistol and snapped it at one of the republican speakers. The pistol failed to go off. He struck the pistol on the railing and snapped it at him again; but he had turned around to go off, and the ball passed by his head and went over the head of the republican chairman of the county and struck the wall. At that time four or five that were standing in the door fired, and a general firing took place, and the court-house was cleaned out in about five or ten minutes. One colored man got wounded in the cheek and one in the leg. By that time they all got out on the street, and the republicans were out on the street and began to fire, and the democrats went down to the hotel and got all their guns out. By this time we had some troops there, and they were sent for. The democrats were out on the street going to kill the republicans, and the soldiers came right up just at the moment they started out; so they fell back to the hotel and hid their guns, and the soldiers came up and that saved the peace.

Q. Who were the men that commenced the firing; democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of them were there?—A. There was only one of them that started the firing in the court-house. Eight or ten were standing at the door, and they fired off as soon as he fired; but by the presence of the soldiers the fuss was squelched. The republicans wanted to go back into the court-house and have the meeting there again, but I prevailed upon them not to do so. I didn't think it would be safe. I also asked the advice of the officer, and he said we could have the meeting; he would not object to it; but we would do it at our own risk, and he thought it was safer for us to go home and not have any more meeting that night. So the republicans did that, and the democrats prowled the streets all night in squads, looking for republican leaders. I was in the house peeping through a crack where I could see them. They passed by the house several times. Then on Tuesday was the election.

Q. You live at Union, and have been there two years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there at the election preceding the last?—A. I was.

Q. Were you at Goshen Hill precinct at that election?—A. I didn't take any part in the election at all.

Q. Do you know the number of votes cast there?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Don't you know that there was one-third more votes cast there for the republicans than ever before?—A. Well, I know; and I can account for that.

Q. Do you know the fact?—A. I know there was more polled there than ever before.

Q. And a very much larger number of republican votes than democratic votes?—A. Not very much.

Q. Nearly two to one?—A. Well, I don't remember exactly what the vote was.

Q. As you recollect it, was not the vote nearly two to one for the republicans this year?—A. The republicans had only forty-nine majority.

Q. Was not the vote nearly two to one?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was.

Q. What do you think was the proportion?—A. Well, I know exactly how many votes there ought to have been of democrats and republicans.

Q. I do not ask how many ought to have been cast; I ask you whether there was not a larger vote of republicans cast there than was ever cast before at that precinct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Having left the polls at 3 o'clock, you don't know what was done there afterward?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did have two meetings at each precinct, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And two or three additional meetings at Union?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was more or less speaking at those republican meetings?—A. Speaking by whom?

Q. By the republicans.—A. Yes, sir; we had joint discussions at a good many places.

Q. Those joint discussions were agreed upon, I suppose?—A. They were when they were forced upon us. We were in such a condition that we couldn't do otherwise.

Q. They were agreed upon, were they not?—A. Well, I admit—

Q. I don't want you to admit anything; I want you to say whether they were agreed upon or not?—A. To some extent they were.

Q. On such occasions the republicans and the democrats spoke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some drunken men made trouble?—A. All of them were not drunk.

Q. Some drunken men made trouble?—A. Sometimes they were drunk and sometimes they were sober.

Q. When there was trouble there was always some drunken man about, was there not?—A. No, sir.

Q. At that place was there trouble when there were no drunken men around?—A. At Gold Mine there was no drunken man made trouble. I didn't see a man drunk that day.

Q. Nor under the influence of liquor?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you attended two meetings at each precinct, there were thirty meetings?—

A. We had them by townships, not by precincts. Ten townships—twenty meetings.

Q. And two or three additional meetings at Union?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the exception of this wounding that you tell of, was there any one else shot or wounded or killed in your presence?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the name of the man who fired the shot at that meeting as you have described?—A. Bet Vinson. He lives in Union. He is a clerk in a grocery store. He is a young man.

Q. Who were the other men that fired at the door-way?—A. I don't know, sir. I could see the firing, but I didn't know who they were.

Q. Has that man been prosecuted, or has there been anything done to bring him to justice?—A. No, sir; the parties are scared to do it.

Q. Do you mean to say that civil process cannot be executed in that county of Union?—A. Yes, sir; I do mean to tell you that it has been so.

Q. That is, if you got out a warrant for a person you could not execute it?—A. You can't get a man to make an affidavit.

Q. Then you cannot undertake to enforce the law in Union County now?—A. I don't know. I haven't been there since the election.

Q. Did you ever hold any office in your party?—A. I never did.

Q. You were never a candidate for office?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have lived in South Carolina all your life?—A. Yes, sir; only when I went off to school.

Q. Can you give the name of any other person who fired at anybody in that county during the campaign?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. Cannot you give us the names of those democrats who fired so many guns that night, as you have described?—A. No, sir; I didn't say there was a gun fired on the streets. I said that the republicans in coming down out of the court-house fired their pistols.

Q. Some of the other party fired that night, didn't they?—A. No, sir; I said they were ready to fire, and were going to fire.

Q. Did they return the fire of the republicans?—A. Not after they left the court-house, to my knowledge.

Q. So you cannot tell the name of any one who fired, except this one man who started the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say he was drunk?—A. He acted as if he was drunk.

Q. You suppose he was drunk, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of another man there. Who was he?—A. I don't know.

Q. What was the name of that supervisor that you spoke of?—A. C. W. Wade.

Q. Is he the one that kept the list?—A. He is the one that was at the precinct with me, and had the lead when I left.

Q. Who kept that list—the "dead-list"?—A. His name was Cofield—Jack Cofield, I think. He lives in Goshen Hill Township.

Q. Is he there now?—A. I don't know. I have been away from there for some time. I left him at the precinct.

Q. Have you been before the Senato committee as a witness?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been summoned before them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor before the United States court?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you summoned?—A. I was summoned to appear before this committee here in Columbia.

Q. You have been living in Columbia?—A. No, sir; I came down here about a week ago from Union. I had to leave there.

Q. You remained there from the time of the election up to a week ago, when you left?—A. No, sir; I got here on the 5th of this month.

Q. I understood you to say just now that you got here a week ago.—A. No, sir; I said I was summoned here a week ago.

Q. Where did you come from?—A. I came from Union here.

Q. When did you come from there here?—A. I got here on the 6th of December.

Q. You left there about the 4th of December?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long does it take to come from there here?—A. It is a day's ride, and I had to walk thirty miles before I could take the train.

Q. Are you a man with a family?—A. No, sir; I am not married.

Q. Where were you from the November election down to that time, when you left?—A. I dodged about there in town, and out in the country principally.

Q. Did you live in Union, or in that neighborhood?—A. No, sir; a greater portion of the time I lived around in the town, but I didn't come out in the day-time. I staid in the house.

Q. And you lived there where you had lived before?—A. Yes, sir; and I had democrats come up to me and cuss me, and tell me that I had better leave.

Q. I thought you didn't go out of the house?—A. I was standing in the store-door there. I had a room there.

Q. Standing in the store-door. That would be as public a place as you could find in the village, I suppose.—A. I said I didn't hardly go out. I didn't say I never went out.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Why did you remain indoors in the day-time?—A. Because I could not be safe outside.

Q. Why did you come away from there?—A. Because it was not safe to live there.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

C. A. WINBUSH (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age, and where do you reside?—Answer. I am twenty-seven years old. I reside at Due West, Abbeville County.

Q. Did you vote at the last election?—A. Yes, sir; at Due West.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made against republicans on the day of the election?—A. There was a good deal on Monday night before the election. On Monday we had a meeting at Due West, and the democrats swore that we should not vote there unless we voted the Hampton ticket on the day of the election. On the day of the election there was not very much disturbance there; very little.

Q. Did you hear any threats on the day of the election?—A. Not much. There was some men that got men to promise on Monday to vote with them, and on the day of the election they didn't want to do it. That was about all I heard. Most of the colored people brought it on themselves. They hadn't no business pledging themselves. That is the way I took it. I thought they was more in fault than the whites was.

Q. Because they promised the democrats to vote for them and then wouldn't do it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far was this voting-place from the court-house?—A. Exactly eleven miles.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made at or before the election, by men owning land, against the colored men living on their land?—A. O, yes; I am always hearing lots of them.

Q. What threats were made?—A. They didn't threaten to kill them.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. State only what you heard the white men tell the black men.—A. I ain't going to tell anything else. They didn't threaten to kill them, but they said they allowed to throw them out; not to employ them; and they ain't doing it neither. They stuck up to that. I heard them say that myself.

Q. Who generally own the land there; the white men?—A. The white men owns it all generally around that place.

Q. They are generally democrats?—A. Yes, sir; there ain't a white republican around there nearer than the court-house.

Q. The colored men are generally republicans?—A. Most all republicans.

Q. Do you know of any republicans who, in consequence of these threats, remained away from the polls and didn't vote?—A. Yes, sir; there was a good many of them that wanted to vote the republican ticket and couldn't get to do it unless they run the risk of their lives, and they staid at home.

Q. How many such republicans do you estimate that there were in that township?—A. There was forty-eight colored men right in the village that didn't vote, and others out in the country. I live in the village, and I know there was forty-eight.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings?—A. Yes, sir; I was chairman there in the school-house in the outer edge of the town.

Q. Do you know of any republican meeting being disturbed?—A. Not in Due West.

Q. Did you have more than one meeting?—A. O, we had meetings there all the time; but they took half the time. They called for half the meeting, and they took it; and there was no disturbance.

Q. Were you always willing to let them have it?—A. The first time they took it they run all our men away but a few of us, who was not so scared of them. All the rest left. That time I was not willing. They took it by force.

Q. Why did those republicans run away?—A. Well, the democrats came with pistols, hallooing and whooping and shouting until they scared them.

Q. Did the colored men have any pistols?—A. Some few; but it would be well not to have them.

Q. Did the democrats have any?—A. Yes, sir; they had them outside of their clothes.

Q. Did the democrats at any of their meetings allow the republicans to discuss with them?—A. O, no, sir; they wouldn't let us have no discussion whatever with them.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have been living there ever since 1868. I moved from Lowndesville, not very far from there.

Q. What business are you in?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. Do you know of any violence inflicted upon any colored man in that neighborhood?—A. There was some, but I won't state it, because I didn't see it. There's a man outdoors there, C. W. Winbush, that can tell you about it. He was with it all the time.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You never went to any democratic meeting and asked for a division of time?—A. I asked for the time on Monday before the election.

Q. Of whom did you demand it?—A. I didn't demand it; I only asked it.

Q. And they told you they would not let you have it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the only time you asked it?—A. The only time.

Q. As many republicans voted at Due West as ever voted there before?—A. O, no, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were there at the election in 1874?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And didn't as many republicans vote at this election as voted then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you as sure of that as of anything else you have stated here?—A. Yes, sir; I am, because I was manager in 1874 and manager in 1876.

(Mr. Abbott put in evidence the vote at Due West precinct at the election of 1874 and 1876, respectively, as follows: 1874, republican vote, 141; democratic, 160; 1876, republican vote, 141; democratic, 295.)

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

C. W. WINBUSH (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I live at Due West, Abbeville County; am twenty-seven; I was born there, and have always lived there.

Q. Do you know of any violence inflicted upon republicans by democrats during the last campaign?—A. Intimidation, you mean?

Q. Yes; or violence. Do you know of any republicans being hurt?—A. Yes, sir; I know of one.

Q. State what it was.—A. Well, they had a meeting there over the election, and there was one bruised over the head with a club—a republican.

Q. Who bruised him over the head?—A. It was done by the democrats.

Q. Was it at a republican meeting?—A. There was no meeting at all; it was just in town. There had been a democratic meeting; and we had had one and broke up, and were going home.

Q. What was the occasion?—A. They were talking about the democrats attending our meeting. They were young fellows; all of them. They was talking, and they misunderstood the one what was talking about the meeting; and one of the old men got in a passion, and never waited for this young fellow to tell him his statement about it, but just flew on him with a stick and bloodied him a good deal. That was about the only 'timidation; and I think they made it up afterward.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of threats being made against republicans by democrats?—A. Well, they did say that we should not vote. I was the head man of the box, and the head leader altogether; and they threatened my life several times. They said that if I didn't join the democratic party I would be killed by unknown parties. I didn't join. I told them that I was not working against the interests of them. If I was I didn't know it. If I thought I was working against the interests of them and myself, I would readily go with them; but I thought I was working for my own benefit and the benefit of them.

Q. Do you know of any threats being made by men who owned land, against republicans who lived on their land, in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. Well, I don't know of any threats being made exactly on that occasion, coming out plain to say you could not stay if you didn't vote with them; but it had been said that if you didn't vote with them you couldn't work on the land; and several of them were throwed out, or they asked them to get out.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

W. P. RUTHERFORD (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Laurens County, in Hunter's Township. Clinton is the nearest voting-place to me.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. At Laurens Court-House.

Q. State what, if anything, you know of obstructions being thrown in the way of republicans voting that day.—A. On the morning of the election I went around to four polls, and found them crowded with democrats, armed with pistols and clubs, and they would raise their clubs over the heads of the republican voters in a threatening manner. They were yelling and cursing, and those that voted there voted with the sticks over their heads, as if they were going to be struck every minute. The polls were very crowded, and it was with difficulty that any one could get near. It was crowded with democrats. All I saw were armed with pistols and had red shirts, except those that I saw on horses, which had Winchesters and pistols.

Q. How many armed men were there on horseback?—A. I really can't tell. The majority of them got off their horses and hitched them just as they came into town. I only saw five or six ride into town with their Winchesters. The others got down off their horses and carried their Winchesters under blankets to the different stores.

Q. Were you at the polling-place during the day?—A. I was there the whole day.

Q. What do you know of colored men who came there to vote, but went away without voting?—A. I noticed one particular instance in which fourteen colored men left the polls. Fifteen colored men came up to vote. One of them walked up to the poll and went in and voted, and just as he voted a lot of democrats jerked him down and said, "You damn rascal, you voted twice," took him to a trial-justice's office, and I suppose got a warrant for him and put him in jail.

Q. What became of the fourteen republicans that were with him?—A. They left town right away. By that time they got the impression among the colored people that if you voted the republican ticket it was a crime, and you would be put in jail for it. There was several put in before that.

Q. What do you know of republicans who had failed to get an opportunity to vote before leaving in the evening?—A. I disremember any particular occasion.

Q. Do you know of other republicans leaving besides those fourteen?—A. None that I can name. There was several came to me and told me that they could not vote, and gave their reasons for not doing it.

Q. Do you know of any colored men who came there to vote, going away without voting?—A. Yes, I know there was some that went away without voting.

Q. How many would you estimate did that within your personal knowledge?—A. I presume there was about twenty-five or thirty.

Q. State whether you found this obstruction of the polls by the democrats at more than one of the boxes.—A. I found the same thing at all four boxes in the village.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of colored men being taken away from the polls by democrats when they were attempting to vote?—A. I saw one or two instances where colored men were led from the polls by democrats and their tickets taken away from them. I was not near enough to hear what they said, but their tickets was taken away from them, and a conversation ensued between the democrats and them, and they went back and voted the democratic ticket, and others did not vote at all.

Q. And did not vote during the day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the democrats who talked with those republicans who voted the democratic ticket the owners of land on which the colored men lived?—A. I can't tell that on that day.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of threats being made to colored men before the day of the election?—A. I know a great deal. The first threats I heard were made in a general way in a speech by Col. W. B. Ball, at Laurens Court-House, at the time the democrats broke up a republican meeting. He said that they did not intend to employ any colored man or republican that voted for the republican ticket or voted for that damned thief Chamberlain. I also heard Mr. R. C. Watts make a speech at Clinton, and he said, in these words, "We democrats do not intend to employ any of you colored people who votes the republican ticket." He said that South Carolina belonged to the democrats, and they intended to have it. I also heard Mr. R. S. Finley, at his plantation. He entered into a conversation with me. I declined to talk politics to him. There was three or four men that worked on his place, and he commenced to talk to them, and he told them that if they voted the republican ticket they would have to leave; he could not employ them any longer; that he could not be disregarded by his own party for them; that he would like very well to keep them, but if they voted the republican ticket they would have to leave. I also heard Mr. Bell make the same remark, the postmaster at Clinton, and Mr. West, a merchant there. These were all leading democrats. There was another man, too, Mr. Harris.

Q. Did they all live in that precinct?—A. Yes, sir; except Mr. Watson and Mr. Bell, who lived in Laurens.

Q. Were you one of the county canvassers in Laurens County at the last election?—A. I was.

Q. Did you sign the county canvassers' return?—A. Under protest, I did.

Q. You added these words: "I hereby sign this paper under protest—W. H. Rutherford?"—A. Those were the words I used.

Q. Why did you append your protest?—A. Because I did not believe that the republicans had a fair chance to vote, and I believed the election to be a fraud. Therefore I declined signing, and would not sign it at all had I believed I would have been safe in refusing.

Q. Who else signed the return?—A. Mr. W. L. Boyd.

Q. Why did not the other manager sign?—A. He were not there.

Q. Why was he not there?—A. He left the morning before for Columbia.

Q. Do you know why he left?—A. To my personal knowledge I do not; but I suppose from fear of personal harm.

Q. Has he lived there since?—A. No, sir; he was a resident of that county.

Q. But he has not lived there since the election?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in that county?—A. About six years.

Q. Where were you born and raised?—A. In Macon, Ga.

Q. How long have you lived in this State?—A. Since the first of 1870.

Q. Do you know anything of republican meetings being interrupted during the last campaign?—A. I do, sir; at a meeting of the republicans called at Laurens Court-House. There was a very large crowd of democrats mounted and armed with pistols, and they proposed to divide time, which we declined at first to do. But they said if we didn't divide time, why they would take it all; and so, to keep down a fuss, we consented to divide time with them. We went in the court-house and we allowed their speaker, Mr. Ball, to speak first. He spoke, and the republicans all kept very quiet until he got through. Just as soon as our speaker was introduced, then the row commenced. Our speaker was insulted, and called all kinds of names, and our candidates were cursed, and finally they surrounded the desk where our speaker was standing, and they were cursing and shaking their pistols and drawing them, and finally they knocked one of the colored men in the head with a pistol, and that broke up the meeting. We all went, retired, left them in possession, and they organized a meeting of their own. This was in the day-time.

Q. Were the republican speakers able to proceed with that meeting?—A. No, sir; we had to leave.

Q. Who made those interruptions?—A. The democrats.

Q. Were you at any other republican meeting?—A. I were.

Q. Where?—A. At a township meeting I called in Hunter's township. Just before we met, a company of democrats, a red-shirt club they called the Martin's Depot Mounted Rifle Club, came up with a yell, shouting and hurrahing for Hampton. They hitched their horses and sent for me. I came to them. They commenced talking to me that I know very well that Chamberlain was a damned rascal and thief, and had stolen money from the State. I cut them short and told them I did not propose to talk politics to them. They said, "We came here to speak. We don't want to have a row. We want to divide time. We want these colored people to hear both sides of the question." I said, "I do not propose to have anything to do with it," and I walked off. They went into conversation with others, and after a while some of our people came to me and said they believed that it was best to divide time with them for fear they would break up the meeting, and we could not nominate our delegates to the county convention; so I consented that after that meeting was over we would have public speaking, which was agreed to, and it went on very well, only that they would interrupt us now and then.

Q. Were you able to have meetings wherever you desired?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many places were republican meetings appointed that could not be held?—A. I myself did not call any other meeting; but there were meetings at other places.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You were not there?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did the democrats allow the republicans to take part of their time at their meetings in any instance?—A. Only once that I know of. That was at Clinton. They had a little meeting there one evening, and I happened to be there. They invited me to speak after their speakers were through. They said they would hear me. I got up to speak and they interrupted me a great deal, and finally I stopped and got down and walked off.

Q. Were you able to finish your speech?—Well, sir, I suppose I could have finished it if I had went on and not minded their demonstrations; but I did not feel safe in going on.

Q. Did you finish your speech?—A. Well, I finished what I said; but I did not say what I would like to have said. I had to be very timid in what I said, and very particular. I could not speak my opinion.

Q. State whether the colored people of your county are generally timid and easily alarmed by threats?—A. Very timid, sir.

Q. Have you ever known any instance where they commenced a difficulty or were engaged in violence against the democrats which they commenced?—A. I never have.

Q. If you know of any other fact which has a bearing upon the subject we are investigating, you may state it.—A. There was a man killed at Clinton a while before the election.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know anything of your own knowledge about that?—A. I know he was killed.

Q. You heard of the circumstances from others?—A. I saw where the bullet went through him; I did not see him killed.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was he a republican, and a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how he was killed?—A. Not of my own personal knowledge.

Q. Did you see any wounds on him?—A. No, sir; he was lying on the ground, and I could not see to his skin.

Q. How soon after he was killed did you see him?—A. That night; he was lying on the sidewalk in Clinton.

Q. Was there anybody arrested for that killing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he bleeding?—A. I really don't know, sir; it was very dark and I couldn't tell. It was very crowded round him at the time, and I could only look over their shoulders and see him lying on the ground.

Q. Had he been recently killed?—A. Yes, sir; about 4 o'clock, I think.

Q. What became of him?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you know him ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his character as a peaceable man ?—A. I never heard anything of him, only I heard that he was a man that would drink sometimes ; I never saw him drunk.

Q. What was his character as a peaceable, harmless man ?—A. I never heard anything at all about his character.

Q. Was he regarded generally as a peaceable, harmless man ?—A. O, yes ; when I say that I don't know anything about it, I mean that I never heard of his being in any trouble or difficulty.

Q. You are not able to state of your own knowledge the means by which he was killed ?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. You were only present at the voting-place in Laurens on the day of the election, where there was a United States force stationed ?—A. Yes, sir ; it was about three blocks from the court-house.

Q. There were four voting-places in town ?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that force stationed so near that it could be easily called upon at any one of the voting-places ?—A. The nearest box, I suppose, was about three blocks off, and the others were three or four.

Q. The first was not half a mile from any of the voting-places ?—A. I guess not.

Q. Were there not more republican votes cast in this year than ever were cast before ?—A. I do not know.

Q. Were you present at the election in 1874 ?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you not live there at that time ?—A. I did ; but not in the village. I lived about fifteen miles from there.

Q. You did not vote at Laurens at that election ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know that the vote at Laurens this year was larger than ever before ?—A. I do not—wait a moment, I will take that back. Do you mean the whole county ?

Q. No ; I mean the four voting-places in Laurens town.—A. I don't know that ; but I suppose there were, on account that we advised all the republicans to come there, but I can't swear that they all voted there.

Q. What is your business ?—A. I am a school-teacher, and I farm too.

Q. Do you belong to the Union League ?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you ever belonged to it ?—A. I have not.

Q. Or to the United Brethren ?—A. I have not.

Q. Or to the Laboring Union ?—A. I do not belong to any society.

Q. Have you a family ?—A. I have.

Q. You have remained in Laurens ever since the election ?—A. No, sir ; I left the Friday after the election.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

IRA W. RICE sworn and examined.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Question. What is your age ?—Answer. Twenty-seven years.

Q. Where do you reside ?—A. At Laurens Court-House. I have lived in the county all my life.

Q. What business have you been engaged in there ?—A. I have been clerk of the court for the last five years.

Q. Do you know of any colored republicans being killed during this current year ?—A. Yes, sir ; I know of some.

Q. Where ?—A. In Laurens County.

Q. Whom ?—A. Butler Putman was killed. That was the only body that I saw after he was killed.

Q. Did you see his dead body ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How had he been killed ? Did you see any marks on the body indicating how he had been killed ?—A. Yes, sir ; he had been shot, I think, seven times, and it was thought by some that he was shot—

The CHAIRMAN. Confine the witness to his own knowledge.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Where was his body ?—A. It was at his house when I saw it. It was about thirteen miles from the Court-House. It was near the road.

Q. Did you see any marks of violence on the house ?—A. Yes ; there were several shots in the house—bullet-marks.

Q. When was this ?—A. About the 23d or 24th of August last. He was a colored man.

Q. Do you know, of your own personal knowledge, the circumstances under which he was killed ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were they?—A. Parties went to his house—

By Mr. ANNOTT:

Q. Were you there to see them?—A. I was not there, sir, the night he was killed.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Do you know of other colored men being killed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. About five others. That was the only body that I saw.

Q. Were you at the funeral of any others?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know, by general report, of the death of other colored men by violence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many others?—A. I think there was about five killed.

Q. By violent means?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All colored men and all republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During this current year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what months?—A. In the months of August, September, and October. I think the first was killed, perhaps, along about the first or middle of July.

Q. What do you know, if anything, of threats made by democrats owning land, against republicans living on their lands, in case they should vote the republican ticket?—A. I know that threats have been generally made.

Q. Did you hear threats made?—A. Yes; I heard threats made on the day of the election.

Q. What were they?—A. Well, on the day of the election, the employers generally at the box where I noticed got near the box where the ballots went in, and when the employes came up to vote they would say if they voted the republican ticket that they should not go back to their plantations, and they would have what they had on the places put out in the road.

Q. The employers were the white democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The employes were colored men—republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who owned the principal part of the lands in your county?—A. The white democrats.

Q. How are the colored men of the county generally employed in working on the lands?—A. They work on the lands for shares of the crops.

Q. What effect did the condition of things which prevailed at a preceding election have in keeping colored republicans from going to the polls to vote on the day of the election?—A. I think it had the effect to keep a great many from the polls, and it forced a good many to vote contrary to their wishes, and a great many that did vote the republican ticket have since been discharged. I know that of my own knowledge. I was up home a week ago, and a great many persons that voted the republican ticket have been discharged in accordance with the threats, and a good many have been discharged and have not received their portion of the crop.

Q. Do you know whether they continue to reside at the same places where they resided before the election?—A. They had moved. One family that I speak of now had moved, and the other had been out hunting a home, and hadn't been able to find one.

Q. Were you a candidate for any office at the last election?—A. Yes, sir; I was a candidate for re-election as county clerk.

Q. Where have you lived since the election?—A. I have been in Columbia pretty much since the election. I went up about ten days ago, or intended to return home about ten days ago. I didn't get to the court-house. I got within eighteen miles of it, to the place where I am interested in the rent of, and I stopped there a day or two. That is as far as I got.

Q. Why didn't you go to the court-house?—A. Well, I was afraid to go; I was attacked while there.

Q. By whom were you attacked?—A. By white democrats, I suppose; at least I would be willing to swear that they were, although I did not see them. The parties attacking me came after 11 o'clock, surrounded the house, and commenced shooting in with Winchester rifles. Several balls took effect in the wall close by where I was, and after firing commenced the men on the plantation there heard it and came to my assistance. The parties were out in the yard. Two of them had got inside of the gate, and the others were out on the road on horseback. They fired fifteen or twenty shots. I think the parties that fired walked in the yard and saw pretty nearly where I was, because the balls came near where I was; one of them struck the chair I had rose from; and next morning I saw the tracks in the yard.

Q. How were the shots fired into the building?—A. It was a room attached to the main building, and the shots came through the door into the opposite side.

Q. What kind of a door was it?—A. It was a door made of boards; not quite so thick as these doors; there was a little crack under the door where you could see my position.

Q. How near to you did their shots come, besides the one that struck the chair on which you were sitting?—A. Three of the balls came very near my head, and went into the wall about where my head would have been leaning against the wall.

Q. State whether, in consequence of that and other facts within your knowledge, you are afraid to return to your home?—A. Yes, sir; with other threats, some personal threats, and some threats to others that have been sent word to, &c.

Q. Do you own property?—A. I have no real estate there. I own personal property.

Q. Have you a family?—A. Yes, sir; my family was in the house at the time of the shooting.

Q. How many children have you?—A. One child only.

Q. What, if anything, do you know of republicans going to the voting-place on the day of the election and going away without voting?—A. There was a large number of republicans that came to the polls to vote with the intention of voting the republican ticket, and that were, I might say, so intimidated that they did not vote and went home. The mode of intimidation on the day of the election was in every form imaginable. The first form I have stated—the employers getting near the polls and telling the employes what the consequences would be. Then I saw a man at precinct No. 1, Mr. Langston; he had a very large stick, and he got up very near the polls, and when a republican would come up to vote he would call out his name and make him tell what place he lived on, and he would ask back to the crowd if there was any objection to this man voting; he would wait a minute, and if any objection was made, if anybody said he was too young, or he had been in the penitentiary or stole something, or broke a contract, no matter what it was, if there was a voice heard against him he had to stand aside, and that, of course, made the process of voting very slow. I noticed, however, that when a democrat came to vote those questions would not be asked. A great many that stood around saw that slow process, and they went off. Another form was that they would arrest them. They had a company of men that seemed to have been appointed for that time to arrest any man that they could get any clew on, especially if he was a republican, and they would march him around the streets two or three times and then carry him off to a justice of the peace's office for attempting to vote illegally. A good many of the others seeing that, were frightened and went off. Then I saw also men offering money for men to vote the democratic ticket. Men would be in a line trying to make their way to the polls to vote, and the democrats would call them aside and take them off—not aside either. I was at the court-house nearly all day and I stood in the court-house door, and when the lines went up to the box I could see the process. Those are all the forms that I can remember now, but every effort was used to prevent voters from voting the republican ticket. That was precinct No. 1, and I understand it was done generally at all the boxes.

Q. Did you attend any republican meetings during the year?—A. Yes, sir. We had one republican meeting at Laurens Court-House. We attempted to have several, but only succeeded in having one during the whole campaign.

Q. Do you know of republican meetings being disturbed by democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. All that we attempted to have until the last one, which was a few days before the election, when the troops were there. The troops didn't go to Laurens until very late. We attempted to have one or two meetings in the country first, but they were overawed, you might say, by the clubs. We could not have them, and never had one successful meeting in the county during the campaign.

Q. If you know any other fact which is material to this investigation, you may state it.—A. I don't know as I do.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. There were troops sent to Laurens?—A. Troops came there very late.

Q. They came there before the election; were they there for a week before the election?—A. Yes; perhaps several weeks.

Q. They were right in the neighborhood of all the voting-places in Laurens?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were within half a mile of any voting-place in Laurens?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you mean to say that there was any voting-place in Laurens Court-House that was not within half a mile of troops?—A. Yes, sir they were within half a mile at the Court-House.

Q. So that in five minutes' time, if there had been any trouble, the troops could have been called out to any one of those precincts?—A. O, yes, sir; if there had been anybody with authority to call on them.

Q. Well, anybody where there was a row going on could call on the troops?—A. Yes, sir. They could have gotten to the precinct, I suppose, in five minutes.

Q. Were there more republican votes cast at the last election at the four precincts in Laurens than ever before?—A. O, no, sir; not by a great deal.

Q. You were there in 1874?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are as sure of that as you are of anything else that you have sworn to?—A. What is the ques ion?

Q. Were there not more votes cast at the four precincts than ever before?—A. O, no, sir; just the reverse.

Q. Didn't the republicans in this year, 1876, at those four precincts, cast more votes than they cast in 1874?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Do you know anything about it?—A. Yes, sir; I profess to know.

Q. Are you as sure that they did not as you are of any other fact?—A. I am sure of this.

Q. Answer my question. Are you as sure that they cast fewer votes in 1876 at the four precincts together in the town of Laurens than they did at the election before in 1874 as you are of any fact that you have sworn to to-night?—A. Well, I am pretty sure of this: I am pretty sure that the vote ran far behind what it has in the previous year.

Q. Now, are you as sure that the republican vote ran far behind what it had been in 1874 as you are of any other fact that you have sworn to?—A. Of course I was not a manager, and I had to leave very soon after the voting was over; but it is my belief that the vote, taking them all together, ran far behind. It might have in this way, by the democrats crowding one particular poll, that might have forced the republicans to other polls.

Q. Taking all the polls together, you said that you were just as sure as you possibly could be that at this election fewer votes were cast?—A. O, yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You said fewer votes in the county?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ANNOTT:

Q. No; I did not say a word about the county; I confined you to the court-house.—

A. I don't know about the returns.

Q. Never mind the returns; take the votes cast.—A. I think all the precincts ran behind the usual vote.

Q. So that the four together cast less than the vote in 1874?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. And you were present in the town of Laurens when the voting was going on?—

A. I was at precinct No. 1.

Q. Didn't you go to any other precinct?—A. I did not go until late in the afternoon.

Q. You did go some time or other to other precincts?—A. I went to one other precinct late in the afternoon.

Q. To any other but one?—A. No other.

Q. And your whole knowledge is confined to two precincts?—A. No; I know generally about all the precincts.

Q. I am asking you what you know from having been there; your knowledge is confined to two precincts?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Q. Were you at any of the precincts except those two?—A. I don't remember now being at any but those two.

Q. Don't you know that you were not at any other precinct except two that day?—A. No, sir; I do not. I might have gone around the precincts; they were very near together.

Q. I don't ask what you might have done; you told me a little while ago that you never went to but two precincts.—A. No; I didn't tell you any such thing.

Q. You said you staid at No. 1 all day until late in the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir; and then I went to another, and I might have gone—I remember that I staid pretty much all day at No. 1, and then went to another precinct.

Q. Did you go to any other but this one that you have mentioned?—A. It is my recollection now that I did not; I might have done so.

Q. I do not ask what you might have done; you went to only two precincts, as you now recollect?—A. That is my recollection now.

Q. Then you do not know from having seen anything of the other precincts at all; you did not go near the other two?—A. They were all very near together.

Q. Did you go to the others that day, as you recollect?—A. My impression is that I was only in sight where I could see what was going on at these two precincts. Three of these voting precincts are in the court-house.

Q. So that you could see them all?—A. No; I could not see them all at the same time. I could see them by turning around.

Q. Well, you could see them all in the course of the day?—A. Yes, sir; take, for instance, No. 1 at this door, No. 2 at another door; you might place yourself so as to see what was going on at those.

Q. Well, you did see what was going on at the different precincts?—A. Generally, I did.

Q. Then you did see what was going on at the other two precincts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remained in town after the vote was declared, did you not?—A. No, sir; I don't think the vote was declared at all.

Q. Didn't you hear of the vote?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you ever hear of the vote?—A. I don't believe I ever heard the official announcement of it.

Q. Did you ever hear what the vote there was?—A. I don't believe I ever heard what the vote was.

Q. Don't you know whether you ever heard it or not?—A. My impression now is that I have not.

Q. From your general knowledge, was your republican vote larger in 1876 than it was in 1874, or smaller?—A. O, it was smaller, a great deal.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As sure as of anything else that you have sworn to?—A. Well, I don't know that I am as sure as of anything else, because I had nothing to do with the official count.

Q. But from your knowledge of what was going on in voting, are you sure as you are of any fact you have sworn to?—A. No; I am not as sure of that as I am of this intimidation at the polls that I saw, because I took notice of that and took no notice of the count of the vote, and I don't know that I asked any one the official result.

Q. You feel very sure of the fact that there were fewer votes?—A. Yes, sir; I think there were.

Q. And you were a candidate for an office, and had some interest to know about the votes cast?—A. I was a candidate for office.

Q. And for that reason you had some reason to see about the number of votes cast; to see if you were elected.—A. Well, I could have found out by observing the manner of voting in two hours after the polls opened, that I was not to be elected.

Q. Well, you had some interest in the election, because you wanted to know about your own election?—A. Well, any one could have known that there was no chance of any one being elected that those who had control of the polls were opposed to.

Q. Do you hold any other office under the republicans?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever held any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you keep any account of the votes this year?—A. No, sir.

Q. So that any opinion you might give is a mere guess from what you saw?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott put in evidence the republican vote at Laurens Court-House in 1874 and in 1876, as follows:

Republican vote, 1874, 1,062; republican vote, 1876, 1,160.

Adjourned.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

M. C. BUTLER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your age and place of residence.—Answer. I reside at Edgesfield. I am forty years of age.

Q. Where were you on the day of the recent presidential election?—A. At Edgesfield Court-House.

Q. Please state, in your own way, the facts that came under your observation in regard to the conduct of the election at that place on that day.—A. I reside a mile from the Court-House, on the road leading to this city. At Edgesfield Court-House there were two voting-precincts, No. 1 and No. 2. Precinct No. 1 was in the court-house. Precinct No. 2 was at a negro school-house, about half a mile away, but within the corporation limits. I got to the Court-House about seven o'clock, or perhaps a little earlier. I found quite a number of white men and also quite a number of colored men at the polls. I did not go inside of the court-house. The entrance to it is by a flight of steps fifteen or twenty feet high. The box was inside of the court-house, and the door was closed, and nobody was there but the managers and the supervisors, and perhaps one or two challengers on each side, and the voters were admitted as the managers saw fit—from five to ten at a time. After I had been there some little time, Colonel Randall, of the Army, came out to where I was standing on the square in front of the court-house steps, and said to me that a deputy United States marshal had reported to General Brannan that the polls were obstructed and that the people were not allowed to vote. I said I had no knowledge of anything of the kind; that I was there simply as a citizen; that I had heard no complaint from the managers; but he could of course examine for himself. He looked in that direction and said, "I see the voting still going on. I see no obstruction." I said, "I think that upon examination you will find none." I then said to him that perhaps one of the grounds of the complaint was that hitherto the negroes in very large numbers had generally got possession of the poll at that place early in the morning so that the white people could not get access to it until mid-day or later, and that on this occasion we had taken time by the forelock and got there first, and proposed to retain possession of the poll until we got done voting. He said he saw no objection to that, and he went back and reported to General Brannan, I suppose, and denounced this man for making a false report. I went from precinct No. 1 to precinct No. 2 at about ten o'clock. I was under the impression that I reached there at an earlier hour, but by conversation with Colonel Randall and others I am satisfied that it must have been about ten o'clock. There were some white men voting at that poll and some colored men I suppose. I did not go into the house at all. Just as I got there I saw that there was a row about to begin. The first thing that attracted my attention was a negro man with a pistol in his hand, and some commotion among the whites and the colored men. I rode up to him and said, "Put up your pistol; there is no occasion for it here." He made some reply and rather backed himself toward the fence, and I ordered a young man named Dr. Sheppard to arrest him. We had taken the precaution to have several persons deputized by the sheriff to preserve the peace. I had an authorization of that kind in my pocket at that time. Dr. Sheppard arrested the man and carried him off, and the difficulty subsided.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You were a deputy sheriff?—A. I was, and so was Dr. Sheppard. After the difficulty subsided I went back down the street and in a very short time General Brannan sent up a company of soldiers, commanded by Captain Kellogg, and when I got back the soldiers had possession of the poll—that is to say, they had sentinels in front of the door. The white men were off on either side, some mounted and some dismounted. They were nearly all on foot strung along the fence. I got off my horse. There was a very small area between them and the crowd of negroes, who were rushing very earnestly to get at the poll, and Lieutenant Hoyt, with his sentinels, was in this area. I am speaking now of precinct No. 2. I got off my horse and walked into the space which was occupied by Lieutenant Hoyt and his men. The sentinels would take their bayonets and push the people back, and in some instances they would strike them over the head with the butts of their muskets. Lieutenant Hoyt himself would sometimes come and push them back. The area was diminishing in size, and I suggested to the lieutenant that he needed two more sentinels, and furthermore, that in my judgment the best way to preserve order would be to open a space from the front of the door to the fence. He sent an orderly to Captain Kellogg, who was about fifty yards off, I suppose, with his company in line, for two more sentinels. When they came he made a sentinel go forward and push back the people and open an avenue, and then they had no more trouble. The managers were inside, and the point of egress for voters was at a window. There also two sentinels were placed. The lieutenant would go around and select from the circle of colored people ten at a time, (the managers said they could dispose of ten at a time,) and in that way they voted until six o'clock in the evening. This was the only incident at that polling-place that I now remember. I went back to precinct No. 2 about four or half past four o'clock. The whites had given up that precinct entirely to the negroes, and were voting at precinct No. 1. I got down there about half past four. Somebody came up and said that the negroes were all coming back to poll No. 1, and I looked down the street and saw a column of, I suppose, 250 colored people coming up. As the crowd came up I rode down about one hundred yards across the square to meet them, for I was apprehensive that if they came there and rushed up the steps there would be a collision. In the mean time quite a number of men had come in from the country to report the result of the vote there, and I suppose there were from 100 to 150 white men in the square. As I rode down I recognized two of the negroes who had told me at precinct No. 2 that they had voted. I said to one of them, "You voted down there?" and he said, "Yes," and immediately got out. About the same time the other came out and I said to him, "You voted down there, too, sir, for you told me so." He said, "Yes, I did." I rode around to General Brannan's headquarters to remonstrate. I went into his office, and there I found Lawrence Cain, the republican candidate for senator, and I said to General Brannan that I protested against conduct of this kind. I said, "I have been here all day trying to preserve order, and I protest against bringing these people back here to produce a collision after they have occupied poll No. 2 all day; it is not fair, it is not right." General Brannan said, "Well, gentlemen, of course they must be allowed to vote." I said, "Certainly; and if there is any one here who wants to vote let him go with me and I will see that he does vote." Mr. Sheppard said the same thing. In the conversation I used some language that was perhaps rather more graphic than polite, because I was very much provoked. The voting went on until six o'clock. In the mean time the people were coming in from the country, as I have stated. The circumstances I have stated are the only ones of any note that occurred at Edgesfield Court-House that day. My judgment is that it would have been impossible for all the negroes and all the white voters to have voted at those two precincts. I said to General Brannan that the mistake that Cain and the other leaders made was in having the colored people there in such numbers that it was impossible for them to vote. I do not know exactly how many there were, but there was an immense crowd. At previous elections they had turned out in great crowds, and the result had been that many of the white people had to go off without voting at all, so this time we thought we would be ahead.

Q. Were any means used to prevent the colored people from voting, except that the white people came to the poll first and put in their votes?—A. None whatever that I saw.

Q. I believe you swear each voter here.—A. Each voter. The managers had control of that matter. I took the ground with Colonel Randall, that the managers were the judges of that, and they took their own way and their own time in swearing the voters. As each one came in, they would swear him, and he would deposit his ballot, subject, of course, to challenge and the other legal rights which the people at the boxes had. But if anything more was done than is ordinarily done at elections, I did not know it.

Q. After the way was opened up to the voters at poll No. 2, about ten o'clock, was there any further difficulty in the way of the colored people depositing their ballots?—A. Not at all, to my knowledge. If there was, the officer was responsible for it.

Q. Did you see anything in the way of abuse of the negroes when they attempted to put in their ballots?—A. I have not the slightest knowledge of anything of the kind. When this little mêlée was about to occur—which I got there in time to prevent—one or two men were hit over the head. That matter has been investigated by the United States commissioner, and the parties accused have been discharged. I witnessed the affair. Of course, I cannot swear with absolute certainty as to who started it, but the first indication of an attempt to use arms that I saw was the pistol in the hands of this negro man when I ordered him to put it up. He was before the commissioner and gave his testimony, and a young man who was accused of making an assault upon him was discharged by the commissioner, and no further action has been taken in the matter.

Q. It has been stated here that bands of armed men were around the polls, hurrahing and intimidating the colored voters. What do you know of that?—A. I saw none armed there; that is, none armed beyond what is, unfortunately, the habit of our people here. I suppose almost every man carries a pistol. I did not see the pistols, but I suppose they had them on their persons, and I suppose most of the negroes had them, also.

Q. You say it is the general custom of the people in this part of the country to carry arms?—A. Yes, sir; to carry pistols. Beyond that, I saw no display of arms; and I think I may go further and say that during this entire canvass I saw no display of arms.

Q. It was rather understood, then, without any formal arrangement, that the whites having possession of poll No. 1, the negroes should take possession of No. 2?—A. That was the understanding, agreed to, as I thought, by common consent. There was no specific agreement to that effect, but the negroes went off to vote at No. 2, and the white people practically abandoned it. There were, perhaps, twenty or thirty whites there during the day.

Q. Did the white people retain possession of poll No. 1, or continue present in the immediate neighborhood of the poll, to the exclusion of the colored people, any longer than was necessary in depositing their votes?—A. Not at all, sir; there was perfect access to and egress from the polls that day. A statement has been made here in regard to a meeting which was organized at the court-house some time during the canvass. There was no organized meeting. I made a speech there, and so did Mr. Sheppard. The people began to be very clamorous, and we addressed them, but there was no difficulty in anybody's passing that chose to do it. About half past 4 o'clock, I think, the crowd coming in from the country began to be clamorous for me and other popular speakers, and I made a few remarks which were intended to be rather of a humorous character than otherwise. The people were passing up and down the court-house steps all the time, and if there was any obstruction I did not see it. It was immediately before that I went to General Brannan's office, and said that if any of these people wanted to vote, I would accompany them and see that they had an opportunity to do so, and Mr. Sheppard said the same thing.

Q. How large a force had General Brannan there?—A. He had ten companies in the county. He sent one to Shaw's Mill precinct, sixteen miles off, under the command of Captain Falk; he sent one to Liberty Hill, eighteen miles off, near the Abbeville line; one to Richardsonville, about seventeen miles off, in another direction; and one to Ridge Spring, about sixteen miles distant. Captain Keller, I think, was in command at Richardsonville. I am not sure about that, but I remember that Captain Falk, a German, was at Shaw's Mill. I have forgotten who was at Liberty Hill.

Q. Then there were six companies remaining, under command of General Brannan, at Edgefield Court-House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far were they from the polls?—A. Their barrack was fifty or sixty yards from poll No. 1.

Q. How far were they from poll No. 2?—A. They had a company right at poll No. 2. I think all the infantry companies were at the old hotel just across the street from my office, not more than sixty yards from the court-house, and the artillery companies that came afterward were over at the academy in the grove.

Q. You took considerable part in the campaign throughout the State?—A. I was particularly active in Edgefield County. I made a speech in Fairfield County, at Winnaburgh, on the day General Hampton was there; I made a speech on the following day, I think, at Lexington Court-House; I made a speech at Marion Court-House, in the eastern part of the State, and at Greenville Court-House, in the northern part of the State, and then along the railroad, as I was going to or returning from these different points, crowds would gather, and I would come out and make a few remarks. I made quite a number of speeches in Edgefield County.

Q. What was the general character of the meetings you attended as to peace and quietness?—A. At Winnaburgh there was an immense crowd. The democratic clubs had the habit of coming to meetings mounted. It was so in Edgefield, I know, and I think in all the counties. At Winnaburgh there came with them quite a number of colored democrats, who were also mounted. General Hampton at that place, and, as I understood, at most other places, took special pains to make provision for the negroes immediately in front of the speakers' stand, or, if the ladies were there, he made place for the negroes as near as they could possibly get, as he always expressed a very great desire to talk to them particularly. That arrangement was made at Winnaburgh when I was there, but at Edgefield Court-House, when General Hampton came there, I did not make it. General Gary, who was chairman of the democratic executive committee, requested me to act as chief marshal, for the purpose of preserving order more than anything else, and I declined to make this special provision for the negroes; I took the ground that they must take their chances with other citizens; I did not see the necessity for making any special provision for them; they came in the crowd like anybody else, and took their chances, like others, to hear or not. On that day I was especially anxious to avoid anything like a collision or difficulty. There was a great deal of enthusiasm, and the white men hallooed a great deal; they gave that "rebel yell" which has been talked about so much, and there were a great many such demonstrations as prevail, I presume, in most political campaigns; but in addition to the authority which I had from the executive committee, I took the precaution to get the intendant of the town to give me a special deputation to preserve the peace, and I had occasion, during the day, to arrest two of their men; but if there was any disturbance there it did not come under my observation. There was one young man who was drunk, and who had shot at a negro over on the square. They had got into a personal difficulty, and as soon as I heard of it I sent three of my assistants to arrest him and put him in jail. The young men came to me and said, "This man (mentioning his name) has been trying to raise a difficulty, and you have instructed us to avoid a disturbance, so we have come to you to report that you must protect us." I went at once to where this man was with two others. They were very drunk. I said to them, "If you do not behave yourselves I will put you in jail." One fellow said, rather defiantly, that I would have a good time doing it. I said, "Now, I mean what I say; I am determined that there shall be no disturbance." Two or three presidents of the clubs saw what was going on and came up and said, "General, if you wish any assistance to arrest these men you shall have as much as you want." As soon as the fellows heard that, they subsided. There was one other man there who was drunk, and who was taken off the ground. With this exception, the day passed without disturbance. I did not see what occurred at this encounter, but somebody told me that he knocked the man's pistol up. There was quite a large number of ladies there, and a number of speeches were made. That night, as one of the clubs were going home, they were ambuscaded by some negroes at a place called the Promised Land, and one of the young men named Gilmore was killed. There was a good deal of excitement about it, and a man came to my house about 11 o'clock at night, and complained that one of his companions had been killed and another wounded. I said to him, "General Gary has gone out to look after that, and you had better report to Major Kline and to him." "But," said he, "this has happened since General Gary went away." There was naturally a great deal of indignation about the affair, as it was a most wanton and unprovoked assault. There was not the slightest occasion for it. The white men had been kept in hand all day and had given no occasion whatever for this outrage.

Q. What was the general character of the meetings you attended as to peace and quietness and the presence of people with arms?—A. I have never seen any political canvasses more orderly and peaceable. With so much excitement there was, of course, some noise, but I saw no arms.

Q. These mounted clubs have been frequently referred to here as rifle-clubs. State their character, if you know it.—A. I have heard a great deal about rifle-clubs, but there was only one single rifle-club in the county that I knew anything about, and that was at Edgefield Court-House, and it was organized under a provision of our law which authorizes such an organization, by application to the clerk of the court, to procure a charter. This was organized by Captain Link, in the regular way, more than two years ago, and it has maintained a sort of passive existence ever since. Beyond that, I know of no rifle-clubs in Edgefield County.

Q. After the proclamation of Governor Chamberlain in regard to rifle-clubs what was done?—A. The club disbanded.

Q. What were the clubs which were present at meetings during the campaign?—A. They were democratic political clubs. Nothing more. They had their presidents, vice-presidents, and other officers, just as I suppose every political club in the United States has. The only difference between those and other democratic clubs was that they came mounted and in regular order to the meetings.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Is not that the usual and ordinary way in which your people here come to meetings?—A. It is very customary. Our roads under our present régime are very bad, and it is much more comfortable to travel on horseback. I invariably travel on horseback to my plantation, a distance of eighteen miles, and the great majority of our people go to church on horseback. These clubs were nothing more than ordinary democratic political clubs mounted. I dare say they all had their pistols; I have no doubt about it. I carried a pistol throughout the campaign; something I have never done before in my life. But I felt it necessary to my personal safety. As I said a while ago, I think it an unfortunate habit that our people have of carrying pistols, but it is the custom of the country. Beyond that, I saw no display of arms, and I saw every meeting that assembled at Edgesfield Court-House.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You have referred to colored democrats; were there colored men belonging to those clubs?—A. Yes, sir; there was one club of sixty colored democrats six or seven miles above Edgesfield Court-House; they came in a body to this meeting at the court house when General Hampton was present; they came with red shirts and mounted on mules, and perhaps they had pistols too, though I do not know about that.

Q. State whether you know anything in regard to colored men voting the democratic ticket throughout this State at the last election more than usual.—A. O, very much more than usual. There were six on my plantation who voted the democratic ticket.

Q. You referred a while ago to the intendant of Edgesfield; that is the officer corresponding to the mayor of a city, is he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present at a meeting held in Edgesfield by Governor Chamberlain?—A. Yes, sir; I was there and made a speech.

Q. State whether that meeting was seriously interfered with by the democrats.—A. At that time I was not officially connected with the party in any way more than any other citizen. General Gary and Mr. Sheppard sent a committee to Governor Chamberlain and the party that were with him, to ask if they would allow us to divide time with them. The matter was taken under advisement, and my information was that the proposition had been declined by the committee of arrangements; Governor Chamberlain expressing a willingness on his own part that the arrangement should be made. When the crowd went over to the academy I went over with General Gary and ten or fifteen hundred white men, and perhaps as many colored men. They had been back and forth there that morning. I had been over there myself that morning. We found some people on the stand. The colored people were out in front of the stand, occupying the entire ground in front, and the white people were on the right and to the rear; the colored people coming right up to the stand. We got upon the stand, and, I think, though I am not sure, that I made the opening remarks, which were addressed to the white people, and the tenor of which was that Edgesfield had a reputation for being turbulent and disorderly, and I hoped that by their conduct that day they would prove that it was not deserved; that they would give the speakers a respectful hearing and preserve order. They exclaimed, "We will, we will," &c. Some preliminaries were gone through. I do not know just what they were, and then this man Cain got up to act as chairman. General Gary protested against that. Governor Chamberlain and Judge Mackey then got up and said that they were willing that we should have a share of the time, and suggested that each speaker should have half an hour, which we agreed to. Mr. Chamberlain opened the meeting with a speech, very general in its character, and I replied to him. I announced that with his personal character I had nothing to do, but that with his official career I should take the liberty to deal, as I had a right to do; and, in the course of my remarks, I did say that I saw sitting on the wagon Mr. Smalls, who had taken the liberty to denounce me on the floor of Congress as a leader of the Hamburg riot; that I was not upon equal terms with him in that place, and, therefore, could not reply to him; that Governor Chamberlain had also seen fit to couple my name in a very pronounced way with that affair, and that I now called upon Smalls and Chamberlain, in the presence of the people, to make good that charge, or to stand confessed as public liars. I said that upon my personal responsibility; I did feel bitter, and I feel bitter about it now, because I think Governor Chamberlain has done me very great injustice. That was about the most extravagant expression that I used. I also replied to the positions which Governor Chamberlain had taken in his speech. I then turned to this crowd of negroes and asked them if they had ever known of my doing even the humblest of them an injury, and said that if they did I desired that they should make it known. Judge Mackey replied to me, sustaining Governor Chamberlain's administration, and General Gary replied to Judge Mackey in pretty bitter terms.

Mackey then arose to make a speech in vindication of Governor Chamberlain. In the mean time the stand had broken down three or four times, and I saw that it was going to fall again, so I got up on a shelf that was there. When Judge Mackey got up to speak a second time the people interrupted him a good deal, and when Chamberlain arose they interrupted him and put a good many sharp questions to him, as they had done to me a thousand times in political canvasses in South Carolina, but nothing was done beyond what I thought was legitimate. I did on one occasion ask the crowd not to interrupt him even as much as they did, saying that we wanted nothing but fair play; but beyond that, there was nothing worse than what I have been subjected to, probably fifty times, by republicans and negroes. When Judge Mackey got up the second time there was very decided evidence of disapprobation. I rose and said I hoped they would be quiet, and that I would reply to Judge Mackey, and thereupon the noise subsided. Whilst we were indulging in this debate, Chamberlain went off with his crowd. I heard a good many things that were said to him on the way back. I do not know anything personally about what I heard, but I undertake to say this, that he was just as safe in Edgemoor as I was, or as he would have been in any part of the State. There was quite a good deal of excitement and noise, but nothing more.

Q. Has it been the custom in your city to hold joint discussions?—A. Yes, sir; it has been so sometimes. We supposed that that arrangement had been made by the two executive committees. Our object was to get access to the colored people. We wanted to talk to them. Chamberlain and his party had studiously kept them away from our meetings. We desired an opportunity to be heard by them, for the purpose of convincing them that we had the best of the argument. That was our real purpose. In political campaigns here joint discussions are not infrequent, and we supposed that such an arrangement had been made by the executive committees of the two parties, and that was the reason of our application. If Governor Chamberlain had objected when we arrived at the meeting, the proposal would not have been insisted upon; but he consented, and made the suggestion that it should occupy half an hour. There were a good many meetings at Edgemoor, and sometimes there was a great deal of enthusiasm and noise on the part of both parties; but nothing like any systematized or organized intimidation; at least I did not know of any, and I do not believe there was any. What individuals did, I cannot undertake to be responsible for; but our policy and our purposes were to adopt exactly the opposite course, and endeavor to persuade the colored people of the error of their ways. I know that General Hampton invariably, in a most pronounced manner, made that effort wherever he went. At Greenville Court-House I attended a meeting, and the white people there even went so far as to require the persons who occupied the lawyers' bar to bring the colored people in there and give them seats right in front of us. Such preferences were shown, I think, to a very great extent throughout the canvass.

Q. What was the general character of the appeal made by the democratic speakers to the colored people?—A. One of the leading arguments was that this party in South Carolina was destroying not only their prosperity but ours; that we had shown our willingness to vote for a republican if they would give us an honest one; that I had voted twice for a republican in South Carolina; that I had run on the ticket, in 1870, with a republican, Judge Carpenter, with colored men canvassing the State with me; that we had made every possible concession, as we thought, and the argument was that, by casting their votes for these men, who were denounced from one end of the civilized world to the other as a band of robbers, the colored people were doing injustice to themselves as well as to us; that their children were growing up in ignorance; that the school-fund had been plundered and misspent; that lands had been bought for the colored people by the land-commission, and they had made no progress in paying for them, (I do not think that one of the colored men, in seven years, has paid for his land,) and that the rule of this party in South Carolina was not republican at all; that these men were not the representatives of the republican party, but that they had borrowed the name of that party as a means and medium of systematized, legalized plunder and robbery.

Q. Do you know of any application on the part of the republicans for a division of time at democratic meetings?—A. Not of my own knowledge. I heard of it at Greenville, where it was granted.

Q. You do not know of any instances where the democrats refused a division of time when asked for?—A. No, sir; our effort was to get a joint discussion with them, if possible, upon any terms.

Q. You are the General Butler recently elected by one of the legislatures here as United States Senator?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You are claiming a seat as a Senator of the United States under this recent election?—A. Yes, sir; I have just said that.

Q. You spoke of the soldiers at Edgemoor on the day of the election using their guns. Do you mean that they inflicted any violence on anybody?—A. No, sir; I do not know that you can call it violence. They would take their bayonets and push at the crowd. I do not think they touched them. Then I saw the soldiers reach over where a tall man was pushing in the crowd and push him back, but I do not think they inflicted any wound.

Q. How many colored men did you cause to be arrested on the day of the election?—A. One.

Q. Did you cause the arrest of any white man?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any white men being arrested there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say you saw one or two men hit over the head?—A. I saw them after they were hit. I saw the evidences on their heads that they had been hit. They went down and reported it to General Brannan.

Q. Who were those men?—A. I do not remember their names; they were two negroes.

Q. Did you take any steps to ascertain who were the men who assaulted them?—A. No, sir.

Q. You made no arrests of the persons who assaulted them?—A. No, sir.

Q. To what extent were those two men injured?—A. O, very slightly. As they walked by me I saw one with blood running down the side of his head. They afterwards appeared before the United States commissioner; their heads were bleeding—one of them, was or perhaps both. I did not see who inflicted the blow.

Q. In the morning did the democrats have possession of both the polls?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you protested that the colored men should not vote at precinct No. 1?—A. No, sir; I did not say that. I said that I stated to General Brannan that I thought it was not fair that after having occupied poll No. 2 all day they should come back at that time and undertake to get possession of precinct No. 1. I did protest against that.

Q. But as a matter of fact the democrats did occupy both polls in the morning?—A. Yes, sir; early in the morning.

Q. Do you know of any white man who was prevented from voting at that election?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the number of votes in Edgemoor at this election as compared with previous elections?—A. I cannot give you any definite information on that point. I am not familiar enough with the details to give you any.

Q. You spoke of some white men being ambushed.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was that?—A. About two miles and a half from Edgemoor Court-House.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of that?—A. I was not there.

Q. Then personally you know nothing about it?—A. No; I cannot say that I was present and witnessed it.

Q. You do not know of any white man being injured?—A. O, yes; I saw the man who was shot there. I saw him next morning. I have his hat now in my office, with a bullet-hole through it.

Q. The man himself was not shot?—A. He was shot and killed.

Q. Do you know who did the shooting?—A. No, sir; it was done in the evening, about sunset or dusk.

Q. Did you attend any democratic meeting at which the republicans were allowed a division of time?—A. No, sir; I never heard of their making application for it at any meeting that I went to.

Q. Did you give the republicans notice that you intended to ask for a division of time at the Edgemoor meeting until the day of the meeting?—A. No, sir; but we gave them notice that morning, by a committee.

Q. How many democrats were there present that day?—A. I suppose there must have been twelve or fifteen hundred.

Q. Were they generally mounted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no notice had been given to the republicans of any joint discussion?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. Then they came there without knowledge that there was to be such a discussion?—A. You have confined me to what I know of my own knowledge, and I cannot undertake to answer that.

Q. There had been no notice given of any such discussion?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did the democrats who were there have pistols?—A. I will answer that as I did before. I have no doubt they did, but I did not see them. I can only speak for myself, I know I had one, and I think it quite likely that most of them had.

Q. Did the republicans select Mr. Lawrence Cain as one of the chairmen of the meeting?—A. I do not know about that.

Q. You said, as I understood, that General Gary protested against Cain's acting as chairman?—A. I said there was some parley on that subject. My information was that Cain attempted to act as chairman, and General Gary protested that, as Governor Chamberlain assented to a joint discussion, there was no necessity for either side having a chairman.

Q. Was there, in fact, any chairman?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that before the meeting closed "Chamberlain and his crowd" went off.—A. I said that Chamberlain went away with his crowd. Just about the close of the meeting, as Judge Mackoy and I were having a debate, he stopped down and went off.

Q. What number of men went off with him?—A. Almost the entire crowd.

Q. Of the republican party you mean?—A. Yes, sir; and I think a very great number of the democratic party.

Q. How many of the republican meetings did you attend at which a division of time was demanded?—A. That was the only one, and the meeting at Marion Court-House; I went there. The day I was invited to go, there was a republican meeting, and a committee was sent in the same way to ask a division of time. I was in Chancellor Johnson's office waiting, where Mr. Moise and others of the committee came and said the republicans had consented to a division of time. But just as I put my foot on the stand they declined it. They left the matter to the vote of a crowd of negroes, consisting, I think, of almost one-half women and children, and they voted to hear us—so I was told; but when we got to the stand the speakers declined it, and we went off and organized a meeting of our own around the court-house, and a good many of their crowd came and heard us speak.

Q. Did you say that it had been the custom here in this State to hold joint discussions?—A. I cannot say that it has been universally the custom.

Q. Had it been a custom to any considerable extent in previous years?—A. I cannot say that it had.

Q. Do you know of any instance where there had been a joint discussion in previous campaigns?—A. O, yes; repeatedly. I made the canvass of this State in 1870, and Governor Chamberlain and I had a joint discussion in Chester Court-House.

Q. Had the arrangement been made for a joint discussion prior to the time of the meeting?—A. I don't know that it had.

Q. Had not the meeting been announced as a republican meeting?—A. No, sir; it was a meeting of both parties.

Q. Had the republicans called a republican meeting distinctively as such?—A. I believe they had.

Q. Did not the democrats call a meeting upon the same day after the republican meeting?—A. I don't recollect, sir.

Q. When you got there, did not the democrats demand of the republicans a division of time?—A. I don't think they did.

Q. Didn't they request it?—A. I really don't remember. It is six years ago, and I cannot recall the details, but I know that the meeting went on to a certain point, and I know that a row was then started by a negro knocking a white man in the head. I know also of another joint discussion at Orangeburgh, where the speakers got together and arranged it. That was in 1870.

Q. Had there been a republican meeting announced there distinctively as such?—A. I really do not remember as to that.

Q. Didn't the democrats demand of the republicans a division of time?—A. I don't think they did. I think it was a joint agreement.

Q. Did the republicans request it first?—A. I really can't remember that. I know we met at all events.

Q. Then there had been no general custom of that kind?—A. Unless that constitutes a custom.

Q. Do you know of any other meeting, except those two, where that was done?—A. Yes, sir; at Darlington Court-House we had a joint discussion. That was in 1870.

Q. Was there not a republican meeting called there?—A. No, sir; I think it was a democratic meeting that day; Whittemore spoke, and I replied.

Q. Did the republicans request the democrats to give a division of the time?—A. If I could get the records of that time I could tell you distinctly.

Q. Have you any recollection of any joint discussion where the terms of the discussion were arranged prior to the meeting?—A. Yes, sir; at Orangeburgh and at Chester Court-House.

Q. Were the terms arranged prior to the day of meeting?—A. I don't know whether they were arranged prior to the day of the meeting; the arrangement was made that morning.

Q. But have you any knowledge of a case where the arrangement was made prior to the day of the meeting?—A. I don't recollect as to that. It was some time ago. I can say in general terms that the republicans generally appeared anxious to avoid joint discussions for the very simple reason that they did not want us to speak to the negroes, and they advised the negroes to stay away from us.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any democratic meeting at which the republicans were allowed to have a joint discussion?—A. I have just mentioned two or three, Chester Court-House, Orangeburgh, and Darlington.

Q. Those were in 1870; I mean during the current year?—A. Not of my own knowledge. I have heard of some. I went to but four counties in the State. Yes, I can tell you of one. Greenville, where the democrats invited the republicans to speak and they came and spoke. Mr. E. W. M. Mackey and others were the speakers.

Q. Mackey supported Hampton, didn't he?—A. O, no; the other Mackey.

Q. Governor Chamberlain was first elected governor in 1874?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Soon after he entered upon the duties of his office, did he not to some extent fall into general disfavor with the republicans?—A. I think he did.

Q. And didn't he meet with the general approval and favor of the democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did that condition of things exist in the State?—A. Till some time last spring. While he was discharging his duties faithfully, Chamberlain had the entire support of every respectable man in the State.

Q. He had the general approval of the democratic party for his entire administration?—A. No, sir; I don't say that. I say that in very many of the measures of his administration, where he discharged his duties properly, he did have the approbation of the democrats without regard to his former associations.

Q. That continued up to this spring?—A. Yes, sir; in very many measures of his administration he had the entire and pronounced sympathy and support of the democrats.

Q. Was he not very largely lauded in the democratic papers?—A. Very decidedly so.

Q. And considerably disapproved by the republican papers?—A. Yes, sir; very generally denounced by the republicans and the republican papers.

Q. Didn't the leading democrats of the State consider the propriety of adopting him as a candidate for governor?—A. I cannot say that the leading democrats did.

Q. Was not that project discussed?—A. That was very freely discussed in Charleston, but I think it was confined to Charleston and to some scattering persons in the interior. He had a pretty strong following in Charleston, and, I heard, had a programme arranged by which he should be elected.

Q. Didn't the leading democrats from all parts of the State meet in Columbia to consider the question whether they would not adopt him as a candidate?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was it not considered in the democratic executive committee here?—A. O no, sir; never. I was chairman of the democratic executive committee up to the May convention, and had been for four years, and our first meeting was in January of this year.

Q. Was it considered in the convention which finally nominated Wade Hampton?—A. I don't know whether it was considered or not. The only question considered in May was whether there should be a nomination at all, or whether we should simply meet and send delegates to the convention at Saint Louis, and incidentally the question arose whether we should make a straight-out nomination.

Q. When was Wade Hampton nominated?—A. On the 16th of August.

Q. That May meeting was held in Columbia?—A. Yes.

Q. It was attended by leading democrats from all parts of the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the question considered there whether a nomination for governor should be made at all for the democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it decided?—A. We took the sense of the meeting, and there was a very overwhelming mass of opinion developed without being expressed against Chamberlain, as I thought. I think there were perhaps two counties which intimated some preference for him, but the question was not whether he should be nominated, but whether there should be any democratic nomination at all. Then the question was whether there should be action in that convention, and it was decided to postpone it until August.

Q. The policy of those who opposed a democratic nomination was to support Chamberlain?—A. That I cannot answer of my own knowledge; I can only surmise.

Q. Was not that talked of?—A. I suppose it was; I have no doubt that that was the purpose, but I do not know of it of my own knowledge.

Q. You said there were six companies of infantry at Edgefield?—A. Yes, sir; on the day of election there were ten in the county.

Q. How many soldiers were there all together at Edgefield?—A. I do not know.

Q. Were there over one hundred?—A. You can judge of that as well as I can. There were six companies, some of them small.

Q. Don't you know that one of the companies had only fourteen men?—A. I remember Colonel Randall laughing and saying that there was a brevet brigadier-general commanding fourteen men, but I don't know whether they were at Edgefield or here.

Q. State the number, as near as you can estimate it.—A. I could not undertake to estimate the number.

Q. Did the democratic rifle-clubs hold secret meetings?—A. I don't know of any democratic rifle-clubs, except one at Edgefield Court-House.

Q. Were you a member of that?—A. No, sir; I am exempt from military service now. I was not a member of any rifle-club. There was one at Edgefield Court-House, and the negroes had one.

Q. The democratic negroes?—A. No, sir; the republican negroes.

Q. That was not a rifle-club, was it?—A. I know they called it a rifle-club. I know I raised a row with one of my men about it.

Q. Did you tell him if he joined it he could not remain on your land?—A. I did, emphatically; no doubt about it in the world. I told him that I had got into two difficulties through those organizations, and I did not propose to get into another.

Q. Did you say to the other colored men that they could not remain on your land unless they voted the democratic ticket?—A. I don't know that I said that; I said this: I went down and gave them tickets, and said to them that they had a right to vote the republican ticket if they pleased; that they were free men, as free as I was, but if they exercised that right, and imposed taxes on me which were destroying my property and prospects, I should throw myself back on some of the rights I had under the laws of the country, and see that they left my plantation.

Q. How many men had you living on your lands?—A. I had a good many; twenty or thirty.

Q. They all voted the democratic ticket?—A. O, no, sir; six or seven of them voted the democratic ticket, some of them did not vote at all, and I do not know how the others voted, but I intend to inform myself.

Q. With a view to turning them off if they voted the republican ticket?—A. Not for voting the republican ticket if they had an honest ticket, but for voting for these thieves and robbers here. I have done so, and I intend to do it hereafter.

Q. Did you advise the land-owners in your speeches to pursue the same course?—A. No, sir; I did not. I have always been opposed to it; I advised exactly the opposite.

Q. Didn't you advise that?—A. No, sir; I did not. I did it on my own individual responsibility, on my own plantation, in my own "castle," and I shall continue to do it as long as I see fit; and when you gentlemen legislate any person onto my premises that I don't wish to have there I shall leave this country.

Q. Do you know of other land-owners giving notice similar in effect to colored men living on their lands?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether any resolutions were adopted by the democratic clubs, declaring that that should be the policy of the democrats?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you see any such published?—A. No, sir; I don't know of any such action. The matter has been very generally discussed all over the country, and I have always set my face against it as anything like a general movement, for the very best of all reasons in the world, because it was perfectly impracticable. In 1874, I took the same ground when the matter was discussed.

Q. How many colored men do you know of, of your own personal knowledge or by general repute, having been killed during the last year in the county in which you live?—A. I cannot tell you. I think that most of those who have been killed have been killed by colored men.

Q. Just answer my question.—A. Well, I cannot answer it upon the spur of the moment. I can no more tell that than I can tell the number of dwellings and gin-houses that have been burned in the county.

Q. Have not there been a good many colored men killed?—A. I don't think so. There have been a good many homicides in the courts there, but my recollection is that in a vast majority of cases they have arisen from personal altercations between the negroes themselves.

Q. Did you see any colored men that had been killed during the last year?—A. I saw two.

Q. How had they been killed?—A. They were shot; they were the two that were killed at Hamburg before I left there.

Q. I am not asking for anything that grew out of the troubles that you were connected with?—A. Those were the only two that I saw.

Q. Did you see any other colored men, at points through the country in which you lived, who had been shot?—A. I don't think I have seen one.

Q. Can't you give some estimate of the number of colored men who were generally reported to have been killed in your county?—A. You will have to be a little more specific; killed how, on account of political opinions?

Q. Killed in any way during the past year.—A. I cannot approximate the number; I don't think there were a great many.

Q. A dozen?—A. I cannot say. Every now and then you hear of a negro being killed.

Q. Would the number amount to twenty?—A. Well, I don't know.

Q. What is your opinion?—A. I cannot give you any opinion; I have not thought about it.

Q. Was it a considerable number?—A. I really don't remember that there were a great many killed there this year. If I had a little time, and consulted with other people, I might give you positive information; but the only negroes that I remember being killed recently was one at Ridge Spring, a few nights ago, and two at Lawsville—one killed by a white man about a horse, and another by a negro in an altercation.

Q. Were those cases in your county?—A. Yes, sir; this last one that was shot.

Q. My question related to cases before the election.—A. I don't know that there were many killed; if you will mention any instance, I will tell you what I know about it.

Q. Are not the colored men, as a general rule, timid and easily alarmed?—A. Some of them are and some are not.

Q. Are they not so as a general rule?—A. I think that as a race they are timid. I think they have three striking qualities, treachery, utter obliviousness to all moral responsibility for falsehood, and a universal disposition to petty thefts; but I will do them the justice to say that I think this is one of the results of slavery. I think the negroes are not to blame for it. Their only weapons of defense when they were slaves were treachery and falsehood. The system of espionage during the period of slavery was so intense that these characteristics naturally grew out of it. If you will place five hundred dollars in Edgesfield, I can prove by such testimony that the Apostle Paul was a traitor to his Savior and Judas Iscariot was a saint, and can put it on paper so that it will be utterly impossible to detect the deception. I think the colored people are utterly without any moral sense in that direction, and I do not say it in any spirit of reproach to them: They are insubordinate and very frequently turbulent among themselves; they have very little regard for human life; they kill each other without any moral sense of the enormity of the offense.

Q. Do you know whether there was a practice to some extent of democrats attending republican meetings with pistols and making a display of violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you attend any republican meeting except those you have described?—A. Yes, sir; I attended one or two afterward, when this man Dennis and the United States marshal were up there to protect the colored men. Quite a number of our people came in, and we spoke to them, and when we found that they were not going to give us a division of time we organized a meeting of our own. I rode up to their meeting and asked Dennis if there was any objection to our coming in, and he said no. We went by and our men gave a shout and the negroes gave a shout, the wildest, I think, that I ever heard in my life. The negro women then commenced dancing and making all sorts of obscene displays of themselves.

Q. You then organized a democratic meeting?—A. Yes, sir; about half a mile off.

Q. Was that practice pretty general during the last campaign?—A. I think not.

Q. Do you know of any instance where the democrats appeared in force at republican meetings and then went off and held a separate meeting?—A. I don't know that it was done in this canvass. I know it was done repeatedly in 1870.

Q. I am asking about this canvass?—A. Well, I cannot say as to that. I did not go outside of Edgesfield except upon four occasions, to Greenville, to Marion Court-House, to Winsborough, and Lexington.

Q. Has any white man been punished during the last two years for any assault in your county?—A. I don't think there has been any, and I can say further that I don't think there will be any as long as we have Chamberlain for governor. I think he is perfectly incapable of punishing any white man.

Q. Has any white man been brought to trial for killing any colored man in your county?—A. I don't know of any. The imbecility of the government in protecting the rights of these poor men has been a subject of universal reproach, and in the last campaign we used the argument in favor of Governor Hampton that if he were elected anybody who violated the rights of a colored man, or anybody else, would surely be punished, and I believe he will. It is a burning shame to the government of the State; but I regret to say that it is so, that such persons should go unpunished.

Q. Were you in Columbia during the week prior to the time when this committee arrived here?—A. I cannot say absolutely, I have been here off and on since the election.

Q. Do you know that a large force, amounting to some thousands, of democrats assembled in Columbia about the time of the meeting of the legislature?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was about that time, but if you will permit me, I will give you some little history of that.

Q. You may state whether there was such an assembly.—A. Quite a number of men came here about the time of the fair. It was some weeks before the legislature met. The legislature met, I think, on the fourth Tuesday in November, and those men came here the day before the fair, and were here during the fair.

Q. That was just after the legislature had assembled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what numbers were they here?—A. I suppose there were, off and on, from six hundred to a thousand men; during the two or three days they were here, coming and going, there may have been two thousand.

Q. Were they generally armed?—A. They had pistols and some had guns.

Q. Didn't they leave Columbia just a day or two before this committee arrived here?—A. What day did you arrive here?

Q. We arrived on the 7th of this month.—A. I think there were a great many here when you came. I saw quite a crowd talking to Governor Eden in this hotel after your arrival, but I think the great majority of them had gone by that time.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the means by which two or three colored republicans were induced to leave the Maskey house of representatives and go over to what is called the Wallace house?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have referred in your testimony to the meeting at which Governor Chamberlain was present in Edgefield. There was a meeting subsequently held by the republicans, and you made application for a division of time, which they declined?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that application insisted upon in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you subsequently do?—A. We had a meeting when they adjourned.

Q. And both meetings were quiet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were no threats made in order to procure a division of time at that first meeting?—A. None that I know of. It was freely granted by Governor Chamberlain. I was not on the committee that made the arrangements, but a committee was sent in the usual form, requesting a division, and when we got over there I heard Chamberlain himself consent to a division, and suggested that we should occupy half an hour each, to which we assented.

Q. It was stated here by a witness that as the colored men went up to vote at poll No. 2 the white men stood at the door at which they entered, and that it was their general custom to knock every colored man that came along over the head as he went in to vote. Did you see anything of that kind?—A. I did not.

Q. If anything of that kind had occurred would you have known it?—A. I think so.

Q. Is there any truth at all in that statement?—A. I have no idea that there is the slightest truth in it. I think it would be a very great reflection upon the officer who was there to preserve the peace if there was truth in it, but I have no idea that there is any whatever.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

WADE HAMPTON sworn and examined:

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am fifty-eight, and this city is my residence.

Q. This is your native city?—A. Yes.

Q. I believe you have lived here and been acquainted with the people of South Carolina all your life?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are the recent democratic candidate for governor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nominated when?—A. On the 16th of August, I think it was.

Q. And after that you took a very active part in the campaign?—A. I was throughout the entire State. I addressed the people in every county but one—Lexington, the adjoining county to this.

Q. And in some counties more than once?—A. O, yes; in some counties several times; I think, generally, twice in almost every county; I spoke, I think, fifty-seven times at large meetings.

Q. How many of the people of South Carolina do you think you had an opportunity of meeting at those meetings?—A. I think there was an average of from 3,000 to 4,000, perhaps not less than 4,000 at a meeting; some meetings had as many as 10,000.

Q. So that a very large portion of the people of South Carolina that ever listen or attend to political matters you had occasion to meet?—A. I have no doubt I spoke to over 200,000 people.

Q. Was your acquaintance during the canvass confined to the whites, or was it extended to whites and blacks?—A. To both. The blacks attended in very large numbers sometimes.

Q. Were efforts made to obtain the attendance of blacks at your meetings?—A. That was the chief effort during the canvass to get the colored people to come out.

Q. During any part of your canvass, and at any of your meetings, was there any violence toward or interference with the blacks?—A. No, sir; there was no disturbance at a single meeting where I was present this year; not one, except at Beaufort; some of the colored people there were unwilling to hear the speakers. They heard me with perfect respect and quiet, but our other speakers they interrupted, and one of them they refused to hear at all. But beyond that there was no disturbance.

Q. Please state, in your own way, the ground you took in addressing the colored men and the people generally of South Carolina in reference to the treatment of the blacks?—A. The canvass opened on the 2d of September, I think, in Anderson, and I there took the ground that I proposed to discuss these questions throughout the whole State; and I advocated free speech, free thought, free ballot, and free men; that we would endeavor to call out the colored people to listen to us, to show them that their interests were our interests, and to tell them that of course they had a right to vote as they pleased, but to endeavor, as I used the expression at one time, to appeal to them by argument, and to reach their heads through their hearts. That was the ground upon which the campaign was organized, and most of each speech of mine during the canvass was generally addressed to the colored people.

Q. After your nomination and the commencement of your canvass, did you or not give orders upon the subject of dividing time that was objected to?—A. Yes; I notified the committee here not to insist upon a division of time, but to ask for it. I offered it at the first meeting. I said I should always offer it to any republican who was present, and would be willing to divide; but I instructed the committee not to insist upon a division of time. As soon as Mr. Chamberlain was nominated, I telegraphed down and asked him to meet me at my appointments and divide time with me, and specify who his speakers should be, and I would do the same; but he refused, or the committee refused, and we never had any division of time after I was nominated. I believe one meeting occurred the day after I was nominated, at Newberry. As I was going up the railroad I heard there would be a meeting there and a division of time; but that was before I entered upon the canvass.

Q. Did you have occasion, in the course of your canvass in addressing the whites and the blacks together, to say anything upon the subject of the blacks being discharged from their plantations?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Was that subject ever discussed or alluded to by you that they should be discharged if they did not vote the democratic ticket?—A. No; I think not at all. I said to them on several occasions that their interests were our interests, and that if the white men in this State went down, they would sink so low they could not be raised; but never were any threats held out against them.

Q. Then, so far as you are concerned, as to interference with or intimidation toward the blacks, what were your orders upon that subject?—A. They were express, that there was to be none attempted or employed anywhere.

Q. That they were to be protected?—A. Protected fully in all their rights.

Q. Have you extracts from the speeches that you made?—A. I have extracts of some speeches made here that, I think, about cover the ground that I took.

Q. Are you enabled to say that those are true extracts from your speeches from having examined them?—A. Yes, sir. I have a paper here to-day that I observe has the whole speech at Abbeville, from which this is extracted. The reporters took them down.

Q. This is a pamphlet which contains extracts from your speeches made on different occasions.—A. Yes, sir; and a letter which was written some years ago. Those are correct.

Q. Do you know whether these extracts have been distributed through the State?—A. Yes, to a very large extent. The colored people asked for them. They were gotten up by the newspaper in Charleston, and thousands of them were distributed.

Q. They are under the impress of your executive committee, and were distributed throughout the State?—A. Yes, sir; in very large numbers.

The pamphlet was put in evidence, as follows:

Free men, free ballots, free schools.—The pledges of General Wade Hampton, democratic candidate for governor, to the colored people of South Carolina, 1865—1876.

FREEDOM AND POLITICAL RIGHTS GO TOGETHER.—[LETTER, AUGUST 7, 1867.]

As it is of the last consequence to maintain the same amicable relations which have heretofore existed between the whites and the blacks, I cannot too strongly reiterate my counsel that all classes should cultivate harmony and exercise forbearance. Let our people remember that the negroes have, as a general rule, behaved admirably, and that they are in no manner responsible for the present condition of affairs. Should they, in the future, be misled by wicked or designing men, let us consider how ignorant they necessarily are, and let us only the more try to convince them that we are their best friends. Deal with them with perfect justice, and thus show that you wish to promote their advancement and enlightenment. Do this, and the negroes will not only learn to trust you, but they will appreciate the fact, so evident to us, that we can do without them far better than they can do without us.

On a late public occasion, where many of you were present, I expressed my perfect willingness to see impartial suffrage established at the South, and I believe that this opinion is entertained not only by a large majority of the intelligent and reflecting whites, but also of this same class among the blacks. The Supreme Court has decided that a negro is not a citizen of the United States, and Congress cannot reverse that decision by an act. The States, however, are competent to confer citizenship on the negro, and I think it is the part of wisdom that such action should be taken by the Southern States.

We have recognized the freedom of the blacks, and have placed this fact beyond all possi- bility of doubt, denial, or recall. Let us recognize in the same frank manner, and as fully, their political rights also.

THE CHANGES IN THE CONSTITUTION RECOGNIZED.—[CHARLESTON ADDRESS, JUNE 28, 1876.]

The fortunes of war were against us, and the South laid down her arms. When she did so, I declare on my honor as a soldier and a gentleman that she did it in good faith. We accepted the terms offered, and we felt then, and have felt since, bound in honor to keep them inviolate. We recognize the changes in the Constitution and the institutions of the country as accomplished facts, and we propose to obey the laws as good citizens. You have no right to ask of us more than this, and we have the right to demand of you, who were the conquerors, that you should not require of us, as the price of reunion and reconciliation, a sacrifice of our honor or of our self-respect.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE WHOLE PEOPLE.—[DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION, AUGUST 17, 1876.]

The platform which you have adopted here is so catholic in its spirit, so strong in its foundations, and so broad in its construction, that every man in South Carolina who honestly desires reform can find room to stand upon it. With such a platform, where our citizens of all parties and all races can stand, assured of equal rights and full protection, you can surely bring back to our distracted State the great blessings of good government. As for myself, should I be elevated to the high position for which you have nominated me, my sole effort shall be to restore our State government to decency, to honesty, to economy, and to integrity. I shall be the governor of the whole people, knowing no party, making no vindictive discrimination, holding the scales of justice with firm and impartial hand, seeing as far as in me lies that the laws are enforced in justice, tempered by mercy, protecting all classes alike, and devoting every effort to the restoration of prosperity and the re-establishment of honest government.

PROTECTING THE COLORED MAN IN HIS RIGHTS.—[SPEECH AT NEWBERRY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1876.]

All we want is reform. I propose to stand by the platform adopted in Columbia, which has accepted the late amendments to the Constitution; and, if elected, propose to carry those laws out fully, being governor of the whole people, and holding the scales of justice equally. If any person thought he would not fulfill his pledge, he didn't ask him to vote for him. Another class of people whom he didn't care to have vote for him are those who think that because they are democrats they can violate the law, and look to him to protect them. He wished it distinctly understood that he, and all with him in this campaign, were not hostile to the National Government of the United States; but, if elected, would preserve order and carry out all of the laws of the country, especially protecting the colored man in all his rights, and would see that he was not imposed upon. He said that if the democrats came into power, he would guarantee that the free schools would be better conducted than heretofore.

THE ONLY WAY TO BRING ABOUT PROSPERITY.—[SPEECH AT ABBEVILLE, SEPTEMBER 16, 1876.]

I feel assured that if the colored people of the State would come out, and see and hear for themselves, there will be thousands and tens of thousands, like the colored men of Abbeville, that will join the democratic party in this State. I give them the word of a man, who neither friend nor foe can say ever broke that word, that if I am elected governor of South Carolina, I shall be the governor of the whole State; I shall render to the whole people of this State equal and impartial justice.

The platform adopted by the democratic party in Columbia is one upon which all can stand. Talk about putting the colored men back into slavery or qualifying their suffrages. I tell you in all honor and sincerity, that it is against our interest to do either of these things, if we could. In the first place, the labor of the colored man is more valuable to us as he is than if he was slave, because they were perishable property, and, as soon as they passed away, it was so much loss to the general wealth of the country. As to qualifying your suffrages, why that is the very thing your President Grant wants to do. We want your votes; we don't want you to be deprived of them, and I can tell you, if the colored people continue to join the democratic ranks as they have been doing thus early in the campaign, we will be the last people in the world to curtail their suffrages. The northern republicans thought it all right so long as you voted the republican ticket, but just so soon as the colored people of the South began to go democratic, they were the first to introduce a bill to qualify their suffrages. Why? Because they don't want the South to have a chance to turn the election for the President. I am not in that big fight, however. I am in this little fight to save South Carolina, and I tell you upon my honor that if you allow the white people of South Carolina to go down this time, you will go down so deep that no plummet can ever reach you. If we, the white people of South Carolina, were to leave you the State, and give you everything, land, houses, churches, banks, you could not live without them. The only way to bring about prosperity in this State is to bring the two races in friendly relation together. The democratic party in South Carolina, of whom I am the exponent, has promised that every citizen of this State is to be the equal of all; he is to have every right given him by the Constitution of the United States and of this State. This democratic party in South Carolina pledges itself to support and accept the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments of the United States Constitution; and I pledge my faith, and I pledge it for those gentlemen who are on the ticket with me, that if we are elected, as far as in us lies, we will observe, protect, and defend the rights of the colored man as quickly as any man in South Carolina. [A voice, "That's right; tell them that over again."] If there is a white man in this assembly, because he is a democrat, or because he is a white man, believes that when I am elected governor, if I should be, that I will stand between him and the law, or grant to him any privileges or immunities that shall not be granted to the colored man, he is mistaken, and I tell him so now, that if that is his reason for voting for me not to vote at all.

A MAN WHO WILL DO WHAT HE PROMISES.—[SPEECH AT ABBEVILLE, SEPTEMBER 16, 1876.]

I received a letter from one of my old servants, who is now living in Rock Hill, S. C., and I will read it, that you may see what the colored people who know me think of me. General Hampton then read the letter, as follows:

"ROCK HILL, S. C., September 8, 1876.

"MARS WADE: Seeing that you are nominated for governor by the white people, and hearing that you have promised the black man all the rights he now has, and knowing that you were always good and kind to me when your slave, and knowing that you are a good and kind man—a man who will do what he promises—I write to say that I will vote for you, and get all the black men I can to do the same. I have bought a piece of land in York County, and am trying to make a good support for my family, which I can do if we all had good laws and low taxes. My wife, Flora, is still living, and we have but one child, whom we wish to educate. Please write to me, in care of Dr. T. C. Robertson, Rock Hill, S. C.

"Your friend, and former slave,

"REV. FRANCIS DAVIE."

I had not heard of him, continued General Hampton, until I received this letter, and when I read it at Laurens, another of my old servants, living there, named Spencer, came up to me and said that he knew Francis well, and he would also do all he could to have me for governor. These people know me, they know that I will not deceive them, and, so far as taking away any of your rights is concerned, I pledge you, my colored friends, on my honor, that if elected I shall give you greater facilities for education than you have now or ever had before. I promise that I will put men in charge of your education who will not steal the money after it has been appropriated for you.

THE COLORED PEOPLE IN MISSISSIPPI.—[SPEECH AT ABBEVILLE, SEPTEMBER 16, 1876.]

My friend, General Toombs, suggests that I should tell you something about my colored friends in Mississippi. These colored people, hundreds of them, with their ancestors, have lived on my estate in Mississippi for over two hundred years, and they are living there still. They have never left me; they live all around me, and since the war, such confidence have I in them that I have not even a lock on my house. There is no protection except these colored people who have grown up from childhood with me. I am just as safe there as when I was surrounded by my old cavalry company in Virginia. [Loud cheering.] These colored people, when they want help, come to me for it; and just before I left there, one of the most influential was ill. He sent for me to read the Bible to him. I went to his home and did so. He then turned over all his property into my hands, asking me to sell his cotton and take care of the money for his wife and children, and to protect them. I have that money now. I paid his doctor's bill, knocked off his rent, and have the money for his family. I tell you this, my colored friends, to show you that those colored men who know me trust me. If you trust the white people of South Carolina once, and then if you find any of your rights impaired, you are strong enough in the State to turn them out of office. We cannot be elected without the aid of the colored people, and we know that we are going to get that aid. I have been talking so much recently that I really can not say much more.

When Mississippi went democratic, some of my colored friends there came to me and said: They tell us that the democrats are going to take our rights away from us, and asked me if it was so. I asked them if I had ever told them an untruth. They said I never had. I then told them that if they were not more prosperous, did not have more rights and more facilities for education, I would give them every foot of land I had in Mississippi. And they know already, and have told me, that what I told them was true. That will be the case in South Carolina if you put honest men in your legislature and your State offices.

NO PARTY, NOR RACE, AS GOVERNOR.—[SPEECH AT DARLINGTON, SEPTEMBER 23, 1876.]

We wish to show the colored people that their rights are fixed and immovable, and, furthermore, we would not abridge them if we could. I do here what I did in the convention, I pledge myself solemnly, in the presence of the people of South Carolina, and in the presence of my God, that if the democratic ticket is elected I shall know no party nor race, in the administration of the law. So sure as the law pronounces a man guilty, so sure shall that man be punished. I shall know nothing but the law, and the Constitution of South Carolina and of the United States. We recognize the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution of the United States, and accept them in good faith. The colored people know that it is under those amendments that they enjoy the rights they now have. We stand upon that platform, and not one single right enjoyed by the colored people to-day shall be taken from them. They shall be the equals, under the law, of any man in South Carolina. And we further pledge that we will give better facilities for education than they have ever had before.

FREE SPEECH, FREE THOUGHT, FREE MEN.—[SPEECH AT CHERAW, SEPTEMBER 26, 1876.]

I have been told since coming upon this ground that the reason there are so few colored men present is because they have been told that if they attended these meetings they ran great risks, and that trouble would come upon them. That, I say, is infamously false, from beginning to end. I assure you that if I were at a political meeting, and the life of a colored man should be in danger unjustly, I would risk my own life to save him. And I have done that very thing. Years ago, during the existence of slavery, I happened to be in Mississippi, when it was a very lawless State, and there was a colored man who had committed a very brutal murder. He was put in jail forty miles away, and a body of men went to the jail, broke it open, took him out, and had what they called a trial. I heard of it and went over. The gentleman who owned this colored man said he had been told I was opposed to the lynching of the unfortunate man, and requested me to speak in his behalf. I said, "I will do that and I will do more than that. If you will get two more men, and give us all double-barreled guns, I will take him out of the hands of those men, put him back in jail, and give my life before he shall be subjected to lynch-law." They told me if I opposed the intentions of those men they would lynch me. I said let them do it, but I would go and tell them if that man is lynched at their hands, they would be guilty of murder. I did so, and I would risk my life to sustain the laws of South Carolina, and to protect the lives of her citizens.

The colored people have been told it will be dangerous for them to attend these meetings. At Walhalla, after I had asked if there was a republican present, one ragged, poor colored man got up and said, "I am a republican," and the people raised a yell of indignation. I rose and told them I had offered free speech wherever I went; that I recognized this as a land of free speech, free thought, a free press, and a land of freemen, and I say hear that man. And the audience sat down, and that colored man said that he was a republican; those were his principles, and he expected to vote the republican ticket, and when he made that announcement the audience gave him three cheers. That is the way we intend to conduct this campaign. I wish to tell the colored people here as elsewhere, that as soon as the power passes into the hands of the democratic party here, which shall come to pass as surely as the sun goes down on the 7th of November, they will have equal laws and equal protection; they will be recognized as the equals of every man in this State, before the law and under the constitution. They will be honestly and justly dealt with, and I pledge myself and the gentlemen whose names appear as the nominees of the democratic party of South Carolina, to the people of South Carolina, white and black, that when that administration comes into power, there will be no discrimination on account of color or party:

A SOLEMN PLEDGE.—(SPEECH AT MARION, SEPTEMBER 30, 1876.)

I re-iterate here to-day the pledge that I have so often made before: "In the presence of the people of South Carolina, and in the presence of my God, I pledge myself that if elected I shall know no party, no race, no color, or condition in the administration of the laws. I shall be governor of the entire people of South Carolina.' When you go to the colored people and tell them these pledges, and show them what they have to expect and what has been done for them in the past, you surely will reach them.

THE FIRST TO ADVISE GIVING THE COLORED MEN THE RIGHT TO VOTE.—(SPEECH AT SUMTER, OCTOBER 7, 1876.)

I want to say to my colored friends to bear this in mind: I was the first to advise that rights of all kinds should be conferred upon colored men. This was in a speech at Columbia. If he was a citizen he naturally possessed the right to vote; and I advised the people then, before Congress had moved in the matter, when Governor Morton, as a candidate, was then making speeches declaring the colored men were not fit to vote, and Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, was saying the same thing—I was maintaining that we should confer the right of voting; and I say now that the time will come, if it has not already come, when every colored man will be a democrat, because they will find that their rights will be better protected by that party. They will say that they have always been democrats, but were afraid to say so.

The undersigned, members of the executive committee of the democratic party for the State of South Carolina, pledge themselves personally to the fulfillment, in good faith, of the declarations and promises contained in the foregoing extracts from the public addresses of General Wade Hampton, the democratic candidate for governor of South Carolina, guaranteeing to all citizens impartial justice and equal rights.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you know of any cases of violence against negroes during the canvass, in any way, committed by persons of your own party?—A. I do not.

Q. As matter of common report, have you heard of any fights during the canvass, assaults, or anything of that sort, by persons of your own party against voters?—A. I did not hear of any, and at no meeting where I was present this year was there the slightest disturbance or an angry word. I might, perhaps, make an exception; it was not at the meeting, but while we were holding a meeting at Darlington there was a threatened disturbance about half a mile from the village; two democrats got into a row, but it passed without amounting to anything. There was nothing serious.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge, or from inquiry, or by common report, of any deaths occasioned by political quarrels after your contest commenced, or any serious harm done?—A. I know of no case of my own knowledge.

Q. As a matter of common report, do you know of any person in the neighborhood of Edgefield being killed—a white man?—A. If it concurs with the views of the committee I should state what came to my knowledge.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Will you just answer that question?—A. I do know of a case.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. He was a white man?—A. A white man.

Q. And by whom was it the common report that he was killed?—A. That he was killed by a man whose name I have forgotten—a black man, who was identified next morning by a man who was riding with the one who was killed.

Q. Then the common report was that the black man shot the white man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How near were you to the place where the white man was reported to have been killed?—A. I was told that it was about two miles off. I was at General Gary's.

Q. The common report you understood was that this white man was shot by a black man?—A. That was the report.

Q. Did you happen to see the two men?—A. I did not; I left the next day.

Q. And you heard, also, the common report that a black man was arrested for it?—A. I think it is important to state my own action in regard to that.

Q. State it.—A. This report came that a man was shot, and that the citizens there who had been attending this meeting were in a state of great indignation, and were going out to avenge his death. I immediately told General Gary to go up and stop them and not allow them to do anything of that sort, but to go to a United States officer and report the facts to him and get him to take action. General Gary did so; he went out with a United States officer to where the man was killed. I urged them to leave the question to be settled by law, not to go into an attack where innocent men might be killed, and which would bring on bloodshed and riot, but to prevent, by all means, anything of the sort.

Q. Up to the election, I understand you to say that you heard of no cases of violence on political grounds, except this one you have spoken of?—A. That is the only one I heard of in my canvass.

Q. State whether or not, as far as you know, the canvass, after you accepted the nomination, was a quiet and peaceable one?—A. Entirely so, so far as my personal knowledge extends.

Q. How did it compare with other canvasses in South Carolina?—A. As far as I know and as far as I saw, it was as peaceable an election as I ever witnessed.

Q. Had you the means from communication with other people in all parts of the State of ascertaining and knowing whether it was a peaceable election or not?—A. I received from nearly all the counties telegraphic dispatches as soon as the election was over, and during the progress of counting the vote, and we were under the impression that it was the most peaceable election they had ever had.

Q. That was the impression made on you from all the knowledge you could get?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As the head of the democratic ticket, were you in constant communication with every part of the State before the election?—A. I was.

Q. And taking all the means of knowledge which you had in that position, is that the result—that it was a peaceable election?—A. Yes, sir. You asked me if anything occurred during the canvass. If it would be germane to the subject I should like to tell my action in regard to the riots in Charleston.

Q. You may state your action in reference to them.—A. Not especially with regard to the riots, but my own action as bearing upon the manner in which the canvass was conducted. In the first one which occurred—I don't remember the date—I was at Spartanburgh speaking. It was the time when a Mr. Buckner was killed; there was an attack made, as I understood, upon some colored democrats, and this young man was killed, and there was great excitement prevailing. I telegraphed immediately from Spartanburgh to act only on the defensive; by no means to provoke any rioting in the State. The people were very much excited, and they telegraphed up to me and wanted me to come down, when I telegraphed them this reply. In the other case of a recent riot in Charleston I did the same thing. I came to see General Ruger here, and told him that from what I understood there would be a riot the next night, that unless the city was placed under military rule I was very much afraid there would be a collision, and at my earnest request he put Colonel Hunt in command of the city. That was since the election.

Q. What reason had you for that action?—A. I was sure that if a collision occurred in the city between the whites and blacks it would spread all over the State, and probably would spread throughout the country.

Q. But what reason had you for supposing there was danger of collision at that time?—A. There had been a riot in the city that day, and a man was killed as he was going home—a citizen—and I heard further that the white people were very much exasperated, and that both parties were arming, and that there was a probability there would be a collision that night. General Ruger, when I called his attention to it, telegraphed down and informed me that that was the fact, that he had heard that there was likely to be a riot that night.

Q. State the entire fact connected with the election or the conduct of the party bearing upon the question of its being peaceable and every one being permitted to exercise his right of voting freely.—A. I don't know that I can give you any facts of importance. As I tell you, that was the ground that we took, I and the whole corps of speakers who were with me during the canvass. We advocated the entire freedom of the election. I believed that it could be carried by an appeal to the best element of the colored people; that they were suffering, as we were, by the stagnation of trade and the ruin of the industrial interests of the State, and I felt satisfied that an appeal to them would enlist enough of them to carry the election. As an evidence of the number who voted, I should like to refer you to the census. We always believed that the State census of 1875 gave too large a vote for the colored people and too small for the white.

Q. Is that the general belief here of the people of South Carolina?—A. That has always been the belief here and it reaches almost every one. By this census, however, prepared by the State authorities here, there are 184,900 voters in the State: colored, 110,744; white, 74,199.

Q. What was the total vote?—A. The total vote was 184,943. By the returns of this election I received 92,261 votes, Chamberlain received 91,100 and something. There were about 183,400 votes cast in this election, and that, I think, shows that there was a very general turning out, if there were 185,000 votes in the State, and there were 183,000 cast.

Q. Was there at this election a more general voting of the white population than at any time since the war?—A. Very much larger.

Q. State, as far as you know substantially, whether the whole white population voted.—A. I think every white man who could vote did so. I have now another part of the census to which I want to call the attention of the committee. I have the colored vote for twenty-six counties, cast in this election, separate from the white.

	No. of colored voters.	No. of colored votes pulled.
In Abbeville County .....	4,951	4,473
In Anderson County .....	2,215	1,858

In Marion County .....	2,883	2,619
In Newberry County .....	3,254	3,139
In Orangeburgh County .....	4,384	4,801

Here are five hundred more voters in Orangeburgh than there are there by the census. In Sumter there were 4,362 by the census, and 4,295 voted. I have not gone over the whole of the counties, but I shall give you this paper for your record. Now I wish to call attention to another fact,—Governor Chamberlain's vote in 1874 and in 1876. He received—

This paper is a synopsis of the vote, which I will leave with you. Of the colored vote of 110,000 in the State, I think you will find that about one hundred and seven or eight thousand voted in this election.

Q. State whether at your different meetings throughout the State, democratic colored clubs attended?—A. Yes, sir; nearly always.

Q. So that there were democratic colored clubs in almost all the counties?—A. In all the counties.

Q. And they were present with the rest of the democrats at the meetings?—A. They came with them sometimes separately and sometimes in these clubs. I have seen as many as five or six hundred mounted, under their own officers, joining in the procession at one meeting.

Q. Were there any arms at any of these meetings, that you know of?—A. I did not see any exhibited in any number at all; in the general understanding of armed bodies of men, there was not one single armed body of men at any meeting I have had during this canvass. No doubt men had pistols and sometimes you would see a few pistols exhibited, and I had that done away with wherever I could. I never allowed them to carry them if I saw it.

Q. Is it not the usual custom of your people to carry pistols about with them?—A. I am told it has become very much the custom of late, on account of the disturbances that have prevailed through the State. I am very sorry to say that it is so, but I have heard that it is. I will say, though, that I did not have an arm about my person during the whole canvass.

Q. If there is anything else that occurs to you in reference to the campaign, its peacefulness and good order, or the presence or absence of intimidation of colored voters, please state it.

Mr. ABBOTT. While you undertake to execute the office of the governor of South Carolina, do you mean to give full and perfect protection to blacks as well as whites?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to that.

The WITNESS. You will find a full answer to that in all my speeches. By my acceptance of the nomination I was pledged to that. Now, in reference to what brought about this canvass, I should like to say a few words. We had endeavored here for the three preceding elections to form a union and compromise ticket, and had been unable to carry it to success, and it was determined at this time, hoping for no further relief from this party, to make the issue square and fair, and to stand upon a platform that we thought would be broad enough to bring everybody in. That reform was necessary, I should like to show from Governor Chamberlain's own utterances.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I suppose that is not the question that we are investigating.

Mr. ABBOTT. The offer is made, and if you object to it we will not press it.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Have you Governor Chamberlain's utterances there, that you refer to?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Please let me see them.

The WITNESS. I should like to read some of them.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not object to the entire original documents being put in, but I do object to extracts detached from the context.

The WITNESS. I have here a report of the special joint investigating committee of the general assembly of 1870 and 1871, of which Whittemore and Swails were the members on the part of the senate, and Mr. John B. Dennis and Mr. Gardner and Timothy Hurley on the part of the house; all republicans. In reference to the vital necessity of reform in the State, I wish to put in this report of that committee. The report was submitted as follows:

Report of the joint special financial investigating committee, appointed by the general assembly at its regular session, 1870-71.

B. F. Whittemore, S. A. Swails, committee on part of the senate.

OFFICE OF CLERK OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S. C., March 8, 1871.

This is to certify that, in accordance with a resolution passed by the house of representatives and concurred in by the senate, to appoint a joint committee to examine the books, &c., of the State treasurer, comptroller-general, and financial agent, Messrs. J. B. Dennis, W. H. Gardner, and Timothy Hurley were appointed by the honorable the speaker on the part of the house of representatives.

A. O. JONES,
Clerk of House of Representatives.

REPORT:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina:

GENTLEMEN: The joint special financial investigating committee, appointed at the last session of the general assembly, for the purpose of making "a complete and thorough examination of all the accounts of the State treasurer, comptroller-general, and financial agent, since their induction into office," having fulfilled their duties assigned them as far as it was possible during the time allowed to investigate matters of so great importance, and covering so long a period, have the honor herewith to submit such statements, tabular and otherwise, as their examinations will warrant, in order that the earliest information may be given to all interested in the financial operations of the officers of the State to whom are intrusted the gravest and greatest responsibilities.

In the commencement of the work obstacles were immediately encountered; the question, how far the authority or power of the committee extended, was debated by some of the State functionaries, and not until the written opinion of the attorney-general was solicited and given was much advancement made in any direction. The authority "to send for persons and papers" was regarded, even by the chief executive, as an empty prerogative. The committee are compelled to say that, had it depended upon the co-operation of the governor, as to how far their examination of persons or papers should be carried, the work would have been completed the moment it began. While his excellency, in his conversation with the committee, "hoped the investigation would be thorough," yet in all his actions he most certainly exhibited little sympathy with the progress of investigation, and less desire for its "thoroughness."

It is true, the resolution adopted by both branches of the general assembly, and upon which the committee was appointed, made no provision for the payment of the services or expenses of the committee, its clerk or expert, which they were empowered to employ.

The governor, cognizant of this fact, and unwilling to take so large a responsibility, felt it his duty to withhold his indorsement from the pay certificates for the members of the committee, or for expenses incurred in the necessary work of its investigation, lest perhaps "the legislature might not sanction his acts, but censure him for permitting money to be drawn out of the treasury without any appropriation;" so entirely contrary "to his whole course of action during his administration of affairs."

The position of the committee was unpleasant and perplexing; certain responsibilities had been created and imposed upon them; the general assembly had commissioned them, and authorized their course of action; the people had been told that a committee had been appointed by the legislature "to make a thorough examination of all the financial departments of the State;" dark suspicions lurked in the mind of the communities, as to the integrity of certain prominent officials, and the honesty of the administration ruling them; the leading organs of the opposition to the dominant party, as well as mercantile and commercial organizations, proclaimed that frauds had been practiced, moneys squandered, the debt increased beyond legal provisions, &c., &c.; "the tax-payers were clamoring for a true exhibition of the assets and liabilities of the State, as well as receipts and expenditures of the treasury; there could be no refusal or failure, on the part of the committee, to perform the work committed to their trust, however formidable the obstacles, without the cause of such refusal or failure being misunderstood, and the committee receiving the unmeasured censure of the public. Beside this, the general assembly would have a right to demand a report from the committee, and the failure to make it complete in all the details of investigation, on the plea, "that, although the committee was appointed to make a thorough examination of all the accounts of the State treasurer, comptroller-general, and financial agent since their induction into office," no appropriation was assigned out of which their services could be paid, therefore they felt under no obligation to do the work required of them, would have merited a rebuke worthy of such unfaithfulness from the general assembly, and an universal condemnation from the citizens of the State.

While the resolution provided no compensation for labor performed, or expenses incurred, it authorized work to be done, and agents to perform it, and the construction which the committee placed upon the action of the general assembly was, "it expects the committee to do its duty, and its services will be rewarded; no omission in the resolution creating them will justify the State in repudiating their services or expenses." Fortified in this conclusion by the opinion of the attorney-general, the committee determined to follow the instructions of the resolution, and complete their examinations as far as time given would permit.

The correspondence in relation to this part of the committee's action will appear in its proper place.

THE STATE TREASURY.

The committee entered upon the examination of "all the accounts of the State treasurer," which was a task of no small magnitude; every charge upon his books has been transcribed, every credit and debit copied, each and every voucher examined, and the accompanying tables will show every payment made, and every dollar received by the treasurer; and if more has been paid out than there are vouchers for, the amount in excess, and upon what expended, will also be seen. Great patience in the handling and reading of the treasurer's vouchers was necessary, and much time consumed. During the examination of these accounts, at no time was the treasurer present; but his clerks, Messrs. Gary and Tappan, attended the committee in their inspection of all book and papers of the treasurer's office, to which they gave ready access and explanations.

In order that the report of this committee might be made as soon as possible after the assembling of the legislature, it was necessary to confine their statements, as far as possible, to a period reaching from the time of the induction into office of the State treasurer, comptroller-general, and financial agent to the close of the fiscal years 1869 and 1870. They have also in preparation a supplemental report for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1871, which will be thorough in all its details and submitted as soon as completed.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

The whole amount received by the State treasurer from September, 1863, to October 31, 1870, from all sources, has been $4,184,783.42. The largest amount has been from taxes, which in the aggregate is $2,055,563.55, and the next from H. H. Kimpton, financial agent for the State, which is $1,710,753.71, leaving a balance from all other sources of $418,476.16. The expenditures during this time have been $4,183,337. The largest of these expenditures are as follows, viz: General interest account of public debt, $720,148.56; H. H. Kimpton, financial agent of the State of South Carolina, $928,717.79; salaries, $331,488.45; legislative expenses, $516,408.46; free schools, $135,946.14; State penitentiary, $180,931.49; civil contingent, $120,322.27; executive contingent, $87,745.68; lunatic asylum, $32,489.48; fitting up new State-house, $55,009.57; census taking, $73,117.00; State constabulary, $32,468.42; fees of sheriffs for detaining prisoners, $44,946.21; elections, $28,125.47; expenses enrolling and organizing militia, $93,341.07; orphan asylum, $18,885.65; committee of investigation, third congressional district, $27,865.45; purchase of arms and ammunition, $13,066.72; printing, $43,440.57; advance to Blue Ridge Railroad, $20,000.00; insurance and repairs University of South Carolina, $17,281.95; claims passed, $14,256.60; land commission, $89,558.25; bills receivable, $275,401; R. K. Scott (to negotiate loan of $125,000 to meet the current expenses of the State,) $97,185; maintaining quarantine and quarantine hospital, $17,674.74; transient sick poor, $12,834.25; fitting up the governor's residence, $8,924.17; deaf, dumb and blind asylum, $11,164.80; N. G. Parker for the purchase of gold, $24,422.61.

APPROPRIATIONS.

All moneys should be drawn out of the treasury upon appropriations specifying the object for which they are made, and upon every certificate of payment there should be required, by law, to be written in red ink, by the treasurer, the appropriation drawn upon, and in no instance should that appropriation be overdrawn nor diverted to the payment of claims foreign to the appropriation; and the treasurer should inform the governor when an appropriation is exhausted, who should, after being thus informed, withhold his indorsement upon any pay-certificates drawn upon that appropriation.

There is another class of appropriations beside special, which might be called general or inexhaustible, known as "funds of the State not otherwise appropriated," which have furnished ready opportunities for the depletion of the treasury at any time, and constant drafts upon this class of funds have been and can be made for the payment of whatever may be found deficient in a special appropriation or for claims however extravagant or unjust.

In the examination of the vouchers, which the committee have carefully scrutinized, they have found not only appropriations diverted from their intended and specified purpose, but the "inexhaustible funds" of the State, like a never-failing fountain, drawn upon in every emergency, sufficient for every demand, when it is the interest or pleasure of the heads of the financial departments of the State so to direct. In order that a more perfect understanding of this subject may be had, there will be upon the page opposite the expenditure (classified under an appropriate head) the appropriation designed for the payment of the same, as well as the date of its passage by the legislature, thus enabling the reader to observe the excess of payment over amount appropriated, as well as the open door to large expenditures out of the never-exhausted "funds of the State." This exhibit will also prove a valuable record for reference, as well as a guide for all future legislation upon that most sensitive of all subjects, viz: How much of the people's money shall be appropriated, and in what manner shall it be expended? Too much care, with explicit and rigid requirements, cannot be given to the consideration and passage of any law calling for the expenditure of public funds; and great improvements must be made upon the prodigal modes now practiced in the disbursement of the same. The committee recommend the general assembly, at the earliest moment, to give such consideration to this subject as its importance demands, that a correction of all mistaken legislation, and the abuses following, may not be longer delayed.

DEPOSITS IN BANKS.

By the act of August 22, 1868, the treasurer of the State is required to deposit all moneys coming into his hands, on account of the State, within three days, Sundays exclusive, in some bank of safe deposit.

The following is the statutory provision:

"The treasurer of the State of South Carolina shall deposit all moneys that shall come into his hands, on account of this State, within three days, Sundays exclusive, after receiving the same, in some bank or banks in the cities of Columbia and Charleston, as shall be designated by the governor, comptroller general, and treasurer, or any two of them, and as in their opinion shall be secure and pay the highest rate of interest for such deposit. The moneys so deposited shall be placed to the account of the treasurer, and he shall keep a bank-book, in which shall be entered his accounts of deposits in, and moneys drawn from, the banks in which such deposits shall be made."

And the banks are also required—

"Respectively, to transmit to the governor and comptroller-general monthly statements of the moneys which shall be received and paid by them on account of the treasury."

The committee have failed to find any entry in the treasurer's books of interest received from any bank in which deposits of the moneys of the State have been made. While nearly all the banking institutions of the city of Columbia have had a share of such funds, it is apparent to the committee that the South Carolina Bank and Trust Company has been regarded the most "secure," and hence the most worthy of the largest amount of deposits; or, perhaps, so intimate are the relations of the officers or stockholders of this bank with the officials of the State, that the bank so much in favor is considered the most convenient, if not the most profitable or secure, depository under the law.

The committee, believing it to be a part of their duty to learn the whole amount of deposits made by the State treasurer in that and other institutions, made application at the counter of the South Carolina Bank and Trust Company for leave to examine their books of credits to the State, but were refused the privilege. Therefore the amount of interest which might have been ascertained as due, and withheld from the State, cannot be given at present, but may be at some future day.

That this bank has had large amounts of State money there can be no question, and upon it a good share of its business has been done. If, as is shown by the statement of moneys received from all sources, less than one-fourth of the amount has been paid over to the financial agent, there certainly must have been, since the passage of the act requiring deposits to be made, deducting all the transactions of the treasurer with the financial agent, nearly two and one-half millions of money of the State in the treasurer's hands, which should not only have been deposited in "secure" banks, but accumulated "the highest rate of interest" during the time of its deposit.

Not only have the banks not paid the interest required, but the South Carolina Bank and Trust Company, the accredited depository of the State moneys, has been the place for payment of claims upon the State; which payments were delayed until "the usual discount" was allowed, notwithstanding the deposits of the State in its vaults, the certificate of payment given by the treasurer, and the indorsement of the governor, whose signature is by law declared to be "the evidence of his approval." Such has been the notoriety of this practice that it is currently rumored throughout the State, and generally believed, that claims against the State, or certificates of payments given by the State treasurer, when presented at its counter, are paid out of the State funds deposited there after a required discount is deducted from the face of the pay-certificate. And, in addition to this, it is asserted that some of the members of the legislature received from this bank payment on their pay-certificates after submitting to "a large shave," when it was expected the deficiency appropriation, covering all legislative expenses, would receive the approval of the governor, and thus provide the means for immediate payment of the same. The governor having failed to sign the deficiency-bill, the legislature adjourned with no appropriation to pay its members, many of whom, by necessity, were compelled to sell their certificates. This bank "bought their claims," at a great sacrifice to the members, on the plea "that the bank must loan its own funds and wait until the next session of the legislature and passage of a deficiency appropriation bill before the claims could be paid. This was a subtle invention of the leeches of the treasury, for taxes were being collected, and funds of the State were passing into the vaults of the bank in greater amounts than had been paid out on its own risk subject to its use; and although no special appropriation existed warranting the payment of such certificates, "the inexhaustible" funds of the State, "moneys not otherwise appropriated," could be drawn upon by officials interested, and it needed not the wisdom of a Solomon to discern the fact.

The committee do not desire to be understood as questioning the right of any bank, when doing business upon its own capital, restricted by its own rules and general banking laws, to ask and receive such discounts as the character of the person applying, the security presented, and the probability of its final adjustment, may demand; but they do unhesitatingly question the propriety of State officials forming themselves into a banking association, and depositing the State funds with themselves, drawing out of the treasury with one hand and paying out of the bank with the other, certificates or claims, and charging heavy percentages for the privilege; giving no security and paying no interest for the use of the money, not even furnishing a report of the amounts transferred from the treasury to the bank. As to the law in this regard, the committee most earnestly recommend the general assembly to consider its provisions, and if not explicit enough in detail, to so far amend it as to protect the State and all who have dealings with it from further imposition, extortion, and loss. It is certainly expected that the legislature will so guard the treasury, and put such checks upon it, as will prevent misuse of the public moneys, and intrust them only to responsible parties. And it should be further provided that the State, at all times, shall have its deposits protected by undoubted securities, and that the interest on those deposits shall be paid into the treasury at least semi-annually.

THE ENROLLMENT AND ORGANIZATION OF THE MILITIA, AND THE EMPLOYMENT OF AN ARMED FORCE.

This part of the work of the present administration, so severely and extendedly criticised at home and abroad, so fruitful of suspicion and opposition among a large portion of our citizens, as well as dissatisfaction to another class, while intended for the preservation of the peace, lives, and property of the people of the State, has not only failed in its avowed object, and been managed unwisely, but also proved an expensive experiment, as the charges for such purpose will show.

The first payment for the enrollment and organization of the militia was made in July, 1869, and if the payments on the appropriations for that purpose correctly show the progress made in the effort, it was not very great until about April, 1870, from which date, according to the monthly disbursements, we are reminded of active operations. The whole cost of the enrollment and organization of the militia, as far as known, up to May, 1871, is $108,472.82. The expenses paid for armed force do not appear in any reports thus far submitted, but will be found in the supplemental report of the committee, the aggregate of which is $23,747.78. Germane to these expenditures are the charges for the purchase of arms and armament authorized by an act of the legislature March 16, 1869, which empowered the governor to purchase two thousand stand of arms, with the usual complement of ammunition, and pay for the same out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. It is found that the governor decided that one thousand arms of the Winchester pattern would be sufficient, and gave his orders accordingly. For these arms, (if the charge to "the purchase of arms" is in accordance with the appropriation, or law authorizing the same,) and "the usual complement of ammunition" for one thousand Winchester rifles, the State has paid $38,789.33, which makes the total outlay for the enrollment and organization of the militia, now entirely without organization—the armed force now virtually disarmed—the purchase of arms, one thousand Winchester rifles, now scattered throughout the thirty-one counties of the State—the sum of $171,009.93.

The committee are, in this connection, forced to the acknowledgment, however unpleasant or humiliating it may be to such as are connected with the fact, that the moneys expended (as vouchers indicated the direction in which the funds were used) were not all paid out for such purposes. In the enrollment and organization of the militia, as well as in the armed force employed by the governor, there was a most ample and complete opportunity for ambitious political partisans and aspirants for re-election to arm and equip a force of personal friends and advocates, and pay them "when on service the same pay and allowances as are given to officers and soldiers of the same grade in the Army of the United States," not out of their own purse, but "out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated; the State to be re-imbursed by a special tax upon any county into which the governor was compelled to send an armed force." And, to carry out these provisions, the governor was to exercise all the powers conferred upon him by an act entitled an "Act to suppress insurrection and rebellion," passed September 22, 1868. Besides, as he was to be the judge of the existence, in any county, of the necessity of an armed force "to preserve the peace," and it was his own prerogative to commission the officers and subalterns, and indorse their pay accounts. An enrolled, organized, and armed retinue of personal favorites or advocates were commissioned and placed upon his staff at the proper time, as well as ordered to form companies, battalions, regiments, and brigades throughout the State, into what was called "the National Guard," alias "Scott's Militia." This statement is made from undoubted evidence in the premises, and cannot be controverted. The election in 1870 was carried, in part, by the means herein stated, and while some portion of the funds appropriated for the purposes specified were, no doubt, expended for the same, the largest amounts were diverted to secure the re-election of Robert K. Scott as governor of South Carolina, but not for the success of the republican party. That the adjutant-general has not known of this diversion of special appropriations cannot be possible, for, being a member of the house of representatives, the speaker of the house, and signer of all bills passed both branches of the general assembly, he must be familiar with the laws passed; and, as the elected adjutant-general, the principal staff-officer of the State, whose recognized duty is to assist the commander-in-chief in the details of military organization and promulgate his orders, he certainly cannot claim entire ignorance in the use of the funds which are here referred to.

Nor is this all. A more glaring robbery of the treasury, for personal ambition and gain, has been perpetrated, and will be presented in that part of this report which covers the investigation of the financial agent's books and papers. The enormous sum of $202,602.66, (two hundred and two thousand six hundred and two dollars and sixty-six cents,) not appearing anywhere upon the State treasurer's books and never intended for the public eye or ear, has been paid, in addition to the amount already aggregated, for the alteration of arms, which swells the account to $374,696.59, (three hundred and seventy-four thousand six hundred and ninety-six dollars and fifty-nine cents.) The committee are compelled to believe that many of the State officials have been privy to this last and chiefest expenditure, for no such amount could ever have been paid for the work done, and the charges themselves are the evidence of fraud, and the officials could not have sanctioned or winked at it unless in complicity with it.

It would be proper here to say the committee believe that the amount charged for "adjutant-general's contingent," viz, $5,000, the adjutant and assistant-adjutant's salaries $8,000, and the State constabulary, viz, $33,463.12, would most assuredly belong to this class of expenditures, being kindred in their offices, purposes, and uses. Therefore, "The enrollment and organization of the militia," "The armed force," "The purchase of arms," "The adjutant-general's department," and "The State constabulary," have cost the State the alarming sum of four hundred and twenty-one thousand one hundred and fifty-nine dollars and seventy-one cents ($421,159.71,) nearly sufficient to pay the interest on the public debt for one year, (as per statement of the comptroller-general, October 31, 1870,) equal to a special tax of two and one-half mills upon the whole taxable property of the State, or a per capita of $2.75 upon the whole voting population of the State. Further remarks upon this subject will be reserved until the financial agent's accounts are presented.

THE LAND-COMMISSION.

This gigantic folly, about which there has been more said and less known than any other branch of the State government, and of which the legislature have often been challenged in open session to find out anything about, as well as denied a report concerning its operations—this offspring of an ordinance of the constitutional convention, passed to furnish a certain individual with a visible occupation, and a more visible manipulation of the public funds—has, without doubt, been one of the most expensive experiments, productive of greater distress and dissatisfaction that has been legalized or patronized by the State.

In no instance has the spirit of the ordinance alluded to, or the act authorizing the creation of the land-commission, been carried out—as will be seen by the following extracts from both of these instruments; but, on the other hand, the office, the administration of its power, the purchase of lands, the payment for the same, the sale of land-commission bonds, have all been made to subserve a certain organized result, viz: the primary benefit of members of the advisory board, and the land-commissioners and their subservient allies.

[Extracts from an ordinance to create a board of land-commissioners, passed by the constitutional convention.]

1st. "It shall be the duty of the general assembly to provide for the establishment of a board of commissioners of public lands, (of which board the comptroller-general of the State shall be a member,) define the powers and duties of the board, provide for the current expenses thereof, and fix the compensation of the members."

2d. "The commissioners shall have authority, under regulations of law, to purchase improved or unimproved lands—cause them to be surveyed and laid off into suitable tracts, and sold to actual settlers under specified conditions—provided, that the rate at which any purchase shall be made shall not exceed seventy-five per cent. of the value of the land so purchased, including the improvements thereon, such valuation to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter provided by law."

3d. "The general assembly shall have authority to issue to said commissioners public stock of the State; that such stock, or the proceeds thereof, shall be applied in payment for the land purchased; and such stock shall not be negotiated at less than the par value thereof. The aggregate amount of purchase of land in any fiscal year shall not exceed the par value of the stock of this State created and appropriated for such purpose."

4th. "The general assembly shall provide by law for the security of funds in the hands of the commissioners of public lands, and for the accountability of such officers, and shall require bonds to be given therefor."

Upon this ordinance, which was believed to be mandatory in its requirements, the acts of March 27, 1869, and March 1, 1870, were passed. The following extracts are given from the act of March, 1869:

1st. "The advisory board is authorized and required to appoint a suitable person to be known as the land-commissioner of the State of South Carolina, who, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, shall execute to the people of the State of South Carolina a written undertaking, with good and sufficient surety, in the penal sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be approved by the advisory board and filed in the office of the secretary of state."

2. "The governor, comptroller-general, treasurer, secretary of state, and attorney-general are declared to be the advisory board to the land-commissioner."

3d. "The said land-commissioner shall hold his office at the pleasure of the advisory board, and be governed by their instructions and advice."

4th. "It shall be the duty of the land-commissioner to purchase or cause to be purchased any lands in any portion of the State, improved or unimproved, at such price as the advisory board may determine, not to exceed in the aggregate amount, in any one fiscal year, the par value of the public stock of this State, created for this purpose."

5th. "The said land-commissioner shall not purchase from or sell to the State any land; neither shall he engage in speculations in lands, either on his own account or as an agent for other persons or corporations, and upon conviction thereof, for every such offense, shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the court."

6th. "All lands purchased by the land-commissioner shall be subdivided into sections of not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred acres, and sold to actual settlers, on conditions provided by the act."

7th. "The books and records of the land-commissioner shall, at all times, be subject to the inspection of the advisory board, or any member thereof; and the said land-commissioner shall, annually, make a detailed report of the transactions of his office to the general assembly."

8th. "The treasurer of the State is authorized and directed to issue to the land-commissioners, if, in the opinion of the advisory board, so much be necessary, bonds of this State, in the sum of two hundred thousand dollars, with coupons attached, bearing six per cent. interest, the principal payable in twenty years, to be signed by the governor and countersigned by the comptroller-general; the coupons to be signed by the treasurer of the State. The faith and credit of the State is pledged to the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds, and a sufficient amount of taxes levied to pay the interest accruing on said bonds annually."

[Extracts from act of March 1, 1870.]

1st. "The treasurer of the State, as in the foregoing extract of the act of March, 1869, under the same regulations and restrictions, is authorized and directed to issue bonds of this State, of the same class, and payable in the same time to the land-commissioner, 'in the sum of five hundred thousand dollars.'"

2d. "That the land-commissioner shall be subject to a majority of the advisory board, and any purchase or sale of property made without their advice or consent shall not be valid."

3d. "No purchase shall be made without the certain knowledge of the commissioner, that he will be able to sell the same without delay."

The land-commission has, up to the time this committee was appointed, and since its establishment by law, passed through two administrations. The first commissioner, in the management of the affairs of his office, was so secret, mysterious, and unwritten, that investigations were laughed at and discovery defied. And, as if to carry the mockery of disclosure to a more supremely farcical conclusion, the late first commissioner, by strategies well known to himself, succeeded in securing the appointment of such a committee, during the last session of the State senate, to examine into the affairs of his office as he desired; and in order to facilitate the work of oblivion, he caused to be employed the son of a certain beneficiary of the commission (whose parched acres and barrens were purchased for $36,488, ten times their value) to take down in short-hand the evidence given during "the sitting of this committee," brought together at times and in numbers the most convenient, under the dictation of the skillful operator, the substance of which is as little known as all his other proceedings, and will, no doubt, see "the light" when the darkest transactions of the land-commission are unveiled.

During his administration the largest moneyed transactions of the commission were completed, and therefore the details of his work are of the most importance to those who have been called upon to furnish the means for him to operate with. These he persistently and publicly refused to give, and uses his cunning devices to stifle and conceal.

The second commissioner, though frequently required by the general assembly to make complete reports of the work of his office, seemingly followed in the footsteps of his "illustrious predecessor," until the close of the session of 1870 and 1871. Of his administration little can be said, for little is known, and his report being the only intelligence gained of its transactions, must be referred to for its history. With this condition of affairs and the books of the land commission as blank as the knowledge of its transactions, the committee, as an initial step in the investigation of the same, addressed circulars to the clerks of the county courts and all persons who were supposed to have any information concerning the sale of land to the State, requesting answers to questions therein contained, a copy of which will be appended, and a large number of the replies will be found in an appropriate place.

In the examination of the books of the State treasurer, or the vouchers to the charges made against the land commission, but little trace of the operations, and a small proportion of the amount expended by the commission, could be found. There seemed to be a studied silence on the whole subject; and had the investigation ended with the treasurer's or comptroller's office, no more information would have been gained than was already given, viz, that less than $90,000 had been expended by the land commission at the close of the fiscal year ending October 31, 1870. Suspicions were aroused that a full record of all its transactions had not been made; and the subsequent examination of the books of the financial agent justified these suspicions, for in them it was found that, from the appointment of the first land commissioner to the 31st of October, 1870, according to the financial agent's charges, there had been paid out by him, in cash, for the land commission, $562,063.40, which, added to the amount on the State treasurer's books, make the expenditures of the land commission up to that time, $651,621.65, instead of $89,558.25, as appears by the treasurer's accounts and the reports of the comptroller-general for the fiscal years ending October 31, 1869 and 1870, or $547,329.85, as per Hon. R. C. DeLarge's report, February 25, 1871. So careful were all parties concerned, that the financial agent has nowhere in his reports, except that of September, 1869, made reference to drafts honored or cash paid on account of the land commission, which had already more than exhausted the amount realized on the bonds issued and sold for land-commission purposes. And it is found, after the various reports of the State officials for the fiscal year of 1870 had been submitted to the general assembly, there was paid out by the State treasurer, but not charged on his books, $23,031.92, and by the financial agent, $60,740, making $735,393.57, which, added to the only item appearing in the financial agent's reports, September, 1869, relative to the commission, viz, $11,330.50, swells the aggregate expended for and on account of the said land commission, as far as known, to $746,724.07.

Here is an instance of a very large excess in expenditures over the appropriations or provisions made for the same. By the act approved March 27, 1869, and March 1, 1870, an issue of $700,000, in bonds of the State, were authorized "for purposes of the land commission." No information is yet obtained, from sources from which it should be expected, whether any of these bonds have been sold; and when the financial agent was by this committee asked "if he had sold a class of bonds known as land-commission bonds," he failed to give a decided answer, but left the inference that a portion if not all of these bonds had been sold.

The committee, also, by collateral information, were led to believe that a portion of this class of bonds had been sold, by the order of the financial board, at a price as low as sixty cents; which, if true, would net, if all disposed of, $420,000, or $326,723.07 less than the aggregate expenditures of the commission under the two first commissioners.

Or, if these bonds were sold at the price fixed upon by a resolution passed by the advisory board June 10, 1870, which directs "the land commissioners to sell them for not less than eighty-five cents on the dollar," then the gross receipts of the sale would be $151,723.07 less than the aggregate amount expended.

According to the correspondence between the Hon. R. C. DeLarge, land commissioner, and H. H. Kimpton, financial agent, dated June 17, 1870, at Columbia, S. C., it would seem that $500,000 of these bonds had not at that time been sold; for, when the financial agent was requested to turn them over to the land commissioner, he was informed "that the State treasurer, some time since, forwarded the said $500,000 of bonds to me, to be used as collateral security for loans. All of the bonds are now in use as collateral security for moneys advanced to the land commission. I am ready to promptly deliver the bonds to you whenever the loans are paid or other satisfactory securities are substituted in their place."

If such, then, was the fact, for two months before June 10, 1870, had the excess alluded to been paid out, it is certain the bonds issued for land-commission purposes were no longer sufficient as "collaterals" for moneys advanced in that direction. From what source, then, could the excess have been provided for?

The fertile brains of men bent upon personal gain, or the system of "paying out" without reference to the legitimacy of such payments, it is intimated, devised a way, or interpreted the provisions of the law so liberally as to cover all amounts expended, and here will the necessity of guarding all future appropriations be seen, as well as the great care necessary to be used in the selection of language clothing a provision of law that authorizes the issue of bonds for loans on the faith and credit of the State. There should be no chance for a misinterpretation of the law; if it is intended to provide for the issue of bonds the face-value of which, in the aggregate, shall be $700,000, without any reference to their market-value, let the provisions of the law so declare; then it may not be possible for an issue of bonds to be made sufficient, when sold, to bring $700,000, though the bonds may sell for less than half their face-value. That such a course has been pursued in the issue of land-commission bonds, either by the financial agent, with or without the consent of the financial board, the committee have reason to believe will be eventually proven; and if the law in this instance can be construed to authorize an issue of bonds sufficient to realize their face in dollars, why cannot the same construction be placed upon every statute providing for the issue of bonds? And it has been, by some of the State officials, admitted that the laws already passed authorizing the new loans are capable of such a construction, and, if an overissue has been made, a strict interpretation of the law permits it, may we not fear that the rumor as to "overissues of the new bonds of the State" may not be founded alone in suspicion or speculation? The keeping of the land-commission accounts has been a system of concealment; the outlays were so great in so short a time that the operators themselves had not yet grown bold enough to submit them to the inspection of the public. For some time there was a controversy between the State treasurer, the financial board, and the financial agent as to where the accounts should be kept, and so determined was the financial agent that they should be kept by the State treasurer, to whom he was willing to furnish money to make payments, that he suffered the earliest drafts of the treasurer on account of the land commission to go to protest, and they were returned thrice dishonored.

This course did not long prevail; the reasons of the treasurer became too cogent and convincing, as well as the persuasions and assurances of the subtle commissioner, who has no equal.

"For ways that are dark and tricks not all vain,"

The major part of the business transactions of the land commission were now performed by the financial agent in the city of New York, the accounts kept by him; as by a transcript of the same will be seen. To use the language of the financial agent, in answer to the question from the committee, "What has been the process by which the land-commission transactions have been conducted between you, as financial agent of the State of South Carolina, and the State treasurer?" he says: "Inst'ad of drawing on me, the treasurer directed me to credit the State as having received the money from him, and charge the land commission with the same."

This plan, it will be apparent, obviated the necessity of charges upon the treasurer's or even the land commissioner's books. As an illustration, in the case of the "Hell-Hole Swamp" purchase, Parker gives drafts on H. H. Kimpton, in favor of Z. B. Oakes, for $120,752. These are Kimpton's vouchers.

Parker pays the money at Columbia, the draft on Kimpton is the notice of the payment of money, the State is credited on Kimpton's books with the same amount in cash, and the land commission at the same time debited with the amount, and the whole transaction is safe, for details are not indulged in by the financial agent in his reports; nor do the advisory or financial board trouble the general assembly or the public with their suggestions or experience.

It is due, however, to the financial agent to say that he admitted to the committee "he should have preferred to have had the business of the land commission managed entirely at Columbia."

The committee believe, when all the accounts as well as letters and every other kind of information concerning this commission are presented, they will be borne out in their conclusions by every honest mind, that a more outrageous and enormous swindle could not have been perpetrated, and a more subtle manner of concealment perfected. By the exhibit it will be seen who have been the recipients of "favors" from this source of extravagance, the amounts paid them, and, as far as possible, what for. It will be observed that men in high places, through their kinsmen and trusty friends, have not been unmindful of the opportunity to make "an honest penny," nor have they been forgotten in the decisions of the advisory board when advising upon purchases to be made. It is a presumption that is almost conclusive, that unless some consideration was presented to some of the advisory board worthy of a decision in favor of the purchase of any tract of land, such decision would be withheld, and, however fair the offer or just the price asked, the applicant would meet with no encouragement. Beside this, some of the members of the advisory board are believed to have used their position for the enhancement of their own gains, and entered into collusion with other parties for a division of the proceeds of the sale of lands to the State at a price greater than its value or the sum demanded by the original owners. Nor has the executive himself been behind his peers, if collateral testimony is sufficient, in his eagerness, through "confidential friends," "old Army companions," or handy resident relatives, to sell tracts of land to the State, and receive the highest possible price for the same without reference to the real value. His frequent outbursts of indignation over "the damned swindle," as he calls it, are but the cloakings of his confederation with such as have "stolen from the treasury," by a concert of purpose that made the action sure.

In the course of the examination of the financial agent's accounts, the committee could not help observe certain charges which often followed amounts paid different individuals, such as cash to N. G. Parker, or draft in favor of N. G. Parker, in such amounts as appeared possible to be construed into commissions, or inducements to make drafts in favor of such individuals. These amounts, in the aggregate, are over forty thousand dollars, but the suspicions of the committee may not be correct.

Another item of information is that the resignation of the first land commissioner was secured by threats to the governor of an exposure of the Blue Ridge Railroad transactions and the purchase of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad stock, which was known to have been accomplished through the financial agent with the money of the State, as well as the promise to the land commissioner to pay him liberally if he would resign, so that room could be made for another aspirant. It was not, however, consummated in a moment; the then incumbent knew the value of his position and the treachery of those with whom he dealt; he made his demands, and "the ring," just formed, accepted the terms, and the result was accomplished by the purchase of his Greenville Railroad stock, which cost him nothing, the payment of whatever at that time he owed the financial agent, (several thousand dollars,) and twenty-five thousand dollars besides, making in all nearly fifty thousand dollars—all of which was paid out of the land-commission funds in the manner already enlarged upon. The resignation thus obtained, his successor was speedily inaugurated, and the commission again in disbursing order.

The committee have gathered from the records of the clerks of the courts and letters of correspondents little to encourage a belief that the State has valid titles to one-half the land purchased by the land-commission; more than this, a large proportion of the land paid for is either inaccessible or so poor that the class of people for whom the public lands were intended will not be anxious to settle, or able, out of the products of such lands, to pay for them even in the time provided for by law. The statement will bear reiterating, that the land-commission and its operations have been an "outrageous and enormous swindle," and the only satisfaction or comfort that the people of the State can take is, that having expended more than the entire amount authorized by law, "the purposes of the land-commission" have been gained, and no further expenditures can be made. That legal means to bring these fraudulent transactions to light, and the corrupt complicators to judgment, should be instituted and furthered, there can be no division of sentiment upon; and the sooner the work is begun, the less liable will the guilty be to cheat the demands of justice.

As a matter of curiosity, to show how "words are used to disguise the true meaning"—how

Offense's gilded hand and oily tongue,
In the corrupt currents of this world, have deceived the popular mind and become a travesty upon real purposes, "a circular" emanating from the original commissioner, and published in many of the newspapers of the State, will be added:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT LAND-COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE,
Columbia, S. C., August 11, 1869.

Notice is hereby given that this office is now organized in accordance with the law creating the same, and is ready to proceed to business. In the purchase of lands the interests of the State will be carefully guarded. It is the desire of the commissioner to purchase none other than good lands, in good localities, at their fair market-value, and at such prices as the same land would be sold for to private individuals. Arrangements have been made by which the bonds, authorized to be issued for the purchase of lands, will be converted into currency. The commissioner invites all parties owning desirable lands in desirable localities, wishing to sell them, and willing to take market-prices, to forward their proposals, giving the description of the lands for sale, their locality, quality, and adaptation to the production of cotton, corn, and grains generally, with a view to the commencement of negotiations for the sale of said lands to the State.

C. P. LESLIE,
Land-Commissioner.

"THE ADVISORY BOARD."

This is a grand council of five, which directs all things in connection with the land-commission. Have they done their duty? Can no stones be cast at them? Are they free from suspicion or censure? Let us see.

Who creates the land-commissioner? "The advisory board."

How long does he hold his office? "At the pleasure of the advisory board."

By whose advice and instructions must he be governed? "The advice and instructions of the advisory board."

Who determines the price to be paid by the land-commission for lands? "It shall be the duty of the land-commissioner to purchase or cause to be purchased any lands in any portion of the State, at such price as the advisory board may determine."

Is there a limit to the amount of land to be purchased in any fiscal year? "It shall not exceed, in the aggregate amount, in any one fiscal year, the par value of the public stock of this State, created for this purpose."

How far are the purchases of the land-commissioner legal? "The land-commissioner shall be subject to a majority of the advisory board, and any purchase or sale of property made without their advice or consent shall not be valid."

What rule is given for the purchase of land? "No purchase shall be made without the certain knowledge of the commissioner that he will be able to sell the same without delay."

How are the bonds, authorized for land-commission purposes, to be issued? By the treasurer, in amounts specified in the acts authorizing the same, "if, in the opinion of the advisory board, so much be necessary."

What amount of bonds, for land-commission purposes, were authorized under the acts of March 27, 1869, and March 1, 1870? "Seven hundred thousand dollars."

How much has been expended for land-commission purposes? According to the books of the State treasurer and the financial agent, "seven hundred and forty-six thousand seven hundred and twenty-three  $\frac{17}{100}$  dollars."

Are the books of the land-commission subject to inspection? "The books and records of the land-commissioner shall, at all times, be subject to the inspection of the advisory board, or any member thereof."

It appears, then, that there can be no land-commissioner, who is not first decided "to be suitable," appointed, except by the advisory board, nor can he purchase or sell land, fix the price, or go beyond a specified limit in his purchases, or dispose of a bond, or make his transactions legal, or "discharge the duties of his office," without "the instructions, advice, or control of the advisory board." His books and records must be submitted to their inspection, and his every business operation should pass under their scrutiny; and if he violates the law or disregards its restrictions, the advisory board, having approved "a written undertaking, with good and sufficient security, executed to the people of the State of South Carolina, by the land-commissioner, in the penal sum of twenty thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office," and filed the same in the office of the secretary of state, have at least something to fall back upon to protect the State against hazard or loss, and the courts are open to try and judge the offenses committed by the commissioner according to the strict measures of justice.

That great swindles have been perpetrated; that corrupt means have been used and alliances formed; that the money of the State and the bonds issued have not been disposed of as directed; that one of the land-commissioners is not free from "speculation, either on his own account or as an agent for other persons or corporations;" that the excess of the public stock of this State, created for land-commission purposes, over the par value of the same, in the aggregate amount, has been expended; that the whole spirit, letter, and body of the laws authorizing the appointment of land-commissioner, the issue of bonds, the purchase of land, the settlement of the same, the report of the commissioner, everything intended in the act "to create a land-commissioner and define his powers and duties," have been disregarded or wantonly perverted, cannot be gainsaid.

That the advisory board are responsible for all of this, the verdict of the "homeless and laudless," at least, will be recorded.

The land purchased, the improved and unimproved, eligible or ineligible, the 104,078 acres, land-bill, swamp and otherwise, which have cost the State already over $7 per acre, with or without titles, could not have been purchased without the knowledge of the advisory board, "their advice and consent."

The advisory board should be required, then, to explain their acts, their neglect of duty, and unwarrantable violation of law.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What is the leading democratic newspaper of this State?—A. There are two leading papers. The News and Courier and the Journal of Commerce are the two largest papers.

Q. Which has the largest circulation?—A. I suspect that the News has, though I don't know.

Q. Is this a copy of the News and Courier of September 20, 1876?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that contain a report of the speech which you made at Abbeville on the 16th of September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you now furnish to the stenographer the extract which I have just cut from the paper which you have described in your testimony?—A. I have never seen this. I don't know what it is.

Q. You know that it has just been cut from this newspaper?—A. Certainly.

Mr. Lawrence put the extract in evidence, as follows:

I have never attempted to deceive a colored man, and I say here that, in my opinion, any candidate that would sink so low as to deceive a colored man is unworthy of the name of man. I have told you what has been my record, I have told you what we propose to do if elected, and I have told you in all earnestness that very much of the future depends upon your course of action now. I have told the colored people that the men who own the land, the men who pay the taxes, the men who have the title-deeds from the Almighty, will take you by the hand as their friends if you come with them and help them to redeem the State. But they say, on the other hand, if you do not come with them, and rather go with the corrupt crew who have, for eight years, ruled and ruined the State, then you will have to look to them for your living and protection. We offer to the colored people the right hand of fellowship; we hold out to them the olive-branch of peace, but you cannot expect us, when you allow your State to be dragged down to infamous ruin by alien adventurers, to help you who have been the cause of all the suffering which will assuredly follow. We give you your choice now, either to come with your white friends, who never have deceived you, or to go with the carpet-baggers, who have deceived and plundered you for eight years. If you think your carpet-bag friends are right, then, when your trouble comes, go to them for the help and protection you will assuredly need. We say this in no spirit of intimidation, but in precisely the sense in which a gentleman in Greenville the other day told his hands that the taxes were so high that he would not be able to hire them the next year. "I shall not," said this gentleman, "be able to plant at all if the republican party gets into power again. But so sure am I that the taxes will be reduced and the prosperity of the county increased, that if the democratic party gets into power I will pay you $3 more per month next year." He did not say that if they voted the democratic ticket he would pay them higher wages, but simply if that party got into power he would do so, showing how certain he was that under home rule the prosperity of the State would be insured. That man meant business, and that is what we mean—we mean business. [Loud cheering.] Just as I arrived here I received the New York Herald. You all know that this paper, when I was nominated, said that the democracy had made a great blunder, and that they should have supported Chamberlain. Now, you know that the men who run the New York Herald, the greatest paper, perhaps, in the world, are the cleverest people to find out which way the wind is blowing. You will always find them on the winning side. (General Hampton here read, amid the wildest enthusiasm, the editorial headed "Advice to colored men," in the New York Herald of the 29th of September, which was published in The News and Courier on Saturday.)

Mr. Lawrence also put in evidence the following :

THE CAMPAIGN IN THE CITY—A LARGE MEETING IN THE SIXTH WARD—RESOLUTIONS—
SPEECH OF COL. W. L. TRENHOLM.

The meeting of the sixth ward democratic club last night was attended by about two hundred voters, white and colored. Mr. R. C. Barkley, the chairman of the ward, presided. The meeting having been called to order, Mr. Isaac Hayne submitted the following report :

"The executive committee, to whom was referred certain resolutions offered by Mr. W. S. Thomas, at the last regular meeting of the ward, respectfully report that they have considered the same, and recommend the adoption of the following resolutions in lieu thereof :

"Resolved, That, in opinion of this meeting, the indorsement of the official bonds of radical office-holders by individuals in sympathy with the democratic party is a practice calculated to injure the cause of reform and to weaken the efforts now being made to re-establish capable and honest government in the State of South Carolina.

"Resolved, That we hold the leaders of the republican party responsible for the recent riot and bloodshed in the city of Charleston; and it is, therefore, the duty of every man, calling himself a democrat, to mark his disapproval and abhorrence of such disgraceful and brutal exhibitions of party hate by withdrawing his name and abstaining from all connection or association with such reckless disturbers of the public peace."

The report of the committee was adopted unanimously.

Mr. Hayne then submitted the following resolutions, which were also unanimously adopted :

"Resolved, That the issues presented in the present political campaign in this State rise higher than party. The success of the democratic party in South Carolina assures equal civil and political rights to all citizens, security to life and property, and an honest, impartial, and economical administration of public affairs. The election of the so-called 'republican ticket,' lately nominated at Columbia, will, on the other hand, perpetuate for at least two years longer the misrule, corruption, disorder, and public extravagance which have already destroyed the credit of the State, increased taxation, depreciated the value of property, depressed business of all kinds, and occasioned the present widespread apprehension and feeling of insecurity among all classes, imperiling their lives and property, and affecting alike all good citizens, white and colored.

"Resolved, That no good citizen should, directly or indirectly, do anything which may tend to perpetuate the grievances of which we complain, by aiding or assisting those who are endeavoring to continue in power the men who are responsible for this deplorable condition of affairs, and every lawful means should be adopted to prevent so disastrous a result.

"Resolved, That in our opinion the interest of the democratic party will be promoted if, in purchasing supplies, employing laborers, and so forth, those co-operating with that party will give the preference to persons who intend to join us in this struggle for an honest government, and to free themselves from the rule and guidance of the rascally adventurers who are responsible for the present condition of affairs, and are seeking to perpetuate their power for mischief and misrule."

A letter was then read from Mr. W. S. Thomas, resigning the position of secretary of the club. Mr. Joseph Legare was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy. Judge Thomas then read a letter from Mr. G. L. Bulst, stating that Mr. Julian Mitchell, who had been announced to address the meeting, would not be able to attend, but that he would be present at the next meeting.

OFFICIAL VIEW OF THE BLOODY AFFAIR—A RADICAL SHERIFF'S REPORTS.

[Special dispatch to the News and Courier.]

COLUMBIA, September 19.

Dispatches and passengers from Aiken say that the reports of the troubles in that county are greatly exaggerated. The following official telegram was received by the governor at 6 p. m. to-day :

AIKEN, S. C., September 19.

To Governor D. H. Chamberlain :

I have just returned from the reported riot. I have not seen or heard of any fighting; saw no colored men under arms, nor could I hear of any. They had dispersed, and none could be found up to a late hour last night. The whites are all under arms and re-enforcements were arriving. I was powerless to disband them. The country is under a great deal of excitement. This was the condition of affairs when I left that night. The United States troops left Aiken for the scene at 11 p. m. I see much excitement here. If there is further trouble I will report.

H. JORDAN,
Sheriff Aiken County.

Q. Is this a copy of the Charleston News and Courier of the 2d of October?—A. It appears to be.

Mr. Lawrence put in evidence the following extracts :

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. R. C. Logan is the traveling canvassing agent for the News and Courier in South Carolina.

If you want a porter, employ a democrat.

Sales at auction this day.—John H. Ostendorff, at 11 a. m., at old post-office, real estate.

The weather.—Office of Chief Signal-Officer, Washington, D. C., September 30—Probabilities : For the South Atlantic and Gulf States, higher barometer, stationary and lower temperature, northerly to westerly winds, and clear weather will prevail. In the West Gulf States, rising, followed by falling, barometer, cool weather, northwest winds shifting to warmer easterly and southerly, and generally clear weather. In the Tennessee and Ohio Valleys, rising, followed by falling, barometer, westerly winds, backing to southerly, and warmer, clear, or partly cloudy weather. In the Middle States, rising, followed by slowly-falling, barometer, cold northwesterly winds, backing to warmer southwesterly, and clear or partly cloudy weather.

Comparative temperature.—At 4.24 p. m., yesterday, the thermometer registered as follows in the cities named : Augusta, 56; Charleston, 65; Galveston, 66; Jacksonville, 70; Knoxville, 45; Mobile, 61; New Orleans, 64; New York, 58; Norfolk, 59; Savannah, 67; Wilmington, 63.

The thermometer in the city.—The range of the thermometer at Blackman's drug-store, 39 Broad street, Saturday and Sunday, was as follows : September 30, 8 a. m., 73; 10 a. m., 77; 12 m., 79; 2 p. m., 80; 4 p. m., 77; 6 p. m., 76; 8 p. m., 75. October 1, 8 a. m., 57; 10 a. m., 62; 12 m., 68; 2 p. m., 69; 4 p. m., 67; 6 p. m., 64; 8 p. m., 60.

If you want a tailor, employ a democrat.

The fourth circuit.—The radicals have nominated D. D. McCall for solicitor of the fourth circuit. This explains the haste with which Mr. McCall denied that he was entitled to a place on the "roll of honor."

If you want a driver, employ a democrat.

Cotton for Great Britain.—The British bark La Plata, Captain Matthews, was cleared for Liverpool, on Saturday last, by Messrs. Watson & Hill, with 3 bags Sea Island cotton and 2,002 bales upland cotton. This is the first cargo by sail this season for Liverpool.

If you want a laborer, employ a democrat.

Citydel Square Baptist church.—Rev. Dr. Chambliss returned to the city Saturday and occupied his pulpit yesterday morning. The night services in this church will not be resumed at present, either on Sunday or in the week. The regular lecture, service will be held every Thursday afternoon at five o'clock.

If you want a gardener, employ a democrat.

Hotel arrivals, September 30.—Pavilion : B. J. Hazzard, Georgetown, S. C.; J. D. Robertson, Wm. H. Evans, South Carolina; James Brandt, Florida; P. McSweeney, Mobile. Waverly House : Lawrence L. Ludlow, Effingham Cross-Roads; M. B. Brawly, South Carolina; J. R. Reed, Philadelphia.

If you want a plasterer, employ a democrat.

Troops for Abbeville.—Captain Lloyd's company of the Eighteenth Infantry, which had been on duty in Aiken County, arrived in Columbia on Friday evening, en route to Abbeville, where it will establish a military post until after the election. Lieutenants Paul and Barnhart are the other officers of the company.

If you want wood cut, employ a democrat.

Mass-meeting of the Germans.—A grand mass-meeting of the German residents of Charleston will be held at the hall of the Freundschaftsbund on Wednesday evening next. It is understood that an address will be drawn up, laying before the Germans of the North and West the grievous burdens imposed upon the white people in this State by radical rascality and misgovernment.

If you want a tinker, employ a democrat.

Exports for the week.—The shipments for the week just closed were 1,262 casks spirits turpentine and 1,913 barrels rosin for the United Kingdom; 480 tons phosphate rock for Weymouth, Massachusetts; 3,520 bales upland cotton, 1 bag sea-island cotton, 4,866 barrels rosin and sundries for New York; 866 bales upland cotton, 518 casks spirits turpentine, 681 barrels rosin and sundries for Philadelphia; 354 bales cotton, 1,171 barrels rosin, &c., for Baltimore.

If you want a waiter, employ a democrat.

Shipping in port.—There were in this harbor on Saturday last about forty vessels, small coasting-steamers and sailing craft not included. Of these three were steamships, two ships, sixteen barks, three brigs, and fifteen schooners. Twenty were under the flag of the United States, seven of Great Britain, seven of Spain, three of Norway, one of France, and one of Germany. Two were loading for Liverpool, five for Havre, two for Barcelona, one for the continent, one for Rotterdam, and the remainder for coastwise ports, ready or waiting.

If you want a carpenter, employ a democrat.

The cool snap.—The weather still continues cool, and in the mornings and evenings verges to what might very well be called frosty.

At Summerville a slight frost has been reported, and yesterday morning the thermometer stood at 53 degrees on the Battery.

The first cold change in 1875 was on the 2d of October, the average being 65½; on the 1st the average was 75½, a fall of 10½ in the twenty-four hours; on the 30th of September, 1876, the average was 76½; on the 1st of October, 1876, the average was 63½, a fall of 12½ in the twenty-four hours.

If you want a bricklayer, employ a democrat.

Harbor items.—The steamship City of Atlanta sailed for New York on Saturday, with a heavy cargo, composed of about 1,800 bales cotton, 145 tierces rice, 600 barrels rosin, and 350 packages sundries.

The steamship Virginia, of the Philadelphia line, departed on Saturday for that city with 463 bales upland cotton, 249 casks spirits turpentine, 367 barrels rosin, and 200 packages sundries.

The steamship Falcon, of the direct Baltimore line, left on Saturday for that city with a crowded freight of cotton, naval stores, and sundries.

If you want a blacksmith, employ a democrat.

Chess.—In the chess tournament now in progress at the Café International in New York, Mr. J. E. Orchard, of Columbia, is one of the contestants. Mr. Orchard won his game with Mason and lost his game with Bird; but came near drawing the latter, which was most stubbornly fought, and was protracted to the eighty-seventh move. Mr. Mason is considered the best chess-player in America, with the exception of Captain McKenzie, and Mr. Bird ranks amongst the first of the great European players. This speaks well, not only for the chess skill of Mr. Orchard, but that of Messrs. Neufville and Paine, who drew a game with Mr. Orchard in the match by telegraph between Charleston and Columbia, played recently, and reported in the News and Courier.

If you want drayage done, employ a democrat.

Drowned.—A son of Mr. Fosberry, formerly a member of the police-force, was drowned on Saturday in the dock at the back of the post-office. It appears that the young man, who was twenty years of age, was subject to epilepsy, and was calking the sides of a boat in the dock when he was taken with a fit and fell overboard. Some workmen, standing a little way off, saw him fall and immediately went to his assistance. His father and Mr. J. J. Kenny arrived in a few moments, and after a brief search the body was recovered, and when brought ashore was still warm. Every effort at resuscitation was made, but in vain. Some time ago the same young man fell from a scaffolding where he was at work during a similar attack. The remains were interred yesterday.

If you want painting done, employ a democrat.

Shooting-scrapes.—Two young men, named Haight and Moore, became engaged in a quarrel, in a store near the Rutledge street pond, yesterday afternoon. The discussion got to be so warm that Haight sought to end it by shooting his opponent, at whom he fired one shot without effect. Then the police came in. Haight decamped, and Moore was captured, but released when it was ascertained that he was the man who had been fired at. An officer was sent to hunt up Haight.

On Saturday night about half past 7 o'clock a row occurred in a shop at the corner of New and Tradd streets. A notorious negro named Thomas Smalls became engaged in an altercation with Samuel Melrose, a special policeman, who has done more than any other man to preserve the peace in that neighborhood. In the quarrel Smalls drew his pistol and shot at the policeman, but his aim was not steady, and the ball missed Melrose and found a lodging in the thigh of a colored man named John Lewis. The wounded man was carried to his home in Limehouse street, but Smalls escaped by jumping a fence. A warrant will be taken out for his arrest to-day.

If you want a shoemaker, employ a democrat.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

OFFICE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Charleston, Saturday, September 30, 1876.

Two (2) certificates of death from yellow fever have been received at this office up to 12 o'clock m. to-day.

By order of the board of health :

P. B. BACOT, Secretary.

The two deaths referred to above were the result of sickness contracted outside of the city. One of the victims was Mr. Padget, the engineer of the United States buoy-tender Alanthus, which was anchored off Sullivan's Island a few days ago. Mr. Padget, while the vessel was in this locality, slept ashore on the island several nights, and was in fact taken ill on the island. He was brought to the city and died Saturday morning at a house in Calhoun near College street.

The other death was a seaman, one of the crew of the ship Brother's Pride, which lately lay at Marshall's wharf. He was taken sick on the ship and was conveyed to the city hospital, where he died about 12 o'clock on Saturday.

Up to 12 o'clock yesterday no new deaths had been reported, nor was there any report of new cases. The reports from Magnolia Cemetery show that the interment of Mr. Padget was the only interment there for the week ending on Saturday:

If you want a whitewasher, employ a democrat.

Signs on a bender.—Some evil-disposed persons made a raid on the lawyers' shingles on Broad street on Saturday night. Every sign that could be reached was bent or twisted down out of the hooks.

Robbery.—Samuel Viak was arrested and tried before Justice Chisolm, charged with robbing the captain of a coasting-vessel of clothing, &c., to the amount of $20. He was sent to jail for thirty days.

Mayor's Court, September 30.—Abram Nick, for trespassing on the fishing-smack of Captain Catrine and stealing five pieces of clothing, was referred to a trial-justice. Alfred Anderson, disorderly and assaulting F. E. Singleton, was referred to a trial-justice.

Assaulting an officer.—Alfred Anderson, a seaman, was arrested by Justice Chisolm on Saturday for assaulting the deputy United States marshal, who was in charge of the brig Samuel Muir, lying at Southern wharf. He was sent to jail in default of three hundred dollars bond to stand trial at the next term of court. The officer was a black man, and the difficulty seems to have arisen on board the vessel of which the deputy was in charge.

If you want a cook or washerwoman, employ the wife, daughter, or sister of a democrat.

The Treasury.—The office of the assistant United States Treasury was closed on Saturday, in accordance with orders received from the Department at Washington. The acting treasurer, Mr. T. R. Stickney, received orders to turn over all the funds in his possession, amounting to about $200,000, to the People's National Bank, which has been designated as the United States depository at this place. The transfer of the funds will be made to-day.

The schooner Katie Collins.—The Baltimore American of September 29 says: "Captain John Mathis, of schooner Katie Collins, from Charleston for New York, now in Hampton Roads, reports having left Charleston 19th instant with a cargo of naval stores; on 22d had a heavy squall from southeast to northwest, with a heavy cross sea, stripping deck-load; arrived at Hampton Roads 25th instant, where captain's wife, Mrs. Hannah Mathis, died of affection of the kidneys, and not, as rumor has it, of yellow fever. Neither captain nor any of the crew have had the least particle of sickness since leaving Charleston."

If you want a servant-girl, employ the daughter of a democrat.

A drunken row.—Considerable excitement was created in King street yesterday afternoon, about two o'clock, by the rumors of a riot, which spread very rapidly. The sight of the entire police-force double-quickening up the street added to the excitement. An investigation, however, proves it to have been nothing more than a drunken row. It seems that Charley Bentham, a rather noisy and bolsterous colored man, went into the bakery of Fritz Dorro, in Archdale near Beaufain street, to beg a pie. Charley was drunk, and, upon being refused the pie, allowed his feelings to overcome him, and used some harsh language. August Keizer, one of the bakers of the establishment, seized him and pitched him out of the door, a proceeding which Bentham did not relish. He accordingly set to work to klick up a fuss, and in this he was successful. Dorro, the proprietor of the establishment, was also tight, and between the two of them they managed to collect a crowd in a few moments, with every symptom of a riot. The police-force were at that time assembled in the station-house for inspection, and an excited spectator bringing down word that a general riot was in progress, the whole force was at once marched to the scene. When they arrived there were about four hundred persons assembled, all of them excited at nothing. Dorro and Kalzer had been arrested, but Bentham had gone home and gone to bed. As soon as it was known that he was the party who had started the row, officer Hord was sent to arrest him. Bentham was pulled out of bed and carried to the station-house by main force. All three of the parties have been held for examination before the mayor this morning.

If you want beef, pork, mutton, &c., patronize a democrat.

Talk about town.—Overcoats were seen on the streets last evening.

Overcoats were comfortable, not to say necessary, last night.

Draine denies that he had any words or quarrel with Jenkins.

The west end of Spring street needs attention from the board of health.

Five applicants were accommodated with lodgings at the main station-house Saturday night.

If the weather continues to grow cooler at the same rate as now, we will have frost in three days.

At eleven o'clock last night the thermometer marked 52 degrees, and the mercury was still descending.

A pistol-shot was fired by some unknown party in Rutledge, near Wentworth street, about 7 o'clock last evening.

The police were inspected yesterday at the main station-house, and the officers have been supplied with the new regulation whistle.

Joseph Wilson, a black loafer, was arrested on Saturday night for loitering around the corner of King and Wentworth streets.

The alarm of fire yesterday morning was a mistake. The steopleman started to ring the twelve o'clock bell at the Orphan house an hour too soon.

A boy of young girls residing at 4 Clifford street were reported yesterday at the station-house for throwing grape-skins from their windows to the pavement below—a dangerous practice.

Joseph Brown, alias Robt. Gadsden, notorious rogue and ex-convict, was arrested on Saturday night on a charge of stealing two pieces of salt pork from the store of J. H. Rumplo, at the corner of Meeting and Ann streets.

If you want shaving or hair-cutting done, go to a democratic barber.

Q. Was it not generally understood that the census of 1875 was rather a full census; that is, that it rather overstated the population?—A. We thought it overstated the colored population and underrated the white; that was our impression.

Q. By the census which you have presented to the committee, it appears that Edgefield County had a voting-population of 7,122.—A. I don't remember the figures now.

Q. The vote of Edgefield County this year was 9,380. Have you any personal knowledge of the means by which the vote was made to exceed the voting-population?—A. Nothing, except what came through General Gary. I have information from him, as chairman of the committee; no personal knowledge.

Q. Was any meeting which you addressed disturbed by any republican?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At Beaufort and at Georgetown; and, by-the-by, I forgot to state the only exhibition of anything approaching personal violence was at Georgetown, where a brick was thrown by some colored people at the carriage in which I was riding.

Q. Did you see the brick thrown?—A. I did, indeed.

Q. Did you see the man that threw it?—A. No; I saw the crowd.

Q. You don't know whether it was thrown by a colored man or a white man?—A. Yes, I do; because there were none but colored men there.

Q. Did it strike the carriage?—A. No, sir; it passed right by the carriage. I stopped the carriage and spoke to them and they all apologized.

Q. Did you see the brick in its flight?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. You were not at a meeting at that time?—A. I was in the carriage, going along in the procession.

Q. Was there any disturbance at any meeting except that?—A. Not at all.

Q. Was there any violence inflicted by any republican upon any democrat at either of those disturbances?—A. No; never, that I saw.

Q. Then what was the character of the disturbance at those two meetings?—A. At Beaufort they refused to hear the speakers, and hooted them, and became very much excited. It was the same at Georgetown to some extent, but not so largely.

Q. You held your meeting, however?—A. The meeting was held.

Q. Speeches were made?—A. I spoke at Beaufort; they heard me.

Q. Did the other gentleman who spoke finish his speech?—A. No. Mr. Yoomans was interrupted very violently, and it looked so much like a riot that I got up and went out and spoke to them, and quieted them.

Q. But there was in fact no violence?—A. No violence beyond that.

Q. Did you divide time at any of the political meetings which you addressed with any republican speakers?—A. I offered to do it at every meeting, but no one took it up, except once. I was invited at Waloola one night to address a colored club. I went to the court-house and found this club there, and the court-house filled with citizens. When they got through some one announced that there was no republican present, and one colored man got up and said he was a republican, and there was some, not disturbance, but disapproval, manifested, when I got up and told the audience that I had advocated free speech throughout the whole canvass, and if this man desired to speak that I insisted on his being heard; and he got up and made his speech. He said he was a republican, and that he wanted to say so; and they listened to him with entire attention, and gave him three cheers when he was done.

Q. How long did he speak?—A. Twenty minutes, I suppose.

Q. A colored man or a white man?—A. A colored man—a ragged, poor colored man.

Q. You say you proposed to divide time with the republicans at your meetings?—A. I did.

Q. In what form was the proposition made?—A. First in the general proposition at my first meeting at Anderson, where I said that if there was any republican present I would be very happy to divide time, and that I would make a general proposition to do it always. Then as soon as Mr. Chamberlain was nominated I sent a dispatch down to the committee to invite him to meet me at the appointments I had made.

Q. Did you formally, at each meeting, publicly make a request?—A. I did, as a general thing. Sometimes I may not have stated it, but as a general thing I always said that if there was any republican who desired to speak I should be glad to divide time with him.

Q. Was that done at the opening or the close of the meeting?—A. At the opening.

Q. Your meetings, however, were called as distinctive democratic meetings?—A. They were called as public meetings. As I told you, our great effort was to get the colored people out; that was my great motive for offering these joint discussions, as I knew that great efforts were made to keep them away from my meetings.

Q. Still, they were democratic meetings?—A. They were democratic meetings.

Q. You have spoken of the man who was killed, and said that you took steps to prevent the people going to take vengeance on the murderers; did information come to you which led you to suppose that it was necessary to take such measures to prevent violence?—A. It was just after the meeting; a very large number were present, and the information came to me that this man going home had been ambushed and murdered, and another man riding with him wounded, and that the people were very much excited and were going out into that neighborhood, and it was feared that violence would occur there. Upon that I sent up to tell them not to go.

Q. You have said that you telegraphed to Charleston also, advising the people to act only on the defensive.—A. I did.

Q. Was that because you apprehended that there would be violence?—A. There had been violence, and I was afraid there would be a recurrence. There had been a meeting in ward 8, I think, where two colored democratic speakers had spoken. Going home that night they were attacked by a mob of negroes who attempted to kill them, and in attempting to defend them one white man was killed. That created great excitement, and I was afraid it would lead to retaliation.

Q. The violence you apprehended was that which would come from democrats against republicans?—A. No; the violence I apprehended was that there might be a riot in the whole town that might lead to serious consequences.

Q. You advised your democratic friends only to act on the defensive?—A. I advised them not to retaliate for this nor for any subsequent outrage.

Q. It was because you feared there might be violence by the democrats?—A. Yes, sir; or by citizens there.

Q. As a general rule, are the colored people of this State timid and easily alarmed by a display of force?—A. I think not now. They have had all the power of the State for several years; they were the only militia in the State for several years. Some years ago, when the militia was organized, none but black companies were received into it—

Q. I prefer that you should answer my question.—A. Well, my answer is that I do not think they are, because they were led to believe—

Q. Are not the white men of this State a remarkably courageous and bold people?—A. I think they are as much so as people ordinarily are.

Q. Are they not almost universally a people who are not easily affected by intimidation or threats?—A. Yes; I think they are.

Q. Are not the colored people of this State much more liable to be affected by intimidation or threats, or a display of force?—A. Yes, I think that, as a general proposition, they would be.

Q. You said nothing in your speeches upon the subject of giving or refusing employment to colored men?—A. I think I said nothing upon that subject except, perhaps

I may have said—I do not know that I said this, but it was within the line of my argument—that if these taxes went on, our people would be unable to pay them, and that all labor would suffer in the State. I said nothing upon the direct ground of anything like proscription. I have advised that there should be no proscription. The first thing I did after the election was to publish a card advising that there should be no proscription for political opinion in the State.

Q. The condition of public opinion, then, among the whites was such that you deemed a card of that sort a necessity?—A. I thought it was advisable, and I can give you the reasons for that.

Q. You have spoken of people that were killed according to general notoriety or rumor?—A. Only one white man that I heard of, during the election.

Q. Prior to and during the election this year, how many colored men have you heard of being killed?—A. During this year I have heard of none being killed except from the statements in the newspapers, and excepting those killed at Hamburg, (there was a white man killed there also,) and some who were killed at Ellenton. But these are stated only from newspaper accounts. I was not in the State when the Hamburg affair occurred.

Q. Haven't you heard, by common report, of quite a number of colored men who were killed in different parts of the State?—A. I don't remember any except those and one in Laurens, that I heard of being killed during the canvass. Not while I was there; but I heard of it. Beyond that I do not recall any. Several times, in places throughout the State, I have seen by the papers that there had been acts of violence, but I cannot call them to mind.

Q. Have you been out of this State?—A. Since when?

Q. How long have you been in it?—A. Well, I was out of it during the summer, just in the edge of the State, in North Carolina, when the nomination was made.

Q. Have you been engaged in planting in Mississippi?—A. Yes; I had not been in Mississippi for four years, though, until last winter.

Q. What time did you go there last winter?—A. I went there, I suppose, in November.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I came back in June, I know; perhaps before that. I know I was here in June, for I attended the Fort Moultrie celebration in Charleston.

Q. Then prior to June you had been in Mississippi?—A. Yes; I spent last winter in Mississippi.

Q. During that time you had no personal opportunity to know what was going on in this State?—A. Only through the papers and by letters.

Q. Were you in this State or in Mississippi during the campaign of 1874?—A. I was here—I know I voted for Green—but how much of the time I was here I don't know. I took no prominent part in that canvass.

Q. Did you attend any political meetings?—A. I think none at all.

Q. You had no opportunity to know how the campaign was conducted?—A. No, sir; I simply voted.

Q. If you can remember about how long you were here prior to the election, please state it.—A. I said it was four years since I was in Mississippi. I was out of Mississippi in the spring of 1874 for a few weeks. It had been four years then. I went out to Mississippi again in March, and came back here, and went up to this little place in North Carolina, spent the summer there, and came down some time before the election to my place here.

Q. Then during that season you were here in this State only a few weeks?—A. Well, I was in the State a great part of the time; at Waloola, just at the edge of North Carolina. I think I got down only a few weeks before the election, but, as I told you, I took no part in it except to vote.

Q. Is not the public sentiment and feeling among the democratic party in this State to prefer for office men who were not Union men during the war?—A. Do you mean Carolinians?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. I don't think there were any Union men here then.

Q. Among the white men?—A. No; we never heard of any, until after the war certainly. The State gave more soldiers than it had voters; so I take it for granted that there were no Union men.

Q. You don't mean to be understood that the colored men were opposed to the Union?—A. The last volunteers for the confederate army were the colored men from South Carolina.

Q. To what extent were they received as volunteers?—A. Well, you know the act authorizing the call for such volunteers passed only a short time before the end of the war. The only instance I knew of was on one of General Hugood's plantations. He was on it just after Sherman passed by, and he stated that they had a right to call for colored volunteers, and he says that every man on his place who could bear arms volunteered.

Q. To what extent were colored men enlisted in the confederate service?—A. O, not at all, because that was just before the end of the war.

Q. Were not the colored men, as a general rule, in favor of the Union cause?—A. Well, we never had any reason to suppose so, until the war ended. They said so, of course, afterwards, but they did not then.

Q. They said nothing about it?—A. Nothing about it; yes—a great many of them did express very hearty concurrence with the southern people, and some that I have known have expressed that since.

Q. But the great mass of them professed to have been Union men?—A. Yes, sir, afterwards.

Q. State whether, during this campaign, some of the democratic speakers, and perhaps the majority of them, so far as you heard them make speeches, did not denounce northern men, who came here and were candidates for office.—A. Not upon that ground at all. Mr. Yeomans, speaking on the platform with me, said that among the advantages to be gained by having a good government here was that it would open inducements for immigration from the North. He went on to say that we needed northern brains, northern pluck, and northern capital, and that was a general sentiment.

Q. Have not the northern men who have come here and held office been denounced by democrats as "carpet-baggers"?—A. Yes; but not on account of their being northern men.

Q. What do you mean by a "carpet-bagger"?—A. A thief.

Q. Is not a "carpet-bagger" a man who has come into the State from the North?—A. No, sir; because we have men here who are recognized, who would receive our votes, and whom we are very glad to welcome here. There is a very wide distinction between that class and the "carpet-baggers."

Q. Has the democratic party nominated any northern man for any one of your State offices this year?—A. Yes, I think so; I am not sure on this point, but I think Senator Buck is a northern man.

Q. In what district was he nominated?—A. Horry.

Q. How long has he been here?—A. That I cannot tell you. I don't believe he has been here very long.

Q. Can you name any other?—A. I have no doubt that by looking over the list I could do so.

Q. Was any one of the democratic candidates for any State office a northern man?—A. No.

Q. Was any democratic candidate for Congress in this State a northern man?—A. No.

Q. Was any democratic candidate for the State senate a northern man except the one you have named?—A. Without going over the list I could not tell you. He occurs to me at this moment.

Q. Can you now recall to mind any one except him?—A. Not without going over the list.

Q. If you ascertain any other will you furnish us the names?—A. I will.

Q. Was any democratic candidate for the house of representatives a northern man?—A. The answer to that is the same; I should have to look over the list.

Q. If there are any, you will furnish us with the names?—A. I will do so. Several of the most prominent men in the State are northern men, men occupying the most prominent positions in the State, and who have reached the highest honors in it.

Q. Don't you know that the people of this State exercise a certain degree of social ostracism against the families of those who come here from the North?—A. No; I do not know that except in this way. There are two reasons for that, so far as it exists. One is that, from the old traditions here, our people never gave a stranger access to their society unless he was properly introduced, and that feeling prevails to some extent still. Another is, that the people through the country, as a general rule, have been utterly unable to extend hospitality to any one at all, and with a feeling of, perhaps, false pride, but still a feeling of that sort; as they are not able to do it properly, they don't like to attempt it at all.

Q. Don't you know that the southern people who constitute what is called respectable society do not give the same social recognition to northern people who are settled here as to southern people?—A. No, I do not know that at all, and I don't think it would be so if the other requisites were complied with. I believe that any gentleman or lady coming here with proper letters of introduction would receive as much attention as in any other quarter.

Q. Don't you know that whenever any citizen here has taken an active part in politics as a republican, it has largely contributed to the withdrawal from him of the support of democrats, during this last year?—A. Yes, I think it has, and I think very properly.

Q. I am only inquiring for the fact.—A. Yes, I understand; but I wish to qualify that, in justice to myself, in this way: we do not regard the party calling themselves here "republicans," as republicans at all; we regard them as extreme radicals, and it is not as connected with the republican party that they have grown into disfavor, but as connected with what we regard as a band of plunderers who are ruining the State.

Q. Don't you know that if a merchant has taken any active part in politics during this last year, as a republican, it has lost him a large part of his patronage from democrats?—A. No, I did not know that there were any democrats who proposed to take part in it. I have not heard of any at all.

Q. Do you mean to say that northern people who come here, and are known as such, and choose to speak their sentiments publicly as such, receive the same social recognition that they would if they were democrats?—A. I think they would, if disconnected with any political canvass.

Q. Did they during this last year.—A. I do not know of any coming here at all.

Q. Well, those who were here?—A. No; they were regarded as all being connected with this great ring.

Q. They did not receive the social recognition, then, that democrats would receive?—A. They receive exactly the same recognition that democrats would receive if they had placed themselves in the same position with these people.

Q. But did they receive the same social recognition and attention that democrats would receive?—A. Do you mean the republicans who were in the State here?

Q. Yes; the republicans who were in the State and took any considerable part in politics as republicans?—A. No; the lines were drawn very sharply here, and, as I said to you just now, we regarded all those men as engaged in a gigantic conspiracy against the State.

Q. They did not receive the same social recognition as democrats did?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not that also extend to the families of men who were known to be republicans?—A. That I know nothing about. My own acquaintance with those who were here was very limited.

Q. Has not the effect been to draw over to the support of the democratic party a considerable number of men who were heretofore republicans?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Was not a speech made in this city since this committee has been here, in front of this house where we are now taking testimony, in which Governor Chamberlain was denounced as a "Massachusetts carpet-bagger"?—A. I heard that speeches were made here that day, but I did not hear any of them. I went immediately back to the room, and was not present at those speeches.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You may now give your reasons for saying that the black people at the present time are not specially timid?—A. At the organization of the militia no white company was received in it. I know that fact because white men asked me whether they should join the militia—

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to that.

Q. Well you know the fact, as a public fact, that the militia was black?—A. They were black, and received State arms and ammunition before the contest, as that report which I have put in will show. They had been organized through the State, and armed and had ammunition furnished to them, when the white people were not organized, and were without arms, and were to a certain extent defenceless. That gave a great deal of boldness to the colored people throughout the State, undoubtedly.

Q. You may state the reasons you were about giving for issuing your card which you spoke of.—A. The result of the election was announced. I realized at once that if there was anything like proscription, (using the word in the accepted meaning,) it would throw, of course, an immense number of colored people out of employment at the beginning of winter; they would naturally enough resort to stealing; that would bring about acts of violence, and they would spread all over the State. Then, beyond that, I knew that the material and industrial interests of the State would suffer, and still higher than all that, were the pledges that I had given through the canvass that we would endeavor to bring about a union of the races here, in peace and harmony; and I thought it would be a most advisable step to take, to show that we were not disposed now to look back after the election, but to go forward and redeem the pledges we had made.

Q. That is, it was a card issued in redemption of what you considered as a pledge you had made as a gentleman while you were a candidate?—A. Yes, sir; I took the same ground in an address to a very large meeting, when I advised the people to have no proscription, and said that I regarded myself as having been elected by the colored people; that I had received not less than 17,000 votes from them. I felt I was the governor of the colored people as much as the white people, and that their rights would be protected as fully as the others.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. This social ostracism to which reference has been made, does it grow out of a difference of political opinion or out of the supposed or real connection of these parties with the frauds that have been carried on in this State?—A. It is solely from the latter, I am satisfied. It would not come about from political differences of opinion. I do not think the officers of the Army have ever felt it at all nor any gentlemen who have come here properly introduced. If a gentleman comes with letters to people here, nobody thinks of inquiring what his politics are. That feeling grew out of this, that these men came here, and, as we felt, allied themselves with and took control of the black race in order to put themselves in office and plunder the State. It was their personal character that made them obnoxious, and not their political opinions.

Q. This class of persons are men who either came here either under appointments from the Federal Government or who, by the manipulation of the colored people, sought office in the State?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Soon after Governor Chamberlain entered upon the duties of his first term, did not his administration receive the cordial indorsement, very generally, of the democrats of this State?—A. It did, to a very large extent.

Q. How long did that general approval continue?—A. I think it continued until they found that he was—

Q. Just state the time.—A. I don't remember the time.

Q. Didn't it continue up to near the time of your nomination?—A. No; there was a growing discontent before that, because we thought he had not carried out his pledges of reform, and, in justice to myself, I would say that I never concurred in that sentiment to which you refer. I have never had but one opinion of him since he has been in the State. I would like to say a word or two in reference to the political asperity that you seem to think prevails here. Before any action was taken here as to the nominations at all, while I was in Mississippi, some of my democratic friends wrote to me to inquire as to the policy to be pursued in this State, and I told them that while I had no faith in Governor Chamberlain, if he would reform the State I was perfectly willing they should make him governor, or send him to the United States Senate, or give him anything he wanted, if he would give them good government in the State.

Q. Even as late as the early part of the present year was not the idea seriously entertained of making no nomination against him and adopting him as the democratic candidate?—A. Yes; it was entertained even after his nomination by the republicans. He entertained it himself—whether he should withdraw and be sent to the Senate by us.

Q. Up to that time he was having the confidence, to a large extent, of the leading democrats of the State?—A. No; I do not think he had their confidence.

Q. To a large extent?—A. No; I do not think so. They believed that through his agency we could perhaps get a better government, and they were willing to take him to get that. It was paying a very high price for it, but we were willing to do it.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. That is, you were willing to make any arrangement with Chamberlain, if by doing it you could get a good government in South Carolina?—A. That is precisely the ground we took.

Q. This extract is from the Charleston News and Courier of September 20?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott put in evidence the following extract:

"THE RECORD OF RADICALISM—GOVERNOR CHAMBERLAIN ON THE STAND.

"No man in South Carolina knows better than Governor D. H. Chamberlain the iniquitous character of the party of which, as the candidate for governor, he has become the head and representative. For eight years or more he has been connected; in one way or another, with the bastard republicanism of South Carolina. What to others is a sealed book, is to him easy of perusal. The ins and outs of the party, its rottenness and rascality, are as familiar to him as the æsthetic triumphs of Greece, or the pride and pomp of Rome. As he wrote to Senator Morton, he is "a republican of as many years' standing as he has seen years of discretion." It is his boast that he has never had any affiliation or sympathy with any other party than the republican party. The public are, therefore, warranted in believing that, when he condemns and denounces that party, generally or in particular, he does it with reluctance, touching the festering sores with gentle hand, and telling always less than the whole shameful truth. Governor Chamberlain, against his own party, is an unimpeachable witness, and as such we put him on the stand. At present we will not touch upon his sayings or doings before he was elected governor. To begin with, we lay before the country passages taken from his addresses, letters, and speeches since his installation. Upon the evidence there given of the unwillingness and inability of the republican party to reform itself, the followers of Hampton, whether democrats or republicans, can safely rest their case. The choice extracts for to-day's reading are as follows:

"The contingent fund steal: 'During the past six years there has been appropriated and paid for contingent funds the astounding sum of $376,832.74. I venture the opinion that the State would have received equal benefit from one-fifth of that sum, if expended with economy upon proper objects.' (Inaugural Address, 1874.)

"Legislative plunder:" 'Since 1868 six regular and two special sessions of the general assembly have been held. The total cost of those sessions has been $2,147,440.97. The average cost of each regular session has been $320,405.16. The lowest cost of any regular session was that of the regular session of 1868-'69, amounting to $169,005.79, and the highest cost was that of the regular session of 1871-'72, amounting to about $617,234.10. Besides these amounts now specified, there are outstanding of bills payable, issued on account of legislative expenses during the same period, $192,275.15. These figures render comment superfluous.' (Inaugural Address, 1874.)

"Long sessions:" 'I find the average length of the regular sessions (of the general assembly) since 1868 has been 105 days. * * * I cannot see at present any reason of a public nature which can require a session of more than 30 days.' (Inaugural address, 1874.)

"Incidental grabs:" 'The average expenditure at each regular session, since 1868, for attachés and contingent or incidental expenses has been about $253,424.65. If these figures do not teach their own lesson, then argument would be idle. Let it be borne in mind also that the amounts now stated represent only the actual payments made. There remains a vast amount of unpaid claims in the form of legislative pay expenses, estimated at not less than $500,000.' (Inaugural address, 1874.)

"The printing ring:" 'The system (of public printing) which has prevailed for the past three years is utterly incapable of defense or excuse. The looseness of the system in theory is only equaled by its extravagance in practice. * * * The cost of the permanent and current printing from 1868 to the present time was $843,073.59. The cost of advertising the statutes—that is, of printing them in the newspapers—for the same period was $261,496.32, making a total cost to the State of $1,104,569.91. During the past three years the cost to the State of current and permanent printing was $743,933.20, and the cost of printing the laws in newspapers for the same period was $174,696.66, making a total cost to the State of $918,629.86.' (Inaugural address, 1874.)

"Not paying as you go:" 'The existing deficiencies, running back to 1868, are simply enormous. The deficiencies for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1874, were $472,619.54. The deficiencies for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1873, were $540,328.' (Inaugural address, 1874.)

"Trial justices:" 'Of the practical results of the trial-justice system, as heretofore administered, I hear but one opinion, namely, that it is costly, inefficient, and oppressive.' (Inaugural address, 1874.)

"Suffering citizens:" 'No injury can be so great as that which we now witness in our citizens who have worked for the State, or lent their money on credit, and are now waiting and suffering because the State made appropriations when she had no funds with which to redeem her promises.' (Letter to senate committee, February 15, 1875.)

"County rascality:" 'I am confident that there is not one county in this State in which money enough has not been collected by taxation to pay every dollar of legitimate expense in maintaining the government of the county.' (Veto of Edgefield resolution, February 24, 1875.)

"The floating debt:" 'I was persuaded that the State had the right, and that her condition demanded that she should postpone settlement until she could recover from the effects of a long course of extravagance and profligacy in the expenditure of public funds and the contracting of public obligations.' (Veto of bonanza bill, March 17, 1875.)

"The cover of vast frauds:" 'That certificates for legislative expenses have been made the cover for vast frauds no man will dispute. They are universally regarded as the last culminating evidence of a prevailing system of corruption which has disgraced our State and offended the nation.' (Veto of bonanza bill, March 17, 1875.)

"Broken pledges:" 'The party has ever been going into campaigns promising retrenchment and reform, and never performing it.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"Disappointed plunderers:" 'The plunderers in the last legislature were greatly disappointed. For the first time in their official lives they had to go home without having made anything but their salaries and a little minor picking.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"The sale of votes:" 'A very large number of the members of the South Carolina legislature come to the capital for the purpose of selling their votes and making all they can out of the office.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"Reform absolutely necessary:" 'Reform, if it was not of itself right, has become absolutely necessary, or the State will sink. Matters cannot run for six years to come as they have for the past six years. * * * From the contingent funds alone in the past six years there has been taken the astonishing sum of $376,832.74. One-fifth of that sum would have been ample. The rest ought to be put down to stealage.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"Stealing, pure and simple:" 'The last six sessions, up to the time I was inaugurated, cost the State, under the head of legislative expenses, the enormous sum of $2,147,430.97.

These figures, I may say, are unparalleled in the history of American legislation. It is stealing, pure and simple.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"Enormous and disgraceful figures: 'The average expense of the attachés and contingencies of the South Carolina legislature per session has been $253,421.65; and these enormous and disgraceful figures represent only the actual payments made.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"The biggest steal of all: 'The cost of printing and advertising for six years was $1,104,569.91. * * * And what has the State to show for it? Absolutely nothing. For three years—1871, 1872, and 1873—printing and advertising cost the State * * * about one thousand dollars a day; and this in a State the entire taxable wealth of which is less than many single counties in the North.' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"A farce and a fraud: 'The duties of a trial-justice here are precisely the same as the duties of justice of the peace in other States; yet previous governors had appointed and commissioned over two hundred men to the important duties of this office who could not write or read a word of the English language. It was a farce and a fraud; for how can men thus ignorant intelligently try causes, civil and criminal, brought before them?' (Interview, May 24, 1875.)

"Candid confession: 'No man will dispute that our State needs reform in nearly every department of the public service.' (Speech in Charleston, November 4, 1875.)

"Public moneys wasted: 'Our public moneys are largely wasted, and that is worse even than the burden of taxation.' (Speech in Charleston, November 4, 1873.)

"A glaring evil: 'Every person who looks to the State for salary or pay is now, and has been for years past, obliged to accept such part only of what is due him as may be realized from taxes which are due him, with a certainty that he will at best receive only a part. In the case of public institutions the evils are still greater.' (Veto of supply bill, November 23, 1875.)

"A travesty: 'What a travesty it is to see men filling the office of school commissioner, to pass upon the qualifications of school-teachers, when they can barely write their own names.' (Speech February 2, 1876.)

"Black Thursday: 'The conspiracy (for the election of Moses and Whipper) appears to have been carefully concocted. The color-line, the party-line, and the line of antagonism, to my astonishment, all were sharply drawn. * * * I look upon their election as a horrible disaster. * * * This calamity is infinitely greater, in my judgment, than any which has yet fallen upon this State, or, I might add, upon any part of the South.' (Interview, December 19, 1875.)

"Civilization in peril: 'The civilization of the Puritan and the cavalier, of the Roundhead and the Huguenot, is in peril. Courage, determination, union, victory, must be our watchwords. The grim Puritans never quailed under threat or blow. Let their sons now imitate their example.' (Telegram to New England Society of Charleston, December 22, 1875.)

"A thrill of horror: 'Their election (i. e., of Whipper and Moses) has sent a thrill of horror throughout the State. It has split the republicans in twain.' (Letter to Senator Morton, June 13, 1876.)

"The doom of radicalism: 'No party can rule this State that supports Whipper and Moses. * * * There is but one way to save the republican party in South Carolina, and that way is to unload Moses and Whipper, and all who go with them. * * * Neither the administration at Washington, with all its appliances, civil and military, nor all the denunciations of the world heaped upon me, can save the republican party here from overwhelming defeat during this year, unless we can persuade the people of this State that such things as these judicial elections will be undone, and never by possibility be repeated.' (Letter to Senator Morton, June 13, 1876.)

'In Mr. Chamberlain's own words the people read the horrible tale of the extravagance, fraud, and profligacy which have disgraced our State and offended the nation.' Out of the mouths of its chosen chieftain is the party judged. When Governor Chamberlain spoke and wrote the burning phrases that now come back to plague him, he was fighting with might and main the rogular crew who now, for the second time, surround and support him. They are the men who 'go with Moses and Whipper.' They are the conspirators who planned and carried out the horrible work of Black Thursday. They are the band who go to Columbia to sell their votes, and who revel in legislative plunder. The party cannot 'unload them,' for they are 'the party,' now that Mr. Chamberlain consents to lead them. And upon that party we invoke the doom that Governor Chamberlain foresaw, 'the overwhelming defeat during this year,' that he predicted.

'Governor Chamberlain and his associates will go upon 'the stump,' and there the democratic canvassers can meet them. There they can ring the changes upon the citations we have made from the letters and speeches and messages of the chief candidate, and so hoist the engineer with his own petard. That will do the business.'

Q. Did you know of any condition of this State in August, September, and previous to the election, which required the presence of United States troops to keep the peace?

—A. No, sir; there was none.

Q. State whether, as far you know, the laws, administered by the courts, could have been executed by State authority with ease and certainty at that time. As far as you know, was the State of South Carolina in a condition of peace and quietness, and the laws generally obeyed?—A. As far as I know, perfectly so.

Q. As far as you know personally, and as far as you could obtain information from the magistrates who administered the laws and from other sources, was that the fact?—A. It was, sir.

Q. And were you in a position at the head of the State ticket, where, by inquiry from others, you had the means of knowing the condition of the people of South Carolina as to peace, quietness, and obedience of the laws?—A. I think I was as fully apprised of it as any one in the State could be. We thought there was no justification for calling for troops, and we took a higher ground than that; that they were called for in violation of the statute, that the legislature should have made the call, and they could have been summoned at any moment to make the call.

Q. You have stated that you were in every county in the State, and twice in most of them. From that personal knowledge and the other means that you had of knowing, was there any time when, at the call of the chief executive, a sufficient force could not have been obtained to execute any law or mandate of the court?—A. There was, I think, no such occasion. The committee offered to Governor Chamberlain to assist him, and I, in public speeches, pledged myself to go anywhere where there was a riot, and stop it in less than twenty-four hours.

COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA,
December 26, 1876.

ALEXANDER C. HASKELL SWORN and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am thirty-seven years of age; I reside in Richland County, four miles from Columbia.

Q. You are a native of South Carolina?—A. I am a native of the county of Abbeville, in this State.

Q. You held during the last election some position in reference to one of the parties of the State; what was it?—A. I have been since the month of May a member of the State democratic executive committee; since the 16th of August I have been the chairman of that committee, and am at this time.

Q. As chairman of the democratic executive committee have you had occasion to know the conduct of the campaign in every part of the State?—A. I have known it, sir, so far as I could rely upon the reports which I received and from my personal knowledge at several points. I received reports constantly from all portions of the State, and was in direct communication with the canvassers. They were generally directed in their movements by myself; directed where to go and what meetings to address, and I gave the general directions under which the meetings should be conducted.

Q. State the general directions given in reference to the conduct of the campaign as to peace and quietness, intimidation and proscription.—A. To be brief, sir, our people were urged to attend all of our meetings, and to apply themselves entirely to the canvass during the months preceding the election. They were exhorted to do so, upon the ground that the safety and prosperity of the State was absolutely dependent upon the restoration of honest government. Our determination was to urge, by all means that were right, the alliance and harmony of the two races. Our purpose was to get access to the ears of the colored race. We had been for years excluded from them by their so-called republican leaders. I use the expression "so-called," because it was the expression generally used throughout our campaign. We drew that distinction, as was published on more than one occasion by resolutions prepared by myself, between the office-holders in this State who used the name of the republican party, and the republican people of the North, for whom we had respect and a very different feeling. We attributed our main political difficulties here to the fact that we were prevented from having a hearing among the colored race. They were tied within the bonds of the Union Leagues, and, to get at them, we invited them cordially and earnestly to our democratic meetings. That was the first step. Then we asked and urged our people to go to their meetings. Whenever a large republican meeting was called we directed that they should go to that meeting. This direction and request was generally obeyed, so far as my knowledge goes, (it was strictly obeyed under my own eye here,) that they should go not in armed clubs or in any way as military bodies, if they had any such, but go there as citizens, in the first place to listen to the so-called republican speakers, (a small class of men in this State, who were holding office and conducting the government,) to interrogate them whenever they were able to do so without disorder, and to urge on each meeting that our side should be allowed a hearing; and if the hearing was refused, not to resort to force to obtain it, but to listen. We regarded it as a public right that they should attend public meetings held in the open air, and it was done. I conducted a number of those attendances myself in this county, some of which were denounced most bitterly by the republican papers at the time. By the Union Herald here, the party organ, they were called the movements of "Haskell and his hostiles."

Q. Was there any violence, interference, or interruption of the republican meetings if they refused you permission to divide the time?—A. None at all, sir. The first meeting that I attended was at Hopkins Station; the second at Gadsden; the third, if I remember it, was at Macedonia Church; the fourth at a point six miles from Columbia, I think, on Green Creek.

Q. On any of those occasions was there any interruption or breaking up of the republican meetings, or any claiming to be heard whether the republicans would consent or not?—A. There was no interruption caused at any meeting except at the first meeting at Hopkins; a little disturbance arose amongst the republicans; some disorderly young black men attacked one of their own number, an old trial-justice, whose name escapes me at this moment; he is trial-justice at Hopkins. He was chairman of the committee that invited me to speak, and these young republicans resented it, and used him pretty roughly for a while, but order was restored by Minor, one of their colored leaders from Columbia, and Beverly Nash. They spoke, and succeeded after a while in restoring order. Before it was restored Minor and Nash came to me and said: "We will have order presently; just wait a little while, and we will be glad to hear you speak."

Q. What I want to get at is whether, after the canvass commenced, the democratic party forced the other side to hear them at their meetings whether they were willing to hear them or not?—A. I know of no instance where it was done; it was directly contrary to our advice, policy, and instructions that it should be done.

Q. In reference to peace and quietness and proper treatment of the colored race, what were the instructions and policy of the canvass on your part?—A. The whole policy of the canvass was, as I have said, to remove the antagonism which political tricksters had worked up between the two races. We begged them to come back to us, and be our friends in political matters as they were in everything else, and to join with us to restore honest government to the State. We pledged ourselves that where even colored men of ordinary plain education and intelligence presented themselves, joining hands with us, to the best of our ability, they should be elected to office; we invited them, urged on them by persuasion everywhere, to join us. We used great efforts; we wished to win their hearts back, and we appealed to them in every way.

Q. Do you know whether there were black democratic clubs in different parts of the State?—A. I know there were several in the county of Richland, and a large number were reported to me in my official capacity as existing in different portions of the State.

Q. At the time troops were sent for, had you the means, from your own knowledge and from your position, being in constant intercourse by letter and personally with different parts of the State, of knowing the condition of the State as to peace and quietness?—A. I had every means that correspondence, constant communication, and personal reports could give us to the condition of the whole State.

Q. Was there anything in the condition of the State that prevented the full and perfect execution of the laws?—A. I say, sir, emphatically, that there was not; and the reason why I say it is that, to my own knowledge, peace and quiet prevailed all over the State at that time; I refer to the 7th of October, when Governor Chamberlain issued a proclamation declaring that there was violence and insurrection in the State. To my personal knowledge, I say at that time there was no violence, disorder, or insurrection in the State, and there had not been for many months—for one, two, or three years preceding—any such condition of affairs in the State as was alleged in his proclamation. At that time everything was in perfect quiet and peace. The campaign was being conducted with great earnestness and vigor throughout the State, but it was more devoid of violence and disorder than any campaign that I have ever seen; and I would stake this State then against any State in the Union for peace and kindly feeling. The reason I allege that it was so all over the State is this: I was so astounded at that proclamation, that I at once communicated personally, by letter and by telegraph, with every judge who was then in the State of South Carolina, and I have copies of their letters which I will swear are correct, and which I would ask leave to present to the committee.

Q. You did communicate with the judges and you got answers from them, and upon the information derived from them, and from all other sources, you make your statement here?—A. I aver that the State was then in a condition of entire peace and order.

Q. Do you recollect the time of the Ellenton riots?—A. I remember it very well.

Q. Are you willing to state the substance of any interview that you had with any gentleman upon that subject?—A. I can testify to interviews that I had on two occasions with Mr. Chamberlain. I testified the substance of it yesterday before the Senate committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That I object to.

Mr. ABBOTT. We propose to put in this testimony as bearing upon the condition of the State at the time when the military were called for.

The objection was overruled.

A. I communicated with Mr. Chamberlain as governor. In this as in other States the governor is the commander-in-chief of the State, and is responsible for the preservation of order. I received a dispatch from the city of Charleston, I think about the 12th of September, which made me call upon the governor, and which I exhibited to him; His answer was that he was aware of great disorders, riots, and turbulence on the Combahee and the Ashepoo, (those are the rice-lands in the counties of Colleton and Beaufort, near the border-line,) and in answer to the information which he gave me, and which I had received from others, I merely asked leave to say to him that, so far as the support of the white citizens was concerned in restoring order to that community, I could answer for that that they were at his command, and with them a number of the colored people. In the conversation he admitted the facts that a riot was going on there among the colored people; there was great disorder, great agitation amongst them; they were beating and wounding men, and I gave him information showing that at one point the circumstances were not so extreme as I had a few hours before understood they were, namely, that the deputy sheriff and a posse were barricaded in a store and could not escape. There was an appeal for aid in connection with that account, but I received another communication which led me to believe that they had made their escape from the colored rioters, and I submitted that to the governor also. He expressed his appreciation of the offer I made, and said that he hoped the chief constable, who was in Charleston and had been ordered to the spot, would be able to restore order, with others he had deputed to establish law and order amongst the colored people of that country, and he said that their turbulence was unjustifiable upon any ground whatsoever. Subsequently, on the 18th of the same month, September, the night after a notorious riot in Charleston where one white man was killed and others wounded, there were rumors of disturbances or riots at Ellenton. From information that I had received, I was led again to call on the governor, to renew to him the assurance that the white people of the State were entirely submissive to law and order, and would aid him in suppressing the large body of colored men who had risen against the law in that section. His answer was, that the military had reached the point that day, and that everything was quiet; that already a number of white men, a posse, had met them, that they had dispersed, and that order and quiet were restored, and that there was no need for my assistance. He said, in addition, that he was going to the North that night, because he supposed there was no need for him to remain any longer; that he would see to it that those people (referring to the colored people) should be made to learn obedience to the law and to keep the peace; that that was his duty as governor, and that he was afraid that his previous leniency as to matters on the Combahee had encouraged them to proceed in this manner. At the same interview I conveyed to him a message from General Hampton, urging him and his canvassers to meet him in debate at the democratic meetings throughout the State. I gave him the personal assurance that, whatever might have been the joke between himself, General Butler, and General Gary at Edgefield, (that was entirely a personal matter, if they had any difficulty there,) when he went to meet us in our canvass he should have every consideration that he could desire; that he would be invited to the stand; and should occupy it with General Hampton, and should meet him in open debate. I think we alluded then to the Edgefield matter—if it was not that day it was another, and there was a little laugh over that; he alluded to it afterward rather differently in a letter that he wrote. He said, on this occasion, that he could not answer positively as to whether he would accept the invitation; that he had not laid out the whole plan of the campaign yet. I then branched another subject, which had been brought to his attention once before by myself in conversation. I asked him whether he had determined to leave his name upon the ticket where it then stood, associated with the men who, in all his political utterances during his administration, he had charged with being the causes of great misfortunes to the State; I said that the inconsistency was so great that I deemed it hardly possible for him to adopt that line; that I understood that he was in doubt, and that he found it very hard to take up the role; that if he wished to retire, or to change the style of the campaign, our committee would receive with great deference and respect any communication he might make for the good of the State at large. To that he made the same response as to the other suggestion—one general response; that he had not made up his mind about all these things; that he was going to the North that night, and would be absent for eight days, and that his visit to the North was on private matters exclusively, and he would answer on his return. On his return he did not answer. Where he went at the North I do not know. He was absent there eight or nine days. Receiving no response, I wrote him a letter, which I think bears date the 25th of September, and which renewed the invitation to him to meet us in joint debate at our democratic meetings, with the same assurance that we gave the invitation in earnest, and that while we would discuss the political course of himself and his associates, personally he should receive every courtesy. If that was not all stated in the letter, it had been said in my previous conversation. To that letter he made a reply several days subsequently.

Q. Have you that reply?—A. I have not a copy of it now, but I can procure it.

Q. Did he accept it?—A. He left that to the republican executive committee, and went on to reply to the balance of my letter. I had correspondence with the republican executive committee for some time. I went to see them in person, and had also written correspondence with them which I shall be glad to exhibit if the committee desire. The upshot of it was that they declined to accept—refused to meet us. There is in that correspondence one letter, not written by the chairman, Mr. Elliott, but written by Mr. Cordozo in Elliott's absence. I called the attention of Mr. Elliott to grave errors in that letter, for which he expressed his regret, and promised to rectify them in writing, but he has not done so.

Q. How widely did you distribute the extracts from Governor Hampton's letters and speeches which have been put in here?—A. We distributed them as much as practicable throughout this State, and we sent them also to the Northern States.

Q. Were they all distributed throughout this State?—A. Yes, sir; in every county and every corner of the State.

Q. What action was taken by your committee in the conduct of the campaign in reference to having black people discharged if they refused to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I don't think any action was adopted during the campaign with regard to the body of the laborers, because most of them had contracts enduring for the year. There were a few cases, particularly in the cities, of day-laborers, but as a general rule through the State laborers are hired by the year—so large a proportion that it really comprehends the body of them. Those contracts expire the first of January.

Q. Did your committee take any action in reference to that?—A. Yes, sir; but the action of the committee was subsequent to the election.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Is it in writing?—A. It is, and I can furnish you a copy of it. It was published through the State, in the newspapers.

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. Was that joined in by General Hampton?—A. It was concurred in by General Hampton. It was shown to him in writing, and he gave it his hearty approval, and we so stated in the address.

Q. Is there any other fact that you wish to state bearing upon the management of the canvass?—A. As to proscription, I would add this: there were resolutions adopted, to my knowledge, in one or two places in which the statement was made that maladministration had ruined the State, the land-holders, and the laborers; that the land-owners were so reduced in their means that they warned their laborers, gave them advice (warning in that sense) that if the dishonest administration prevailed further in this State, if the Chamberlain ticket should be elected, our future ruin would be so absolutely certain that they would not have the means to employ labor; that they could not venture to continue with agriculture as it had been previously carried on; that their utmost exertion would be made to plant small grains in the fall, abandoning all hopes of making money by cotton, or other means, so that they could not employ laborers; and they appealed to them to vote for the honest ticket for the benefit of all. That was the substance of what has been termed proscription.

Q. If there is any other fact connected with the conduct of the election that occurs to you as pertinent for the purpose of showing that the election was carried on in a peaceable and quiet way, you may give it.—A. I can answer the committee upon general information, reports that I received; and I did ask for truthful and accurate reports, whether for or against us, on all occasions. I received no reports and have no knowledge of any violence perpetrated by the democrats at any precinct in the State of South Carolina on the 7th day of November, or for days, or weeks, or months previous, growing out of any political question whatever, and there were fewer growing out of any personal causes than I have ever heard of before in any election. It was the most peaceful election, I believe, conducted in the United States. I don't believe there was less fighting anywhere. I wish to state further in connection with that, that the enthusiasm in our favor displayed amongst the colored people was daily increasing. Their courage was developing itself and they were joining us in large numbers and did join us in large numbers, and remained true to us to the end, but their rapid accession to our ranks was arrested to a vast extent by the advent of the military force in this State. That is true to my personal knowledge and on information I derived from all portions of the State. When the military force was introduced in the State the effect was to paralyze our civil law. All the confidence which we had been able to impart to the colored people, that we could protect them from the violence of their leagues, was snatched away from us by that; the civil law had lost its power. In corroboration of that view I ask leave to state the fact that I frequently appealed to General Ruger. I gave him the same reason, and did it under protest. I asked him to mark the point; I requested leave to file it in writing in his office; he said he would remember it. I said, "Your coming to the State has paralyzed our civil law; we are obliged now to appeal to you for military protection for the colored people who wish to vote with us, and therefore I appeal to you to send troops to Beaufort, to send troops to Charleston, and to send troops to Georgetown;" and I submitted to him appeals in writing from the white people in those vicinities for troops for their own protection and for the protection of the colored people at the ballot-box. He declined, in almost every instance, to respond. He said that his mission was to prevent violence, and he would see to it when it arose. Sometimes he concurred, but without my knowledge. I ascertained that in one or two instances he had sent small bodies of troops the day before the election; for instance, out here to the neighborhood of Florence and Darlington and that region. The result shows the correctness of my view; for you will mark that in many instances where their largest vote was given by the colored people for the democratic side, troops were stationed. Edgefield was one of the most remarkable instances of that. You may say that Edgefield was filled with troops—four strong companies; it was occupied by troops, and had been for a long time, and in that county one of the largest negro votes for the democratic ticket was given. I appealed to him personally to send troops, for the protection of our colored voters, to Gadsden, Hopkins, Acton, and Trenholms, in this county. He refused to do it. Upon the report of violence upon colored democrats at Trenholms, I applied to General Ruger—

(Mr. Lawrence objected to the witness being permitted to make statements of reports made to him.)

The WITNESS. I told General Ruger this, and upon that he sent troops to Trenholms. Those were the only troops that he moved at my request in this county, and that was on the afternoon of the day of the election; too late to do any good. The remaining point of evidence which I would ask leave to submit is with regard to the occupation of the State-house by United States troops.

(Mr. Lawrence objected to any testimony upon that subject.)

The witness submitted the following as part of his testimony:

"[Circular.]

"ROOMS OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
"DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
"Columbia, August 23, 1876.

"The executive committee, in view of the request made of the republican party, at recent meetings, for a division of time in discussing the questions at issue between the parties, announce that we deem it due to the voters to have a full, fair, and free discussion on all such occasions, and express our willingness and readiness to extend the same right to republican speakers whenever they desire a respectful hearing at our meetings; and, to this end, we urge the democratic party to observe every decorum and propriety in attending the meetings of the opposite party.

"The object of the democratic party is peaceful and untrammelled discussion, that the people may become enlightened on the issues of the day.

"A. C. HASKELL,
"Chairman."

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Were general instructions given by you, as chairman of the executive committee to the different chairmen on behalf of the democrats throughout the State?—A. They were.

Q. How early did that begin?—A. I do not remember the date of the first meeting held, but it was soon after the nomination, which occurred on the 16th of August. Perhaps soon after the publication of that circular, or just before it, (this bears date August 23,) the chairmen of the committees of the different counties were summoned and assembled at my office, the headquarters of the executive committee of the State, and in addition to publications like this, verbal instructions were given, and they were very carefully conveyed to every chairman. The general plan of the campaign was impressed upon them, at the base of which was, that there was to be no force, no demonstration of military force, or physical force, other than consisted in mere assemblages of numbers, and that there was to be no actual violence whatsoever in the State; that the campaign was to be conducted on the clearest and broadest principles of equal rights to all men, and full consideration to the colored race, and that we were to win them by argument and persuasion; that we wanted to get to their ears, and to their hearts through their ears. Then, about ten days before the election, another meeting of the chairmen was called, and every chairman was asked particularly to state the condition of his county. The chairmen were called up in the order of the counties—Abbeville, Aiken, Anderson, &c. The result of our investigation was that we would carry the State undoubtedly by a clear majority. That was one point which we arrived at by the figures ten days before the election.

But the principal object of this meeting was to absolutely impress, (it was done so much that a gentleman, speaking of it afterward, spoke of it as an order that had to be obeyed rigidly,) to impress upon every chairman that he was to go back to his county with this understanding, that not only should they not use force at the election, but there must be no demonstration of force; there must be nothing to intimidate, awe, frighten, or otherwise deter the colored people from going to the polls. For illustration, that there must be no blazing of anvils—that was a joke of the campaign, that they might imitate the guns in that way as it had been done in Mississippi—that there must be none of that the night before the election; no riding on the roads; no shooting off rifles in the dark, nor anything to intimidate these people; and the instructions were so given that I am sure they were obeyed.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Did you go out of this county of Richland during the canvass?—A. Only on one occasion, to a mass-meeting at Sumter.

Q. You have no personal knowledge, then, of how your instructions were followed, excepting in this county and at one other meeting?—A. Only by official reports.

Q. Then, when you say you are sure that the instructions were followed, you say so without having any personal knowledge of your own on the subject?—A. Nothing but the assurances to which I have referred.

Q. You gave those instructions because you believed there was a necessity for them, did you?—A. I did believe there was a necessity for giving the instructions, or I would not have been so foolish as to give them. The necessity arose from the charges made against us, and our desire to deprive our enemies of any ground on which to rest them.

Q. You would not have given the instruction unless you believed there was a necessity for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not mean that you gave those instructions without thinking you had reason to apprehend that there was a necessity for them?—A. We gave those instructions as a safeguard against the false charges which were being made against us.

Q. Do you mean to say that it was necessary to give instructions when there was no necessity for the instructions?—A. No, sir; I don't mean to say that.

Q. Then you gave the instructions because you believed there was a necessity for it?—A. Yes, sir; and I have explained what the necessity was. It arose from the action of our opponents, and not of our own people.

Q. Is the Charleston News and Courier one of the leading democratic papers in the State?—A. It is one of the leading papers in the State, and has been since the nomination of General Hampton a very earnest advocate of the democratic party. Before that it was an advocate of Mr. Chamberlain.

Q. It has a large circulation in the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is a copy of it, is it?—A. I have no doubt it is.

Mr. Lawrence put in evidence the following extract from the Charleston News and Courier of October 4, 1876 :

“THE PREFERENCE POLICY.

“Straight out resolutions of the Summerville Democracy.”

“ [Correspondence of the News and Courier.] ”

“SUMMERVILLE, S. C., October 2.

“At a meeting of the Dorchester Democratic Club, held at Town Hall on Saturday the 30th ultimo, Maj. George Tupper presiding, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted :

“By Hon. J. I. Middleton :

“Resolved, That the members of the club bind themselves in honor to purchase from or deal in future with no one whomsoever in this place who intends to or shall vote against the candidates nominated by the democratic convention to fill the Federal, State, and county offices in the next election, except in cases where this cannot be done in consequence of prior contracts.

“Resolved, That this agreement among ourselves is meant to extend to all purchases of goods, wares, merchandise, and provisions whatever, and all future contracts for service or employment, either out-door or menial.

“Resolved, That this engagement shall be deemed to be of force until our country is released from the so-called republican domination that threatens to overwhelm all the bulwarks of our social and political life.

“By Dr. Benjamin Rhett :

“Resolved, That the secretary do issue, upon application, to the colored members of this democratic club, certificates of membership, (countersigned by the president,) in order that they be recognized and receive the support and patronage of employers.

“By Capt. John C. Minott :

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the chair to make such arrangements as may be necessary to secure order and obtain speakers at the meeting to be held at Slau's Bridge, on Thursday next, and confer with a like committee to be appointed by the republican party for the purposes on that occasion.

"LOUIS DE TREVILLE,
"Secretary."

Q. At the beginning of the campaign you directed your people to attend the republican meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By your people you mean the democrats?—A. Yes; democrats, white and black, provided the meetings were in the open air or in open buildings.

Q. Was it not one of your objects in directing that to ask for a division of time?—A. Yes; one of our objects was to have a division of time, that we might be heard.

Q. And the leaders or managers for the democratic party in the several counties were instructed accordingly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any violence inflicted by any republican upon any democrat during any of the political meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I know of the violence of threats, and of the exhibition of weapons, at Hopkins, in the county of Richland. That was in August; exactly what date I am not able to give.

Q. That was at a democratic meeting?—A. No, sir; at a republican meeting.

Q. I intended to ask if you know of any violence inflicted by any republican upon any democrat at a democratic meeting?—A. I heard the language and saw the rush of the crowd on the 4th of November, in the city of Columbia, at a very large democratic procession going along this very street. The balcony was occupied by Army officers, and the streets were filled. As we marched up the street I heard the invective and abusive language from the colored people in the street hurled at General Hampton, myself, and others, but most particularly at a number of colored democrats who were within my hearing and sight at the time; and at one time there was a rush on them, and the colored republicans on the street threw bricks at the colored democrats that were in our procession.

Q. Did you see that?—A. I did not see the bricks; I saw the rush.

Q. You do not know of your own knowledge that any bricks were thrown?—A. Only from the reports.

Q. Was anybody struck?—A. I heard that one was hurt; I did not see the blood.

Q. Is that the only violence you saw during this campaign by any republican?—A. I saw violence at another meeting, where pistols were drawn by republicans, colored men, and they swore that they would prevent any colored democrat from speaking if it cost the last drop of blood within them. That was in Richland County, at Macedonia church, at a democratic meeting where the republicans and the democrats met.

Q. I will be obliged if you will answer my question.—A. Well, I answered you that I have been at only two democratic meetings, one in Richland County, and one at Sumter. I did not see any violence at Sumter; I did in Richland.

Q. Now, was it at a republican meeting where you attended that these threats were made by colored republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the democrats insisting upon a division of the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was any democrat proposing to speak?—A. A democrat was invited to speak, and he was speaking.

Q. Who invited him?—A. The republicans, by the vote of their whole assembly.

Q. Did he speak?—A. He spoke.

Q. Finished his speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No violence was inflicted on him?—A. He was only threatened with violence, and arms were exhibited.

Q. No violence was inflicted upon him?—A. No, sir; he was well defended.

Q. No shot was fired?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which party predominated at the meeting?—A. The republicans, very largely.

Q. How many men made threats at either meeting?—A. At Hopkins's I went with about fifty men. There were from three to four hundred republicans at that point and about fifty democrats, mostly white, and a small number of colored. They invited us to join in discussion.

Q. Did you not demand it first?—A. No, sir. We simply went there, and a committee met us in a very agreeable manner and invited us, and I consented very pleasantly. The whole thing was very pleasant until after that was done, and, as I described this morning in my direct testimony, there was a little row raised among the republicans themselves, among the young men, against an older man who had been the chairman of the committee that invited us to speak. I gave them a list of our speakers and they gave me a list of theirs. The agreement was that they were to have the opening and the reply. One of my speakers was a colored man. When he rose to speak there was an uprising of the republicans, great denunciation and abuse, and threats that he should be killed if he attempted to speak. That was not the language of their wise men, but it was the language of a part of the crowd of violent men.

Q. How many?—A. Well, thirty or forty, or fifty, perhaps.

Q. Forty or fifty who joined in threats of that sort?—A. Yes, sir; and sustained it by their cheers and cries.

Q. How many men used such language?—A. I could not give you the number—a considerable number, though. It was the outburst of the crowd. I was in the wagon on which the man was endeavoring to speak, and told them that he was one of their race, and that while I meant no violence, I should certainly feel myself individually bound to defend him.

Q. Was any democrat at that meeting assaulted or violence inflicted on him?—A. Nothing more than the threat.

Q. There was no personal violence then toward any democrat?—A. I do not think that man was struck; he was seized hold of to drag him down from the wagon, but he was not hurt.

Q. Was that all that occurred in the way of violence at that meeting?—A. Yes, sir; with the exception that we were all threatened and denounced for having attended the meeting, and one of the men called for his militia company to attend at the next meeting with rifles and ammunition, to teach these democrats that they must not come to their assemblies.

Q. That meeting was called as a republican meeting?—A. It was a republican meeting, sir; that is the reason I went to it. One of the republicans who was speaking when I went there was a white man, a judge of probate. He was at the meeting; he was applying for renomination; he was very familiar with the campaign from beginning to end. Another one, a lawyer, practicing here, a white man, was at that meeting, and made a very strong speech on the republican side. There was another, a republican merchant, who was seeking a renomination. Before the campaign ended, Judge Bond and Mr. Wigg left the party and joined us as advocates of our reform cause. They were at that meeting, and know all the circumstances. The next meeting to which I alluded was at Macedonia, where, if any violence was exhibited, it is familiar to a number of the leading republicans of this place. If there was any violence exhibited by language, or in any other way, it can be reported by Judge Hoge, who was there as a speaker. Judge Hoge, at that meeting, called upon me to see what we were going to do, and to see what was our threat, our means of intimidation, if we meant to exercise intimidation. There was a colored man from Indianapolis who wished to go into the canvass here. He had been a republican in his political views, but he had been here long enough to learn the condition of the people. He was reading law here. He was on my lists at Macedonia as one of the speakers on our side. We were invited there to join in the discussion. At first I declined, because the assembly was not arranged with the decorum that I thought was proper. The stand was surrounded by mounted republicans, and we were not allowed nearer approach than the length of this room, and under that condition of circumstances they invited me to speak. I was invited by their commanding officer, as he called himself, Henry Daniels, then sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives, a black man. I declined, and told him the reason. After discussion he withdrew one-fourth of the ring that he had around the stand, and allowed the men that were with me to go in, occupying one-fourth of the surroundings of the stand. The speaking went on very pleasantly until three or four had delivered what they had to say, and I was called to a group where Henry Daniels, the commanding officer of the republicans, who were all mounted, stood, and the threat was made that if Hutchings, the Indianapolis man, ascended the stand the last drop of blood should be shed, or he should be put off, because he was a colored man and should not speak on the democratic side.

Q. Was any violence inflicted upon him?—A. Pistols were drawn, and the command was given by one Henry Daniels, who announced that he was the commanding officer of that body, and that they were pledged to prevent it.

Q. Was any violence inflicted upon him?—A. The violence of threats by drawing pistols was committed.

Q. Now, will you answer my question?—A. Yes, sir; I say violence was committed—pistols were drawn.

Q. Was he struck or touched by any weapon, or by any man?—A. O, no; he was not struck.

Q. You call it violence, then, what you have described?—A. I mean that in the legal sense of the word, by drawing a pistol and making a threat, violence was committed; no other.

Q. Then you do not know of any instance in this county, except the case in which you say bricks were alleged to have been thrown, where any democrat was struck or any violence inflicted upon his person?—A. I don't remember seeing any. I was confined to my office, except at the meetings that I have named.

Q. And except in the single instances which you have described you were not out of this county during the campaign?—A. I only went to Sumter

Q. Then you do not know personally whether there was peace in the State or not?—
A. I know it by reports from the officials from every portion of the State.

Q. Do you know it personally?—A. To the best of my personal knowledge there was peace in the State. I know of no violation of the peace in the State.

Q. Now will you answer my question? Do you personally know whether there was peace in the State or not?—A. I do personally know that so far as my personal observation in this State did extend, there was perfect peace, and so far as I heard, there was no violation of the peace.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge which enables you to say from that personal knowledge whether there was peace in the State or not?—A. No, sir; I have not personal knowledge extending over the State.

Q. And yet in your direct examination you stated that you would stake this State against any State in the Union for peace?—A. Yes, sir; from the information and reports I received throughout the canvass.

Q. Had you heard of the Hamburg riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Ellenton riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No other?—A. Yes, sir; Combahee, Ashpoo, Charleston, Canchoy, and Edgefield—not a riot—a disturbance, in which one white man was killed and another wounded. I know of no other but those I have named.

Q. And yet in the face of the alleged fact that there were riots at these places where you have stated, you undertake to say that this State was as peaceable as any State in the Union?—A. I said, that as to the time of the election and during most of the canvass, and as to the democratic party. Now, if you will allow me, I will explain what those riots were.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to those riots?—A. No, sir; only by reports.

Q. Then you do not know whom the riots were committed by?—A. I don't know whether there were riots, except by report.

Q. And you do not know whether they were by republicans or democrats from any knowledge of yours?—A. Only by report.

Q. I don't ask you for what others have said to you, or for any information except your own. Did I understand you in your direct examination to refer to what occurred at the Edgefield meeting when Generals Butler and Gary and Chamberlain were there as a joke between Chamberlain and Gary and Butler?—A. Well, sir, I think that in personal relations it was rather a serious joke. There was ill feeling between them, arising from personal accusations.

Q. Did I understand you in your examination-in-chief to characterize that as a joke?—A. No, sir; I merely used that expression in speaking of it. I did not know that it was taken down as testimony.

Q. Did I understand you to say that in your judgment the election this year was the most peaceable election in the United States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to how elections were conducted outside of this State?—A. Only by report. I have no personal knowledge.

Q. Then in making that statement you do not pretend to speak from personal knowledge?—A. Nothing beyond my knowledge of published reports.

Q. What effect did the presence of United States troops in South Carolina have in preventing the colored men from going over to and joining the democratic party?—A. I think that the presence of the troops (it is only an opinion that I give) strengthened the radical leaders and their leagues and convinced the mass of the ignorant colored people that the United States authorities, the President, had sent the troops there to prevent their joining the democratic party, and I believe that the effect was to prevent many more from joining us who were preparing to do so at the time in many counties of the State.

Q. Up to the time that the troops came here the colored men were going over to the democratic party?—A. Yes, sir; very rapidly. A large number had joined us.

Q. After that the colored men did not come over to the democratic party so much?—A. No, sir, not so much; but they continued to come. I heard from one or two counties that they joined even more rapidly after the arrival of the troops; but from the main body of the State there was a diminution. In Barnwell I think they joined more (by reports to me) than ever before.

Q. Do you know whether General Hampton made a declaration during the campaign that the presence of troops here had not interfered with the votes which he had received or would receive from colored men?—A. I did not hear him make the speech, sir; but if you will repeat the words I may be able to give you my opinion about it. I think he did make efforts in his speeches to remove from the minds of the colored people and of the white people the discouraging effect of the arrival of the United States troops, but his exact words I do not remember.

Q. This paper is a copy of the Charleston News and Courier?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Lawrence put in evidence the following extract from the News and Courier :

"The fight for deliverance—Hampton in Marion—The Swamp-Fox County aroused—A grand reception—General Hampton makes another stirring speech—The address of Colonel Simpson—Remarks of General Kershaw and others.

["From our special phonographic reporter."]

"MARION COURT-HOUSE, Saturday, September 30.

General Hampton's triumphant march for the last week has been through that region of country denominated by John C. Calhoun as the garden-spot of South Carolina. The Peedee region is indeed one of the finest farming districts in the eastern portion of the State. After the great meeting at Bennettsville, the general and staff set out on an overland march to Marion, and on Friday their course was one of triumph and ovation. At every cross-road the party were met by hundreds of brave men and fair women, who had congregated to get a glimpse of the great democratic chieftain, and at Little Rock the general was induced to stop for a couple of hours, and upon the shortest notice an audience of over one thousand persons were assembled to do him honor, a conspicuous feature of the occasion being the large number of ladies. Speeches were made by General Hampton, Colonel Simpson, Col. L. F. Youmans, Generals Kershaw and Kennedy, and two colored orators, Messrs. Lee and Hutelins.

"A large number of colored people were present, and the effect of the speeches upon them was noticeable. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed, and nothing occurred to mar the perfect harmony of the gathering. From Little Rock the campaigners were accompanied by two hundred horsemen, and arrived at Marion at 9 o'clock Friday evening. A large concourse of people had assembled to do the party honor, and the town was magnificently illuminated. A procession comprising thousands of people, and with five hundred mounted men, bearing handsome and significant transparencies, escorted the campaigners through the principal streets and to their respective quarters. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The public and private houses were filled to repletion, and many who arrived on the late train were compelled to go without a bed.

"At an early hour this morning the town was alive with the cavalry, who kept coming in from every quarter. Carmichael's, Hillsborough, Reeves, Manning, Hardeeville, Bethea, Kirby, Moody, Marion, Wahee, LeGette, Rowell, Britton's Neck, Woodbury, Jeffries, Cain's, McMillan's, and Peedee Townships were all represented by their mounted clubs. E. M. Stöber, the radical county chairman, in order to keep the colored people from attending the meeting, called all the township meetings for to-day. But the little game was evidently a failure, for hundreds of colored people were not only in town, but flocked to the meeting and remained throughout its entire progress, patient and interested spectators.

"THE PROCESSION.

"At 10 o'clock the procession was formed, with the Wilmington colored brass-band at the head, and, after marching and countermarching through the main streets, the crowd assembled in the court-house square, where a large stand had been erected for the occasion. The crowd numbered several thousand, comprising hundreds of ladies, who graced the occasion with their presence, and shot forth enthusiastic glances from hundreds of carriages and from the windows in the vicinity."

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. In the same way that you heard of the riots you have enumerated, did you hear that they were labor-riots?—A. Combahee and Ashepoo were reported to be riots raised by strikers who marched in armed bodies from one field to another, driving out the laborers.

Q. And in reference to these other riots, did you hear from common report that any democrats were connected with them in getting them up or inciting them?—A. No, sir; not one of them. I did not hear that the democrats had anything to do with inciting them or getting them up.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of it?—A. No, sir; I was not present at any of the places. I did receive some information with regard to three of them, Combahee, Ashepoo, and Ellenton.

Q. Did you not hear also that it was alleged by the republicans that the democrats did start some of those difficulties?—A. I heard it alleged that the democrats did start the Caneloy difficulty. I don't think I have heard the republicans allege—I am not sure, but they may have written such things in the newspapers; but I don't think I have ever heard them charged, the democrats, with having anything to do with originating Combahee, Ashepoo, Charleston, or Ellenton difficulties.

Q. Was it not alleged by the republicans that the democrats commenced difficulties at Hamburg?—A. I think the republicans did allege that with regard to Hamburg, but Hamburgh so far anteceded our canvass that it has nothing to do with it. We never regarded Hamburgh as having anything to do with our political status at all; it was long before the canvass began.

Q. Don't you know by general report that there was a large number of colored men alleged to have been killed in this State during the year prior to the election?—A. No, sir; I know that official reports have been made which, to my earnest conviction, have grossly exaggerated the number. I do believe that a considerable number have been killed in these riots.

Q. My inquiry was whether there were not general reports that a large number of colored men had been killed in this State prior to the election this year?—A. Well, sir, there is one report of the number, and there is another report of a much greater number. I would ask leave to answer the two reports. There is a report, which I believe to be correct, that eighteen colored men were killed at and in the vicinity of Ellenton. Another report that six or seven white men were killed at Canohoy; another report that there were five or six, or thereabouts, colored men killed at Hamburgh; another report that there was one white man killed and another wounded in Charleston in a row there on one occasion, and on another occasion another white man killed there and another wounded; various others wounded. Those I believe to be correct. There is a report, which was made by the governor of the State and certain other persons, which I believe to be entirely incorrect. That report represented a vague but a great number of the colored people as having been killed at Ellenton and in its vicinity. I think that was a gross exaggeration. The most correct report ever made as to the number killed or wounded at Ellenton, I think, was made in the New York Herald soon after the event occurred. That was a very correct report, to the best of my information and knowledge.

Q. Is it not notorious that no white man has been punished for killing any colored man?—A. No, sir; I cannot say that it is notorious. I cannot say that it is so.

Q. Do you know of any white man who has been punished for killing a colored man?—A. I cannot remember any at this moment.

Q. Now is it not notorious that not one of the white men charged with killing has been tried or punished?—A. In connection with what—Hamburgh?

Q. With any of the alleged killing of colored men?—A. I only know this from a report which I believe to be correct, that all men who have been indicted in connection with the Hamburgh affair have been bailed for trial, and that the acting attorney-general and solicitor declined to prosecute them at the regular term of the court.

Q. But in the other miscellaneous killings of colored men, where there were no riots, but just individual men killed, do you know of any instance where a white man alleged to have been guilty of a murder has been tried or punished?—A. I cannot answer that any more than I can answer whether any of the colored men have been tried and punished for killing white men. I do not remember an instance of either. They may have occurred here in this court. I don't remember the names of persons at this time. On reflection I propose to answer you more at length.

Mr. Abbott put in evidence the following extracts from the Charleston News and Courier of the same dates from which the last extracts put in by Mr. Lawrence was taken.

"THE TRUTH ABOUT ELLENTON—A FAIR AND IMPARTIAL PRESENTATION OF THE FACTS—
STATEMENT OF EIGHTEEN RESPECTABLE CITIZENS OF AIKEN COUNTY.

[“From our resident correspondent.”]

“AIKEN, S. C., October 3.

“The following account of the late disturbances in this county was prepared yesterday and filed with Messrs. Canton and Blackwell, as material for their report to the governor and the United States marshal:

“STATEMENT OF THE RECENT TROUBLES AND RIOTS NEAR ELLENTON, S. C.

“On Friday, September 15, 1876, two negro men entered the house of Mr. Alonzo Harley, a respectable planter in Silverton Township, Aiken County, S. C., during Mr. Harley's absence, and attacked his wife and nine-year old child with clubs, seriously injuring them. Fortunately, Mrs. Harley got to her husband's gun, which, though unloaded, served to frighten the negroes away.

“In a short time a dozen or more whites collected and gave pursuit. One of the negroes, Peter Williams, was overtaken, brought back to Harley's house, and identified by his wife and child. The negro broke away and ran, was fired upon as he ran and severely wounded, from which wound, however, he has so far recovered as to be able to walk about.

“On Saturday morning rumors became rife that the negroes were collecting with arms in their hands in the neighborhood of Rouse's Bridge, and threatening to avenge the shooting of Peter Williams. On Saturday evening the whites began to assemble. On Sunday morning information was received that Frederick Pope, the leading negro in the assault upon Mrs. Harley, had sought protection with the armed negroes at Rouse's Bridge.

"Angus P. Brown, special constable, with a warrant issued by Charles Guffin, a colored trial-justice for Aiken County, and a republican in politics, accompanied by a posse of white men, proceeded to Rouse's Bridge. In a defile near the bridge the posse were very unexpectedly fired upon by the negroes in ambush, and the fire was returned. Only a few shots were exchanged, and no serious damage was done. The whites retired from the defile and sought to negotiate with their assailants.

"After two or more hours' delay, caused by the reluctance of the blacks to respond to the advances made by the other party, the blacks finally consented that if six unarmed white men, they naming the men, would arrest six black men, also unarmed, they would abide by whatever decision the joint committee might reach. The whites acceded, the joint committee met, the constable with the warrant being one of them, and exhibiting his warrant, and on the assurance of the blacks that Frederick Pope was not there with them, it was mutually agreed that both parties should disperse and retire quietly to their homes; and to this the whites and blacks pledged themselves.

"The whites dispersed; the negroes did not. On the contrary, they assaulted two white men at the same point a half hour afterward. They ambuscaded fourteen men on their way home, at a lower bridge over the same stream, about one hour afterward, fired into them fifty or sixty shots, and wounded five. The fire was returned, and one negro killed. The whites were dispersed. They (the negroes) waylaid John Williams and Everett Stallings, two white men, at 8 o'clock that night, and killed Williams. They tore up the track of the Port Royal Railroad, wrecking a train, cut the telegraph-wires, and burned the mill and gin-house of Dr. Bailey.

"This was the condition of affairs on Monday morning. Bad as it was, the most exaggerated and distressing rumors were circulated in all directions. By 11 o'clock a hundred white men had assembled, and proceeded to the point where the Port Royal Railroad had been broken. Here they were fired upon by negroes, and the fire was returned. One negro was killed and the remainder driven away.

"The whites moved toward Ellenton. At this point the blacks had collected in large numbers, with arms in their hands, yelling, cursing, and threatening the lives of women and children. In front of Ellenton is a formidable swamp, which the negroes occupied; but they retired before the regular approach of the whites, with the loss of one of their number.

"The whites encamped in Ellenton. That night the negroes waylaid at Penn Branch a party of white men, killing Robert Williams, and wounding Samuel Dunbar and J. H. Kellingsworth. On Tuesday morning the whites proceeded to Rouse's Bridge, the original scene of the trouble, and met the Federal troops. Here, again, the swamp is very formidable, and was occupied by the negroes, who had torn up the bridge. The negroes fired, wounding a horse, and retired without any loss on their part. The whites appealed to the Federal officers to disperse the armed negroes, who had waylaid and killed men in the night, burnt property, and threatened the lives of women and children, and on their assurance that this should be done, they returned to their homes.

ANOTHER COLORED CHARLESTONIAN SPEAKS OUT.

CHARLESTON, S. C., September 30.

To the editor of the News and Courier :

In times like the present it seems to me that every colored man who is in favor of good government and is desirous of redeeming South Carolina from the terrible political condition in which she is plunged, should have the manliness to come out boldly and avow his principles, in order not only that the white people of Charleston may know the position in which he stands, but that the colored people may take courage from his example and thus be themselves induced to boldly declare for Hampton and reform. I, therefore, take this opportunity of publicly placing myself before my fellow-citizens as one who will, to the utmost of his humble ability, aid in the election of the ticket put forth by the democratic party of the State of South Carolina, and in doing this I desire to say to the people of my own race that I am firmly convinced that our interests are identical with the interests of the white people of this State, and do not lie with the radical carpet-baggers or the renegades who would delude us with base and malicious lies for their own aggrandizement, and who would fatten on the proceeds of the hard labor of the colored man.

Colored men of Charleston County and of South Carolina, I appeal to you to shake off the fetters which, of your own free will, you are allowing your corrupt leaders to bind around your souls, and which will drag you down to inevitable ruin. I appeal to you to turn a deaf ear to the oily words of the miscreants and renegades, which they would have you roll as a sweet morsel under your tongues, but which will prove to you wormwood and gall. Heed not the unprincipled scoundrels who, for their own base ends, will lead you on to destruction, while they will flee and leave you to your fate.

I appeal to you to consider your own interests and vote with the white people of South Carolina, who give you employment, upon whose soil you live, and upon whose soil you expect to die. Vote with them, and, in the words of the gallant General Conner, there will dawn a new era upon South Carolina—an era of freedom, education, and protection for all.

Mr. LAWRENCE put in evidence the following papers:

THE CALL ANSWERED.

CHAMBERLAIN TO HASKELL. THE TRUTH TOLD. A PLAIN, TRUTHFUL, AND STARTLING REVIEW OF THE PRESENT CAMPAIGN IN SOUTH CAROLINA. THE BALLOT WILL BE PROTECTED. THE REAL DEMOCRATIC POLICY EXPOSED.

Colonel Haskell to Governor Chamberlain.

ROOMS STATE DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Columbia, S. C., September 28, 1876.

To his excellency Daniel H. Chamberlain, Columbia, S. C.:

SIR: I beg leave to tender you, in behalf of General Wade Hampton and the other nominees upon the State democratic ticket, and in pursuance of the spirit manifested in the card issued on 23d August by the State democratic executive committee, an invitation to attend the democratic mass meetings which are being held in succession in each county in the State. The order in which they follow, together with the dates, appears in nearly all of the papers in the State. You are invited to be present and join in the discussion. You are aware that the canvass is a warm one, and that your party and your own official course are charged with having inflicted great wrongs upon the people whose interests it is your duty to promote. That is the nature of political discussion under such circumstances, but you are at the same time well aware that the people you are invited to address are, by nature and by habit, quiet and law-abiding, and that so far from rudeness or violence, you will personally receive nothing but courteous treatment, however bitterly your political and official course may be assailed.

You will call to mind that on the 18th instant I gave this invitation to you verbally, and your reply was that you appreciated the attention, but your policy for the campaign had not been fixed; that personal matters required you to go North; that your absence would be for probably eight days, and you could not give your positive answer until after your return. I learned yesterday that you had returned, and I beg leave, as I said, to formally extend to you this invitation, assuring you that if you accept it your appearance before the democracy throughout this State will be to yourself as governor a most pleasing refutation of the slanderous charges which constantly are published against our party in some newspapers which claim to be your political organs, and also in the northern papers, backed by the name of Senator Patterson, or some other person who claims to be your political friend and exponent. We deem it due to you and to ourselves that these charges be either contradicted by your denial of them or looked into by your going in person to ascertain the truth. You do not hold the position of candidate only, you are also governor of this State; and while as a mere candidate you may not be bound to correct charges which your followers make against your opponents, though you know them to be false, you are as governor and candidate bound by your gubernatorial pledge and honor to prevent your followers using the sanction of your official silence to sustain these charges against your opponents when the charges allege the overthrow of the peace and dignity of the State which you are sworn to defend. As instances of the class of slanders to which I refer, I beg leave to cite the following:

"WASHINGTON, September 6.

"It is reported here, upon what is deemed good authority, that parties in New York have agreed to ship Chamberlain twenty thousand stand of arms to arm the blacks in South Carolina. This is one of Chamberlain's tricks to curry favor with the blacks and be renominated. The arms will be landed in Charleston on the 11th instant, the day before the meeting of the republican State convention. While here, Chamberlain was very bitter in his denunciation of the South Carolina whites, calling them Ku-Klux, scoundrels," &c.—(New York Sun.)

"WASHINGTON, September 6.

"Governor Chamberlain, of South Carolina, has just returned from another visit to this city to confer with the authorities upon sending troops to that State. The governor was noisy in his denunciations of such men as Haskell, Hampton, Gary, Ex-Governor Perry, and others, whom he charges are on the eve of precipitating another rebellion. He makes the idle boast that he has proof that Butler and Hampton were at the head of the Hamburg riot, and he expects in less than two months to have them tried. The governor declared to a prominent South Carolina politician last night that he was done with reform talk, and hereafter the legislature would find no barrier in him. The governor has made arrangements to have twenty thousand stand of arms sent down to arm the blacks. The arms will be landed in Charleston on the 11th instant, the day previous to the meeting of the radical convention."—(New York World.)

"WASHINGTON, September 20.

"Senator Patterson arrived here this morning from South Carolina to apply for more help to protect the voters and prevent the terrorism which extends over the whole State. Governor Chamberlain and United States Marshal Wallace and others will arrive to-morrow morning. An old resident of Columbia told the Senator last week that he could not speak to him on the street if he met him. The excitement and feeling is far worse than it was in 1860 and the days of secession, and it is dangerous to even speak to a radical. Judge Cooke, who has acted for years with the republicans, made a speech not long since advocating the election of Wade Hampton and Governor Tilden, and excused himself by saying that he was forced to do so to save his property and perhaps his life.

"The whole white male democratic population is said to be completely armed, and large consignments of rifles, revolvers, and knives are received constantly. Yet no dealer will sell a republican even a knife. The very boys are armed, and the boys of the military school at Columbia openly wear their revolvers belted around them. The Senator says that fully 30,000 men, armed and mounted, are thoroughly patrolling the whole State under the direction and command of Butler, of Hamburg fame, and these forces are not only armed, but completely organized and drilled.

"The people are reported as expressing themselves openly in favor of a fight, and as saying they don't care a — for the United States, the troops, or the North, but that they are ready and anxious to clear out all the troops that General Grant can send. They say that if they do have any trouble, Governor Tilden will carry Indiana and Ohio in October, and New York in November; which insures his election. They are bound to elect Hampton or destroy the State. Senator Patterson says that unless they have immediate help no colored man will dare to move or talk, much less to vote, and if Indiana goes democratic that South Carolina, North Carolina, and Florida will follow, and there will be an outbreak which will almost be one of extermination of republicans. Murders are done every day of which not a whisper reaches the North."—(New York Tribune.)

It is not my meaning that you should take the pains to deny every error that may appear in campaign speeches or papers; but I do mean that when statements appear as coming from yourself, or from others who are robed with the dignity of office, which ought to attach importance and a credibility to what they say, and when these utterances, as in the instances above cited, are totally false, and affect the character of the State, it is the duty, I respectfully submit, of the governor to deny them. And if he (the governor) believes them to be true, it is his duty to restore peace and order; and to do so, it is his sworn duty to call upon the citizens to sustain him and enforce the law. All these assaults are made against the democratic party. Whatever may be our political error, in your estimation, in belonging to that party, we are none the less citizens of this State, and as such we have the right to ask of you that protection which, in your official position, you alone can give.

If there be terrorism and violence in the State, call upon us to suppress it, and do not let the name of the State be perverted to dishonorable political purposes.

You, and no one better, know that the white people of South Carolina are struggling as few people have ever done to cast off a burden of corruption and wrong such as yet fewer people have ever borne so long. In your own words, speaking of your own party:

"Reform, if it was not of itself right, has become absolutely necessary, or the State will sink."

"The party has ever been going into campaigns promising retrenchment and reform, and never performing it."

"Matters cannot run for six years to come as they have for the past six years."

"These figures, (speaking of legislative expenses,) I may say, are unparalleled in the history of American legislation. It is stealing, pure and simple."

And, referring to the election of the two judges, elected, I may say, by the leading man now on the ticket with you, "Their election has sent a thrill of horror throughout the State. * * * I look to their election as a horrible disaster."

"The civilization of the Puritan and the cavalier, of the Roundhead and the Huguenot, is in peril. Courage, determination, union, victory, must be our watchwords."

"No party can rule this State that supports Whipper and Moses. * * * There is but one way to save the republican party in South Carolina, and that way is to unload Whipper and Moses and all who go with them. * * * Neither the administration at Washington, with all its appliances—civil and military—not all the denunciations of the world heaped upon me, can save the republican party here from overwhelming defeat during this year, unless we can persuade the people of this State that such things as these judicial elections will be undone and never by possibility repeated."

You know that the men who were the leaders, who conducted that election, and who perpetrated the wrongs of which it was a feeble expression, are the same men who control the ticket upon which your name stands, who devised your party platform, and are to-day your political exponents. You know that it is against all this that our unfortunate people are struggling; and yet you know full well that their efforts, although in the warmth of canvass, are orderly and within the law. Your manhood compels you to approve our course, but we do not call upon you for that. As a candidate, you are entitled to the benefits which can accrue from the measures which your followers (or, if you would permit me, I would say your party leaders, for your independent course was very different) have adopted. But as the governor of the State you are called upon to either contradict the assertion that the law is overthrown and that terrorism prevails, or to suppress this lawlessness; and it is our right that you call upon us before you appeal to the Government of the United States. Our services are at your command, and whatever is our duty we are ready to do it.

To recur: I beg leave again to extend to you the invitation, and ask of you to communicate it to the candidates upon your ticket, as it is meant for them as well as for yourself. It is the wish of the democratic party that you accept it, for we are earnestly desirous to remove the bitterness of race-feeling, which we attribute to the prejudices and erroneous views which have been instilled into the colored race. And we honestly desire "peaceful and untrammelled discussion, that the people may become enlightened on the issues of the day."

Your early reply will be deemed a favor, and, if such be your wish, preparation will be made to receive you at the first meeting that it shall be your pleasure to indicate.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. HASKELL,

Chairman State Democratic Executive Committee.

Governor Chamberlain's reply.

COLUMBIA, S. C., October 4, 1876.

A. C. HASKELL, Esq.,

Chairman Democratic Executive State Committee, Columbia, S. C.:

SIR: I have received your communication of the 28th ultimo, covering several matters connected with the political canvass now in progress in this State and the general condition of our public affairs. You first invite me and the nominees upon the republican State ticket "to attend the democratic mass-meetings which are being held in succession in each county in the State." This part of your communication would have been addressed more naturally, and, I trust you will permit me to add, more properly, to the chairman of the republican State committee, whose function it is, as the organ of that committee, to consider and determine the methods and order of the canvass on the part of the republican party. In answer, therefore, to your invitation I am unable to say more than that I have informed the chairman of the republican State committee that, as soon as the duties of my office, which now imperatively require my presence at the capital, shall permit it, I shall be ready to meet General Hampton at any suitable points in the State, not in "democratic mass-meetings," but in mass-meetings to be called by both parties, for the purpose of joint discussions, upon terms of perfect equality in all respects, of the political issues now before our people. You will doubtless receive, at an early day, a proposition of such a nature from the republican State committee, with such suggestions regarding details as will commend themselves to your sense of fairness, and secure the objects which you profess to seek in your invitation, the removal of "the bitterness of race feeling, which we [you] attribute to the prejudices and erroneous views which have been instilled into the colored race," and a "peaceful and untrammelled discussion, that the people may become enlightened on the issues of the day." In saying this I am confident I faithfully represent also the wishes and purposes of all my associates on the republican State ticket.

The remainder of your communication is occupied with statements of what you claim to be the spirit and conduct and purposes of the democratic party in the State, with a special call upon me, "as governor and candidate," to contradict certain alleged statements respecting the present condition of the State and the action of men who belong to the democratic party, which you call "slandrous charges," or to "look into them by going in person to ascertain the truth." You say that "my appearance before the democracy throughout the State will be to me as governor a most pleasing refutation of the slanderous charges which constantly are published against your party in some newspapers which claim to be my political organs, and also in the northern papers, backed by the name of Senator Patterson or some other person who claims to be my political friend and exponent." You say that I am, "as governor and candidate, bound by my gubernatorial pledge and honor, to prevent my followers using the sanction of my official silence to sustain these charges against my opponents, when these charges allege the overthrow of the peace and dignity of the State which I am sworn to defend." You present three examples of the charges to which you refer, taken from the Washington correspondence, respectively, of the New York Sun, New York World, and New York Tribune. You say that "these utterances, in the instances above cited, are totally false, and affect the character of the State," and that if I "believe them to be true, it is my duty to restore peace and order, and to do so it is my sworn duty to call upon the citizens to sustain me and enforce the law."

You proceed further to say that I, "and no one better, know that the white people of South Carolina are struggling as few people ever have done to cast off a burden of corruption and wrong, such as yet fewer people have ever borne so long;" and you proceed to make extended quotations from former remarks of mine respecting our public affairs, and to say that the men who committed the wrongs which I denounced "are the same men who control the ticket upon which my name stands, who devised my party platform, and are to-day my political exponents." You say that I "know that it is against all this that our unfortunate people are struggling, and yet that I know full well that their efforts, although in the warmth of canvass, are orderly and within the law." You say that my "manhood compels me to approve your course," and finally you declare that, "as governor of the State, I am called upon to either contradict the assertion that the law is overthrown and that terrorism prevails, or to suppress this lawlessness;" and that "it is your right that I call upon you before I appeal to the Government of the United States."

I am pleased to observe and acknowledge the respectful terms in which your statements and charges are framed, so far as they affect me. These statements and charges cover in substance the whole field of our present political controversy, together with the matters growing out of that controversy, and affecting the public peace and the common civil rights of our citizens. In addition to your direct call upon me, in your character as the official representative of the democratic party, to express my views upon the matters presented by you, the nature of your communication and the statements and charges which you make seem to compel me to speak. I do this with profound reluctance. Not only will the expression of my views disclose how widely you and I stand apart upon all the questions involved, but it will, in my sober judgment, disclose to the world a condition of things inexpressibly disgraceful to the good name of our State. Though General Hampton is reported to have said substantially, in recent public speeches, that I could not, by reason of my nativity, feel such an interest and pride in the fame of South Carolina as becomes her governor, and, though you may share in this opinion, I still venture to say to you that I have regretted deeply the receipt of your communication, because it forces me, while I hold my present high office, to present views and convictions which, if correct, reflect infinite discredit upon a large portion of the people of this State. It is, however, as portions of your communication show, no new experience to me to find myself compelled by a sense of duty to pursue a course which has subjected me, not only as in the present instance, to the increased hostility of political opponents, but to the suspicion and denunciation of political friends. But I profess to put my duty to the State above all other present considerations, and that duty, as I understand it, requires me to reply to your communication fully, plainly, and fearlessly.

Slandrous charges.—With respect to the specific instances of "slandrous charges," which you cite from the New York papers, let me first say that the statements respecting me made in the Sun and the World are wholly untrue and unfounded. Nothing remotely resembling what is there stated was ever said or done by me. The extract from the Tribune professes to give the views and statements of Senator Patterson, for which I am not responsible. How far my views coincide with or differ from those attributed to Senator Patterson will best appear in what I shall hereafter say.

I shall now proceed to present my views upon the several matters relating to our present political condition which are covered by your communication.

The issue stated.—Your claim in substance is that I am the head of a party and ticket which represents and is responsible for a burden of corruption and wrongs grievously oppressive to the State; that the success of that party and ticket would be disastrous to the interests of the State; that my position upon that ticket is inconsistent with my public record; that the democracy, on the other hand, are engaged in a political struggle with the sole aim of freeing the State from this burden of corruption and wrongs; and that all your methods and actions are peaceful and within the law. In support of your view of my present position, you refer to my public denunciations of past acts of the republican party or its members. You thus challenge not only my political integrity and honor, but my personal consistency as a public man. In order properly to meet your challenge, especially as to my personal consistency, I must refer to the course of events in this State during the last two years.

Review of last two years.—I was nominated and elected in 1874 as the candidate of the republican party, under pledges, both personal and party, to reform the abuses which then existed. In my inaugural address I developed in detail my plans of reform—plans which met the earnest approval of the general public of the State without regard to party. That I pursued the course there marked out earnestly and faithfully is a claim which cannot be successfully or even plausibly disputed. I found a considerable part of my own party opposed to my course, and thus my fidelity to my pledges and to the cause of reform, as I understood it, was put to severe and unexpected tests. It is not egotism but truth which leads me to affirm that I bore those tests in a manner which commanded the praise of the friends of reform throughout the State. The press of this State, the public utterances of its leading citizens, every organ of public opinion, will furnish the proof of this assertion. My record as governor was elaborately reviewed in July last by the Charleston News and Courier—beyond comparison the ablest, and, in a normal condition of affairs, the most liberal, democratic newspaper in this State or in the South—in a series of editorial articles founded on official and indisputable records. From the closing article of this series, entitled "The Record of Governor Chamberlain—A Summary," I make the following extracts:

"We have scrutinized, one by one, the most important pledges and recommendations contained in the addresses and messages since his election, and we now briefly sum up the result of the investigation we have made."

* * * * *

"The abuse of the pardoning power has been corrected.

"The character of the officers of the government, appointed by the executive, has been improved, and the sureties upon the bonds of public officers have been required to make affidavits of their ability to meet the liability they assume.

"The settlement of the public debt has been maintained unchanged, and faith with the public creditor, so far as dependent on executive and legislative action, has been fully kept.

"The effort to place the whole of the public funds in two banks of small capital was frustrated, and the State so saved from the danger of far greater loss than was sustained by the failure of the Solomon bank.

"The floating indebtedness of the State has been provided for in such a way that the rejecting of fraudulent claims is assured; the recognized and valid claims are scaled one-half the amount, and their payment is distributed over a term of four years, resulting in a saving to the State of at least $400,000.

"The tax-laws have been amended so as to secure substantial unanimity and equality in the assessment of property for taxation.

"The contingent funds of the executive department have been so reduced in amount that the saving in two years, upon the basis of the average of six previous years, is $101,200.

"Legislative expenses, in like manner, and upon a similar basis, have been so reduced as to save the people in two years $350,810.

"Legislative contingent expenses in the same way have been so reduced as to save the State $355,000.

"In the expenditure of contingent funds accountability and publicity have been secured.

"The cost of public printing has been reduced from an annual average of $306,200 to $50,000, saving in two years $512,418. The salaries of public officers have been reduced $30,000 a year.

"The tax-levy for the current year for State purposes has been reduced from 13½ mills to 11 mills, a saving to the people this year of $300,000.

"The deficiencies (including the losses by the Solomon bank) are, for the year 1874-'75, $308,872, which is $291,024 less than the deficiencies of 1872-'73, and $233,315 less than the deficiencies of 1873-'74.

"Under the several heads the savings that have actually been made are:

In the bonanza bill .....	$400,000
In the executive contingent fund .....	101,260
In legislative expenses .....	350,810
In contingent expenses .....	355,000
In public printing .....	512,418
Total .....	1,719,488

"To realize this amount would require a tax of nearly one and a half per cent. Had the appropriations of the past two years been as inordinate as the average of the appropriations and expenditures of the preceding years, the State taxes of the past two years would have been three-quarters per cent. a year more than the outrageous rate actually levied.

"This is the record of Governor Chamberlain, as shown by hard figures and unmistakable facts. We have strained or exaggerated nothing. The plain truth as we know it has been faithfully given. And we maintain that the record as it stands is one of which Governor Chamberlain has cause to be proud, that it justifies the support which has been given him, and is a complete answer to those of our friends who think that no act of Governor Chamberlain deserves public commendation but his refusal to issue the commissions to Whipple and Moses. That bold act, applauded everywhere in South Carolina, has not been mentioned in these articles." * * *

No act or word of mine since the publication of those articles, and up to my renomination as governor during the past month, can be pointed to which is inconsistent with the record thus presented. I was a candidate for renomination by the republican party upon my record as a republican reformer. Every man and every newspaper speaking for me or representing me placed his advocacy of my renomination upon the distinct ground of my fidelity and success in the work of reform in this State. I myself during the months of July and August last made an extensive canvass of the State, addressing mass-meetings in over twenty counties, and on every occasion when I addressed the people without hinderance or restraint, (the exceptional occasions I shall refer to hereafter,) I announced in clear and aggressive terms my determination to push forward the work of reform, declared that I stood upon my record as governor, and had become again a candidate solely for the purpose of completing the work I had already begun. The issue involved in my candidacy for renomination was everywhere proclaimed by my friends and admitted by my enemies to be the indorsement or rejection, by the republican party, of my work and policy of reform. Upon the assembling of the republican nominating convention during the past month it appeared that fully two-thirds of its members were immovably determined upon my renomination. I have never heard of a suspicion or hint that any motives were presented to any members of that convention to influence their action, except the single consideration of my merits or demerits as presented in my record of the past two years. My renomination was earnestly, not to say violently, opposed by a minority of the convention, but this opposition was placed wholly upon charges of my want of fidelity to strictly partisan interests of the republican party or a failure to sufficiently regard the interests and wishes of some members of the party.

The republican platform.—In preparing the platform of our party I was invited by the committee having the work in charge to meet the committee and to present my views. I accepted this invitation, and I here present those portions of the platform adopted by the convention to which my efforts were especially directed:

"4. That in presenting to the people of South Carolina our nominees for the high offices of the State for the coming two years, we believe we should make plain and unmistakable the aims and principles to which we stand pledged, in the event of their election; not in glittering generalities of reform, but in specific and substantial articles.

"6. We pledge ourselves to thorough reform in all departments of the State government where abuses shall be found to exist, and, as an earnest of the same, declare our purpose of submitting to the qualified voters of the State the following specific reforms as amendments to the State constitution:

"1. That the present adjustment of the bonded debt of the State shall be inviolable.

"2. That the general assembly shall meet only once in every two years, and that the length of no session thereof shall exceed seventy days.

"3. That the number of sessions of courts of general sessions and common pleas shall be reduced to two annually in each county, with power reserved to the judges to call special sessions when necessary.

"4. That the veto power of the governor shall be so modified as to allow of the disapproval of a part without effect upon the rest of an act.

"5. That agricultural interests shall be relieved from burdensome taxation by a more equitable distribution of taxes, and by the inauguration of a system of licenses fixed upon fair principles.

"6. That no public funds shall ever be used for the support of sectarian institutions.

"7. That the enormous evil of local and special legislation shall be prohibited whenever private interests can be protected under general laws.

"8. And inasmuch as the system of free schools was created in the State by the republican party, and should be especially fostered and protected by it, we pledge ourselves to the support of the amendment to the State constitution, now before the people, establishing a permanent tax for the support of free schools, and preventing the removal of school-funds from the counties where raised.'

"7. We pledge ourselves and the nominees of the republican party of the State to the securing of the following purposes by legislative enactment:

"1. The further and lowest reduction of salaries of all public servants, consistent with the necessities of government.

"2. The reduction of fees and costs, especially of attorneys in civil cases, and the amendment of the laws governing the settlement of estates in such manner as to secure a more economical administration and settlement of small estates, and the support of convicts without needless expense to the State.

"3. The immediate repeal of the agricultural lien law.

"4. Public printing to be reduced at least one-third of the present appropriation.

"5. Convict labor to be utilized under such laws as shall secure humane treatment

"6. The annual appropriations for public institutions to be economically made and properly expended.

"7. The number of trial-justices to be reduced throughout the State, and each justice to be assigned to specific territory, with moderate salaries to cover costs of criminal business, adjusted in proportion to populations.'

"8. Recognizing the enormous expense of fencing farms and the scarcity of timber in some sections of the State, we feel it to be necessary that practical relief be afforded to the people of the State, and we pledge ourselves to secure such legislation upon the subject as will give to the electors of each county the right to regulate this question for themselves."

I make no comment on this platform further than to invite its comparison with the platform of the democratic party, and its examination as a statement of the practical reforms and changes now demanded by the best interests of the State.

Results accomplished.—Two results accomplished by the republican convention have now been presented. First. My renomination by more than a two-thirds vote, upon the sole and distinct issue of my reform record: Second. The adoption by the convention of a platform which binds the republican party to reform in general and to reform in detail, a platform which must meet with the approval of every man who is familiar with the present practical wants of the State. I now present these two results as a complete refutation of your charge of personal inconsistency on my part in accepting my present position on the republican ticket, as well as a vindication and proof of the determination of the republican party to carry forward and complete the work of reform. So far as these two results are concerned, I do not know how my policy and record as governor—which has commanded, as I have shown, in its relations to reform, the cordial praise and approval of almost every man in your party—could have received a more signal or satisfactory indorsement by my own party. Looking to these results, my position is one of complete, fairly-earned, honorable triumph. It is far better than that; it is an ample and remarkable triumph of the great cause of governmental reform in this State.

Nomination of Mr. Elliott.—But there are expressions in your communication which indicate that in your view the alleged inconsistency and dishonor of my present position lie in my association upon the republican-ticket with certain other nominees, and especially with Mr. Elliott, the nominee for attorney-general. Of my associates upon the State ticket other than Mr. Elliott, I know of no alleged public cause of complaint or dissatisfaction, except that two of them have disapproved of my course as governor on certain party grounds, while I ought not to omit to add that in the renomination of Mr. Cardozo as treasurer, a gentleman who has been my conspicuous and devoted friend and supporter in every feature of my administration, the cause of reform has achieved another most notable triumph. With reference to the nomination of Mr. Elliott, I am charged with individual inconsistency and want of fidelity to reform because Mr. Elliott has opposed my course as governor in some important features, and was strenuously opposed to my renomination. It is true that Mr. Elliott has differed from me widely in some instances, and particularly in respect to the election of Whipper as circuit judge and my refusal to sign his commission. If it be inconsistent and dishonorable for me to remain upon the ticket for this cause, I think I can point you to similar instances of dishonor among those who still command your support.

Democratic "dishonor."—Governor Tilden was nominated by the democratic party as a professed hard-money candidate on a professed hard-money platform. He is associated on the same ticket with Governor Hendricks, his most prominent opponent for the nomination of President, and the leading champion of soft money and inflation.

No more pronounced antagonism of views upon the leading political issue, prior to their nominations, could have existed; yet we now see Governor Tilden and Governor Hendricks adjusting themselves, with a skill and success greatly satisfactory to your party at least, upon the same ticket and the same platform, and I hear no charge of inconsistency or dishonor against Governor Tilden from the democratic party.

But I do not choose to answer your charge with this retort alone. While it is true—and I think it due to myself to state the fact—that I did not approve of or aid in or consent to the nomination of Mr. Elliott, it is also true that Mr. Elliott, at the time of his nomination and since, has declared his full and cordial acceptance of the work of the convention in renominating me, and in adopting the platform which pledges the party and its nominees to thorough and specific reforms. The causes of his nomination were not his opposition to me or to reform, but his admitted ability for the position, his long record of political service to his party, and a desire, as in the case of Governor Hendricks, to conciliate an element of the party which had been defeated in my renomination. I am, therefore, in no sense compromised or dishonored in my character as a reformer by my association upon the same ticket with Mr. Elliott. On the contrary, I am entitled to all the confidence ever bestowed upon me in that respect, so far as my individual or personal position is concerned, and I am entitled to all the increase of confidence which comes from my success in bringing my own party to indorse me and the entire policy of reform which I have inaugurated and carried on, and the consequent increase of my ability to serve that cause.

Whenever you or others present the record of my denunciations of past wrongs done by the republican party in this State, you present that portion of my record of which I am most proud; for, while it is very easy to float with the tide of party sentiment and action, it is some test of one's fidelity to duty to denounce the actions of one's party associates and defy their opposition and hatred. I stand by every word and syllable of that record. I wish the record were longer and louder, though, as it stands, I challenge its comparison with that of any man in this State who now opposes me.

Whipper and Moses.—Your communication lays special emphasis, as supporting your position, upon the election of Whipper and Moses, and you quote conspicuously my denunciations of those elections. I re-affirm every word you quote, and I further declare that what I then asserted to be the only path of duty or safety for the republican party has been done. Whipper and Moses, and all who go with them, have been repudiated and "unloaded." Their elections have been defeated, and their threatened elevation to the bench of South Carolina has been prevented. Moses has resigned, and Whipper has been compelled to seek the courts, wherein ninety-nine out of every hundred of the lawyers of this State regard his claim as destined to sure defeat. And this has been accomplished by the republican party; for whatever I have done is chargeable to the credit of the republican party, which has now indorsed and renominated me. 'Courage, determination, union, victory,' have been "our watchwords," and in that sign we have conquered.

Such, sir, is my answer to your charge of personal inconsistency and dishonor in accepting my present position on the republican State ticket, and to your further charge that the success of that ticket would be disastrous to the interests of our people. I occupy individually to-day a greatly advanced position on the line of the great battle of reform, and I have behind me, following my lead, the united republican party of this State.

Democratic claims.—I must now examine your claim that the democratic party is engaged in the present canvass in a simple struggle to throw off the burden of misgovernment, and that all your methods and agencies are legitimate and peaceful.

The "conservative" policy.—You are aware that the present policy of the democratic party in this State was earnestly opposed and its adoption deeply deplored by a portion of that party amounting to nearly a majority, and I am aware that that policy is still deeply deplored by many of the members of that party. The opponents of that policy embraced the leading and only widely-circulated newspaper in the State, the Charleston News and Courier, as well as a great number of our most honored and experienced citizens, in all ranks and occupations of our society. If I were to call the roll of those names I think it would be found to embrace and represent a vast preponderance of the talent, property, political experience, and breadth of sentiment and view in our State. The grounds of their opposition to the policy, popularly called the "straight-out" policy, were clearly defined, and had exclusive reference to the advancement of the cause of practical reform in the State. They knew and recognized the fact that the republican party embraced a majority of at least twenty-five thousand of the voters of the State. They knew and recognized the fact that the colored race, who constitute the larger part of the republican voters, were attached to that party by ties the strongest which ever govern men's political actions—the profound conviction, whether mistaken or not, that the great boons so recently conferred on them—freedom and suffrage—were safe only, in their full breadth and beneficence, under the protection of the party which had conferred them. They believed upon evidence too clear to leave room for doubt that for this cause no number of these voters, sufficient to change the relations of our parties, could be detached from the republican party by argument or legitimate persuasion or other lawful methods of influencing their political action. They recognized in me one whose republicanism was original and radical, but whose course in the practical conduct of public affairs gave assurance that I had the true interests of all the people of the State as my guiding principle in public life. Upon these grounds the men to whom I refer counseled a policy which subordinated the interests of party to the good of the State. Their policy contemplated, first, the acquiescence of the democratic party in my nomination by the republican party, if that should take place, and such other of the nominees upon the republican State ticket as should be unexceptionable; and, second, an effort by all conciliatory and legitimate means to secure a large minority of representation for the democratic party in both houses of the legislature, and in all local or county offices. In the May convention of the democratic party this policy apparently received the support of a majority of the convention. That it offered the only prospect of the removal of the present race and party lines, and the establishment of relations of confidence and co-operation in public affairs between the two races, was clear then and is clearer now.

The "straight-out" policy.—Opposed to this policy was the "straight out" policy—the nomination of entire democratic State and county tickets and the inauguration of a purely party struggle. This policy was advocated by a class of men, the most conspicuous of whom are well known as men of extreme views, with strong proclivities toward violent methods and measures. It was openly advocated as the "Mississippi plan," and at the convention which adopted it General Ferguson, of Mississippi, appeared as an honored guest and filled the office of drill-master in the Mississippi tactics. This policy is properly termed in this State the "Edgefield" policy, and was also called by the editor of the Charleston News and Courier the "shot-gun" policy. Of the practical details of this policy I shall speak hereafter.

This policy was adopted in the democratic State convention in August, and was followed by the nomination of a full democratic State ticket. It was adopted under influences and auspices, it was advocated by arguments, it has been carried out by methods and measures so exclusively and entirely partisan as to deprive the present democratic canvass of all just claims to be what you claim for it—"the struggle of the white people of South Carolina to cast off a burthen of corruption and wrong," and to warrant me in declaring it to be a struggle by the democratic party of South Carolina to gain political control of the State for the sake of partisan power and advantage. The men who looked exclusively to reform, the arguments which promised the attainment of practical reform, the methods which are warranted by a desire for the public good, all were opposed to this policy. In saying this I am regarding the facts of the case without any reference to myself. The democratic party of South Carolina were under no political obligation to me, but if they wish to have their present claim respected—that they are moved by non-partisan motives in their present course—they were under obligation to adopt a policy which did not, as does their present policy, array race against race and party against party in a fierce struggle for political mastery.

Democratic "peaceful" agencies.—I come now to your claim that in the present canvass all the methods and agencies employed by the democratic party are peaceful, orderly, and within the law. In your communication you especially assure me that if I accept your invitation, "my appearance before the democracy throughout the State will be to me as governor a most pleasing refutation of the slanderous charges which are constantly published against your party." My knowledge of the serious cast of your character forbids me to think that you are indulging in conscious satire or badinage in giving me this assurance. Without expressing any doubt of the good faith of your present assurance, I fear that your experience in attending republican meetings has been widely different from mine in republican meetings where your party have attended and demanded an equal hearing. I shall therefore first call your attention to my personal experience in this respect.

As I have already stated, during the months of July and August I made a canvass of a number of the counties of the State. The object of this canvass, which was conducted almost wholly under my own auspices, was, first, the advocacy of the election of Hayes and Wheeler; and second, and more especially, a defense of my own course as governor, and an appeal to the republican party to stand by the cause of reform in the coming State convention. It was not a general party canvass under party auspices. The meetings were called at my request or suggestion, and for the purpose of hearing me upon the question chiefly of reform in the State.

Meeting at Edgefield.—Under these circumstances, I went, on the 12th of August, to address a republican meeting at Edgefield Court-House. This meeting had been called by the chairman of the republican party of that county, at my instance; and as rumors had repeatedly reached me that the meeting was to be in some way interrupted by the democrats, I invited one or two republican speakers to accompany me. Hon. Robert Smalls, member of Congress from that district, also accompanied me. We reached the court-house at nine o'clock in the forenoon. Almost immediately upon my arrival I found the town rapidly filling with mounted white men, who signaled their arrival in town by riding rapidly through the streets and uttering almost continuously the shout or cry which you must pardon me for describing by its familiar name as the "rebel yell," a sound to which my ears were well accustomed in Virginia twelve years ago. By eleven o'clock this crowd of mounted white men numbered, I judged, five or six hundred at least. Command of these men was apparently formally assumed at the public square by General M. C. Butler and General M. W. Gary, and they proceeded to the grove where a stand had been erected by the republican committee for the speakers. I should mention that at about ten o'clock several white gentlemen had called at my hotel and asked that democratic speakers should be heard at our meeting. I answered that we had several republican speakers present who would require the whole day if they all spoke, but I suggested that these gentlemen should see the republican county chairman, and stated that I would personally consent to any arrangement they might make with him. The chairman, being engaged in preparations for the meeting, did not meet these gentlemen, and no arrangement was made.

At eleven o'clock I left the hotel and proceeded to the grove. On arriving I found the mounted white men who had assembled in town, with a large number of other white men, occupying one entire half of the space around the stand, and one end of the stand already broken down by the white men who had crowded upon it. I stopped upon the stand in company with Judge Mackey and Senator Cain, the republican county chairman. Simultaneously General Butler and General Gary mounted the stand with a number of their followers. The white men vociferously cheered General Butler and General Gary as they appeared upon the stand, and the speaking was actually opened by General Butler, who returned his thanks to his followers for their presence and their tribute to him. He was followed, in response to deafening calls from his party, by General Gary, who announced in emphatic and plain terms that they—he and his party—had come there to be heard, and that they should be heard; that the radical leaders had failed to make any arrangement for a division of the time in speaking, but that he and his friends should be heard, with or without our consent, and he added, with great significance of tone and manner, that "if any trouble took place in consequence, the responsibility and consequences would be upon the radical leaders." During all this time no republican had been allowed to speak. A glance at the crowd of white men who by this time covered the stand and swarmed around nearly three sides of it, besides climbing into the trees above our heads, all, so far as I could observe, heavily armed with pistols, displayed in many instances on the front of their persons, and even held in their hands, convinced me that any attempt to refuse the demand made, or even to abandon the meeting, would result in collision and bloodshed between the parties. I therefore advised Senator Cain that we had no alternative but to yield to the demand, and after a moment's consultation I announced that we would divide the time, giving a half hour each to three speakers from each party.

Senator Cain then proposed to call the meeting to order, and to announce the speakers, but General Gary declared that they wanted no chairman, and accordingly I stepped forward, under these circumstances, to address the meeting. From the beginning to the end of my half hour I was interrupted by the crowd of white men with jeers and insults of every kind. Twice during my remarks the confusion and interruption were so complete that, after vainly appealing to the crowd to allow me to be heard, General Butler had the decency to come forward and so far restore order as to barely permit me to resume my remarks. Of the whole half hour allotted to me I certainly was not permitted to occupy over twenty minutes with any remarks such as I should naturally have made on such an occasion. In truth, I spoke under great constraint, and a consciousness that any word might precipitate a bloody collision, which I had no means of preventing or controlling. I was denounced by voices from the crowd as a companion thief with McDevitt; was told I would never come to Edgefield again; was charged with getting up the Hamburg riot to kill white people, excite the North, and getting United States troops to carry the election, and with a variety of other crimes, of which these are but specimens.

I was followed by General Butler, who occupied his time without interruption. His speech was exceedingly violent and bitterly personal toward me on account, principally, of my report of the Hamburg massacre. Judge Mackey followed General Butler, and he in turn was followed by General Gary. Nearly the whole of General Gary's speech was directed against me. In bitterness and violence of personal abuse, I have certainly never heard or known its parallel. Nothing short of a verbatim report could give an idea of its character. His attacks were not confined to my official character, but extended to my personal life and affairs, with frequent threats against me personally in various contingencies.

Judge Mackey next occupied about fifteen or twenty minutes in replying to some of General Gary's personal charges against me, and he was followed by General Butler.

What I have now described occupied the time from a little after eleven until half-past three—a fact which will give an idea of the time consumed by the interruptions of which I have spoken. At half-past three I left the grove, in order to reach the Columbia train, at Pine House, the same evening, amidst a torrent of jeers and yells, which continued to reach my ears without cessation until I had passed beyond the limits of the town. The meeting, though called and arranged for in every particular by the republicans, was at no time and in no sense under our control, only two of the six republican speakers from abroad who were present were permitted to speak at all, and, under the pressure of the white men who crowded upon it, the entire platform was brought to the ground before I left the scene. At this meeting, the republicans were told in the most emphatic terms that the democrats had made up their minds to carry Edgefield County, and that they would carry it; that their leaders would be held to account personally; that the white people must and should rule the county. The whole meeting may be justly described as a torrent of abuse of me personally, and an exhibition of force and threats designed to intimidate the colored voters and their leaders. After we had reached the train, at the several railroad stations in Edgefield County, a number of the armed and mounted men who had attended the meeting at the court-house entered the car in which we sat, and, with rude and threatening manners, addressed their jeers and insults to General Smalls and myself, especially warning us not to come to Edgefield again.

I will add that the foregoing account of the meeting at Edgefield has been made from written memoranda, made by me while on my way to Columbia, and after my arrival at home the same evening. Nothing has been overstated, though much that was disgraceful has necessarily been omitted in this description.

Meeting at Newberry.—On the 18th of August I visited Newberry Court-House to address a republican mass-meeting, called for the same purposes and under the same circumstances as the meeting at Edgefield Court-House, which I have described. I was accompanied by two republican speakers, Hon. S. L. Hoge, member of Congress for that district, and Hon. J. K. Jilison, superintendent of education. On our arrival at the depot at Newberry, we were met by the republican county committee, who informed us that the democrats were assembled in large force, mounted and armed in the Edgefield fashion, and had called for a "division of time" at our meeting. I conferred with the republican committee, who were firmly convinced that if we refused the demand our meeting would be attended and probably interrupted by the democrats, with imminent danger of bloodshed if any misadventure should occur. As the republicans were wholly unorganized for any purpose of resistance to physical aggression, we deemed it our duty either to abandon our meeting or consent to a division of time. We chose the latter alternative, and proceeded to the place of meeting. At the stand we found the republicans occupying mainly the space in front and at one side nearest the platform, while the mounted white men deployed themselves in a continuous line, completely enveloping the republicans and the platform on all sides. The usual accompaniment of yells was not omitted. I addressed the meeting for an hour, and was followed by Col. J. N. Lipscomb. His speech was bitterly personal in its character toward me and my friends who were present, and offensive in matter and manner. He constantly alluded and pointed to me and my friends as we sat upon the platform as "you fellows," or "them fellows," declared in violent tones that we white leaders were to be individually held responsible hereafter; and, by way of illustration of his meaning, referred to the lynching of six colored men in May last, charged with the murder of the Harmons, in Edgefield County, and declared that "if he had been present he would have taken Dr. Barker, the white coroner, and Mr. Richardson, the white sheriff, tied them between the niggers, and given them the same fate." Judge Hoge spoke next, and was followed by Col. D. Wyatt Aiken, the democratic candidate for Congress in that district. I did not hear Colonel Aiken's speech, but all the reports of it which I received agreed in stating that it was of a similar tone to that of Colonel Lipscomb, though exceeding it in violence of personal denunciation and threats. I left the ground at eight o'clock, in order to take the Columbia train; and I may mention, as my last experience at this meeting, that as I left the stand and reached the outer margin of the crowd I met a cordon of mounted white men, so closely "dressed," in military phrase, in ranks of two or three deep, that I was forced to request to be allowed to pass through and to wait until the ranks could be broken for my exit. Every mounted white man whom I observed was armed with one or two pistols.

Meeting at Abbeville.—At the date of the Newberry meeting I was under engagement to address a similar republican meeting at Abbeville Court-House on the 22d of August. On the return of Judge Hoge and Mr. Jilison from Newberry on the 19th of August, they strongly advised the abandonment of the meeting at Abbeville in view of their experience at Newberry, and especially on account of a violent and threatening harangue made at the depot at Newberry on the morning of the 19th, to a band of his partisans, by Col. D. Wyatt Aiken. I replied that I should keep my engagement at Abbeville from a sense of imperative duty to my republican friends there. Unwilling to allow me to go alone, these gentlemen gallantly consented to accompany me on the 21st to Abbeville Court-House. On arriving at Abbeville, I found our republican friends, as at Newberry, firmly convinced that if we held our meeting prudence would compel us to allow the democrats to occupy half the time, and even then they were greatly apprehensive of trouble. An arrangement was accordingly entered into by which three speakers from each party were to take part in the meeting. At the hour appointed we proceeded to the place of meeting, where we found the republicans assembled, after the manner of ordinary political meetings. As soon, however, as the republicans were assembled, companies of mounted white men, marching in martial order, and under the command of officers or persons who gave orders which were obeyed, began to pour over the hill in front of the stand and to take their places at the meeting. At this time I sat beside General McGowan, and we agreed in our estimate that there were from eight hundred to one thousand mounted white men present. They came, as I know, from Edgefield County, and, as I was informed, from Newberry, Anderson, and Laurens Counties, as well as from Abbeville County. When fully assembled they covered more than one-half the space around the stand, besides entirely encircling the whole meeting with mounted men. I spoke first. In the course of my speech, in response to loud and repeated cries from the white men, "How about Hamburg," "Tell us about Hamburg," I replied, "Yes, I will tell you about Hamburg," whereupon I saw a sudden crowding toward the stand by the mounted white men on my right, and heard distinctly the click of a considerable number of pistols.

I was followed by Col. D. Wyatt Aiken in a speech filled to overflowing with the spirit of intolerance and violence. With his thousand mounted and armed partisans cheering him on, he shouted to the five or six hundred colored republicans, "If you want war you can have it—yes, war to the knife, and the knife to the hilt." With a thousand armed white men drinking in his words, he singled out one colored man in the crowd for special personal denunciation. Turning to me he charged me personally with complicity in sending arms clandestinely to Newberry to arm the blacks against the whites, with absolute falsehoods in relation to the Hamburg massacre and the calling for United States troops, and declared over and over that the white leaders must be held personally responsible for all future misgovernment by the republican party. Later in the day Mr. Jilison while speaking was so greatly interrupted by the white men that he was unable to make a connected speech or to pursue his intended line of argument. After the meeting was closed and while the colored republicans were carrying a United States flag past the public square in the village, an effort was made by a party of mounted white men to snatch it from them, fifteen or twenty pistols were discharged in the air, and a general riot was thereby made imminent.

Meeting at Midway.—I attended a similar meeting at Midway, in Barnwell County, on the 24th of August, called by republicans but attended by a large body of white democrats, who marched into the village on horseback, but who, on this occasion, dismounted before they reached the place of meeting. This meeting was addressed by two democratic speakers, both of whom alluded to and described me and the other republicans speakers present as "buzzards," "plunderers," "adventurers," and "carrion crows." Maj. G. D. Tillman, the democratic candidate for Congress in that district, made a speech rivaling in some respects the speech of General Gary at Edgofield. He charged that I shared the plunder with McDevitt; that I sought to shield him from arrest by giving information to him of the fact that I had issued requisitions for his return from Florida and Louisiana; that I pardoned Walker because I had shared with him in legislative "steals," and finally assured his friends that in a few months I would either be "a fugitive from justice or wearing the striped suit of a convict in the penitentiary." These are but a few specimens from his speech. During the speech of Judge Hoge, who spoke later in the day, in consequence of a retort by the speaker to a white man who had repeatedly interrupted all the republican speakers with insulting remarks and questions, several pistols were drawn, violent threats were made against Judge Hoge, and a trial justice who was present rushed upon the stand to inform me that he could no longer restrain the white men, and for full twenty minutes the speaking was completely interrupted.

Meeting at Lancaster.—I went on the 30th of August to Lancaster Court-House to address a republican meeting similar in all respects to those I have already named. The same scene was repeated, several hundreds of mounted and armed white men, their leaders having previously demanded and been granted a division of the time for speaking, surrounding the entire republican audience. After two republican and two democratic speakers had been heard, Hon. A. S. Wallace, member of Congress from that district, took the platform, but after vainly endeavoring to obtain a hearing he was obliged to leave the stand without making a speech.

Nearly every fact and incident stated in the foregoing account of these meetings fell within my own personal knowledge. I have omitted many facts vouched for by perfectly trustworthy eye-witnesses, such as the repeated drawing of pistols on me behind my back and the threats against my life uttered by persons at too great a distance to be heard by me. At none of these meetings did I witness or know of a single disorderly act on the part of any republican, nor did I hear a word spoken by a republican speaker personally disrespectful to a democratic speaker. At each of these meetings the coolest and best-informed republicans felt that the only alternatives were to abandon the meeting or yield to the demands made by the democrats, unless we were willing to run the imminent hazards of violence and bloodshed. These meetings were, moreover, as you have observed, held at points widely asunder in our State, and thus were evidently the result of a matured and well-understood plan.

Democratic "bread and butter" proscription.—I now present these to you as an answer to your claim that all the methods of the democratic canvass are peaceful, orderly, and within the law. I pronounce such a course of conduct as I have now described as an outrage upon free discussion, a mocking travesty of free speech, and a plain, palpable, systematic attempt to deter republicans from canvassing the State, and to overawe and put in physical fear peaceful citizens assembled to discuss political questions; and I submit the justness of this verdict to the candid judgment of all who respect individual rights or public order and peace.

I now proceed to present another phase of the democratic canvass, which bears upon your claim that all your methods are legitimate and within the law. I propose to present evidence of an authentic character to establish the fact that the democratic party has adopted and is carrying out a systematic plan of social and political proscription, with the set and avowed purpose of forcing men to vote contrary to their convictions and wishes.

As specimens of what may be called social proscription for political ends, I present the following language, used by Col. J. S. Cothran, of Abbeville, in the democratic convention in May last, as reported in the Charleston News and Courier of May 8, 1876. Colonel Cothran said:

"Many have joined that (the republican) party to their eternal disgrace, and they will never recover from it. No, sir; nor their children, nor their children's children. [Cheers.] The very fact of their deserting their friends and their race is the best proof of their dishonesty. Fidelity is the best proof of honesty of soul, and he who has it not to his State and to his people, is altogether dishonest."

In a democratic speech made at Walthalla, on the 4th of September, and reported in the Greenville Enterprise of September 16, Ex-Governor B. F. Perry used the following language:

"And here I would appeal to my democratic friends all over the State to stop all social intercourse with any man who is base enough to be a radical. Let him feel by your conduct toward him that the brand of infamy is on him and his children. This is the only way you can reach his black heart. Let him see that there is a moral pestilence around him which prevents all social contact with honorable men, and leaves him for patronage and society to his own chosen rogues and plunderers."

The Lancaster Ledger of August 30 gives a report of a democratic meeting at Lancaster Court-House, at which the following resolution was "unanimously adopted":

"Whereas several white citizens of Lancaster village and county have associated themselves with the negro radical party, and thereby turned against their own race, and rendered themselves unworthy of social recognition by the Anglo-Saxon race: be it

Resolved, That we, the democratic citizens of Lancaster village, pledge ourselves not to countenance them except only in business transactions, and that we also request our young men and boys in the village and county to carry out this resolve."

As another phase of the same system of political coercion, I present the following from the editorial columns of the Charleston News and Courier of September:

"PREFERENCE, NOT PROSCRIPTION."

"The mechanics and workingmen of Charleston are true as steel, and will follow the standard of Hampton wherever it shall lead them. They have an organization of their own, known as the Workingmen's Democratic Association, and are, with the ward clubs, doing good service in the canvass. At a meeting of the association held on Thursday night the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the members of the Workingmen's Democratic Association, do hereby indorse the resolutions adopted at the last meeting of the sixth ward, and further, that we insist that democrats should no longer patronize republicans in trade or retain them in employment.

Resolved, That we make it known to the public that we have in the Workingmen's Democratic Association good, true, capable, able-bodied, and willing-hearted men, who are ready to answer to the calls of the executive committee to fill places of labor or trust.

Resolved, That many of these men have been compelled for months to remain unemployed, and are ready and anxious to earn honestly the necessaries of life, and can and will, if the chance is offered, fill positions such as teamsters, truckmen, warehousemen, porters, shipping-clerks, cotton-samplers, railroad-yard men, wharf and vessel men, laborers in factories, &c. and, in fact, any position requiring muscle and brain.

Resolved, That we believe that these men amongst us, with a fair education, are better capacitated to fill these situations than most of the republicans now thus occupied.

"Similar action has already been taken by ward clubs and by the Butler Guards. The claim is just. How shall we obtain and retain friends in a campaign, where every vote is important, if the democratic public persist in placing their supporters on the same footing? The line of preference, not proscription, must be drawn. Long enough have the people of South Carolina fed and clothed their political enemies and done good to those who hate them.

* * * "What we advise is, that the average republican voter be made to understand that his personal interests require the success of the democratic candidates. You may argue with him for hours and make no impression. Even platforms and constitutional amendments will not satisfy him. For years he has seen that the democrats would spend money freely to obtain votes, but he has never seen that when he wanted work it made any difference whether he voted one way or another.

"We propose to change all that, and say to the republican voters: We shall, no matter what the inconvenience, employ those who are members of democratic clubs and vote for Hampton, in preference to those who vote for Chamberlain and Elliott. We will give work to those who follow Hampton and go with us; and we will not give that work to those who, by their votes, seek to defeat, hurt, and ruin us. They who vote with us are our friends, and we will take care of them. They who vote for the robber ticket are our enemies, and we will have nothing to do with them.

"Let the democracy say this and act upon it, and every republican will have one good reason for hurrahing for Hampton for every dollar he expects to earn during the year. They will not all come over. We do not wish them to. Some should be left behind to mark the contrast between the reputable and well-to-do supporters of Hampton and the disreputable and out-at-elbows republican. Once convince the masses of the voters that the democracy, in town and country, are in earnest about this, and the fight is surely won.

"The cry will be raised, of course, that what we advise is 'intimidation.' If it be 'intimidation' to discriminate in favor of your associates and neighbors and against ruthless or senseless adversaries, the radical press are welcome to it. * * *

"The more general the practice, the greater will be the democratic majority. With a fair election we need at least ten thousand republican votes, and there are at least fifty thousand employers of republican labor who can get them and more by preference, not proscription."

And the following from the editorial columns of the same paper of September 12:

"DEMOCRATIC BONDSMEN OF RADICAL OFFICE-HOLDERS.

"Any citizen of Charleston who now becomes a bondsman for a radical official is a worse foe to the cause of good government than if he boldly voted the rascally radical ticket at every election. In voting with the radicals he would do no more than any negro who will pass muster as of full age can do equally well and more frequently; but in becoming, in these days, a surety upon the official bond of a radical appointee, the responsible citizen brings property and position to the rescue of such fellows as Berney, and gives to the public enemy the means of securing office-holders who will faithfully do their dirty work and hinder the success of the democracy. * * * The opponents of the democratic party are the adventurers who live by stealing—whether their stealing takes the form of discounts and commissions, of bribes, or of exorbitant pay of worthless services. These adventurers require the aid of every office-holder in the State, and when they find one who will not be as unscrupulous as they are, or who will not use his official influence and patronage to cause the foul bird of radical victory to perch on their black banners, they require his removal and procure the appointment of some servicable Berney who will be to them as clay in the hands of the potter. Straw bonds find scant favor in Washington. The Berneys and their kidney cannot qualify unless property-holders will be their sureties, and such sureties, with rare exceptions, can be found among democrats alone. It is a patent truth, therefore, that the democrat who now becomes the bondsman of a radical official lends himself to the basest uses of radical wire-pullers of the Patterson-Bowen stamp, and throws the whole weight of his influence and means on the side of public debauchery and vice. * * *

"For those who thoughtlessly agree to become the bondsmen of Berney, and have since seen their error and withdrawn their names, we have no harsh words; but there will be neither grace nor mercy for those who, knowing the character of the crisis, become the instruments of the brutal knaves whose aim is that perpetual power whose cornerstone is African dominion over the good people of the State."

And the following from the Chester Reporter of a recent date:

"OFFICE-HOLDERS.

"There is some excitement in Charleston on account of a statement recently made in one of the papers of that city that several democrats had become sureties on the official bond of one Berney, who has been selected by Hon. John Patterson for the office of postmaster of Charleston, in place of Bosemon, the present incumbent, who is a republican, but not zealous enough in the great work of 'five years' good stealing.' This subject of becoming sureties on the bonds of radical officials is one which comes home to us here in Chester. Some of our best citizens have been and still are bondsmen for carpet-baggers, whose occupation here is office-holding and alienating the blacks against the whites. We submit the question whether, at a time like this, when the people are engaged in an earnest struggle to save their property from public robbers, those of our citizens who are sureties for these officials are not practically giving aid and comfort to the enemy. Let all democratic bondsmen of radical officials ponder the question."

Another phase of this system is disclosed by the following editorial article in the Marion Star, of September 27:

"RENT NEITHER LANDS NOR HOUSES TO ANY ONE WHO VOTES THE RADICAL TICKET.

"The above heading forms a part of a resolution which is being adopted generally by all the land-owners throughout the country, and is looked upon by the colored people as a hardship, a kind of persecution. A hardship it may apparently seem to them, as the farmer thus assumes the independence of asserting what class of laborers he will and he will not employ. It has taken him eight years to arrive at this independence; but the continued depreciation of his lands, the financial stagnation of the country, the high taxes that threaten confiscation, all have conspired to make him declare that he will not longer harbor the agent of his misfortune. * * * We laud the plan, and think every farmer in the country should give it his hearty support. Let every farmer accept it, and the colored voters had as well butt against a brick wall as oppose it.

"Farmers have tried moral suasion until the folly of that course has become self-evident, and now they come to the exercise of a legal right which can but produce the desired result. Adopt the plan and stick to it, and two years hence they will not need the support of such a resolution, for the colored voters will have felt the benign influences of good government, and will readily act with their employers. The manufacturers up north, who have their hundreds of employes, march up to the polls and vote their whole company as they see fit, and southern employers have the same right and should dare exercise it."

The following appeared in the Charleston News and Courier as part of the correspondence of the well-known "Paysan," writing from the Fork of Edisto, under date of September 18:

"The following resolutions, adopted by the Easterlin's Mill Democratic Club, are commended to the attention of the different clubs throughout the State. Similar resolutions have been adopted by the Willow Township, Graham's, and Bamberg clubs, and no doubt by many other clubs in Orangeburgh and Barnwell Counties. It is intended that the names of the obnoxious leaders in each township be sent to the different clubs throughout the county:

"1. Resolved, That we will not rent land to any radical leader, or any member of his family, or furnish a home, or give employment to any such leader or any member of his family.

"2. That we will not furnish any such leader, or any member of his family, any supplies, such as provisions, farm-implements, stock, &c., except so far as contracts for the present year are concerned.

"3. That we will not purchase anything any radical leader or any member of his family may offer for sale, or sell any such leader or any member of his family anything whatever.

"4. That the names of such persons who may be considered leaders be furnished to this club at the earliest date, and that a list of the same be furnished each member of the club.

"5. That whenever any person or persons who shall be denominated radical leaders by a vote of this club shall cease as such, these resolutions shall become null and void so far as such leader or leaders, or any members of his or their families, are concerned.

"6. That we will protect all persons in the right to vote for the candidates of their choice.

"7. That these resolutions be published, and that all the democratic clubs in the county and throughout the State are hereby requested to adopt them."

The following resolutions published in the Columbia Register, of September 28, were "unanimously adopted" by the democratic club of ward 3 in the city of Columbia, and I notice that the same meeting of the club was addressed, among others, by yourself:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this club that the time has come when we must distinguish our friends from our foes; that we must manfully show our preferences in the employment of and in the trading with those who support the grand movement of reform and honest government to those who are endeavoring to foist upon us the same corrupt and dishonest administration that for eight years has had no object but the degradation of the name of South Carolina and the personal aggrandizement of the carpet-baggers and a few renegades.

"Resolved, That rumors being current in the city that certain merchants in this ward are going to show their preference for the present administration on the 7th of November next, that the president of this club do appoint a committee of three or five, the duty of this committee being to present the roll to every man in the ward for signatures, thereby giving to each one the opportunity of vindicating himself, and at the same time enabling the honest laborers for reform to discriminate between friends and foes, and that they report at the earliest possible time.

"Resolved, That this resolution shall apply equally forcible to porters about stores and offices, carpenters, mechanics, barbers, butchers, hack-drivers, and, in fact, to every one who receives wages from the honest citizens of this ward."

In the Charleston News and Courier of August 7, in an account of the county democratic convention of Aiken County, it is stated that a resolution was adopted by the convention "recommending the people of the county to employ no one who refused to vote the ticket put forward by the State democratic convention.

The foregoing examples, selected from a vast mass of similar evidences, are presented here as proof of the fact already alleged, that the democratic party has adopted and is carrying out a systematic plan of social and political proscription, with the set and avowed purpose of forcing men to vote contrary to their convictions and wishes.

It is within the knowledge of every man who is acquainted with the present condition of the State that the written and formal statements of the plans of political coercion convey a very faint idea of the actual practice of your party. Prudence and good policy in a majority of instances dictate the concealment of such plans, and the instances now cited of open avowals of the purpose of political coercion are for that reason the more startling proofs of the spirit in which the system has its origin. The advertising columns of the Charleston News and Courier and the local columns of other democratic newspapers in this State furnish constant examples that the published evidences which I have cited fall far short of representing the extent of the system which they disclose.

I now call your attention to the following sections of the revised statutes of this State:

"If at any election, as in the eighteenth section of this chapter is mentioned, any person shall offer or propose to procure another, by the payment, delivery, or promise of money, or other articles of value, to vote for or against any particular candidate or measure, or shall offer, for the consideration of money or other articles of value paid, delivered or promised, to vote for or against any particular candidate or measure, such person so offering to procure or vote shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the court."—Chapter CXXXI, section 20, page 727.

"If any person shall, at any of the elections in any city, town, ward, or polling-precinct, threaten, maltreat or abuse any voter, with a view to control or intimidate him in the free exercise of his right of suffrage, such offender shall suffer fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court."—Chapter CXXXI, section 24, page 728.

"Whoever shall assault or intimidate any citizen because of political opinions or the exercise of political rights and privileges, guaranteed to every citizen of the United States, by the Constitution and laws thereof, or by the constitution and laws of this State, or for such reason discharge such citizen from employment or occupation, or eject such citizen from rented house or land or other property, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." * * *—Chapter CXXXI, section 26, page 728.

I am now prepared to pronounce the system which I have set forth, and which constitutes a prominent part of the democratic canvass, a plain infringement of moral and social right, and a clear violation, in its most prominent features, of the laws of the State.

Democratic rifle-clubs.—I next call your attention to another state of facts bearing upon your claim that the present democratic canvass is conducted by agencies which are peaceful and within the law. I refer now to the armed organizations which go under the names of "rifle-clubs," "saber-clubs," and "artillery-clubs." Of the exact extent of these organizations your information is doubtless much more ample than mine; but I think I am warranted in saying that such organizations exist in every county in the State, and that in many, if not most, of the counties they embrace a large majority of the white men between the ordinary limits of age for military duty, as well as a large number both below and above such limits; that these organizations are armed, officered, drilled to a considerable extent at least in the manual and military movements appropriate to the character of their arms and organizations, and obey the orders of their officers, is clear in many cases, and is probably true in all cases; that they have appeared in public on a number of occasions in various parts of the State, and recently here in Columbia, with their arms, and under command of their officers, is well known; that they serve as the basis of political organization, and, under the command and control of their officers, engage in political duties and work, is equally clear. In fact, a leading feature of the present democratic State canvass is the constant attendance upon the democratic meetings of these clubs, acting in their organized character and capacity.

In no instance of such clubs organized since December 1, 1874, has authority for their formation or existence been given by the governor, nor are any such organizations reported to him officially or in any manner authorized or recognized by him as forming any part of the military force of the State. The existence of a few military clubs organized for professedly social purposes, many months since, was made known to the governor, but aside from these cases the whole system of military organization now referred to has no official sanction or recognition from the governor of the State. So long as these organizations retained their character as social clubs little importance was naturally attached to the question of their legality. Recent and present events, however, and the use now made of these organizations as a prominent agency in the democratic canvass, give public importance to their character.

I now call your attention to the following extract from the revised statutes of the State:

"That the organized militia of this State shall be known as the national guard of the State of South Carolina, and shall consist of such divisions, brigades, regiments, and battalions, and in addition thereto such batteries of light artillery and troops and squadrons of cavalry, as the commander-in-chief may deem expedient, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the power of the commander-in-chief, in case of war or insurrection, or of imminent danger thereof, to order drafts of the militia, and to form new regiments, battalions, brigades, or divisions, as he may deem just and proper: Provided, That there shall be no military organizations or formations for the purpose of arming, drilling, exercising the manual of arms, or military maneuvers, not authorized under this chapter and by the commander-in-chief, and any neglect or violation of the provisions of this section shall upon conviction be punished with imprisonment at hard labor in the State penitentiary for a term not less than one year, nor more than three years, at the discretion of a competent court."—Title IV, chapter XV, section 14, page 102.

The organizations to which I call your attention are now seen to be organizations not only not authorized by the law but forbidden by the law. But their organization is not more illegal than their objects. Those objects are disclosed by their conduct, and are no more doubtful than the fact of their existence. The incidents of the present canvass which I have already stated, and others which I shall hereafter state, show the use that is made of these organizations. As a fair statement of the objects of these organizations, as well as the testimony of an experienced and well-known observer in the South, I present an extract from a letter of H. V. Redfield, published in the Cincinnati Commercial, and reproduced in the Charleston News and Courier of September 19:

"TRUE INWARDNESS.

"The outsider is apt to be puzzled by accounts of affairs here. He may not understand the formation of rifle-clubs, rifle-teams, artillery companies, among the whites. What are they afraid of? They are not afraid of anything. Why, then, this arming? They intend to carry this election, if it is possible to do so. The programme to have rifle-clubs all over the State, and, while avoiding actual bloodshed as much as possible, to so impress the blacks that they, or a number of them, will feel impelled to vote with the whites out of actual fear. The blacks are timid by nature, timid by habit, timid by education. A display of force unnerves them. The whites understand this, and an immense marching about at night, and appearance at any republican meeting to 'divide time' is with a view to impress the blacks with a sense of danger of longer holding out against white rule. Add to the number they can scare the number they can buy, and they hope to have enough, united with the solid white vote, to gain the day, elect Hampton, and secure the legislature."

Thus the objects and the conduct of these "clubs" are shown to be as illegal as their organization. In organization, in objects, in conduct, they are neither peaceful nor orderly, nor within the law. And yet they are perhaps the most prominent method and agency employed by your party in this canvass.

Instances of actual violence.—I proceed now to direct your attention to some other occurrences in our State which have a relation to the present canvass, and especially to your claim that all your methods are peaceful, orderly, and within the law.

The Hamburg massacre.—The massacre at Hamburg occurred July 8, a month prior to the opening of the democratic canvass. I will state some of the undisputed facts of this massacre. Those who committed the massacre were white democrats; those who were massacred were colored republicans. Passing over all that occurred before the time when all resistance or show of resistance to the white democrats had ceased, it is a fact, as well authenticated and undeniable as the assassination of President Lincoln, that five unarmed republicans, while held as captives by a large body of armed white democrats, were deliberately and wantonly shot to death by their white democratic captors. If the facts of the riot were admitted to show that both parties were equally responsible for its origin and equally engaged in its progress from beginning to end, the unimpeachable fact would remain that five colored republicans, after the riot was ended, were butchered by a band of white democrats. Intention and motive, when not expressed in language, must be judged of by acts and circumstances. Applying this test to the Hamburg massacre, the conclusion seems to be that color and political party had much to do in prompting the massacre. It is significant, too, that the massacre occurred in a section of our State in which the present "straight-out" democratic canvass took its rise, and where were found its most efficient promoters in all its earlier stages. It is in vain to seek to evade the just and awful responsibility for these murders by asserting that the colored republicans at Hamburg had maltreated, insulted, and exasperated the white democrats beyond the point of endurance.

If this be conceded, the fact remains that the five colored republicans who were butchered, together with their companions, were completely overcome and in the complete custody of the white democrats who butchered them. One of your democratic orators has sought to cover this vast crime with the plea of Mr. Burke for the American colonists—"I pardon something to the spirit of liberty." But the American colonists needed no advocate to acquit them of wholesale murders, nor did Mr. Burke sully his lips with the atrocious plea that wanton butchery of unresisting prisoners could be condoned when committed in the name of liberty.

The Charleston riot.—On the night of September 6th a riot occurred in the city of Charleston. The most trustworthy information seems to fix the chief responsibility for causing this riot upon the republicans. Certainly such is my present belief. The riot continued for some hours, and greatly endangered the lives and property of the citizens of Charleston. It was inexcusable and disgraceful. But it was subdued by the republican authorities; it was attended by no slaughter; it was followed by no butchery. It is now, as I am credibly informed, an open secret that the one man who died from wounds received in this riot declared by his dying declaration that he received his wound from a misdirected shot from the pistol of a democratic friend, and that the single policeman who was seriously wounded suffered from the same cause. The riot was the result of high political excitement, and was an exhibition of the dastardly spirit of political intolerance. It has fastened a bloody blot on the party that caused it.

The Ellenton riot.—And now contrasting the methods and circumstances and results of this riot with the Hamburg riot, I ask your attention to a more recent occurrence, which is called the Ellenton riot. Though this riot occurred chiefly on the 16th of September and the three or four days following, it has been impossible up to the present time to obtain a full and connected report of its origin and course. Certain general facts and some specific details are, however, known. Its origin was an assault upon a white woman in the course of an attempted robbery of her house by two negroes. One of the alleged robbers was arrested, and, while in the custody of his captors, was shot. Out of these occurrences grew the riot. Of the conduct of the colored people engaged in or connected with the riot, I will not speak with confidence, lest my present information should be found to give a too favorable account. It is certain that a force of armed white men was speedily assembled from the surrounding country from a distance of thirty miles and more.

On the 18th and 19th this force amounted to not less than six or eight hundred men, all armed, under officers, company and general, but assembled by no lawful authority, and acting under no lawful orders. On the morning of the 19th the arrival upon the scene of a company of United States troops caused the dispersing of these rioters. The results of this riot are stated by General Johnson Hagood, one of the nominees on your State ticket, to be two white men and about thirty colored men killed. My other information reduces the white men killed to one, and increases the number of colored men killed to forty or fifty. That nearly all the colored men killed were not killed while resisting the execution of the law or any legal process, or while violating the peace or threatening or attempting any violence, is a fact established by clear proof. They were shot down wherever found; in fields and woods, on highways and in cabins, along the railroad-track and at the railroad-stations.

I give you an account of the murder of Simon P. Coker, a member of the present legislature and a delegate to the recent republican convention in Columbia, as related to me by an intelligent and trustworthy eye-witness of the scene, a person well known to me personally. While sitting in the car of the railroad-train at Ellenton, on the 19th ultimo, my informant saw Coker walking unarmed in company with several armed white men. Coker's manner indicated that he did not consider himself a prisoner or in danger, as he was talking freely with the white men who accompanied him. Coker and those who accompanied him proceeded to a piazza in front of a store at Ellenton

Station and sat down for a few moments, but soon proceeded to a large tree standing about thirty rods from the spot where my informant stood, Coker still appearing unconcerned. While standing under this tree the white men suddenly stepped away from Coker about six paces, and, turning, fired a volley into his body. He instantly fell, whereupon several of the party advanced towards his body and fired upon it a second time. My informant also mentions as a fact that he saw N. A. Patterson, a democratic trial-justice of Barnwell County, walking in company with Coker at Ellenton Station at the time first above stated. Coker, it now appears, had been enticed from his home to Ellenton upon some false pretense of a summons to answer a criminal charge.

The killing of colored people in connection with the Ellenton riot extended far and wide, and was kept up for several days. In truth, my information leads me to believe that it cannot be said to have ceased now. Persons living in the vicinities named vouch to me personally for the truth of these, among many other, instances of murders of colored men in Barnwell County, growing out of the Ellenton riot.

On the 24th of September, several colored men were picking cotton near Elko, among whom were two refugees from the vicinity of Ellenton. Eight or ten white men rode into the field and fired upon these refugees, killing one and wounding the other. The dead body was carried and thrown into a swamp, where it was found on the 25th by Trial-justice Black, of Blackville, and Captain Kenzie, of the United States garrison at Blackville.

On the night of the 24th, a party of white men visited the house of a colored man about seven miles from Blackville, and took out a colored man who was a refugee from near Ellenton. This refugee has not been seen or heard of since.

On Sunday, September 24, two colored men escaping from the vicinity of Ellenton, passed a church near Allendale while the white people were at church. They were pursued by white men from the church, and overtaken at the cabin of a colored man at early evening. One was shot and died of his wounds at 9 o'clock that night, and the other, though wounded, escaped.

These are but a few of the outrages which I fully believe have been committed by white democrats, members of democratic rifle-clubs, upon colored republicans in Barnwell County alone. More than forty colored and white refugees are reported to me as under the protection of the United States troops in their camp at Blackville at this time.

I present these facts to you as a portion of the evidence now in my hands and within my knowledge, which refutes your claim that the methods and agencies now employed by the democratic party are peaceful, orderly, and within the law.

The present armed organizations which constitute the effective force of the democratic party, as well as its chief agency in its canvass, are manifestly a menace to the peace of the State and the rights of the members of the republican party, because those organizations are unlawful in their origin, unlawful in their aims, and aggressive and law-breaking in their conduct.

DEMOCRATIC "PROTECTION."—I come now to your demand that if I believe that lawlessness and terrorism prevail in the State I should call upon you and your party to suppress it, before I appeal to the Government of the United States. I am familiar with this demand. I have heard it here and have heard it abroad. It is made the occasion of constant reproach that I am governor of the State and yet cannot and do not preserve the public peace. General Hampton and his followers are seeking to profit politically by uttering this reproach and declaring their easy ability to maintain the peace of the State. I shall answer your demand with perfect plainness of speech. The reason I cannot and do not maintain the peace of the State and suppress lawlessness and prevent terrorism, is solely because the democratic party are the authors of the disturbances of the peace, the lawlessness and terrorism which they now reproach me with and demand that I shall allow or invite them to suppress. Qui custodes custodiet?

To intrust the protection of those who are to-day endangered by the present disturbances to the armed, mounted, unlawful, democratic rifle-clubs, would, in my sober judgment, be as unnatural and unfaithful in me as to set kites to watch doves, or wolves to guard sheep.

Actual lawlessness is, in my judgment, and upon the evidence before me, prevalent to-day in several counties and sections of the State, and I believe, upon the best attainable evidence, that it has already resulted in the killing of from forty to fifty defenseless and unresisting republican voters. Terrorism, resulting from lawlessness and violence, extends far more widely; and in support of this statement, I repeat here the remark made to me two days since by a white democrat who had crossed the country from the vicinity of Robbins station, through Barnwell County to Blackville, that "he did not see a 'nigger' man anywhere." But when, in view of this lawlessness and terrorism, you and your associates mock me with the demand to put it down by calling on the white armed democrats who are the authors of it, I answer that you are welcome to the political advantage such a demand may give you, but I shall yield to no such demand so long as I hold the office of governor.

You know, as I know, that the republican voters of this State are not organized for successful resistance to the aggressions of the democratic rifle-clubs. You know, as I know, that to call upon the colored republicans alone to suppress this lawlessness and terrorism would be to invite or precipitate a conflict, the result of which would be to increase, rather than suppress, the lawlessness and terrorism which now exist. In such an emergency my only reliance for effective physical force must be upon United States troops. I have struggled long and hard to avoid a resort to this agency. I have hoped against hope that a sober second thought would come to those who govern the democratic party strong enough and just enough to relieve me from the necessity of action which must inflict great temporary injury upon the material interests of the State. But I am invested with large and extraordinary powers by the laws of the State to meet extraordinary emergencies.

The executive of the United States will do his duty, and I shall do mine; and it shall be seen by the world whether the right to a peaceful and free ballot by the citizens of this State, conferred and made inviolable by the constitution and laws of State and nation alike can be trampled under foot by any combination or party of men in this State. The people of this State know that I am not a rash or unjust man, that I am tender of every private and public interest and right; but they know also that I am accustomed to doing my duty, without haste but without fear.

I have doubtless wearied you, sir—I certainly have wearied myself—in setting forth the various matters which were essential to my reply to your communication. The statements of facts herein made all rest upon actual evidence now before me, the sources of which I should have here stated if I had not been compelled, in order to secure the evidence, to give a solemn promise, in many instances, not to make known the sources.

In conclusion, I have only to renew my acknowledgments for the respectful form of your communication, and to express the hope that I have followed your example in that regard, and that the peace and prosperity of South Carolina may be speedily restored and perpetually maintained.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANIEL H. CHAMBERLAIN,

Governor of South Carolina.

PROCLAMATION.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Executive Chamber.

Whereas it has been made known to me, by written and sworn evidence, that there exist such unlawful obstructions, combinations, and assemblages of persons in the counties of Aiken and Barnwell, that it has become impracticable, in my judgment, as governor of the State, to enforce by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings the laws of the State within said counties; by reason whereof it has become necessary, in my judgment, as governor, to call forth and employ the military force of the State to enforce the faithful execution of the laws; and

Whereas it has been made known to me as governor that certain organizations and combinations of men exist in all the counties of the State, commonly known as "rifle-clubs;" and

Whereas such organizations and combinations of men are illegal and strictly forbidden by the laws of this State; and

Whereas such organizations and combinations of men are engaged in promoting illegal objects and in committing open acts of lawlessness and violence:

Now, therefore, I, Daniel H. Chamberlain, governor of said State, do issue this, my proclamation, as required by the 13th section of chapter 132 of the general statutes of the State, commanding the said unlawful combinations and assemblages of persons in the counties of Aiken and Barnwell to disperse and retire peaceably to their homes within three days from the date of this proclamation, and henceforth to abstain from all unlawful interference with the rights of citizens and from all violations of the public peace.

And I do further, by this proclamation, forbid the existence of all said organizations or combinations of men commonly known as "rifle-clubs," and all other organizations or combinations of men or formations not forming a part of the organized militia of the State, which are armed with fire-arms or other weapons of war, or which engage or are formed for the purpose of engaging in drilling, exercising the manual of arms, or military maneuvers, or which appear or are formed for the purpose of appearing under arms or under the command of officers bearing the titles or assuming the functions of ordinary military officers, or in any other manner acting or proposing to act as organized and armed bodies of men; and I do command all such organizations, combinations, formations, or bodies of men forthwith to disband and cease to exist in any place or under any circumstances in the State.

And I do further declare and make known by this proclamation, to all the people of this State, that in case this proclamation shall be disregarded for the space of three days from the date thereof, I shall proceed to put into active use all the powers with which, as governor, I am invested by the constitution and laws of the State for the enforcement of the laws and the protection of the rights of the citizens, and particularly the powers conferred on me by chapter xxxii, of the general statutes of the State, as well as by the Constitution of the United States.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, at Columbia, this 7th day of October, A. D. 1876, and in the 101st year of American Independence.

By the governor.

[i. s.]

H. E. HAYNE,
Secretary of State.

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 26, 1876.

JAMES CONNER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. My age is forty-six years; my residence is in Charleston.

Q. What position did you occupy, and what part did you take, on the democratic ticket in this State during the last election?—A. I was candidate for attorney-general. As such, I went with General Hampton through the upper part of the State to Anderson, Oconee, Pickens, Spartanburgh, Greenville, Darlington, Marion, and Williamsburgh.

Q. State the general character of the meetings you attended.—A. All the meetings that I attended were thoroughly quiet and peaceable. They were very largely attended; nearly everybody in the county was there, I think; they came from all parts of the county. Our system of organization was this: in each county, clubs were formed according to townships. Each township had its democratic club, and when these appointments were made the clubs from each township would come to the court-house. Some of them had twenty, thirty, and forty miles to ride, and they all came together mounted. There were no arms at all; I did not see a musket or saber in the entire campaign.

Q. What was the character of these clubs?—A. Political clubs organized for the campaign. When we started this campaign, there was no organization in the State at all. The democratic party had not made a contest in the State since the war, and the whole organization had fallen to pieces. There was not even a democratic executive committee in the State. We had to build up everything from the commencement, and in the May convention we determined to re-organize the party. I was chairman of the executive committee, and we commenced organizing throughout the State by having county chairmen in each county, and having the clubs in the townships. We took the township as a convenient territorial subdivision.

Q. Were these clubs all organized subsequent to the opening of the campaign?—A. Subsequent to the organization of the campaign; before the nomination. It was in the May convention that we decided to re-organize the party.

Q. Was there any connection between these clubs and those which were formerly known as incorporated rifle-clubs?—A. None whatever. Those were distinct organizations. I don't know of any properly called rifle-clubs outside of Charleston and Columbia. There may have been in some of the interior towns, but, so far as my knowledge goes, the rifle-clubs proper were confined to Columbia and Charleston.

Q. Have you had occasion to examine the nature of these rifle-clubs?—A. So far as Charleston is concerned, I know them very well. The first club that was formed I think was in 1866 or 1867. There had been a German club, a schiltzenfest club, established for years. They made their first parade in the spring of 1866. That idea was taken up, and there was a club formed there of the young men, or rather I should say the boys, eighteen, nineteen, and twenty years of age. They formed the Carolina Club. Then year after year other clubs were formed; old organizations that had existed prior to the war were re-formed. There were the German Fusileers, one hundred and seven years old, re-organized; the Charleston Light Infantry re-organized; and one by one those which were formerly military companies re-organized as social clubs.

Q. Did these clubs have any political character?—A. Not a particle.

Q. The clubs that you refer to in your testimony were political clubs?—A. Political clubs.

Q. Were they secret clubs?—A. There was no secrecy at all. Their places of meeting and their meetings were advertised openly, and just as well known as the terms of court.

Q. Did those clubs attend your meetings in an armed capacity or unarmed?—A. Unarmed. As to sabers and guns I can speak positively; whether there were pistols or not I cannot say; I do not know; but there were certainly none visible.

Q. State the character of these clubs at these meetings; whether they went there for the purpose of intimidating people or creating a disturbance.—A. Not a particle. They went there just as a ward-club would go to a political meeting in New York with its banner and its band of music, if it had one.

Q. So far as your meetings were concerned, did you see on the part of these clubs any manifestation of violence?—A. No, sir. In all the public meetings that I attended there was not one single disturbance. The nearest approach to a disturbance which took place during the fore part of the campaign was a quarrel between a white man and a colored man, which occurred half a mile from the place of meeting, at Darlington. Liquor had more to do with it than anything else. It was a little difference between a white man and a colored man that was stopped at once. The white man was arrested and put in the guard-house.

Q. State as well as you can the general method of conducting your election, and the nature of your appeals to the people, and especially to the colored people.—A. Our one dominant idea that we all had in the canvass was to get an opportunity to speak to the colored people. We were satisfied that we had the white people. We knew that their interests necessarily carried them with us. Our object was to get an opportunity to speak to the colored people. Wherever we went we offered to divide time. For instance, if we held a meeting in the morning we would take occasion to say, "We want to meet the colored people. We don't care what your political opinions are; we want to have an opportunity to put our side of the case to you, and we will divide time with your speakers or make any arrangement you choose that will give us an opportunity to address you." We would ask them to bring their friends to the meeting, and without a single exception, at every place that I attended, arrangements were made by the committee of arrangements specially for the colored people, so as to get them near the stand where we could see them and speak to them. Sometimes we succeeded in getting a tolerable attendance; at other times, especially where there were republican counties, there were very few negroes in attendance; and we could not get them out. At last, at Darlington, for instance, as we went through the town out to a grove where the speaking was to be, the streets were lined with colored people, and General Hampton would speak from his carriage as he would pass, "Come out to the grove; come out to the speaking, if you don't choose to vote for us you need not, but we want you to come out and hear what we have to say." When we did have the opportunity of speaking to them, we endeavored to show them that their interests were identical with ours. We ran our political argument upon opposition to the carpet-bagger. We endeavored to show them that the State had been eight years under the carpet-bag rule; that there had been $16,000,000 of taxes collected; that there had been about $12,000,000 of bonds; that out of all that money which had been obtained there was nothing to show; that there were no internal improvements, no buildings, nothing whatever to show how the money had been disposed of; that no State on earth could stand that continued drain, and we cited Governor Chamberlain's own messages to show that reform was absolutely necessary; that no State could stand such continued misrule. We endeavored to show them that their interests were ours; that we could reduce taxation and the expenditures of the State one-half; that the reduction in taxes meant an increase in wages, and that if we were relieved from the burden of taxation we could prosper, and they could prosper with us. We endeavored, by arguments of that nature, to satisfy them that their interests were ours. Then we addressed them upon the school question; we showed them the money that had been annually appropriated for their schools, and in each county. We would appeal to them and ask them, "How many months have your schools been kept open in this county? Have your school-teachers been paid?" They would almost always say, "No, no, they have not been paid." Then we would show them where the taxes had been levied to pay for their schools, and that the money had been squandered; that it had been collected from us and they had not got the benefit of it, and that we pledged ourselves that if they would put us in power we would keep up the appropriations and would see that the money was honestly expended. The school question was one which the negroes had very much at heart. Another point was protection for themselves. We showed them that Chamberlain's government had been utterly powerless to protect them. We told them in the upper part of the State, (it was not necessary to tell them in the lower part.) He told them of the scenes that had taken place at Combahee and Beaufort where gangs of colored men had gone along the road, going into the plantations and whipping the men who refused to strike; that they had gone on so for weeks; that the rioters when arrested had been released by the mob, and that the men who were beaten had been unprotected; that the governor had given them no protection whatever; and that a large number of men had been taken out in those counties and cruelly whipped, and that they had no remedy at law which they could enforce, and no protection from the governor.

Q. Are you familiar with those rice riots?—A. I know of them pretty well.

Q. When did those riots occur?—A. In July, I think. The first I know of it was in this way: I got a telegram from the citizens of Yamasee Station imploring me to bring up some men or the protection of themselves and their families; that the whole country was in a state of ferment.

I declined. The sheriff telegraphed that he had arrested the rioters, and they had been rescued from him and he was powerless to re-arrest. He telegraphed for help. I immediately telegraphed to the attorney-general and the governor forwarding by telegraph copies of the dispatches that I had received. The first telegram I got was the night before. The next morning the telegrams kept coming making appeals, and the young men were anxious for an armed body to go up to protect them, but I opposed it; finally, about three o'clock in the afternoon, I took a special train and went up myself to see what the trouble was, and that if there was a necessity for any assistance being given for the protection of the women and children there that I could telegraph back to Charleston and have it brought up. Of course when I got there I did not see the things myself. My knowledge is derived from the information furnished me at that point.

Q. How long did those riots continue?—A. Off and on for five or six weeks. There would be a strike and disturbances; then there would be an interposition, and they would be quiet for a week or ten days, and then it would break out again.

Q. What was the cause of the riot?—A. It was curious; it was not a strike between employer and the employé. They would go on plantations on which the laborers were working perfectly contented, and would notify them to quit work. In many instances, the laborers would hesitate to do it; they were getting one dollar and sixty cents a day, and a great many of them did not like to lose it; it was harvest-time and they were getting that regularly every day. But those that would not strike they whipped and beat and forced them to strike. A great many planters lost very heavily from the fact that just at the season when the crop should have been harvested they were deprived of the labor.

Q. Who were these men that went around in this way and interfered with the laborers?—A. Political leaders, colored men.

Q. What was their motive in doing that?—A. Well, that is hard to get at. It was undoubtedly to influence them on the election, for they had connection with Charleston, and whenever there was a movement in Charleston there was a corresponding movement there. After our torchlight procession, a democratic ratification meeting, it was followed by a strike on the Combahee; as we would make a success, there would be a counter-movement on the Combahee or Cooper River.

Q. State whether in your campaign through the State, either on your own part or on the part of other gentlemen that were addressing these meetings, any threats were made to the colored people that unless they voted the democratic ticket they should not have employment?—A. Not one.

Q. Did you hear anything of that kind?—A. I never heard anything of the kind at any public meeting that I attended.

Q. Do you know whether there was any disposition on the part of the democratic leaders, or any policy of that kind?—A. No policy that I heard of. I did hear that arrangements had been made by individuals. I know that in Charleston the question was brought up before the county executive committee. Something had appeared in one of the papers recommending what they call the "preference policy," and it was brought before our executive committee, and discussed perhaps for an hour or so in all its phases, and the committee by resolution decided that they would not recommend any such policy.

Q. Was the democratic party or the democratic committee at Charleston in any possible way a party to announcements in certain papers in Charleston of this policy of preference?—A. No; it was left entirely to individuals to do just as they chose. We distinctly declined to put it out as a party policy.

Q. Then the editors or proprietors of those papers who may have stated anything of the kind, or allowed it to be stated in their papers, were alone responsible?—A. They did it on their own responsibility.

Q. You say it was no part of the democratic programme?—A. We distinctly rejected it as a part of the programme.

Q. During the campaign, what was the general condition of the State as to peace and quiet and good order?—A. It was thoroughly peaceable.

Q. What was the condition of the State at the time Governor Chamberlain issued his proclamation announcing an insurrectionary condition of the State?—A. Thoroughly peaceful. There had been but one disturbance in the State, and that was at Aiken and Hamburg.

Q. You practice law in Charleston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You practice in the courts here and at Charleston or elsewhere?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could the processes of the court be served and its orders enforced?—A. O, anywhere in the State.

Q. Could the authority of the courts be sustained and enforced throughout the State without trouble?—A. Without the slightest trouble. The best indication of that was that I was telegraphed to go to Aiken, and went there after this Ellenton matter and met Major Corbin, (I was associate counsel with the local counsel,) and he was sending out troops for the arrest of parties, and I told him that if he would simply give us a list of the parties he wanted he need not trouble himself to send the military; we would send word and we would pledge ourselves that by twelve o'clock next day every man that was within thirty miles of the place should be there. That was in connection with the Ellenton riots. It was terribly wet weather, and they were sending the military tramping all over the county, and I told Major Corbin just to give me the list of the men he wanted and in twenty-four hours I would have them there.

Q. Was it true that those men submitted themselves?—A. Every one. There was not a case of resistance. The men came right up, without waiting for the warrants, the moment they heard there were warrants out for them. Some we know and sent them word, and they came right into town.

Q. The Hamburg riots occurred prior to the opening of the campaign proper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had the Ellenton riots had any political character or significance?—A. None that I know of.

Q. Do you think of anything else in connection with the election that you desire to state?—A. The only point that I desire to state is this: I have told you the line that we worked through the whole campaign, and the nature of the appeals we made to the colored people, and wherever General Hampton went he excited a great deal of interest among them. They are a curious race, and judge more by the eye than they do by the ear. It is not what you say that affects them, but they look at you and note what manner of man you are and how you say it. They pin more faith to appearance and manner than they do to what is said. His presence was very fine and he had a wonderful effect and influence upon them. Before he came down to the low country, when I went on up to the Combahee, negroes were anxious for him to come down. Every gentleman who came down from that section to Charleston would come to me and appeal to me to get General Hampton to come down to the low country, the negroes were so anxious to see and hear him; and after he did go down, we heard from negroes down there pledges of support; that they would vote for the Hayes and Wheeler presidential ticket, but they would vote the Hampton State ticket. That was the line that they all ran on. They did not come over to us on the presidential issue, but simply on the local issue, and I suppose in Charleston alone we must have had from 2,000 to 2,500 negroes who pledged their support to the Hampton local ticket. Everything was as smooth and prosperous as it could be in the low country and in the upper part of the State, and it was changed on the introduction of the troops.

Q. State what effect the introduction of troops had on the colored voters.—A. They were told by their own leaders —

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you hear them?—A. Not directly, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State only the result of your own observation.—A. Well, we could only see the result—the change. Those very ones who had pledged themselves to vote our home ticket would come to us and say, "We cannot do it." A single instance to illustrate the pressure. A colored man, and a very respectable one, who does a good business as a butcher—I judge from what I know of him that he is worth from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars, which is, for that class of people, very comfortable—was an earnest supporter of General Hampton's ticket; he voluntarily came out and spoke to some friends of mine down there, and pledged his support to the ticket. Two days before the election he wrote a letter, which was shown to me, stating that he could not fulfill his pledges; that the pressure was too great. It was a letter written to Mr. Lowndes, the gentleman to whom he had made the pledge, and he said: "I have always dealt fairly and squarely with you, and I cannot allow you to remain under the idea that I am going to fulfill my pledge, for I cannot."

Q. Did the introduction of troops have any effect to create the impression that they were to rely for protection not upon the Army, but upon the civil law?—A. The impression was that the troops had come there to see that they voted the republican ticket; that was their idea.

Q. From your knowledge and observation, did that influence a large number of colored men in their votes?—A. O, yes; I think it diminished our vote immensely. In Charleston County alone I think it deprived us of from 2,000 to 2,500 votes. In the upper part of the State the effect was still more marked, but that is only stated on information.

Q. Where were you on election-day?—A. In Charleston.

Q. Were you about the city during the day?—A. A portion of the day I was. There were a large number of officials there; deputy marshals with their badges, negroes—I won't say that they were all negroes, but I don't recall a single white man. Then there were a large number of deputy sheriffs, and they were exceedingly arrogant and offensive, and nothing but the caution that we had given to our people—everybody who had any influence there—prevented disturbances that day. We had taught, and enjoined, and urged upon our people to be forbearing, that there must be no disturbance; and but for that there would have been a great deal of difficulty there that day.

Q. Is there anything else that you wish to state?—A. No, sir; not at this moment.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The colored voters in Charleston have a majority?—A. In Charleston County—yes, sir.

Q. There were no disturbances on the day of the election?—A. There were one or two slight disturbances. Troops were brought down at one time to the poll. I was not there at the time.

Q. There was no serious violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any violence at any of the political meetings which you attended in the country?—A. No, sir.

Q. No republican ever inflicted any violence upon any of the democrats at democratic meetings?—A. O, no, sir; these were democratic meetings, and, as I told you, the republicans attended very slightly. Our object was to get them there, and we failed, except in some instances.

Q. They did attend in considerable numbers, though, at all the meetings, did they not?—A. At some meetings there were a good many negroes. I did not inquire their political faith, but I think the majority of those who did attend were democratic negroes, because every effort was made to keep away the republican negroes from our meetings by their leaders.

Q. Well, there was no disturbance at any of the democratic meetings you attended?—A. Not a single disturbance at any of the meetings that I was at.

Q. You spoke of having offered to divide time with the republicans; during what time was this offer made?—A. Before the campaign opened by the proclamation of the executive committee; and in the very first political speech which General Hampton made, which was at Anderson, he announced it openly there.

Q. But you do not mean that, at each one of your meetings, you made the proposal?—A. At every single meeting we said we would be glad to divide time if the republicans wanted it.

Q. Was that announcement made?—A. It was made by General Hampton himself.

Q. At the commencement of the meetings?—A. In his speech; I don't know that it was at the commencement always.

Q. The meetings were announced as democratic meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No previous arrangement or offer was made, prior to the time of the meetings, for a general discussion?—A. In this sense it was made, that General Hampton announced it in his opening speech, and at all his meetings; the appointments were all made and his speeches were all reported, and it was known throughout the State that it was the policy of his campaign.

Q. There was no proposition made otherwise than that for an opportunity for republicans to speak at those meetings in each county?—A. I think not. None that I know of. That would be a local matter, of which I would know nothing.

Q. Did you attend any republican meetings?—A. No, sir. At Marion some of the republicans did avail themselves of the opportunity and came upon the stand and discussed the issues with us.

Q. Who discussed with you there?—A. Two men; one was a county commissioner, and one was a member of the legislature. Their names I do not recollect. They were strangers to me.

Q. Then if you were not at any of the republican meetings during the campaign, you had no opportunity to know whether they were peaceable or not?—A. No, sir; I did not attend one.

Q. What is the character of the colored people of this State generally? Are they a timid people, inclined to be alarmed at a show of violence?—A. It would depend altogether on whether they were excited or not. I believe, from my knowledge of them, that when they become excited they are as utterly reckless and ungovernable as so many wolves; in their ordinary normal condition they are quiet and peaceful, not disposed to disturbance at all.

Q. They are not what would be called a malicious people?—A. O, no.

Q. Quiet generally and inoffensive?—A. Quiet and inoffensive, but at the same time they are inflammable and excitable and can be led off into anything.

Q. But are they not a people who would be alarmed at a show of force and a display of fire-arms for instance; would they not be inclined to retire from a contest rather than to urge themselves into it?—A. The only opportunity I have had of real observation of that was in Charleston, and I did not see that inclination there.

Q. I speak of their character generally through the State, so far as you know it?—A. I say that is the only opportunity I had of seeing whether they were disposed to provoke a collision. They certainly were not disposed to retire when they saw armed men.

Q. I did not mean to inquire for any particular instance?—A. As a general thing I would say that they are a peaceable, quiet, orderly population, but that they are excitable, inflammable, and when they do become excited they do not reason at all.

Q. They are not a people who are inclined to originate difficulties?—A. No, I should say not, when left to themselves.

Q. You spoke of some disturbance at Darlington where a white man was put in a guard-house; for what was he put in?—A. Something of a quarrel grew up between a white man and a colored man in the town. The meeting was in a grove outside of the town. The disturbance took place and the chairman of the executive committee was down there and he just took the man and had him put in the guard-house.

Q. The charge was not that the colored man had been guilty of any violence?—A. The quarrel sprang up between them and the white man drew a pistol and they had him arrested and put in the guard-house. Both parties were reported to have been under the influence of liquor; and that was the only disturbance that I saw during the whole campaign.

Q. You have spoken of those rice-riots; was not that a question about the wages that laborers should obtain for their services?—A. I think not, sir; because in a number of plantations the laborers were perfectly satisfied with their wages, and if left to themselves they would have gone on.

Q. But those who interfered were demanding higher wages, were they not, or insisting that higher wages should be paid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the real cause of the disturbance, then?—A. No; I think it was the nominal cause; I think the real cause was political. The white people were getting an influence over the colored people for the first time in eight years; we were gradually getting an influence over them and getting them to listen to us and believe in us.

Q. Was not the purpose of those men who were instrumental in getting up the riots as expressed by them to demand higher wages?—A. Unquestionably it was as expressed by them.

Q. Did they say anything about politics in their riots?—A. O, yes; their riots were all attended by political speakers who made political harangues.

Q. Were you at any of the meetings?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you do not know whether political speeches were made or not?—A. As I have told you, my information was derived from being on the spot when I went up to ascertain what the difficulty was, and I heard the statements from all sides there.

Q. Did you make inquiry of those who were engaged in inciting the disturbance?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then your information was derived only from the other side?—A. Only from those who heard them.

Q. You would not be able to state, then, what their purpose was without having ascertained the purpose as declared by those who were inciting the disturbance?—A. Only as received from general information. For instance, I was in a group of twenty men who had been at the meetings and were giving an account of what was said.

Q. How soon after that was it that Governor Chamberlain issued his proclamation?—A. About the rifle-clubs?

Q. Yes; and other disturbances. It covered a variety of disturbances, did it not?—No, sir; I don't think he specified anything.

Q. Were you in the counties of Aiken and Barnwell?—A. No, sir; for when I was telegraphed for professionally to meet Major Corbin—

Q. That was after the Ellenton and Hamburg riots?—A. Yes, sir; after that, when I was up there with the United States marshal making the arrests.

Q. Then you have no personal knowledge of the condition of things in Aiken and Barnwell up to the time when the proclamation was issued?—A. No direct personal information.

Q. Do you know whether rifle-clubs existed in most of the counties of the State?—A. I think not. I could not speak positively as to that.

Q. Were you out of Charleston to any considerable extent until you went on your political campaign?—A. No, sir; I had not been out of Charleston in a year, I think.

Q. Then you had no means of knowing whether the rifle-clubs continued to exist in different parts of the State up to the time of the proclamation or not?—A. Yes, sir; I had in this way: there was hardly a rifle-club started that did not write to me in Charleston to send them a circular showing where they could buy arms, and what was the price.

Q. At what time were they started?—A. They started in Charleston in 1866.

Q. Now, as you were not outside of Charleston during the year until you went to make political speeches, you have no means of knowing, of your own personal knowledge, whether the rifle-clubs were kept up or not?—A. Rather, whether they had commenced. I tell you my knowledge is that there were none existing outside of Charleston and Columbia.

Q. But they were organized in 1866?—A. In Charleston and in Columbia.

Q. Do you know whether they were organized in other parts of the State?—A. I do not think they were.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to whether they were or were not?—A. Only by seeing men from the different counties, and I think I would have known it if they were.

Q. If the governor issued his proclamation on sworn testimony he would be more likely to be in possession of correct information on that subject than you would be, residing in Charleston and not being out of the city for a year?—A. That would depend altogether upon the character of the sworn testimony, because he might have testimony of such a character that my sources of information would be better.

Q. But if his sworn testimony was taken carefully, and from reliable men, then his means of information would be better, would it not?—A. Certainly; but the governor would not specify one particle of testimony, and, although he was appealed to in the papers, he has never furnished the evidence on which that proclamation was based.

Q. Well, it might not be judicious for him to do so, to expose the men who gave the information to the vengeance of those around them.—A. Then he is placed in this position: his sources of information are challenged and he does not produce them, and it is open to doubt whether he had the information.

Q. That is a matter of argument.—A. Yes; it is a matter of argument.

Q. You have read his proclamation?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't he say in the proclamation that he had sworn evidence of the allegations contained in his proclamation?—A. Yes, sir; but at the same time I knew that it was only six weeks preceding that that the governor himself had reviewed every rifle-club that there was in Charleston, and presented it a stand of colors.

Q. The rifle-clubs in Charleston, however, were peaceful?—A. They were everywhere, so far as I know.

Q. Do you know whether they were or were not?—A. I say, so far as know, they were.

Q. You don't know whether they were or not?—A. I do not.

Q. Was there not a good deal said in the speeches against carpet-baggers?—A. A great deal, sir; I said a good deal of it myself.

Q. Were not a good many appeals made to local pride against men because they came from other States to hold office?—A. No, sir. That is, if you permit me to say so, an ingenious question. There are two branches of that. A great deal was said about the carpet-bagger; an immense deal; we rang the changes on him on every stump. We never had any objection to any man who came here and was willing to take part with us and work and help us; but what we defined as a carpet-bagger was the man who came here and lived off us, and who, just as soon as there was nothing more for him to get would pack up his carpet-bag and quit.

Q. The term carpet-bagger was applied to a man who was supposed not to have a permanent interest in society here, but who was ready to stay as long as he could make it profitable, and leave as soon as it ceased to be so?—A. Exactly, sir; that is our definition of him.

Q. Now, didn't you endeavor to make the people believe that all the republican State officers who had come here from other States were of that manner of men?—A. Yes; and we endeavored to do it by citing the one upon the other; we would cite what Chamberlain had said about Elliott and what Elliott had said about Chamberlain; what Cardozo had said about Dunn and what Dunn had said about Cardozo, and Elliott about the whole party. We brought up their own utterances, and showed how each had blackguarded the other, and we put it to the people, "Can there come reform from such men?"

Q. As a matter of fact, was there not a strong prejudice among the leading democrats of the State against any northern man who came here and engaged in politics as a republican?—A. Yes; but you must let me go on to say this: That the character of the northern men who came here and engaged in politics was such as to damn any man who followed their lead.

Q. That is your idea of it.—A. Of course; our idea of it. There were northern men who came here, and are in Charleston now, who are republicans and who have always voted the republican ticket, but they were as much down upon this thieving, plundering crew as any of us. They never voted in politics with us, but always sustained their own presidential ticket, but they would not vote for those men.

Q. Soon after Governor Chamberlain was inaugurated as governor, and until early in this season, did he not pursue a course which was satisfactory to the leading democrats of the State?—A. He did.

Q. And did they not laud him as a good governor and an honest man?—A. No; not the latter. They did this: Chamberlain was the best chance we had had for reform. We fought him tooth and nail in the election, and when he was elected we thought he was the worst specimen of the carpet-bagger that had ever been elevated to office; we were very apprehensive of the result. Chamberlain adhered to the pledges which he had made in the campaign, and did try for reform. His whole party went back upon him, and we, seeing that he was working for reform, gave him all the support that we could in the house and the senate and the community.

Q. While he co-operated with the leading democrats he had their favor?—A. No; he did not co-operate with the leading democrats. The leading democrats sustained him in the reform role that he was endeavoring to play.

Q. Don't you know that if a northern man comes into this State and takes an active part in politics, he is socially ostracized, as a general rule, by the citizens of this State?—A. No, sir; not if he is a kind of man whose business, education, and breeding entitle him to social recognition.

Q. If he is an active republican?—A. He may be an active republican, and if he is an honest man and a gentleman, it does not affect his social recognition.

Q. Would it not affect his business?—A. Not the slightest, sir. One of the largest merchants in Charleston is a northern man, a republican, and I should suppose that with the gentlemen with whom he associates he has not a political opinion in common, but he is thoroughly recognized socially.

Q. You are not familiar with the condition of things outside of Charleston in that respect?—A. Well, here in Columbia I am. I am a good deal here; five or six times in the year.

Q. You say that Chamberlain's government was powerless to protect the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a fact, is it not?—A. I think so.

Q. Have the civil authorities in this State been able to protect the colored people for the last six or eight years?—A. I do not think they have.

Q. Not since the war, have they?—A. I do not think they have.

Q. Is it not a notorious fact that a large number of the men who have killed colored men have escaped punishment?—A. I think the fact is so.

Q. And it has been so ever since the war?—A. I think so.

Q. And have there not been a large number of colored men killed through the State, by common notoriety?—A. A good number.

Q. And has any white man been punished for killing any one of them?—A. I think not. I ought to add a fact, that the juries throughout the country are mostly composed of negroes, and I venture, from my knowledge of it in Charleston, to say that, no matter what the testimony or the charge of the judge is, any man who has got money down and is tried, can always get one man to hang out on the jury.

Q. Is there no fault with the white men also?—A. In what respect?

Q. In failing to prosecute the white men who are guilty of crime, and on the part of white jurors in refusing to convict?—A. I don't think the fault lies there.

Q. As a matter of fact, haven't a large part of the men who have been guilty of these crimes escaped even a trial?—A. O, no.

Q. Many of them have, have they not?—A. No; I think they have been tried.

Q. But as a general rule they have managed to escape conviction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not the condition of things in this State, growing out of the rice-riots, the Ellenton riot, the Hamburg massacre, or riot, or whatever you choose to call it, and other similar disturbances, when the civil authorities were not able to keep the peace or protect men against whom there was violence threatened, such as rendered it necessary that there should be some protection by the United States troops or in some form?—A. I think the protection could have been legally given—I will speak of the Combahee riots, as I know more about those—they could have been checked and punished purely and entirely by the legal officers if Governor Chamberlain had gone down on the spot and seen that his officers did their duty.

Q. Is it not a fact which you know from the condition of affairs in this State, that there is a purpose on the part of the people to yield obedience to whatever is required through the United States troops?—A. O, unquestionably.

Q. Well, is it not equally true that there is a disposition to disregard whatever may be required by the civil authorities under Chamberlain?—A. There is, unquestionably.

Q. Has it not been so during the past year?—A. No, sir; because when this Combahee riot took place I forwarded the telegrams to the attorney-general—the governor was not here; he was up the road, and I forwarded them to Mr. Stone and told him that whatever assistance was needed to support the sheriff could be had from Charleston.

Q. You said that you thought the colored people had the impression that the troops came here to see that they voted the republican ticket. Do you arrive at that information from what you heard the colored people say?—A. I don't think I do.

Q. You don't mean to say that the colored people understood they were to be coerced to vote the republican ticket by that?—A. No; but that their leaders had told them that was the object of the United States troops being here.

Q. To protect them that they might vote as they chose?—A. O, no; to make them vote; because on the islands where there are five or six hundred negro votes only ten white—

Q. Did you ever know or hear of any United States officer or soldier indicating in any way to the colored people that it was their duty to vote the republican ticket?—A. I never did.

Q. There was no such interference by troops?—A. O, no; the troops never countenanced that idea.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You speak of these political clubs; there were clubs composed of colored men entirely, which attended some of those meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They came in bodies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it with the democratic vote this year compared with other years; was there an increased vote?—A. I cannot estimate that, because in every previous contest since the war, since the negroes have had a right to vote, we have voted for a republican.

Q. Has there been any political contest made by the democrats since 1868?—A. No, sir; we have never had a ticket of our own.

Q. Was the democratic white vote greater or less this year than previous years?—A. Very much greater. In the debate in the convention whether we should nominate a democratic candidate or not, men would rise and state that five or six hundred men in their counties, who hadn't cast a vote since 1868, would vote this time.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. In reference to white men never having been punished for the killing of the black men, I understood you to say that they had been tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the result generally was a disagreement of the jury, or an acquittal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you attributed that to the fact that a large portion of your jurors were black men, and in some way or other one juror could be always had to disagree?—A. Yes, sir; I don't mean to say that there was no instance otherwise.

Q. And that is the explanation of the fact in your judgment as a professional gentleman?—A. Yes, sir. And another thing; in some of the counties the solicitors are so incompetent that their indictments won't hold water, and when a man is convicted the indictment is set aside on motion in arrest of judgment.

Q. State if some of the officers of the law connected with the prosecution are not so thoroughly incompetent that it is impossible that they should obtain a right result.—A. O, it is notorious that their indictments don't hold water.

Q. In reference to the feeling spoken of, is not a fact that your objection has been heretofore against the northern men because they had joined in what you considered robbing and stealing from the people of the State, rather than that they came from the North, or the West, or any other place?—A. That is it. The trouble is that the northern men who came down here after the war were, to use a slang phrase, "on the make," and they only regarded us as so much plunder.

Q. And, as I understand you, the objection to them was not that they came from the North, but that they joined with these thieves, as you considered them?—A. It was utterly immaterial where they came from, sir.

Q. And you have the misfortune to have some of the natives acting with them, and the objection is just as strong against them?—A. A good deal stronger against the natives.

Q. Previous to this proclamation, did you ever hear in any way as a matter of public news, or knowledge, of any trouble from the rifle-clubs outside of Charleston?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The term "scalawag" is used in the political language of this State; that is used to describe a native white man who acts with the republican party, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That term is applied to all native white men who act with that party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is an opprobrious term?—A. We so regard it.

Q. In all the elections since the war, have there not been two candidates for governor?—A. Yes, sir; in all except the first. I don't think that there was any opposition to Scott.

Q. Haven't the democrats always as a general rule supported one of the two opposing candidates?—A. Yes, sir; but they have divided. Sometimes as many democrats would support one as supported the other republican.

Q. In the election of two years ago Chamberlain was the republican candidate?—A. And Green. The majority of democrats voted for Green, some voted for Chamberlain, and a third portion refused to vote at all.

Q. As a general rule did not nearly all the democrats vote for Green?—A. No, sir. I think the majority of those who voted, voted for Green.

Q. Did not nine out of ten?—A. No, sir; I don't think more than seven out of ten.

Q. When you had candidates for Congress to elect, you always had two candidates?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The democrats supported one, and the republicans the other?—A. Yes, sir.

—Q. The lines were closely drawn, were they not?—A. No, sir; because, sometimes, if it was a general election, the democrats would not come out to vote. Kershaw was beaten in his congressional district by the men who staid at home, and would not come out because they would not have anything to do with a mixed election.

Q. You had democratic candidates generally?—A. Yes, sir; generally.

Q. Not only democratic candidates, but candidates who were democrats?—A. Yes sir.

Q. And so on the State ticket for State officers?—A. No, sir; we never had a democratic candidate. We had sometimes in the counties candidates for the local offices, sheriff, coroner, probate judge, clerk, but I don't remember a single democratic State ticket.

Q. At the election two years ago were there not candidates for all the State offices who were supported by the democrats?—A. I suppose so. We paid so little attention to it, though, that for the life of me I cannot remember who composed Green's State ticket; I only remember Chamberlain's.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. This term scalawag was applied to people who supported this particular state of things which you regard as stealing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not to a man who supported the national republican party, but disconnected himself from these people?—A. No, sir. It was applied to men that were in the State-house or court-house ring. Every court-house had a little ring.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were there not always rings of somewhat similar character in this State?—A. No, sir; I think not.

WEDNESDAY, December 27, 1876.

ALANSON W. RANDALL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where were you stationed at the time of the last election in this State on the 7th of November?—Answer. At Edgefield Court-House.

Q. How long had you been stationed at that point?—A. I got there on the 27th of October, and remained there until the 10th of November.

Q. Who was the officer in command at that point?—A. General Brannan.

Q. You were next in command to him?—A. No, sir, Colonel Closson; I was next to him.

Q. You were at Edgefield Court-House on the day of the election?—A. I was.

Q. State what you know with regard to the election on that day as to quiet and good order.—A. I was sent to the polls, the first precinct, at seven o'clock in the morning by direction of General Brannan, on account of a report made to him by the deputy marshal that the polls were obstructed. On my arrival there, I found that there was no obstruction, and that there was perfect peace and good order. I conversed with several of the colored men there, and also with several whites. I asked them what was the cause of the report, and was told, and saw for myself, that it was simply that the white men were voting and had possession of the polls. At the same time I saw among them here and there a colored man, and at the foot of the court-house stairs there was a number of colored men drawn up in a column the same as the white men were. Voting was progressing in an orderly manner, and on communicating with the managers as to whether there was any obstruction, they sent me word that there was not. I staid at the polls some fifteen or twenty minutes, and I saw that there was no obstruction and no evidence of any obstruction on the part of either party, but the utmost good feeling prevailing.

Q. Did you see any riotous conduct, any violent demonstration of any kind, there?—A. Not at all, sir; not the slightest, unless you call cheering by both parties. There were cheers for Hampton and cheers for Chamberlain by the respective parties; what we would call a cheer; it was a yell.

Q. What did you do then?—A. After that I reported to General Brannan, who had left his hotel and proceeded to his office. I made my report that I saw no obstruction, and that everything was quiet. I was sent again to this same precinct by General Brannan to Edgefield Court-House, to investigate into a report that was made in regard to obstruction at the same polling-place. I went there officially, and walked around and made inquiries, and saw for myself, and I could not see the slightest disturbance. In fact there was perfect quiet, except that men were in crowds talking together, the blacks having mostly gone down to the poll at Magnolia Church. I conversed with several of the men and asked if there had been any trouble or reported trouble, and they said there had not, and I reported to General Brannan. I visited this same precinct unofficially several times during the afternoon and toward evening, and I saw nothing in the way of disturbance or intimidation, or anything else. Toward night-fall there were quite a number of mounted men listening to harangues or speeches made to them by General Butler and General Gary—congratulatory speeches; and they were rather near the polling-place, and an officer was sent by General Brannan to this polling-place, and at his approach they moved back and left the place clear. When it was reported to General Brannan that the polls were obstructed he sent for the deputy marshal, Beatty, and I saw that marshal take in parties of six and ten men to vote. They passed right through this crowd and the crowd gave way for them. He came up to the poll about 5 o'clock in the afternoon on a report made to him, as I understand; but that is hearsay.

Q. Were you at the second precinct during the day?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the general condition of the town of Edgefield as to peace and order during the day? You were about the town, I suppose?—Yes, sir; I was about the town several times.

Q. What was its general condition in these respects?—A. I think, considering the circumstances of the hotly-contested election, that there was very good order prevailing. The intendant, Mr. Marsh, had his deputies appointed, and they were quite active in the discharge of their duties. There was considerable riding about by the mounted men, and there was occasionally some cheering, but I think it was remarkably quiet. I have seen elections in the North ten times more noisy.

Q. Did you see anything in the town of Edgefield during that day that indicated a disposition on one side or the other to intimidate voters or prevent a fair expression of their opinion?—A. In my opinion, no, sir; I did not.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What is your position in the Army?—A. I am captain of the First Artillery and brevet-colonel in the United States Army. I held the rank of brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, but that is not in the present Army.

Q. You were not at box No. 2?—A. No, sir. I was acting really as a sort of assistant or aid to General Brannan, although I had a command there.

Q. You know nothing of the occurrences at box No. 2?—A. Nothing, save by hearsay.

Q. How many mounted men were at or in the vicinity of box No. 1 at any time during the day?—A. I should say that the utmost I saw about 300, between 250 and 300 men at one time; but they were going and coming, riding from place to place.

Q. They were white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were any of them wearing red shirts?—A. Yes, sir; a great many of them.

Q. Did you see them have pistols?—A. I saw some of them have pistols strapped to their belts.

Q. They were exhibited outside?—A. Some of them were, as a pistol is ordinarily exhibited under the coat. I don't remember as to those who wore the shirt, whether their pistols were plainly exhibited or not, but I know that they had pistols, because I could see them when their coats flew aside.

Q. What time did you first go to the poll?—A. At or about 7 o'clock.

Q. How long did you remain there at that time?—A. About fifteen minutes.

Q. How long was it before you returned?—A. I returned at 10 o'clock.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid about ten minutes; enough to walk around and converse.

Q. Those were the only official visits you made?—A. The only official visits I made by direction of my superior officer.

Q. Were you at the polling-place at any other time during the day?—A. The polling-place is in a square or plaza, and I passed several times through the square.

Q. How near the voting-place?—A. Within about 50 to 75 yards.

Q. You did not observe what was going on immediately around the polls?—A. I could not but observe what was going on outside of the poll-building, but not inside; at no time did I go inside.

Q. The voting was going on inside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you did not see at any time what was going on inside?—A. No, sir; I had no authority, but positive orders to prevent my going inside.

Q. You speak of hearing cheers or yells?—A. Yes, sir; the way they cheer down here.

Q. Did you hear any colored men giving those yells?—A. O, frequently, sir; as much or more than the others; so much so that complaint was made of the annoyance.

Q. Were these colored men mounted?—A. No, sir; very few; some few were on mules.

Q. Did you see any of the colored men have pistols?—A. I did, sir; and clubs; not so ostentatiously exhibited; but of a party of sixty, who came in front of the commanding officer's quarters, I can say that hardly one of them was not armed with pistols, and they showed them, too.

Q. You say you heard speeches being made in the afternoon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did the speaking continue?—A. Well, the usual length of a stump speech; General Butler spoke, and General Gary spoke, and Mr. Sheppard spoke, and General Gary's brother spoke. They were short speeches.

Q. That was four speeches?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they each one speak twenty minutes?—A. No, sir; I don't think the length of the whole thing was over thirty minutes.

Q. The whole thirty minutes?—A. I should judge so; and my reason for judging so was that at the time we had been ordered under arms by General Brannan in anticipation of a collision between the two parties, and we stood under arms at the gate, and those speeches began and ended while we were there, and I do not think it was much over—well, I will say three-quarters of an hour.

Q. Were any speeches made by colored men?—A. Not that I heard; there were certainly none made there.

Q. Didn't the white men crowd around the speakers?—A. Yes, sir; I stated that.

Q. Was there not a large crowd of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were not a good many of them mounted?—A. Yes, sir; they were nearly all mounted.

Q. Was not that immediately in front of the place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In fact was it possible for colored men to go through that crowd to vote?—A. Yes, sir; that is exactly what they did. I saw them going in to vote, under Mr. Beatty.

Q. Was this while the speaking was going on?—A. Yes, sir; the speakers stood upon the steps, about half-way up. As these men came up they passed to the right of the speakers and passed on up into the court-house.

Q. You say you have seen elections in the North as noisy as this?—A. Yes, sir; more so.

Q. Where did you ever see an election in the North where there was so much noise?—A. At the contest between the democrats and the know-nothings in New York State there was ten times as much. In my own town of Newburgh, on the Hudson, I have seen, repeatedly, as much noise and more turbulence.

Q. What was the population of Newburgh then?—A. It had about 12,000 inhabitants.

Q. Did you ever hear as terrific yelling at an election in Newburgh as here?—A. No, sir; nor anywhere else.

Q. Then they were not as noisy at the North.—A. It was a different species of noise. I don't think there is anything that can be compared with this yell.

Q. Then the elections at the North that you refer to were not as noisy as this?—A. Not so far as yelling was concerned.

Q. Did you ever see an election in the North where there were as many pistols exhibited as there were here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see an election in the North where there were as many mounted men at one time in or near the vicinity of the polls as there were here?—A. No, sir; I never saw mounted men there, except countrymen.

Q. Did you ever see an election in the North?—A. O, yes, sir. The wide-awakes all wore hats and red, white, and blue colors.

Q. At an election?—A. Certainly, sir.

Q. Where?—A. In New York City, and all over the North. I know, aside from other evidence, that I got my head smashed for vhaing one.

Q. Where is General Brannan now?—A. At Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn.

Q. Where is Colonel Closson?—A. He is supposed to be at Plattsburgh Barracks. He is ordered to Fort Barrancas.

Q. What other military officers were at this election?—A. Lieutenant White, of Colonel Closson's battery; and this officer was also sent to be present at the counting of the ballots that night; Lieutenant Patterson, of my battery, and Major Kline, of the Eighteenth Infantry, who was sent by General Brannan to be at the polls in the afternoon, and who remained there until after the election. There were Lieutenants Cass, Durham, and Williams of the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. How many soldiers were there in and in the vicinity of Edgefield?—A. I think about 100 men, probably a little more than 100. I had 21 men and Major Closson 25, and they were all there except the buglers in charge of our camps.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How many companies were in Edgefield County altogether?—A. Seven in the entire county. I can give you the stations of every company. There was one company, Captain Keller's, sent to Richardson's, due north of Edgefield Court-House; Major Haskins, of the First Artillery, was sent to a dark corner, Liberty Hill, about due west from Edgefield; Colonel Falk was at Shaw's Mills; Lieutenant Miller, of the Second Infantry, with twelve men of Major Kline's company, was at Ridge Springs; another detachment of twelve men was at Leesville in the adjoining county, but under General Brannan's command. That left three companies intact with a detachment of the Fourth, at Edgefield, making in all not less than 100 men.

Q. The speaking that you refer to at the time you were ordered out, what time in the day was it?—A. Probably a quarter past four to five o'clock, or perhaps a little later. It was just before the closing of the polls.

Q. You were there all day, and, of course, taking an interest in this matter, you would be likely to know what occurred; how many colored men were hurt that day within your knowledge?—A. I can only say from hearsay. Within my personal knowledge there were none. There was not a blow struck nor an injury received or given during the day.

Q. How many did you hear of being hurt?—A. I only heard of one, and that was the reason I was sent to investigate; that was the object of my second visit. I was sent by General Branuan to inquire from General Butler what was the trouble at the second precinct. I saw General Butler and learned from him the occurrence.

Q. How badly was this man hurt?—A. I don't know, sir, except that he was hit with a club; as they said it, "clubbed him."

Q. You were at the headquarters during the day?—A. I was.

Q. Was that the only case reported at headquarters?—A. It was the only case reported at headquarters, and that was not reported officially; it was reported by Mr. Cain, the candidate for the State senate, a colored man.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

HENRY G. LITCHFIELD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your rank?—Answer. Captain in the Second Artillery, lieutenant-colonel by brevet.

Q. Where were you stationed on the day of the presidential election in this State?—A. At Winnsborough, Fairfield County.

Q. How long were you in Fairfield County prior to the election?—A. I arrived in Fairfield County and went into camp at Winnsborough on the 4th day of October, which would make it a little over a month.

Q. Up to what time did you remain there?—A. Until the 13th of November.

Q. State what you know of the election on election-day in Winnsborough.—A. I had excellent opportunities for observing. The polls were held directly across the street from my hotel; I never witnessed a more quiet election in any country.

Q. Was there anything that indicated violence or intimidation toward any class of voters there?—A. Not in the least that came under my observation.

Q. You were in command of the post at the time?—A. I was in command of the troops at that place. I also had a detachment at Ridgeway, fourteen miles away.

Q. From your position, commanding a force in that county, state what you know of any matters, disturbances, violence, or intimidation, or any occasion for calling upon the military forces to preserve order.—A. The troops were not called upon for that purpose at all, sir.

Q. Was any report whatever made to you or any indication of trouble given to you at any time at any of the points at which you had troops stationed?—A. Not in a single instance, except, I think, the night before I came away.

Q. That was after the election?—A. Yes, sir; and that was not in my vicinity.

Q. What was the character of the entire election at Winnsborough; was it noisy or turbulent, or was it an ordinary election?—A. A more quiet election than I would expect to see at any place.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you see any of the people kept away from voting?—A. I should be very much surprised to hear that any person had the least obstacle thrown in his way. I was very attentive, and I could not possibly, I think, have missed seeing it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And having been in the county through the month you had some opportunity to observe the general condition of the community; how was it as to peace and good order?—A. I heard of no disturbances whatever.

Q. You were charged with the general conduct of affairs in the county, in the case of disturbance or riot, were you not?—A. I went there under General Orders No. 96, and the statutes; that is all I know. I was left to my own discretion.

Q. If there had been any occasion to call out or use the troops you would have been authorized to do so?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. You were not called upon?—A. I was not.

Q. And no information came to you of anything in the way of disturbance in the county?—A. Not in the least.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How many soldiers had you at Winnsborough?—A. Twenty-five enlisted men and two officers, except on election-day. I divided my command, and I think I was left with nine privates and five non-commissioned officers.

Q. How many soldiers were at the other places you have spoken of?—A. Ten men and a lieutenant.

Q. The fact that you were at Winnsborough was generally known for some time before the election, was it not?—A. Undoubtedly, sir. Both parties held mass meetings there in full view of us.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. During the month previous to the election were any political meetings held there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any disturbance at any of them?—A. Not in the least.

Q. Both republican and democratic meetings were held there?—A. I so understood them.

Q. No disturbance at all?—A. Not in the least.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You don't know what occurred at other places where there were no soldiers?—A. I don't know how many polling-places there were in the county; I heard of no disturbance at any polling-place.

Q. You left how soon after the election?—A. On the 13th of November.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of what occurred at other places where there were no soldiers?—A. No personal knowledge.

Q. There were only two places in the county where there were soldiers?—A. I am positive as to that; there were but two places.

Q. Is Winnsborough the county seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the population of the town?—A. Three thousand five hundred, I think; it may not be so much. It is quite an old and a large town.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. If there had been disturbances through the county, you are the principal officer to whom application would have been made?—A. The only one.

Q. And no application was made?—A. None at all, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

FRANK H. BARNHART sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. You are a lieutenant in the United States Army?—Answer. Yes, sir; in the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Where were you on the day of the presidential election?—A. At Calhoun's Mills, Abbeville County, South Carolina.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I do not think I had been there more than four or five weeks; I cannot tell now.

Q. Who was in command in that county?—A. As far as my knowledge goes, I think Captain Lloyd was the ranking officer in the county, although he had only a command at Abbeville Court-House. His command was just Abbeville Court-House.

Q. Is he a captain in the Eighteenth?—A. Yes, sir; he is my captain.

Q. How many troops were in Abbeville County?—A. There were at that time, I think, twenty-eight or twenty-nine men.

Q. Was there any other regiment besides the Eighteenth stationed in that county?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Captain Lloyd was in command at Abbeville Court-House, and you were detailed to Calhoun's Mills. State the occurrences at Calhoun's Mills during the day of the election.—A. I can do so in very few words. I suppose I have been subpoenaed on account of the disturbance that took place that day, and I will tell it as I observed it. I do not know the cause of it. Some time in the afternoon, it may have been one or two o'clock, I was mounted. I was there alone, having a detachment of ten men three or four hundred yards off, and all of a sudden I noticed a disturbance, and I saw a man from Georgia, whom I had known some years before, while I was stationed in Georgia, throwing a rock at a man who I was told was a deputy United States marshal—a colored man.

Q. Named Hurd?—A. Yes, sir; that is the name. And the moment I saw it, I held up my hand and said, "Stop!" and the thing was all over. There was no further disturbance. That was the only disturbance that came under my observation.

Q. How long were you at the polls that day?—A. I was there pretty much all the day, from early in the morning until toward the close.

Q. Was there any general firing of pistols and indications of trouble during the day?—A. Soon after this affair of the throwing of this stone, there was a report came to the polls there that some colored people had fired on some white people that were leaving the polls about half a mile from there, and there was a general stampede of all the whites, and some fired their pistols in the air as they rode off. They went in full gallop through an open field firing their pistols as they rode off in the direction this fracas was reported to have taken place.

Q. Was there anybody hurt?—A. Not that I saw or heard.

Q. Was more than this one stoned there that you saw?—A. No; this man I saw in the act of throwing the stone, and after he threw it he made a movement to pull his pistol. A number were around me, and I saw that a riot was imminent.

Q. Did he pull a pistol and fire?—A. No; he did not get it out; he stopped the moment I spoke.

Q. You were right there at the time?—A. I was there close by, and not more than 20 feet from the man.

Q. And he did not draw a pistol at all?—A. Not that I saw.

Q. Well, you would have seen it if he had?—A. Well, there was a crowd, and he might have drawn it, but I did not see it.

Q. But he did not fire it?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge; no pistol was fired, and the moment I spoke everything ceased and was quiet.

Q. Was that the only trouble you saw at Calhoun's Mills?—A. That is the only trouble I saw.

Q. Did you see any intimidation of any class of voters, or a disposition to prevent them from voting?—A. Not that I saw. Of course all those mounted men that were there were armed. I noticed some men—if you wish me to tell it I will do so—some men lying along the road, and somebody said that they were afraid to go up to vote. They were colored men. I said, "Why do you not go up there and vote? The poll will be closed pretty soon, and if you do not get in your vote you will lose it." They said they were afraid. I said, "I will protect you;" but they said I could not protect them. They were afraid that my command was too small, and they hadn't any confidence.

Q. Was there anything there which justified fear?—A. Nothing more than armed men with carbines slung on their sides like cavalry. I did not hear any threatening at all; there was no threatening whatever.

Q. Would you have been afraid to have taken any number of men up to the polls to vote? Would you have had the slightest fear to do that?—A. Well, I don't know; I cannot tell; I was not in that sort of position.

Q. I mean when you told those men to go up and vote, did you regard it as a dangerous thing to do?—A. No; I supposed they could vote.

Q. There was no indication to the contrary?—A. No.

By MR. LAWRENCE:

Q. The Georgia man that threw the rock at Hurd was a white man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Hurd was a colored man?—A. Yes; and he reported to me as a deputy United States marshal.

Q. Do you know that Hurd left there soon after the rock was thrown?—A. Yes; he told me he was going to leave, and he told me to stay. Said I, "I will protect you; there is nobody going to hurt you;" but he would not stay.

Q. Don't you know from what he said that he was alarmed and afraid to stay?—A. O, yes; he was evidently afraid. He had no confidence in my being able to protect him.

Q. Colored people are a timid people in that neighborhood, are they not? Was he alarmed by a display of force?—A. O, they are naturally that way.

Q. The colored people that you saw a short time before the polls closed did not go up and vote?—A. Well, it will be necessary to explain. After this fracas took place there were, I presume, five hundred colored people standing right around there. They looked to me as though there was considerable excitement among them. I went up to them and said, "Now, for the sake of keeping the peace and having no trouble, all that have voted, I advise you to leave, and you that have not voted, vote and leave too. It will save me trouble, and be best for all." The sheriff of the county was present. They left, but I don't know whether they had voted or not before they left.

Q. You speak of colored men whom you saw and advised to vote, but who said they were afraid. Did they go off without voting?—A. Well, they did not go to the polls.

Q. How many of them were in that crowd?—A. I would be obliged to make a guess. There may have been one hundred, probably.

Q. They went off?—A. I did not see them leave.

Q. Well, they did not go to the polls and vote?—A. I did not see them go to the polls.

Q. After the assault upon Hurd, was there not a general scattering of the colored people?—A. Well, after the assault upon Hurd I went and advised them to leave—those that had voted; and they left, going in different directions.

Q. Didn't the colored people pretty much all disperse?—A. Yes; there were very few left around there.

Q. Very soon after the assault upon Hurd?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time of day was that?—A. It may have been two or three o'clock in the afternoon; it was after dinner.

Q. How many hundred colored people went away after that, as near as you could estimate?—A. There was quite a large crowd; there may have been four or five hundred.

Q. Did you see any colored men ha arms or pistols?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many mounted white men were there, as near as you could estimate?—A. I cannot tell. At one time there were not more than seventy-five or one hundred there, according to my best recollection. They kept coming and going, and I did not pay very much attention to them. I was looking out to keep the colored men out of the way.

Q. Were they generally armed with pistols and other weapons?—A. I cannot tell. I noticed a number that were armed with pistols, which were exposed.

Q. And you speak of others having carbines?—A. Yes; they had these Winchester carbines. They had them hung outside.

Q. That is a rifle?—A. It is a rifled arm, but it is called a carbine in the Army. It is a short gun.

Q. These men that had pistols and carbines were white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were largely mounted?—A. They were principally mounted.

Q. How were the greater portion of the colored men?—A. I don't recollect. I cannot make an estimate of the number of colored men that I saw mounted. I could not tell whether it was a dozen or fifty; most of those I saw were on foot.

Q. Do you know from what you saw and heard of the colored people there that day that they were alarmed for their personal safety?—A. It is merely supposition on my part. I would not say anything positive about that.

Q. Tell your judgment upon it.—A. My judgment is that they were alarmed.

Q. Generally?—A. Yes, sir; but I would not make a positive statement that it was so.

Q. From what you could see and learn of the condition of things, was your presence at the polls a necessity to protect the colored men and give them confidence to enable them to vote?—A. I don't think they had much confidence, although I felt certain—I may be wrong—that if I had not been there there would have been quite a different state of affairs; and if I had not been there at the time of this fracas, there would have been a tremendous riot there just then. I believe that my presence prevented a big riot there.

Q. The colored men would have been in much the worse condition by reason of their want of arms?—A. I don't know whether they were armed or not. They did not expose their arms.

Q. Don't you know that in a conflict of that sort the colored men, by reason of their timidity, would have been badly at a disadvantage?—A. O, well, that is perfectly natural; everybody knows that they cannot cope with the white man.

Q. You think that the colored men were afraid that your force was not sufficient to meet the danger which they apprehended?—A. Well, I have been thinking of it since. I have already told you that I thought my presence saved a riot. I have been thinking of it since the election, and have concluded satisfactorily that they thought from my association with the people I was rather inclined to be favorable to the white people and to the exclusion of them; and then at other times I have thought that they feared that my force was too small in case of a riot to give them protection. I am not able to say which idea they had.

Q. But you think that one or the other of these ideas prevailed among them?—A. Yes, sir; of course my associations were altogether with the white people.

Q. They did not have sufficient knowledge of your real character to be sure whether you were friendly to them or not?—A. That is it.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you have occasion to order up your detachment at all?—A. No, sir; they never left the camp at all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Talking about your associations, what are your politics?—A. I have none. I am a soldier.

Q. You have always been a republican, haven't you?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have no interest in politics. They do not allow me to vote. I have got some feelings about it, but I have no vote. As far as Abbeville County was concerned, my preferences were with the democrats; but they were personal, however.

Q. You were personally friendly with the white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since you have stated your local preferences, your national preferences were the other way, were they not?—A. Well, I do not—

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Your sympathies and feelings were with the democratic party?—A. They were there, I must acknowledge.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. After this stone was thrown into the crowd around the polls you advised the colored people who had voted to get away from the polls, and thereupon they moved off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those who moved off, so far as you know, were people that had already voted?—A. I suppose so from the fact that I told them that those who had voted to go, and those who had not voted to vote and go.

Q. As to that one hundred people that you referred to, you don't know whether they voted or not?—A. No, sir; I do not. I cannot tell. They said they were afraid to go and vote, and I told them they could go and I would protect them, but they did not have confidence in me or in my men, or something, and they didn't go.

Q. You don't know really whether they voted or not?—A. O, certainly not.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

JAMES STEWART sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your position in the Army?—Answer. I am a captain in the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Where were you on the 7th day of November?—A. I was at the Laurens Court-House, in this State.

Q. Were you in command of the troops in that county?—A. I was.

Q. How many troops were stationed in that county?—A. One company, consisting of forty-five men.

Q. That was the number in the entire county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they stationed?—A. Lieutenant Miller, with twelve men, at Clinton, and myself with the balance of the company, thirty-three men, Laurens Court-House.

Q. How long had you been in Laurens County before the election?—A. From the 3d day of September; I left there on the 14th day of November.

Q. State whether you were at Laurens Court-House on election-day, and what occurred there?—A. I was at Laurens Court-House during the day of election. United States commissioner came to me and asked me where I would be. I told him at the garrison, and would hold myself in readiness to respond to any requisition that either he or the United States marshal might make for me. The garrison was probably one hundred and fifty to two hundred yards from the polls. I never left there until the polls closed.

Q. Was any requisition made on you for any purpose?—A. None.

Q. What was the general character of the election in the town during that day, as to quiet and good order?—A. It was very quiet.

Q. Was there any disturbance during the day?—A. None that I am aware of.

Q. Was there any disturbance reported to you from Clinton, where you had that detachment?—A. There was not.

Q. As commanding officer, I suppose if any disturbance had occurred in the county it would have been reported to you?—A. Yes, sir; any disturbance of any moment.

Q. If there had been any trouble to amount to anything, you, as the commanding officer for the county, would have heard of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any report of any disturbance in Laurens during the day?—A. None.

Q. Was there any word of any account sent to you that men were intimidated or prevented from voting, or that there was trouble at the polls?—A. There was not.

Q. Was it commonly known throughout the county that you were stationed there with troops to preserve the peace?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was matter of public notoriety?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the time you had been there in September and October, were you at any of the political meetings, or about where they were held at any place in the county?—A. There was one meeting going on near the depot; a republican meeting.

Q. Was there any disturbance at that meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were at the meeting?—A. Not at the meeting, but remained at a place where I could see what was going on.

Q. Was there no disturbance of any kind?—A. None.

Q. Or any interference with the meeting?—A. None.

Q. During the entire time from September to November that you were in that county, was any report brought to you of a disturbance during the political meeting, or anything that required the presence of troops?—A. I went over to Greenville, and one of the speakers at one of the republican meetings told me when I came back, that while he was speaking a number of pistols were drawn upon him. He was a colored man named Thomas.

Q. Did you have the matter investigated?—A. No, sir; he simply came to me and told me, in the presence of the officers there. He did not report anything about it until the meeting was dissolved.

Q. Did he indicate that the meeting was broken up?—A. No, sir; he simply said that whilst talking they drew pistols on him and told him to leave.

Q. Where was that?—A. In the court-house at Laurens.

Q. Your troops were stationed there, and you were an officer there at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any word sent up to the troops at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any report of any disturbance of any kind made to your headquarters there?—A. No, sir; six colored men came and told about this matter after the meeting was over.

Q. What was the general condition of Laurens County as to good order and good behavior during the time you were stationed there, as it came within your knowledge and observation by official reports or by reports of any kind?—A. Before I went over to Laurens I gave shelter to six or seven colored men for several days. They reported to me that they had been run off. I told them that I could not help them; that they had better go down to the trial-justice. They went down, but he would not take the case in hand. I told them then to go to Major Earl, the assistant district attorney. They came back and said that he was in Charleston. They said they were afraid to go home, and asked if I would allow them to stay in camp. I told them yes, they could stay, but I could not feed them. They went off in the day-time, and what they did I do not know, but they came there every night for about six or seven nights.

Q. When was this?—A. During the month of August.

Q. Was there any report made to you of any disturbance at this place, or anything that required the presence of troops?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the general condition of the county during the time you were in it?—A. There was a good deal of excitement on both sides during the whole day—political excitement.

Q. What was the condition as to order and peace?—A. In the town itself everything was very quiet, except on these political-meeting days.

Q. Was there anything in the way of violence or injury to anybody at those meetings?—A. No, sir. At one time the republican party had a meeting at one place in the town, and the democrats had a meeting at the other end of the town, and I was informed that the democratic party sent down some of their officials so as to prevent roughs from going into the republican meeting and breaking it up.

Q. You were informed that the democrats had sent men to prevent disturbance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the two meetings were held peaceably and quietly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the entire time that you were in the county did you ever have occasion to call out your troops to suppress any kind of difficulty?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How far were you away from the court-house when this first republican meeting was held, at which Mr. Thomas said pistols were drawn on him?—A. I was probably about a hundred yards.

Q. Was the meeting held in the day-time or at night?—A. In the day-time.

Q. Was he a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Thomas complain that democrats had drawn pistols upon him?—A. He told me that they had drawn pistols upon him, and that he said, "You can't scare me. I have met you before." That he gave them to understand that he had lost an arm during the war, and that they could not scare him.

Q. Did he say that it had disturbed the meeting?—A. No, sir; not to the extent that he did not keep on; but he said that there was such a crowd there that he could not speak all he wanted to say. He said that when he commenced to talk they drew their pistols and told him to hush up; and that he told them he wasn't scared of them at all.

Q. He told you that there was such a crowd there that he could not get to say all that he wanted to say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the other colored men came to you and asked you to protect them you told them to go to the trial-justice, and they came back and said he would not take their case in hand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they complain that white men had been violent to them?—A. Yes, sir; all of them said they had been run off from their places.

Q. What did they say that they were afraid of?—A. They said there was a party came to their houses and asked them how they were going to vote; and they said they were going to vote the republican ticket; and these parties said, "If you do so, you must leave;" that they did not want them.

Q. And you gave those colored men protection every night for a week?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see many armed men at the democratic meetings?—A. The first democratic meeting that was there, General Hampton was present; and I don't believe there was a single man had arms about him, at least not visible.

Q. At the next democratic meeting did you see armed men?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see men have pistols?—A. I did not see them myself, but I told the doctor, who was in citizen's clothes, to go out and see; and he came back and reported to me that at the republican meeting a great many white men had come there with arms.

Q. That report was made to you by your subordinate officer, the doctor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any colored men in arms?—A. No, sir.

Q. In view of what you saw there, and what was reported to you about the white men having arms, can you state whether it was judicious in the military officers to send you there to give protection to the people?—A. I don't think that we helped them any there, because when I got there the republican party had no organization at all. They had no leader, and they were very lukewarm about it anyhow. They did not seem to have a great deal of enthusiasm about their party, not so much as I have seen before in that country.

Q. The colored people there are a timid people, are they not?—A. Well, yes.

Q. The white men are more courageous?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not the nature of the colored people to be easily alarmed by a display of pistols or arms?—A. Very easily.

Q. In your judgment, didn't the display of pistols by the white men intimidate the colored men, so as to prevent them from having as much enthusiasm in the campaign as they would otherwise have had?—A. It may have been so, but I cannot say. I never went out when there was any meeting going on, and I never allowed either officers or soldiers to go out of the camp.

Q. State whether, from all you could see, the colored people were not afraid to engage in politics.—A. I never saw any case of intimidation myself.

Q. But from all you could see, what is your opinion as to whether the colored people are not generally afraid to engage actively in politics?—A. I must certainly say yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You went there in August?—A. I got there on the morning of the 3d.

Q. Had you any evidence of intimidation of colored people there, from the free exercise of their political rights?—A. Not of my own personal knowledge.

Q. Had you reports of that kind brought to you by the commanding officer that required the presence of troops or any interference on your part?—A. I had a good many of those colored men come there and report that they had been driven off their places, as they stated, for their political opinions.

Q. That is simply the statement of the colored men themselves, who came to you and wanted shelter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of men were they?—A. They looked like field hands.

Q. You knew nothing about it, except the mere fact that those colored people came into camp and wanted shelter and protection, and you took them in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all you knew about the "intimidation" of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the entire time that you were there, from August until the middle of November, you were not called upon to suppress any kind of disturbance or use your troops in the protection of the life and property of any individual?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say you never saw any intimidation of any kind practiced toward any class of voters?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. These negro people that you gave protection to came to you in August and left before September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the last you heard of them?—A. Yes.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were those colored people to whom you gave protection, quiet, peaceable, orderly men?—A. They appeared to be very much so, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. They had to be so in your camp, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; they came there every evening and appeared to behave very well.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

ROBERT F. BATER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your position in the Army.—Answer. Lieutenant in the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Where were you stationed on the 7th of November last?—A. In the town of Newberry, Newberry County, S. C.

Q. How long had you been there?—A. I arrived there on the 12th of October, 1876, and remained until the 10th of November, 1876.

Q. What force was in that county?—A. One company of about forty men. I was in command of the company. My captain was on staff duty.

Q. Was that the only military force in the entire county?—A. The only force.

Q. How many men had you?—A. Part of the time I had thirty-two, and part of the time forty-one.

Q. Were you present at or about the polls on the day of the election at Newberry?—A. Yes, sir; I was on the streets nearly the whole day.

Q. State what was the general condition of the town during the day, and the general conduct of the election.—A. It was very quiet and orderly. It was the most orderly day that I saw during the whole time that I was there.

Q. Was there any sort of disturbance of any kind?—A. I merely saw one little fist-cuff, in which two negroes were engaged.

Q. There were no serious results?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any complaint made to you from the polling-place at Newberry, of intimidation, or violence, or threats, or prevention of anybody from voting by any means?—A. None made to me; everything, so far as I saw, was very open and free. There were two polling-places called "No. 1" and "No. 2." No. 2, I understood, was the box at the court-house, where nearly all the democrats voted, and No. 1 was in the lower part of the town, where nearly all the negroes voted. I think about fifteen hundred or seventeen hundred voted there.

Q. Was there any disturbance at all at either of those polling-places?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at both polling-places?—A. I visited both frequently during the day.

Q. Did you see anything in the way of riotous demonstrations, or see any violence at any of them?—A. None at all, sir; except the usual amount of cheering by both parties for their respective candidates.

Q. That was nothing more than generally occurs at an election anywhere, was it?—A. No, sir; nothing more than I generally hear on such occasions.

Q. Newberry is the county-seat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were the commanding officer of the troops for the entire county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any reports of violence or intimidation made to you?—A. No, sir; I had two detachments, one under Lieutenant Patton, at William precinct, and Lieutenant Todd, at Prosperity. Patton had a sergeant and four men; Todd, at Prosperity, had ten men. They reported to me, officially, that everything passed off very quietly.

Q. Were you called upon that day from any portion of the county to send troops to any point?—A. The only call I had was after the boxes had closed. The deputy United States marshal, who is also the sheriff of the county, requested a guard to be placed at box No. 2, as he had heard that the democracy were going to steal the box or break it open. I declined to give him a guard, but I told him that I would remain in town with half of my command. That was about five hundred yards from the box, and he said he would station couriers between that and the box, and I told him that in case of any attempt such as he feared I would protect it. No attempt, however, was made, and I withdrew about twelve o'clock at night.

Q. You did not go there?—A. No, sir; I walked up there once or twice, and there was a very orderly crowd witnessing the counting of the vote.

Q. So that he was mistaken in his surmise or fear?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you attend any political meeting in that county?—A. No, sir; I never allowed my men to leave camp. There were three mass meetings held during my time there—two by the republicans and one by the democrats. At the first meeting I heard there was a great deal of loud cursing and swearing, and that the republicans were prevented from speaking; and at the second meeting of the republicans one of my men was raising a disturbance—I don't think there were ten white men present—and I had him arrested. He was drunk. Everything was very orderly.

Q. And at the democratic meeting?—A. That was at the other part of the town.

Q. Did you hear anything of a disturbance except this hurraing and noise?—A. That was all.

Q. Did you hear anything of anybody being injured?—A. I am very sure there was nobody injured.

Q. There was no row reported to you?—A. No, sir; the deputy marshal came to me on the morning of the day when the meeting was to take place and asked me what I would do in case of disturbance, and I told him that my men would remain in the camp; that I had no orders to go there. He asked, in case of a disturbance, what would I do. I told him if it was serious I would attempt to quell it. I remained in the neighborhood during the entire day, but no difficulty was made.

Q. What had been the condition of the county as to general order during the time you were there?—A. Well, sir, the time was very exciting, but I think that under the circumstances it was rather orderly; there was a great deal of excitement as a matter of course.

Q. Did you ever have occasion at all to send troops to any portion of the county to preserve the peace?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Who was it that called on you and asked you if you would give protection to a meeting?—A. Mr. Dennis, deputy United States marshal.

Q. He was apprehensive of danger?—A. Yes; he seemed to be. Why he was so, though, I cannot imagine, because he had not been in town. He arrived with the speakers on the train that morning.

Q. Was he a resident there?—A. No, sir; he was a resident of Columbia, and has been for five or six years.

Q. There was a disturbance at the first republican meeting reported to you?—A. Yes, sir; this hooting and yelling.

Q. So as to disturb the republican speakers?—A. Yes, sir, as I understood.

Q. Do you know whether it interfered with the holding of the meeting, or induced the republicans to break up the meeting sooner than they otherwise would have done?—A. I understood they did. I understood that several of the speakers made an attempt to speak and could not be heard.

Q. At any of the democratic meetings did you see men who were armed with pistols or other weapons?—A. I did not. I did not see anything, even at this meeting that I speak of. What I tell you is mere hearsay.

Q. Did you see men wearing arms in the village?—A. If they had them they were concealed. I did not see them openly.

Q. How long were you at that place?—A. About a month.

Q. Your presence was generally known in the neighborhood?—A. Yes, sir; I was very well acquainted with a great many of the people there.

Q. You had no officers to make any report to you from any place in the county except one?—A. Two; one at Prosperity and one at Williams.

Q. When were those men sent out?—A. They left for the different places on Monday before the election. Those for Williams returned on Wednesday; the other, from Prosperity, returned on Thursday.

Q. By what officer were you sent to that county?—A. By order of General Ruger.

Q. In view of what you learned of the interruption of the first republican meeting, and whatever else you saw there, are you able to state whether General Ruger acted judiciously in sending you there to preserve the peace in that county?—A. That is a question that I could not possibly answer.

Q. From what you saw and heard, and from the fears which were entertained by the republicans there, if there were any such, state whether your presence was a necessity, in your judgment,—A. I do not know exactly how I could say that, because, so far as I saw, the only meeting that I saw of the republicans was entirely undisturbed. During the entire time that I was there I boarded with a republican, a Mr. Corwin, who was elected to the senate from that county at this election, and I think that his fears, and the fears of most of the republicans, especially the white republicans, of that county, were entirely groundless.

Q. They did have fears, however, did they?—A. Yes, sir; but I think they were groundless.

Q. From what you learned while you were there, can you state whether that fear was general among the republicans?—A. I don't think it was among the negroes, sir.

Q. Are not the negroes rather a timid people in that neighborhood?—A. I think they generally are, but they seemed to show far more courage than their white leaders did during the campaign. Those white leaders are certainly the most timid set of people that I ever knew in my life.

Q. Were there many white republicans there?—A. I think some five or six. I can give you the names of nearly all of them.

Q. How long had the white men lived there?—A. I think this Corwin went there about 1867 or 1866, as a United States assessor. One or two of the others are natives, and the others, I think, have been there at least eight years.

Q. Would not those white men who have been there so long have better opportunities for knowing what was going on than a person coming in only for a short time?—A. I don't know, sir; I have been in that county before; I was there in 1870.

Q. How long had you been absent from it?—A. There was about five years between the two visits.

Q. Would not a man who was there all the time have a better opportunity of knowing whether there was danger, than a person coming there temporarily, as you did?—A. I think so; but I think, at the same time, that he would have more opportunities of making enemies for himself, politically. Mr. Corwin says that he has a great many personal friends up there, and he says that his personal friends are his bitterest political opponents.

Q. Well, whatever may have been the cause, so far as you can judge, the white republican leaders were afraid to engage actively in politics?—A. I don't think they were. They did engage in politics and made speeches, as I understood.

Q. You have said that some of them appeared to be afraid?—A. They certainly did; that is, they seemed to be afraid to go out at night. That was one of their principal fears, to appear in the streets at night. They were on the streets during the day; I walked on the streets with them myself.

Q. With which political party were your sympathies?—A. With neither, sir.

Q. Did you not have any party preferences?—A. No, sir; I never voted but once in my life, and I don't have a particle of preference. I certainly had no sympathy with the politics in this State in the least.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. This first meeting at which Mr. Dennis came to you was the only one where you heard a rumor of noise and disturbance?—A. Yes, sir; that occurred some time in October; I arrived in Newberry on the 12th, and this was the following Monday or Tuesday.

Q. He did not send to you for troops?—A. No, sir; he made no request for troops at all.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

THOMAS J. LLOYD SWORN and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. What is your rank?—Answer. Captain of the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. Where were you stationed on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At Abbeville Court-House. I went there in the latter part of September, and remained there until about the 11th or 12th of November.

Q. How many troops had you with you?—A. I had my company, or most of my company; about twenty men.

Q. Had you any other companies besides your own?—A. No, sir.

Q. Lieutenant Barnhart was of your company, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was detached on election-day to Calhoun's Mills?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present at Abbeville Court-House on the day of the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there all day?—A. Yes.

Q. How near the polls were you?—A. I was about the town several times during the day, but not nearer to the polls than from here across the street until after the voting. I went to both polls after the voting.

Q. Were your troops stationed near by?—A. They were in the neighborhood, near the depot, about two or three squares off.

Q. They were near enough to be brought out on short notice, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the condition of affairs at Abbeville Court-House, with respect to violence, on the day of the election?—A. There was no violence whatever. It was very quiet there.

Q. Did you see any disturbance whatever about the polls?—A. There was a fight between two men, a black man and a white man, but it didn't amount to anything more than a fight between those two.

Q. Is that all the disturbance or violence that you know of there that day?—A. That is all that I know of.

Q. Was there any report made to you of a request for the assistance of the troops?—

A. There was a request made by the United States marshal on account of this fight.

Q. Did you go up to investigate it?—A. The parties came down to camp. I asked the marshal if he had any arrests to make, and he said he had not, and I didn't think it was necessary to go, as the thing was quieted down immediately.

Q. With that exception, was there any request made to you for the assistance of the troops?—A. Not at all.

Q. Did you see any intimidation or threatened intimidation on either side?—A. No, sir; there was none so far as I could see.

Q. Were you present at or in the neighborhood of any public meeting previous to the election?—A. Yes, sir; there was a public meeting held there sometime previous to the election. I don't know how long. Both parties had a meeting at the same time in different parts of the town.

Q. Was there any disturbance by one party of the other?—A. No, sir; no disturbance at all.

Q. No attempt to break up either meeting by the other party?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Were you present at or in the neighborhood of any other meeting of either party?—
A. No, sir; I don't remember any other meeting.

Q. Were you ever called upon in any way to furnish protection to a meeting of either party?—A. No, sir.

Q. So far as you know, what was the condition of affairs in that place as to peace and order during the time you were there?—A. It was a very quiet town while I was there, generally speaking.

Q. Were you called upon during that time to furnish protection to any one from violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you didn't do it?—A. There were parties in camp who were there for protection, according to their own statement, but I have no personal knowledge of why they were there. They came to camp and remained there.

Q. When was that?—A. That was, I think, the day after the election.

Q. How long did they remain?—A. Some of them were in camp about two days. They remained there all night.

Q. How many were there of such persons, all told?—A. I suppose there was sometimes a dozen of them there.

Q. They came after the election, and remained one or two nights and then left?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had command of the only military force in the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If any necessity for troops had existed anywhere in the county, you were the person on whom the demand should have been made?—A. Yes, sir; in that immediate vicinity. There were two detachments sent out from the post; one to Lowndesville and one to Calhoun's Mills.

Q. Did you receive any report from Lowndesville?—A. I received a report.

Q. How was it there as to peace and order?—A. The officer there reported that the election was very quiet.

Q. Had you any demand made on you while you were stationed in that county for troops at different places on account of violence or breaches of the peace?—A. Not on account of violence or breaches of the peace.

Q. Well, for any other reason?—A. Do you mean demands from officials?

Q. Yes.—A. I had no application from officials at all. The only thing was that parties came to me, (I have not got their names,) just previous to the election, and wished me to send a detachment to Bordeaux. I did not send it. I reported the matter to General Ruger, who ordered this detachment to Calhoun's Mills, which was near Bordeaux. He had ordered it there previously.

Q. You had no requisition made on you anywhere by any marshal or officer; the request that you did receive was from private persons, and you reported that request to your superior officer and he did not see fit to comply with it?—A. Well, the order was changed, on the representations of persons in that part of the county. I had original orders to send a detachment to Lowndesville and to a place on the railroad, and my orders were changed to send them to Calhoun's Mills instead.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The persons to whom you gave protection just after the election, were they white or colored?—A. Both white and colored.

Q. Why did they claim your protection?—A. One of them was a deputy United States marshal from Calhoun's Mills, who said that he had been maltreated there.

Q. You don't know whether Hurd was there?—A. He is the man that I speak of now.

Q. What did the others ask your protection for?—A. They had difficulty with people in the town, and they seemed to think that they were not safe in town, so they came and remained in camp.

Q. How many white men and how many colored men?—A. The only white men that remained any length of time were the two Griffins.

Q. Those persons who came to your camp were all republicans, were they not?—A. I understood so.

Q. Did they say whether they were apprehensive of violence?—A. Yes, sir; they said they were afraid to remain; at least, they were afraid to go home. They lived some distance from the court-house.

Q. What was the ground of the application for troops to go to Bordeaux?—A. So far as I remember now, three negroes came to me and said they were afraid that they would not be allowed to vote there unless there were troops there, and that there was no poll near enough for them to vote where there were troops without coming to the court-house.

Q. Did you see men armed or having pistols at any time during the election-day?—A. Not that I remember.

Q. Did you prior to the election?—A. I did, in the town.

Q. Were they white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it during a political meeting?—A. During a political meeting; the democratic meeting that I spoke of.

Q. Were there numbers of men who had pistols or other arms?—A. There were no other arms except pistols. I don't know how many of them had pistols, but I saw some have them.

Q. Were they displayed publicly?—A. They were worn openly, as a general thing; but sometimes under their coats.

Q. Are the colored people in that neighborhood, as a general thing, easily frightened by displays of force? Are they a timid people?—A. I think they are, as a general thing.

Q. In view of what you saw and heard, and know, as to the condition of things at that place, state whether the republicans generally were somewhat alarmed and afraid to engage actively in politics?—A. That is rather a difficult question. In the immediate vicinity of the court-house, I don't think they were.

Q. How was it out through the county?—A. I don't know. I can only judge from what the colored people told me who came in.

Q. Judging from all that you saw and heard and from what you know of the character of the people, how was it?—A. While I was there I had several complaints from colored people about being alarmed and afraid that they were not going to be allowed to vote, and such things, but in the immediate vicinity of the court-house there was nothing of that kind.

Q. I mean through the county generally; what is your judgment as to whether the republicans were afraid to engage actively in politics?—A. My observation through the county will not allow me to answer that question, because I saw comparatively few of the people away from the court-house; I never was away from there myself.

Q. State whether that fear did prevail to some extent, if you have the means of forming an opinion on the subject?—A. I suppose it did, to some extent.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

GEORGE L. TURNER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your position in the Army?—Answer. Second lieutenant in the Eighteenth Infantry.

Q. State where you were stationed on the day of the last presidential election?—A. I was at Carmel Hill, in Chester County, about ten miles from Chester. Previous to that I had been in Aiken County. I went to Chester County four or five days before the election and remained there until about the tenth of November.

Q. Were you the commanding officer in that county?—A. No, sir; I commanded the detachment at Carmel Hill. At Chester Court-House Lieutenant Hinton, the first lieutenant of the company to which I belong, was stationed.

Q. When did you arrive at Carmel Hill?—A. The evening before the election. I was in the county four or five days before the election.

Q. Were you at the polls on election-day?—A. I went there twice, on duty.

Q. How far was your camp from the voting-place?—A. I placed my camp about 800 or 1,000 feet from the polls.

Q. How many men did you have?—A. I had a detachment of twelve men.

Q. State anything you know as to the order at the polls at Carmel Hill that day.—A. It seemed to me an exceptionally quiet election. I went there twice. Once there was a threatened disturbance in which the United States marshal felt that there was intimidation. I investigated the matter personally and found that some one had been cursing a republican, or making some remarks about the republican party, but the thing had subsided and I took no action in regard to it. Later a warrant was shown me, issued against the United States marshal for some violation of the State law, and some trouble was apprehended, and I walked over to see that there was quiet. The warrant was served upon the marshal and he applied to me for assistance. I examined the warrant, which seemed to me to be correct, and I declined to give him the assistance he asked, on the ground that any interference on my part would have been an obstruction of the execution of a civil warrant under the laws of the State on a charge of felony.

Q. What was the charge?—A. It was alleged by affidavit that as a State constable was on the road from Carmel Hill to Chester with a man held under authority of the State law, the United States marshal attempted to rescue the man from him, on the ground that he had control of affairs for that day. The constable went to Chester and made an affidavit to that effect, and a warrant was issued for the arrest of the marshal, and they arrived at Carmel Hill about 5 or 6 o'clock.

Q. Then that really was not a political disturbance?—A. No, sir, not at all; but I was called upon to interfere.

Q. During the entire day at Carmel Hill was there any occasion, of a political character, to call upon you for interference or assistance?—A. None at all.

Q. Was there any evidence of the intimidation of any class of voters at the polls that day?—A. None to my knowledge.

Q. You had no application made to you to protect any parties there?—A. No, sir; except, as I have stated, to protect the United States marshal, but that was a personal matter between him and the State.

Q. During the four or five days you were in Chester County, did you have occasion to be in the neighborhood of any political meeting?—A. None at all.

Q. During the time you were there, were any reports made to your headquarters with regard to any disorder in the county?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you prior to going to Chester?—A. I was in Aiken County. I left here on the 23d of July, just after the Hamburg massacre. I remained there until four or five days prior to the election, when I went to Chester.

Q. Who was in command in Aiken County?—A. Captain Lloyd for a while. He was relieved and then Captain Wallace, of the Second Infantry, was in command; he is now in Florida.

Q. Do you know who commanded in Aiken County on election-day?—A. Captain Mills.

Q. During the time you were in Aiken County what was the general condition of the county as to peace and good order?—A. It was in a feverish state of political excitement.

Q. Were you sent there just after the riot?—A. Just after the Hamburg riot.

Q. That, of course, produced excitement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you at headquarters during the time you were in Aiken County or were you detached?—A. I was at headquarters the most of the time. I went up and assisted in making arrests in connection with the Ellenton affair.

Q. Leaving the Ellenton affair out of the question, what was the condition of the county after the excitement subsided?—A. It was peaceful; there was nothing more than would be incidental to a hot political canvass.

Q. Were the troops called upon at any time after you had finished up what grew out of the riots, to preserve peace?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. There was a disturbance at Aiken while I had command there, but the troops were not called into action. It arose out of a personal altercation between a white man and a black man in which they immediately ranged themselves on the color-line.

Q. That was not a political quarrel?—A. No; a personal quarrel.

Q. Were you at or in the neighborhood of any of the political meetings that were held in Aiken County during the canvass?—A. No, sir; I kept aloof from all political gatherings.

Q. Were any meetings held at Aiken court-house while you were there?—A. Yes, sir; both republican and democratic. I was not called upon to interfere at any of them.

Q. Were there any reports of riots or disturbances?—A. There were no reports of riots.

Q. How was it generally as to peace and quiet?—A. The meetings were peaceable and quiet. I have known both parties to have meetings there, and everything was very quiet.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You did not attend the meeting in person?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know, then, personally whether democrats appeared to disturb republican speakers?—A. I do not. I was out riding one day and passed a republican meeting where they were speaking—just drove by.

Q. Did you have an opportunity to ascertain whether there was some apprehension felt by the colored people through the county?—A. I know of their applying for assistance.

Q. But do you know the fact, from what you saw and heard, that the colored men of the county were in a state of apprehension?—A. I have no knowledge bearing upon that point. Of course there were rumors that they did not dare to have meetings, but I know nothing about it personally.

Q. Couldn't you judge from what you heard, and from what you saw of the condition of things, whether the colored people were in a state of apprehension?—A. I don't know. At Aiken Court-House, which is quite a large place, there did not seem to be that apprehension.

Q. That was because United States soldiers were there?—A. Yes; I think they felt a protection from that.

Q. You went there because there had been apprehensions of that sort?—A. I don't know, sir. We went there because we were ordered. I don't know what the apprehension was.

Q. Away from the village was there not a state of fear and apprehension among the colored people?—A. I did not go out of the village myself.

Q. So far as you could judge, from what you heard and saw, did not that fear exist?—A. That is a question that I could not possibly answer, for I have no personal knowledge of what happened away from Aiken Court-House, except where I went to assist the marshal to make the arrests.

Q. I did not know but you could form an opinion.—A. I hate to give an opinion indefinitely.

Q. On the day of the democratic meeting did you see any considerable number of men who had pistols or other arms?—A. I did not attend the meeting at all. I saw them riding, but I could not say whether they were armed or not. I kept entirely away from the meeting.

Q. Do you know whether there was general talk among the people that in case the colored men should vote the republican ticket they would lose their places on the land?—A. I know nothing at all about that.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 27, 1876.

EDWARD DAVIS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your rank in the Army.—Answer. First lieutenant in the Third Artillery.

Q. Where were you stationed on the 7th of November last?—A. At Union Court-House, South Carolina.

Q. Were you in command of the forces in that county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men had you with you?—A. At Union Court-House I had ten men, and at Gowdeysville, in that county, I had eight men and an officer.

Q. How long were you in that county?—A. I went there on the 1st of November, and came away on the 11th.

Q. You were there about a week before the election, and staid three or four days after the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. I was at my camp just at the edge of the town. I was ordered to remain in camp on the day of election, and I did so. I should think it was nearly half a mile from the polls.

Q. Were you in town during the day?—A. Once in the afternoon, about three o'clock, I think, I received a telegram from General Ruger, I presume in consequence of the riot that had taken place the Saturday night before the election. He told me to report in general terms whether things were quiet or not.

Q. When you went to make that examination in the afternoon what did you find to be the state of affairs?—A. I found everything quiet. I went up to the precinct, and saw the United States marshal standing a few steps off. I asked him if all was quiet, and he said, "Yes." Then I went to the post-office, where the election was held, and asked, "Is everything going on smoothly?" and they told me, "Yes;" and I so telegraphed to General Ruger.

Q. Did the crowd seem to be good-natured?—A. There seemed to be no crowd. There were knots of people standing around the streets.

Q. Did you hear any threats or see any intimidation?—A. No, sir; I never saw a more quiet election in my life.

Q. Were you called upon during the day to render any service?—A. I was in the morning, but not at that point. The United States marshal came riding into camp and seemed rather excited, and told me there was a riot at a town called Sand Tuck, twelve miles from there, and he wanted me to send a detachment. I told him I could not do so; that my command was small and my orders required me to stay where I was; I told him that General Ruger was within telegraphic communication, and that if I were ordered by him I should of course obey the order; but until then could not.

Q. Did you have any report as to the character of that riot?—A. Yes, sir. The same United States marshal, in the afternoon when I went to the poll, told me that he had since learned that it was a false alarm; that there was no riot.

Q. During the time that you were in the county were there political meetings held in your neighborhood?—A. There was in the town—a republican meeting. I didn't know there was a meeting at all until I heard the firing.

Q. Was there a disturbance at that meeting?—A. All I know of it is what I learned upon investigation, and what I reported to General Ruger. This was on the night of the 4th of November. About eight or a quarter past eight o'clock, I had just had the tattoo sounded, and had gone to bed and was lying there reading, when I heard a noise. I had heard of no political meeting, but, inasmuch as there had been a good deal of hurrabing along the road and in the town, I took it for granted that there was something of that kind, and immediately I heard a shot fired, then two or three, and then thirty or forty. The sergeant of the guard came and reported to me that it sounded to him like a riot, and in a few minutes a man came running into camp from the United States commissioner, (who, I believe, was acting as a deputy marshal,) and he asked me to send a portion of my command up to the court-house as quick as possible. "Reports of a riot," I think, were his words, as though he had not been there himself, and it turned out that he had not. I turned out my men, and had them dress and put some ammunition into their boxes, and double-quickened as rapidly as I could, and upon gaining the main street a cheer was set up by the men between my position and the court-house. I moved off by the flank and formed a line, and double-quickened right down to the court-house and halted. There was a good deal of noise and shouting, and I found them to be colored people. I asked what it meant just as soon as I could. Finally, by my calling out, they stopped and quieted down so that I could say something, and I asked them to disperse and go to their homes as quietly as possible. I had to repeat it half a dozen times before I could get them all to hear it, and the lieutenant of the town came up and said, "Lieutenant, the only effect you can have here, I think, would be through a man by the name of Mobley." I asked if Mobley was there, and somebody went and brought him; and he turned out to be a colored man, only slightly colored. He came down rather excitedly and asked me if I meant to break up the meeting. I said I had given no orders of that kind; I said, "I am simply advising now; if I give an order I am certain to execute it." He wanted to talk the matter over. I said, "I have no time to talk to you, sir; if you have the interests of peace and good order at heart, you will assist me to send these people to their homes." He wanted to discuss the matter, and I told him to shut up, that I would not listen to him. Then he said, "We will have our meeting Monday night, and I want you men to come well fixed." What he meant by that I don't know; but a few minutes after that a colored man came to me and said, "Lieutenant, we are afraid to go to our homes; we have to pass the hotel and we are afraid the white people will kill us." I then turned over my command to the sergeant and went alone about three or four hundred yards to the hotel. There was quite a collection of white people there, and I said, "Gentlemen, if you will disperse and go to your homes, I will be very much obliged to you." Some of them seemed to walk off, and I saw the proprietor of the hotel and told him what the colored men had said, that they were afraid to pass the hotel lest they should be fired at, and he said something to the white men, to go home, or come inside of the hotel, and they dispersed in a few moments. One remark he made was, "Leave this matter to Lieutenant Davis to settle." At this time I could not gather much idea of what had occurred, but I afterward investigated the matter by order of General Ruger, and reported to him. I have here a copy of the report which I made to him.

Q. Please read enough of it to give us the result.—A. [Reading.] "Sir: I have the honor to report that, in accordance with the written request of United States Commissioner Byron, I proceeded yesterday, at about 8.15 p. m., with a detachment of Battery B, Third Artillery, to the court-house in this town, where a republican meeting was being held, which ended in a riot between the whites and blacks in this community. As near as I could learn, it was started by the attempt of a policeman to arrest a drunken white man who was noisy at the door of the hotel; political feeling here being at that pitch that a noise beyond the ordinary tone of voice seems almost sufficient to excite a suspicion of trouble. At the time it was supposed that the white man fired the first shot, but upon examining his pistol at the time of his arrest, it was found to be loaded at every barrel. The excitement among the blacks was so great that they commenced to fire at random, and it was noticed afterward to be in the walls and ceiling of the building. The few white people in the crowd rapidly left the hall upon hearing a report (which proved to have been false) that two prominent white men, Messrs. Roger and Vincent, had been killed. The white citizens and the community generally armed themselves at once, and were gathering at the Union Hotel, about four hundred yards from the court-house, with the apparent determination to avenge the death of their two friends. At about this time my detachment was seen by both parties wheeling, at double time, into the main street, between the hotel and the court-house, moving in the direction of the latter. This circumstance is said by the white men to have changed their determination so as to leave the matter for me to settle. I overheard the hotel proprietor say that, and he afterward told me that that was the general feeling; in other words, if I had not come in there just at the time I did, there would probably have been a fight. After some effort I succeeded in being heard in the court-yard, and advised them to disperse and go quietly to their homes. Leaving my detachment, I went to the front of the hotel and gave the same orders to the whites. Not long after 10 o'clock, finding the presence of the detachment no longer required, I ordered the return to camp. I can learn of only one man (colored) being seriously injured. He was shot in the thigh." (I learned afterward that there was another white man burned in the face, and a colored man, on the other side, that a bullet struck.) "It could be plainly seen that the presence of the detachment was timely, as a few minutes' delay would have brought the two parties in contact in all probability. There was to be a democratic meeting to-morrow evening, and after the riot last night it was agreed among the republicans to hold one also. I sent you a dispatch to that effect, and early this morning I had an interview with one or two leading men of each party, to inquire as to the probable effect of the meeting. To explain more fully, I came into town on Sunday morning to my breakfast at the hotel, and there I met, I think it was, General Wallace, now speaker of one of the legislatures here, and consulted with him. Then I met the United States commissioner, and went with him to see Mr. McGuffin, the United States marshal, and then I sent for the town intendant, who lived just outside the town, and they held a consultation. I did this with the purpose of preventing the repetition of last evening, as the people of both classes seemed to look upon my detachment as the peacemaking element in the community. About 12 o'clock the signers of the inclosed document called at camp and asked to have it forwarded to headquarters for the information of the commanding general." (The democratic meeting had been ordered for Monday night; that I knew of before. Then I heard of this republican meeting being ordered by Mobley. I made inquiry that night, and found that they had determined to hold it; and I telegraphed General Ruger that fact, and asked him to allow me to withdraw my detachment from Gowdysville, and then, with eighteen men, I would feel abundantly able to quell any disturbance. He ordered me not to withdraw the detachment; he directed that I should telegraph him on Monday if the two meetings were to be held, and if so he would send additional troops from here. So, feeling that the responsibility rested on me as to whether that post was to be reinforced or not, I determined to see these gentlemen, and they held this consultation, and presented this document to me, wherein they agreed to prevent this meeting, both parties to assist in keeping the peace, and the intendant agreed to swear in four additional constables of each color, and to keep all run-shops closed. That was about the amount of the paper which I forwarded to General Ruger.) "Messrs. Goss and Guest and Wallace are of the democratic party, and the others of the republican; ex-Mayor Byron is a United States commissioner, and Mobley is chairman of the republican committee. Later Mobley asked for the paper, in order to withdraw from the agreement. He did this because he insisted upon my asking for additional troops; and I told him that with this document in my possession I could not conscientiously do it. Then, he said, 'I will withdraw my name from that paper, I won't agree to keep my people quiet,' or something of that kind; but after consultation with the others the paper was returned in about two hours, intact. Mr. Mobley says that he does not feel thoroughly capable of controlling his men, and asked me to have additional troops sent, and upon my declining he determined to ask it himself."

By Mr. ABBOTT :

Q. That question was settled at that time, and those meetings were not held on Monday night?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say that the town was entirely quiet at Union Court-House on election-day?—A. Yes, sir; that was the only quiet day there; there was always some shouting and hurrahing for the different candidates.

Q. Apart from the hurrahing the days were quiet. There was no violence on this night that you have mentioned?—A. No violence that I know of.

Q. And that violence grew out of the drunken conduct of a man, and false report as to the death of two white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had a detachment at Gowdysville?—A. I had.

Q. Was there any trouble there?—A. I know of nothing except what my lieutenant stated after he returned. The night of the election, after it was all over, I believe there was some little trouble between two colored men.

Q. Nothing that appertained to the conduct of the election?—A. I presume it grew out of the election.

Q. But it was after the election was over?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From other parts of the county did you have any report of trouble?—A. Yes, sir; Sand Tuck was in the same county, but it was reported to me by the marshal that that was a false alarm.

Q. Did you hear of any trouble at a place called Goshen Hill?—A. I do recollect now that that was a precinct, but I did not hear of any trouble there.

Q. And nothing was reported to you from any of the other precincts?—A. There was nothing reported to me, and I didn't hear of anything.

Q. You were commanding the force in that county?—A. I presume it might be so considered, as I was the senior officer in the county; whether General Ruger considered it so or not I do not know.

Q. How long were you in the county?—A. I got there on the 1st and left on the 11th of November.

Q. During all that time, with the exception of this one that you have described, was there any disturbances?—A. None that I know of.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You think that if it had not been for your presence the white men at the hotel would have attacked the colored men as they came out from the meeting?—A. I could not say much with regard to that. This negro reported to me that they were afraid to go past the hotel.

Q. Did not you say in your report that your presence probably prevented a collision?—A. That was my opinion.

Q. I am asking for your opinion.—A. I beg pardon. Yes; I think there would have been trouble.

Q. You think that the white men at the hotel would have attacked the colored men after they came out of their meeting?—A. That was my opinion, and it is my opinion yet. Whether they would have attacked them in a body or not I do not know. In addition to that I would say that there was a great deal of excitement among the two classes connected with this report, that I have referred to, of the death of these two white men.

Q. The colored men are much more timid than the white men in that neighborhood, are they not?—A. I would say that generally they are everywhere. I was raised in Kentucky amongst negroes.

Q. Are they not in that county very apprehensive of danger and easily alarmed by any display of force, so far as you could judge from the means of judging at your command?—A. My judgment would only be a matter of what I saw; I did not converse with any of them in regard to it. I will tell you one thing that I heard Mobley say, that may throw some light upon it.

Q. I don't ask for individual statements.—A. Well, Mobley was the leader there, and I can tell you his statement. I was sure that if those two meetings were held on Monday night, and I think Mobley and the others, the white men, all felt that if the meetings were held the same night, there would be trouble, and the feeling was expressed in this way: some man might be drunk and might start a quarrel with somebody else, another man would take part in it on one side or on the other, and there would be a general row amongst them. Mobley said, "You know, General Wallace, that my men won't kill you if they have a disturbance, but I know that you know that your men will kill me."

Q. Then you judge that the colored men were apprehensive of danger from the white men?—A. Yes, sir; in case of trouble arising.

Q. Did you have any opportunity to know whether the colored people were alarmed lest they should be turned off the lands on which they were living, in case they voted the republican ticket?—A. I felt somewhat lonely. I sat on the road-side about half the day and talked to nearly every man that passed by, white or black, and that was about the only means I had of getting information from town until I got General Ruger's telegram. While I was sitting there an old colored man came along. I asked him, "Whom did you vote for?" "O, I voted wid me race," he said. We talked there a little, and he told me that there was such a feeling. He asked me, "Are you a politician?" I said, "No; I am not a politician; I don't take much interest in politics but if you want to know if I am a republican, yes, I am, as far as my feelings go, but I am an officer of the Army and have no right to talk politics, and I don't talk politics." He asked me then who would I vote for if I had a vote in the State. Said I, "I would vote for Hayes and Wheeler, most undoubtedly, but I would vote for Hampton for governor of the State." He had already cast his vote. I made this statement just by way of passing the time; I would not have said it if the old man had not asked me the question right up and down. I had been in that town seven days, and I defy any man, white or black, up to that minute, to know whether I was a democrat or republican, or whether I had any feeling in the matter, one way or the other.

Q. Did you hear the democratic meeting going on?—A. It did not take place.

Q. Then those two meetings were not held?—A. They were not held.

Q. You were not at any meeting of either party?—A. No, sir; only at the time I went to quell this disturbance.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. If I understand you, this Mr. Mobley said on one occasion that he would not undertake to control his men; that he could not do it?—A. "Could not" was not his expression. His expression was that he "did not feel thoroughly capable;" I think that was it. He said to General Wallace, "You can control yours, but I cannot control mine," and he seemed to want additional troops.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was he not apprehensive, as well as you could judge from what he said? He desired that you should have more troops?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the purpose of protecting the colored people?—A. Well, I don't know what he wanted them for; that is what he said.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. That was at the time that he wanted to withdraw from that agreement that he had made?—A. Yes, sir; because I would not ask for more troops.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. He had previously requested that you should ask for more troops before that agreement was signed?—A. No, sir. General Ruger had telegraphed me to report on Sunday morning whether these meetings were still to be held; if they were to be held, I was to report to him.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 23, 1876.

WILLIAM G. CHILDS sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I reside in the city at night. In the daytime I am mostly at my farm, five miles below here.

Q. You are the son of Colonel Childs, a banker here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. Since 1862.

Q. How long have you been engaged in planting on your farm?—A. About eighteen months.

Q. Do you know anything of threats by colored republicans towards colored democrats on the streets here or on public occasions prior to the last presidential election?—A. Yes, sir; I have frequently heard them threaten that if a colored man voted the democratic ticket they would kill him unless white men were there to protect him.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you hear them say that to colored men?—A. Yes, sir. When I was talking to one colored man another colored man walked up and they got into conversation between themselves. I have frequently prevented rows between them.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Do you recollect being present on any public occasion when such threats were made?—A. Yes, sir. I recollect that at a barbecue we had down there, where the women were more violent toward democratic colored men, and then also on election-day, at the polls.

Q. How did the women manifest their violence?—A. They threatened to leave their husbands if they voted for a man who would put their children back into slavery and keep them from being educated. They seemed to think that if the men voted the democratic ticket they would go back into slavery again.

Q. Which poll were you at?—A. At Trenholm's, which is located on my plantation.

Q. Did you see anything there in the way of violence toward any colored person who attempted to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I saw one man, Preston Taylor, who had promised me to vote the democratic ticket, and he came to me on the morning of the election and told me that he could not do it unless he could do it slyly, because he was afraid of being whipped, and the ostracism was so great among his people; he told me if he did not vote the democratic ticket he would not vote at all. About ten o'clock the negro women got at him to make him form into line; they tried to force him in, and in the scuffle they tore off his coat and shirt, and left the upper part of his body naked.

Q. Was he obliged to leave?—A. Yes, sir; he went off to get new clothes. It was a very bad day, somewhat like this. I know the names of four or five that attacked him.

Q. Have you stated all that you recollect of your knowledge?—A. I remember several little skirmishes where men who had voted the democratic ticket were attacked by republicans. I separated them.

Q. Have you ever heard from the colored men anything of the purposes for which the troops were sent here?—A. I heard one of the republicans telling one of my democratic colored men that the United States troops (it was about the time that the troops were pouring in) would be down after a while and shoot every damned democratic nigger that was on the place.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Who was the man that said that?—A. I don't remember his name, there are so many of them there.

Q. To whom did he tell that?—A. I don't remember that. I always met them in that crowd.

Q. And you don't know who it was that said it?—A. Merrimon Washington is one who heard it.

Q. I did not ask who heard it; I asked you who said it, and you don't remember.—A. No, sir; I know that Washington is one that was present.

Q. Where is he?—A. I think he is out in the lobby here.

Q. Was it a white man that said that?—A. No, sir; all colored. No white man there except myself.

Q. Whom did you ever hear say that he would inflict personal violence on any colored man if he should vote the democratic ticket? Tell me the names.—A. I think a man named George Bellinger said so.

Q. Where does he live?—A. At Arthur's.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that they would have to stay with us; that if we dropped them they would come to them, and they would give them the devil.

Q. He did not say that they would inflict personal violence. Who else?—A. Silas Burns was another. He said that if a man named John Taylor, who was standing by me, voted the democratic ticket he had better not come back to Arthur's.

Q. Is that all he said?—A. That is all I remember. I had no idea of being called to testify.

Q. Who else did you hear say anything of that sort?—A. I can't recall any others just at this moment, but there were a great many others.

Q. Do you know of any others?—A. Yes, sir, on frequent occasions; but I can't specify just now.

Q. Do you know any instance where any colored man has said to any other colored man that he would inflict any violence on him?—A. Well, sir, they didn't say that they would "inflict violence," in those words, but used language that implied that.

Q. I don't ask what it implied.—A. I heard one man named Abe Carter tell him that he was going to give them the devil.

Q. Is that all you can remember?—A. Yes, sir, of their exact language.

Q. Did you know of any colored man inflicting any violence on any other colored man?—A. I knew of one man who had his head split open with a rock.

Q. Was it split open by another colored man?—A. Well, he said so.

Q. I did not ask you that. Did you see it split open?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know of your own knowledge whether it was done by a white man or a colored man?—A. No, sir; but then I know—

Q. Just answer my questions. How many men have you, or had you, working on your place?—A. I rent principally. About seventy that live on the place, and about sixteen that don't live there, but tend land.

Q. Did you tell the colored men who worked on your place that if they voted the republican ticket you would turn them off?—A. No, sir; I told them that, everything being equal, if two men applied to me I would prefer the democrat.

Q. You gave them to understand that you would employ democrats?—A. No, sir; I gave them to understand that if two men came to me, and I liked both the same, I would take the democrat.

Q. That is all you know about it, is it?—A. I know of a negro being attacked at the polls for voting the democratic ticket.

Q. Did you see him?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him struck.

Q. Who struck him?—A. I don't know the negro.

Q. Did you hear what the occasion of it was?—A. Yes; he was cursing him for being a damned democrat.

Q. Which struck first?—A. I think the republican struck first.

Q. You think?—A. Well, I saw the republican strike. If the other struck him, he did it without my seeing him. It was on election-day, at Trenholm's.

Q. Was he hurt?—A. Well, sir, I don't think he was hurt much, not any more than a face-blow would hurt a man. They were separated. There would have been a big row.

Q. They quarreled for some reason or other, and that was all there was of it?—A. No, sir; he reproached this man on account of his voting the democratic ticket.

Q. What did he say?—A. He called him a damned democrat, and at that time there was a rock thrown and a blow struck.

Q. You don't know which struck first?—A. I say the republican struck first.

Q. How far was that?—A. As far as from you to me. As soon as the lick was struck they were separated.

Q. Was that all that was said?—A. Well, I don't know. They were excited there, and we thought there was going to be a row.

Q. Had they any conversation before this?—A. They were talking loud together there.

Q. For some time?—A. I suppose about a minute or so. I think the man was very likely intoxicated; he acted like it.

Q. Is that all you know about it?—A. Well, they came very near getting into another fight with another democrat, but we separated them before they got to the place.

Q. Well, that is all you know?—A. Yes, sir; I think I have stated about all I know.

COLUMBIA, S. C. December 28, 1876.

PHILIP GRANDISON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About thirty-five or forty, I expect.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Richland County.

Q. Near what voting-precinct?—A. Trenholm's precinct.

Q. For whom did you vote?—A. I voted for the democratic party.

Q. Previous to voting, did you have any trouble with any of your own colored people about voting?—A. Yes, sir; I had lots of it.

Q. Did you get hurt anywhere?—A. Yes, sir; I've got the mark of it right on my head here now.

Q. Tell us how that was done.—A. I don't know the man's name. I know his face mighty well, but I am not acquainted with his name. He is a colored man who is staying in a store right down on the market. That evening, late, the day before the election, the fellows was after me up and down the street every time I came into Columbia about voting the democratic ticket, and every time they came to me I said I would vote it the last thing I did, if I didn't live two minutes.

Q. What did they say if you did vote it?—A. They said if I vote that ticket I will not live long afterward. I told 'em, "Well, I don't expect to live very long after I vote it, but I intend to vote it." One fellow, after they found that I was full goin' to vote it, asked how far out of town I lived. I told him about five miles. Said he, "You won't come back here alive." I had the Hampton badge on. "You won't come back alive," says he. I told him I wear it sure. I kep wearing it to the day of election. That evening one fellow got at me again about the democratic ticket. I told him, "I going to vote it sure to-morrow morning, sure, at the poll." He cotched me and held me, and got talking to me. I told him, "Don't hold me." This fellow was trying to persuade me out of voting, and just as I walked up the other fellow says, "You let that democratic nigger alone; don't bother." I said to him, "You hush up; you got nothing to do with me;" and by that time he stepped up, and struck me with a brick, and struck me right here, and I fell. After I fell, I didn't know nothing for a good while, and after I came to my senses I could hear Mr. G— talking to me, but I couldn't understand what he said, because I was out of my senses. It was about three-quarters of an hour, or an hour, before I got to my senses.

Q. Did it cut a place in your head?—A. Yes, sir; you can see the place; you can see the blood on my wesket now.

Q. Did any of your colored people say anything to you about what the United States troops were going to do?—A. Yes, sir; they said Chamberlain was going to have troops coming in here, and "every one of you niggers that vote the democratic ticket will be killed, sure." That day, sure enough, the troops did come down, and that made me believe they was going to do it, sure enough. It did make me feel kind o' skeerish, and I was going to run down in Wooster Hollow until Mr. Childs told me better.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Where do you live?—A. At Colonel Childs's place, five miles from Columbia.

Q. Do you work for him?—A. I rent land from him.

Q. He told you that the troops would not hurt you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were not afraid of them at all?—A. No, sir; I was not afraid of them.

Q. The troops never said any such thing as that to you, did they?—A. No, sir; after I told them what the republican party told me, they told me I mustn't listen to it; it is all nonsense.

Q. You told all the colored people what the troops had said?—A. Yes, sir; I told them, every one.

Q. And the colored people understood that the troops would not disturb them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was understood amongst them all?—A. Yes, sir; understood amongst them all.

Q. So that they were not afraid of the troops?—A. No, sir.

Q. You wore a Hampton democratic badge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you wear it?—A. I think I had it about two or three weeks before the election.

Q. You wore it every day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did anybody ever disturb you but this one time?—A. I was disturbed; I never could walk in Columbia no day with it but I was disturbed by some of the republican men about wearing it.

Q. They merely talked to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They did not strike you?—A. No, sir; not before that day.

Q. When was it you got hurt with a brick?—A. I got hurt late that evening, and the next morning was the election.

Q. Who was this man that struck you?—A. I don't know his name; I know his face mighty well, but I don't remember his name.

Q. Where was he?—A. Right down to Mr. Sweiger's store.

Q. Was it in Columbia that he struck you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was a little drunk, wasn't he?—A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't know him?—A. I know the man well.

Q. Was it at night?—A. Just before dusk; the sun was down.

Q. Did you talk with him a while before he struck you?—A. Just all the word he said to me was when the other man was talking to me, trying to persuade me out of the notion of votin the democrat ticket, he said, "O, leave that democrat nigger alone, for he don't know nothin." I said, "You shut up your mouth; you've got nothin' to do with me. I am among men that feel disposed to vote the democratic ticket, and I will do it if it's the last thing I do." I saw him stoop down; I didn't think he was going to hit me, for we didn't have no short questions at all, but the brick come and struck me and I fell right down.

Q. Nobody has ever interfered with you since the election?—A. No, sir; not since the election.

Q. The colored men have treated you kindly since the election, all of them?—A. Yes, sir; so far.

Q. Did Colonel Childs tell you that he wanted you to vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; he never did tell me that. How I come to vote it, was one day me and another fellow was coming to town together—me and Handy Hunter and Tom Baker and Archie Gunn was coming to Columbia. We got to talking about the 'lection. I said before that, that if I had to go to the poll again to vote for the party I had been votin' for the last eight or ten years, I never intended to walk to the poll and vote for them again, an' I says, before I goes to the poll an' votes for the party I has been a votin' for, I take side wid Haroton. I said, before I would vote for the republican party had been votin', I would take side wid Hampton. I think it was Archie said, "If you vote for Hampton we'll tie you an' whip you."

Q. But they never did disturb or whip you?—A. No, sir.

Q. The colored people are generally peaceable, are they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Never guilty of inflicting violence on anybody, as a general rule?—A. Some of 'em does, and some don't.

Q. How long have you lived on Colonel Childs's place?—A. I have been there going on nine years. I was there before he bought it. I was on it when Mr. Trenholm owned it.

Q. Did anybody go with you to the election?—A. No, sir; I went by myself, because after I was struck that night I was pretty sick all night.

Q. Did you see Childs at the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he go up with you to the polls?—A. Well, I met him there. When I started up, some fellow tried to stop me votin' the democratic ticket, and I told him, "Go 'way, don't bother me; I am not well."

Q. Mr. Childs was at the poll when you voted?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he give you a ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I got the ticket right out of his hand.

Q. And you are working his place? Who did you vote for?—A. I don't know who all I voted for, but I voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Can you tell me the names of any of the candidates you voted for?—A. I think Hampton, an' Segar, and Mr. Tom Taylor.

Q. What was Segar a candidate for?—A. I think he was a candidate for member of the legislature.

Q. What was Tom Taylor a candidate for?—A. I think he was for the legislature too.

Q. Whom else did you vote for?—A. Well, I didn't know rightly all that was on the ticket.

Q. Did you know any other candidate on it?—A. No, sir; not well.

Q. Do you know what officer you voted for?—A. No, sir; not well.

Q. What was Hampton a candidate for?—A. He was a candidate for governor.

Q. Do you know any other officer that you voted for?—A. No, sir; not well, because I could not read the ticket; but these men I've named, I heard they was the candidates for office.

Q. Do you know whether their names were on it or not?—A. No, sir; not as I knows of, because I could not read it.

Q. Do you know whether they were elected?—A. No, sir; not as I knows of.

Q. Do you know who was elected?—A. No, sir; I never could hear the straight of it yet—ne'er could hear the straight of it.

Q. Do you know who was the candidate for President?—A. Yes, sir; I heard his name called.

Q. What is it?—A. Tilden and Hendricks, and Hayes and Wheeler, republican.

Q. Hendricks was the democratic candidate for President?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was Tilden a candidate for?—A. I suppose he was a candidate for President too, I suppose, or Vice-President.

Q. He was candidate for Vice-President?—A. Yes, sir; I think he was.

Q. Who was the republican candidate for President?—A. Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. Both of them?—A. I suppose one was for President and one for Vice-President.

Q. And Wheeler was the candidate for President, was he not?—A. Yes; I suppose so.

Q. And Hayes for Vice-President?—A. I think that is the way it was; that is the way I learned it.

Q. That is the way they told it to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who was the republican candidate for governor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?—A. Mr. Chamberlain.

A. What other State officers were there to elect?—A. Well, there was Mr. Minot and Mr. Carman.

Q. Do you know what State officers were to be filled?—A. No, sir; I don't know whether they was filled or not, for I never could hear the straight of any of it; they

- said the republicans had it, and the others said the democrats had it, and I was listening every day to hear who did get elected; they said that Chamberlain had took his seat, and then I heard again that he hadn't took his seat legally, and I could not hear straight how it was done; I was listening every day to hear it.

Q. There was no other colored man struck on the day of the election was there?—A. But one that I know of.

Q. Did you see that?—A. Yes, sir; I was as near to him as to this gentleman; that is the only one that I saw at the time I was there.

Q. How long were you at the election?—A. When I went there first to vote I staid there about an hour or two; then I went home and got my eye washed, staid there a while, and then went back and staid until late in the evening. The next row I saw was Preston Taylor when they tore off his clothes for him. Them's the only two I saw.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Did you talk with the United States troops at all until election-day?—A. I was told about them before that.

Q. But the time when you talked with the officers, that was on election-day?—A. Yes, sir; right at the poll, just after the row was over. I saw them coming, and I thought it was to shoot all that voted the democratic ticket, and I was going to hide myself in the woods; and then Mr. Childs told me how that they didn't come to harm anybody, but to see that every man could vote his own opinion.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How many soldiers were there?—A. I think it was six or seven private soldiers, two officers, and a sergeant. Then after he told me, I went up there where he was, and then I was told about what I heard, and he up and told me, "No; it was no such thing."

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. And then you spread it as far as you could?—A. Yes, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 25, 1876.

PRESTON TAYLOR (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. About twenty-three.

Q. Where did you live last fall?—A. On Mr. Childs's place.

Q. Did you have any difficulty on election-day about voting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were you going to vote?—A. I was going to vote the square democratic ticket.

Q. What was the trouble, and what did it come from?—A. I went to the box, and the people had so much contradiction words going I went back; it was in a line just like you drilling, and I went to the box and then turned back. I was hurrahing for Hampton; as soon as I did so they was on me the same as ants. The women surrounded me first. I didn't much care for them, still I know there was a heap of fellows round and I got cut, and my clothes was tore off me, and I went home to get more clothes.

Q. How large a part of your clothes were torn off?—A. All the clothes; all my coat and all my shirt.

Q. So that all the upper part of your body above the pantaloons was naked?—A. Yes, sir; my pants didn't tore at all, but my coat an' shirt was square off.

Q. Before the election, were you ever talked to and threatened in any way by colored people on account of how you were going to vote?—A. No, sir; I never was.

Q. Was nothing ever said to you?—A. No, sir. The reason I voted the democratic ticket I was pretty hard up in the summer time, and I tried all these republican fellows to see if I could get any money from 'em, and I couldn't, and I went to Childs and he never asked nothing, and I borrowed money from him all summer; and I thought the democratic party was good, and we'll give them our support. I thiinks we have to live off the democrats; and I knew Childs would not do anything to me that was wrong, and I told him I would vote just the way he voted.

Q. Did any of the colored people talk to you about voting the democratic ticket?—A. "Pres," they says, "if you vote democratic you would be beneath noticing." I said, "I will be noticed by a man that has got money. I don't care whether you all notice me or not; I will be noticed by a man that's got money."

Q. Did your own people tell you anything about troops coming down?—A. They told us that if you voted the democratic ticket that the democrats could not associate with the republicans at all no more with the governor, would make a division between the two parties, and that we would not have anything. They said they didn't see how a nigger could be a democrat at all. I told them I see. I told them we have got to live here, and we can't get a cent out of the republicans. I worked with one Yankee man since I've been here, and he took all the money, and I never seen him since—a whole year's labor. I've got no use for 'em. I told Mr. Childs I was going to vote with him.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You are friendly with the colored people?—A. Yes, sir, I is. I don't interfere with no one.

Q. They all treat you kindly, I suppose?—A. The women tore my clothes.

Q. The women did that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They didn't strike you? They were trying to persuade you to vote the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir; they come round me a crying; but I didn't mind the women so much if I didn't get out. I know a heap of them was against it.

Q. The colored men haven't disturbed you?—A. No, sir; they never have.

Q. You were not afraid to vote the way you wanted to vote?—A. No, sir; I was not afraid.

Q. You never had any idea that the troops were here to force you in voting?—A. No, sir; they told me so, but I didn't believe it.

Q. The colored people all understood that the troops were here not to interfere with their votes at all, but to protect them so that they might vote as they wished?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The colored people all had an opportunity to vote just the way they wanted to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No interference with them at all?—A. No.

Q. You voted the democratic ticket because the republicans would not lend you money when you wanted it?—A. Yes, sir; and because I saw we could not live no way but for the democrats.

Q. Colonel Childs let you have money any time you wanted it?—A. Yes, sir; any time I wanted it.

Q. You went to borrow some of him and he loaned it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than one time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much money?—A. Two to three dollars at a time and I paid him back.

Q. How did you pay him back?—A. I rented his land, and as soon as I sold my cotton he just told me how much I owed him and I paid him.

Q. How long have you lived on his land?—A. It will soon be twenty-three years and a half. That was before he owned it; it used to belong to Mr. Hampton.

Q. You were a slave and belonged to Mr. Wade Hampton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Colonel Childs tell you he wanted you to vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; he did not. He aske me, "Pres, how are you going to vote?" I told him I didn't know. "Well," he says, "I think you ought to go with us, Pres?" Says I, "How can you think so?" Says he, "I don't mean to persuade you out of your notion; vote the way you please." Then I went on two or three more days, and I came to Columbia, and got into an argument with some fellows, and they asked, "How are you going to vote, Pres?" and I said, "I am going to vote for Hampton." And he said, "Yes, I am going to vote for Hampton, too." So I went back and told Mr. Childs, "I believe I am going to vote your way with you." He said, "That is all right;" and he said he would take care of me.

Q. He said he would take care of you; he told you that if you voted for Hampton you could live on his place, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir. He told me this, too, if I didn't vote for Hampton could stay if I would have paid my account. He told me if I voted for just who I pleased, I could stay on the place.

Q. Well, you thought it was better to vote the democratic ticket, because you had to depend on the democrats for a place to live?—A. Yes, sir; that is the reason.

Q. And you were afraid that if you did not vote that way you would not be allowed to stay?—A. No, sir; I was not afraid, because he told me already that I could have an opportunity to live on the land if I paid him rent; so I voted that ticket because I thought it was the best way.

Q. What is Colonel Childs name?—A. Willie Childs.

Q. What is his father's name?—A. I don't know his father.

Q. Is he a president of a bank here?—A. I believe so; I don't know for certain.

Q. How did you vote at the last election?—A. I voted the democratic ticket; I don't know who all was on the ticket, but I voted it.

Q. Did you know anybody that was on the ticket?—A. Nobody but Hampton; Mr. Segar said he was on the ticket, and Tom Taylor.

Q. Did you know any others?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you remember what offices were to be filled at the last election?—A. No, sir; there is none I can think of but Hampton, Taylor, and Segar.

Q. What was Taylor a candidate for?—A. Member of the legislature, I think.

Q. What was Segar for?—A. A member too.

Q. Were they elected?—A. I think they was elected; I could not say entirely that they was elected, but by all accounts I think they was.

Q. Do you know what offices were to be filled at the last election?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You have never been disturbed since the election?—A. No, sir.

Q. No man has said anything against you because of the way you voted?—A. No, sir.

Q. The colored people are perfectly friendly with you?—A. Perfectly friendly.

Q. They treat you kindly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would not be afraid to vote the way you wanted to again?—A. No, sir; I would not be afraid.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

MERRIMON WASHINGTON (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. Twenty-seven years.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Do you to Mr. Childs's plantation now; they used to call it Trenholm's.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. I have been there all my life except seven years. I went out to the western country, and staid out there seven years, and came back again.

Q. Do you know anything about any one threatening you before the last election if you voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what any of the colored people said to you about it.—A. Well, sir, a fellow named Abram Carter and Joe Andrus told me that if we voted the democratic ticket they was going to drive us off the place, they was going to go up to town and have a band come down and drive us off, clean us off out of the State. I told them that I didn't think they could do it, cause we wasn't livin onto a republican's place. They then said Chamberlain was going to do it; was going to send down the Yankees to shoot down every democratic nigger that 'sists after the election. I told them that they will have to shoot, that I expect to die right there on the place; Chamberlain and his crowd ain't going to be governor this time. They tried mighty hard. Carter said, "We'll see; all right. We'll see on the day of election." I had about fourteen boys in my company. I had a flag that I put over my house and they threatened to take it down. I told them I would give them $5 to go there and do it. They said they would do it if Mr. Childs would give them consent. I told them to go to Mr. Childs and told him that I told 'em if they do it I will give them $5. So they met him on the road and says he told them that if they wanted to take it down he would be good for the $5. One Sunday they came there to my place where I was sitting down talking, and they asked me if I am ready for them to take the flag down. I told 'em yes; I have got $5 that they could have if they took it down. They said, "Well, we ain't ready to take it down, but just as soon as Chamberlain would be governor they would take it down and take me down too and take my head off. I told 'em they would have a good many heads to take off as well as mine, and I would be willin have mine taken off first.

Q. How many of them came down?—A. There was about six of them, but there was only two of them that talked so much about it. Them two fellows seemed to be captains of it. I was captain of the company that put up the flag. I went up to the poll to vote, and they tried to keep me away from the poll. I told 'em to let these eight boys that I had with me alone, and I told 'em it would be a dog-burying right at the poll if they go to fooling with these eight boys. I stood right in the middle of them, and let them all pass me and vote, and I then followed them down and voted. A fellow named White stepped to one side, and he says to Jonas Wicks, "Are you voting the democrat ticket?" He says, "Yes, I vote it." He says, "Yes; that fellow Merrimon made you vote it." And he just hauled off and struck him. Soon as I saw him struck him I run there and told him (Jonas) to let him loose, that I wanted to get hold of him. Mr. Childs run up and got hold of me. I asked him to let me loose. He said that he didn't want to have any fuss at the polls. I told him I didn't care. If a man put his hand onto one of my boys he would have me to whip, and I know there ain't no man on the ground could whip me in a fist-fight to save his life.

Q. Was that the only blow you saw struck?—A. Yes, sir; I see women tear off Pres-Taylor's clothes. I was going to have something to say about that. A Mr. McDuff took me away. They said as long as they kept me away from the poll there wouldn't be no row.

Q. Before the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any threats on the streets from colored men against colored men?—A. O, yes, sir; I heard this fellow Nash say that he got a cowhide to whip any democratic nigger that voted the democratic ticket; that they can't be democrats, and if they be fool enough to go and vote it they ought to have a cowhiding. I stepped out and told him I voted for Hampton, an' I says, "I want you to cowhide me. You cowhide me, and you cowhide your last man." He said, well, I must stay there until he comes back. I staid in front of Taylor's store. He told me he would be back in twenty-five minutes, and he came back driving a buggy. Soon as he got to the door I went out across the street to him, and a lot of these republicans went up to him. They said to me, "You say you are going to whip Nash?" I says, "Yes; I can whip Nash or any of his children. Just let Nash get out of that buggy, and if I don't whip him I'll work for him for $10 a year." Then Mr. Childs, at the bank, heard about it; and he got me to the bank, and the old man told me to behave myself, and not to raise a row with anybody.

Q. What did you hear on the streets about any threats against democratic negroes?—A. That is all I heard, that this fellow Nash was going to whip anybody that did vote that ticket.

Q. But he did not whip you?—A. No, sir; he can't do it.

Q. Did you hear anything said about why the United States troops were brought here?—A. Yes, sir; they said that they were brought here to see that every man that wanted to vote the republican ticket could do it, but any man that wanted to vote the democratic ticket, as soon as he done voted it, the troops would take the names down, and soon as Chamberlain would give them the power they would go down and shoot them all, and then they could not shoot down they would run 'em in the river.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Mr. Childs told you that the troops were not for any such purpose?—A. Yes, sir; he told me that.

Q. The colored people all understood that the troops were not here to interfere with their voting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they understood that the troops were here to protect them so that they might vote as they chose?—A. Yes, sir; we all had the understanding of that.

Q. They were not afraid of the troops?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw no violence except what you have described?—A. Not a bit.

Q. Nobody struck you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You know of no colored man being disturbed because of the way he voted?—A. No, sir.

Q. The colored people are generally a quiet, orderly people, ain't they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had a Hampton flag over your house for months?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nobody disturbed it?—A. No, sir; nobody ever did try to take it down.

Q. These six men that came to your house one Sunday, were you acquainted with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were friends of yours?—A. They was when I voted the republican ticket.

Q. Well, you are friendly with them now, are you not?—A. Yes, sir; I am friendly with them right now.

Q. They didn't attempt to disturb you in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you had no fears that they were going to take down the flag?—A. No, sir; I wished they would do it; I wished they had enough in them to do it.

Q. You didn't think they were going to do it?—A. No, sir; I knew they were not going to do it.

Q. They talked friendly with you, didn't they?—A. They talked pretty friendly.

Q. You are friendly with them now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk with Childs about how you would vote?—A. No, sir; I never would before the election.

Q. Didn't you tell him you were going to vote the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir; he never asked me and I never told him. I just went to work and done it on my own account.

Q. How long have you been living on his land?—A. Twenty-eight years this coming February, and I have never been off the place but seven and a half years.

Q. You thought it was better to vote the democratic ticket because you had to depend upon the democrats for land to live on, and they assisted you in living?—A. Yes, sir; I lived on them. I don't live no other way than by the democrats.

Q. And that is the reason you voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were afraid that if you didn't vote the democratic ticket they would not let you live on the land?—A. No, sir; I was not afraid of that, because I know they will let me live there. A man that will work can most live anywhere, but I voted that way because I thought this party was going too far, and they didn't give no justice to anybody. They swindled me out of about $75 since I have been done freed myself, and I thought I would not be swindled any more by them if I could help it.

Q. The colored people were not afraid to vote the way they wanted to, so far as you knew?—A. No, sir; they were not afraid a bit to vote the way they wanted.

Q. They were not afraid of any interference?—A. No, sir; they didn't seem to be afraid.

Q. Whom did you vote for for President?—A. I voted for Tilden for President, I believe.

Q. Hendricks was the candidate for President?—A. Yes.

Q. What was Tilden a candidate for?—A. I really forget what he was for now.

Q. Was he for the legislature?—A. No, sir; I don't think he was.

Q. For senator?—A. I don't remember now what he was for; but I voted for Hampton, and they was on the ticket; I voted the whole ticket right through, but I didn't learn particularly what they was for.

Q. Do you know what offices were to be filled?—A. If I know what officers?

Q. What offices were to be filled?—A. They told me that Tilden and Hendricks, one of these, was for President, and Hampton was for governor; that is all I understood about it.

Q. Did you hear anything about Hayes and Wheeler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wheeler was the candidate for President, was he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What candidate was he?—A. He was republican.

Q. And what was Hayes a candidate for?—A. O, I didn't bother with the republican party at all, because I didn't have anything to do with them.

Q. You don't know what he was a candidate for?—A. No, sir.

Q. You took a squad of men to the polls, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. I carried eight; there was more than eight, but they drew off because they heard that Chamberlain was going to send the Yankees down to shoot them down, and some niggers when they hear about Yankees they willing to go and eat the ground alive; but I won't be scared about Yankees.

Q. Where did those eight men that you took with you live?—A. Some of them lived where I do, and some below me two miles.

Q. Mr. Childs told you to get as many as you could to come up and vote, did he?—A. Yes, sir; he told me the evening before that he would like me to be to the poll and to get as many to vote with me as I could. I told him I would do so. That was the only word him and me ever had about the election.

Q. Where did he tell you that?—A. He told me at my house; he rode up to my door.

Q. And you agreed to do it?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. You stated you took eight to the polls, but there were more who drew off; how many more were there that did not go?—A. I had sixteen, and there was eight of them didn't go.

Q. They didn't go on account of these soldiers?—A. No, sir; they drew off on the occasion of that.

Q. When did Mr. Childs first tell you about the soldiers coming down; was it before or on election-day?—A. On election-day. The soldiers was there at the time.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Before the election all the colored people understood that they could vote just as they wanted to?—A. Just as they chose. They said they was to do so until a week before the election; then they commenced talking about what was going to be done after the election with any nigger that voted for the democrats; that his head was to be taken off.

Q. But you were not afraid of it?—A. No, sir; I was not, nor I ain't now.

Q. And none of the rest of the colored men were afraid?—A. Yes, sir; eight of my men drew out on account of it.

Q. Do you know how they voted?—A. Yes, sir; I saw them vote.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

J. C. SHEPPARD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Abbeville Court-House, in Edgefield County, of this State.

Q. State what political position you occupy at this time?—A. I am a member of the legislature from Edgefield County.

Q. How long have you lived in Edgefield County?—A. I was born there; I am 26 years old, and have lived there all the while.

Q. Have you a general acquaintance throughout the county of Edgefield?—A. I have, I think, an intimate acquaintance with every portion of the county.

Q. You know a great many of the white and colored people, I suppose?—Yes, sir; I know almost the entire white population, those that are at all important, and a good many of the colored people. I don't pretend to be acquainted with them; I cannot tell one from another scarcely in a crowd.

Q. Where were you on the 7th of November last?—A. I was in the court-house very nearly all day. I was there when the polls were opened at 6 o'clock, and I was there when they closed, at six. That was at precinct No. 1, which was held in the court-house.

Q. Were you an officer of election?—A. Not at all; I just stood there because I was interested and because I desired that the matter should be conducted fairly so far as I could promote that purpose.

Q. State what the character of the election was, so far as you know, as to order.—A. I was not there all day. About two hours in the afternoon I was not inside of the court-house, but I was there all day long excepting about two hours, inside of the four walls. At six o'clock in the morning the managers were all present, and the United States supervisors, and a clerk appointed by the managers of election. The managers were two republicans and one democrat. The United States supervisor was a colored republican, and the clerk was a colored republican. There was no white supervisor at the box that I know of positively, but I think there was one who was not there very much of the day. I was the only white man that remained there nearly all the time, except the white manager, and I saw everything that was done and heard everything that was said while I was there. As often as I desired, which was very frequently, I would walk to the door and look out to see what was done outside, and I have a satisfactory knowledge of what transpired outside. The polls were open at six o'clock and the balloting went on without the slightest interruption until about eleven o'clock; it went on as fast as the ballots could be deposited and the names registered, until, I suspect, between eleven and twelve o'clock; I do not speak positively about the time, because I did not notice, but think it was between eleven and twelve, when the parties who were present at the opening of the polls had very nearly all voted, and they were exclusively white that had voted up to that time, excepting some colored democrats who voted with our party. I went to the door about nine o'clock and there was a large number of colored people without, in the public square. Just in front of the door of the court-house, probably as far as from here across that street, the public square, as we call it, was very nearly filled with colored people seemingly waiting to vote; and about that time I heard a great whoop, and went to the door to see what it was, and they were moving off, going to Macedonia church, which is within the corporation limits of the town, probably between a quarter and a half-mile distant from the court-house. They went in a body; the last single man of them went to the church to vote, and I saw nothing more of them until, I suspect, between four and five o'clock, when a considerable number came back. From a time between eleven and twelve o'clock until between four and five, I doubt if there were as many as fifty ballots deposited in that box. Now and then a colored man would come in, and now and then a white man, one by one, and for two or three hours there were not as many as a dozen men in and around that court-house at one time. The managers did absolutely nothing, nor the clerks. They lounged about there, smoked cigars, and did as they pleased. That continued up to nearly, if not quite, four o'clock in the afternoon. There were not very many blacks, because only twenty-six colored republicans voted there that day.

Q. Were there any white men around the poll obstructing the way to it?—A. No, sir; not at all. Our court-house is perfectly square, like this room, and very nearly half-way from the main door to the judge's desk, which is directly opposite, runs a bar, inside for the jurors, and witnesses, and members of the bar; outside for the spectators. Early in the morning, when the voting began, this bar was crowded with men, and Mr. Glover, the democratic manager there, declined to proceed until the bar should be cleared of voters, except those who came up to be sworn at one time. They adopted a rule that a dozen men should be sworn, vote, and retire from the court-house, and thus matters were conducted until that mass of white men had voted. They not only excluded them from the bar, but put them out of the house entirely, so that at no time were there exceeding a dozen men there after the rule was adopted, and it was adopted within two hours at least after the polls were opened. There was perfectly free access to the polls all day long, from morning until night; and from between eleven and twelve o'clock, and some time between three and four, or about those respective hours, there was absolutely nothing done within the court-house room, except that now and then a voter would come up and vote. Between three and four, or about four o'clock, I went down to my office, which is next door to General Brannan's headquarters. As I was going to my office I saw a crowd of negroes congregated around the headquarters. I was attracted in that direction by that fact, and in addition to that I saw my brother in something of a discussion with this man Cain, a candidate for the senate, and I went in, being somewhat cooler than he was, to substitute myself for him in that discussion, whatever it might be about. Then I ascertained that Cain's complaint was that a great many of the colored people there had not voted. I requested my brother to get out of the way; that I would take care of that matter, and he did so. I then stated to Cain, in the presence of Colonel Randall, immediately in front of their headquarters, that if he would show me a single man, white or black, who desired to vote, and that would follow me to the polls, I would guarantee him the right peaceably to deposit his vote, and I would accompany him back if he didn't wish to go through the crowd. That was about four o'clock, and the crowd had returned from Macedonia Church to the court-house box. Cain said, "Well, sir, I will show you a man that has not voted." I said, "Very well, let him come." He asked me if I would accompany him to his house. I said, "Yes; I will go with you anywhere to find a man that has not voted." Cain's house is about fifty or seventy-five yards distant from my office, on the opposite side of the street, immediately above my office, and about ten steps more distant from the headquarters, and we went in the direction of his house, as I understood, to find this man who had not voted—not knowing whether he referred to some one in the crowd of colored men around us—I was the only white man there except these officers. When I got half-way between his house and my office I told him I had gone far enough, and I would not go any farther. I said, "I am not going in that direction; if you want to send anybody to follow me to the polls, bring him out." He said, "All these people here that you see have not voted." I said, "All right," and we turned round and went toward the polls. They all followed me until we reached a point between there and the court-house. Some white man asked me where I was going with all those negroes. I don't know who he was, though I suspect I should recognize him now. I told him that people had complained to the United States officers that these people hadn't voted. He said, "They voted at Macedonia Church." I said, "They say they have not." He said, "Here is a man that has voted," putting his hand on a man that was very near, "This man voted there at Macedonia Church, for I saw him." I said, "We will go up to the court-house, the United States commissioner is there, and have it investigated." At that time two or three other white men came up and said, "Yes, I recognize him; I saw him vote;" and that accumulation of testimony seemed to induce him to doubt his right to vote again and he went off, and every single man of them followed him. I didn't open my mouth except to tell them to follow me; not a single word was said except the charge that they had voted, and the last man of them retreated back toward the office of the headquarters, and I did not go with them. There was no prevention at all of their going on with me. I then went on the polls through the crowd of three or four hundred white men. I don't know that I can state the number accurately. When I went to the poll I saw Beatty, the United States marshal, take six colored men right through the crowd; the horses would open a passage, and the men went up and voted. I saw them when they did it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How many were in the crowd that started with you from the headquarters to the polls?—A. I could not estimate it. I don't think there were more than seventy-five or one hundred—not exceeding one hundred.

Q. And you say that during all this time there was free access to the poll, and that you saw them walk up and vote?—A. I saw with my own eyes six colored men walk with Beatty through the crowd, and as they went along the way was cleared for them, and they went up and voted. Whilst I was there two other colored men came up unaccompanied. Beatty was there at the time, and a white man stepped up and challenged the vote. I went to them upon that and found they had voted at Macedonia Church; the white man insisted on it, and the negro denied it. The white man said, "I can prove it by Marshal Beatty if he is here," and I looked around and Beatty was there, and the negro admitted that he had voted. Beatty rebuked him very severely in the presence of the managers for his attempt to vote twice.

Q. As to the political speaking done on the steps there in the afternoon, was there any obstruction caused by that?—A. As I said, the crowd consisted of somewhere about 300 men around the court-house steps, and General Butler, and General Gary, and myself addressed them. We had heard from a sufficient number of the country precincts to be satisfied that we had carried the county. We had couriers running between the different precincts in the county, keeping up unbroken communication between them and the executive committee at Edgefield and the different country precincts. It was getting late, and we had heard from them enough to justify us in publishing to the crowd that we had carried the election, and in begging them to keep the peace, and to do nothing at that late hour to mar the effect of the victory. The purpose of that speaking was to satisfy the people that the whole victory was ours, and that nothing could be gained by any demonstration at all.

Q. Was that meeting organized to obstruct the way to the polls?—A. Any one at all could go up that desired.

Q. As a matter of fact, did they do so?—A. As a matter of fact, while the speaking was going on, (because I was the third man that spoke,) I went from the place where the colored men left me and retreated back from there toward the court-house steps, and up to that time Beatty went up with the six colored men, and the way was made clear for him.

Q. Did you hear or know during that time of any threats, or any speeches of intimidation against any class of voters?—A. I didn't see the slightest exhibition of violence or of bad temper. I heard of a difficulty at Macedonia Church, but I was not there. I heard a good deal of cheering and shouting, but it was not directed at any party; it was the ordinary political enthusiasm.

Q. Was the crowd good-natured?—A. Perfectly good-natured, sir; and freer from the influence of intoxicating drinks than I had ever seen a crowd of that size in Edgefield County; because the rule was strictly enforced by the intendant, who is here now; a rule required all bar-rooms to be closed; and it was strictly enforced, so far as possible.

Q. You were not at box No. 2?—A. I did not go there all day long; I did not go nearer than my office, which is about one hundred yards nearer to the court-house.

Q. During that day was there anybody injured?—A. As I stated, there was a collision between a white man and a black man at Macedonia Church, at which blows passed. I have seen the colored man since, and General Butler represented the party accused, and the United States marshal dismissed, very summarily, the case upon the ground of want of probable cause. That was the only case of violence that was charged.

Q. What was the fact as to the quiet and good order of the people of Edgefield through the campaign?—A. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the only parties that were interfered with on account of their political principles were three or four colored men who were beaten and maltreated by colored republicans because of their democratic principles.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you see that?—A. I did not see it done. I saw the men after it was done.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It was a matter of general notoriety?—A. O, undoubtedly, sir; and the parties were arrested and put in jail for it.

Q. State briefly the facts with regard to the meetings.—A. I was appointed chairman of a committee to wait upon Governor Chamberlain and Judge Mackey, and the other parties who had accompanied them as speakers, to request the privilege of a joint discussion. I told them that General Butler and General Gary and myself would represent the democratic party, and they could have just as many people to speak as they wanted; and I asked if it would be agreeable to them. Judge Mackey and Governor Chamberlain said that personally it would be perfectly agreeable, but that they were on a visit to Edgefield pursuant to an invitation of the republican executive committee, and that they could not make an appointment of that sort without conferring with the committee in reference to it. I told them that was perfectly proper, and inquired how long it would be before they could give me an answer. Chamberlain said it would be half an hour. I said, "Very well, sir; I will return at the expiration of half an hour for your response." At the expiration of half an hour, nearly, (for my party was waiting for my report about the matter,) I went back, when Governor Chamberlain said he hadn't yet seen the members of the executive committee, and that he could not yet give me an answer, and asked me where I would be during the next half hour, that he could send a messenger with his answer. I told him the most convenient place was at my office, and I would go there and remain the whole half hour. He said, "Very well." I went there and remained half an hour, and there was no answer. I went up and reported to our committee these facts, and we thereupon formed and went over to the academy grove, where the speaking was to take place, and where our people were assembled, a large number of them. It seemed to me there were three or four thousand white men; there may not have been so many, and as many colored men. The line was fairly drawn, on one side of the stand the colored people, and on the other the white people. The speaking began. General Gary got up and stated that they had requested the privilege of a joint discussion, but no response had been given to it, and they proposed to have one anyhow. Thereupon there was a brief conference between him and Governor Chamberlain, and Governor Chamberlain arose and said there would be a joint discussion; that he was to open and General Butler to follow, and that each speaker would be limited to 30 minutes; that was the rule which was enforced, except in the case of Judge Mackey, who was allowed to finish a sentence. Governor Chamberlain spoke uninterruptedly, save some questions that were asked him, his party would cheer him when he said something that suited them, and our people did nothing but ask him questions, "How is it about McDevitt?" and such questions; that might have annoyed him but he completed his thirty minutes. He was followed by Butler, and so on.

Q. You subsequently made a request for a division of time at another public meeting held there?—A. No, sir; we did not. It may have been said that there was a request made, but we understood that the canvassers from this place were accompanied by a set of United States marshals and commissioners, whose purpose was to arrest us; we were told so by good authority, and we did not go to the place. There were two meetings held, theirs at academy grove, and ours in the village square here. After we had finished our meeting a large column of our men rode by the republican speaking-ground, but did not stop, as I understood.

Q. Did you attend any other republican meeting during the campaign except this one that you have referred to?—A. I don't remember that I did. I am sure I did not make any speech at any of them.

Q. What was the general condition of affairs in your county, so far as you know, during the campaign as to order among the people?—A. I know of no case of violation of law on account of political principle, except the whipping of those colored men by those other colored men. There was a colored man said to have been killed on account of that whipping, but I don't know anything about that. I know he was killed, because I was employed to defend the men that were charged with whipping him. That case has never been tried, but it will be in proper time, I suppose.

Q. What other democratic meeting did you attend?—A. Every democratic meeting in the county: Blackville, Allendale, Early Branch, in Beaufort, and Beaufort itself.

Q. What was the character of your meetings?—A. Perfectly quiet, except at Beaufort, where the negroes kept up an infernal yelling, and a great many other species of interruption, and broke up our meeting; but there was no violence done. Hampton was heard respectfully all the way through, but when Cooke began to speak they clamored for a democrat. They did not want to hear a republican.

Q. Who was it that created the noise?—A. The colored people exclusively.

Q. Republicans?—A. They were said to be republicans. I never had seen any of them before, but they looked like republicans. They broke up that meeting, and that was more than any party of democrats did during the campaign.

Q. Now as to your policy. What appeals did you make to the colored people? How did you treat them in the campaign; what methods did you employ to get their votes if you could?—A. There was one argument that was a pet appeal of my own, individually, and that was the character of our county government as administered by republican officials. I cannot make any statement that would enable you gentlemen to understand and appreciate the condition of affairs in Edgefield County under the administration of these officials. They are inefficient and corrupt to an alarming degree, and no man can understand it properly unless he goes there.

Q. Your appeal, then, was based on the bad management of your county affairs?—A. Yes, sir; on the inefficiency and the incompetency and the unblushing corruption of these officials.

Q. So far as you know, was that the general character of the appeal throughout the State—the misgovernment of what was called republican rule?—A. Well, as I said, I did not visit any other county at all, except Beaufort and Colleton.

Q. So far as you knew?—A. My understanding was that that was one of the appeals made to colored voters.

Q. Was there anything like a proscriptive policy?—A. In Edgefield County, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying there was not, sir. Not as a policy. There may have been an individual here and there who would determine not to hire a negro or anybody else who would support the republican party, but it was not a part of the policy of our party.

Q. Give us a little history of the action of your committee at this election.—A. In 1874 that was the apple of discord in the ranks of the democratic party, and it defeated us overwhelmingly. Our people were evenly divided upon the policy. General Butler and myself made every speech in 1874 denunciatory of the proscription policy, which did us a great deal of harm in the estimation of those people who were favoring it, but we succeeded in having it defeated; the resolutions were never adopted in 1874, to the best of my recollection, and they were not repeated in 1876. There was not a single resolution tending to proscription, or to any other species of oppression, introduced in the councils of the democratic party, to the best of my knowledge, and I was a member of the county club, (as we call it,) I was president of the Edgefield democratic club, and as such was member of the county club, and if any resolution to that effect, or tending in any way to that end, was introduced, I did not know it; and I attended every meeting without exception.

Q. Then you say that so far as you observed in your own precinct on election-day, and prior to that in the county, and so far as you saw throughout the State, there was no disposition or act on the part of the democratic leaders and orators?—A. I do not know about the disposition, sir; there was no overt act. What people feel or think I know nothing about. There was a great deal of political excitement; there was a great deal of riding about. We had a political meeting ordinarily once a week, and nearly every man that was large enough to ride in a buggy or ride on a horse would attend them from all parts of the country.

Q. Is not that riding on horseback a common method of traveling here?—A. Why, sir, we have no other way to go. There is not a railroad in Edgefield County, except one, and our people travel almost exclusively on horseback [or in their buggies—mainly in buggies]. The different clubs would go together, in a column, to a political meeting, frequently.

Q. Were there any rifle-clubs in your county?—A. There was a rifle-club at Edgefield village.

Q. How long ago?—A. It was organized before the inauguration of this campaign.

If you have the statutes of 1873 and 1874, I can show you an act of the legislature providing for the incorporation of such companies, and the gentlemen secured a charter for the organization of that rifle-club at Edgefield village.

Q. What was the character of that?—A. It was a social affair altogether; it had no political significance at all in its inception.

Q. After the governor's proclamation, what became of that club?—A. The captain asked me to address an inquiry to Governor Chamberlain whether the proclamation had reference to that organization, stating the law. I wrote the communication, and the captain signed his name, and Chamberlain answered. In consequence of the response, the company disbanded and have never met since, that I know of.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. These clubs that you had afterward were mere political clubs?—A. We had another club, called the Edgefield saber-club; it had no political significance at all. They met once a month and had their tilts and joust; had no political significance whatever.

Q. What were these clubs that have been referred to during the campaign?—A. We had political democratic clubs. I was a president of one of them, but never attended a meeting on horseback except one; I attended in my buggy.

Q. It was not secret?—A. Not at all, sir; we held our meetings with open doors, and anybody could come in that wanted to. Our meetings were held but once in two weeks.

Q. Do you think of anything else that is pertinent to this investigation?—A. I would like to state something that took place in the court-house after the polls were closed on the day of the election. I understand that testimony has been given to the effect that Bill Gary, a citizen of Augusta, and myself took possession of the box, counted the ballots, and made just such a return as we saw fit. I wish to state what took place in reference to that. When the polls closed I went out. I had had nothing to eat since the evening before—Monday evening at supper—and very little to drink, and I went out and took supper. By the time I got back the ballots had been counted and were heaped up, the split tickets in one place and the straight radical tickets in another place, and the straight democratic tickets in another. The managers were not men acquainted with figures. Two of them were colored men, that could scarcely write their names, (one of them especially,) and they could not prepare their return. Blanks were there, but they could not fill them up, and they requested Gary and myself to do that for them. They requested us to prepare their official returns for them. Captain White was there, I think, the whole time, and there was not a single figure that Gary and I put down that was not understood by the managers. We would explain to Captain White, and he would approve of it so far as he cared anything about it. He was a United States officer stationed there.

Q. You simply acted for them?—A. For them, at their request, and in their presence, and every figure that was put down was put down with their full knowledge and consent, and they signed it of their own free will and accord. I will state, furthermore, since I have been in this place to attend the legislature, until I understood that General Wallace was a candidate for the speakership, before I heard that Wallace would accept the office of speaker, Paris Simkins came to me in the state-house and told me that he was gratified at my prospect for the speakership, and hoped that I would provide something for him in the house. I told him of the protest filed against the validity of my election. He said, "Well, sir, I have not signed the protest, and don't intend to sign it. I am not taking part in the contest that is being made against your seat, and am not disposed to do it, and don't intend to do it. I believe that you are legally elected. There might have been some illegal votes; there might have been some irregularities; but there were not a sufficient number of them, nor were they of sufficient importance to impeach that majority that you received, and I have not signed it, and don't intend to sign it, and hope you will provide for me in your appointments."

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You are a member of what is called the Wallace house, the democratic house?—A. I think it is the legal house. I cannot say that it is a democratic house, because there are republican members in that body.

Q. Do you know anything of the means by which republican members were induced to come into it?—A. I do not, except what I heard Hamilton and Myers say about it in their speeches preparatory to taking the oath before Wallace. Other than what they stated I have no information at all.

Q. From about twelve o'clock until four, there was very little voting at box No. 1?—A. From some time between eleven and twelve to a time between three and four; I do not pretend to state the hours exactly.

Q. Up to the time that the colored men left that precinct and went in the direction of the other, had any colored republicans voted?—A. They had not. No colored men had voted the republican ticket that I knew of up to that time. Colored men had voted, and I had reason to believe that they voted the democratic ticket at that box; but I don't know it, because the ballots were folded.

Q. Did not the democrats have possession of the polls, so that colored republicans could not have gone up?—A. If they had undertaken to have gone up, they could have done so. But understand, now, I will give you a little of our own experience in that matter. Two years ago—

Q. When you saw and talked with Cain he said to you that there were large numbers of colored men who had not voted?—A. He did not say large numbers; he said there were some parties there who had not voted.

Q. You saw a crowd of colored men who were apparently desiring an opportunity to vote?—A. They claimed that they had not voted.

Q. How many of them were there?—A. I really do not think I could tell you. I am satisfied that at that place there were not exceeding one hundred, and I saw no others that I had reason to believe claimed that they had not voted, or that they desired to vote; and I told those that if they followed me I would see that they voted.

Q. Then they seemed to be apprehensive that unless they had your protection that they might not be enabled to vote?—A. I don't know what their feeling was. I had no conversation with any of them, except Cain, until we got to the point where I was stopped with the question where I was going with those people. After I had left the parties, or after they had left me, and returned to where I came from with them, I went to the court-house, and while there, and after the marshal had conducted the six colored men up and they had voted, and after these two fellows came in to vote, one of whom, in the presence of the marshal, admitted that he had voted before, and who was attempting to vote, another colored man came up to vote. I asked him if he had voted during the day. He said he had not. I asked him where he had been. He said, "I have been here all day." I said, "Why do you not vote?" He said, "Mr. Sheppard, there was so many colored people at Macedonia Church that I knew they would not get through before night, and I came down here to vote." I said, "Did the white people prevent you from voting, or hinder you in voting?" He said, "Not at all, sir; but there is so many up there that I know they could not get through, and I came back here to vote."

Q. You would not have tendered your protection to those people unless you supposed they apprehended it was necessary?—A. I did not have any such motive in view at all. I was satisfied that the election had been won by our ticket, and I wanted everything from that time onward to be conducted as fairly and peaceably as it had been from the beginning of that day.

Q. Did any colored republican vote after that?—A. O, yes, sir; in the court-house box.

Q. How many?—A. Not a great many, because only 26 colored republican votes were polled there that day.

Q. Was there any colored republican who voted without being questioned separately as to his right to vote?—A. I think that pretty nearly every colored man that voted at precinct No. 1 was interrogated as to his right to vote, with reference to his residence in the county and in the State, his age, and as to whether he had voted that day before.

Q. That was aside from the oath that was administered to him?—A. Except in those cases where we were satisfied that they had not voted and were satisfied of their right to vote.

Q. As a general rule they were separately interrogated?—A. Yes, sir; most of the time by the managers. A number of the white people were interrogated in the same way.

Q. All of them?—A. No, sir; not all of them.

Q. Not one in ten, were they?—A. I do not know whether there was one in ten.

Q. Was there one in twenty?—A. I cannot pretend to say that there was not one in twenty. I can only say this: that I did not interrogate a single white man, but I did colored men. The colored managers interrogated the white men sometimes.

Q. As near as you could judge, was there one in twenty of the white men that were interrogated?—A. It would be a guess. If you want to force me to guess—

Q. As near as you can estimate.—A. It would be the merest surmise; but I did not see a great many. White men that were not known personally to the managers were interrogated, and I would not hesitate to say that, out of the number that voted there, (six hundred, I believe,) one in twenty was interrogated, or more than one in twenty.

Q. At the time you started up to the polls, between three and four o'clock, when you say there were something like one hundred colored men who claimed that they had not voted, you say there must have been three or four hundred white men about the polls?—A. Around the house. The polls were in the upper story of the court-house. There is a flight of stone steps on the outside that lead to the upper story, and around the bottom of these steps were the white men. They were not compactly organized there they were just promiscuously standing.

Q. Did you see any of them have pistols?—A. O, I suspect that most every man in the crowd had pistols.

Q. No colored people?—A. And the colored people, too.

Q. Did you see any of those seventy-five or one hundred men have a pistol?—A. Certainly they had pistols. I do not know that I saw them, but I tell you that pretty nearly every individual in Edgefield County totes around a pistol. I don't believe I have left my law-office in three years without a pistol.

Q. Can you remember seeing any considerable number of those seventy-five or one hundred with pistols?—A. No, sir. I don't say so, because it is such a common thing in our community for every man to have a pistol, that I didn't notice.

Q. But you do remember that the principal part of the mounted white men had pistols?—A. No, sir; I did not say that I saw that. I merely say that, in my judgment, every white man there had a pistol, although I did not see them, and would have no reason for saying so except from my general acquaintance with the character of our people.

Q. Did they not also have some other arms?—A. Do you mean guns?

Q. Yes.—A. If there was a gun on the street I did not see it.

Q. Did not some of the horsemen have guns?—A. If they had a single gun there I did not see it. I mean in public before the court-house steps.

Q. In order to admit the men up-stairs to the voting-place it would be necessary to open a passage-way through the crowd of horsemen at the foot of the steps?—A. I was not on a horse, and I walked into the place between them and around there.

Q. As a matter of fact, the colored men did not go up and vote after the time you have stated to any considerable extent?—A. That body of them did not; they went away, but some of them did. As I told you, there were only twenty-six colored men that voted the republican ticket at that box during the whole day. I don't know how many voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Those white men had all voted who were at the stairway?—A. Yes, sir; I suspect so.

Q. And had remained there some hours after they had voted?—A. No, sir; between three and four o'clock, when these colored fellows left Macedonia Church under the impression that there were so many there that they could not vote, the white men came with them.

Q. What time was it when the white men had finished voting at precinct No. 1?—A. I suspect it was eleven o'clock.

Q. Then this large number of white men remained at the polls and were there up to four o'clock?—A. Not at all, sir. This crowd of white men that were there when I started up to the polls with those colored men come back from Macedonia Church. When the colored men left the church to come down to vote at the Court-House the white men got on their horses and followed them.

Q. The white men were democrats?—A. O, yes; there is not a white republican in Edgefield County that voted the radical ticket.

Q. These white men had been to box No. 1?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when the colored men came down the white men came with them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they located themselves around and about the steps?—A. When the colored men came from the church they went to General Brannan's headquarters, but the white men did not—they went right to the court-house.

Q. They reached the polls in advance of the colored men and remained there until after the colored men had gone away?—A. Yes, to the best of my recollection; but they were not there to prevent their voting and did not go.

Q. Were any of your speeches during the campaign printed?—A. Not in full. A good many references were made to my speeches, but I don't remember that I have preserved any.

Q. Did you say in one of your speeches to the colored men: "If you don't come with us, if you go with the corrupt crew who have for eight years ruled and ruined the State, then you will have to look to them for your living and protection," or equivalent words?—A. If you will ask me a direct question I will give you as plain and positive an answer as I can. I would not be willing to admit that I made a speech of that sort; I don't remember exactly that I did, but that was very much my feeling. I do not object to admitting that I made speeches tending to make that impression upon the minds of the negroes. If I did not I ought to have done it, because that is my feeling.

Q. Did you also convey that idea in words like these, or substantially these: "We offer to the colored men the right-hand of fellowship, we hold out to them the olive-branch of peace, but you cannot expect us, when you allow this State to be dragged down to infamous ruin by alien adventurers, to help those who have been the cause of all the suffering which will assuredly follow?"—A. I don't remember having made that speech, but I have no doubt that I did. I think I wrote but one speech during the campaign; every other speech that I made was extemporaneous; but I have no objection to those sentiments as being in accord with my feeling in this campaign.

Q. Did you say in any of your speeches that "if the radical party succeeded the taxes would be so high that we, the democrats, would not be able to hire the colored people next year"?—A. O, I don't think so, sir. I have not the slightest idea that I ever said that, because that is not my judgment. I believe they will be very high, but no matter how high they are, we have to hire negroes to work our land, but it would come out of them in the end. I remember stating that they would have to pay it. I think I can safely deny making that speech. I do not admit having made the others, but I do not object to the admission that that is my feeling being put on the record.

Q. You have spoken of two meetings in Edgefield on the same day, one republican and one democratic; which was first appointed or announced?—A. The republican meeting.

Q. Was not the democratic meeting appointed and announced in order to prevent men from going to the republican meeting?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Why was it appointed at the same time and on the same day?—A. The people of our county, ever since I have had anything to do with politics, have seen the evils of the teachings of these fellows that would be sent down to Edgefield to speak to the negroes, the incendiary character of their harangues, and the tendency generally of their speeches to separate the whites from the blacks in feeling, sentiment, and action; and our purpose was from the beginning, as far as we could by our presence, to counteract such influences upon the negroes' minds. We desired to live in harmony with these colored people, and it is our interest and purpose to do so, and it is for their interest to do so with us, and we thought if we could get the benefit of a joint discussion with these fellows before the negroes, we might effectively counteract their malicious influence; and that was the purpose of the meeting, and that is the reason they failed, because negroes had no confidence in their campaign.

Q. Was there not a practice among those who managed the democratic campaign to appoint democratic meetings at places where republican meetings had been previously appointed?—A. That was twice the case. That was when Governor Chamberlain first came there, and when he was expected there the second time. The purpose of it was not to prevent their meeting or speaking, but to give the colored people the benefit of our presence in restraining these men from making wild and irresponsible sentiments to the negroes that would tend to dissatisfy them with the relationship that existed between the whites and the blacks. We work our hands together. I have three or four plantations, and I am perfectly satisfied that I could rely on the colored men on my place for personal protection.

Q. You thought the presence of a considerable number of democrats at republican meetings would have a wholesome effect?—A. Yes; our speaking—our telling the colored people in the presence of these fellows who they were and what their character was.

Q. It was a part of your policy to attend republican meetings and demand a division of time?—A. There was no policy about it. I do not think that any two illustrations alone are sufficient to establish a principle or a policy. There were two occasions and only two. If that was a policy or principle, very well.

Q. Did you accord to the republicans the privilege of discussion and a division of time at the democratic meetings?—A. They never asked it. If they had done so, we would have accorded it to them.

Q. They did not, in fact, have a joint discussion at any democratic meeting?—A. None that I know, except John A. Barker, a republican, and he spoke in favor of the democratic ticket, except Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. State who introduced the practice of attending democratic meetings mounted; and if there was any practice of having artillery.—A. I have been attending political meetings for about fifteen years, and I have never seen people going to political meetings except on horseback. We don't live in a city. Our county is sixty miles wide at one place, and you can't get to a place there unless you ride. We had to ride on horseback and in buggies. I am satisfied that the practice was introduced before General Gary was born.

Q. When was your rifle-club organized at Edgefield?—A. I cannot give you the date of it, but I know it was before 1876.

Q. It was continued until after the proclamation of Governor Chamberlain in regard to rifle-clubs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of similar rifle-clubs at other places?—A. If there was another one in the county I did not know of it. There were a great many political clubs.

Q. These rifle-clubs were usual through the State, were they not?—A. I don't know about that. I heard of different rifle-clubs, one at Aiken, and one here, and a great many in the State, so far as hearsay knowledge is concerned.

Q. Was any republican a member of the rifle-club?—A. O, not at all, sir. I was not a member of it myself.

Q. Well, the members were democrats?—A. The membership was democratic entirely, so far as I know, because there is not a white republican in the county, except one or two, and they voted the democratic ticket this time. There was no miscegenation about the organization at all.

Q. How did the colored men who lived on your plantations vote?—A. I think four out of five on an average; no, I would not say that many—on one place there were twelve or fourteen voters, and, I think, six of them voted the republican ticket; I am not satisfied about that, because the place is fifteen miles from where I live. Four miles beyond that, I think, there are five of the men voters, and I don't know that either of them voted. On my place at home there are two voters, but neither of them voted. One of them intended to vote a mixed ticket he said, but he could not find me to write his ticket, and he left and went home. At another place there were two men and neither of them voted, and there was not the slightest reason in the world, except their dislike to vote against a ticket with my name on it.

Q. Did you talk with either of those men about political matters?—A. Very freely.

Q. Did you indicate to them in any way that it would be better for them to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Not the slightest. They are sensible men, who have been with me ever since I have been out of school, and I did not think it was necessary. I did not tell them that I would drive them off, because I would not get rid of them; you could not have forced them nor bribed them to have voted against me under any circumstances. They subserve my interests too profitably to part with them, and there are a great many of them that don't live on my plantation, or any place that I have any association with, who will vote for me. I defend more colored men in Edgefield Court-House than the balance of the bar put together. I have their confidence and support and esteem, and in political matters their votes.

Q. Do you know of any instance where any white man has been punished for violence upon a colored man during this last year?—A. Do you mean in political matters?

Q. Violence.—A. Men have been indicted. There have been several cases of assault and battery in the court of sessions.

Q. Do you know any instance where any colored man has been punished?—A. I do not recall a case; I do not recall a charge, except upon the election-day, where this case occurred at Macedonia box. I know where some colored men were indicted and convicted by a jury.

Q. Do you know that it was notorious that a number of colored men have been killed during this year in your county?—A. I know there is not a word of truth in it. There was one of the colored men killed, charged to have been killed, upon political grounds; but if more than one I did not know of it, and I certainly would have heard of it.

Q. There was no report of more than one colored man killed in your county this year?—A. O, yes, sir; there was more than one killed. I think I can tell you how many.

Q. I am asking for the general report?—A. I know of one who was killed, and I am employed to defend the man charged with killing him. Then there were six killed at one time, being charged with the murder of Mr. Harmon and his wife.

Q. How many colored men were generally reported to have been killed in your county this year?—A. Well, there are seven; six for the murder of Harmon and his wife; then this one fellow; then a man reported (his body has not yet been found) about twelve miles from Edgefield, for a rape upon the daughter of one Mr. Prescott; that is the report; I don't know whether it is so or not; I do not remember any other case at this time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How many white men do you know that have been shot by colored men during this year?—A. Of my own personal knowledge, I could not say, but I recall the case of one white man on the day of this political meeting. As some white men were going away from the village that day, they were fired at by colored men, and one was shot and two wounded.

Q. Then the only instance you know of is one instance of a white man being killed by colored men; any other instance of a colored man killed by a white man?—A. I deny that instance emphatically. There were six men charged that day, and I am satisfied that they can be acquitted.

Q. All these rumors of political homicides then grow out of other causes?—A. Yes, sir; I have not the slightest hesitation in saying so.

Q. How many white men remained at the polls here between eleven and twelve and three and four o'clock?—A. Every white man in the court-house except men who were not connected with the conduct of the election, except now and then a man would straggle in and go out again. How many were outside I do not know; everything was so profoundly quiet that I didn't go to the door during that time. There was no crowd of white men during these three or four hours, and the very reason these colored men left Macedonia Church was because Cain had sent down two men to find by experiment whether they could vote there.

Q. Now as to the occupancy of the polls in the morning, you started to say something about the custom?—A. At every election that I have witnessed in Edgefield village except this one, a white man has never voted at that box before eleven or twelve o'clock in the morning, by reason of not being able to get to it but by crowding colored men; they not intending, so far as I know, to prevent free access on the part of the white men, but simply to vote first and get home. And the only change was that this time we got the jump on them by waking earlier and got the privilege of voting first. It is simply a repetition of what has been done for years in Edgefield County.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

GEORGE MEAD (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. What is your age?—Answer. I am forty years of age.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. At Johnston's Depot, Edgefield County.

Q. What is your business there?—A. I am a barber.

Q. To what political party do you belong?—A. The democratic party.

Q. How do you happen to be a democrat? Are you a democrat through force; have the white people compelled you?—A. No, sir; because it is my will to be a democrat.

Q. On account of your politics, what relation do your own people, the colored republicans, sustain toward you and toward the colored democrats generally in the county?—A. Well, they have treated me very badly.

Q. What did they do to you?—A. Well, they don't recognize me at all on the street. I ain't recognized by the republicans.

Q. Is that the general rule on the part of the colored republicans toward colored democrats?—A. Yes, sir; it has been with me.

Q. So far as you know, has that been the case with others?—A. It is, as I have heard.

Q. Is that true of the colored women as well as of the colored men?—A. It is. I can't get a shirt washed, from the fact that they say all the money they are going to make they are going to make it out of the democratic niggers; the washwomen say that.

Q. So that you are really ostracised by the black men and the black women both?—A. That is all of it.

Q. Is it true that wherever a black man wants to vote the democratic ticket he is abused by the colored men?—A. He is, and by the colored women, too.

Q. Where were you at the last election?—A. At Johnston's Depot.

Q. How was it there as to peace and good order?—A. The quietest election I ever seen or heard of in all my life.

Q. Was any class of voters prevented from voting there, colored or white?—A. Only one that I know of; that was a man that came to vote two tickets and they found it out. They asked him who gave him those tickets; he said the United States marshal, who was handing out the tickets there.

Q. What was his name?—A. Charles Corwin.

Q. Then, that man was prohibited from voting, from the fact that he was about to vote two tickets fraudulently?—A. Well, that was what the man who had the two tickets said, that Corwin gave the two tickets to him.

Q. What was he, a republican or a democrat?—A. He was a republican.

Q. Besides this, was there any interference with any man casting his vote?—A. Never any that I know of.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The election at that voting-place was quiet?—A. It was; no man was disturbed; not a bit.

Q. No threats against anybody?—A. Nobody that I know of.

Q. No violence?—A. No; during that day.

Q. How many colored men voted the democratic ticket there?—A. I don't know how many.

Q. Were there a good many?—A. I think there was a good many.

Q. And they were not disturbed at all?—A. Not one of them.

Q. Nothing said against them?—A. Not one of them.

Q. Nothing said by any other colored man to intimidate them?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. They were allowed to vote as they wished without molestation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The colored men there are generally peaceable, are they not?—A. They are.

Q. You never knew of any one interfering with or disturbing any other colored man on account of his politics?—A. Yes; I have been disturbed there on account of my politics.

Q. Nobody ever struck you, did they?—A. Not one, sir; on account of my principles, I mean.

Q. No one ever struck you, or used any violence towards you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are friendly with all the colored people?—A. I am.

Q. And they are friendly with you?—A. Well, I am afraid to say that they are friendly.

- Q. They talk with you?—A. Yes; sometimes they do.
- Q. You go to their houses?—A. No, sir; not many; I am afraid to go.
- Q. But no one has ever hurt you?—A. I ain't been hurt because I am able to take care of number one.
- Q. Have you a family?—A. No, sir; I have no children in this world.
- Q. You have no wife?—A. I have a wife.
- Q. Your wife does your washing, does she not?—A. She don't; me and her is apart.
- Q. How long have you been apart?—A. Well, we have been parted for some time. It is my woman; I mean my wife.
- Q. How long has she been away from you?—A. Just since I left Johnston's Depot, when she refused to do my work on account of my principles.
- Q. How long is that?—A. That is since the day before yesterday.
- Q. She left you the day before yesterday?—A. She has been away from me a long time.
- Q. Did your wife live with you until the day before yesterday?—A. My wife—that I should be disposed to call my wife—I called her my wife, should have been my wife if it hadn't been for my principles; I supposed her to be my wife.
- Q. Did your wife leave you?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Is she living with you?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you leave her?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Then is she living with you now?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Where is she?—A. She is nowhere.
- Q. Have you been drinking?—A. No, sir.
- Q. You have no wife?—A. I have no wife.
- Q. And never had?—A. Never had a wife, you say?
- Q. Did you ever have a wife?—A. I have had a wife.
- Q. Is she dead?—A. She is not dead.
- Q. Where is she?—A. Well, I suppose that she is where she said that she would not wash for me.
- Q. Where is she?—A. Go to Johnston's Depot and you will find out what I am talking about.
- Q. Do you live with her?—A. I have been staying with her all the time since the campaign.
- Q. Are you married?—A. No, sir; I was not married to her.
- Q. Are you now living with the same woman that you have heretofore lived with?—A. With the same one since during this election.
- Q. You are still living with her?—A. Well, I am trying to live with her, if I can.
- Q. And you say she refuses to wash your shirts?—A. She did.
- Q. Did anybody else refuse to wash your shirts?—A. They have.
- Q. Who else?—A. Well, all of them.
- Q. Did you ask anybody else to wash them?—A. I have.
- Q. Whom did you ask?—A. Well, I asked a few. I went to one, and says I, "Easter, wash these two shirts for me." Says she, "I am goin' to charge you a dollar for washing." I am a barber. I had two or three shirts, which would have been about ten cents apiece. I agreed to hire her by the month, but she would not agree to hire to me that way. I had two or three pieces of shirts, and then she said there was sixteen pieces. A barber must have then about sixteen pieces in any wash. I have towels. I can't pay ten cents apiece for towels to be washed. Gentlemen, I ask you, can I make it in a day?
- Q. Whose land do you live on?—A. I live at Johnston's Depot. I rent a shop there.
- Q. What do you work at?—A. At the barbers' trade.
- Q. Who asked you to come here?—A. General Butler.
- Q. M. C. Butler?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Have you been drinking somewhat this morning?—A. I have not.
- Q. None at all?—A. None at all; none to hurt.
- Q. You did drink some, did you?—A. Did I? Everybody drinks a little bit.
- Q. Well, you have been drinking some this morning, haven't you?—A. No, sir.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

S. L. HUTCHINS sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

- Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In this city.
- Q. How long have you lived here?—A. A little over a year. For these last eight years I have been traveling, and I have been in all the Southern States.
- Q. What is your business?—A. A lawyer.
- Q. Admitted to the bar where?—A. In this State.
- H. Mis. 31, pt. 1—27

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-five years.

Q. Did you have anything to do in the last political canvass preceding the election?—

A. Yes, sir; I was a State canvasser on the democratic side.

Q. How many speeches did you make or attempt to make during the canvass?—A. I presume I made two or three hundred speeches. I spoke sometimes twice a day, and canvassed the greater portion of the State.

Q. You went about through most of the counties in the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever been threatened on account of your politics by persons of your own color here in this State?—A. Yes, sir; my life has been threatened a great many times.

Q. By colored people?—A. By colored people.

Q. What was the form of the threats? State some things that they said to you.—

A. Well, they didn't only make threats; they attempted to kill me once or twice, and carried weapons for that purpose; some were paid, so they said, and followed me through some of the counties to carry that threat into execution; at the same time, I was in several riots, where I came very near losing my life.

Q. Have those threats been common or only occasional?—A. Common.

Q. Did you make a speech in this county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you interrupted?—A. The first speech I made was on Portee's farm, in this county, ten miles from Columbia. I was in company with one hundred white men, of whom Colonel Haskell had command. We met there in joint discussion. There were about two hundred radicals; both sides were mounted on horses, and before I started to speak, or before the time for me to speak came on, there were some very violent threats made by the radicals—black men, and they said that they intended to kill me, and that if I attempted to speak there that day they would shoot me down in my tracks, or if they didn't do it then they would do it in three weeks' time.

Q. Were they armed with guns or pistols?—A. Yes; with pistols.

Q. Did they show the pistols?—A. They didn't take them out in their hands, but I saw them.

Q. Did you speak?—A. Yes, sir; but before I spoke, or when Haskell called on me to speak, the leading radicals said that I should not speak, and when I told them that I should speak, then the leading radicals told every man to mount, and they mounted and stood abreast of the stand, in fighting order, I presume. Colonel Haskell told the radicals that he intended to protect me there at all hazards, and that I should speak inasmuch as I had been invited there like any other speaker. When I got up and spoke, they did not make any advances towards me at all, but it was not because they did not intend it, only because they saw Colonel Haskell.

Q. Were you permitted to make your speech out?—A. Not without interruption.

Q. How many cases were there where you were not interrupted by threats by colored republicans?—A. I cannot exactly tell you how many times, but I can safely say that I was interrupted as many times as I was not interrupted.

Q. Where was the next speech that you made where there was any great interruption?—A. It was at Georgetown.

Q. What took place?—A. J. F. Richardson, a gentleman that was running for Congress, and I were to speak there on a certain night, and the meeting was called in front of the court-house, a democratic meeting. The radicals were invited by the democratic county executive committee to take part in the discussion, but they refused to accept. The press also invited them and they refused to accept. Their party gathered about two to three hundred radicals, all black, and when I commenced to speak they carried their design into execution and broke up the meeting. They began yelling and hollering and I was not permitted to speak. I sat down, and then J. F. Richardson began to speak, and he spoke about fifteen minutes, and a riot became imminent; one or two democratic colored men attempted to quell the riot, and one or two republicans, the result of which was that one or two men were stabbed and one had his skull broken; and muskets were also drawn and the meeting was broken up. He was not permitted to finish his speech and I was not permitted to speak at all. I got out the best way I could.

Q. What sort of threats were made to you?—A. I was called a God damned son of a bitch, and that I was imported into the State to fool the colored people and buy them over to the democrats, and I ought to have my throat cut.

Q. Did they threaten to kill you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say muskets were drawn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You left town?—A. I remained there under the protection of the democrats two days, and when General Hampton came up to speak I spoke, too, on that occasion; the next day I left.

Q. At Sumter, also, I understand you had some trouble?—A. In Sumter there was a republican mass meeting about two miles from town, and I was invited, and in company with Lawyer Dargan and Major Earle and about ten other democrats, we proceeded to the meeting.

Q. You were invited there to have a joint discussion?—A. A joint discussion. We proceeded to the meeting. When we got there, there had gathered about fifty or one hundred radicals. Major Earle got up and asked them to allow me to speak. They refused it, and pretended that they were organizing what they called a brotherhood society; and rather than demand it or create any disturbance, Major Earle got up and told them that they didn't want to hear the truth, and that being the case we would quietly withdraw.

Q. You did not speak at Sumter?—A. No, sir; they did not allow me.

Q. What was said to you there in the way of threats?—A. Nothing more than they said that they didn't want any damned democratic nigger to speak there, and we quietly withdrew.

Q. In Sumter were there no threats made to you in the streets?—A. O, yes, sir; I could hear them at every corner.

Q. Was there an attempt made to lynch you there?—A. No, sir; it was at Camden, in Kershaw County. I went to Florence, and I was speaking on the sidewalk to a white gentleman, at the time our congressional convention met and nominated a candidate for Congress, and there was about three hundred radicals in town. I was standing on the street talking to a white gentleman, when a radical came up and cursed me very bitterly, and said he had a great mind to shoot me down in my tracks. He was a black man. I did not pay any attention to him, and neither did I say anything to him to make him curse me. The democrat didn't say anything. After taking as much as I thought was necessary, I told him to go away. About that time about forty came up, and they stated to me that they intended to carry me out and kill me. The democratic club was notified of the fact. They were around the precinct outside of the town, and they came in to protect me. They told them they didn't want any difficulty there, but if they put hands on me they would have them all to kill. They cursed violently; and there were some sticks and clubs, in fact there was a riot, but there was no bloodshed. That was about eight o'clock; about ten o'clock they said that I should not take the train. The democrats escorted me to the train. They were standing all around, and said I should not take the train; that they intended to kill me. I did take the train, and went off.

Q. At Camden you undertook to make a speech?—A. Yes, sir; I went there on Saturday night, and was there all day Sunday. I had to take quarters in the hotel with the white people simply for safety. There were no colored persons boarding there; and if there had been it would not have been safe for me. Monday night I made a speech; and Monday, in the day, while standing on the sidewalk talking to some colored people, there was a crowd of twenty or twenty-five came up with threats and brickbats.

Q. What threats did they make?—A. They threatened to kill me; that they didn't intend to allow any democratic nigger to come into that town—I had on a Tilden badge—that they didn't allow any colored man to wear a Tilden and Hampton badge there. I refused, and they became so noisy that I went before the judge and had one man up; I think his name was Jerry Johnson. He had been carrying a club for me all day, and had been watched by several white men; and he had walked up behind me to strike me, but on account of eyes being on him he failed to carry his threat into execution. Another man named Frederick McCoy, about fifty years old, carried a very large club, and said that he intended to kill me. They were carried before the judge, charged with assault with intent to do bodily injury; and I was prosecuting attorney and plead the case myself. I showed them the law, and told them where they were in danger. I put it before the judge, and he told them that he would let them loose simply to show that the democrats didn't want to hurt them, simply for them to pay costs. The next day the same Frederick came up to me on the street, shook his fist in my face and told me that he intended to kill me, and drew his club. I then went before the judge and had him put under $500 to keep the peace.

Q. Was there anything more at Camden?—A. They said they intended to kill me if I came out of the hotel at night, and I staid in the hotel until I left there.

Q. Was there any other place where you were interrupted and obliged to stop speaking?—A. There was no other place, that I can remember, where I was prevented from speaking.

Q. Were there other places where you were assailed with threats in the same way?—A. I was assailed with threats at every corner of the street, on the train, and everywhere else. I had to quit my boarding-place in this town and go up to the Columbia Hotel and get my meals, on account of threats.

Q. It was generally known that you were canvassing the State on the part of the democrats?—A. Yes, sir; they would know that all over the United States by looking at the papers.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What time did you commence speaking?—A. I don't remember the date, but I think I was in the canvass a little over two months. I think I commenced about the first of September.

Q. Did you generally make one speech every day?—A. I generally made two speeches a day.

Q. How many of the days do you suppose you made two speeches?—A. About one-third of them.

Q. And the balance of the time you made one speech a day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you didn't make two or three hundred speeches, as you said in the opening of your testimony?—A. I didn't say that positively; I said I might have done it.

Q. You still think so, do you, that you might have?—A. I might have. I have not made any estimate.

Q. But you know that you were in the campaign only about two months?—A. Yes; that is out in the State. I spoke here several times before I left.

Q. And you know that about one-third of the time you made two speeches a day, and the balance of the time only one speech a day?—A. I think so.

Q. You were not interrupted in speaking at any place except Georgetown, Sumter, Florence, and Camden?—A. I was interrupted here.

Q. And Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is five places in all. Then, out of the two or three hundred speeches which you made, you were interrupted at only five places?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No man struck you, did they?—A. Yes; I was struck right in this town. That was since the election, but it was on account of politics. I was not struck before the election.

Q. At no time before the election did you receive any blow or any violence?—A. No, sir; but I had a fight here on account of my opinion. That was about four months before the election; that was in August.

Q. That was before the campaign commenced?—A. No; I beg your pardon.

Q. That was before you commenced making speeches?—A. It was before I commenced making speeches, but it was on account of my political opinions.

Q. You were not hurt?—A. All the reason of that was because I whipped the man that struck me.

Q. Then you whipped a republican?—A. I did.

Q. You made your speech at Portee's farm when Colonel Haskell was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had that meeting been called as a republican meeting?—A. It had been.

Q. And you went there to demand a division of time?—A. I did not; I was invited there.

Q. Who invited you?—A. I think the republican committee.

Q. Colonel Haskell took you out from here, didn't he?—A. I think he did.

Q. Did many democrats go with you?—A. About one hundred.

Q. It had not been announced as a joint discussion before you went there?—A. The republican executive committee had agreed with the democratic executive committee for joint discussions, and we went there to carry out that arrangement.

Q. But there had been no particular arrangement for that particular place before you came there?—A. Not that I know.

Q. Then you simply went to a republican meeting to have a joint discussion if you could?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there any violence inflicted on any man at Portee's farm; there was nobody struck?—A. Nobody struck.

Q. And you made your speech?—A. I did.

Q. At Georgetown you say there were one or two men stabbed. Did you see them stabbed?—A. I did not.

Q. Then you don't know whether anybody was stabbed or not?—A. I saw the blood or the cut. They must have been stabbed or knocked in the head, or something.

Q. You don't know who did it?—A. I do not. It was a mob fight.

Q. You didn't see the fracas, did you?—A. I was in the fracas.

Q. There were white men in it?—A. No, sir; they were simply spectators.

Q. You were not hurt?—A. I was not.

Q. Nor interfered with?—A. Certainly I was interfered with, when they hushed me down from the stand.

Q. Was that a republican meeting?—A. That was a democratic meeting.

Q. Did anybody else speak but you?—A. I didn't speak at all. I attempted to speak, but was cried down.

Q. How many were at the meeting?—A. I cannot say. I think about three hundred.

Q. How many white men and how many colored?—A. I don't think there were more than one hundred white men; the balance were colored.

Q. Richardson was not hurt?—A. No, sir.

Q. No violence was inflicted on him or on you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were at Sumter?—A. I was.

Q. That was a republican meeting, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went out?—A. I did.

Q. With a view to demand a portion of the time for discussion?—A. No, sir; not with a view to demand a portion, because we agreed not to demand it. We went there with the view to ask it, and we did ask it.

Q. But no man struck you there?—A. No one struck me.

Q. There was no violence attempted on you?—A. No, sir.

Q. They declined to allow you to speak?—A. They did.

Q. And that was all there was of that?—A. That is all.

Q. You went to Florence. There was a republican convention there that day to nominate candidates for Congress?—A. There was.

Q. No democratic meeting had been called there that day?—A. No democratic meeting.

Q. Did you go there with a view to ask a part of the time for discussion?—A. I did not.

Q. What did you go there for?—A. As a canvasser. I was simply passing through Florence.

Q. Why did you stop, if you were not to make a speech?—A. I stopped there to see the county executive committee about a meeting which was held at Darlington, which I had attended a few days before.

Q. Nobody was hurt at Florence that you saw?—A. No, sir.

Q. No violence was inflicted on you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the republicans have speaking?—A. I don't know; I did not attend the convention.

Q. There was no violence nor disturbance at Florence?—A. There was a disturbance, but no violence.

Q. Merely loud talking.—A. Yes; and cursing, and threats.

Q. At Camden you had on a Tilden badge?—A. I had.

Q. You wore it publicly?—A. I did.

Q. Nobody took it off of you?—A. No, sir; no one took it off.

Q. Was there a democratic meeting called there?—A. There was.

Q. And you stopped there and made your speech?—A. I did.

Q. No man struck you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor struck at you?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you were not prevented from speaking at any place after that at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Columbia?—A. I have lived in Columbia from last April up to this time.

Q. Where did you live prior to that?—A. I came to Laurens County the 1st of last October one year ago. I had been in Georgia about a year before that; before that I came from Arkansas and Texas, where I had been traveling.

Q. How long have you lived in this State?—A. A little over a year.

Q. How long were you in Georgia prior to coming here?—A. About a year or two.

Q. Prior to that where were you?—A. I was in Alabama and Mississippi.

Q. What business have you been engaged in since you have been in this State?—A. I have taught school in Laurens County, and since I have been here I have been engaged in law.

Q. Where were you admitted to practice law?—A. Here in Columbia, in the supreme court.

Q. When?—A. About two weeks ago.

Q. Have you tried any cases in court?—A. I have had several cases.

Q. In what court have you tried a case?—A. In the trial-justice's court.

Q. Any other?—A. No, sir; not in the superior or supreme court.

Q. There are numbers of colored democrats in Columbia here?—A. There are.

Q. Some of them keep boarding-houses?—A. Well, no, sir. I don't know of any colored democrat keeping a boarding-house.

Q. Are you taking your meals at the Columbia Hotel now?—A. I did take meals there. I am at Orangeburgh now. I have a farm there, and I was attending to it when I was summoned by this committee.

Q. Do you own the farm?—A. I do not. I expect to buy it. I simply have it in possession.

Q. How do you have it in possession?—A. A lease for two years.

Q. When did you get your lease?—A. About a week ago.

Q. Whom did you take it from?—A. Mr. Utley.

Q. Who requested you to come here?—A. Judge Saylor sent word to me to come up.

Q. Who in your neighborhood made inquiry of you about what you could testify to?—A. No one at all, sir. I didn't know anything about it until he sent me word to come up.

Q. Who paid your expenses when you went out making these democratic speeches?—A. I paid part of the expenses and the various committees and clubs paid the balance.

Q. And you were paid for your services?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. You never have been?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where are you taking your meals now?—A. At Jamison, where the farm is, in Orangeburgh County, when I am not at Orangeburgh.

Q. How long did you take your meals at the Columbia Hotel in this city?—A. Not more than three weeks.

Q. Do they take colored boarders at the Columbia Hotel?—A. They do not. But I presume it was there as it was in the canvass, I took a room with the white people and lived with them to save my life; simply because I was ostracized and censured so.

Q. Your life has never been in danger yet that you know?—A. It has been in a great deal of danger.

Q. But no man ever inflicted any violence on you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who did you vote for?—A. I voted the straight-out democratic ticket, national and State.

Q. Where did you vote?—A. In Richland County.

Q. In Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What State candidates were to be elected this year?—A. On the democratic ticket?

Q. What offices were to be filled?—A. Governor, lieutenant-governor, adjutant and inspector general, State treasurer, State superintendent of education, and attorney-general, &c.

Q. Was that all?—A. And comptroller-general; and the same on the radical side.

Q. Was that all?—A. That is all that I remember just now.

Q. Was there a county ticket besides?—A. Certainly; there was a county ticket in every county in the State.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

COLEMAN BEATTY sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. How old are you?—Answer. Thirty-two years old.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In this city. I have lived here going on three years. I was born and raised in Union County, in this State, and have always lived in this State.

Q. What is your business?—A. I have followed farming principally all my life, and some part of my life I have worked in hotels, and some part of my life kept a public barber-shop.

Q. During this last canvass were you engaged in the canvass?—A. Yes, sir; for about three months.

Q. Did you make speeches in different parts of the State?—A. Yes, sir. Soon after the nominations were made I was engaged and continued to the end of the canvass.

Q. How many speeches did you make during the canvass?—A. I suppose at least thirty.

Q. In different parts of the State?—A. Yes, sir; in various portions of the State.

Q. Did you attempt to make speeches in this county?—A. O, yes, sir; in this town and in several portions of the county.

Q. Were you prevented in any way by colored people on account of being a democratic speaker?—A. Well, I had many a threatening made to my face in regard to my political opinions by colored men.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. What were the threats?—A. Men have told me, "Are you going contrary to your interests—going contrary to your wife and children?" And said I ought to be hung, and if they had their way with me they would hang me. Crowds of men said to me, "If we catch you outside of the limits of this State, we'll assassinate you;" and not only here, but in Blackville and Camden and Orangeburgh, the same threats were made.

Q. When you were speaking in this county, were you interrupted?—A. Not much in this county. I was interrupted, but I would stop and keep quiet for a few moments, and by some means or other they would quiet the disturbance, and I would get a chance to speak on.

Q. When you were interrupted, what was said?—A. I was interrupted by colored republicans hallooing, "Take him down! Take him down!" And I will not use such language as they used.

Q. Give us a specimen.—A. Well, if I must do it, I will have to do it; "Take him down! Take him down! the damned son of a bitch! He ought to be killed! Take him down off the stand! We don't want about here no democratic niggers! Take him down! Take him down! Come down!" and all such yells.

Q. Were you interrupted and prevented from speaking at any other place?—A. Yes, sir. The first place that I recollect being stopped from speaking altogether was in Orangeburgh County, at a precinct called Coonsborough.

Q. Was it at a democratic meeting or a republican meeting where you divided time?—A. It was a republican meeting, I think; called by the republicans, but they invited all; it was a free meeting. The democrats were invited, and after we went there there was, I suppose, at least 100 colored men there, and probably between 40 and 60 white men. I myself and Mr. Stroman and one or two other gentlemen appointed a little committee to wait on the leading men of the republicans, to wait on the chairman of the meeting, Glen Fedrick, and asked the privilege for three democratic speakers to speak during the day. They granted the privilege; said it was all right; and there were three, myself and two white gentlemen, appointed to speak on the democratic part. They hadn't any stand built there at that time. You had to get up on a little one-horse wagon. There were two or three chairs in the wagon for the chairman and the speakers; and I was the first introduced on the democratic side. I got up and made a few remarks, as decent as a man could. I had only spoke two or three minutes, when a colored man in the ordinance [audience] began to holla, "Take him down! Take him down! We have got no use for him! Take him down! We don't want no democratic niggers speaking here; nor white people neither!" When they commenced that I ceased, but did not sit down immediately, but waited until they got quiet, and the chairman of the meeting got up and told them that he put it to the vote that the man should be heard, and they voted for it; the whole ordinance [audience] voted for it; that we should have a hearing; and if they raised any act of violence, or done any anything to avoid our speaking, they would go contrary to their own vote. Glen Federick, the chairman, as a republican, acted very fair, but the ordinance—

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The "ordinance?"—A. Yes, the ordinance of colored people standing around said that they did not want to give any democratic speakers a chance to speak. They hollaed, "Take him down! He shan't speak here!" Some of them were armed; some had double-barreled shot-guns, some had long muskets, and a good many drew pistols, and finally they came very nearly getting into a riot. The whole cry of the white men to the crowd was, "Keep quiet, keep quiet; we don't want any fuss or riot." Then I gave up and did not speak at all.

Q. Where was the next place where you did not have any opportunity to speak?—A. The next place was in the same county, at Dean's Swamp, high up in the county.

Q. Was that at a democratic meeting or a republican meeting where you divided time?—A. That was a democratic meeting. They commenced to cheer in the same way, the republicans did.

Q. Did it go so far that you were obliged to stop speaking?—A. It went on until I sat down and lost a good deal of time, and most of the republicans went away; then I rose and made a few remarks after they were gone. The leading men of them carried most of their men away.

Q. Where was the next place where you were stopped?—A. I was stopped in Camden, Kershaw County.

Q. What took place there?—A. There was some disturbance from some few colored men. That was at night. I landed at that place on Saturday evening at night, and I think this was on Tuesday night following. I staid at the hotel on Saturday night and Sunday, and knocked around on the street on Monday. During the day on Sunday the colored people out in various parts of the town had heard there was a democratic colored man at the hotel, and they made threats on the street.

Q. Did you hear them?—A. I did not hear them, but I heard about them.

Q. On Monday was there anything said to you?—A. On Monday I was out on the street myself. The colored people I passed on the street said I had better leave there. There was a couple of them up on a brick building, and one of them says to me, as I was passing along the street, "I understand you are down here hunting overseers?" My reply was, "Yes; don't you want employment?" Just as a joke, I said it. He says, "You God damned son of a bitch, you better get out of this town." I says, "Why?" He says, "We don't allow no democratic niggers to walk around here." I says, "My friend, I will let you know that I am free, and I am in a free country, and I will walk around this town and in every town in the State that I please, and never ask you any odds." Says he, "God damn you, if you don't get out of this town, we will put you where the dogs wont bite you." And his boss man (I think it was) in the yard came out of the gate and spoke to me and says, "Go ahead; don't pay any attention to him; don't bother with him." Says I, "I want to give him to understand that I am as free as he is, and the same law as protects him protects me." Says he, "Well, we don't allow no God damn democratic niggers here; we have got no use for them." Says I, "My friend, I don't propose to have any fuss with you," and that was the last word. I went around the street that day. It was a general thing among the colored men to make threats about what they would do, and on Monday night after dark they made threats.

Q. In passing you say you were stopped at a democratic meeting?—A. Then, on the next night, Tuesday night, we called a meeting in the town, and the news went round through the town. There was a good, large ordinance, a good many whites and colored, and some few of the colored raised some disturbance, but I don't remember what they said. There was a few white men rose from their seats and told them to keep quiet; that the speaker was telling the truth, and that they didn't wish any disturbance at all. Then in a few minutes those men ceased and got up and went out, and I went through with my speech.

Q. Where was the next place where you were obliged to stop speaking?—A. The next place was in Blackville, Barnwell County. That was at a democratic meeting in the court-house. I began to speak. There were very few white men there, and a good many colored men. I spoke for probably five minutes. The colored men began to raise a disturbance. "Take him down," and used their oaths in regard to the "democratic nigger" pretty much the same way.

Q. Did it go so far that you were obliged to give up speaking?—A. Yes, sir; I decided in my own mind that if I didn't stop it would raise a riot and cause some trouble, and I gave up and didn't speak any more that evening.

Q. Where was the next place where you were obliged to give up?—A. I believe that was the only place where I was obliged to give up, but I was interrupted in other places, and delayed some time; but by some means the men got quiet, and the men that were disposed to make disturbances went away or were taken off, and I continued my speaking. The interferences were of the same kind at several different places.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. Where were you born and raised?—A. In Union County, this State.

Q. You are well acquainted with the colored people in that county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The colored people of this State are generally a quiet, orderly people, are they not?—A. No, sir; not as a general thing, in my judgment.

Q. The white people of this State are a quiet, orderly people, are they?—A. Well, I believe the white people of this State have tried and done all they could.

Q. Answer my question. Are the white people of this State generally a quiet, orderly people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But the colored people are not?—A. I think the colored people are not, as a general thing.

Q. At any one of all your meetings, or at any time during this campaign, has any man struck you?—A. No, sir; not with any violent intent.

Q. There has been no violence on your person?—A. Not in striking me, but there have been threats.

Q. Yes; but there has been no violence upon your person?—A. They have never struck me, but they have made their threats and drew weapons.

Q. You have been at numbers of democratic meetings where white men spoke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have seen large numbers of colored people at them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In every instance have not the colored people, at those meetings where white democrats spoke, been quiet and orderly?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you tell an instance where they have disturbed the meeting where a white man was speaking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Up here in this town, at Segar's Hall; and they disturbed a meeting where a white man was speaking in Orangeburgh County, at Rose Pump.

Q. A democratic meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any other?—A. They disturbed a meeting at a place called Rock Hill.

Q. A democratic meeting?—A. Yes; I was there.

Q. Disturbed it when a white man was speaking?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that all?—A. That is about all.

Q. On every one of those occasions did not the democratic speakers finish their speeches?—A. I don't know whether they finished them or not.

Q. They spoke as long as they wanted, didn't they?—A. They spoke on some few minutes after the disturbance was quieted—after the fuss ceased.

Q. There was no riot, but just noise?—A. There would be a good deal of fuss raised around which would have went into a riot if it went on.

Q. Was there anything but just a little noise?—A. Just noise and fuss raised by the colored people.

Q. No violence was inflicted by any colored man on a white man at any of these meetings?—A. No, sir; I never saw any one strike another one.

Q. You never saw a colored man strike a white man at any democratic meeting?—A. No, sir; but I have heard them use their violent language.

Q. You spoke of being at a meeting at Blackville; was that called as a republican meeting?—A. No, sir; a democratic meeting.

Q. Was there any republican speaker there?—A. If there was he was not introduced.

Q. How long did you speak there?—A. But a very few minutes, when the meeting broke up.

Q. No man was struck at the meeting?—A. Nobody didn't get struck to my knowing.

Q. Was there any man struck at any one of these meetings at Dane's Swamp, or Camden, or Blackville?—A. No, sir; but I saw men that drew weapons.

Q. Just answer my questions. You did not see any white man or democrat struck at any of the meetings, did you?—A. No, sir; I don't believe I saw any licks passed.

Q. Did you see any colored man during this year strike any white democrat?—A. No, sir; I don't believe I did; but I have seen them make their attempts to do it—make their threats, and draw their weapons, and show what they would do.

Q. Has any man attempted to inflict violence on you since the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he attempt to strike you?—A. Well, I didn't see him draw his weapon, but he made his threats what he would do.

Q. Don't you know the difference between threats and violence?—A. I had a man follow me on the street with a brickbat in his hand and threaten what he would do.

Q. You don't know of any case where any violence was inflicted upon the person of yourself or any democrat, by any colored man, by striking or otherwise injuring the person?—A. Well, the day that I went to the poll to vote myself, I had a colored man to lay hold of me with his hand and pull me away from the poll the third time. I asked him to let me loose. I told him I was going up to vote, and he said, "No; you are not going to vote; I know what you are going in there for." I don't know what he meant by that, but he pulled me out the third time.

Q. That is the only instance of violence you know of?—A. That is the only man that laid his hand on me. I know of a colored man striking a colored man in the head.

Q. Did you see it?—A. I didn't see the lick struck, but I saw the head after it was struck.

Q. Then you don't know whether it was a white man or a colored man that struck it?—A. He told me who struck it.

Q. You don't know yourself whether it was a white man or a colored man that struck him?—A. No, sir; I didn't see the lick struck.

Q. You don't know whether it was a political quarrel or otherwise?—A. All I know in that case is what he told me.

Q. Did you hear a pistol fired at any meeting which you attended by any of the republicans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At Rose Pump or Rossville.

Q. Did you see it?—A. I was on the stand speaking and a pistol was fired, or two or three of them, a little piece from me.

Q. They were not fired at anybody?—A. I don't know whether they were or not. They did not fire at me, I think.

Q. There was nobody hurt?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear a pistol fired at any meeting you attended?—A. Yes, sir; over in Blackville.

Q. Any other?—A. No other, I believe.

Q. At Blackville, the pistol was not fired at anybody, was it?—A. I don't know, sir. I was not exactly present; I was about one hundred yards off.

Q. There was nobody hurt?—A. There was nobody hurt to my knowing, but I saw a good crowd running.

Q. How long have you been voting the democratic ticket?—A. In every election since I have been free.

Q. What business are you engaged in now?—A. I have some little work to do around town, taking care of some gentlemen's rooms. I have no regular situation by the month.

Q. Whose rooms do you take care of?—A. I take care of Mr. Beck's, over there for one.

Q. Did you tell the colored people in your speeches that it would be better for them to vote the democratic ticket, because they could get employment from democrats and get to live on the lands of the democrats?—A. No, sir; I didn't tell them on that account.

---

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 23, 1876.

M. A. MARGUETTE sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. At Edgefield Court-House.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Twenty-one years. I am from Germany originally.

Q. How old are you?—A. Forty-five.

Q. What position did you occupy at the last election?—A. I was manager of box number one.

Q. And you were there all day?—A. I was there all day.

Q. And attending to the business of the election all day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see from your room where the people about the voting-place were?—A. Only whenever the door opened and a new party was brought in to vote.

Q. Was there any disturbance at that voting place?—A. None that I saw.

Q. Did you admit the voters a certain number at a time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Ten at a time.

Q. Under any circumstances could you have taken any more votes than were actually cast at that place?—A. No, sir; I suppose we might have voted some fifty or more if it hadn't been for the time that the troops went out to take their stations and to make arrangements outside; it took about fifteen minutes perhaps.

Q. And with that exception was all the time taken up as fully as it could be in voting?—A. Yes, sir; we could not have voted any more.

Q. The time was fully occupied until the polls were closed?—A. Yes, sir; until the polls were closed; that is, on our arrangements that we made. Sometimes it took some time in challenging votes, but ordinarily that did not consume any more time than I have seen consumed at other elections in challenging votes.

Q. Questions were put to the colored men about their right to vote besides the oath they took?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not a large number of colored men questioned in that way?—A. I suppose there were about one hundred or more. Some were not questioned at all. In some instances where couriers came and said they had voted at other boxes we propounded to them the question, hadn't they voted there.

Q. The one hundred colored men who were questioned, as you have stated, had already sworn that they were entitled to vote before they were questioned?—A. They were first required to take an oath.

Q. Can you state the substance of the oath?—A. That they were citizens of the United States and of the State of South Carolina, and had not voted at any other voting-precinct, and that they were twenty-one years of age.

Q. What time in the morning did the white men mainly vote at that election?—A. In the morning, in the early part of the day.

Q. Did that occupy pretty much all the fore part of the day?—A. No, sir; I think they got through principally about nine o'clock; I would not be certain with regard to the time.

Q. The colored men were not permitted to come up and vote?—A. Yes, sir; some colored men came and voted with the white men.

Q. But as a general thing they were not permitted until the white men had voted?—A. No, sir; the white men principally voted before the colored men voted, and I can state the reason why they did. We apprehended that the colored people would come there and take possession of the box, which they had invariably done heretofore, and we were put off until about twelve or one or two o'clock before any of us could vote. It was the intention of the white people this time not to be cut out of voting, and they pressed forward, and so did the colored people.

Q. They intended that if anybody was cut out of the privilege of voting it should be the colored men?—A. Well, it was not the intention, but heretofore they had had to crowd through them and were pushed back, and it was very unpleasant.

Q. You are acquainted with the colored people of your county generally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are a peaceable people?—A. Well, some of them are. The generality are very peaceable, but some, as a matter of course, are bad characters.

Q. Do you know of any instance that day when any colored republican interfered with any white democrat, or attempted violence upon him?—A. I have not seen any act of violence at all by either party.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It has been stated here that, as the colored men approached the door to go into the voting-place, there were crowds of white men standing immediately around the door with clubs in their hands who were striking them in the head as they went to vote.—A. I have never seen a lick struck.

Q. Did you see any man with a bloody head?—A. I saw one man with blood on his head, that said he had been knocked.

Q. But not as he came there in the door?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was a case of a row outside, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Outside of that was there a single case of a man with a bloody head, or any sign of violence?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. By common report was it not true that all the colored men came down to your precinct, and deserted the other precinct, and so created the trouble in voting?—A. Well, by looking through the window on my right I saw a large crowd around the house, and in front I saw a large body of colored people coming up in a mass. At first it had the appearance to me that there would be a disturbance; that they came there for the purpose.

Q. Were there any minors who attempted to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many cases do you think?—A. I presume some ten or fifteen; I could only judge from appearances.

Q. Do you know of any repeating at that poll?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know of any disturbance outside, so far as you could see or hear?—A. I witnessed none myself.

Q. How was the canvass in your town previous to the election—peaceable or otherwise?—A. I considered it peaceable.

Q. There was a good deal of feeling about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion when Governor Chamberlain addressed the meeting there?—A. Yes, sir; I was present.

Q. By report, was any white man, going home from that meeting, killed?—A. There was a white man killed some three miles from the village, going home from that meeting, and I heard of another being wounded, but I did not see him. I went to the spot and found the man that was killed lying in the road, shot through the head.

Q. Did you get any word from General Hampton about having the whites not retaliate?—A. I went out with General Gary. He told me that he wanted to go, but did not wish any retaliation to occur, and that it was General Hampton's orders, too, that there should be no retaliation.

Q. Were there arrests made of black men?—A. There were arrests made.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How long have you lived in Edgefield?—A. About twenty years.

Q. You voted the democratic ticket yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not have opportunities to see what was going on outside, generally, at the poll, by reason of your being in the house?—A. Not generally.

Q. Do you remember how many colored votes there were at your voting-place?—A. I think the colored votes exceeded eight hundred; I don't know how many more.

Q. How many democratic votes were there?—A. I think about three hundred and sixteen.

Q. Do you know of any white man or democrat who did not get an opportunity to vote?—A. I know of no one.

Q. Don't you know that there were considerable numbers of colored men who did not get an opportunity to vote?—A. I have heard it said, but I only know of one that told me he had not.

Q. Did you not see outside crowds of colored men who did not vote?—A. I could not testify to that, from the simple fact that there were a great many out there, some scattering and some who had formed a circle, and I could not tell who had and who had not voted.

Q. There were complaints in the evening that colored men had not had an opportunity to vote?—A. I did not hear that; I was in the house.

Q. Was it not a matter of general notoriety afterward?—A. I heard of it afterward, that there was complaint that some of them could not vote.

Q. Were there not general complaints also that the white men surrounded the approaches to the voting-place so that colored men could not get in?—A. I did not hear any such complaints.

Q. Did not the democrats occupy a good deal of time in challenging republicans who came up to vote?—A. I do not think there was any more time occupied than was necessary. I myself was censured in the matter.

Q. Did you not challenge a good many republicans?—A. I did, or my supervisor did, and I was present.

Q. Were there not many more republicans who were challenged than democrats?—A. There were.

Q. Did not that consume a good deal of time?—A. Well, in some instances we consumed time on account of the republican managers. For instance, there was a white man challenged that they thought had voted, and they compelled the clerks to go over the entire poll-list to see whether that man had voted. That was their own motion, and it occurred twice. Once we challenged a colored man, and went over the list and consumed a good deal of time, and created some disturbance.

Q. What I ask you is, whether it was not by common report understood that this trouble at your box about their not voting came from the colored people deserting the other box?—A. I have never heard about that.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Was the man whose head you saw bleeding a colored republican?—A. He was.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

JOHN M. LEITH sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Abbeville County.

Q. What is your age?—A. Twenty-eight.

Q. Where were you on the day of the election?—A. I was at the polls from morning until night at Long Cane precinct.

Q. What position did you occupy there that day?—A. I assisted the clerk in making out his record.

Q. Were you there all day?—A. All day; I never left.

Q. What was the character of the crowd there as to peace and good order?—A. They were all quiet and peaceable, and every man voted as he pleased. I saw no intimidation whatever.

Q. There was no intimidation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in a position to see and know everything that was going on that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been stated here that none but Hampton men were allowed to vote at that poll; is that true?—A. No, sir. Everybody was allowed to vote as they pleased, and nobody knew how they voted.

Q. There was no obstruction?—A. No, sir; not in any form or shape.

Q. It has also been stated that there was a good deal of shooting done there during the day; is that true?—A. I did not see any shot fired at the polls; all the shooting was done by two or three who were drunk, and done after the polls were closed; away from the polling-place, across a bridge.

Q. You say there was no shooting?—A. I am sure there was none whatever at the poll that day.

Q. Was there an opportunity for all the people to vote who wanted to vote?—A. Yes, sir. At the start they became so crowded they shut the door so that they would come in ten at a time, five blacks and five whites. When the clerk had so many whites on one side then he would turn around and take so many blacks to make it even. When it got slack the door was opened. That was about an hour after the poll opened.

Q. That was early in the morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the entire day from that time on the door was open?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has been stated here that fifty men went away without voting; if that was so, was it because there was no opportunity to vote at the place?—A. I never saw that.

Q. Was there an opportunity for any man to vote there who wanted to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in Edgefield County?—A. I have lived in it seven years.

Q. Were you pretty well acquainted through the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you around through the county considerably during the campaign from one place to another?—A. I have only been around to these meetings.

Q. You took no part in politics?—A. I am secretary of one of the clubs.

Q. About your own place, what was the character of the people as to peace and good order during the few weeks preceding the election?—A. They were all quiet.

Q. Did you see any indication whatever of intimidation or threats toward any class of voters at the poll at Long Cane precinct on the day of the election?—A. No, sir, not any; the white people kept aloof from the blacks altogether; they had nothing to say to them.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You were secretary of a democratic club?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you?—A. Right at the mills, I live there.

Q. Were you in the room where they were voting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing in there?—A. I was looking on; I was helping the clerk to write down the names, and I was writing down names to send by a courier to other townships.

Q. Were you in the room all day?—A. Yes, sir; all day.

Q. You were not outside?—A. I was sometimes, but not when there was voting going on.

Q. When you were in the room you could not have had an opportunity to see what was going on outside?—A. Well, it was right by a window.

Q. You could not write down names, and at the same time see what was going on outside at any considerable distance from the poll?—A. No; I could not do both at the same time.

Q. Then you don't know what was said outside by persons to voters who were coming up to vote?—A. There was nobody outside. They all dispersed as soon as they came.

Q. You don't know what was said outside?—A. No, sir.

Q. If threats were made outside you had no opportunity to hear them?—A. I never heard any.

Q. And you don't know whether they were made or not?—A. No, sir; I never heard of any threats made by either blacks or whites. I have talked with them since, but I have never heard of them.

Q. But you don't know whether they were made or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the white men vote first in the morning?—A. I think it was five and five; first five white men and then five blacks.

Q. How many colored men and how many white men voted during that day?—A. I cannot tell you exactly. I think the whites had a majority of twelve, if I am not mistaken.

Q. About how many votes were cast?—A. I think there were between two hundred and fifty and three hundred.

Q. Did you go away to get your dinner?—A. No, sir; it was sent to me from a house close by. After the close, I furnished all the managers dinner in the room.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is your business there?—A. I am the manager of the mill there, on Mr. McKay's place.

Q. What business do you do at the mill?—A. I keep the accounts and see that everything is right.

Q. How long were you engaged in writing names during the day?—A. About an hour's time, I suppose.

Q. After that you were in and out of the room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If any pistol-shots had been fired in the neighborhood you were in a position to have known it?—A. Yes, sir; the only pistols I heard fired were after the polls were closed, and that was as they were going home. I knew the parties who fired, too, and the firing was not intended for anybody. If there was any disturbance I think I would have heard somebody talk about it, blacks or whites. The managers told us they were pretty well pleased.

Q. The crowd was good-natured?—A. Yes, sir.

---

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

MILLEDGE T. HOLLEY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question Where do you reside?—Answer. In Aiken County, five miles south of Aiken Court-House.

Q. What is your age?—A. Forty-five.

Q. What position did you occupy in the last election?—A. I was sheriff-elect in the last election.

Q. Where were you on the 7th of November last?—A. In Aiken; at Aiken Court-House. I got there about half past three o'clock in the morning, before the polling commenced, and staid until the votes were counted. I never left the precinct at any time during the day.

Q. State what you know of the conduct of the election at the court-house on that day as to peace and good order.—A. On Saturday or Monday, I am not sure which, I was appointed a special deputy by the sheriff of Aiken County, to assist in keeping good order and making any arrests that were necessary to assist the sheriff. When I got there in the morning I went to the polls and remained at and around the polls all day. Everything was perfectly quiet. I saw nothing to mar the peace of any citizen, white or black. Everybody had free access to the polls, and inside of a little barricade that we had to keep out the masses of the people. Myself, and a man named Givins, a colored man, who was also appointed a special deputy, remained most of the day just around the precinct so as to keep everything clear and see that everybody had an opportunity to vote.

Q. Was there any difficulty in the way of anybody who desired to vote?—A. None at all, sir. Myself and Mr. Givins, a colored republican, were there. There was one entrance where the people came in. All sick or indisposed colored men I admitted from the other side, and Givins did the same at the other side with the white people. There was considerable rush; they would stand in line two or three hours getting through, and we agreed that these who were not able were to be excused from this rush. The rush lasted until twelve o'clock or later; after that, until the close of the polls, they were clear, though sometimes for an hour there might be a crowd.

Q. Were there any complaints of any person not being able to vote that desired?—A. Not a bit. The United States marshal was there assisting us, and he expressed himself as perfectly satisfied, and he remarked in my presence that it was the most quiet election he had seen since he came south.

Q. How long have you lived in Aiken County?—A. I was born and raised there.

Q. You are pretty well acquainted with the county?—A. As much so as any man living in it.

Q. As a candidate for office, did you go over most of the county?—A. Some six weeks or two months before the election I was nominated, and from that time we had almost daily meetings in different sections of the county, taking it by townships. There are seventeen townships in the county, and we went from township to township. We were from twenty-five to thirty days, very nearly every day, engaged in that way.

Q. Were your meetings quiet and orderly?—A. Perfectly so.

Q. Did any disturbance occur at any of them?—A. Not a particle.

Q. Were you at any republican meetings?—A. I met the republicans at Royce's Bridge, between the 8th and 15th of October, myself and several other candidates, and some of the speakers who had been appointed by the democratic executive committee. Soon after arriving there, Mr. Palmer, a candidate on the other side, and several of the other candidates, came in. We went to them and asked them very quietly to give us a part of the time. They refused, saying that it was their meeting, and they did not wish to be disturbed. We stated that we did not want any disturbance, but simply desired to express our views to the colored people and to enlighten them, and, if possible, to convince them that we only wanted fair dealing, and that we proposed to do that by argument, and not by any rash words or foul means. I also stated that I was then a candidate for the office of sheriff of Aiken County, and that, though I was not then sheriff, I would assume the responsibility to say that there should be nothing of an unpleasant nature, that everything should be peaceable and quiet; but still they did not grant our request. We remained there and heard them speak, and everything was quiet.

Q. They refused you a division of time, and you yielded, conceding their right to refuse?—A. Yes, sir; we remained until six o'clock. Some of the republicans were speaking when we left.

Q. You put your proposals in the ordinary form of a request for a division of time, and when it was refused you yielded?—A. Yes, sir. We asked, further, if they would not be willing, that if the colored people were desirous of hearing our arguments, to allow them to decide the matter. They refused that. I stated that we wanted to enlighten them. Dr. Palmer said he did not wish them enlightened; that it was not to his advantage to have them enlightened.

Q. What was the condition of Aiken County during the entire canvass?—A. There was considerable excitement in both parties, but nothing of a hostile nature. Everything was perfectly peaceable and quiet. With one or two exceptions I don't think there was a day for twenty-five or thirty days that I did not attempt to make a little stump-speech at various points, according to the arrangements made by the committee. There was a good deal of enthusiasm.

Q. Was anything like intimidation attempted on your part?—A. Not a particle, sir. I never heard of anything of the kind during the canvass, except by the other party. There were a good many colored people at those meetings who had come over and expressed themselves as democrats and voted the democratic ticket. The republican colored people used to abuse them, and tell them that if they voted our ticket they would go to the whipping-post, and if they didn't go to it with the white people they would put them to it.

Q. Was there a system of intimidation by the republican negroes against the democrats?—A. There was in several instances, so that the colored men were abused.

Q. Any that fell under your own observation?—A. Only one man that I saw on one occasion, Tom Hayne, at Aiken; there were a good many got around him and threatened to abuse him and beat him, and he called upon his friends, and they came and dispersed the others, and told him that they must not interfere with him; that we did not propose for him to vote only as he saw fit. There was some disturbance in our county before our nomination, about the 16th of September, in connection with the Ellenton riot, but it had nothing to do with this election—at least I never heard any man speak a word that led me to believe that there was anything political connected with it.

Q. It had no political character?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Apart from the demonstrations made at the time of the Ellenton riots, did you see anything like hostile demonstrations in your travel?—A. Nowhere, sir. All the speeches I heard were to convince the colored man that he was doing wrong to go against the good people of the county.

Q. You sought to influence them by persuasion?—A. Altogether. Every speech that I made was in that line, and I heard none other, except that on one or two occasions I heard some parties make some reference to this man Palmer, that he had made incendiary speeches, and that he ought to be taken out and hung.

Q. Who was Palmer, a republican speaker?—A. A republican speaker, and considered by even his own party to be a very bad man.

Q. What do you mean by an incendiary speech?—A. That I could only state from hearsay. These parties said that he had made speeches saying that the colored people must kill out and burn property. I know there was considerable burning; a good deal of that came under my personal knowledge, and some murders of a most outrageous character, that I witnessed myself.

Q. By whom and upon whom?—A. The first burning that I recollect in the neighborhood at that time was about the night of the 17th of September, when Dr. Bailey's mills were burned, on the line of Aiken and Barnwell counties. On the Tuesday night following, the 19th, I think, my mill (I had two mills, a saw-mill and a grist-mill and cotton-screw) was set on fire, and one of my mills and my gin-screw were burned. My other mill was also set on fire, but went out by accident. The same night my neighbor, Mr. Perrot, about a mile from me, had his cotton-gin fired, but it fortunately went out. The next burning was pretty soon after that. We were in what we called the fork of the two rivers; we had gone to meet our appointment. A party of our speakers and candidates staid with a gentleman named L. B. Lewis, and the second night after they staid with him his house was burned down, and they had every reason to believe it was by incendiaries. About the 4th or 5th of November there was a gentleman named Hausman, a Dutchman, and his nephew, Mr. Pultman, who lived in a house by themselves, and a party of negroes went down and murdered them in the house.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Did you see that?—A. I saw the bodies next day.

Mr. LAWRENCE. You have no right to state, then, that it was a party of negroes.

A. I will prove that to you afterward, from the fact that I have them now in my custody, and they acknowledge the fact. There were five that went to the point, and three others who were accessaries, and each and every one has been taken up at a separate time, and all confirm the statements made by the first one, except as to who did the killing. They do not deny it to any one at all; they talk of it to any one that will go in and see them.

Q. Were there any other such burnings of homesteads that fell under your own observation?—A. Only from the acknowledgment of those negroes who are in jail.

Q. As a matter of general notoriety, was there not during this canvass a very large number of buildings fired?—A. Yes, sir; I know that property was burned.

Q. In those instances what class of persons, politically, owned the buildings?—A. Hausman and Pultman never interfered in politics, and if they ever voted at all I am not aware of it.

Q. They were white men?—A. Yes, sir; the most decent, quiet gentlemen in the community, men who were esteemed by every class of men, white and black. Those whose property was burned were altogether democrats, I think. I don't know of any but those two that were not democrats. There were some other outrages committed in that neighborhood. A few days before Hausman was killed there was an old gentleman who had peddled rags who was missing for some days. He was found at Horse Creek, four miles this side of Hamburgh, and no one knew who had killed him. After the arrest of these negroes they said, voluntarily, that they had killed him. They said they had got about ten dollars. A little before that there was an old gentleman, 70 years old at least, and his wife, equally as old, very inoffensive old people. These same negroes acknowledged going there, (two out of five—I don't recollect which of them—belonged to the State militia.) They went with the militia guns and hailed Mr. Parkinson at the door. He refused to come out. They fired at him through the shutters, but did not hit him. He then told them not to kill him, but to come in and he would give them anything they wanted if they would save his life. They went in and plundered the house, and Mrs. Parkinson, a very old lady, ran out in the garden and tried to conceal herself, and two of these negroes say that this fellow, John Henry Dickson, went out and committed an outrage on her after she left the house.

Q. What was the treatment that the democratic negroes generally received from the republican negroes, so far as you know?—A. Very bad. They were molested in words at every meeting. They were never allowed to pass without some harsh language being used, and very frequently blows. However, I never saw a lick struck.

Q. Did a portion of the colored people of your county vote the democratic ticket this fall?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose one hundred and fifty to two hundred more than we ever did before.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. Were there troops in your county?—A. The troops came there before this Ellenton riot. They were at Aiken at the time that occurred.

Q. The Ellenton riot was in your county?—A. Yes, sir; about the 16th of September.

Q. How many colored men were killed in the Ellenton riot?—A. I could not speak knowingly of that.

Q. How many, by general report?—A. Thirteen is the general report.

Q. Any white men?—A. Two white men killed and two or three more wounded.

Q. Do you know, by general report, that there were a number of colored men killed in your county this year?—A. None; not a man that I ever heard of, except these thirteen reported at Ellenton, and one that was shot that went into Mr. Harley's house. I don't think there has been any other colored man killed in the county for the last seven or eight months, except in the Hamburg riot. Since the Hamburg riot there has not been a colored man killed that I have any knowledge of, with the exception of the one that went into Mr. Harley's house.

Q. How many colored men were killed at the Hamburg riot?—A. I think, as well as I recollect, six was the number reported.

Q. Nineteen colored men were killed in those two riots?—A. Yes, sir; that is about the general statement. I cannot speak of it knowingly.

Q. Were any white men killed at Hamburg?—A. One, that I heard of.

Q. You attended nearly all the democratic meetings held in your county?—A. At first I did; but toward the close they had sometimes two different meetings the same day.

Q. No republican ever disturbed any one of your democratic meetings?—A. Not that I have any knowledge of.

Q. Then there was no violence or intimidation by republicans at democratic meetings?—A. Only by these insulting threats they made toward democratic negroes, and frequently making threats to burn out white people's property.

Q. Was that at the meeting?—A. No, sir; just passing each other.

Q. Were you at any republican meeting except the one which you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir; two. I was at Royce's Bridge on Friday, and Silvertown on Saturday.

Q. Were those meetings called as republican meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what purpose did you attend them?—A. The first meeting we went to, we went to see if they would be willing to divide the time. There had been some such arrangements prior to that, and we supposed there would be no objection to dividing the time. If so, we would take it, if not, we would remain peaceably and quietly and let them have it their own way.

Q. Did they divide the time?—A. No, sir; they did not.

Q. How many white men attended the meeting?—A. I think between forty and fifty. The colored men at that point numbered about from seventy-five to ninety.

Q. Did the white men remain during the meeting?—A. Until about four o'clock.

Q. What time did the meeting commence?—A. It was pretty late; we met there about twelve o'clock; but I don't think the meeting was opened until half past twelve or one o'clock. The white men left before the meeting was concluded, from the fact that most of them were from a distance, myself included.

Q. You attended another republican meeting at Silvertown the next day?—A. Yes, sir; we had a meeting of our own called there that same day.

Q. Was the republican called before the democratic meeting?—A. I could not say as to that; I don't recollect.

Q. Did you ask for a division of time there?—A. I was not present if it was asked. I understood that one gentleman on our side asked some men about dividing time. They simply said they would be glad to have us attend their meeting, but would not grant the privilege of asking questions. Immediately upon the back at that there was a committee, composed of Mr. Paul Hammond and another gentleman, to see that none of our people interfered with them nor asked any questions. After arriving at the stand, one of the republicans was speaking, and a young gentleman, a friend of mine, from Aiken, was present, and this speaker made some assertion, and this gentleman, Mr. Yates, attempted to ask some question. I stepped right up to him and said, "It is contrary to the order of the day; you are not expected to ask any questions;" and this gentleman who was speaking said that he refused to make any answer; that the understanding was that they were not to be asked any questions, and Mr. Yates said nothing more. A democratic colored man got up in a buggy and made a short speech. He had been drinking, I think.

Q. Was that within hearing of the republican speaking?—A. I don't think it was, from the tone in which he spoke. It might have been with a loud tone.

Q. How many yards was it from the republican meeting?—A. Seventy-five or eighty yards. He spoke very low, and was up a very short time. He got up in a buggy, and seemed to have done it without the knowledge of the white people. The owner of the buggy went down and told him to get out; he did not get out as soon as the owner wished, and the owner and another gentleman got hold of the buggy and pulled it away about fifty yards, and that was the end of it.

Q. You have no knowledge of what occurred at other republican meetings?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Who is Dr. Palmer?—A. He is from the North; I don't know from what State; he has been in our county off and on for four years; he goes off in the summer months.

Q. Is he a member of the legislature here?—A. He claims to be now, but I do not so consider him. The board granted a certificate to the man who opposed him, and that gentleman is now in our legislature, or was at the time of the adjournment. Palmer, the other candidate, has been taken into the other house.

Q. What board granted that certificate?—A. The State board of canvassers issued the certificate.

Q. You remember that you are under oath?—A. I am.

Q. You know that fact about that certificate?—A. I have seen the certificate of one of the gentlemen.

Q. Did you see the certificate of this gentleman who ran in opposition to Dr. Palmer?—A. I don't know that I can say that any particular one out of four was in opposition to him but I saw the certificate of one who was declared elected by the State board.

Q. Who signed that certificate?—A. It was signed by the secretary of state, the same as my certificate.

Q. You said there was a system of intimidation by colored republicans against colored democrats. State what you personally know or have heard upon that subject.—A. Well, I have heard the republican colored people frequently tell the democratic negroes that if they voted the democratic ticket they would kill them; that they would not be allowed to live, and threats of that kind.

Q. Whom did you hear say that?—A. I have heard numbers of them.

Q. Tell me one.—A. I don't know that I can name any particular one. A great many times I didn't know the parties.

Q. Can you name a single republican colored person who said any such thing as that?—A. I think I could by a little reflection. I don't know that I could call the parties to mind just now. I have heard it repeatedly.

Q. Can you name a single colored democrat to whom such language was used?—A. Yes, sir; Bob Harrison and Henry Harrison.

Q. Where?—A. Henry Harrison was on my place, and I can name one of the parties who said it.

Q. Did you see it?—A. There are two Bob Harrisons; one is a brother-in law of the one that lives on my place, and the other Bob Harrison threatened to kill him.

Q. The Harrisons have not been disturbed, have they?—A. I do not know that they have been.

Q. Don't you know that they have not?—A. I have not heard that they have been, and I think they have not.

Q. Can you name any other instances?—A. As I before stated, I do not know that I can recollect the names of the parties. I was not present, as I have before stated, when these parties were molested, but I have seen on two occasions on the streets of Aiken where the parties were bleeding from violence.

Q. I asked you only as to your personal knowledge.—A. I stated in my direct testimony that I did not see any violence, and I still say so; threats I heard frequently.

Q. Do you know of any instance in which any white man in your county during this year has been fined or punished by any proceeding of the court for any outrage committed against any colored man?—A. There have been occurrences of that kind. I have been at the courts and seen the trials and have seen the parties convicted, but I cannot call to mind the names of the parties.

Q. White men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear them sentenced?—A. I only heard the verdict of the jury. I do not think I heard the sentence.

Q. You do not know whether the court sentenced them or not?—A. No, sir; but I took it for granted that after the verdict of the jury they were sentenced.

Q. Then you do not know any instance where a white man has been punished?—A. Not of my own personal knowledge; only, as I have stated to you, I have seen the cases come up in court.

Q. Did you see more than one case where there was a verdict against a white man?—A. I could not state positively; my memory is very bad, and I have never taxed it about that.

Q. In that instance which you have named, what was the verdict for?—A. I could not call to mind the exact charge. I have not taxed my mind with anything of the kind, and we have had a great deal of political excitement.

Q. Did the colored men on your land vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes sir; every one on the the place, I am proud to say, and they have done so for four years, except one who did not vote at all. Four years ago I went up in advance of them, and about nine o'clock they got on the ground, and the first I saw of them there were seventy-five to one hundred negroes around them—

Q. I did not ask you for that.—A. Well, I thought it necessary to state it. I can only say in answer to your question that every negro on my place has voted the democratic ticket for four years.

Q. Is the one that did not vote at all still on your place?—A. He is not on it now, but he was there last November a year ago, and staid there until last September or October.

Q. Did you talk with the colored men about the election?—A. Yes, sir; I talked with them wherever I went.

Q. Did you tell them that it would be to their interest to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I did.

Q. And that unless they would vote it, you would not feel inclined to let them stay on your lands?—A. No, sir; I never had occasion to say so. There was an agitation of this kind four years ago, and they came to my rescue, from the fact that they said they had confidence in me; they had been on my place, some of them for years. One of them said to me, "I know what you say you mean. You say that you mean to give us equal justice under the law if you are elected, and upon that ground we are going to vote for you. We cannot vote the whole ticket this election, but we will vote for you." They voted for me and another man that election. Two years afterward they voted the full ticket, and in the last election they voted the full ticket—voted it from the effect of argument—no threats. I have got one man who has been on my place six years, and he and I have never had a word, and I expect he will stay six years more if he lives.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

ANGUS P. BROWN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your age and residence?—Answer. I am fifty years of age; I reside in Aiken County, South Carolina.

Q. What official position do you hold?—A. I was recently elected clerk of the court of Aiken County.

Q. Where were you on the 7th of November last?—A. At Silverton precinct in Aiken County.

Q. State what you know with regard to the election held at Silverton?—A. I never saw a more quiet election; in fact, it was the most quiet we have ever had there. I was at the polls from daylight until the box was counted, and started off.

Q. Was there a large crowd about the poll?—A. Yes, sir; we give a large vote there, colored and white.

Q. As to ease of access to the polls and opportunities to vote, were they extended alike to all classes?—A. All classes, sir. For the first two hours the colored people had the entire poll to themselves, having got possession of it early in the morning.

Q. Was there any kind of interruption or interference with their voting?—A. Not a bit that I ever heard.

Q. Any disturbance there during the day?—A. Not a word.

Q. How soon did the colored people get in to vote?—A. I suppose it was two hours that the colored people were in control, and then I made a proposition to them to allow us in control. They were voting in a blacksmith's shop; I suppose the door is about eight feet wide. I proposed that we be allowed to have half the ground in front of the box. They acceded to it without any disturbance.

Q. Was the vote of the precinct polled without any one being excluded?—A. Not one was excluded, sir, of any race or color.

Q. How long did the crowd continue there?—A. I think about four o'clock they gradually began to leave. There was a good large crowd, however, there all day, some few going away and a good many going in.

Q. The most of the colored people voted the republican ticket, I suppose?—A. Some few, perhaps twenty, voted the democratic ticket.

Q. Was there any violence or intimidation or threat toward any class of voters that day at your poll?—A. Not as I heard. I was there before daylight and left after the box was counted.

Q. How generally were you through the county during the canvass?—A. I was not much through the county; I was mostly in the southern part, on the river.

Q. Did you attend a number of democratic meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend any republican meetings?—A. I think I attended four or five.

Q. Was there any disturbance at any of those meetings?—A. None.

Q. What was the disposition, so far as you had knowledge of the matter, of the colored republicans toward colored democrats?—A. So far as I know, of my own knowledge, I could not say; I only know what they said.

Q. What was the general report?—A. I heard a democratic colored man say that he had been severely beaten because he claimed to be a democrat.

Q. As a matter of fact, coming down to what you saw throughout the county, was there a disposition to ostracise, socially, and in every other way, any colored man who chose to vote the democratic ticket?—A. I think there was.

Q. Don't you know there was?—A. I know it.

(Mr. Lawrence objected to the last question.)

Q. What was the general report and reputation in regard to the matter as to the relation between the colored men who voted the republican ticket and the colored men who voted the democratic ticket?—A. Well, sir, the colored republicans were very abusive, from what I could hear. They were so that they refused to associate with them; they refused to have any intercourse whatever with colored democrats.

By Mr. LAWRENCE :

Q. You were at a number of democratic meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. No republican disturbed any democratic meeting?—A. No, sir; I did not see any disturbance.

Q. The colored men, who were in attendance at democratic meetings, were orderly and quiet?—A. Perfectly, sir.

Q. Is not that the character of the colored men generally; are they not an orderly, quiet, and inoffensive people?—A. Politically!

Q. No; as men?—A. Yes, sir; as men they are generally very quiet.

Q. They are disinclined to enter into any personal combats or contests unless they are set upon?—A. I cannot say that, sir, because we have had a demonstration which proved they were not, and a very strong one, too.

Q. Were you present?—A. I was through the whole of it; from the beginning to the end.

Q. Which one do you refer to?—A. The Ellenton riot.

Q. That we have not gone into. How many republican meetings did you attend?—A. I think I attended four or five.

Q. Did you go for the purpose, or with others who went for the purpose, of getting an opportunity to divide time and having a joint discussion?—A. We did make a proposition on several occasions, but it was invariably refused, and we did not press it at all.

Q. Did the democrats attend in force at those meetings?—A. Sometimes there were very few, and at times a good many.

Q. Did they carry pistols sometimes?—A. Yes, sir, I think they did.

Q. The white men?—A. I think both parties carried sidearms.

Q. Did the colored men carry sidearms?—A. Yes, sir, I have seen them with sidearms.

Q. Did they go generally with sidearms?—A. I cannot tell you; I cannot tell what is under a man's coat.

Q. You have no knowledge of the colored men generally having sidearms?—A. No, sir, not generally; but I have seen them. I cannot say that every white man had sidearms.

Q. Do you not know that the white men did generally have sidearms?—A. I have seen them with sidearms; I cannot say that they all had. I think they had generally.

Q. At any of the democratic meetings, did the republicans have any discussion with you?—A. No, sir; they always refused to discuss the questions then agitating the country.

Q. What position did you occupy on the day of the election?—A. I was a candidate for clerk. I was at the polls all day, from before daylight until after the votes were counted.

Q. Don't you know that there were large numbers of white men there armed with pistols?—A. I have no doubt of it.

Q. Did not white men frequently remain around the polls in considerable numbers?—A. Not near so much as the colored people, sir. It was blocked by them for two hours.

Q. Did not the white men remain at the polls in large numbers during a considerable part of the day?—A. Immediately around the polls?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. In the vicinity?—A. Yes, sir; both colors did.

Q. Don't you know that in the evening there were considerable numbers of colored men, who had been there during the day, who went away without voting?—A. No, sir; not one.

Q. You mean to say that you do not know of one?—A. I do not know of any. The poll in the afternoon from about 4 o'clock was perfectly open; there was nobody even around the poll except the marshals, the challengers, and the managers. I do know that at the time the box was about to be counted soldiers were ordered up immediately in front of the door, and that they took possession of the box.

Q. Took possession of the box?—A. Yes; and were sitting on it in the wagon at the time it was put there to be brought to Aiken, and Mr. Dunbar, the manager, objected seriously to their sitting on the box; and after some few words the soldier got off the box.

Q. One soldier, was it?—A. There were four there; one occupied the box. There were four brought immediately in front of the door.

Q. Those soldiers did not interfere with the counting, or disturb it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was not the box under the control of the managers?—A. Yes, sir; until it was placed in a wagon, and Mr. Dunbar found that the soldier was sitting on it.

Q. Then the soldier got off?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The soldiers were brought up because it was apprehended that there might be an attempt to seize the box?—A. I do not know of the apprehensions. There certainly was no such intention displayed.

Q. You did not hear that reason alleged for it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you hear any reason?—A. No, sir; not the first reason.

Q. There was no pretense that the soldiers interfered with the counting?—A. No, sir; only that they were brought to the door and remained there during the counting.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

J. H. PIGOTT (colored) sworn and examined.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am twenty-eight years of age, and reside in this city; have lived here ever since I was born.

Q. What has been your business?—A. For the last eight years I have been teaching school, up to May 1, when I was elected clerk of the market here.

Q. What were your politics at the last election?—A. I supported General Hampton and the entire democratic ticket.

Q. Did you take part in the canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you begin to take part in the canvass?—A. Immediately after the State convention.

Q. Did you make speeches in different portions of the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many speeches did you make in this county?—A. I could not tell you—a good number.

Q. And in other parts of the State?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the canvass, after it was known that you were taking part in it, were you subjected to any threats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where; in the city?—A. Yes, sir, and in almost every precinct in this county.

Q. From whom?—A. From the republican colored men.

Q. What did they say to you?—A. They threatened at times, and would say they intended to burn me and burn my house down; at other times they threatened to murder me; they did stone my house and broke out several panes of glass on several occasions, and I had to request the chief of police to guard me part of the way home.

Q. Were these threats of infrequent or of frequent occurrence?—A. Very frequent.

Q. State whether, since you have taken an active part in the election, you have been unable to have any intercourse with people of your own color, except democrats?—A. None at all; and at one time at Trenholm's precinct, about eight miles from here, I was forced to stop speaking. They crowded around the wagon and used all sorts of abrupt language, and finally I had to stop and get down.

Q. At other places where you were speaking were you interrupted?—A. Yes, sir, on all occasions I was interrupted.

Q. What was said to you?—A. They would curse me.

Q. What was the general expression?—A. They would say, "You are a damn traitor, and a damn democratic son of a bitch," and such language as that.

Q. But it was only on one occasion you were obliged to give up speaking?—A. Yes, sir, at Big Lake, at the Trenholm's precinct.

Q. Did this spirit get into your family so as to affect even your wife?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did she take sides with the republicans?—A. Well, sir, she listened to her step-father and her mother and others, and it finally resulted in her deserting me and carrying my children with her.

Q. What did she say to you about your position as a democrat?—A. She did not say much, but she had heard that I had joined the democratic party. I told her that I had not joined the democratic party. Her step-father stopped speaking to me immediately, and he would go up there and confer with her, and he told her on several occasions to come home with him; that he had room enough for her, and plenty to feed her and her children; and so she kept on, and I suppose she thought—I don't know what she thought, but, anyhow, she left.

Q. Did she say anything to you about your disgracing her and your children?—A. Yes, sir; she said she wanted me not to support General Hampton or the democratic ticket, because it would bring disgrace upon her and her children, and that's what her father and mother didn't like; and intimated that she would have to quit if I did. I said, "Very well, you may go," and she went.

Q. Do you own a house?—A. My father owns three houses in this town.

Q. And you live in one of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has your furniture been taken away?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who took it?—A. Her step-father came there in my absence with a wagon and took everything except a cot, which they thought was enough for me to sleep on. That is there now.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. How long have you lived in Columbia?—A. A little over twenty-eight years.

Q. You are a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many speeches did you make during this campaign?—A. It is hard for me to tell. I made them as often as I could get a chance.

Q. You can give us some idea?—A. The reason I make that answer is because in this county we would leave town, a train of us, and we would call a meeting sometimes twice a day on different plantations, and I would sometimes speak twice; and every Saturday we had a meeting, and I spoke at every one.

Q. About how many meetings did you attend?—A. Not less than fifty.

Q. No man ever struck you at any meeting, did he?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been struck by anybody since this political campaign commenced?—A. I have been struck since it has ended.

Q. From the commencement of the campaign up to the election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then there has been no violence against your person?—A. No, sir; not against my person.

Q. You are acquainted with the colored people generally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they all friendly with them?—A. I am very well thought of among them.

Q. Are they all friendly with you?—A. They were before the canvass.

Q. Do you attend any republican meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go there for the purpose of asking a division of time?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you take white democrats with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. For what purpose did you attend?—A. I attended one meeting in my own ward. There had been certain allegations made concerning my action in this matter, which I proposed to give an explanation of to the members of my ward. I went there for the purpose of explaining some things that had been said about me that were not true, and they all got up, took their hats, and left me standing in the hall.

Q. They did not offer you any violence?—A. No, sir; as soon as I asked to explain they began yelling, and walked out and left me in it.

Q. What business are you engaged in now?—A. None at all at present.

Q. How long have you been out of employment?—A. I have been out of regular employment ever since about May.

Q. Were you employed to make democratic speeches?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you paid anything for your services?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were your expenses paid?—A. Well, I would go to a stable and get a horse whenever I was ready to go, and I presume the democratic party furnished the horses.

Q. Don't you know that they did, and that they requested you to go and make speeches?—A. They did not request me to go. I did not receive a nickel from the democratic party in this State.

Q. You went and got a horse without any democrat telling you that you could do so?—A. I did not say that. I would inquire as to when there was going to be a meeting, and they would say, "Saturday." I would say, "Well, I want to go." They would say, "Then go to a stable and get a horse."

Q. What business had you been engaged in before May?—A. I was clerk of the market for two years prior to that time.

Q. You say that the meeting at Trenholm was interrupted?—A. Yes, sir; I was interrupted there.

Q. Was it a democratic meeting?—A. It was a meeting of colored people entirely, called by the democratic party of this county.

Q. How many people were present?—A. About a hundred, all colored, except those who went from town.

Q. How many were from town?—A. I think there were about seven of us.

Q. Who all spoke?—A. Andrew Crawford, a man of this city, a lawyer; J. C. Segar, who owned the place; Col. Thomas Taylor, and W. H. Wigg, probate judge of this county, and myself.

Q. Then there were six democratic speeches?—A. Yes, sir; I tried to speak.

Q. Did the others speak before you?—A. No, sir; I spoke first.

Q. How long did you speak?—A. About eight or ten minutes.

Q. What was the reason that you did not speak longer?—A. Well, they would not let me speak. The speakers got up in a wagon, and as soon as they found out the course that I was going to speak, they crowded around the wagon and began to abuse and curse me.

Q. And it was on account of their cursing you that you stopped speaking?—A. No, sir; not altogether.

Q. There was no violence against your person?—A. If I had not stopped I am satisfied there would have been.

Q. Was there any?—A. No, sir; but there were threats made.

Q. But the other five speakers spoke as long as they wished?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was no disturbance at the meeting after you sat down?—A. No, sir; not with the white speakers.

Q. The colored men listened attentively to the white speakers?—A. They were tolerably attentive.

Q. What time did you commence making speeches?—A. Immediately after the republican convention nominated Daniel H. Chamberlain.

Q. What time was that?—A. I don't remember the date.

Q. How long did your wife remain with you after that?—A. She left me on the 7th of October.

Q. How long have you lived with her?—A. Eight years.

Q. Is she here now?—A. She is here in the city with her step-father and mother.

Q. How many democratic negroes are there here?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Are there ten or a hundred?—A. I guess there are four or five hundred in this county.

Q. How many in this city?—A. They had one regular club organized here with about eighty members, and numbers voted the democratic ticket who did not join the club.

Q. You have intercourse with the members of that club now, have you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you speak to other colored men—republicans?—A. A few.

Q. And they speak to you?—A. Yes, sir; but in a very cool way. If I should pass by one of them and say, "Good morning, sir," he will say, "Good morning," very coolly, and go on.

By Mr. ABBOTT:

Q. Up to the time of joining in the democratic canvass you stood exceedingly well with your colored people in the city?—A. Yes, sir; and throughout the county.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

EDWARD M. SUMTER (colored) sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am 30 years of age, and I reside at Barnwell Court-House; I am a carpenter by trade.

Q. Are you very well acquainted with your trade as a carpenter, and do you follow it as a business?—A. Yes, sir; I know nothing else except that.

Q. State where you were on the day of the election, the 7th of November last?—A. At Barnwell Court-House.

Q. You were there most of the day?—A. The whole day.

Q. Were you about the polls during the whole day?—A. Yes, sir; from 6 o'clock in the morning to 6 in the afternoon.

Q. What was the character of the crowd gathered there, as to good order?—A. The behavior was good on both sides; there was nothing except a general electioneering the whole day.

Q. Was there any interference or disturbance at the polls that you saw?—A. No, sir.

Q. Any difficulty about persons voting as they saw fit?—A. No, sir. Each man, I think, was allowed his full privilege.

Q. Colored men, white men, republicans, and democrats?—A. Yes, sir; all.

Q. Was there any difficulty in getting access to the polls by anybody?—A. No, sir; the height of the voting was concluded about two o'clock, and from that until six there were not more than one or two persons that came in.

Q. So that at Barnwell Court-House anybody could have voted if he desired to do so?—A. O, certainly; no doubt about that.

Q. Did you hear any threats made there at the time the polling was going on?—A. No, sir; none at all.

Q. Neither against colored democrats nor colored men, nor by white men against colored men?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Was it an entirely peaceable and quiet election?—A. Yes, sir. The managers notified all parties not to electioneer within the building where the box was. Each man came to the poll and voted as he chose.

Q. Was there any body of armed men, or any intimidation, or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir. The soldiers were encamped about three-quarters of a mile from the poll.

Q. Was there any occasion for interference on the part of the soldiers during the day?—A. No, sir; they did not come out of camp at all.

Q. How long have you lived in Barnwell County?—A. Since 1856.

Q. Were you born in this State?—A. I was born in Edgefield.

Q. Did you take any part in the last campaign?—A. Yes, sir; I took a good part; at least I tried to take a good part.

Q. What position did you occupy in the campaign and what did you do?—A. I supported General Hampton for governor and the democratic ticket.

Q. Whom did you support for President?—A. Mr. Tilden.

Q. What part did you take in the campaign?—A. Well, sir, I canvassed Barnwell County; I did not go outside of it.

Q. How many precincts are there?—A. Fifteen.

Q. How many were you in?—A. I was in thirteen during the canvass.

Q. You made speeches in all these precincts, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir; local stump-speeches.

Q. State whether there were organized throughout the county democratic colored clubs?—A. Yes, sir; there were seventeen colored democratic clubs in the county.

Q. What membership did they have?—A. They had from twenty-six to seventy-odd each, I believe. I don't recollect exactly how many, but I think seventy-seven was the most numerous club in the county.

Q. How many colored men are there in Barnwell County?—A. According to the census I think there are about 4,200.

Q. During the last campaign what proportion of those were democrats or belonged to democratic clubs and voted the democratic ticket?—A. I think there were about 1,100.

Q. You judge that from your own canvass and observation?—A. Yes, sir; I have been a member of the legislature for six years in this State.

Q. State the relation that existed between the colored republicans and colored democrats like yourself who openly advocated the democratic ticket?—A. The relation between the colored democrats and the colored republicans was very slim.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. The colored republicans were down on the colored democrats for the position taken by them in the campaign.

Q. How did they treat them?—A. Well, sir, they treated them very coolly. All sociability was done away with between them; they did not wish our company at all.

Q. Was that true of both the men and the women?—A. Yes, sir; the women were worse than the men. I heard more remarks from them about it.

Q. State what you know with regard to the position of the colored men who came out and advocated the election of Tilden or Hampton; how were they treated by both the men and women, the colored republicans?—A. They were treated very coolly. I have never had any social equality with them since. They treat us as off-casts, and did not wish to have anything to say to us or to do with us.

Q. Did they make threats?—A. I was threatened at one place particularly, at Wiliston. I went there on Saturday before the election to attend a meeting, and they told me that if I went on the stump there they would take me down.

Q. Did you speak there?—A. Not at the republican meeting. I spoke afterward at a meeting on the democratic side.

Q. What was the character of your meetings generally through the county?—A. Generally quiet and peaceable.

Q. Did you attend any republican meetings?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of those meetings?—A. I attended a large republican meeting at Blackville some days before the election, in the latter part of October, and they would not allow any democratic canvasser to speak there at all. Mr. Secretary of State Hayne spoke there that day, and E. W. M. Mackey and W. J. Whipper, but they would not allow anybody else except those that spoke in behalf of the republican party.

Q. Were any of your meetings disturbed?—A. Yes, sir; on that same day they would not allow us any show at their meeting; we had one maybe one hundred and fifty yards away from there, and a colored man came there and disturbed the meeting.

Q. What did the colored men do?—A. Well, there was a man from Georgetown, W. Cooke, who was speaking at the time this man came from the republican meeting over to our meeting, and he said to this man who was speaking that he "must stop his gab," (I think the word was,) and a little disturbance occurred, and the meeting was broken up.

Q. You have been over that county, and have had a good deal to do with the colored people, both republicans and democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State why it was that the republican colored people evinced this hostility and social ostracism toward colored democrats?—A. Well, sir, I think they did it from the teachings of men from different portions of the State; a few men from here.

Q. What were those teachings, and what were the prevailing ideas among the republican colored men and women?—A. Well, sir, the speakers that canvassed for the republican ticket told them that they must not care for anything; they must just vote the republican ticket, and that the white people were no friends to them; that they,

the speakers, were the only friends they had; that the republican party had given them their rights, and that no other party would sustain their rights hereafter, and so on. They left the impression on their minds that there would be no rights given to them hereafter.

Q. The women were more bitter than the men, were they not?—A. Well, as far as they were able, I think they were.

Q. Among the colored women, even the wives and relatives of the democratic colored men, what position was taken?—A. To my certain knowledge, at Barnwell, on the day of the election, the women followed the men to the polls, and told them that if they did not vote the republican ticket that that would be the last with them; they should "split blankets" from that; those were the exact words.

Q. What was the general teaching that was disseminated among the colored men and women of the republican party by their speakers in regard to their position as freemen, if the democrats succeeded?—A. Well, sir, the general impression seemed to be among the colored people that if the democrats were successful, and got the lines of government in their hands, the colored men never hereafter would be citizens.

Q. What was the position of a colored man among his colored republican friends if he chose to go out and advocate democracy?—A. His position was a very unhappy one. They did not care to recognize him and did not want his company any more. I was abused on several occasions, but to no great extent; nothing like violence.

Q. Socially were you ostracized?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the prevailing condition of affairs throughout the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Notwithstanding the fact that of 4,200 you had, perhaps, one-fourth as voters with you?—A. Yes, sir. I was elected in 1870 to the house of representatives by 3,100 votes; and in 1872, when there was no ticket run except the republican ticket in the county—the democratic party did not make any nomination—in 1872 I got 1,119 votes, which elected me. I came in the fourth man. And in 1874 I was elected again on the Chamberlain ticket.

Q. Was there or was there not a larger proportion of the colored people of your county voting the democratic ticket this time than at any previous election?—A. O, yes, sir; there were more this time than ever before.

Q. How was it about the democratic white voters, was there a larger proportion of them given at this time than ever before?—A. Yes, sir; they never turned out in such large numbers before. This election they turned out, I think, almost to a man.

Q. Were you outside of Barnwell County at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. So far as you knew, was there throughout the county a general condition of peace and good order?—A. Yes, sir; there was nothing to my knowledge otherwise. Everything was quiet and peaceable. There was a file of soldiers in three precincts of the county on the day of election, and there was no occasion for any of them to turn out.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You were in the legislature six years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the colored people of your county well?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are peaceable, orderly, quiet people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not inclined to commence any difficulty?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. Are they not a remarkably peaceable and quiet people?—A. To my knowledge, sir.

Q. Do you know any instance where any colored man ever commenced an assault upon a white man?—A. No, sir; not to my personal observation.

Q. You are friendly with the colored republicans?—A. Do you mean politically?

Q. Personally.—A. Yes, sir; personally.

Q. And they are personally friendly with you?—A. Yes, sir; heretofore. That is, generally speaking.

Q. They talk with you in a friendly manner when they meet you?—A. Now do you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Not all of them.

Q. But generally they do?—A. With some exceptions.

Q. No one ever offered any personal violence to you?—A. No, sir; no personal violence.

Q. They have always treated you respectfully, have they not?—A. With a few exceptions, sir.

Q. You state that you were threatened at Williston; was that at a republican or a democratic meeting?—A. It was both.

Q. Was there not a republican meeting called there first?—A. Yes, sir; in the forenoon.

Q. And then, after the republican meeting had been called, the democrats also called a meeting there?—A. The day was appointed for the meetings of both; I do not know which one expected to have a meeting first.

Q. Was not the republican meeting announced first? Was it not a republican meeting, and did not you go there for the purpose of asking a division of time, so as to have a joint discussion?—A. No, sir; I went there to attend a democratic meeting, and when I got to the place at Williston—the republican county chairman resides there—and some of the party said—

Q. Who threatened you there?—A. The man that threatened me there is dead now; Louis McCrary. He told me that if I attempted to make a democratic speech that day I would be taken down.

Q. That was all he said?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did make a democratic speech?—A. Not at his ground.

Q. But he meant that if you undertook to make a democratic speech at the republican meeting you would be taken down?—A. I don't know what he meant. That was before either one of the meetings had been called.

Q. You did make a democratic speech that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were not disturbed or taken down?—A. No, sir; because I didn't attempt to speak where he was. I don't know what would have happened if I had spoken there.

Q. He was at the republican meeting, was he not?—A. He was at both of them. At least, after his meeting adjourned he came down to ours.

Q. Were you speaking then?—A. No, sir; Mr. Voss was speaking.

Q. He did not disturb Voss, did he?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. You were at a meeting at Blackville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a republican meeting?—A. There were two meetings there.

Q. Was there not first a republican meeting called there?—A. I don't know which was called first, but they happened on the same day.

Q. The republicans started their meeting before you started yours, did they not?—A. I think not. When I got to Blackville there were two crowds. Mr. Secretary Hayne was speaking at one place, and Mr. Rivers, from Charleston, was speaking at another place.

Q. The democrats had started their meeting only about 100 yards from where the republicans were holding theirs?—A. One hundred and fifty yards, or somewhere about that.

Q. What occurred?—A. Before Mr. Rivers got through, there came a man from the republican meeting down there and told Rivers that he wanted him to "hush his gab," or "stop his gab;" and Doctor Lartee asked the town marshal if he could not quiet this man, and he was taken down from the platform; but while he was going down some other parties joined in the melée, which raised a kind of row and the meeting broke up.

Q. There was no one hurt?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. The democratic speaker was speaking so close to the republican meeting that it disturbed the republican meeting; is not that the fact?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Would it not be disturbed by speaking at a distance of 100 or 150 yards?—A. I do not think so, sir.

Q. Do you think two meetings could be held 100 yards apart without one disturbing the other?—A. I think it was about equal on both sides, as far as disturbance was concerned.

Q. When you got there to attend the democratic meeting the republicans were holding their meeting and Hayne was making a speech?—A. Both meetings were going on at the same time.

Q. Just answer my question. When you got there the republicans were holding a meeting and Hayne was making a speech?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had the speaking at the democratic stand commenced?—A. Both were going on when I got there.

Q. Was the speaking going on at the democratic stand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those are the only disturbances that you know of in the whole county?—A. The only ones that I know of.

Q. Did you attend any other republican meeting?—A. No, sir; I attended several democratic meetings.

Q. No democratic meeting was ever disturbed by a republican, was it, that you saw?—A. No, sir; except at Blackville and at Williston, which I did not consider amounted to very much.

Q. Don't you know by common report that there were a number of colored men on whom violence was inflicted in your county this year?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Didn't you hear of it?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of colored men being injured.

Q. And of some being killed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many colored men were killed?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. About as near as you can remember?—A. I heard several reports.

Q. You can state what the report was as to the number?—A. I once heard that there were sixteen; another time I heard there were twenty, and another time I heard there were fifty; I don't know how many there were.

Q. Has any white man been punished in your county for killing or injuring any colored man?—A. No, sir.

Q. No?—A. No, sir; there has been no court there.

Q. Has any white man been punished in your county in the last six years for killing or injuring any colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. Only one to my knowledge, sir; that is capitally punished, hung.

Q. Was that a white man?—A. Yes, sir; everybody says so; I didn't know him myself.

Q. That is the only instance?—A. Yes, sir; that I know of. There was another white man shot there, but he was not tried by the courts. There was a warrant issued for him, and the posse that went to arrest him shot him.

Q. When you commenced making democratic speeches this year had the republican candidate for the legislature been nominated in your county?—A. No, sir.

Q. The republicans had concluded not to nominate you again, had they not? A. No, sir; not that I know of. They wanted me to run. Some of them mentioned my name for the senate.

Q. You lived in the village, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't know much about what occurred out in the country?—A. Not on the day of the election.

Q. Don't you know that there were a good many colored men in your county who did not go to the election at all?—A. I know of only a few.

Q. Was it not generally understood that there were some colored men who would not go to the election because they were afraid they would be turned off the lands they were living on if they voted the republican ticket?—A. To my knowledge there were no threats of the kind.

Q. Don't you know that that impression prevailed among the colored men?—A. I know that the white people preferred those that went with them.

Q. The white people told the colored men that they would give the preference of employment to the colored men who would vote with them?—A. I never heard any one tell them so, sir; not positively. I did not hear them say, "If you don't do so and so, I won't employ you."

Q. But did not the white men make the impression generally among the colored people that it would be to their advantage to vote the democratic ticket, so that they might continue to live on the lands they occupied?—A. I do not know that the impression prevailed, but I know that they preferred those who went with them.

Q. The colored people generally understood that, did they not?—A. I think they understood that there would be a preference.

Q. It was called "the preference policy," was it not?—A. I don't know what it was called.

Q. Was it not generally known as "the preference policy"?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Didn't you hear it spoken of in that way?—A. No, sir; no preference policy.

Q. The colored people, you think, generally understood that, did they?—A. Yes; I think so. I could not say positively.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any intimidation of that kind that you knew of personally?—A. No, sir; not that I knew of.

Q. You stated a while ago that you had heard of a number of negroes being killed. Do you know of any one of your personal knowledge?—A. No, sir.

Q. And those cases that you heard of, did they grow out of political differences, or were they homicides occurring from other reasons?—A. As much as I could hear of them, they occurred from some robberies that were committed.

Q. That is, they occurred aside from political questions?—A. I do not think politics were known in the matter at all, so far as I knew.

Q. Did you know of any case that was the result of politics?—A. No, sir; the only matter I heard of was what grew out of some colored men robbing a white lady, and the riot started from that, and it kept going down and down until it got in our county.

Q. Was that what is known as the Ellenton riot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the only case in which you have heard of colored men being killed in your county?—A. Yes, sir; the only one.

Q. You know that the Ellenton riots had no political character?—As far as I have been able to hear.

Q. As far as the democrats were concerned?—A. I do not think so.

Q. You were a democrat then?—A. I had declared my intention to support Governor Hampton at that time.

Q. And all the homicides of colored men that you knew of in Barnwell County, either by report or otherwise, were connected with the Ellenton riots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any evidence anywhere under your own observation of colored republicans being intimidated by the white men and land-owners of the county in any way?—No, sir; not what I call intimidation.

Q. Were they refused the right to vote when they went to the polls?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody prohibit them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, what was the condition of the colored democrats; what was the pressure that was brought to bear upon them by the colored republicans?—A. They were denied any social equality with them. I had several threats made toward myself, but nothing like violence.

Q. Were you jeered and hooted at and maltreated in that way, and ostracised in society?—A. Yes, sir; they called me several names, such as I would not mention here.

Q. What did they call you?—A. Well, they called me a democratic puppy, &c.; they said that I was nobody, and that they didn't want me to visit the church any more; that I must go to the white people's church, and when I died that the white people must bury me, and so on.

Q. Was that the usual treatment a colored man received who dared to vote the democratic ticket and avowed his intention to do so?—A. That was so, but I do not think every one was placed as I was, because I took an active part in the canvass.

Q. Do you know of instances in which colored men were turned out of church, and out of association with church-members, because they voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; I know of one instance of a Sabbath-school superintendent of a colored church who was arraigned after the election for voting the democratic ticket. They said they didn't want him to teach their children any more, because he was a democrat.

Q. Was that same sort of influence brought to bear in the church socially, and in every other respect, against colored men who voted the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir; the day General Hampton came down there to speak, the women and men gathered on the sides of the street as the procession rode through, and used all kinds of improper language. On one occasion a woman threw a brick at one of the Hampton colored men, and crippled him pretty badly.

Q. Do you know any instances of violence besides this instance where the brick was thrown?—A. No, sir; not of my personal knowledge.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You say the colored republicans are cool toward the democratic colored men, and do not like to associate with them?—A. No, sir; they do not.

Q. Do the white democrats associate with the colored democrats?—A. Well, generally, except social equality.

Q. Do you mean to say that the white democrats associate with colored democrats more than colored republicans associate with colored democrats?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do they associate with them?—A. Well, sir, when we meet each other on the streets they shake each other's hands, and there seems to be a good feeling between the two.

Q. The white democrats don't allow any social equality with the colored democrats, do they?—A. No, sir.

Q. The colored republicans do allow social equality with the colored democrats, do they not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the church there?—A. No, sir.

Q. And never have been?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any colored democrats who are members of the church?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have any of them been turned out?—A. No, sir; except that superintendent of the Sabbath-school. He was removed from that position.

Q. He was not turned out of the church, was he?—A. No, sir.

Q. How do you know that he was removed from that position?—A. I only know from reports.

Q. You don't know anything about it yourself?—A. No, sir; it is just about like the Ellenton riot.

Q. He may have been removed from his place for some other reason, for anything you know?—A. Of my own knowledge I cannot testify.

Q. You don't know of a single colored democrat that has been turned out of the church because he was a democrat?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. Are the churches not willing to take in colored democrats?—A. Well, they have not had an opportunity, I think, lately to take in anybody.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 28, 1876.

JULIUS MILLS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your age and residence.—Answer. I am thirty-seven years of age, and reside at Smith's Turn-out, Chester County, S. C.

Q. Where were you on the day of the last presidential election?—A. At Lowsville precinct, Chester County.

Q. What was the character of the election at that precinct on that day?—A. It was remarkably peaceable and quiet. Everything passed off pleasantly.

Q. Was there any evidence of intimidation or any lack of opportunities to vote on the part of any person?—A. There was only one case that I am aware of. A friend of mine was urging in a persuasive way a colored man who was near him as to the propriety of voting for the democratic nominees, and the deputy marshal interfered and laid his hand on my friend and said that he objected to that; that he regarded that as intimidation, and he could not allow it. The young gentleman suggested that he did not regard that as intimidation; that the colored man was not proposing to vote at that time; that it was a matter of discussion between the two, and he did not regard it as intimidation, and he appealed to me. I heard the conversation between them and gave it as my opinion that it was not intimidation, and asked him to read his instructions. He could not read them. He handed me his paper, and I read it and said to him pleasantly that I did not regard that as intimidation, and everything passed off pleasantly.

Q. Apart from that there was no disturbance?—A. None whatever, to my personal knowledge. There was another case, but I was not personally aware of it. This conversation that I have referred to was personally friendly between us.

Q. Was there any difficulty in voting on the part of any one at that precinct?—A. None at all. I left before the box closed, but I am sure none occurred. I was there from morning until four o'clock in the afternoon; the box closed at six.

Q. Were all people of every class permitted to come forward and cast their ballots?—

A. Yes, sir; every hand on my plantation voted right beside me.

Q. Were you much through the county?—A. I was all through the county during the campaign, and I did not see a single instance of even unpleasantness. Everything was conducted agreeably.

Q. Were you at both republican and democratic meetings through the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many republican meetings did you attend?—A. We made it a point to have all our meetings joint meetings—a division of time, but of regular republican appointments. I was at Rich Hill, Lewis's Turn-out, (I do not know that they were both regularly-appointed republican meetings, but one was,) McElilly's Mill; probably four regularly-appointed republican meetings.

Q. Was there any disturbance at any of these republican meetings?—A. None at all, sir.

Q. They kept the meeting exclusively to themselves?—A. It was their meeting, but they gave us a division of time.

Q. Was that done amicably?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not by any force?—A. Not at all, sir. By consultation on my part, as chairman on our side, with whoever represented them on the other side.

Q. Were you at any democratic meetings?—A. I was at all of them.

Q. Was there any division of time at the democratic meetings?—A. It was always offered; sometimes it was not accepted.

Q. Was that an amicable arrangement throughout the county?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were chairman of the democratic county committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that an understood arrangement between you and the chairman of the republican committee?—A. No, sir; the chairman did not assent to it officially, but the representatives of the party agreed to it wherever we met. I never made an official application to the chairman for any special meeting but one, and he declined that.

Q. Was there any forcing of this arrangement for a joint meeting?—A. I do not think there was. I am sure there was not.

Q. Was it done by any threats or intimidation?—A. Not in any place where I was, and I do not think it ever occurred in the county.

Q. Were you at Chester Court-House during the campaign?—A. Almost all the time.

Q. You were not there on election-day?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the condition of things at Chester County?—A. It was reported to me to be pleasant generally. There were one or two occurrences between Deputy Marshal Canton and Judge Mackey. That did not come under my personal observation, however. I understood that there was a gentleman named Anderson who proposed to vote, and some objection was made to him by the deputy United States marshal; some difference of opinion or objection was raised by Judge Mackey, and words passed between them, but, I think, nothing more.

Q. Do you know Alexander S. Richardson, of Chester Court-House?—A. I do. He was postmaster at one time.
